7. Hence it follows, That this Power is Infinite; Eph. 1. 19. What is the exceeding Greatness of his Power, &c. According to the working of his mighty Power. God were not Omnipotent, unless his Power were Infinite; for a Finite Power is a limited Power, and a limited Power cannot effect every thing that is possible. Nothing can be too difficult for the Divine Power to effect: He hath a fulness of Power, an exceeding Strength, above all Humane Capacities; 'tis a Mighty Power†, able to do above all that we can ask or *think: That which he acts, is above the power of any Creature to act. Infinite Power consists in the bringing things forth from nothing. No Creature can imitate God in this Prerogative of Power. Man indeed can carve various forms, and erect various pieces of Art; but from pre-existent Matter. Every Artificer hath the Matter brought to his hand, he only brings it forth in a new Figure. Chymists separate one thing from another, but create nothing, but sever those things which were before compacted and crudled together: But when God speaks a powerful Word, Nothing begins to be Something; things stand forth from the Womb of Nothing, and obey his mighty Command, and take what Forms he is pleased to give them. The creating one thing, though never so small and minute, as the least Fly, cannot be but by an infinite Power; much less can the producing of such Variety we see in the World. His power is infinite, in regard it cannot be resisted by any thing that he hath made; nor can it be confin'd by any thing he can will to make. *His Greatness is unsearchable. 'Tis a Greatness, not of quantity but quality. The Greatness of his power hath no end: 'Tis a vanity to imagine any limits can be affixed to it, or that any Creature can say, Hitherto it can go, and no further. 'Tis above all Conception, all Inquisition of any Created Understanding. No Creature ever had, nor ever can have that strength of wit and understanding to conceive the extent of his power, and how magnificently he can work

* Eph. 3. 20.

* Psal. 145. 3.

1. His Essence is Infinite. As in a finite Subject there is a finite Vertue; so in an infinite Subject there must be an infinite Virtue. Where the essence is limited, the power is so†; where the essence is unlimited, the power knows no bounds*. Among Creatures, the more excellency of being and form any thing hath, the more activity, vigour, and power it hath, to work according to its nature. The Sun hath a mighty power to warm, enlighten, and fructifie, above what the Stars have, because it hath a vaster body, more intense degrees of light, heat, and vigour. Now, if you conceive the Sun made much greater than it is, it would proportionably have greater degrees of power to heat and enlighten than it hath now; and were it possible to have an infinite heat and light, it would infinitely heat and enlighten other things; for every thing is able to act according to the measures of its being. Therefore, since the essence of God is unquestionably infinite, his power of acting must be so also His power (as was said before) is one and the same with his essence: And though the knowledge of God extends to more objects than his power, because he knows all Evils of Sin, which because of his Holiness he cannot commit; yet it is as infinite as his Knowledge, because it is as much one with his essence as his knowledge and wisdom is: For as the wisdom or knowledge of God is nothing but the essence of God, Knowing; so the power of God is nothing but the essence of God, Able.

† Operationes sequuntur essentiam. * Aquin. par. 1. Qu. 25. Artic. 2.

2. The Objects of Divine Power are innumerable. The objects of Divine power are not essentially infinite; and therefore we must not measure the Infiniteness of Divine power by an ability to make an infinite Being, because there is an incapacity in any created thing to be infinite; for to be a Creature and to be infinite, to be infinite and yet made, is a contradiction. To be Infinite, and to be God, is one and the same thing. Nothing can be Infinite, but God; nothing but God is Infinite. But the power of God is infinite, because it can produce infinite effects, or innumerable things, such as surpass the Arithmetick of a Creature; nor yet doth the Infiniteness consist simply in producing innumerable effects, for that a finite cause can produce. Fire can, by its finite and limited heat, burn numberless combustible things and parcels; and the Understanding of Man hath an infinite number of thoughts and acts of intellection, and thoughts different from one another. Who can number the imaginations of his fancy, and thoughts of his mind, the space of one month or year? much leſs of forty or an hundred years; yet all theſe thoughts are about things that are in being, or have a foundation in things that are in being. But the Infiniteneſs of God's power conſiſts in an ability to produce infinite effects, formally diſtinct, and diverſe from one another; ſuch as never had Being, ſuch as the Mind of Man cannot conceive: Able to do above what we Eph. 3. 20. can think, Eph. 3. 20. And whatſoever God hath made, or is able to make, he is able to make in an infinite manner, by calling them to ſtand forth from nothing. To produce innumerable Effects of diſtinct Natures, and from ſo diſtant a term as Nothing, is an argument of Infinite Power.

Now that the Objects of Divine Power are Innumerable, appears, becauſe God can do infinitely more than he hath done, or will do. Nothing that God hath done can enfeeble or dull his power; there ſtill reſides in him an Ability beyond all the ſetled Contrivances of his Underſtanding, and Reſolves of his Will, which no Effects which he hath wrought can drein, and put to a ſtand. As he can raiſe * Mat. 3. 9. Stones to be Children to *Abraham; ſo with the ſame mighty Word whereby he made one World, he can make infinite numbers of Worlds to be the Monuments of his Glory. After the Prophet Jeremy 32. 17. had ſpoke of God's power in Creation, he adds, And nothing is too hard for thee. For one World that he hath made, he can create millions; for one Star which he hath beautified the Heavens with, he could have garniſh'd it with a thouſand, and multiplied, if he had pleaſed, every one of Rom. 4. 17. thoſe into Millions; for he can call things that are not; not ſome things, but all things poſſible. The barren womb of Nothing can no more reſiſt his power now to educe a World from it than it could at firſt: No doubt, but for one Angel which he hath made, he could make many worlds of Angels. He that made one with ſo much eaſe, as by a word, cannot want power to make many more, till he wants a word. The word that was not too weak to make one, cannot be too weak to make multitudes. If from one man he hath, in a way of nature, multiplied ſo many in all Ages of the World, and covered with them the whole face of the Earth; he could in a ſupernatural way, by one word, multiply as many more. 'Tis the breath of the Almighty that gives life, Job 33. 4. He can create infinite Species and kinds of Creatures more than he hath created, more variety of forms: For ſince there is no ſearching of his Greatneſs, there is no conceiving the numberleſs poſſible effects of his power. The underſtanding of man can conceive numberleſs things poſſible to be, more than have been or ſhall be: And ſhall we imagine that a finite underſtanding of a Creature hath a greater omnipotency to conceive things poſſible, than God hath to produce things poſſible? When the underſtanding of man is tir'd in its conceptions, it muſt ſtill be concluded, that the power of God extends not only to what can be conceiv'd, but infinitely beyond the meaſures of a finite faculty; Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out; he is excellent in power and in judgment, Job 36. 22. For the underſtanding of Man, in its conceptions of more kind of Creatures, is limited to thoſe Creatures which are: It cannot in its own imagination conceive any thing but what hath ſome foundation in and from ſomething already in Being: It may frame a new kind of Creature, made up of a Lion, a Horſe, an Ox; but all thoſe parts whereof its conception is made, have diſtinct Beings in the World, though not in that compoſition as his mind mixes and joins them. But no queſtion but God can create Creatures that have no reſemblance with any kind of Creatures yet in Being. 'Tis certain, that if God only knows thoſe things which he hath done, and will do, and not all things poſſible to be done by him, his knowledge were finite; ſo if he could do no more than what he hath done, his power would be finite.

1. Creatures have a power to act about more Objects than they do. The Underſtanding of man can frame from one principle of Truth many Concluſions and Inferences more than it doth. Why cannot then the power of God frame from one firſt Matter, an infinite number of Creatures more than have been created? The Almightineſs of God in producing real Effects, is not inferior to the Underſtanding of Man in drawing out real Truths. An Artificer that makes a Watch, ſuppoſing his Life and Health, can make many more of a different form and motion: And a Limner can draw many Draughts, and frame many Pictures with a new variety of Colours, according to the richneſs of his Fancy. If theſe can do ſo, that require a preexiſtent Matter fram'd to their hands, God can much more, who can raiſe beautiful Structures from nothing. As long as men have matter, they can diverſifie the matter, and make new Figures from it: So long as there is nothing, God can produce out of that nothing whatſoever he pleaſes.

We ſee the ſame in Inanimate Creatures. A ſpark of Fire hath a vaſt Power in it; it will kindle other things, increaſe and enlarge it ſelf: Nothing can be exempted from the active force of it. It will alter by conſuming or refining whatſoever you offer to it. It will reach all, and refuſe none; and by the efficacious power of it, all thoſe new Figures which we ſee in Metals, are brought forth: When you have expoſed to it a multitude of things, ſtill add more, it will exert the ſame ſtrength; yea, the vigour is increaſed rather than diminiſht. The more it catcheth, the more fiercely and irreſiſtibly it will act; you cannot ſuppoſe an end of its operation, or a decreaſe of its ſtrength, as long as you can conceive its duration and continuance: This muſt be but a weak ſhadow of that infinite Power which is in God. Take another Inſtance in the Sun: It hath power every year to produce Flowers and Plants from the Earth; and is as able to produce them now, as it was at the firſt lighting it and rearing it in the Sphere wherein it moves. And if there were no kind of Flowers and Plants now created, the Sun hath a power reſiding in it, ever ſince its firſt Creation, to afford the ſame warmth to them for the nouriſhing and bringing them forth. Whatſoever you can conceive the Sun to be able to do in regard of Plants, that can God do in regard of Worlds; produce more Worlds than the Sun doth Plants every year, without wearineſs, without languſhment. The Sun is able to influence more things than it doth, and produce numberleſs effects; but it doth not do ſo much as it is able to do, becauſe it wants matter to work upon: God therefore who wants no matter, can do much more than he doth; He can either act by ſecond Cauſes if there were more, or make more ſecond Cauſes if he pleas'd.

2. God is the moſt free Agent. Every free Agent can do more than he will do. Man being a free Creature, can do more than ordinarily he doth will to do. God is moſt free, as being the Spring of Liberty in other Creatures: He acts not by a neceſſity of Nature; as the waves of the Sea, or the motions of the Wind; and therefore is not determin'd to thoſe things which he hath already called forth into the World. If God be infinitely wiſe in contrivance, he could contrive more than he hath, and therefore can effect more than he hath effected. He doth not act to the extent of his Power upon all occaſions. 'Tis according to his Will that

that he works, Eph. 1. 'Tis not according to his work that he wills; his work is an evidence of his Will, but not the Rule of his Will. His Power is not the Rule of his Will, but his Will is the diſpoſer of his Power, according to the light of his infinite Wiſdom, and other Attributes that direct his Will; and therefore his Power is not to be meaſured by his actual Will. No doubt but he could in a moment have produced that World which he took ſix days time to frame: He could have drown'd the old World at once, without prolonging the time till the revolution of forty days: He was not limited to ſuch a term of time by any Weakneſs, but by the Determination of his own Will. God doth not do the hundred thouſandth part of what he is able to do, but what is convenient to do, according to the end which he hath propoſed to himſelf. Jeſus Chriſt, as Man, could have ask'd Legions of Angels; and God, as a Sovereign, could have ſent them *. God could raiſe the dead every day if he pleaſed, but he doth not: He could heal every diſeaſed Perſon in a moment, but he doth not: As God can Will more than he doth actually Will; ſo he can do more than he hath actually done: He can do whatſoever he can Will, he can Will more Worlds, and therefore can create more Worlds. If God hath not Ability to do more than he will do, he then can do no more than what he actually hath done; and then it will follow, that he is not a free, but a natural and neceſſary Agent, which cannot be ſuppoſed of God.

* Matth. 26. 53.

3. This Power is infinite in regard of Action. As he can produce numberleſs Objects above what he hath produced, ſo he could produce them more magnificently than he hath made them. As he never works to the extent of his Power in regard of things, ſo neither in regard of the manner of acting; for he never acts ſo, but he could act in a higher and perfecter manner.

1. His Power is infinite in regard of the Independency of Action: He wants no Inſtrument to act. When there was nothing but God, there was no cauſe of Action but God: When there was nothing in being but God, there could be no inſtrumental Cauſe of the Being of any thing. God can perfect his Action without Dependance on any thing *: And to be ſimply independent, is to be ſimply infinite. In this reſpect it is a Power incommunicable to any Creature, though you conceive a Creature in higher Degrees of Perfection than it is. A Creature cannot ceaſe to be dependent, but it muſt ceaſe to be a Creature: To be a Creature, and independent, are terms repugnant to one another.

* Suarez. vol. 1. de Deo. p. 151.

2. But the infiniteneſs of Divine Power, conſiſts in an Ability to give higher Degrees of Perfection to every thing which he hath made. * As his Power is infinite extenſivè, in regard of the multitude of Objects he can bring into being; ſo it is infinite intenſivè, in regard of the manner of Operation, and the Endowments he can beſtow upon them. Some things indeed God doth ſo perfect, that higher Degrees of Perfection cannot be imagined to be added to them * As the Humanity of Chriſt cannot be united more gloriouſly than to the Perſon of the Son of God; a greater degree of Perfection cannot be conferred upon it. Nor can the Souls of the Bleſſed have a nobler Object of Viſion and Fruition than God himſelf, the infinite Being: No higher than the Enjoyment of himſelf can be conferred upon a Creature, Reſpectu termini. This is not want of Power: He cannot be greater becauſe he is greateſt, nor better becauſe he is beſt; nothing can be more than infinite. But as to the things which God hath made in the World, he could have given them other manner of Beings than they have. A human Underſtanding may improve a Thought or Concluſion; ſtrengthen it with more and more Force of Reaſon, and adorn it with richer and richer Elegancy of Language: Why then may not the Divine Power produce a world more perfect and excellent than this? He that makes a plain Veſſel, can embelliſh it more, engrave more Figures upon it, according to the Capacity of the Subject: And cannot God do ſo much more with his Works? Could not God have made this World of a larger Quantity, and the Sun of a greater Bulk, and proportionable Strength to influence a bigger World? So that this World would have been to another that God might have made, as a Ball or a Mount, this Sun as a Star to another Sun that he might have kindled. He could have made every Star a Sun, every ſpire of Graſs a Star, every grain of Duſt a Flower, every Soul an Angel. And though the Angels be perfect Creatures, and unexpreſſibly more glorious than a viſible Creature; yet who can imagine God ſo confin'd, that he cannot create a more excellent kind, and endow thoſe which he hath made with Excellency of a higher Rank than he inveſted them with at the firſt moment of their Creation? Without queſtion God might have given the meaner Creatures more excellent Endowments, put them into another Order of Nature for their own Good, and more diffuſive uſefulneſs in the World. What is made uſe of by the *Prophet in another caſe, may be uſed in this, Yet had he a reſidue of Spirit. The Capacity of every Creature might have been enlarged by God: for no Work of his in the World doth equal his Power, as nothing that he hath framed doth equal his Wiſdom. The ſame matter which is the matter of the body of a Beaſt, is the matter of a Plant and Flower; is the matter of the Body of a Man; and ſo was capable of a higher Form, and higher Perfections, than God hath been pleas'd to beſtow upon it. And he had Power to beſtow that Perfection on one part of matter which he denied to it, and beſtowed on another part. If God cannot make things in a greater Perfection, there muſt be ſome Limitation of him: He cannot be limited by another, becauſe nothing is ſuperiour to God. If limited by himſelf, that Limitation is not from a want of Power, but a want of Will. He can by his own Power raiſe Stones to be Children to Abraham *: He could alter the Nature of the Stones, form them into human Bodies, dignifie them with rational Souls, inſpire thoſe Souls with ſuch Graces, that may render them the Children of Abraham. But for the more fully underſtanding the Nature of this Power, we may obſerve,

* Mal. 2. 15.

* Matth. 3. 9.

(1.) That though God can make every thing with a higher degree of Perfection, yet ſtill within the limits of a finite Being. No Creature can be made infinite, becauſe no Creature can be made God. No Creature can be ſo improved, as to equal the Goodneſs and Perfection of God †; yet there is no Creature, but we may conceive a poſſibility of its being made more perfect in that Rank of a Creature than it is: As we may imagine a Flower or Plant to have greater Beauty, and richer Qualities imparted to it by Divine Power, without rearing it ſo high as to the Dignity of a rational or ſenſitive Creature. Whatſoever Perfections may be added by God to a Creature, are ſtill finite Perfections; and a multitude of finite Excellencies can never amount to the Value and Honour of infinite: As if you add one number to another as high as you can, as much as a large piece of Paper can contain, you can never make the numbers really infinite, though they may be infinite in regard of the Inability of any human Underſtanding to count them. The finite Condition of the Creature ſuffers it not to be capable of an infinite Perfection. God is ſo great, ſo excellent, that it is his Perfection not to have any Equal; the defect is in the Creature, which cannot be elevated to ſuch a pitch; as you can never make a Gallon Meaſure hold the quantity of a Butt, or a Butt the quantity of a River, or a River the fulneſs of the Sea.

* Becan. Sum. Theol. p. 82.

* Becan. Sum. Theol. p. 84.

* Gamach in Aquin. Tom. 1. qu. 25.

(2.) Though God hath a Power to furniſh every Creature with greater and nobler Perfections than he hath beſtowed upon it, yet he hath framed all things in the perfecteſt manner, and moſt convenient to that end for which he intended them. Every thing is endowed with the beſt Nature and Quality ſutable to God's end in Creation, though not in the beſt manner for it ſelf *. In regard of the univerſal End, there cannot be a better; for God himſelf is the End of all things, who is the ſupream Goodneſs. Nothing can be better than God, who could not be God if he were not Superlatively beſt, or Optimus; and he hath ordered all things for the Declaration of his Goodneſs or Juſtice, according to the Behaviours of his Creatures. Man doth not conſider what Strength or Power he can put forth in the means he uſeth to attain ſuch an end, but the ſutableneſs of them to his main Deſign, and ſo fits and marſhals them to his grand Purpoſe. Had God only created things that are moſt excellent, he had created only Angels and Men; how then would his Wiſdom have been conſpicuous in other Works in the Subordination and Subſerviency of them to one another? God therefore determin'd his Power by his Wiſdom: * And though his abſolute Power could have made every Creature better, yet his ordinate Power, which in every ſtep was regulated by his Wiſdom, made every thing beſt for his deſign'd Intention. A Muſician hath a power to wind up a String on a Lute to a higher and more perfect Note in it ſelf, but in Wiſdom he will not do it, becauſe the intended Melody ſhould be diſturb'd thereby, if it were not ſuted to the other Strings on the Inſtrument; a Diſcord would mar and taint the Harmony which the Luteniſt deſign'd. God in Creation obſerved the Proportions of Nature: He can make a Spider as ſtrong as a Lion; but according to the order of Nature which he hath ſettled, 'tis not convenient that a Creature of ſo ſmall a compaſs, ſhould be as ſtrong as one of a greater bulk. The abſolute Power of God could have prepared a Body for Chriſt, as Glorious as that he had after his Reſurrection; but that had not been agreeable to the end deſign'd in his Humiliation: And therefore God acted moſt perfectly by his ordinate Power, in giving him a Body that wore the Livery of our Infirmities. God's Power is alway regulated by his Wiſdom and Will; and though it produceth not what is moſt perfect in it ſelf, yet what is moſt perfect and decent in relation to the end he fixed. And ſo in his Providence, though he could rack the whole frame of Nature to bring about his ends in a more miraculous way and Aſtoniſhment to Mortals; yet his Power is uſually and ordinarily confin'd by his Will to act in concurrence with the Nature of the Creatures, and direct them according to the Laws of their being, to ſuch ends which he aims at in their Conduct, without violencing their Nature.

3. Though God hath an abſolute Power to make more Worlds, and infinite Numbers of other Creatures, and to render every Creature a higher mark of his Power, yet in regard of his Decree to the contrary, he cannot do it. He hath a Phyſical Power, but after his reſolve to the contrary, not a Moral Power: The exerciſe of his Power is ſubordinate to his Decree, but not the Eſſence of his Power. † The Decree of God takes not away any Power from God, becauſe the Power of God is his own Eſſence, and uncapable of change; and is as great phyſically and eſſentially after his Decree as it was before; only his Will hath put in a bar to the demonſtration of all that Power which he is able to exerciſe. As a Prince that can raiſe 100000 Men for an Invaſion, raiſes only 20 or 30000; he here, by his order limits his power, but doth not deveſt himſelf of his Authority and power to raiſe the whole number of the Forces of his Dominions if he pleaſes: The power of God hath more Objects than his Decree hath; but ſince it is his perfection to be immutable, and not to change his Decree, he cannot morally put forth his power upon all thoſe Objects, which as it is eſſentially in him, he hath Ability to do. * God hath Decreed to ſave thoſe that believe in Chriſt, and to judge Unbelievers to everlaſting perdition: He cannot morally damn the firſt, or ſave the latter; yet he hath not deveſted himſelf of his Abſolute power to ſave all, or damn all. Or ſuppoſe God hath Decreed not to create more Worlds than this we are now in, doth his Decree weaken his ſtrength to create more if he pleaſed: His not creating more is not a want of Strength, but a want of Will: 'Tis an act of Liberty, not an act of Impotency. As when a man ſolemnly reſolves not to walk in ſuch a way, or come at ſuch a place, his Reſolution deprives him not of his natural ſtrength to walk thither; but fortifies his Will againſt uſing his ſtrength in any ſuch motion to that place. The Will of God hath ſet bounds to the exerciſe of his power, but doth not infringe that Abſolute power which ſtill reſides in his Nature: He is girded with more Power than he puts forth *.

4. As the Power of God is infinite, in regard of his Eſſence, in regard of the Objects, in regard of Action, ſo Fourthly, in regard of Duration. The Apoſtle calls it an Eternal Power †. His Eternal Power is collected and concluded from the things that are made: They muſt needs be the product of ſome Being which contains truly in it ſelf all Power, who wrought them without Engins, without Inſtruments; and therefore this Power muſt be infinite, and poſſeſſed of an unalterable virtue of acting. If it be Eternal, it muſt be infinite, and hath neither beginning nor end; what is Eternal hath no bounds. If it be Eternal and not limited by time, it muſt be infinite, and not to be reſtrain'd by any finite Object: His Power never begun to be, nor ever ceaſeth to be, it cannot languiſh; men are fain to unbend themſelves, and muſt have ſome time to recruit their tired ſpirits: But the Power of God is perpetually vigorous, without any interrupting qualm. Iſai. 40. 28. Haſt thou not known, haſt thou not heard that the everlaſting God the Creator of the ends of the Earth fainteth not, neither is weary? That Might which ſuffered no diminution from Eternity, but hatcht ſo great a World by brooding upon nothing, will not ſuffer any dimneſs or decreaſe to Eternity. This Power being the ſame with his Eſſence, is as durable as his Eſſence, and reſides for ever in his Nature.

8. The Eighth Conſideration, for the right underſtanding of this Attribute; The impoſſibility of God's doing ſome things, is no infringing of his Almightineſs, but rather a ſtrengthning of it. 'Tis granted that ſome things God cannot do; or rather, as Aquinas and others, 'tis better to ſay, ſuch things cannot be done, than to ſay that God cannot do them; to remove all kind of imputation or reflection of weakneſs on God *, and becauſe becauſe the reaſon of the impoſſibility of thoſe things is in the nature of the things themſelves.

1. Firſt, Some things are impoſſible in their own nature. Such are all thoſe things which imply a Contradiction; as for a thing to be, and not to be at the ſame time; for the Sun to ſhine, and not to ſhine at the ſame moment of time; for a Creature to act, and not to act at the ſame inſtant: One of thoſe parts muſt be falſe; for if it be that the Sun ſhines this moment, it muſt be falſe to ſay it doth not ſhine. So it is impoſſible that a rational Creature can be without reaſon: 'Tis a contradiction to be a rational Creature, and yet want that which is eſſential to a rational Creature. So it is impoſſible that the Will of Man can be compelled, becauſe Liberty is the Eſſence of the Will; while it is Will it cannot be conſtrain'd; and if it be conſtrain'd it ceaſeth to be Will. * God cannot at one time act as the Author of the Will, and the Deſtroyer of the Will. 'Tis impoſſible that Vice and Virtue, Light and Darkneſs, Life and Death ſhould be the ſame thing. Thoſe things admit not of a Conception in any Underſtanding. Some things are impoſſible to be done, becauſe of the incapability of the ſubject; as for a Creature to be made infinite, independent, to preſerve it ſelf without the Divine concourſe and aſſiſtance. So a brute cannot be taken into communion with God, and to everlaſting ſpiritual Bleſſedneſs, becauſe the Nature of a Brute, is uncapable of ſuch an Elevation: A rational Creature only can underſtand and reliſh ſpiritual delights, and is capable to enjoy God and have communion with him. Indeed God may change the nature of a Brute, and beſtow ſuch Faculties of Underſtanding and Will upon it, as to render it capable of ſuch a Bleſſedneſs; but then 'tis no more a Brute, but a rational Creature; but while it remains a Brute, the Excellency of the Nature of God doth not admit of communion with ſuch a Subject: So that this is not for want of Power in God, but becauſe of a Deficiency in the Creature: To ſuppoſe that God could make a Contradiction true, is to make himſelf falſe, and to do juſt nothing.

* Magalano de ſcientiâ Dei, part 2. c. 6. ſect. 3.

2. Some things are impoſſible to the Nature and Being of God. As to die, implies a flat repugnance to the Nature of God: To be able to die, is to be able to be caſhier'd out of Being. If God were able to deprive himſelf of Life, he might then ceaſe to be; he were not then a neceſſary, but an uncertain contingent Being, and could not be ſaid only to have Immortality, as he is *. He cannot die, who is Life it ſelf, and neceſſarily exiſtent: He cannot grow old or decay, becauſe he cannot be meaſur'd by Time. And this is no part of weakneſs, but the perfection of power. His Power is that whereby he remains for ever fixed in his own everlaſting Being; that cannot be reckoned as neceſſary to the Omnipotence of God, which all Mankind count a part of weakneſs in themſelves. God is Omnipotent becauſe he is not Impotent; and if he could die, he would be Impotent, not Omnipotent: Death is the feebleneſs of Nature. 'Tis undoubtedly the greateſt Impotence to ceaſe to be: Who would count it a part of Omnipotency to diſenable himſelf, and ſink into nothing and not being? The Impoſſibility for God to die, is not a fit Article to impeach his Omnipotence: This would be a ſtrange way of arguing, a thing is not powerful, becauſe it is not feeble, and cannot ceaſe to be powerful; for Death is a ceſſation of all Power. * God is Almighty in doing what he will, not in ſuffering what he will not. To die is not an active, but a paſſive Power: a defect of a Power: God is of too noble a Nature to periſh.

* 1 Tim. 6. 16.

* Auguſt.

Some things are impoſſible to that eminency of Nature which he hath above all Creatures; as to walk, ſleep, feed: Theſe are Imperfections belonging to Bodies and compounded Natures. If he could walk, he were not every where preſent: Motion ſpeaks Succeſſion. If he could encreaſe, he would not have been perfect before.

3. Some things are impoſſible to the glorious Perfections of God. God cannot do any thing unbecoming his Holineſs and Goodneſs; any thing unworthy of himſelf, and againſt the perfections of his Nature. God can do whatſoever he can will. As he doth actually do whatſoever he doth actually will; ſo it is poſſible for him to do whatſoever it is poſſible for him to will. He doth whatſoever he will, and can do whatſoever he can will; but he cannot do what he cannot will: He cannot will any unrighteous thing, and therefore cannot do any unrighteous thing. God cannot love Sin, this is contrary to his Holineſs; he cannot violate his Word, this is a denial of his Truth; he cannot puniſh an Innocent, this is contrary to his Goodneſs; he cannot cheriſh an impenitent Sinner, this is an Injury to his Juſtice; he cannot forget what is done in the World, this is a Diſgrace to his Omniſcience; he cannot deceive his Creature, this is contrary to his Faithfulneſs: None of theſe things can be done by him, becauſe of the perfection of his Nature. Would it not be an Imperfection in God to abſolve the Guilty, and condemn the Innocent? Is it congruous to the righteous and holy Nature of God to command Murder and Adultery; to command Men not to worſhip him, but to be baſe and unthankful? Theſe things would be againſt the Rules of Righteouſneſs. As when we ſay of a good Man, he cannot rob, or fight a Duel, we do not mean that he wants a courage for ſuch an Act, or that he hath not a natural ſtrength and knowledge to manage his Weapon as well as another; but he hath a righteous Principle ſtrong in him which will not ſuffer him to do it; his Will is ſetled againſt it: No Power can paſs into Act unleſs applied by the Will. But the Will of God cannot will any thing but what is worthy of him, and decent for his Goodneſs.

1. The Scripture ſaith, 'tis impoſſible for God to lye *; and God cannot deny himſelf becauſe of his Faithfulneſs †. As he cannot die, becauſe he is Life it ſelf; as he cannot deceive, becauſe he is Goodneſs it ſelf; as he cannot do an unwiſe Action, becauſe he is Wiſdom it ſelf; ſo he cannot ſpeak a falſe Word, becauſe he is Truth it ſelf. If he ſhould ſpeak any thing as true, and not know it, where is his infinite Knowledge and Comprehenſiveneſs of Underſtanding? If he ſhould ſpeak any thing as true, which he knows to be falſe, where is his infinite Righteouſneſs? If he ſhould deceive any Creature, there is an end of his Perfection and Fidelity and Veracity. If he ſhould be deceiv'd himſelf, there is an end of his Omniſcience; we muſt then fancy him to be a deceitful God, an ignorant God, that is, no God at all. * If he ſhould lye, he would be God and no God; God upon Suppoſition, and no God, becauſe not the firſt Truth. All Unrighteouſneſs is Weakneſs, not Power; 'tis a Defection from Right Reaſon, a Deviation from Moral Principles, and the Rule of perfect Action, and ariſeth from a Defect of Goodneſs and Power: 'Tis a Weakneſs, and not Omnipotence, to loſe Goodneſs. * God is Light; 'tis pure,

* Heb. 6. 18. † 2 Tim. 2. 13.

* Becan. ſum. Theolog. p. 83.

* Maximus Tyrius,

'tis the perfection of Light not to become Darkneſs, and a want of Power in Light if it ſhould become Darkneſs: His Power is infinitely ſtrong, ſo is his Wiſdom infinitely clear, and his Will infinitely pure. Would it not be a part of Weakneſs to have a Diſorder in himſelf, and thoſe Perfections ſhock one againſt another? Since all Perfections are in God, in the moſt ſovereign height of Perfection, nothing can be done by the Infiniteneſs of one againſt the Infiniteneſs of the other. He would then be unſtable in his own Perfections, and depart from the infinite Rectitude of his own Will, if he ſhould do an evil Action. Again,

*Ambroſe. * What is an Argument of greater Strength, than to be utterly ignorant of Infirmity? God is Omnipotent, becauſe he cannot do Evil, and would not be Omnipotent if he could: Thoſe things would be Marks of Weakneſs, and not Characters of Majeſty. Would you count a ſweet Fountain impotent, becauſe it cannot ſend forth bitter Streams? Or the Sun weak, becauſe it cannot diffuſe Darkneſs as well as Light in the Air? There is an Inability ariſing from Weakneſs, and an Ability ariſing from Perfection: 'Tis the Perfection of Angels and bleſſed Spirits, that they cannot ſin; and it would be the Imperfection of God, if he could do Evil.

2. Hence it follows, that 'tis impoſſible that a thing paſt ſhould not be paſt. If we aſcribe a Power to God, to make a thing that is paſt not to be paſt, we do not truly aſcribe Power to him, but a Weakneſs; for it is to make God to lye: As tho' God might not have created Man, yet after he had created Adam, though he ſhould preſently have reduced Adam to his firſt nothing, yet it would be for ever true that Adam was created, and it would for ever be falſe that Adam never was created: So though God may prevent Sin, yet when Sin hath been committed, it will alway be true that Sin was committed; it will never be true to ſay ſuch a Creature that did ſin, did not ſin; his ſin cannot be recalled. Though God by Pardon take off the Guilt of Peter's denying our Saviour, yet it will be eternally true, that Peter did deny him. It is repugnant to the Righteouſneſs and Truth of God, to make that which was once true to become falſe, and not true; that is, to make a Truth to become a Lye, and a Lye to become a Truth.

This is well argued from Heb. 6. 18. 'Tis impoſſible for God to lye. * The Apoſtle argues, that what God had promiſed and ſworn will come to paſs, and cannot but come to paſs. Now if God could make a thing paſt not to be paſt, this conſequence would not be good, for then he might make himſelf not to have promiſed, not to have ſworn, after he hath promiſed and ſworn: And ſo, if there were a power to undo that which is paſt, there would be no foundation for Faith, no certainty of Revelation. It cannot be aſſerted, that God hath created the World, that God hath ſent his Son to die, that God hath accepted his Death for Man: Theſe might not be true, if it were poſſible that that which hath been done might be ſaid never to have been done. So that what any may imagine to be a want of Power in God, is the higheſt perfection of God; and the greateſt ſecurity to a believing Creature that hath to do with God.

* Becan. ſum. Theol. p. 84. Crel. de Deo, c. 22.

Fourthly, Some things are impoſſible to be done, becauſe of God's Ordination. Some things are impoſſible, not in their own nature, but in regard of the determin'd Will of God: So God might have deſtroy'd the World after Adam's fall, but it was impoſſible; not that God wanted Power to do it, but becauſe he did not only decree from Eternity to create the World, but did alſo decree to redeem the World by Jeſus Chriſt, and erected the World in order to the manifeſtation of his Glory in Chriſt, Eph. 1. 4, 5. The choice of ſome in Chriſt was before the foundation of the World: Suppoſing that there was no hindrance in the Juſtice of God to pardon the Sin of Adam after his fall, and to execute no puniſhment on him; yet in regard of God's threatning, that in the Day he eat of the forbidden Fruit he ſhould die, it was impoſſible. So though it was poſſible that the Cup ſhould paſs from our bleſſed Saviour, that is, poſſible in its own nature; yet it was not poſſible, in regard of the determination of God's Will; ſince he had both decreed and publiſh'd his Will to redeem Man by the Paſſion and Blood of his Son. Theſe things God by his abſolute Power might have done, but upon the account of his Decree, they were impoſſible, becauſe it is repugnant to the Nature of God to be mutable: 'Tis to deny his own Wiſdom which contriv'd them, and his own Will which reſolv'd them, not to do that which he had decreed to do. This would be a diffidence in his Wiſdom, and a change of his Will. The impoſſibility of them is no reſult of a want of Power, no mark of an Imperfection, of Feebleneſs and Impotence; but the Perfection of Immutability and Unchangeableneſs.

Thus have I endeavoured to give you a right Notion of this excellent Attribute of the Power of God, in as plain terms as I could; which may ſerve us for a matter of Meditation, Admiration, Fear of him, Truſt in him, which are the proper Uſes we ſhould make of this Doctrine of Divine Power. The want of a right underſtanding of this Doctrine of the Divine Power hath cauſed many to run into mighty Abſurdities; I have therefore taken the more pains to explain it.

II. The Second thing I propoſed, is the Reaſons to prove God to be Omnipotent. The Scripture deſcribes God by this Attribute of Power, Pſal. 115. 3. He hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. It ſometimes ſets forth his Power in a way of deriſion of thoſe that ſeem to doubt of it. When Sarah doubted of his Ability to give her a Child in her Old Age, Gen. 18. 14. Is any thing too hard for the Lord? They deſerve to be ſcoff'd that will deſpoil God of his ſtrength, and meaſure him by their ſhallow Models. And when Moſes uttered ſomething of unbelief of this Attribute, as if God were not able to feed 600000 Iſraelites, beſides Women and Children, which he aggravates by a kind of imperious Scoff: Shall the flocks and the herds be ſlain for them to ſuffice them? Or ſhall all the fiſh of the Sea be gathered together for them? &c. Numb. 11. 23. God takes him up ſhort, ver. 23. Is the Lord's hand waxed ſhort? What, can any Weakneſs ſeize upon my hand? Can I not draw out of my own Treaſures what is needful for a Supply? The Hand of God is not at one time ſtrong, and another time feeble. Hence it is that we read of the Hand and Arm of God, an out-ſtretched Arm; becauſe the Strength of a Man is exerted by his Hand and Arm: The Power of God is called the Arm of his Power, and the right Hand of his Strength. Sometimes, according to the different manifeſtation of it, it is expreſt by Finger, when a leſs Power is evidenc'd; by Hand, when ſomething greater; by Arm, when more mighty than the former. Since God is Eternal, without limits of Time; he is alſo Almighty, without limits of Strength. As he cannot

cannot be ſaid to be more in Being now than he was before; ſo he is neither more nor leſs in ſtrength than he was before: As he cannot ceaſe to be, ſo he cannot ceaſe to be Powerful, becauſe he is Eternal. His Eternity and Power are link'd together as equally demonſtrable *; God is called the God of Gods? *El Elohim, the Mighty of Mighties, whence all mighty perſons have their activity and vigor: He is called the Lord of Hoſts, as being the Creator and Conductor of the Heavenly Militia.

* Rom. 1. 20.
* Dan. 11. 36

Reaſon 1. The Power that is in Creatures demonſtrates a greater and an unconceivable Power in God. Nothing in the world is without a power of Activity according to its Nature: No Creature but can act ſomething: The Sun warms and enlightens every thing: It ſend its Influences upon the Earth, into the bowels of the Earth, into the depths of the Sea: All Generations owe themſelves to its inſtrumental Virtue: How powerful is a ſmall Seed to riſe into a mighty Tree with a lofty top, and extenſive branches, and ſend forth other Seeds, which can ſtill multiply into numberleſs Plants? How wonderful is the Power of the Creator, who hath endowed ſo ſmall a Creature as a Seed with ſo fruitful an Activity? Yet this is but the virtue of a limited nature: God is both the producing and preſerving cauſe of all the virtue in any Creature, in every Creature: The power of every Creature belongs to him as the Fountain, and is truly his Power in the Creature. As he is the firſt Being, he is the original of all Being; as he is the firſt Good, he is the Spring of all Goodneſs; as he is the firſt Truth, he is the ſource of all Truth; ſo as he is the firſt Power, he is the Fountain of all Power.

1. He therefore that communicates to the Creature what power it hath, contains eminently much more power in himſelf. Pſal. 94. 10. He that teaches man knowledge, ſhall not he know? So he that gives created Beings power, ſhall not he be Powerful? The firſt Being muſt have as much Power as he hath given to others: He could not transfer that upon another, which he did not tranſcendently poſſeſs himſelf. The ſole cauſe of created Power cannot be deſtitute of any Power in himſelf. We ſee that the Power of one Creature tranſcends the power of another. Beaſts can do the things that Plants cannot do; beſides the power of growth they have a power of Senſe and progreſſive Motion: Men can do more than Beaſts; they have rational Souls to meaſure the Earth and Heavens, and to be repoſitories of multitudes of things, Notions and Concluſions. We may well imagine Angels to be far ſuperior to Man: The power of the Creator muſt far ſurmount the power of the Creature, and muſt needs be Infinite; for if it be limited, it is limited by himſelf or by ſome other; if by ſome other, he is no longer a Creator, but a Creature; for that which limits him in his Nature, did communicate that Nature to him; not by himſelf, for he would not deny himſelf any neceſſary Perfection: We muſt ſtill conclude a reſerve of Power in him, that he that made theſe can make many more of the ſame kind.

2. All the Power which is diſtinct in the Creatures muſt be united in God. One Creature hath a ſtrength to do this, another to do that; every Creature is as a Ciſtern filled with a particular and limited power, according to the capacity of its nature, from this Fountain; all are diſtinct Streams from God: But the ſtrength of every Creature, though diſtinct in the rank of Creatures, is united in God the Center, whence thoſe lines were drawn, the Fountain whence thoſe Streams were deriv'd: If the power of one Creature be admirable, as the power of an Angel, which the * Pſalmiſt ſaith, excelleth in ſtrength; how much greater muſt the power of a Legion of Angels be? How unconceivably ſuperior the power of all thoſe numbers of ſpiritual Natures, which are the excellent Works of God? Now if all this particular power which is in every Angel diſtinct, were compacted in one Angel, how would it exceed our Underſtanding, and be above our power to form a diſtinct Conception of it? What is thus divided in every Angel, muſt be thought united in the Creator of Angels, and far more excellent in him. Every thing is in a more noble manner in the Fountain, than in the Streams which diſtill and deſcend from it. He that is the Original of all thoſe diſtinct Powers, muſt be the Seat of all Power without diſtinction: In him is the union of all without diviſion; what is in them as a quality, is in him as his Eſſence. Again, if all the powers of ſeveral Creatures, with all their principal qualities and vigors, both of Beaſts, Plants, and rational Creatures, were united in one Subject; As if one Lion had the ſtrength of all the Lions that ever were; or if one Elephant had the ſtrength of all the Elephants that ever were; nay, if one Bee had all the power of motion and ſtinging that all Bees ever had, it would have a vaſt ſtrength; but if the ſtrength of all thoſe thus gathered into one of every kind ſhould be lodged in one ſole Creature, one Man, would it not be a ſtrength too big for our Conception? Or ſuppoſe one Canon had all the force of all the Cannons that ever were in the World, what a battery would it make, and, as it were, ſhake the whole frame of Heaven and Earth? All this Strength muſt be much more incomprehenſible in God, all is united in him. If it were in one individual created Nature, it would ſtill be but a finite Power in a finite Nature: But in God it is Infinite and Immenſe.

* Pſal. 103. 20.

Reaſ. 2. If there were not an incomprehenſible Power in God, he would not be infinitely perfect. God is the Firſt Being; It can only be ſaid of him, Eſt, he is. All other things are nothing to him, Leſs than nothing and vanity, Iſai. 40. 17. and reputed as nothing, Dan. 4. 35. All the Inhabitants of the Earth, with all their Wit and Strength, are counted as if they were not; juſt in compariſon with Him and his Being, as a little Mote in the Sunbeams: God therefore is a pure Being. Any kind of Weakneſs whatſoever is a defect, a degree of not Being; ſo far as any thing wants this or that Power it may be ſaid not to be. Were there any thing of weakneſs in God, any want of ſtrength which belong'd to the perfection of a Nature, it might be ſaid of God, He is not this or that, he wants this or that perfection of Being, and ſo he would not be a pure Being, there would be ſomething of not Being in him. But God being the Firſt Being the only Original Being, He is infinitely diſtant from not Being, and therefore infinitely diſtant from any thing of Weakneſs.

* Victorin. in Petar. Tom. 1. p. 333.

* Again, If God can know whatſoever is poſſible to be done by him, and cannot do it, there would be ſomething more in his Knowledge than in his Power. What would then follow? That the Eſſence of God would be in ſome regard greater than it ſelf, and leſs than it ſelf, becauſe his Knowledge and his Power are his Eſſence; his Power as much his Eſſence, as his Knowledge: And therefore, in regard of his Knowledge his Eſſence would be greater, in regard of his Power his Eſſence would be leſs, which is a thing impoſſible poſſible to be conceived in a moſt perfect Being. We muſt underſtand this of thoſe things, which are properly, and in their own Nature ſubjected to the Divine Knowledge; for otherwiſe God knows more than he can do; for he knows Sin, but he cannot act it, becauſe Sin belongs not to Power, but Weakneſs; and Sin comes under the Knowledge of God, not in it ſelf and its own Nature, but as it is a defect from God, and contrary to Good, which is the proper Object of Divine Knowledge. He knows it alſo not as poſſible to be done by himſelf, but as poſſible to be done by the Creature. * Victorin. in Petar. Tom. 1. p. 233. * Again, If God were not Omnipotent, we might imagine ſomething more perfect than God: For if we bar God from any one thing which in its own Nature is poſſible, we may imagine a Being that can do that thing, one that is able to effect it; and ſo imagine an Agent greater than God, a Being able to do more than God is able to do, and conſequently a Being more perfect than God: But no Being more perfect than God can be imagin'd by any Creature. Nothing can be called moſt Perfect, if any thing of Activity be wanting to it. Active Power follows the Perfection of a thing, and all things are counted more noble, by how much more of Efficacy and Vertue they poſſeſs. We count thoſe the beſt and moſt perfect Plants, that have the greateſt Medicinal Virtue in them, and power of working upon the Body for the cure of Diſtempers. God is perfect of himſelf, and therefore moſt powerful of himſelf. If his Perfection in Wiſdom and Goodneſs be unſearchable, his Power, which belongs to Perfection, and without which all the other Excellencies of his Nature were inſignificant, and could not ſhew themſelves, (as was before evidenc'd) muſt be unſearchable alſo. 'Tis by the Title of Almighty he is denominated, when declared to be unſearchable to Perfection Job 11. 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God, canſt thou find out the Almighty to Perfection? This would be limited and ſearched out, if he were deſtitute of an active Ability to do whatſoever he pleaſed to do, whatſoever was poſſible to be done. As he hath not a perfect liberty of Will, if he could not Will what he pleaſed; ſo he would not have a perfect Activity, if he could not do what he willed.

Reaſ. 3. The Simplicity of God manifeſts it. Every Subſtance, the more Spiritual it is, the more Powerful it is. All Perfections are more united in a ſimple, than in a compounded Being. Angels being Spirits, are more powerful than Bodies. Where there is the greateſt Simplicity, there is the greateſt Unity; and were there is the greateſt Unity, there is the greateſt Power. Where there is a compoſition of a Faculty and a Member, the Member or Organ may be weaken'd and render'd unable to act, though the Power doth ſtill reſide in the Faculty. As a Man, when his Arm or Hand is cut off or broke, he hath the faculty of Motion ſtill; but he hath loſt that Inſtrument, that part whereby he did manifeſt and put forth that motion: But God being a pure Spiritual Nature, hath no Members, no Organs to be defac'd or impair'd. All impediments of Action ariſe either from the nature of the thing that acts, or from ſomething without it. There can be no hindrance to God to do whatſoever he pleaſes; not in himſelf, becauſe he is the moſt Simple Being, hath no contrariety in himſelf, is not compos'd of divers things: And it cannot be from any thing without himſelf, becauſe nothing is equal to him, much leſs Superiour. He is the Greateſt, the Supream: All things were made by him, depend upon him, nothing can diſappoint his Intentions.

Reaſ. 4 The Miracles that have been in the World evidence that Power of God. Extraordinary productions have awakened Men from their ſtupidity, to the acknowledgment of the Immenſity of Divine Power. Miracles are ſuch effects as have been wrought without the aſſiſtance and co-operation of Natural Cauſes, yea contrary, and beſides the ordinary courſe of Nature, above the reach of any Created Power. Miracles have been; and ſaith Bradwardine *, To deny that ever ſuch things were, is uncivil: 'Tis inhuman to deny all the Hiſtories of Jews and Chriſtians; Whoſoever denies Miracles muſt deny all poſſibility of Miracles, and ſo muſt imagine himſelf fully skill'd in the extent of Divine Power. How was the Sun ſuſpended from its Motion for ſome hours; The Dead raiſed from the Grave; Thoſe reduc'd from the brink of it, that had been brought near to it by prevailing Diſeaſes; and this by a word ſpeaking? How were the famiſht Lions bridled from exerciſing their rage upon Daniel, expos'd to them for a Prey? The activity of the Fire curb'd for the preſervation of the Three Children? Which proves a Deity more powerful than all Creatures. No power upon Earth can hinder the operation of the Fire upon combuſtible Matter, when they are united, unleſs by quenching the Fire, or removing the Matter: But no created Power can reſtrain the Fire, ſo long as it remains ſo, from acting according to its Nature. This was done by God in the caſe of the Three Children, and that of the Burning Buſh. It was as much miraculous that the Buſh ſhould not conſume, as it was natural that it ſhould burn by the efficacy of the Fire upon it. No Element is ſo obſtinate and deaf, but it hears and obeys his Voice, and performs his Orders, though contrary to its own Nature: All the violence of the Creature is ſuſpended as ſoon as it receives his Command. * He that gave the Original to Nature, can take away the neceſſity of Nature: He preſides over Creatures, but is not confin'd to thoſe Laws he hath preſcrib'd to Creatures. He framed Nature, and can turn the Channels of nature according to his own pleaſure. Men dig into the bowels of Nature, ſearch into all the Treaſures of it, to find Medicines to cure a diſeaſe, and after all their attempts it may prove Labour in vain: But God, by one Act of his Will, one Word of his Mouth, overturns the Victory of Death, and reſcues from the moſt deſperate Diſeaſes *. All the Miracles which were wrought by the Apoſtles, either ſpeaking ſome Words, or Touching with the Hand, were not effected by any virtue inherent in their Words, or in their Touches. For ſuch Virtue inherent in any created finite ſubject would be created and finite it ſelf and conſequently were incapable to produce effects, which required an infinite Virtue, as Miracles do which are above the power of Nature. So when our Saviour wrought Miracles, it was not by any quality reſident in his human nature, but by the ſole Power of his Divinity. The Fleſh could only do what was proper to the Fleſh; but the Deity did what was proper to the Deity. God alone doth wonders. Excluding every other cauſe from producing ſuch things. He only doth thoſe things which are above the power of nature, and cannot be wrought by any Natural cauſes whatſoever. He doth not hereby put his Omnipotence to any ſtreſs: 'Tis as eaſie with him to turn Nature out of its ſetled courſe, as it was to place it in that ſtation it holds, and appoint it that courſe it runs.

All

All the Works of Nature are indeed Miracles and Teſtimonies of the Power of God producing them; and ſuſtaining them: But Works above the Power of Nature, being Novelties and unuſual, ſtrike Men with a greater admiration upon their appearance, becauſe they are not the products of Nature, but the convulſions of it.

I might alſo add as an Argument, The Power of the Mind of Man to conceive more than hath been wrought by God in the world. And God can work whatſoever Perfection the Mind of Man can conceive: Otherwiſe the reaches of a created Imagination and Fancy, would be more extenſive than the Power of God. His Power therefore is far greater than the conception of any Intellectual Creature; elſe the Creature would be of a greater capacity to conceive, than God is to effect. The Creature would have a power of Conception, above God's Power of Activity; and conſequently a Creature, in ſome reſpect greater than himſelf. Now whatſoever a Creature can conceive poſſible to be done, is but finite in its own nature; and if God could not produce what Being a created Underſtanding can conceive poſſible to be done, he would be leſs than Infinite in Power, nay, he could not go to the extent of what is Finite. But I have touched this before; That God can create more than he hath created, and in a more perfect way of Being, as conſidered ſimply in themſelves.

III. The third general thing, is to declare, How the Power of God appears, in Creation, in Government, in Redemption.

1. In Creation. With what Majeſtick Lines doth God ſet forth his Power, in the giving Being, and Endowments to all the Creatures in the World? All that is in Heaven and Earth is his, and ſhews the greatneſs of his Power, Glory, Victory, and Majeſty. The Heaven being ſo magnificent a piece of Work, is called emphatically, The Firmament of his Power *. His Power being more conſpicuous and unveil'd in that glorious Arch of the World. Indeed, God exalts by his Power *, that is exalts himſelf by his Power in all the Works of his hands; in the ſmalleſt Shrub, as well the moſt glorious Sun. All his Works of Nature are truly Miracles, though we conſider them not, being blinded with too frequent and cuſtomary a ſight of them; yet in the neglect of all the reſt, the view of the Heavens doth more affect us with aſtoniſhment at the Might of God's Arm: Theſe declare his Glory, and the Firmament ſhews his handy-work. And the Pſalmiſt peculiarly calls them His Heavens, and the work of his Fingers, Theſe were immediately created by God, whereas many other things in the World were brought into Being by the Power of God, yet by the means of the influence of the Heavens.

Job 38. 1 Chr. 29. 11.

*Pſal. 150. 1.

Pſal. 19. 1. Heb. 8. 3.

1. His Power is the firſt thing evident in the ſtory of the Creation. In the beginning God created the Heavens and the Earth, Gen. 1. 1. There's no appearance of any thing in this declaratory Preface, but of Power: The Characters of Wiſdom march after in the diſtinct formation of things, and animating them with ſuitable qualities for an Univerſal good. By Heaven, and Earth is meant the whole maſs of the Creatures: By Heaven, all the Aery Region, with all the Holt of it; by the Earth is meant, all that which makes the intire inferiour Globe. The Jews obſerve, that in the firſt of Geneſis, in the whole Chapter unto the finiſhing the Work in ſix Days, God is called אלהים, which is a Name of Power, and that Thirty two times in that Chapter; but after the finiſhing the ſix days Work, he is called יהוה אלהים, which according to their notion is a Name of Goodneſs and Kindneſs. His Power is firſt viſible in framing the world, before his Goodneſs is viſible in the ſuſtaining and preſerving it. It was by this Name of Power and Almighty that he was known in the firſt Ages of the world, not by his Name Jehovah; Exod. 6. 3. And I appeared unto Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, by the Name of God Almighty; but by my Name Jehovah was I not known to them. Not but that they were acquainted with the Name, but did not experience the intent of the Name, which ſignified his Truth in the performance of his Promiſes: They knew him by that name, as promiſing, but they knew him not by that name, as performing. He would be known by his Name Jehovah, True to his Word, when he was about to effect the Deliverance from Egypt; a Type of the Eternal Redemption, wherein the Truth of God, in performing of his firſt Promiſe, is glorioufly magnified. And hence it is that God is called Almighty more in the Book of Job, than in all the Scripture beſides, I think about Thirty two times, and Jehovah but once, which is Job 12. 9. unleſs in Job 38. when God is introduc'd ſpeaking himſelf; which is an Argument of Job's living before the Deliverance from Egypt, when God was known more by his Works of Creation, than by the performance of his Promiſes, before the Name Jehovah was formally publiſh'd. Indeed, this Attribute of his Eternal Power, is the firſt thing viſible and intelligible upon the firſt glance of the Eye upon the Creatures *. Bring a man out of the Cave where he hath been Nurſt, without ſeeing any thing out of the confines of it, and let him lift up his Eyes to the Heavens and take a proſpect of that glorious Body the Sun, then caſt them down to the Earth, and behold the Surface of it with its Green cloathing; the firſt Notion which will ſtart up in his Mind from that ſpring of Wonders, is that of Power, which he will at firſt adore with a Religious aſtoniſhment. The Wiſdom of God in them is not ſo preſently apparent, till after a more exquiſite conſideration of his Works and Knowledge of the properties of their natures, the conveniency of their ſituations, and the uſefulneſs of their functions, and the order wherein they are linkt together for the good of the Univerſe.

* Rom. 1. 20.

2. By this Creative Power God is often diſtinguiſht from all the Idols and Falſe gods! in the World. And by this Title he ſets forth himſelf when he would act any great and wonderful Work in the World, He is great above all gods, for he hath done whatſoever he pleaſed in Heaven and in Earth. Upon this is founded all the Worſhip he challengeth in the World, as his peculiar Glory. Revel. 4. 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive, glory, honour, and power, for thou haſt Created all things. And Rev. 10. 6. I have made the Earth, and created Man upon it. I, even my hands have ſtretched out the Heavens, and all their Hoſt have I commanded. Iſai. 45. 12. What is the iſſue, Verſe 16. They ſhall be aſhamed and confounded, all of them, that are makers of Idols. And the weakneſs of Idols is expreſt by this Title, The gods! that have not made the Heavens and the Earth, Jer. 10. 11. The portion of Jacob is not like them, for he is the former of all things, Verſe 16.

What is not that God able to do, that hath created ſo great a world? How doth the Power of God appear in Creation?

1. In making the World of Nothing. When we ſay

* Mercer. p. 7. col. 1, 2.

ſay, the World was made of Nothing, we mean, that there was no Matter exiſtent for God to work upon, but what he rais'd himſelf in the firſt act of Creation. In this regard, the Power of God in Creation ſurmounts his Power in Providence Creation ſuppoſeth nothing, Providence ſuppoſeth ſomething in Being. Creation intimates a Creature making, Providence ſpeaks a thing already made, and capable of Government, and in Government. God uſes ſecond Cauſes to bring about his Purpoſes.

Gen. 1. 1, 2. Suarez. vol. 3. p. 33.

1. The World was made of nothing. The Earth which is deſcrib'd as the firſt Matter, without any form or ornament, without any diſtinction or figures, was of God's forming in the Bulk, before he did adorn it with his Pencil. God in the begining creating the Heaven and the Earth, includes two things: Firſt, That thoſe were created in the beginning of time, and before all other things. Secondly, That God begun the Creation of the World from thoſe things. Therefore before the Heavens and the Earth there was nothing abſolutely created, and therefore no Matter in being before an act of Creation paſt upon it. It could not be Eternal, becauſe nothing can be Eternal but God; it muſt therefore have a beginning: If it had a beginning from it ſelf, then it was before it was. If it acted in the making it ſelf before it was made, then it had a Being before it had a Being; for that which is nothing, can act nothing: The action of any thing ſuppoſeth the exiſtence of the thing which acts. It being made, it was not before it was made; for to be made is to be brought into Being It was made then by another, and that Maker is God. 'Tis neceſſary that the firſt Original of things was from nothing: When we ſee one thing to ariſe from another, we muſt ſuppoſe an Original of the firſt of each kind: As when we ſee a Tree ſpring up from a Seed, we know that that Seed came out of the bowels of another Tree; it had a Parent, and it had a Matter; we muſt come to ſome Firſt, or elſe we run into an endleſs Maze: We muſt come to ſome firſt Tree, ſome firſt Seed that had no cauſe of the ſame kind, no matter of it, but was meer nothing. * Creation doth ſuppoſe a production from nothing; becauſe if you ſuppoſe a thing without any real or actual Exiſtence, 'tis not capable of any other production than from nothing: Nothing muſt be ſuppoſed before the World, or we muſt ſuppoſe it Eternal, and that is to deny it to be a Creature, and make it God. The Creation of Spiritual Subſtances, ſuch as Angels and Souls evince this; thoſe things that are purely ſpiritual, and conſiſt not of matter, cannot pretend to any Original from Matter, and therefore they roſe up from nothing. If ſpiritual things aroſe from nothing, much more may corporeal, becauſe they are of a lower nature than ſpiritual. And he that can create a higher Nature of nothing, can create an inferior nature of nothing. As bodily things are more imperfect than ſpiritual, ſo their Creation may be ſuppoſed eaſier than that of ſpiritual. There was as little need of any matter to be wrought to his hands, to contrive this viſible Fabrick, as there was to erect ſuch an excellent Order, as the glorious Cherubims.

* Suarez. vol 3. p. 6.

2. This Creation of things from nothing, ſpeaks an infinite Power. The diſtance between Nothing and Being, hath been alway counted ſo great, that nothing but an infinite Power can make ſuch diſtances meet together; either for Nothing to paſs into Being, or Being to return to nothing. To have a thing ariſe from nothing, was ſo difficult a Text to thoſe that were ignorant of the Scripture, that they knew not how to fathom it; and therefore laid it down as a certain Rule, That of nothing, nothing is made; which is true of a created Power, but not of an uncreated and Almighty Power. A greater diſtance cannot be imagin'd than that which is between Nothing and Something; that which hath no beng, and that which hath: And a greater Power cannot be imagin'd, then that which brings Something out of Nothing. * We know not how to conceive a Nothing, and afterwards a Being from that Nothing; but we muſt remain ſwallowed up in admiration of the Cauſe that gives it Being, and acknowledge it to be without any bounds and meaſures of Greatneſs and Power. The further any thing is from Being, the more immenſe muſt that Power be which brings it into Being: 'Tis not conceivable that the power of all the Angels in one, can give Being to the ſmalleſt ſpire of Graſs. To imagine therefore ſo ſmall a thing as a Bee, a Fly, a grain of Corn, or an Atome of Duſt to be made of nothing, would ſtupify any Creature in the conſideration of it: Much more to behold the Heavens with all the Troop of Stars, the Earth with all its Embroidery, and the Sea with all her Inhabitants of Fiſh; and Man, the nobleſt Creature of all, to ariſe out of the Womb of meer Emptineſs. Indeed God had not acted as an Almighty Creator if he had ſtood in need of any Materials, but of his own framing: It had been as much as his Deity was worth, if he had not had all within the compaſs of his own Power, that was neceſſary to Operation; if he muſt have been beholden to ſomthing without himſelf; and above himſelf, for matter to work upon; Had there been ſuch a neceſſity, we could not have imagin'd him to be Omnipotent, and conſequently not God.

* Amyrald Morale, tom. 1. p. 252.

3. In this the power of God exceeds the power of all natural and rational Agents. Nature, or the Order of ſecond Cauſes, hath a vaſt Power: The Sun generates Flies and other Inſects, but of ſome Matter, the Slime of the Earth or a Dunghill: The Sun and the Earth bring forth Harveſts of Corn, but from Seed firſt ſown in the Earth: Fruits are brought forth, but from the Sap of the Plant. Were there no Seed or Plants in the Earth, the power of the Earth would be idle, and the influence of the Sun inſignificant; whatſoever ſtrength either of them had in their Nature, muſt be uſeleſs without matter to work upon. All the united ſtrength of Nature cannot produce the leaſt thing out of nothing: It may multiply and increaſe things, by the powerful bleſſing God gave it at the firſt erecting of the World, but it cannot create. The Word which ſignifies Creation, uſed in Gen. 1. 1. is not aſcrib'd to any ſecond Cauſe, but only to God; a word in that ſenſe as incommunicable to any thing elſe, as the action it ſignifies.

Rational Creatures can produce admirable Pieces of Art from ſmall things, yet ſtill out of Matter created to their hands. Excellent Garments may be woven, but from the Entrails of a ſmall Silkworm. Delightful and Medicinal Spirits and Eſſences may be extracted by ingenious Chymiſts; but out of the Bodies of Plants and Minerals. No Picture can be drawn without Colours; no Statue engraven without Stone, no Building erected without Timber, Stones, and other Materials. Nor can any man raiſe a thought, without ſome Matter framed to his hands, or caſt into him. Matter is by Nature formed to the hands of all Artificers; they beſtow a new Figure upon it, by the help of of Inſtruments, and the product of their own Wit and Skill, but they create not the leaſt particle of Matter; when they want it, they muſt be ſupplied, or elſe ſtand ſtill, as well as Nature; for none of them, or all together, can make the leaſt Mite or Atome. And when they have wrought all that they can, they will not want ſome to find a flaw and defect in their work. God as a Creator hath the only Prerogative to draw what he pleaſes from nothing, without any defect, without any imperfection: He can raiſe what Matter he pleaſes; ennoble it with what form he pleaſes. Of nothing, nothing can be made by any created Agent: But the Omnipotent Architect of the World, is not under the ſame neceſſity, nor is limited to the ſame Rule, and tied by ſo ſhort a Tedder as created Nature, or an ingenious, yet feeble Artificer.

2. It appears, In raiſing ſuch variety of Creatures from this barren Womb of Nothing, or from the Matter which he firſt commanded to appear out of Nothing. Had there been any pre-exiſtent Matter, yet the bringing forth ſuch varieties and diverſities of excellent Creatures; ſome with Life, ſome with Senſe, and others with Reaſon ſuperadded to the reſt; and thoſe out of indiſpoſed and undigeſted Matter, would argue an infinite Power reſident in the firſt Author of this variegated Fabrick. From this Matter he formed that glorious Sun, which every day diſplays its Glory, ſcatters its Beams, clears the Air, ripens our Fruits, and maintains the propagation of Creatures in the World. From this Matter he lighted thoſe Torches which he ſet in the Heaven to qualifie the darkneſs of the Night: From this he compacted thoſe Bodies of Light, which though they ſeem to us as little ſparks, as if they were the Gloe-worms of Heaven, yet ſome of them exceed in greatneſs this Globe of the Earth on which we live. And the higheſt of them hath ſo quick a motion, that ſome tell us, they run in the ſpace of every hour 42 millions of Leagues. From the ſame matter he drew the Earth, on which we walk; from thence he extracted the Flowers to adorn it, the Hills to ſecure the Valleys, and the Rocks to fortifie it againſt the Inundations of the Sea. And on this dull and ſluggiſh Element, he beſtowed ſo great a fruitfulneſs, to maintain, feed, and multiply ſo many Seeds of different kinds and conferred upon thoſe little Bodies of Seeds a power to multiply their kinds in conjunction with the fruitfulneſs of the Earth to many thouſands. From this rude Matter, the Slime, or Duſt of the Earth, he kneaded the Body of Man, and wrought ſo curious a Fabrick, fit to entertain a Soul of a Heavenly extraction, form'd by the breath of God *. He brought Light out of thick Darkneſs, and living Creatures, Fiſh and Foul, out of inanimate waters *, and gave a power of ſpontaneous motion to things ariſing from that Matter which had no living motion. To convert one thing into another, is an evidence of infinite Power, as well as creating things of nothing; for the diſtance between life and not life, is next to that which is between being and not being. God firſt forms Matter out of Nothing, and then draws upon and from this indiſpoſed Chaos, many excellent Pourtraitures. Neither Earth nor Sea were capable of producing living Creatures, without an infinite Power working upon it, and bringing into it ſuch variety and multitude of Forms; and this is called by ſome mediate Creation; as the producing the Chaos, which was without form and void, is called immediate Creation. Is not the power of the Potter admirable in forming out of temper'd Clay, ſuch varieties of neat and curious Veſſels, that after they are faſhion'd, and paſt the Furnace, look as if they were not of any kin to the Matter they are formed of? And is it not the ſame with the Glaſs-maker, that from a little melted gelly of Sand and Aſhes, or the Duſt of Flint, can blow up ſo pure a Body as Glaſs, and in ſuch varieties of ſhapes; and is not the Power of God more admirable, becauſe infinite in ſpeaking out ſo beautiful a World out of nothing; and ſuch varieties of living Creatures from Matter utterly indiſpos'd in its own nature for ſuch forms?

*Gen. 2. 7.

* Gen. 1. 20.

3. And this conducts to a third thing, wherein the power of God appears, in that He did all this with the greateſt eaſe and facility.

1. Without Inſtruments. As God made the World without the advice, ſo without the aſſiſtance of any other. He ſtretched forth the Heavens alone, and ſpread abroad the Earth by himſelf, Iſai. 44. 24. He had no Engin, but his Word; no pattern or model but himſelf. What need can he have of Inſtruments, that is able to create what Inſtruments he pleaſes? Where there is no reſiſtance in the Object, where no need of preparation or inſtrumental advantage in the Agent; there the actual determination of the Will is ſufficient to a production. What Inſtrument need we to the thinking of a Thought, or an act of our Will? Men indeed cannot act any thing without Tools; the beſt Artificer muſt be beholden to ſomething elſe for his nobleſt works of Art. The Carpenter cannot work without his Rule, and Ax, and Saw, and other Inſtruments. The Watch-maker cannot act without his File and Pliars: But in Creation, there is nothing neceſſary to God's bringing forth a World, but a ſimple act of his Will, which is both the principal cauſe, and inſtrumental. He had no Scaffolds to rear it, no Engines to poliſh it, no Hammers or Mattocks to clod and work it together. 'Tis a miſerable Error to meaſure the actions of an Infinite Cauſe by the imperfect model of a Finite, ſince by his own Power and Out-ſtretched Arm, he made the Heaven and the Earth *. † What excellency would God have in his work above others, if he needed Inſtruments, as feeble men do? Every Artificer is counted more admirable, that can frame curious Works with the leſs matter, fewer Tools and aſſiſtances: God uſes Inſtruments in his Works of Providence, not for neceſſity, but for the diſplay of his Wiſdom in the management of them; yet thoſe Inſtruments were originally framed by him without Inſtruments. Indeed ſome of the Jews thought the Angels were the Inſtruments of God in creating Man, and that thoſe words, Let us make Man in our own image, were ſpoken to Angels. But certainly the Scripture, which denies God any Counſellor in the model of Creation *, doth not joyn any Inſtrument with him in the operation which is every where aſcribed to himſelf without created aſſiſtance, Iſai, 45. 18. It was not to Angels God ſpake in that Affair; if ſo, Man was made after the image of Angels, if they were Companions with God in that Work: But it is every where ſaid, that Man was made after the Image of God. Again, the image wherein Man was created, was that of dominion over the lower Creatures, as appears Verſe 26. which we find not conferr'd upon Angels; and it is not likely that Moſes ſhould introduce the Angels, as God's Privy Counſel, of whoſe Creation he had not mention'd one ſyllable. Let us make Man, rather ſignifies the Trinity, and not ſpoken in a Royal ſtyle, as ſome think. Which of the Jewiſh Kings writ in the ſtyle, We? That was the cuſtom of later times; and we muſt not meaſure the language of Scripture by the ſtyle of Europe, of a far later date than the penning the Hiſtory of the Creation. If Angels were his Counſellors in the Creation of the material World, what Inſtrument had he in the Creation of Angels? If his own Wiſdom were the Director, and his own Will the producer of the one; why ſhould we not think, that he acted by his ſole Power in the other? 'Tis concluded by moſt, that the Power of Creation cannot be deriv'd to any Creature, it being a work of Omnipotency: The drawing Something out from Nothing, cannot be communicated without a communication of the Deity it ſelf. The educing things from Nothing exceeds the capacity of any Creature and the Creature is of too feeble a Nature to be elevated to ſo high a degree. 'Tis very unreaſonable to think, that God needed any ſuch aid. If an Inſtrument were neceſſary for God to create the World, then he could not do it without that Inſtrument: If he could not, he were not then All-ſufficient in himſelf, if he depended upon any thing without himſelf, for the production or conſummation of his Works. And it might be enquired, how that Inſtrument came into Being: If it begun to be, and there was a time when it was not, it muſt have its Being from the Power of God; and then, why could not God as well create all things without an Inſtrument, as create that Inſtrument without an Inſtrument? For there was no more Power neceſſary to a producing the whole without Inſtruments, than to produce one Creature without an Inſtrument.

No Creature can in its own nature be an Inſtrument of Creation. If any ſuch Inſtrument were uſed by God, it muſt be elevated in a miraculous and ſupernatural way; and what is ſo an Inſtrument, is in effect no Inſtrument; for it works nothing by its own nature, but from an elevation of a Superiour nature, and beyond its own nature. All the power in the Inſtrument is truly the Power of God, and not the power of the Inſtrument. And therefore what God doth by an Inſtrument, he could do as well without. If you ſhould ſee one apply a Straw to Iron, for the cutting of it, and effect it, you would not call the Straw an Inſtrument in that action, becauſe there was nothing in the nature of the Straw to do it. It was done wholly by ſome other force, which might have done it as well without the Straw as with it. The narrative of the Creation in Geneſis removes any Inſtrument from God. The Plants which are preſerved and propagated by the Influence of the Sun, were created the day before the Sun, viz. on the Third day, whereas the Light was collected into the body of the Sun on the Fourth day *; to ſhew, that though the Plants do inſtrumentally owe their yearly beauty and preſervation to the Sun, yet they did not in any manner owe their Creation to the Inſtrumental heat and vigor of it.

* Gen. 1. 11, 16.

Gen. 1. 3, 5, &c. throughout the whole Chapter.

2. God created the World by a Word, by a ſimple Act of his Will. The whole Creation is wrought by a Word; God ſaid, Let there be Light; and God ſaid Let there be a Firmament. Not that we ſhould underſtand it of a ſenſible Word, but to expreſs the eaſineſs of this operation to God, as eaſie as a word to Man. We muſt underſtand it of a Powerful order of his own Will, which is expreſt by the Pſalmiſt in the nature of a Command, Pſal. 33. 6. He ſpake and it was done, he commanded and it ſtood faſt; and Pſal. 148. 5. He commanded and they were created. At the ſame inſtant that he willed them to ſtand forth, they did ſtand forth. The efficacious Command of the Creator was the Original of All things; the inſenſibility of Nothing obeyed the act of his Will. Creation is therefore entituled a Calling, Rom. 4. 17. He calls thoſe things which are not, as if they were. To Create is no more with God, than to Call; and what he calls, preſents it ſelf before him in the ſame poſture that he calls it. He did with more eaſe make a World, than we can form a Thought. 'Tis the ſame eaſe to him to create Worlds, as to decree them: There needs no more than a Reſolve to have things wrought at ſuch a time, and they will be, according to his pleaſure. This Will is his Power: Let there be light, is the Precept of his Will; and there was light, is the effect of his Precept. By a Word was the Matter of the Heavens and the Earth framed: By a Word Things ſeparate themſelves from the rude Maſs into their proper Forms By a Word, Light aſſociates it ſelf into one body, and forms a Sun: By a Word are the Heavens, as it were, beſpangled with Stars, and the Earth dreſt with Flowers: By a Word, is the World both ceil'd and floor'd. One act of his Will formed the World, and perfected its beauty. All the variety and ſeveral exploits of his Power were not cauſed by diſtinct Words or Acts of Power. God utter'd not diſtinct Words for diſtinct Species; as let there be an Elephant, and let there be a Lion; but as he produced thoſe various Creatures out of one Matter, ſo by one Word. By one ſingle Command, thoſe varieties of Creatures, with their Clothing, Ornaments, diſtinct Notes, Qualities, Functions, were brought forth. By one word, all the Seeds of the Earth, with their various Virtues. By one Word, all the Fiſh of the Sea, and Fowls of the Air in their diſtinct Natures, Inſtincts, Colours. By one Word, all the Beaſts of the Field, with their varieties. * Heaven and Earth, Spiritual and Corporeal Creatures, Mortal and Immortal, the Greater and the leſs, Viſible and Inviſible, were formed with the ſame eaſe. A Word made the Leaſt, and a Word made the Greateſt. 'Tis as little difficulty to him to produce the higheſt Angel, as the lighteſt Atom. 'Tis enough for the exiſtence of the ſtatelieſt Cherubim, for God only to Will his Being. It was enough for the forming and fixing the Sun, to will the compacting of Light into one Body. The creation of the Soul of Man is expreſt by Inſpiration: To ſhew, that it is as eaſie with God, to create a Rational Soul, as for Man to breath *. Breathing is natural to Man, by a communication of God's goodneſs; and the creation of the Soul is as eaſie to God, by virtue of his Almighty Word. As there was no proportion between Nothing and Being; ſo there was as little proportion between a Word and ſuch glorious Effects. A meer Voice, coming, from an Omnipotent Will, was capable to produce ſuch varieties, which Angels and Men have ſeen in all Ages of the World; and this without wearineſs. What labour is there in Willing, what pain could there be in ſpeaking a word? Iſai. 40. 28. The Creator of the ends of the Earth

Earth is not weary. And though he be ſaid to Reſt after the Creation, 'tis to be meant a Reſt from work, not a Repoſe from wearineſs So great is the Power of God, that without any Matter, without any Inſtruments, he could create many Worlds, and with the ſame eaſe as he made this.

4. I might add alſo the appearance of this Power in the Inſtantaneous production of things. The ending of his Word was not only the beginning, but the perfection of every thing he ſpake into Being; not ſeveral Words to ſeveral parts and Members, but one Word, one breath of his Mouth, one act of his Will to the whole ſpecies of the Creatures, and to every Member of each individual. Heaven and Earth were created in a moment, Six days went to their diſpoſal; and that comely Order we obſerve in the World was the work of a Week: The Matter was formed as ſoon as God had ſpoken the Word; and in every part of the Creation, as ſoon as God ſpake the Word, Let it be ſo, the anſwer immediately is, It was ſo; which notes the preſent ſtanding up of the Creature according to the act of his Will: And therefore * One obſerves that Let there be light, and there was light, in the Hebrew are the ſame words, without any alteration of Letter or Point, only the conjunctive Particle added יְהִי אוֹר וַיְהִי אוֹר Let there be light, and let there be light, to ſhew, that the ſame inſtant of the ſpeaking the Divine word, was the appearance of the Creature: So great was the Authority of his Will.

Gen. 1.

* Pearſ. p. 111.

2. We are to ſhew God's Power in the Government of the World. As God decreed from Eternity the Creation of things in time, ſo he decreed from Eternity the particular ends of Creatures, and their operations reſpecting thoſe ends. Now as there was need of his Power to execute his Decree of Creation, there is alſo need of his Power to execute his Decree about the manner of Government. * All Government is an act of the Underſtanding, Will and Power. Prudence to deſign belongs to the Underſtanding, the election of the means belongs to the Will, and the accompliſhment of the whole is an act of Power. 'Tis a hard matter to determine which is moſt neceſſary: Wiſdom ſtands in as much need of Power to perfect, as Power doth of Wiſdom to model and draw out a Scheme; though Wiſdom directs, Power muſt effect. Wiſdom and Power are diſtinct things among Men: A poor man in a Cottage may have more Prudence to Adviſe, than a Privy Counſellor; and a Prince more Power to act, than Wiſdom to conduct. A Pilot may direct though he be lame, and cannot climb the Maſts and ſpread the Sails: But God is wanting in nothing; neither in Wiſdom to deſign, nor in Will to determine, nor in Power to accompliſh. His Wiſdom is not feeble, nor his Power fooliſh: A powerleſs Wiſdom could not act what it would, and a fooliſh power would act more than it ſhould. The Power expreſt in his Government, is ſhadow'd forth in the Living Creatures, which are God's Inſtruments in it. 'Tis ſaid, Every one of them had four faces; that of a Man to ſignify Wiſdom; of a Lion and Eagle, the ſtrongeſt among Birds, to ſignify their Courage and Strength to perform their Offices.

This Power is evident in the Natural, Moral, Gracious Government.

There is a Natural Providence, which conſiſts in the preſervation of all things, propagation of them by Corruptions and Generations. and in a Co-operation with them in their motions to attain their ends.

Moral Government is of the Hearts and Actions of Men.

Gracious Government, as reſpecting the Church.

I. His Power is evident in Natural Government.

1. In Preſervation. God is the great Father of the World, to nouriſh it as well as create it*. Manand Beaſt would periſh if there were not Herbs for their food; and Herbs would wither and periſh, if the Earth were not watered with fruitful ſhowers. This ſome of the Heathens acknowledg'd, in their worſhiping God under the image of an Ox, a uſeful Creature, by reaſon of its ſtrength, to which we owe ſo much of our food in Corn. Hence God is ſtyled the Preſerver of Man and Beaſt. Hence the Jews called God * Place; becauſe he is the ſubſiſtence of all things. By the ſame Word whereby he gave Being to things, he gives to them continuance and duration in Being to ſuch a term of time. As they were created by his word, they are ſupported by his word, Heb. 1. 3. The ſame powerful Fiat, Let the Earth bring forth Graſs, when the Plants peep'd upon Man out of nothing, is expreſt every Spring, when they begin to lift up their heads from their naked Roots and Winter graves. The reſurrection of Light every Morning, the reviving the pleaſure of all things to the eye; the watering the Vallies from the Mountain Springs; the curbing the natural appetite of the Waters from covering the Earth; every draught that the Beaſts drink, every lodging the Fowls have, every bit of Food for the ſuſtenance of Man and Beaſt, is aſcrib'd to the Opening of his hand, the diffuſing of his Power. Pſal. 104. 27, &c. as much as the firſt Creation of things, and endowing them with their particular nature: Whence the Plants, which are ſo ſerviceable, are called the Trees of the Lord, of Jehovah, that hath only Being and Power in himſelf. The whole Pſalm is but the deſcription of his preſerving as the firſt of Geneſis is of his creating Power. 'Tis by this Power Angels have ſo many thouſand years remained in the power of underſtanding and willing. By this Power things diſtant in their natures have been joyned together, a Spiritual Soul and a Duſty Body knit in a Marriage knot. By this Power the Heavenly Bodies have for ſo many Ages roul'd in their Spheres, and the tumultuous Elements have perſiſted in their order: By this hath the Matter of the World been to this day continued, and, as capable of entertaining forms as it was at the firſt Creation. What an amazing ſight would it be to ſee a man hold a Pillar of the Exchange upon one of his Fingers? What is this to the Power of God, who holds the waters in the hollow of his hands, metes out the Heaven with a ſpan, and weighs the Mountains in ſcales, and the Hills in a balance?

* The preſerving the Earth from the violence of the Sea is a plain inſtance of this Power. How is that raging Element kept pent within thoſe liſts where he firſt lodged it; continuing its courſe in its Channel without overflowing the Earth, and daſhing in pieces the lower part of the Creation? The natural ſituation of the Water is to be above the Earth, becauſe it is lighter; and to be immediately under the Air, becauſe it is heavier than that thinner Element. Who reſtrains this natural quality of it, but that God that firſt formed it? The word of Command at firſt, Hitherto ſhalt thou go, and no further, keeps thoſe Waters linkt together in their Den, that they may not ravage the Earth, but be uſeful uſeful to the Inhabitants of it. And when once it finds a gap to enter, what power of Earth can hinder its paſſage? How fruitleſs ſometimes is all the Art of Man to ſend it to its proper Channel, when once it hath ſpread its mighty waves over ſome Countries, and trampled part of the inhabited Earth under its feet? It hath triumphed in its victory, and withſtood all the power of Man to conquer its force. 'Tis only the Power of God that doth bridle it from ſpreading it ſelf over the whole Earth. And that his Power might be more manifeſt, he hath ſet but a weak and ſmall bank againſt it. Though he hath bounded it in ſome places by mighty Rocks, which lift up their heads above it, yet in moſt places by feeble Sand. How often is it ſeen in every ſtormy motion, when the waves boil high, and rowl furiouſly, as if they would ſwallow up all the neighbouring Houſes upon the Shoar; when they come to touch thoſe Sandy limits, they bow their Heads, fall flat, and ſink into the Lap whence they were raiſed; and ſeem to foam with Anger that they can march no further, but muſt ſpit themſelves at ſo weak an obſtacle? Can the Sand be thought to be the cauſe of this? The weakneſs of it gives no footing to ſuch a thought. Who can apprehend that an enraged Army ſhould retire upon the oppoſition of a Straw in an Infants hand? Is it the nature of the Water? Its retirement is againſt the natural quality of it; pour but a little upon the ground, and you always ſee it ſpread it ſelf: No cauſe can be rendred in nature; 'tis a ſtanding Monument of the Power of God in the preſervation of the World, and ought to be more taken notice of by us in this Iſland, ſurrounded with it, than by ſome other Countreys in the World.

1. We find nothing hath power to preſerve it ſelf. Doth not every Creature upon Earth require the aſſiſtance of ſome other for its maintenance? Can the Ruſh grow up without mire; can the Flag grow up without water? Job 8. 11. Can Man or Beaſt maintain it ſelf without grain from the bowels of the Earth? Would not every Man tumble into the grave, without the aid of other Creatures to nouriſh him? Whence do theſe Creatures receive that virtue of ſupplying him nouriſhment, but from the Sun and Earth; and whence do they derive that virtue, but from the Creator of all things? And ſhould he but ſlack his hand, how ſoon would they and all their qualities periſh, and the links of the World fall in pieces and daſh one another into their firſt Chaos and confuſion? All Creatures indeed have an appetite to preſerve themſelves, they have ſome knowledge of the outward Means for their preſervation; ſo have irrational Animals a natural inſtinct, as well as Men have ſome skill to avoid things that are hurtful and apply things that are helpful: But what thing in the World can preſerve it ſelf by an inward influx into its own Being? All things want ſuch a power without God's, Fiat, Let it be ſo: Nothing but is deſtitute of ſuch a power for its own preſervation, as much as it is of a power for its own creation. Were there any true Power for ſuch a work, what need of ſo many External helps from things of an inferior Nature to that which is preſerved by them?

No created thing hath a Power to preſerve any decayed Being. Who can lay claim to ſuch a virtue, as to recall a withering Flower to its former beauty, to raiſe the head of a drooping Plant, or put life into a gaſping Worm when it is expiring; or put impair'd Vitals into their former poſture? Not a Man upon Earth, nor an Angel in Heaven, can pretend to ſuch a Virtue; they may be ſpectators, but not Aſſiſters, and are in this caſe Phyſicians of no value.

2. 'Tis therefore the ſame Power preſerves things which at firſt created them. The Creature doth as much depend upon God in the firſt inſtant of its Being, for its preſervation; as it did when it was nothing, for its production and creation into Being. *As the continuance of a Thought of our Mind depends upon the power of our Mind, as well as the firſt framing of that Thought. There is as little difference between Creating and Preſerving Power, as there is between the power of mine Eye to begin an act of Viſion and continue that act of Viſion; as to caſt my Eye upon an Object, and continue it upon that Object: As the firſt act is cauſed by the Eye, ſo the duration of that act is preſerved by the Eye; ſhut the Eye and the act of Viſion periſhes, divert the Eye from that Object, and that act of Viſion is exchanged for another. And therefore the preſervation of things is commonly called a Continual creation: And certainly it is no leſs, if we underſtand it of a Preſervation by an inward influence into the Being of things. † 'Tis one and the ſame action invariably continued, and obtaining its force every moment: The ſame action whereby he created them of Nothing, and which every moment hath a virtue to produce a thing out of nothing, if it were not yet extant in the World: It remains the ſame without any diminution throughout the whole time wherein any thing doth remain in the World. For all things would return to Nothing, if God did not keep them up in the elevation and ſtate to which he at firſt raiſed them by his Creative Power. Acts 17. 28. In him we live and have our Being. By him, or by the ſame Power whence we deriv'd our Being, are our lives maintained: As it was his Almighty Power whereby we were after we had been nothing; ſo it is the ſame Power whereby we now are after he hath made us ſomething.

* Leſſius de Perfect. divin. p. 69.

† Leſſius de Sum. bon. p. 580 581, 582.

Certainly all things have no leſs a dependance on God, than Light upon the Sun, which vaniſheth and hides its head upon the withdrawing of the Sun. And ſhould God ſuſpend that powerful Word whereby he erected the frame of the World, it would ſink down to what it was, before he commanded it to ſtand up. There needs no new act of Power to reduce things to Nothing, but the ceſſation of that Omnipotent influx: When the appointed time ſet them for their Being comes to a period, they faint and bend down their heads to their diſſolution, they return to their elements and periſh, Pſal. 104. 29. Thou hideſt thy face, and they are troubled: thou takeſt away their breath, they die and return to their duſt. That which was Nothing cannot remain on this ſide Nothing but by the ſame Power that firſt called it out of Nothing. As when God withdrew his concurring Power from the Fire its quality ceas'd to act upon the Three Children: ſo if he withdraws his ſuſtaining Power from the Creature, its Nature will ceaſe to be.

2. It appears in Propagation. That powerful word, Increaſe and multiply, pronounced at the firſt Creation, hath ſpread it ſelf over every part of the World; every Animal in the World, in the formation of every one of them. From Two of a kind, how great a number of individuals, and ſingle Gen. 1. 22, 23.

ſingle Creatures have been multiplied, to cover the face of the Earth in their continued ſucceſſions? What a world of Plants ſpring up from the womb of a dry Earth, moiſtned by the influence of a Cloud, and hatcht by the beams of the Sun? How admirable an inſtance of his propagating Power is it, that from a little Seed a maſſy Root ſhould ſtrike into the bowels of the Earth, a tall body and thick branches with Leaves and Flowers of various colours, ſhould break through the ſurface of the Earth, and mount up towards Heaven, when in the Seed you neither ſmell the ſcent, nor ſee any firmneſs of a tree, nor behold any of thoſe Colours which you view in the Flowers that the years produce? A Power not to be imitated by any Creature. How aſtoniſhing is it that a ſmall Seed, whereof many will not amount to the weight of a grain, ſhould ſpread it ſelf into Leaves, Bark, Fruit of a vaſt weight, and multiply it ſelf into Millions of Seeds? What Power is that, that from one Man and Woman hath multiplied Families, and from Families, ſtockt the World with People? Conſider the living Creatures, as formed in the womb of their ſeveral kinds; every one is a wonder of Power. The Pſalmiſt inſtanceth in the forming and propagating of Man, Pſal. 139. 14. I am fearfully and wonderfully made, marvellous are thy works. The forming of the parts diſtinctly in the Womb, the bringing forth into the World every particular Member, is a rowl of wonders, of Power. That ſo fine a ſtructure as the Body of Man ſhould be poliſht in the lower parts of the Earth, as he calls the Womb, Verſe 15. in ſo ſhort a time, with Members of a various form and uſefulneſs, each labouring in their ſeveral functions. Can any man give an exact account of the manner, how the Bones do grow in the Womb: 'Tis unknown to the Father, and no leſs hid from the Mother, and the wiſeſt Men cannot ſearch out the depths of it. 'Tis one of the Secret works of an Omnipotent Power, ſecret in the manner, though open in the effect. So that we muſt aſcribe it to God, as Job doth, Thine hands have made me, and faſhioned me together round about. Thy hands which formed Heaven, have formed every Part, every Member, and wrought me like a Mighty workman. The Heavens are ſaid to be the work of God's hands, and Man is here ſaid to be no leſs. The forming and propagation of Man from that Earthly Matter, is no leſs a wonder of Power, than the ſtructure of the World from a rude and indiſpos'd Matter. * A Heathen Philoſopher deſcants elegantly upon it: Doſt thou underſtand (my Son) the forming of Man in the womb; who erected that noble Fabrick; who carv'd the Eyes, the Cryſtal-windows of light, and the conductors of the Body; who bor'd the Noſtrils and Ears, thoſe Loopholes of ſcents and ſounds; who ſtretched out and knit the Sinews and Ligaments for the faſtning of every Member; who caſt the hollow Veins, the Channels of Blood; ſet and ſtrengthned the Bones, the Pillars and Rafters of the Body; who digg'd the Pores, the ſinks to expel the filth; who made the Heart, the repoſitory of the Soul, and formed the Lungs like a Pipe? What Mother, what Father wrought theſe things? No, none but the Almighty God, who made all things according to his pleaſure; 'tis He who propagates this Noble piece from a pile of Duſt. Who is born by his own advice; who gives ſtature, features, ſence, wit, ſtrength, ſpeech, but God?

Eccleſ. 11. 5.

Job 10. 8.

* Triſmegiſt. in Serm. Greek in the Temple, p. 57.

'Tis no leſs a wonder, that a little Infant can live ſo long in a dark Sink, in the midſt of filth without breathing: And the eduction of it out of the Womb is no leſs a wonder, than the forming, increaſe, nouriſhment of it in that Cell. A wonder that the life of the Infant is not the death of the Mother, or the Life of the Mother the death of the Infant. This little Creature, when it ſprings up from ſuch ſmall beginnings by the Power of God, grows up to be one of the Lords of the World, to have a Dominion over the Creatures, and propagates its kind in the ſame manner: All this is unaccountable without having recourſe to the Power of God in the government of the Creatures.

And to add to this wonder, Conſider alſo what multitudes of Formations and Births there are at one time all over the World, in every of which the Finger of God is at work; and it will ſpeak an unwearied Power. 'Tis admirable in one Man, more in a Town of Men, ſtill more in a greater and larger Kingdom, a vaſter world; there is a Birth for every hour in this City, were but 168 born in a week, though the Weekly Bills mention more: What is this City to Three Kingdoms; what Three Kingdoms to a populous World? Ten thouſand and Eighty will make one for every Minute in the Week; what is this to the weekly propagation in all the Nations of the Univerſe, beſides the generation of all the Living Creatures in that Space, which are the works of God's fingers as well as Man? What will be the reſult of this, but the notion of an unconceivable, unwearied Almightineſs, alway active, alway operating?

3. It appears in the Motions of all Creatures. All things live and move in him; by the ſame Power that Creatures have their Beings, they have their Motions: They have not only a Being by his powerful Command, but they have their minutely Motion by his Powerful concurrence. Nothing can act without the Almighty influx of God, no more than it can exiſt without the Creative Word of God. 'Tis true indeed, the ordering of all Motions to his Holy ends, is an act of Wiſdom; but the Motion it ſelf whereby thoſe Ends are attained, is a work of his Power. Acts 17. 28.

1. God as the firſt Cauſe hath an influence into the motions of all ſecond Cauſes. As all the wheels in a Clock are moved in their different motions, by the force and ſtrength of the principal and primary Wheel; if there be any defect in that, or if that ſtand ſtill, all the reſt languiſh and ſtand ſtill the ſame moment All Creatures are his Inſtruments, his Engines, and have no Spirit, but what he gives, and what he aſſiſts. Whatſoever Nature works, God works in Nature, Nature is the Inſtrument, God is the Supporter, Director, Mover of Nature; that what the Prophet ſaith in another caſe, may be the language of univerſal Nature, Lord thou haſt wrought all our works in us, Iſai 26. 12. They are our works ſubjectively, efficiently, as ſecond Cauſes; God's works originally, concurrently. The Sun moved not in the Valley of Ajalon for the ſpace of many hours, in the time of Joſhua *; nor did the Fire exerciſe its conſuming quality upon the Three Children, in Nebuchadnezzar's Furnace †: He withdrew not his ſupporting Power from their Being, for then they had vaniſhed, but his influencing Power from their qualities, whereby their motion ceas'd, till he return'd his influential concurrence to them; which evidenceth, that without a perpetual derivation of Divine Power, the Sun could not run one ſtride or inch of its race, nor the Fire devour one grain of light Chaff, or an inch of Straw.

* Joſh. 10. 13.
† Dan. 3. 25.

Straw. Nothing without his ſuſtaining Power can continue in Being; nothing without his co-working Power can exerciſe one mite of thoſe qualities it is poſſeſſed of. All Creatures are wound up by him, and his hand is conſtantly upon them, to keep them in perpetual motion.

2. Conſider the variety of motions in a ſingle Creature. How many motions are there in the vital parts of a Man, or in any other Animal, which a Man knows not, and is unable to number? The renewed motion of the Lungs, the Syſtoles and Diaſtoles, of the Heart; the Contractions and Dilatations of the Heart, whereby it ſpouts out and takes in Blood; the power of Concoction in the Stomach; the motion of the Blood in the Veins, &c. All which were not only ſetled by the Powerful hand of God, but are upheld by the ſame, preſerv'd and influenc'd in every diſtinct motion by that Power that ſtampt them with that Nature. To every one of thoſe there is not only the ſuſtaining Power of God holding up their Natures, but the motive Power of God concurring to every motion; for if we move in him as well as we live in him, then every particle of our motion is exerciſed by his concurring Power, as well as every moment of our Life ſupported by his preſerving Power. What an infinite variety of motions is there in the whole World in univerſal Nature, to all which God concurs, all which he conducts, even the motions of the meaneſt as well as the greateſt Creatures, which demonſtrate the indefatigable power of the Governour. 'Tis an infinite power which doth act in ſo many varieties, whereby the ſoul forms every Thought, the Tongue ſpeaks every Word, the Body exerts every action. What an Infinite power is that which preſides over the birth of all things, concurs with the motion of the Sap in the Tree, Rivers on the Earth, Clouds in the Air, every drop of Rain, fleece of Snow, crack of Thunder? Not the leaſt motion in the World, but is under an actual influence of this Almighty Mover.

And leſt any ſhould ſcruple the concurrence of God to ſo many Varieties of the Creatures motion, as a thing utterly unconceivable; let them conſider the Sun, a natural image and ſhadow of the perfections of God; doth not the power of that finite Creature extend it ſelf to various Objects at the ſame moment of time? How many Inſects doth it animate, as Flies, &c. at the ſame moment throughout the World? How many ſeveral Plants doth it erect at its appearance in the Spring, whoſe Roots lay mourning in the Earth all the foregoing Winter? What multitudes of Spires of Graſs, and nobler Flowers, doth it Midwife in the ſame hour? It warms the Air, melts the Blood, cheriſhes Living Creatures of various kinds in diſtinct places, without tiring: And ſhall the God of this Sun be leſs than his Creature?

3. And ſince I ſpeak of the Sun, conſider the Power of God in the Motion of it. * The vaſtneſs of the Sun is computed to be at the leaſt 166 Times bigger than the Earth, and its diſtance from the Earth, ſome tell us to be about Four Millions of Miles; whence it follows, that it is whirl'd about the World with that ſwiftneſs, that in the ſpace of an hour it runs a Million of Miles, which is as much as if it ſhould move round about the ſurface of the Earth Fifty times in one hour; which vaſtneſs exceeds the ſwiftneſs of a Bullet ſhot out of a Canon, which is computed to fly not above Three mile in a minute: So that the Sun runs further in one Hours ſpace, than a Bullet can in Five thouſand, if it were kept in motion; ſo that if it were near the Earth, the ſwiftneſs of its motion would ſhatter the whole frame of the World, and daſh it in pieces; ſo that the Pſalmiſt may well ſay, It runs a race like a ſtrong Man, Pſal. 19. 5. What an Incomprehenſible Power is that which hath communicated ſuch a ſtrength and ſwiftneſs to the Sun, and doth daily influence its Motion; eſpecially ſince after all thoſe years of its motion wherein one would think it ſhould have ſpent it ſelf, we behold it every day, as vigorous as Adam did in Paradiſe, without limping, without ſhattering it ſelf, or loſing any thing of its natural Spirits in its unwearied motion. How great muſt that Power be, which hath kept this great Body ſo intire, and thus ſwiftly moves it every day?

Is it not now an Argument of Omnipotence, to keep all the ſtrings of nature in tune; to wind them up to a due pitch for the harmony he intended by them; to keep things that are contrary from that Confuſion they will naturally fall into; to prevent thoſe jarrings which would naturally reſult from their various and ſnarling qualities to preſerve every Being in its true nature; to propagate every kind of Creature; order all the Operations, even the meaneſt of them, when there are ſuch innumerable Varieties?

But let us conſider, that this Power of preſerving things in their ſtation and motion, and the renewing of them is more ſtupendious, than that which we commonly call Miraculous.

We call thoſe Miracles, which are wrought out of the track of Nature, and contrary to the uſual ſtream and current of it; which Men wonder at, becauſe they ſeldom ſee them, and hear of them as things rarely brought forth in the World; when the truth is, there is more of Power expreſt in the ordinary ſtation and motion of natural cauſes, than in thoſe extraordinary exertings of Power. Is not more Power ſignaliz'd in that whirling motion of the Sun every hour for ſo many Ages, than in the ſuſpending of its motion one Day, as it was in the days of Joſhua? That Fire ſhould continually ravage and conſume, and greedily ſwallow up every thing that is offer'd to it, ſeems to be the effect of as admirable a Power, as the ſtopping of its appetite a few moments, as in the caſe of the Three Children? Is not the riſing of ſome ſmall Seeds from the ground, with a multiplication of their numerous poſterity, an effect of as great a Power, as our Saviours feeding many thouſands with a few Loaves, by a ſecret augmentation of them? Is not the Chymical producing ſo pleaſant and delicious a Fruit as the Grape from a dry Earth, inſipid Rain, and a ſower Vine, as admirable a token of Divine Power as our Saviours turning Water into Wine? Is not the cure of Diſeaſes by the application of a ſimple inconſiderable Weed, or a ſlight Infuſion, as wonderful in it ſelf, as the Cure of it by a powerful word? What if it be naturally deſign'd to heal, what is that Nature, who gave that Nature, who maintains that Nature, who conducts it, co-operates with it? Doth it work of it ſelf, and by its own ſtrength; why not then equally in all, in one as well as another? Miracles indeed affect more, becauſe they teſtifie the immediate operation of God without the concurrence of ſecond Cauſes; not that there is more of the Power of God ſhining in them, than in the other.

II. This

II. This Power is evident in moral Government.

1. In the reſtraint of the malicious Nature of the Devil. Since Satan hath the Power of an Angel, and the Malice of a Devil, what ſafety would there be for our Perſons from deſtruction, what ſecurity for our Goods from rifling, by this inviſible, potent, and envious Spirit, if his Power were not reſtrain'd and his Malice curb'd, by one more Mighty than himſelf? How much doth he envy God the glory of his Creation; and Man the uſe and benefit of it? How deſirous would he be in regard of his paſſion, how able in regard of his ſtrength and ſubtilty, to overthrow or infect all Worſhip, but what was directed to himſelf; to manage all things according to his Luſts, turn all things topſie-turvy, plague the World, burn Cities, Houſes, plunder us of the ſupports of Nature, waſte Kingdoms, &c. if he were not held in a Chain, as a ravenous Lion, or a furious wild Horſe, by the Creator and Governour of the World? What remedy could be uſed by Man againſt the activity of this unſeen and ſwift Spirit? The World could not ſubſiſt under his Malice; he would practiſe the ſame things upon all, as he did upon Job, when he had got leave from his Governour; turn the Swords of Men into one-another's bowels; ſend Fire from Heaven upon the Fruits of the Earth and the Cattle, intended for the uſe of Man: Raiſe Winds, to ſhake and tear our Houſes upon our Heads; daub our Bodies with ſcabs and boils, and let all the humours in our Blood looſe upon us. He that envied Adam a Paradiſe, doth envy us the pleaſure of enjoying its Outworks: If we were not deſtroy'd by him, we ſhould live in a continued vexation by Spectrums and Apparitions, affrighting ſounds and noiſe; as ſome think the Egyptians did in that three days darkneſs: He would be alway winnowing us, as he deſir'd to winnow Peter. But God overmaſters his ſtrength, that he cannot move a hairs breadth beyond his Tedder; not only he is unable to touch an upright Job, but to lay his Fingers upon one of the Unbelieving Gadarens forbidden and filthy Swine without ſpecial licence. When he is caſt out of one place, he walks through dry places ſeeking reſt, new Objects for his malicious deſigns, but finding none, till God lets looſe the reins upon him for a new imployment. Though Satan's power be great, yet God ſuffers him not to tempt as much as his Diabolical appetite would, but as much as Divine Wiſdom thinks fit: And the Divine Power tempers the other's active Malice, and gives the Creature victory, where the Enemy intended ſpoil and captivity. How much ſtronger is God than all the Legions of Hell; as he that holds a ſtrong man from effecting his purpoſe, reſtifies more ability than his Adverſary? How doth he lock him up for a thouſand years in a Pound, which he cannot leap over? And this reſtraint is wrought partly by blinding the Devil in his deſigns, partly by denying him concourſe to his motion: As he hinder'd the active quality of the Fire upon the Three Children, by withdrawing his Power, which was neceſſary to the motion of it; and his power is as neceſſary for the motion of the Devil, as for that of any other Creature. Sometimes he makes him to confeſs him againſt his own Intereſt, as Apollo's Oracle confeſt †. And tho' when the Devil was caſt out of the poſſeſſed perſon, he publickly owned Chriſt to be the Holy One of God, Mark i. 24. to render him ſuſpected by the People of having commerce with the Unclean Spirits; yet this he could not do without the leave and permiſſion of God, that the power of Chriſt in ſtopping his mouth, and impoſing ſilence upon him, might be evidenced; and that it reaches to the Gates of Hell, as well as to the quieting of Winds and Waves. This is a part of the Strength, as well as the Wiſdom of God, that the deceived and the deceiver are his. Wiſdom to defeat, and Power to over-rule his moſt Malicious Deſigns to his own glory.

2. In the reſtraint of the Natural Corruption of Men. Since the impetus of Original Corruptions in the Blood, convey'd down from Adam to the Veins of all his Poſterity, and univerſally diffus'd in all Mankind, what wrack and havock would it make in the World, if it were not ſuppreſt by this Divine Power, which preſides over the Hearts of Men? Man is ſo wretched by Nature, that nothing but what is vile and pernicious can drop from him. Man drinks Iniquity like Water, being by Nature abominable and filthy. He greedily ſwallows all matter for Iniquity, every thing ſuitable to the mire and poyſon in his Nature, and would ſpout it out with all fierceneſs and inſolence. God himſelf gives us the deſcription of Man's Nature, Gen. vi. 5. that he hath not one good imagination at any time. And the Apoſtle from the Pſalmiſt dilates and comments upon it: There is none righteous, no not one; their mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs, their feet are ſwift to ſhed Blood, &c. This Corruption is equal to all, natural to all; 'tis not more poyſonous or more fierce in one Man, than in another. The Root of all Men is the ſame; all the Branches therefore do equally poſſeſs the Villanous nature of the Root. No Child of Adam can by Natural deſcent be better than Adam, or have leſs of baſeneſs and vileneſs, and venom than Adam. How fruitful would this loathſom Lake be in all kind of ſteams? What unbridl'd Licentiouſneſs and head-ſtrong Fury would triumph in the World, if the Power of God did not interpoſe it ſelf to lock down the Flood-gates of it? What rooting up of Human Society would there be; how would the World be drench'd in Blood, the number of Malefactors greater than that of Apprehenders and Puniſhers? How would the prints of natural Laws be raz'd out of the Heart, if God ſhould leave Humane Nature to it ſelf? Who can read the Firſt Chapter to the Romans, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29 Verſes, without acknowledging this Truth; where there is a Catalogue of thoſe Villanies which follow'd upon God's pulling up the Sluces, and letting the malignity of their inward Corruption have its natural courſe? If God did not hold back the fury of Man, his Garden would be over-run, his Vine rooted up; the Inclinations of Men would hurry them to the worſt of Wickedneſs. How great is that Power, that curbs, bridles, or changes, as many head-ſtrong Horſes, at once and every minute, as there are Sons of Adam upon the Earth? The floods lift up their waves; the Lord on high is mightier than the noiſe of many Waters; yea, than the mighty waves of the Sea; that doth huſh and pen in the turbulent paſſions of Men.

Rom. 3.10, &c.

Pſal. 93: 3, 4.

3. In the ordering and framing the Hearts of men to his own ends. That muſt be an Omnipotent hand that graſps and contains the Hearts of all Men; the Heart of the meaneſt perſon, as well as of the moſt towring Angel, and turns them as he pleaſes, and makes them ſometime ignorantly, ſometime knowingly, concur to the accompliſhment of his own purpoſes: When the Hearts of Men are ſo numerous, their Thoughts ſo various and different from one another, yet he hath a Key to thoſe Millions of Hearts, and with Infinite Power, guided by as Infinite Wiſdom, he draws them into what Chanels he pleaſes for the gaining his own ends. Though the Jews had imbrew'd their hands in the Blood of our Saviour, and their Rage was yet reeking hot againſt his Followers, God bridled their Fury in the Churches Infancy, till it had got ſome ſtrength, and caſt a Terror upon them by the Wonders wrought by the Apoſtles, Acts ii. 43. And fear came upon every Soul, and many wonders and ſigns were done by the Apoſtles. Was there not the ſame reaſon in the nature of the Works our Saviour wrought, to point them to the Finger of God, and calm their Rage? Yet did not the Power of God work upon their Paſſions in thoſe Miracles, nor ſtop the impetuouſneſs of the Corruption reſident in their hearts. Yet now thoſe who had the boldneſs to attack the Son of God, and nail him to the Croſs, are frighted at the appearance of Twelve unarmed Apoſtles; as the Sea ſeems to be afraid when it approacheth the bounds of the feeble Sand. How did God bend the Hearts of the Egyptians to the Iſraelites, and turn them to that point, as to lend their moſt coſtly Veſſels, their precious Jewels, and rich Garments, to ſupply thoſe whom they had juſt before tyrannically loaded with * Exod. 3. 21, 22. 1 Chron. 18. 31. their Chains *? When a great part of an Army came upon Jehoſaphat to diſpatch him into another World, how doth God in a trice touch their hearts, and move them by a ſecret inſtinct at once to depart from him? As if you ſhould ſee a numerous flight of Birds in a moment turn wing another way, by a ſudden and joynt conſent. When he gave Saul a Kingdom, he gave him a Spirit fit for Govern- 1 Sam. 10. 9. ment, and gave him another heart; and brought the People to ſubmit to his yoke, who a little before wander'd about the Land upon no nobler employment than the ſeeking of Aſſes. 'Tis no ſmall remark of the Power of God, to make a number of ſtrong and diſcontented Perſons, and deſirous enough of liberty, to bend their Necks under the yoke of Government, and ſubmit to the Authority of One, and that of their own Nature, often weaker and unwiſer than the moſt of them; and many times an Oppreſſer and Invader of their Rights. Upon Pſal. 144. 2. this account David calls God his Fortreſs, Tower, Shield; all terms of Strength, in ſubduing the People under him. 'Tis the mighty hand of God, that links Princes and People together in the bands of Government. The ſame hand that aſſwageth the Waves of the Sea, ſuppreſſeth the Tumults of the People.

III. It appears in his Gracious and Judicial Government.

1. In his Gracious Government. In the Delive- 1 Sam. 15. 29. rance of his Church: He is the ſtrength of Iſrael, and hath protected his little Flock in the midſt of Wolves; and maintained their ſtanding, when the ſtrongeſt Kingdoms have ſunk, and the beſt joynted States have been broken in pieces. When Judgments have ravag'd Countries, and torn up the Mighty, as a tempeſtuous Wind hath often done the talleſt Trees, which ſeem'd to threaten Heaven with their Tops, and dare the Storm with the depth of their Roots, when the Vine and Roſe-buſhes have ſtood firm, and been ſeen in their beauty next morning. The ſtate of the Church hath out-liv'd the moſt flouriſhing Monarchies; when there hath been a mighty knot of Adverſaries againſt her; when the Bulls of Baſhan have puſh'd her, and the whole Tribe of the Dragon have ſharpen'd their weapons, and edg'd their Malice; when the voice was ſtrong, and the hopes high to raze her foundation even with the ground; when Hell hath roar'd; when the wit of the World hath contriv'd, and the ſtrength of the World hath attempted her ruine; when Decrees have been paſt againſt her, and the powers of the World arm'd for the execution of them; when her Friends have droop'd and skulk'd in corners; when there was no Eye to pity, and no Hand to aſſiſt, help hath come from Heaven; her Enemies have been defeated, Kings have brought Gifts to her, and rear'd her; Tears have been wip'd off her Cheeks, and her very Enemies, by an unſeen Power, have been forc'd to court her, whom before they would have devour'd quick. The Devil and his Armies have ſneak'd into their Den, and the Church hath triumph'd when ſhe hath been upon the brink of the Grave. Thus did God ſend a mighty Angel to be the Executioner of Senacherib's Army, and the Protector of Jeruſalem, who run his Sword into the hearts of Eighty thouſand, when they were ready to ſwallow up his beloved City. 2 Kin. 19. 35.

When the Knife was at the Throats of the Jews, in Shuſhan, by a powerful hand it was turn'd into Eſth. 8. the Hearts of their Enemies. With what an Outſtretched Arm were the Iſraelites freed from the Egyptian Yoke? When Pharaoh had muſter'd a great Deut. 4. 34. Army to purſue them, aſſiſted with Six hundred Chariots of War, the Red Sea obſtructed their paſſage before, and an enraged Enemy trod on their rear; when the fearful Iſraelites deſpair'd of Deliverance, and the inſolent Egyptian aſſured himſelf of his Revenge; God ſtretches out his irreſiſtible Arm, to defeat the Enemy and aſſiſt his People; he ſtrikes down the Wolves, and preſerves the Flock. God reſtrain'd the Egyptian Enmity againſt the Iſraelites till they were at the brink of the Red Sea, and then lets them follow their humor and purſue the Fugitives, that his power might more glorioufly ſhine forth in the Deliverance of the one, and the Deſtruction of the other. God might have brought Iſrael out of Egypt in the time of thoſe Kings, that had remember'd the good Service of Joſeph to their Country; but he leaves them till the Reign of a cruel Tyrant, ſuffers them to be Slaves, that they might by his ſole Power be Conquerors; which had had no appearance, had there been a willing diſmiſſion of them at the firſt ſummons. Exod. 9. 16. In very deed, for this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, for to ſhew my Power, and that my Name might be declared throughout all the Earth. I have permitted thee to riſe up againſt my People, and keep them in Captivity, that thou might'ſt be an occaſion for the manifeſtation of my Power in their reſcue; and whilſt thou art obſtinate to enſlave them, I will ſtretch out my Arm to deliver them, and make my Name famous among the Gentiles, in the wrack of thee and thy Hoſt in the Red Sea. The Deliverance of the Church hath not been in one Age, or in one part of the World, but God hath ſignaliz'd his Power in all Kingdoms where ſhe hath had a footing: As he hath guided her in all places by one Rule, animated her by one Spirit, ſo he hath protected her by the ſame Arm of Power.

When the Roman Emperors bandied all their Force againſt Her, for about Three hundred years, they were further from effecting her ruine at the end, than when they firſt attempted it; The Church grew under their Sword, and was hatch'd under the Wings of the Roman Eagle, which were ſpread to deſtroy her. The Ark was elevated by the Deluge; and the Waters the Devil pour'd out to drown Her, did but ſlime the Earth for a new encreaſe of her. She hath ſometime been beaten down, and, like Lazarus, hath ſeem'd to lie in the Grave for ſome days, that the Power of God might be more viſible in her ſudden reſurrection, and lifting up her head above the Throne of her Perſecutors.

2. In his Judicial Proceedings. The Deluge was no ſmall Teſtimony of his Power, in opening the Ciſterns of Heaven, and pulling up the Sluces of the Sea. He doth but call for the waters of the Sea, and they pour themſelves upon the face of the Earth, Amos 9. 6. In forty days time, the Waters overtopt Gen. 7. 17, the higheſt Mountains Fifteen Cubits; and by the 19, 20.

ſame Power he afterwards reduc'd the Sea to its proper Channel, as a roaring Lion into his Den. A ſhower of Fire from Heaven upon Sodom and the Cities of the Plain, was a ſignal diſplay of his Power, either in creating it on the ſudden for the execution of his Righteous Sentence, or ſending down the Element of Fire, contrary to its Nature (which affects aſcent) for the puniſhment of Rebels againſt the Light of Nature.

How often hath he ruin'd the moſt flouriſhing Monarchies, led Princes away ſpoil'd, and overthrown the Mighty? Which Job makes an Argument of his Strength, Job 12.13,14. Troops of unknown People, the Goths and Vandals, broke the Romans, a warlike People, and hurl'd down all before them. They could not have had the thought to ſucceed in ſuch an Attempt, unleſs God had given them ſtrength and motion, for the executing his Judicial Vengeance upon the People of his Wrath.

Exod. 8.3. How did he evidence his Power by dawbing the Exod. 7.20 Throne of Pharaoh, and his Chamber of Preſence, as well as the Houſes of his Subjects, with the ſlime of Frogs; turning their Waters into Blood, and their Duſt into biting Lice; raiſing his Militia of Locuſts againſt them; cauſing a Three days darkneſs without ſtopping the motion of the Sun: Taking off their Firſt-born, the excellency of their ſtrength, in a Night by the ſtroke of the Angel's Sword? He takes off the Chariot Wheels of Pharaoh, and preſents him with a Deſtruction, where he expected a Victory: brings thoſe Waves over the Heads of him and his Hoſt, which ſtood firm as Marble walls for the ſafety of his People: The Sea is made to ſwallow them up, that durſt not by the order of their Governour touch the Iſraelites. It only ſprinkled the one as a Type of Baptiſm, and drowned the other as an Image of Hell. Thus he made it both a Deliverer and a Revenger, the Inſtrument of an offenſive and Iai. 40, 23, 24. defenſive War. He brings Princes to nothing, and makes the Judges of the Earth as Vanity. Great Monarchs have by his power been hurl'd from their Thrones, and their Scepters (like Venice-Glaſſes) broken before their Faces, and They been advanced that have had the leaſt hopes of Grandure. He hath pluckt up Cedars by the Roots, lopt off the Branches, and ſet up a Shrub to grow up in the place; diſſolv'd Rocks, and eſtabliſht Bubbles. Luke 1.52. He hath ſhewed ſtrength with his arm, he hath ſcattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts: he hath put down the mighty from their ſeat, and exalted them of low degree.

And theſe things he doth magnifie his Power in.

1. By ordering the Nature of Creatures as he pleaſes. By reſtraining their force, or guiding their Motions. The reſtraint of the deſtructive qualities of the Creatures argues as great a Power, as the change of their Natures, yea and a greater. The qualities of Creatures may be chang'd by Art and Compoſition; as in the preparing of Medicines; but what but a Divine Power could reſtrain the Operation of the Fire from the three Children, while it retain'd its heat and burning quality in Nebuchadnezzar's Furnace? The operation was curb'd while its Nature was preſerved. All Creatures are called his Hoſt, becauſe he Marſhals and Ranks them as an Army to ſerve his purpoſes: The whole Scheme of Nature is ready to favour Men when God orders it, and ready to puniſh Men when God commiſſions it. He gave the Red Sea but a check, and it obeyed his Voice; Pſal. 106.9. He rebuked the Red Sea alſo, and it was dried up; the motion of it ceaſed, and the Waters of it were rang'd as defenſive Walls, to ſecure the March of his People: And at the Motion of the Hand of Moſes, the Servant of the Lord, the Sea recovered its violence, and the Walls that were framed came tumbling down upon the Egyptians heads *. The Creator of Nature is not led by the Neceſſity of Nature: He that ſettled the order of Nature, can change or reſtrain the order of Nature according to his Sovereign pleaſure. The moſt neceſſary and uſeful Creatures he can uſe as Inſtruments of his Vengeance: Water is neceſſary to cleanſe, and by that he can deface a World; Fire is neceſſary to warn, and by that he can burn a Sodom: From the Water he form'd the Fowl †, and by that he diſſolves them in the Deluge; Fire or Heat is neceſſary to the Generation of Creatures, and by that he ruins the Cities of the Plain. He orders all as he pleaſes, to perform every tittle and punctilio of his purpoſe. The Sea obſerv'd him ſo exactly, that it drown'd not one Iſraelite, nor ſaved one Egyptian. Pſal. 106. 11. There was not One of them left. And to perfect the Iſraelites Deliverance, he followed them with Teſtimonies of his Power above the ſtrength of Nature. When they wanted Drink he orders Moſes to ſtrike a Rock, and the Rock ſpouts a River, and a Channel is formed for it to attend them in their Journey. When they wanted Bread, he dreaſt Manna for them in the Heavens, and ſent it to their Tables in the Deſart. When he would declare his Strength, he calls to the Heavens to pour down Righteouſneſs, and to the Earth to bring forth Salvation, Iſa. 45.8. Though God had created Righteouſneſs or Deliverance for the Jews in Babylon, yet he calls to the Heavens and the Earth to be aſſiſtant to the deſign of Cyrus, whom he had raiſed for that purpoſe, as he ſpeaks in the beginning of the Chapter, Verſe 1, 2, 3, 4. As God created Man for a ſupernatural end, and all Creatures for Man as their immediate end; ſo he makes them, according to opportunities, ſubſervient to that ſupernatural end of Man, for which he created him. He that ſpans the Heavens with his Fiſt, can ſhoot all Creatures like an Arrow, to hit what Mark he pleaſes. He that ſpread the Heavens and the Earth by a Word, and can by a Word fold them up more eaſily than a Man can a garment *, can order the ſtreams of Nature; Cannot he work without Nature as well as with it, beyond Nature, contrary to Nature, that can (as it were) fillip Nature with his Finger into that Nothing whence he drew it? Who can caſt down the Sun from his Throne †, clap the diſtinguiſht parts of the World together, and make them march in the ſame order to their Confuſion; as they did in their Creation: Who can jumble the whole Frame together, and by a Word diſſolve the Pillars of the World, and make the Fabrick lie in a ruinous heap.

* Heb. 1. 12.

† or Clap the diſtinguiſht parts upon it

2. In effecting his Purpoſes by ſmall Means: In making uſe of the meaneſt Creatures. As the Power of God is ſeen in the creation of the ſmalleſt Creatures, and aſſembling ſo many Perfections in the little Body of an Inſect, as an Ant, or Spider: So his Power is not leſs magnified in the uſe he makes of them. As he magnifies his Wiſdom, by uſing ignorant Inſtruments; ſo he exalts his Power, by employing weak Inſtruments in his Service: The Meanneſs and Imperfection of the Matter ſets off the Excellency of the Workman; ſo the weakneſs of the Inſtrument is a foyl to the Power of the principal Agent. When God hath effected things by Means in the Scripture, he hath uſually brought about his Purpoſes by weak Inſtruments.

Moſes, a Fugitive from Egypt, and Aaron a Captive in it, are the Inſtruments of the Iſraelites Deliverance. By the Motion of Moſes his Rod, he works Wonders in the Court of Pharaoh, and ſummons up his Judgments againſt him. He brought down Pharaoh's ſtomach for a while by a ſquadron of Lice and Locuſts, wherein Divine Power was more seen, than if Moses had brought him to his own Articles by a multitude of warlike Troops. The fall of the Walls of Jericho by the sound of Rams-horns, was a more glorious Character of God's Josh.6.20. Power, than if Joshuah had batter'd it down with an hundred of Warlike Engines. Thus the great Army of the Midianites, which lay as Grashoppers upon the ground, were routed by Gideon in the head of Three hundred Men; and Goliah a Giant, laid level with the ground by David a Stripling, by the force of a Sling: A Thousand Philistines dispatcht out of the World by the Jaw Bone of an Ass in the hand of Sampson. He can master a stout Nation by an Army of Locusts, and render the Teeth of those little Insects as destructive as the Teeth, yea the strongest Teeth, the Cheek-Teeth of a great Li- * Joel 1.6, on *. The Thunderbolt which produceth sometimes 7. dreadful effects, is compacted of little Atoms which fly in the Air, small Vapours drawn up by the Sun, and mixt with other Sulphurous Matter and petrifying Juice. Nothing is so weak, but his Strength can make victorious; nothing so small, but by his Power he can accomplish his great ends by it; nothing so vile, but his Might can conduct to his Glory; and no Nation so mighty, but he can waste and enfeeble by the meanest Creatures. God is great in Power in the greatest things, and not little in the smallest; his Power in the minutest Creatures which he uses for his Service, surmounts the force of our Understanding.

III. The Power of God appears in Redemption. As our Saviour is called the Wisdom of God, so he is 1 Cor. 1. called the Power of God. The Arm of Power was 24. lifted up as high, as the designs of Wisdom were laid deep: As this way of Redemption could not be contriv'd, but by an Infinite Wisdom; so it could not be accomplish'd but by an Infinite Power. None but God could shape such a design, and none but God could effect it. The Divine Power in Temporal Deliverances and Freedom from the Slavery of humane Oppressors, vails to that which glitters in Redemption; whereby the Devil is defeated in his designs, stript of his spoils, and yok'd in his strength. The Power of God in Creation requires not those degrees of Admiration, as in Redemption. In Creation the World was erected from Nothing; as there was Nothing to act, so there was Nothing to oppose; no victorious Devil was in that to be subdued, no thundring Law to be silenced, no Death to be conquer'd, no Transgression to be pardoned and rooted out, no Hell to be shut, no Ignominious Death upon the Cross to be suffered. It had been in the nature of the thing, an easier thing to Divine Power to have created a new World, than repair'd a broken, and purified a polluted one. This is the most admirable Work that ever God brought forth in the World, greater than all the Marks of his Power in the first Creation.

And this will appear,

1. In the Person Redeeming.
2. In the publication and propagation of the Doctrine of Redemption.
3. In the application of Redemption.

I. In the Person Redeeming.

First, In his Conception.

1. He was conceived by the Holy Ghost in the Womb of the Virgin. Luke 1.35. The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee. Which act is expreſt to be the effect of the Infinite Power of God; and it expresses the supernatural manner of the forming the Humanity of our Saviour, and signifies not the Divine Nature of Christ infusing it self into the Womb of the Virgin; for the Angel refers it to the manner of the operation of the Holy Ghost in the producing the Humane Nature of Christ, and not to the Nature assuming that Humanity into union with it self. The Holy Ghost, or the Third Person in the Trinity overshadowed the Virgin, and by a Creative act fram'd the Humanity of Christ, and united it to the Divinity. It is therefore expreſt by a word of the same Import with that used Gen. 1. 2. The Spirit moved upon the face of the Waters, which signifies (as it were) a Brooding upon the Chaos, shadowing it with his Wings, as Hens sit upon their Eggs to form them and hatch them into Animals; or else it is an allusion to the Cloud which covered the Tent of the Congregation, when the Glory of the Lord filled the Tabernacle *. It was not such a Creative * Exod. Act as we call Immediate, which is a production out 40. 34. of Nothing; but a Mediate Creation, such as Gods bringing things into form out of the first Matter, which had nothing but an Obediential or Passive dispoſition to whatsoever stamp the Powerful Wisdom of God should imprint upon it. So the Substance of the Virgin had no active, but only a passive disposition to this work: The Matter of the Body was Earthy, the Substance of the Virgin, the forming of it was Heavenly, the Holy Ghost working upon that Matter. And therefore when it is said, that she was found with Child of the Holy Mat.1.18. Ghost, 'tis to be understood of the efficacy of the Holy Ghost, not of the Substance of the Holy Ghost. The Matter was Natural, but the Manner of Conceiving was in a Supernatural way, above the methods of Nature. In reference to the Active Principle the Redeemer is called in the Prophecy †, The † Isai. 4. 2. Branch of the Lord, in regard of the Divine Hand that planted him: In respect to the Passive Principle, The Fruit of the Earth, in regard of the Womb that bare him; and therefore said to be made of a Woman ‖. That part of the Flesh of the Virgin ‖ Gal.4.4. whereof the Humane Nature of Christ was made, was refin'd and purifi'd from Corruption by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost, as a skilful Workman separates the Dross from the Gold: Our Saviour is therefore called, that Holy thing *, though *Luk.1.35. born of the Virgin: He was necessarily some way to descend from Adam. God indeed might have created his Body out of Nothing, or have formed it (as he did Adams) out of the Dust of the Ground: But had he been thus extraordinarily formed, and not propagated from Adam; though he had been a Man like one of us, yet he would not have been of kin to us, because it would not have been a Nature deriv'd from Adam, the common Parent of us all. † It was therefore necessary to an affinity with †Amyrald. us, not only that he should have the same Humane in Symbol. Nature, but that it should flow from the same Prin- p.103,&c. ciple, and be propagated to him. But now, by this way of producing the Humanity of Christ of the Substance of the Virgin, He was in Adam (say some) Corporally, but not Seminally; of the Substance of Adam or a Daughter of Adam, but not of the Seed of Adam: And so he is of the same Nature that had sinned, and so what he did and suffered may be imputed to us; which, had he been created as Adam, could not be claim'd in a Legal and Judicial way,

2. It was not convenient he should be born in the common order of Nature, of Father and Mother: For whosoever is so born is polluted: A clean thing cannot be brought out of an unclean ‖. And ‖ Job 14.4. our Saviour had been uncapable of being a Redeemer, had he been tainted with the least Spot of our Nature, but would have stood in need of Redemption himself. Besides, it had been inconsistent with the Holiness of the Divine Nature, to have assumed a tainted and defiled Body. He that was the Fountain of Blessedness to all Nations, was not not to be ſubject to the Curſe of the Law for himſelf; which he would have been, had he been conceiv'd in an ordinary way. He that was to overturn the Devil's Empire, was not to be any way captive under the Devil's power, as a Creature under the Curſe; nor could he be able to break the Serpent's head, had he been tainted with the Serpent's breath.

Again, ſuppoſing that Almighty God, by his Divine Power, had ſo order'd the matter, and ſo perfectly ſanctified an Earthly Father and Mother from all Original Spot, that the Humane Nature might have been tranſmitted Immaculate to him, as well as the Holy Ghoſt did purge that part of the Fleſh of the Virgin of which the Body of Chriſt was made; yet it was not convenient that that Perſon, that was God bleſſed for ever as well as Man, partaking of our Nature, ſhould have a Conception in the ſame manner as ours, but different, and in ſome meaſure conformable to the Infinite Dignity of his Perſon; which could not have been, had not a Supernatural Power and a Divine Perſon been concern'd as an active Principle in it. Beſides, ſuch a Birth had not been agreeable to the firſt Promiſe, Gen. 1. 15. which calls him The Seed of the Woman, not of the Man; and ſo the Veracity of God had ſuffer'd ſome detriment: The ſeed of the woman only, is ſet in oppoſition to the ſeed of the Serpent.

3. By this manner of Conception, the Holineſs of his Nature is ſecur'd, and his fitneſs for his Office is aſſur'd to us. 'Tis now a pure and unpolluted Humanity that is the Temple and Tabernacle of the Divinity: The Fulneſs of the Godhead dwells in him bodily, and dwells in him Holily. His Humanity is ſupernaturaliz'd, and elevated by the activity of the Holy Ghoſt, hatching the Fleſh of the Virgin into Man, as the Chaos into a World. Though we read of ſome ſanctified from the Womb, it was not a pure and perfect Holineſs; it was like the Light of Fire mixed with Smoak, an infus'd Holineſs accompanied with a Natural taint: But the Holineſs of the Redeemer by this Conception, is like the Light of the Sun, pure and without ſpot. The Spirit of Holineſs ſupplying the place of a Father in a way of Creation.

His Fitneſs for his Office is alſo aſſur'd to us; for being born of the Virgin, one of our Nature, but conceived by the Spirit, a Divine Perſon, the guilt of our Sins may be imputed to him becauſe of our Nature, without the Stain of Sin inherent in him; becauſe of his Supernatural Conception he is capable, as one of Kin to us, to bear our Curſe without being toucht by our Taint. By this means our ſinful Nature is aſſum'd without Sin in that Nature which was aſſum'd by him: Fleſh he hath, but not Sinful fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. Real Fleſh, but not really Sinful, only by way of Imputation.

Nothing but the Power of God is evident in this whole Work: By the ordinary Laws and courſe of Nature a Virgin could not bear a Son; nothing but a Supernatural and Almighty Grace could intervene to make ſo holy and perfect a Conjunction. * The generation of others, in an ordinary way, is by Male and Female: But the Virgin is overſhadow'd by the Spirit, and Power of the Higheſt. Man only is the product of Natural generation; this which is born of the Virgin is the Holy thing, the Son of God. In other generations a Rational Soul is only united to a Material Body: But in this, the Divine Nature is united with the Humane in one Perſon by an indiſſoluble Union.

*Amyraut. ſur Timote, p. 292.

II. The Second Act of Power in the Perſon Redeeming, is the Union of the two Natures, the Divine and Humane. The deſigning indeed of this was an act of Wiſdom; but the accompliſhing it was an act of Power.

1. There is in this Redeeming Perſon a Union of two Natures. He is God and Man in one Perſon. Heb. 1. 8, 9. Thy Throne, O God, is for ever and ever: God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the Oil of Gladneſs, &c. The Son is called God, having a Throne for ever and ever, and the Unction ſpeaks him Man: The Godhead cannot be Anointed, nor hath any Fellows. Humanity and Divinity are aſcrib'd to him, Rom. 1. 3, 4. He was of the Seed of David according to the Fleſh, and declared to be the Son of God by his Reſurrection from the dead. The Divinity and Humanity are both Prophetically joyn'd, Zach. 12. 10. I will pour out my Spirit; the pouring forth the Spirit is an Act only of Divine Grace and Power. And they ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced; the ſame Perſon pours forth the Spirit as God, and is pierced as Man. The Word was made Fleſh, John 1. 14. Word from Eternity was made Fleſh in time, Word and Fleſh in one Perſon; a great God, and a little Infant.

2. The Terms of this Union were infinitely diſtant. What greater diſtance can there be than between the Deity and Humanity, between the Creator and a Creature? Can you imagine the diſtance between Eternity and Time, Infinite Power and Miſerable Infirmity, an Immortal Spirit and Dying Fleſh, the Higheſt Being and Nothing? yet theſe are eſpous'd. A God of unmixt Bleſſedneſs is linkt perſonally with a Man of perpetual Sorrows: Life uncapable to Die, joyn'd to a Body in that Oeconomy uncapable to live without dying firſt; Infinite Purity, and a reputed Sinner; Eternal Bleſſedneſs with a Curſed Nature; Almightineſs and Weakneſs, Omniſcience and Ignorance, Immutability and Changeableneſs, Incomprehenſibleneſs and Comprehenſibility; that which cannot be comprehended, and that which can be comprehended; that which is entirely Independent, and that which is totally Dependant; the Creator forming all things, and the Creature made to meet together in a Perſonal Union, the Word made Fleſh †, the Eternal Son, the Seed of Abraham ‖. What more miraculous than for God to become Man, and Man to become God? That a Perſon poſſeſſed of all the Perfections of the Godhead, ſhould inherit all the Imperfections of the Manhood in one Perſon, Sin only excepted: A Holineſs incapable of ſinning to be made Sin; God bleſſed for ever, taking the properties of Humane Nature, and Humane Nature admitted to a Union with the properties of the Creator: The Fulneſs of the Deity and the Emptineſs of Man united together *; not by a ſhining of the Deity upon the Humanity, as the Light of the Sun upon the Earth, but by an inhabitation or indwelling of the Deity in the Humanity. Was there not need of an Infinite Power to bring together Terms ſo far aſunder, to elevate the Humanity to be capable of, and diſpoſed for a conjunction with the Deity? If a clod of Earth ſhould be advanced to, and united with the Body of the Sun, ſuch an advance would evidence it ſelf to be a work of Almighty Power: The Clod hath nothing in its own nature to render it ſo glorious, no power to climb up to ſo high a dignity: How little would ſuch a Union be, to that we are ſpeaking of? Nothing leſs than an incomprehenſible Power could effect, what an Incomprehenſible Wiſdom did project in this Affair.

† John 1. 14.
‖ Heb. 2. 16.
*Coloſ. 2. 9

3. Eſpecially ſince the Union is ſo ſtrait. 'Tis not ſuch a Union as is between a Man and his Houſe he dwells in, whence he goes out and to which he returns, without any alteration of himſelf or his Houſe; nor ſuch a Union as is between a Man and his Garment, which both communicate and receive warmth from one another; nor ſuch as is between an Artificer and his Inſtrument wherewith he works; nor ſuch a Union as one Friend hath with another: All theſe are diſtant things, not one in Nature, Nature, but have diſtinct ſubſiſtences. Two Friends, tho' united by love, are diſtinct Perſons; a Man and his Cloaths, an Artificer and his Inſtruments, have diſtinct ſubſiſtences: But the Humanity of Chriſt hath no ſubſiſtence, but in the Perſon of Chriſt.

† Leſſius de Perf. divin. lib. 12. cap. 4. p. 104.

† The ſtraitneſs of this Union is expreſt, and may be ſomewhat conceiv'd, by the union of Fire with Iron; [Fire pierceth through all the parts of Iron, it unites it ſelf with every Particle, beſtows a light, heat, purity upon all of it; you cannot diſtinguiſh the Iron from the Fire, or the Fire from the Iron, yet they are diſtinct Natures: So the Deity is united to the whole Humanity, ſeaſons it, and beſtows an excellency upon it, yet the Natures ſtill remain diſtinct. And as during that union of Fire with Iron, the Iron is uncapable of ruſt or blackneſs; ſo is the Humanity uncapable of Sin: And as the operation of Fire is attributed to the red-hot Iron, (as the Iron may be ſaid to heat, burn, and the Fire may be ſaid to cut and pierce) yet the imperfections of the Iron do not affect the Fire; ſo in this Myſtery, thoſe things which belong to the Divinity are aſcribed to the Humanity, and thoſe things which belong to the Humanity are aſcribed to the Divinity, in regard of the Perſon in whom thoſe Natures are united; yet the Imperfections of the Humanity do not hurt the Divinity.] The Divinity of Chriſt is as really united with the Humanity, as the Soul with the Body: The Perſon was one, though the Natures were two, ſo united, that the Sufferings of the Humane Nature were the Sufferings of that Perſon, and the dignity of the Divine was imputed to the Humane, by reaſon of that Unity of both in one Perſon: Hence the Blood of the Humane Nature is ſaid to be the Blood of God †. * All things aſcrib'd to the Son of God, may be aſcrib'd to this Man; and the things aſcrib'd to this Man, may be aſcrib'd to the Son of God, as this Man is the Son of God Eternal, Almighty: And it may be ſaid, God ſuffered, was Crucify'd, &c. for the Perſon of Chriſt is but one, moſt ſimple; the Perſon ſuffer'd, that was God and Man united, making One Perſon.

* Leſſius p. 103, 104

4. And tho' the Union be ſo ſtrait, yet without confuſion of the Natures, or change of them into one another. * The two Natures of Chriſt are not mixed, as Liquors that incorporate with one another when they are poured into a Veſſel; the Divine Nature is not turn'd into the Humane, nor the Humane into the Divine, one Nature doth not ſwallow up another and make a third Nature, diſtinct from each of them. The Deity is not turned into the Humanity, as Air (which is next to a Spirit) may be thickned and turned into Water, and Water may be rarified into Air by the power of Heat boyling it. The Deity cannot be chang'd, becauſe the Nature of it is to be unchangeable: It would not be a Deity, if it were Mortal, and capable of Suffering. The Humanity is not chang'd into the Deity, for then Chriſt could not have been a Sufferer: If the Humanity had been ſwallow'd up into the Deity, it had loſt its own diſtinct Nature, and put on the Nature of the Deity, and conſequently been uncapable of Suffering: Finite can never by any mixture be chang'd into Infinite, nor Infinite into Finite.

* Leſſius, ut antea, p. 103, 104. Amyrald. Irenic. p. 284.

This Union in this regard may be reſembled to the Union of Light and Air, which are ſtrictly joyn'd; for the Light paſſes through all parts of the Air, but they are not confounded, but remain in their diſtinct Eſſences as before the Union, without the leaſt confuſion with one another. * The Divine Nature remains as it was before the Union, entire in it ſelf, only the Divine Perſon aſſumes another Nature to himſelf. The Humane Nature remains, as it would have done had it exiſted ſeparately from the Λόγος, except that then it would have had a proper ſubſiſtence by it ſelf, which now it borrows from its union with the Λόγος, or Word; but that doth not belong to the Conſtitution of its Nature.

*Amyrald. Iren. p. 282.

Now let us conſider, what a wonder of Power is all this: The knitting a Noble Soul to a Body of Clay was not ſo great an exploit of Almightineſs, as the eſpouſing Infinite and Finite together. Man is further diſtant from God, than Man from Nothing. What a wonder is it, that two Natures infinitely diſtant, ſhould be more intimately united than any thing in the World, and yet without any confuſion? That the ſame Perſon ſhould have both a Glory and a Grief; an infinite Joy in the Deity, and an unexpreſſible Sorrow in the Humanity? That a God upon a Throne ſhould be an Infant in a Cradle; the Thundering Creator be a weeping Babe, and a ſuffering Man, are ſuch expreſſions of mighty Power, as well as condeſcending Love, that they aſtoniſh Men upon Earth, and Angels in Heaven.

3. Power was evident in the progreſs of his Life. In the Miracles he wrought; How often did he expel malicious and powerful Devils from their habitations, hurl them from their Thrones, and make them fall from Heaven like Lightning? How many Wonders were wrought by his bare Word, or a ſingle Touch? Sight reſtor'd to the Blind, and Hearing to the Deaf; Palſie Members reſtor'd to the exerciſe of their functions; a diſmiſs given to many deplorable Maladies, impure Leproſies chas'd from the Perſons they had infected, and Bodies beginning to putrifie rais'd from the Grave. But the mightieſt Argument of Power was his Patience. That he who was in his Divine Nature elevated above the World, ſhould ſo long continue upon a Dung-hill, endure the contradiction of Sinners againſt himſelf, be patiently ſubject to the Reproaches and Indignities of Men, without diſplaying that Juſtice which was eſſential to the Deity, and in eſpecial manner daily merited by their provoking Crimes. The Patience of Man under great Affronts, is a greater Argument of Power, than the Brawneſs of his Arm: A Strength employ'd in the revenge of every Injury, ſignifies a greater infirmity in the Soul than there can be ability in the Body.

4. Divine Power was apparent in his Reſurrection. The unlocking the Belly of the Whale for the deliverance of Jonas; the reſcue of Daniel from the Den of Lions; and the reſtraining the Fire from burning the Three Children, were ſignal declarations of his Power, and types of the Reſurrection of our Saviour. But what are thoſe to that which was repreſented by them? That was a power over Natural Cauſes, a curbing of Beaſts, and reſtraining of Elements; but in the Reſurrection of Chriſt, God exercis'd a power over himſelf, and quench'd the Flames of his own Wrath, hotter than Millions of Nebuchadnezzar's Furnaces; unlock'd the Priſon doors, wherein the Curſes of the Law had lodg'd our Saviour, ſtronger than the Belly and Ribs of a Leviathan. In the reſcue of Daniel and Jonas, God overpower'd Beaſts, and in this tore up the ſtrength of the Old Serpent, and pluck'd the Scepter from the hand of the Enemy of Mankind. The Work of Reſurrection indeed, conſider'd in it ſelf, requires the efficacy of an Almighty Power: Neither Man nor Angel can create new diſpoſitions in a dead Body, to render it capable of lodging a Spiritual Soul; nor can they reſtore a diſlodged Soul, by their own power, to ſuch a Body. The reſtoring a dead Body to life requires an Infinite Power, as well as the Creation of the World: But there was in the Reſurrection of Chriſt ſomething more difficult than this; while he lay in the Grave he was under the Curſe of the Law, under the execution of that dread-dreadful Sentence, Thou ſhalt die the death. His Reſurrection was not only the re-tying the Marriage Knot between his Soul and Body, or the rouling the Stone from the Grave; but a taking off an infinite weight, the Sin of Mankind, which lay upon him: So vaſt a weight could not be removed without the ſtrength of an Almighty Arm. 'Tis therefore aſcribed, not to an ordinary operation, but an operation †Rom. 1. 4. with Power †, and ſuch a Power wherein the Glory of the Father did appear. Rom. 6. 4. Rais'd up from the dead by the glory of the Father, that is, the glorious Power of God. As the Eternal Generation is ſtupendous, ſo is his Reſurrection, which is called, a new begetting of him, Acts 13. 33. 'Tis a wonder of Power, that the Divine and Human Nature ſhould be joyn'd; and no leſs wonder, that his Perſon ſhould ſurmount and riſe up from the Curſe of God, under which he lay. The Apoſtle therefore adds one expreſſion to another, and heaps up a variety, ſignifying thereby that one was not enough to repreſent it, Eph. 1. 19. Exceeding greatneſs of power, and working of mighty power, which he wrought in Chriſt when he raiſed him from the dead. It was an hyperbole of Power, the excellency of the Mightineſs of his Strength; the loftineſs of the expreſſions ſeems to come ſhort of the apprehenſion he had of it in his Soul.

Secondly, This Power appears in the Publication and Propagation of the Doctrin of Redemption.

The Divine Power will appear, if you conſider,

1. The Nature of the Doctrin.
2. The Inſtruments employ'd in it.
3. The Means they us'd to propagate it.
4. The Succeſs they had.

I. The Nature of the Doctrin.

1. It was contrary to the common received Reaſon of the World. The Philoſophers, the Maſters of Knowledge among the Gentiles, had Maxims of a different ſtamp from it. Tho' they agreed in the Being of a God, yet their Notions of his Nature were confus'd and embroil'd with many Errors; the Unity of God was not commonly aſſented unto: They had multiplied Deities according to the Fancies they had receiv'd from ſome of a more elevated Wit and refin'd Brain, than others. Tho' they had ſome notion of Mediators, yet they placed in thoſe Seats, their publick Benefactors; Men that had been uſeful to the World, or their particular Countries, in imparting to them ſome profitable Invention. To diſcard thoſe, was to charge themſelves with Ingratitude to them, from whom they had receiv'd ſignal benefits, and to whoſe Mediation, Conduct, or Protection, they aſcrib'd all the Succeſs they had been bleſſed with in their ſeveral Provinces; and to charge themſelves with Folly, for rendring an Honour and Worſhip to them ſo long. Could the Doctrine of a Crucified Mediator, whom they had never ſeen, that had conquer'd no Country for them, never enlarg'd their Territories, brought to light no new profitable Invention for the encreaſe of their Earthly welfare, as the reſt had done, be thought ſufficient to balance ſo many of their reputed Heroes? How ignorant were they in the foundations of the True Religion? The belief of a Providence was ſtaggering; nor had they a true proſpect of the nature of Virtue and Vice: Yet they had a fond Opinion of the ſtrength of their own Reaſon, and the Maxims that had been handed * 1 Tim. 6. 20. down to them by their Predeceſſors, which * Paul entitles, a Science falſly ſo called, either meant of the Philoſophers or the Gnoſticks. They preſum'd that they were able to meaſure all things by their own Reaſon; whence, when the Apoſtle came to preach the Doctrine of the Goſpel at Athens, the great School of Reaſon in that Age, they gave him no better a Title than that of a Babler, Acts 17. 18. and openly mocked him, Verſ. 32. a Seed-gatherer *, one that hath no more Brain or Senſe than a Fellow that gathers up Seeds that are ſpilt in a Market, or one that hath a vain and empty ſound without Senſe or Reaſon, like a fooliſh Mountebank; ſo ſlightly did thoſe Rationaliſts of the World think of the Wiſdom of Heaven. That the Son of God ſhould veil himſelf in a mortal Body, and ſuffer a diſgraceful Death in it, were things above the ken of Reaſon. * Σπερμολόγος.

Beſides, the World had a general diſeſteem of the Religion of the Jews, and were prejudic'd againſt any thing that came from them. Whence the Romans that uſed to incorporate the gods of other conquer'd Nations in their Capitol, never moved to have the God of Iſrael worſhip'd among them. Again, they might argue againſt it with much fleſhly Reaſon: Here is a Crucified God preached by a company of mean and ignorant perſons; what Reaſon can we have to entertain this Doctrine, ſince the Jews, who (as they tell us) had the Prophecies of him, did not acknowledge him? Surely, had there been ſuch Predictions, they would not have Crucified, but Crowned their King, and expected from him the Conqueſt of the Earth under their power? what reaſon have we to entertain him, whom his own Nation (among whom he lived, with whom he converſed) ſo unanimouſly, by the Vote of the Rulers as well as the Rout, rejected? It was impoſſible to conquer Minds poſſeſſed with ſo many Errors, and applauding themſelves in their own Reaſon, and to render them capable of receiving Revealed Truths without the influence of a Divine Power.

2. It was contrary to the Cuſtoms of the World. The ſtrength of Cuſtom in moſt Men ſurmounts the ſtrength of Reaſon, and Men commonly are ſo wedded to it, that they will be ſooner divorc'd from any thing, than the Modes and Patterns receiv'd from their Anceſtors. The endeavouring to change Cuſtoms of an ancient ſtanding, hath begotten Tumults and furious Mutinies among Nations, though the change would have been much for their advantage.

This Doctrine ſtruck at the Root of the Religion of the World, and the Ceremonies wherein they had been educated from their Infancy, deliver'd to them from their Anceſtors, confirm'd by the cuſtomary Obſervance of many Ages, rooted in their Minds, and eſtabliſh'd by their Laws. Acts 18. 13. This Fellow perſwadeth us to worſhip God contrary to the Law, againſt Cuſtoms, to which they aſcrib'd the happineſs of their States, and the proſperity of their People; and would put in the place of this Religion they would aboliſh, a new one inſtituted by a man whom the Jews had condemn'd, and put to death upon a Croſs, as an Impoſtor, Blaſphemer, and Seditious perſon.

It was a Doctrine that would change the Cuſtoms of the Jews, who were entruſted with the Oracles of God. It would bury for ever their Ceremonial Rites deliver'd to them by Moſes from that God, who had with a mighty hand brought them out of Egypt, conſecrated their Law with Thunders and Lightnings from Mount Sinai, at the time of its publication, back'd it with ſevere Sanctions, confirm'd it by many Miracles, both in the Wilderneſs and their Canaan, and had continued it for ſo many Hundred Years. They could not but remember how they had been ravag'd by other Nations, and Judgments ſent upon them when they neglected and ſlighted it; and with what great Succeſs they were follow'd when they valu'd and obſerv'd it; and how they had abhorred the Author of this new Religion, who had ſpoken ſlightly of their Traditions, till they put him him to death with Infamy. Was it an eaſie matter to divorce them from that Worſhip, upon which were entail'd (as they imagin'd) their Peace, Plenty, and Glory, things of the deareſt regard with Mankind? The Jews were no leſs devoted to their Ceremonial Traditions, than the Heathen were to their Vain Superſtitions.

This Doctrine of the Goſpel was of that nature, that the ſtate of Religion all over the Earth muſt be overturned by it; the Wiſdom of the Greeks muſt vail to it, the Idolatry of the People muſt ſtoop to it, and the prophane Cuſtoms of Men muſt moulder under the weight of it. Was it an eaſie matter for the Pride of Nature to deny a cuſtomary Wiſdom, to entertain a new Doctrine againſt the Authority of their Anceſtors; to inſcribe Folly upon that which hath made them admir'd by the reſt of the World? Nothing can be of greater eſteem with Men, than the Credit of their Law-givers and Founders, the Religion of their Fathers, and Proſperity of themſelves; hence the Minds of Men were ſharpned againſt it. The Greeks, the wiſeſt Nation, ſlighted it as Fooliſh; the Jews, the Religious Nation, ſtumbled at it, as contrary to the received Interpretations of Ancient Prophecies and carnal Conceits of an Earthly Glory. The dimmeſt Eye may behold the difficulty to change Cuſtom, a Second Nature: 'Tis as hard as to change a Wolf into a Lamb, to level a Mountain, ſtop the courſe of the Sun, or change the Inhabitants of Africk into the colour of Europe. Cuſtom dips Men in as durable a Dye, as Nature. The difficulties of carrying it on againſt the Divine Religion of the Jew, and rooted Cuſtoms of the Gentiles, were unconquerable by any but an Almighty Power. And in this the Power of God hath appeared wonderfully.

3. It was contrary to the Senſuality of the World, and the Luſts of the Fleſh. How much the Gentiles were over-grown with baſe and unworthy Luſts at the time of the Publication of the Goſpel, needs no other Memento than the Apoſtles Diſcourſe, Rom. 1. As there was no Error but prevail'd upon their Minds, ſo there was no brutiſh Affection but was wedded to their Hearts. The Doctrine propoſed to them was not eaſie; it flatter'd not the Senſe, but checked the Stream of Nature. It thundred down thoſe three great Engines whereby the Devil had ſubdued the World to himſelf, the luſt of the Fleſh, the luſt of the Eye, and the pride of Life. Not only the moſt ſordid Affections of the Fleſh, but the more refin'd Gratifications of the Mind: It ſtript Nature both of Devil and Man; of what was commonly eſteem'd great and vertuous. That which was the Root of their Fame, and the ſatisfaction of their Ambition, was ſtruck at by this Ax of the Goſpel. The firſt Article of it ordered them to deny themſelves, not to preſume upon their own worth; to lay their Underſtandings and Wills at the Foot of the Croſs, and reſign them up to one newly crucified at Jeruſalem: Honours and Wealth were to be deſpis'd, Fleſh to be tam'd, the Croſs to be born, Enemies to be loved, Revenge not to be ſatisfied, Blood to be ſpilt, and Torments to be endured for the Honour of One they never ſaw, nor ever before heard of; who was preached with the Circumſtances of a ſhameful Death, enough to affright them from the Entertainment: And the Report of a Reſurrection and glorious Aſcenſion were things never heard of by them before, and unknown in the World, that would not eaſily enter into the belief of Men: The Croſs, Diſgrace, Self-denial, were only diſcours'd of in order to the attainment of an inviſible World, and an unſeen reward which none of their Predeceſſors ever returned to acquaint them with; a patient Death, contrary to the pride of Nature, was publiſht as the way to Happineſs and a bleſſed Immortality: The deareſt Luſts were to be pierced to death for the honour of this new Lord. Other Religions brought Wealth and Honour; this ſtruck them off from ſuch expectations, and preſented them with no Promiſe of any thing in this Life, but a proſpect of Miſery: except thoſe inward Conſolations to which before they had been utter Strangers, and had never experimented. It made them to depend not upon themſelves, but upon the ſole Grace of God. It decried all natural, all moral Idolatry, things as dear to Men as the Apple of their Eyes. It deſpoil'd them of whatſoever the Mind, Will, and Affections of Men, naturally lay claim to, and glory in. It pulled Self up by the Roots, unman'd carnal Man, and debas'd the Principle of Honour and Self-ſatisfaction, which the World counted at that time noble and brave. In a word, it took them off from themſelves, to act like Creatures of God's framing; to know no more than he would admit them, and do no more than he did command them. How difficult muſt it needs be to reduce Men, that plac'd all their happineſs in the Pleaſures of this Life, from their pompous Idolatry and brutiſh Affections, to this mortifying Religion? What might the World ſay? Here is a Doctrine will render us a company of puling Animals: Farewel Generoſity, Bravery, Senſe of Honour, Courage in enlarging the Bounds of our Country, for an ardent Charity to the bittereſt of our Enemies. Here's a Religion will ruſt our Swords, Canker our Arms, diſpirit what we have hitherto called Vertue, and annihilate what hath been eſteem'd worthy and comely among Mankind. Muſt we change Conqueſt for Suffering, the increaſe of our Reputation for Self-denial, the natural Sentiment of Self-preſervation for effecting a dreadful Death? How impoſſible was it that a Crucified Lord, and a Crucifying Doctrine, ſhould be received in the World without the mighty Operation of a Divine Power upon the Hearts of Men? And in this alſo the Almighty Power of God did notably ſhine forth.

II. Divine Power appear'd in the Inſtruments employ'd for the publiſhing and propagating the Goſpel. Who were

1. Mean and worthleſs in themſelves. Not noble and dignified with an Earthly Grandeur, but of a low Condition, meanly bred: So far from any ſplendid Eſtates, that they poſſeſſed nothing but their Nets; without any Credit and Reputation in the World; without Comlineſs and Strength; as unfit to ſubdue the World by Preaching, as an Army of Hares were to conquer it by War. Not learned Doctors bred up at the Feet of the Famous Rabbins at Jeruſalem, whom Paul calls the Princes of the World *; nor nurs'd up in the School of Athens, under the Philoſophers and Orators of that time: Not the Wiſe-men of Greece, but the Fiſhermen of Galilee; naturally skill'd in no Language but their own, and no more exact in that than thoſe of the ſame Condition in any other Nation: Ignorant of every thing but the Language of their Lakes and their Fiſhing Trade; except Paul, call'd ſometime after the reſt to that employment: And after the deſcent of the Spirit, they were ignorant and unlearned in every thing but the Doctrine they were commanded to publiſh; for the Council before whom they were ſummon'd, prov'd them to be ſo, which increaſed their wonder at them, Acts 4. 13. Had it been publiſht by a Voice from Heaven, That Twelve poor Men, taken out of Boats and Creeks, without any help of Learning, ſhould conquer the World to the Croſs, it might have been thought an Illuſion againſt all the Reaſon of Men; yet yet we know it was undertaken and accompliſh'd by them. They publiſh'd this Doctrine in Jeruſalem, and quickly ſpread it over the greateſt part of the World. Folly out-witted Wiſdom, and Weakneſs over-power'd Strength. The Conqueſt of the Eaſt by Alexander was not ſo admirable as the Enterpriſe of theſe poor men. He attempted his Conqueſt with the hands of a warlike Nation, tho' indeed but a ſmall number of Thirty thouſand againſt Multitudes, many hundred thouſands of the Enemies; yet an effeminate Enemy; a People inur'd to Slaughter and Victory attack'd great numbers, but enfeebled by Luxury and Voluptuouſneſs. Beſides, he was bred up to ſuch Enterprizes, had a learned Education under the beſt Philoſopher, and a military Education under the beſt Commander, and a natural Courage to animate him. Theſe Inſtruments had no ſuch advantage from Nature; the Heavenly Treaſure was placed in thoſe Earthen Veſſels, as Gideon's Lamps in Empty Pitchers, Judg. 7. 16. that the Excellency or Hyperbole of the Power might be of God, 2 Cor. 4. 7. and the ſtrength of his Arm be diſplay'd in the infirmity of the Inſtruments. They were deſtitute of Earthly Wiſdom, and therefore deſpis'd by the Jews, and derided by the Gentiles; the Publiſhers were accounted Madmen, and the Embracers Fools. Had they been Men of known natural Endowments, the Power of God had been vail'd under the Gifts of the Creature.

* 1 Cor. 2. 8.

2. Therefore a Divine Power ſuddenly ſpirited them, and fitted them for ſo great a Work. Inſtead of Ignorance, they had the knowledge of the Tongues; and they that were ſcarce well skill'd in their own Dialect, were inſtructed on the ſudden to ſpeak the moſt flouriſhing Languages of the World, and Diſcourſe to the People of ſeveral Nations, the great things of God *. Though they were not enrich'd with any Worldly wealth, and poſſeſs'd nothing, yet they were ſo ſuſtain'd that they wanted nothing in any place where they came, a Table was ſpread for them in the midſt of their bittereſt Enemies. Their Fearfulneſs was turn'd into Courage, and they that a few days before skulk'd in Corners for fear of the Jews †, ſpeak boldly in the Name of that Jeſus, whom they had ſeen put to death by the power of the Rulers and the Fury of the People: They reproach them with the Murder of their Maſter, and out-brave that great People in the midſt of their Temple, with the glory of that Perſon they had ſo lately Crucified ‖. Peter, that was not long before qualm'd at the preſence of a Maid, was not daunted at the preſence of the Council, that had their hands yet reeking with the Blood of his Maſter; but being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſeems to dare the Power of the Prieſts and Jewiſh Governours, and is as confident in the Council-Chamber, as he had been cowardly in the High-Prieſt's Hall *, the efficacy of Grace triumphing over the Fearfulneſs of Nature. Whence ſhould this Ardor and Zeal, to propagate a Doctrine that had already born the Scars of the Peoples Fury, be, but from a mighty Power, which changed thoſe Hares into Lions, and ſtript them of their natural Cowardiſe to cloath them with a Divine Courage; making them in a moment both Wiſe and Magnanimous, alienating them from any Conſultations with Fleſh and Blood? As ſoon as ever the Holy Ghoſt came upon them as a mighty ruſhing Wind, they move up and down for the Intereſt of God; as Fiſh, after a great Clap of Thunder, are rouz'd, and move more nimbly on the top of the Water; therefore that which did ſo fit them for this undertaking is called by the title of Power from on high, Luke 24. 49.

‖ Act. 2. 23.
Act. 3. 13.
* Act. 4. 9, &c.

III. The Divine Power appears in the Means whereby it was propagated.

1. By Means different from the Methods of the World. Not by force of Arms, as ſome Religions have taken root in the World. Mahomet's Horſe hath trampled upon the Heads of Men, to imprint an Alcoran in their Brains, and robb'd Men of their Goods to plant their Religion. But the Apoſtles bore not this Doctrine through the World upon the points of their Swords; they preſented a Bodily Death, where they would beſtow an Immortal Life: They employ'd not Troops of Men in a warlike poſture, which had been poſſible for them after the Goſpel was once ſpread; they had no Ambition to ſubdue Men unto themſelves, but to God; they coveted not the Poſſeſſions of others; deſign'd not to enrich themſelves; invaded not the Rights of Princes, nor the Liberties and Properties of the People; they rifled them not of their Eſtates, nor ſcar'd them into this Religion by a fear of loſing their Worldly happineſs. The Arguments they uſed would naturally drive them from an entertainment of this Doctrine, rather than allure them to be Proſelytes to it: Their deſign was to change their Hearts, not their Government; to wean them from the love of the World, to a love of a Redeemer; to remove that which would ruine their Souls. It was not to enſlave them, but ranſom them; they had a Warfare, but not with Carnal Weapons, but ſuch as were mighty through God for the pulling down of ſtrong holds, 2 Cor. 10. 4. they uſed no weapons but the Doctrin they preach'd. Others that have not gained Conqueſts by the edge of the Sword and the Stratagems of War, have extended their Opinions to others by the ſtrength of Humane Reaſon, and the Inſinuations of Eloquence. But the Apoſtles had as little flouriſh in their Tongues, as edge upon their Swords. Their Preaching was not with the enticing words of Man's Wiſdom *; their Preſence was mean, and their Diſcourſes without varniſh; their Doctrine was plain, a Crucified Chriſt; a Doctrine unlac'd, ungarniſh'd, untoothſome to the World; but they had the demonſtration of the Spirit, and a mighty Power for their Companion in the Work. The Doctrine they preached, viz. the Death, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion of Chriſt, are called the Powers, not of this World, but of the World to come †. No leſs than a Supernatural Power could conduct them in this Attempt, with ſuch weak Methods in Humane appearance.

* 1 Cor. 2. 4.
† Heb. 6. 5.

2. Againſt all the Force, Power, and Wit of the World. The Diviſions in the Eaſtern Empire, and the feeble and conſuming State of the Weſtern, contributed to Mahomet's Succeſs ‖. But never was Rome in a more flouriſhing condition: Learning, Eloquence, Wiſdom, Strength were at the higheſt pitch: Never was there a more diligent Watch againſt any Innovations; never was that State governed by more ſevere and ſuſpicious Princes, than at the time when Tiberius, and Nero, held the Reins. No time ſeemed to be more unfit for the entrance of a New Doctrine than that Age, wherein it begun to be firſt publiſh'd; never did any Religion meet with that Oppoſition from Men. Idolatry hath been often ſetled without any Conteſt; but this hath ſuffered the ſame Fate with the Inſtitutor of it, and endured the Contradictions of Sinners againſt it ſelf: And thoſe that publiſh'd it, were not only without any worldly prop, but expos'd themſelves to the Hatred and Fury, to the Racks and Tortures of the ſtrongeſt Powers on Earth. It never ſet foot in any place, but the Country was in an uproar *; Swords were drawn to deſtroy it; Laws made to ſuppreſs it; Priſons provided for the Profeſſors of it; Fires kindled to conſume them, and Executioners had a perpetual employment to ſtifle the progreſs of it.

‖ Daillé, 15 Serm. p. 57.
* Acts 19. 28.

Rome in the Conqueſt of Countries chang'd not the Religion, Rites, and Modes of their Worſhip:

They alter'd their Civil Government, but left them to the liberty of their Religion, and many times joyned with them in the Worſhip of their peculiar gods; and ſometime imitated them at Rome, inſtead of aboliſhing them in the Cities they had ſubdu'd. But all their Councils were aſſembled, and their force was bandied againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt; and that City that kindly receiv'd all manner of Superſtitions, hated this Doctrine with an irreconcileable hatred. It met with Reproaches from the Wiſe, and Fury from the Potentates; it was derided by the one as the greateſt Folly, and perſecuted by the other as contrary to God and Mankind; the one were afraid to loſe their Eſteems by the Doctrine, and the other to loſe their Authority by a Sedition they thought a change of Religion would introduce. The Romans, that had been Conquerors of the Earth, fear'd Inteſtine Commotions, and the falling aſunder the Links of their Empire: Scarce any of their firſt Emperors, but had their Swords dy'd red in the Blood of the Chriſtians: The Fleſh with all its Luſts, the World with all its Flatteries, the Stateſmen with all their Craft, and the Mighty with all their Strength joyn'd together to extirpate it: Though many Members were taken off by the Fires, yet the Church not only lived, but flouriſh'd in the Furnace. Converts were made by the death of Martyrs, and the Flames which conſumed their Bodies, were the occaſion of firing Mens hearts with a Zeal for the Profeſſion of it. Inſtead of being extinguiſh'd, the Doctrine ſhone more bright, and multiplied under the Sickles that were employ'd to cut it down: God order'd every circumſtance ſo, both in the Perſons that publiſh'd it, the Means whereby, and the Time when, that nothing but his Power might appear in it, without any thing to dim and darken it.

IV. The Divine Power was conſpicuous in the great ſucceſs it had under all theſe difficulties. Multitudes were propheſied of to embrace it; whence the Prophet Iſaiah, after the Prophecy of the Death of Chriſt, Iſa. 53. calls upon the Church to enlarge her Tents, and lengthen out her Cords, to receive thoſe Multitudes of Children that ſhould call her Mother. Iſa. 54. 2, 3. for ſhe ſhould break forth on the right hand and on the left, and her ſeed ſhould inherit the Gentiles: The Idolaters and Perſecutors ſhould liſt their Names in the Muſter-Roll of the Church.

Preſently after the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt from Heaven upon the Apoſtles, you find the hearts of Three thouſand melted by a plain declaration of this Doctrine; who were a little before ſo far from having a favourable thought of it, that ſome of them at leaſt, if not all, had expreſt their Rage againſt it, in voting for the Condemning and Crucifying the Author of it *: But in a moment they were ſo alter'd, that they breath out Affections inſtead of Fury; neither the reſpect they had to their Rulers, nor the honour they bore to their Prieſts; nor the deriſions of the People, nor the threatning of Puniſhment, could ſtop them from owning it in the face of multitudes of Diſcouragements. How wonderful is it that they ſhould ſo ſoon, and by ſuch ſmall means pay a reverence to the Servants, who had none for the Maſter? that they ſhould hear them with patience, without the ſame Clamour againſt them as againſt Chriſt, Crucifie them, crucifie them? But, that their hearts ſhould ſo ſuddenly be enflam'd with Devotion to him dead, whom they ſo much abhorred when living. It had gained footing not in a corner of the World, but in the moſt famous Cities; in Jeruſalem, where Chriſt had been Crucified; in Antioch, where the Name of Chriſtians firſt began; in Corinth, a place of Ingenious Arts; and Epheſus, the Seat of a noted Idol. In leſs than Twenty years there was never a Province of the Roman Empire, and ſcarce any part of the known World but was ſtored with the Profeſſors of it. Rome, that was the Metropolis of the Idolatrous World, had multitudes of them ſprinkled in every corner, whoſe Faith was ſpoken of throughout the World *. The Court of Nero, that Monſter of Mankind, and the cruelleſt and ſordidſt Tyrant that ever breathed, was not empty of ſincere Votaries to it; there were Saints in Cæſar's houſe, while Paul was under Nero's Chain *: And it maintain'd its ſtanding, and flouriſh'd in ſpite of all the force of Hell, Two hundred and fifty years before any Sovereign Prince eſpouſed it.

* Acts 2. 41, 42.

* Rom. 1. 8.

* Phil. 4.

The Potentates of the Earth had conquer'd the Lands of Men, and ſubdued their Bodies; theſe vanquiſh'd Hearts and Wills, and brought the moſt beloved Thoughts under the Yoke of Chriſt: So much did this Doctrine overmaſter the Conſciences of its Followers, that they rejoyced more at their Yoke, than others at their Liberty; and counted it more a glory to die for the honour of it, than to live in the profeſſion of it. Thus did our Saviour reign, and gather Subjects in the midſt of his Enemies; in which reſpect, in the firſt diſcovery of the Goſpel, he is deſcrib'd as a mighty Conqueror, Rev. 6. 2. and ſtill conquering in the greatneſs of his ſtrength.

How great a Teſtimony of his Power is it, that from ſo ſmall a Cloud ſhould riſe ſo glorious a Sun, that ſhould chaſe before it the darkneſs and power of Hell; triumph over the Idolatry, Superſtition, and Prophaneneſs of the World? This plain Doctrine vanquiſh'd the Obſtinacy of the Jews, baffl'd the Underſtanding of the Greeks, humbl'd the Pride of the Grandees, threw the Devil not only out of Bodies but Hearts; tore up the foundation of his Empire, and planted the Croſs where the Devil had for many Ages before eſtabliſh'd his Standard. How much more than a humane Force is illuſtrious in this whole Conduct? Nothing in any Age of the World can parallel it; it being ſo much againſt the methods of Nature, the diſpoſition of the World, and (conſidering the Reſiſtance againſt it) ſeems to ſurmount even the work of Creation. Never were there in any Profeſſion ſuch multitudes, not of Bedlams, but Men of Sobriety, Acuteneſs, and Wiſdom, that expos'd themſelves to the fury of the Flames, and challeng'd Death in the moſt terrifying ſhapes, for the honour of this Doctrine.

To conclude, This ſhould be often meditated upon to form our Underſtandings to a full aſſent to the Goſpel, and the Truth of it; the want of which conſideration of Power, and the cuſtomarineſs of an Education in the outward profeſſion of it, is the ground of all the Prophaneneſs under it, and Apoſtacy from it; the diſeſteem of the Truth it declares, and the neglect of the Duties it enjoyns. The more we have a proſpect and ſenſe of the Impreſſions of Divine Power in it, the more we ſhall have a Reverence of the Divine Precepts.

III. The third thing is, the Power of God appears in the application of Redemption, as well as in the Perſon Redeeming, and the publication and propagation of the Doctrine of Redemption.

1. In the planting Grace.
2. In the pardon of Sin.
3. In the preſerving Grace.

1. In the planting Grace. There is no Expreſſion which the Spirit of God hath thought fit in Scripture to reſemble this Work to, but argues the exerting of a Divine Power for the effecting of it. When it is expreſt by Light, it is as much as the Power of God in creating the Sun; when by Regeneration, 'tis as much as the Power of God in forming an Infant, and faſhioning all the parts of a Man; when when 'tis called Reſurrection, 'tis as much as the rearing of the Body again out of putrified Matter; when it is called Creation, 'tis as much as erecting a comely World out of meer Nothing, or an inform and uncomely Maſs. As we could not contrive the Death of Chriſt for our Redemption, ſo we cannot form our Souls to the Acceptation of it; the infinite efficacy of Grace is as neceſſary for the one, as the infinite Wiſdom of God was for laying the Platform of the other.

'Tis by his Power we have whatſoever pertains
* 2 Pet. 1. 3. to Godlineſs as well as Life *: He puts his Fingers upon the handle of the Lock, and turns the Heart to what Point he pleaſes; the Action whereby he † Coloſſ. 1. 13. ἐῤῥύσατο. performs this, is expreſt by a word of Force †. He hath ſnatch'd us from the power of Darkneſs; the Action whereby it is perform'd manifeſts it. In reference to this Power it is called Creation, which is a production from Nothing; and Converſion is a production from ſomething more uncapable of that ſtate, than meer Nothing is of Being. There is a greater diſtance between the Terms of Sin and Righteouſneſs, Corruption and Grace, than between the Terms of Nothing and Being; the greater the diſtance is, the more Power is requir'd to the producing any thing. As in Miracles, the Miracle is the greater where the Change is the greater; and the Change is the greater where the Diſtance is the greater: As it was a more ſignal mark of Power to change a dead Man to life, than to change a ſick Man to health; ſo that the change here being from a Term of a greater diſtance, is more powerful than the Creation of Heaven and Earth: Therefore whereas Creation is ſaid to be wrought by his Hands, and the Heavens by his Fingers, or his Word; Con-
* Iſa. 53. 1. verſion is ſaid to be wrought by his Arm *: In Creation we had an Earthly; by Converſion a Heavenly ſtate: In Creation, Nothing is changed into Something; in Converſion, Hell is transform'd into Heaven, which is more than the turning Nothing into a glorious Angel. In that Thankſgiving of our Saviour for the Revelation of the knowledge of himſelf to Babes, the ſimple of the World, he gives the † Mat. 11. 5 Title to his Father, of Lord of Heaven and Earth †, intimating it to be an act of his Creative and Preſerving Power; that Power whereby he formed Heaven and Earth, hath preſerved the ſtanding, and govern'd the motions of all Creatures from the beginning of the World.

'Tis reſembl'd to the moſt Magnificent Act of Divine Power that God ever put forth, viz. that
* Eph. 1. 19. in the Reſurrection of our Saviour *, wherein there was more than an ordinary impreſſion of Might. 'Tis not ſo ſmall a Power as that whereby we ſpeak with Tongues, or whereby Chriſt opened the Mouths of the Dumb and the Ears of the Deaf, or unlooſed the Cords of Death from a Perſon. 'Tis not that Power whereby our Saviour wrought thoſe ſtupendous Miracles when he was in the World; but that Power which wrought a Miracle that amaz'd the moſt knowing Angels, as well as ignorant Man. The taking off the weight of the Sin of the World from our Saviour, and advancing him in his Humane Nature to rule over the Angelical Hoſt, making him Head of Principalities and Powers; as much as to ſay, as great as all that Power which is diſplay'd in our Redemption, from the firſt foundation to the laſt line in the ſuperſtructure. 'Tis
* 2 Cor. 4. 7. therefore often ſet forth with an Emphaſis, as Excellency of Power *, and Glorious power †. To glory
† 2 Pet. 1. 3. and vertue, we tranſlate it; but it is διὰ δόξης, Through glory and vertue, that is, by a glorious vertue or ſtrength.

2. The Inſtrument whereby it is wrought is dignified with the title of Power. The Goſpel which God uſeth in this great Affair is called, The power of God to ſalvation, Rom. 1. 16. And the Rod of ſtrength, Pſal. 110. 2. And the day of the Goſpels appearance in the Heart, is emphatically called, The day of Power, verſ. 3. wherein he brings down ſtrong Holds and towring Imaginations. * And therefore the Angel Gabriel, which Name ſignifies the Power of God, was always ſent upon thoſe Meſſages which concerned the Goſpel, as to Daniel, Zechary, Mary. The Goſpel is the Power of God in a way of Inſtrumentality, but the Almightineſs of God is the Principal in a way of Efficiency. The Goſpel is the Scepter of Chriſt; but the Power of Chriſt is the Mover of that Scepter. The Goſpel is not as a bare Word ſpoken, and propoſing the thing; but as back'd with a higher efficacy of Grace: As the Sword doth inſtrumentally cut, but the Arm that weilds it gives the blow, and makes it ſucceſsful in the ſtroke. But this Goſpel is the Power of God, becauſe he edgeth this by his own Power, to ſurmount all reſiſtance, and vanquiſh the greateſt Malice of that Man he deſigns to work upon.

* Grotius in Luke 1. 19.

The Power of God is conſpicuous,

1. In turning the heart of Man againſt the ſtrength of the Inclinations of Nature. In the forming of Man of the Duſt of the Ground, as the Matter contributed nothing to the Action whereby God form'd it, ſo it had no Principle of reſiſtance contrary to the deſign of God: But in converting the Heart, there is not only wanting a principle of Aſſiſtance from him in this Work, but the whole ſtrength of Corrupt Nature is alarm'd to combat againſt the Power of his Grace. When the Goſpel is preſented, the Underſtanding is not only ignorant of it, but the Will perverſe againſt it; the one doth not reliſh, and the other doth not eſteem the Excellency of the Object. The Carnal Wiſdom in the Mind contrives againſt it, and the rebellious Will puts the Orders in execution againſt the Counſel of God, which requires the invincible Power of God to enlighten the dark Mind, to know what it ſlights; and the fierce Will, to embrace what it loaths. The ſtream of Nature cannot be turned, but by a Power above Nature: 'Tis not all the Created Power in Heaven and Earth can change a Swine into a Man, or a venomous Toad into a holy and illuſtrious Angel. Yet this Work is not ſo great in ſome reſpect as the ſtilling the fierceneſs of Nature, the ſilencing the ſwelling Waves in the Heart, and the caſting out thoſe brutiſh Affections which are born and grow up with us. There would be no, or far leſs reſiſtance in a meer Animal, to be changed into a Creature of a higher rank, than there is in a Natural Man to be turned into a ſerious Chriſtian.

There is in every Natural Man a ſtoutneſs of heart, a ſtiff neck, unwillingneſs to good, forwardneſs to evil: Infinite Power quells this ſtoutneſs, demoliſheth theſe ſtrong Holds, turns this wild Aſs in her courſe, and routs thoſe Armies of turbulent Nature againſt the Grace of God. To ſtop the Floods of the Sea is not ſuch an act of Power, as to turn the Tyde of the Heart. This Power hath been employ'd upon every Convert in the World: What would you ſay then, if you knew all the Chanels in which it hath run ſince the days of Adam? If the alteration of one Rocky heart into a Pool of Water be a wonder of Power, what then is the calming and ſweetning by his Word thoſe One hundred forty four thouſand of the Tribes of Iſrael, and that numberleſs Multitude of all Nations and People that ſhall ſtand before the Throne, *, which were all naturally ſo many raging Seas? Not one converted Soul from Adam, to the laſt that ſhall be in the end of the World, but is a Trophy of the Divine

* Rev. 7. 9.

Conqueſt. None were pure Voluntiers, nor liſted themſelves in his Service, till he put forth his ſtrong Arm to draw them to him. No man's Underſtanding but was chain'd with Darkneſs, and fond of it; no Man but had Corruption in his Will, which was dearer to him than any thing elſe which could be propos'd for his true happineſs. Theſe things are moſt evident in Scripture and Experience.

2. As 'tis wrought againſt the Inclinations of Nature; ſo againſt a multitude of Corrupt habits rooted in the Souls of Men. A Diſtemper in its firſt Invaſion may more eaſily be cured, than when it becomes Chronical and Inveterate. The ſtrength of a Diſeaſe, or the complication of many, magnifies the Power of the Phyſician, and efficacy of the Medicine that tames and expels it. What Power is that which hath made Men ſtoop, when Natural habits have been grown Giants by Cuſtom; when the putrefaction of Nature hath engendred a multitude of Worms; when the Ulcers are many and deplorable; when many Cords, wherewith God would have bound the Sinner, have been broken, and (like Sampſon) the wicked Heart hath gloried in its ſtrength, and grown more proud, that it hath ſtood like a ſtrong Fort againſt thoſe Batteries, under which others have fallen flat?

Every proud Thought, every evil Habit captivated, * 2 Cor. 10. 5. ſerves for matter of Triumph to the *Power of God. What reſiſtance will a multitude of them make, when one of them is enough to hold the Faculty under its dominion, and intercept its Operations? So many cuſtomary Habits, ſo many old Natures, ſo many different Strengths added to Nature, every one of them ſtanding as a Barricado againſt the way of Grace; all the Errors the Underſtanding is poſſeſſed with, think the Goſpel folly; all the Vices the Will is filled with, count it the Fetter and Band. Nothing ſo contrary to Man, as to be thought a Fool; nothing ſo contrary to Man, as to enter into ſlavery. 'Tis no eaſie matter to plant the Croſs of Chriſt upon a Heart guided by many Principles againſt the Truth of it, and byaſs'd by a world of Wickedneſs againſt the Holineſs of it. Nature renders a man too feeble and indiſpos'd, and Cuſtom renders a Man more weak and unwilling to change † Jer. 13. 23. his hue†. To diſpoſſeſs Man then of his Self-eſteem and Self-excellency; to make room for God in the Heart, where there was none but for Sin, as dear to him as himſelf; to hurl down the pride of Nature; to make ſtout Imaginations ſtoop to the Croſs; to make deſires of Self-advancement ſink under a Zeal for the glorifying of God, and an over-ruling deſign for his Honour, is not to be aſcrib'd to any, but an out-ſtretched Arm weilding the Sword of the Spirit. To have a heart full of the Fear of God, that was juſt before filled with a Contempt of him; to have a ſenſe of his Power, an eye to his Glory, admiring thoughts of his Wiſdom, a Faith in his Truth, that had lower thoughts of him and all his Perfections, than he had of a Creature: To have a hatred of his habitual Luſts, that had brought him in much ſenſitive Pleaſure; to loath them as much as he loved them; to cheriſh the Duties he hated; to live by Faith in, and Obedience to the Redeemer, who was before ſo heartily under the conduct of Satan and Self; to chaſe the acts of Sin from his Members, and the pleaſing thoughts of Sin from his Mind; to make a ſtout Wretch willingly fall down, crawl upon the ground, and adore that Saviour whom before he out-dar'd, is a Triumphant Act of Infinite Power that can ſubdue all things to it ſelf, and break thoſe multitudes of Locks and Bolts that were upon us.

3. Againſt a multitude of Temptations and Intereſts. The Temptations Rich Men have in this World are ſo numerous and ſtrong, that the entrance of one of them into the Kingdom of Heaven, that is, the entertainment of the Goſpel is made by our Saviour an impoſſible thing with Men, and procurable only by *the Power of God. The Divine Strength * Luk. 18. 24, 25, 26. only can ſeparate the World from the Heart, and the Heart from the World. There muſt be an Incomprehenſible Power to chaſe away the Devil, that had ſo long, ſo ſtrong a footing in the Affections, to render the Soil he had ſown with ſo many Tares and Weeds capable of good Grain; to make Spirits that had found the ſweetneſs of Worldly proſperity, wrap up all their Happineſs in it, and not only bent down, but (as it were) buried in Earth and Mud, to be looſened from thoſe beloved Cords, to diſreliſh the Earth for a Crucified Chriſt; I ſay, this muſt be the effect of an Almighty Power.

4. The manner of Converſion ſhews no leſs the Power of God. There is not only an irreſiſtible Force uſed in it, but an agreeable Sweetneſs. The Power is ſo Efficacious, that nothing can vanquiſh it; and ſo Sweet, that none did ever complain of it. The Almighty Virtue diſplays it ſelf invincibly, yet without Conſtraint, compelling the Will without offering Violence to it, and making it ceaſe to be Will: Not forcing it, but changing it; not dragging it, but drawing it; making it will where before it nill'd; removing the Corrupt Nature of the Will, without invading the Created Nature and Rights of the Faculty, not working in us againſt the Phyſical Nature of the Will, but working to * Phil. 2. 13. *will. This work is therefore called Creation, Reſurrection, to ſhew its Irreſiſtible Power; 'Tis called Illumination, Perſwaſion, Drawing, to ſhew the ſuitableneſs of its Efficacy to the nature of the Humane Faculties: 'Tis a drawing with Cords, which teſtifies an Invincible ſtrength; but, with Cords of Love, which teſtifies a Delightful conqueſt: 'Tis hard to determine whether it be more Powerful than Sweet, or more Sweet than Powerful. 'Tis no mean part of the Power of God to twiſt together Victory and Pleaſure; to give a blow as delightful as ſtrong, as pleaſing to the Sufferer, as it is ſharp to the Sinner.

II. The Power of God in the application of Redemption is evident in the Pardoning a Sinner.

1. In the Pardon it ſelf. The Power of God is made the ground of his Patience; or the reaſon why he is Patient, is, becauſe he would *ſhew his Power. 'Tis a part of Magnanimity to paſs by * Rom. 9. 22. Injuries: As weaker Stomachs cannot concoct the tougher Food, ſo weak Minds cannot digeſt the harder Injuries: He that paſſes over a Wrong, is ſuperior to his Adverſary that does it. When God ſpeaks of his own Name as Merciful, he ſpeaks firſt of himſelf as Powerful, Exod. 34. 6. The Lord, the Lord God, that is, the Lord the ſtrong Lord, Jehovah, the ſtrong Jehovah. Let the Power of my Lord be great, ſaith Moſes, when he prays for the Forgiveneſs of his People †: The word Jigdal is writ- † Num. 14. 17. ten with a great Iod, or a Iod above the other Letters. The Power of God in Pardoning is advanc'd beyond an ordinary ſtrain, beyond the Creative ſtrength. In the Creation, he had power over the Creatures; in this, power over himſelf: In Creation, not Himſelf, but the Creatures were the Object of his Power; in that no Attribute of his Nature could Article againſt his Deſign. In the pardon of a Sinner, after many Overtures made to him and refus'd by him, God exerciſeth a power over himſelf; for the Sinner hath diſhonour'd God, provok'd his Juſtice, abuſed his Goodneſs, done Injury to all thoſe Attributes which are neceſſary to his relief: It was not ſo in Creation, nothing was uncapable of diſobliging God from bringing it into Being.

ing. The Duſt, which was the Matter of Adam's Body, needed only the extrinſick Power of God to form it into a Man, and inſpire it with a living Soul: It had not render'd it ſelf obnoxious to Divine Juſtice, nor was capable to excite any diſputes between his Perfections. But after the entrance of Sin, and the merit of Death thereby, there was a reſiſtance in Juſtice to the free Remiſſion of Man: God was to exerciſe a Power over himſelf, to anſwer his Juſtice, and pardon the Sinner; as well as a power over the Creature, to reduce the Runaway and Rebel. Unleſs we have recourſe to the Infiniteneſs of God's Power, the infiniteneſs of our Guilt will weigh us down: We muſt conſider not only that we have a mighty Guilt to preſs us, but a mighty God to relieve us. In the ſame act of his being our Righteouſneſs, he is our Strength: In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength, Iſai. 45. 24.

2. In the ſenſe of Pardon. When the Soul hath been wounded with the ſenſe of ſin, and its Iniquities have ſtar'd it in the face; the raiſing the Soul from a deſpairing Condition, and lifting it above thoſe Waters which terrified it; to caſt the light of Comfort, as well as the light of Grace, into a heart covered with more than an Egyptian Darkneſs, is an act of his infinite and creating Power; Iſa. 57. 19. I create the fruit of the lips, peace. Men may wear out their Lips with numbring up the Promiſes of Grace and Arguments of Peace; but all will ſignifie no more without a creative Power, than if all Men and Angels ſhould call to that White upon the Wall to ſhine as ſplendidly as the Sun. God only can create Jeruſalem, and every Child of Jeruſalem a rejoycing *. A Man is no more able to apply to himſelf any word of Comfort under the ſenſe of Sin, than he is able to convert himſelf, and turn the propoſals of the Word into gracious Affections in his heart. To reſtore the joy of Salvation, is in David's judgment an act of Soveraign Power, equal to that of creating a clean heart, Pſal. 51. 10, 12. Alas, 'tis a ſtate like to that of Death; as Infinite Power can only raiſe from Natural death, ſo from a Spiritual death, alſo from a Comfortleſs death: In his favour there is life; in the want of his favour there is death. The Power of God hath ſo placed Light in the Sun, that all Creatures in the World, all the Torches upon Earth kindled together cannot make it Day, if that doth not riſe: ſo all the Angels in Heaven, and Men upon Earth, are not competent Chirurgions for a wounded Spirit. The cure of our Spiritual Ulcers, and the pouring in Balm, is an act of Soveraign Creative Power: 'Tis more viſible in ſilencing a Tempeſtuous Conſcience, than the Power of our Saviour was in the ſtilling the ſtormy Winds and the roaring Waves. As none but Infinite Power can remove the Deſpairing ſenſe of it.

* Iſa. 65. 18

III. This Power is evident in the preſerving Grace. As the Providence of God is a manifeſtation of his Power in a continual Creation; ſo the preſervation of Grace, is a manifeſtation of his Power in a continual Regeneration. To keep a Nation under the Yoke, is an act of the ſame Power that ſubdu'd it. 'Tis this that ſtrengthens Men in ſuffering againſt the Fury of Hell †; 'tis this that keeps them from falling againſt the force of Hell, the Father's hand, John 10. 29. His ſtrength abates and moderates the violence of Temptations; his Staff ſuſtains his People under them; his Might defeats the Power of Satan, and bruiſeth him under a Believers feet. The Counterworkings of Indwelling Corruption; the reluctances of the Fleſh againſt the breathings of the Spirit; the fallacy of the Senſes, and the rovings of the Mind, have ability quickly to ſtifle and extinguiſh Grace, if it were not maintained by that Powerful blaſt that firſt inbreathed it. No leſs Power is ſeen in perfecting it, than was in planting it ‖; no leſs in fulfilling the work of Faith, than in ingrafting the Word of Faith, 2 Theſſ. 1. 11.

† Coloſ. 1. 13.

‖ 2 Pet. 1. 3.

The Apoſtle well underſtood the Neceſſity and Efficacy of it in the preſervation of Faith, as well as in the firſt infuſion, when he expreſſes himſelf in thoſe terms of a Greatneſs or Hyperbole of Power, his Mighty Power, or the Power of his Might, Epheſians 1. 19. The Salvation he beſtows, and the Strength whereby he effects it, are joyned together in the Prophet's Song, Iſai. 12. 2. The Lord is my ſtrength and my ſalvation: And indeed, God doth more magnifie his Power in continuing a Believer in the World, a weak and half-rigg'd Veſſel, in the midſt of ſo many Sands whereon it might ſplit; ſo many Rocks whereon it might daſh; ſo many Corruptions within, and ſo many Temptations without; than if he did immediately tranſport him into Heaven, and clothe him with a perfectly Sanctified Nature.

To Conclude: What is there then in the World which is deſtitute of Notices of Divine Power? Every Creature affords us the Leſſon; all acts of Divine Government are the Marks of it. Look into the Word, and the manner of its propagation inſtructs us in it; your changed Natures, your pardoned Guilt, your ſhining Comfort, your quell'd Corruptions, the ſtanding of your ſtaggering Graces, are ſufficient to preſerve a ſenſe, and prevent a forgetfulneſs of this great Attribute, ſo neceſſary for your ſupport, and conducing ſo much to your comfort.

I. Of Information and Inſtruction.

1. If Incomprehenſible and Infinite Power belongs to the Nature of God, then Jeſus Chriſt hath a Divine Nature, becauſe the Acts of Power proper to God are aſcribed to him. This perfection of Omnipotence doth unqueſtionably pertain to the Deity, and is an incommunicable Property, and the ſame with the Eſſence of God: He therefore to whom this Attribute is aſcribed, is eſſentially God.

This is challenged by Chriſt in conjunction with Eternity; Revel. 1. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, ſaith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. This the Lord Chriſt ſpeaks of himſelf. He who was equal with God, proclaims himſelf by the Eſſential Title of the Godhead, part of which he repeats again, virſe 11. And this is the Perſon which walks in the midſt of the ſeven golden Candleſticks; the Perſon that was dead and now lives, verſ. 17, 18. which cannot poſſibly be meant of the Father, the Firſt Perſon, who can never come under that denomination of having been dead. Being therefore adorn'd with the ſame Title, he hath the ſame Deity; and though his Omnipotence be only poſitively aſſerted, verſe 8. yet his Eternity being aſſerted, verſ. 11, 17. it inferreth his Immenſe Power; for he that is Eternal without limits of Time, muſt needs be conceived Powerful, without any daſh of Infirmity.

Again, When He is ſaid to be a Child born and a Son given, in the ſame breath he is called the Mighty God *. 'Tis introduc'd as a ground of Comfort to the Church, to preſerve their Hopes in the accompliſhment of the Promiſes made to them before. They ſhould not imagine him to have only the Infirmity of a Man, though he was vail'd in the appearance of a Man. No, they ſhould look through the diſguiſe of his Fleſh, to the Might of his Godhead. The Attribute of Mighty is added to the the Title G O D, becauſe the conſideration of Power is moſt capable to ſuſtain the drooping Church in ſuch a Condition, and to prop up her hopes. 'Tis upon this account he ſaith of himſelf, that whatſoever things the Father doth, thoſe alſo doth the Son likewiſe, John 5.19. In creation of Heaven, Earth, Sea, and the preſervation of all Creatures, the Son works with the ſame Will, Wiſdom, Vertue, Power, as the Father works: Not as two may concur in an Action in a different manner, as an Agent and an Inſtrument, a Carpenter and his Tools; but in the ſame manner of Operation, ὁμοίως, which we tranſlate Likewiſe, which doth not expreſs ſo well the Emphaſis of the word. There is no diverſity of Action between Us; what the Father doth, that I do by the ſame Power, with the ſame Eaſineſs in every reſpect; there is the ſame Creative, Productive, Conſervative Power in both of us; and that not in one work that is done ad extra, but in All, in whatſoever the Father doth. In the ſame manner; not by a Delegated, but Natural and Eſſential Power, by one undivided operation and manner of working.

1. The Creation, which is a work of Omnipotence, is more than once aſcrib'd to him. This he doth own himſelf; the Creation of the Earth, and of Man upon it; the ſtretching out the Heavens by his Hands, and the forming of all the Hoſt of them by his Command, Iſai. 45. 12. He is not only the Creator of Iſrael, the Church, verſe 12. but of the whole World, and every Creature on the face of the Earth, and in the Glories of the Heavens; which is repeated alſo verſe 18. where in this act of Creation he is called God himſelf, and ſpeaks of himſelf in the Term Jehovah; and ſwears by himſelf, verſe 23. What doth he ſwear? That unto me every knee ſhall bow, and every tongue ſhall ſwear. Is this Chriſt? Yes, if the Apoſtle may be believed, who applies it to him, Rom. 14. 11. to prove the appearance of all Men before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt, whom the Prophet calls, verſe 15. a God that hides himſelf; and ſo he was a hidden God when obſcur'd in our fleſhly Infirmities. He was in conjunction with the Father when the Sea receiv'd his Decree, and the foundations of the Earth were appointed; not as a Spectator, but as an Artificer, for ſo the word in Prov. 8. 30. ſignifies, As one brought up with him; it ſignifies alſo, A cunning †Cant. 7. 1. Workman †. He was the Eaſt, or the Sun from whence ſprang all the light of Life and Being to the Creature; ſo the word קדם verſe 22. which is tranſlated, Before his works of old, is rendred by ſome, and ſignifies the Eaſt as well as Before: But if it notes only his Exiſtence before, 'tis enough to prove his Deity.

The Scripture doth not only allow him an Exiſtence before the World, but exalts him as the cauſe of the World: A thing may precede another that is not the cauſe of that which follows; a precedency in Age doth not entitle one Brother or thing the cauſe of another: But our Saviour is not only ancienter then the World, but is the Creator of the World, Heb. 1. 10, 11. Who laid the Foundations of the Earth, and the Heavens are the works of his hands. So great an Elogy cannot be given to one deſtitute of Omnipotence. Since the diſtance between Being and not Being is ſo vaſt a Gulf that cannot be ſurmounted and ſtept over, but by an Infinite Power: He is the Firſt and the Laſt, that ‖ Iſa. 41. 4. called the Generations from the beginning ‖, and had an Almighty voice to call them out of Nothing. In which regard he is called, The everlaſting Father, Iſai. 9. 6. as being the Efficient of Creation; as God is called the Father of the Rain, or as Father is taken for the Inventor of an Art; as Jubal, the firſt Framer and Inventor of Muſick, is called, The Father of ſuch as handle the Harp, Gen. 4. 21. And that Perſon is ſaid to make the Sea, and form the dry Land by his hands, Pſal. 95. 5, 6. againſt whom we are exhorted not to harden our hearts, verſe 8. which is applied to Chriſt by his Apoſtle, Heb. 3. 8. in the 15th verſe he is called, A great King, and a great God our Maker. The places wherein the Creation is attributed to Chriſt, thoſe that are the Antagoniſts of his Deity, would evade by underſtanding them of the New or Evangelical, not of the firſt, old and material Creation: But what appearance is there for ſuch a ſenſe? Conſider,

1. That of Heb. 1. 10, 11. 'tis ſpoken of that Earth and Heavens which were in the beginning of Time; 'tis that Earth that ſhall periſh, that Heaven that ſhall be folded up, that Creation that ſhall grow old towards a decay; that is, only the viſible and material Creation: The Spiritual ſhall endure for ever; it grows not old to decay, but grows up to a perfection; it ſprouts up to its happineſs, not to its detriment. The ſame Perſon creates that ſhall deſtroy, and the ſame World is created by him that ſhall be deſtroyed by him, as well as it ſubſiſted by virtue of his Omnipotency.

2. Can that alſo, Heb. 1. 2. By whom alſo he made the worlds, ſpeaking of Chriſt, bear the ſame plea? It was the ſame Perſon by whom God ſpake to us in theſe laſt times, the ſame Perſon which he hath conſtituted Heir of all things, by whom alſo he made the worlds: And the Particle Alſo, intimates it to be a diſtinct act from his Speaking or Prophetical Office, whereby he reſtored and new created the World, as well as the rightful Foundation God had to make him Heir of all things. It refers likewiſe, not to the time of Chriſt's ſpeaking upon earth; but to ſomething paſt, and ſomething different from the publication of the Goſpel: 'Tis not, doth make, which had been more likely if the Apoſtle had meant only the New Creation; but hath made *, referring to time long ſince paſt, ſomething done before his appearance upon the Earth as a Prophet. By whom alſo he made the Worlds, or Ages, all things ſubjected to, or meaſured by Time, which muſt be meant according to the Jewiſh Phraſe of this material viſible World: So they entitle God in their Liturgy, the Lord of Ages, that is, the Lord of the World, and all Ages and Revolutions of the World, from the Creation to the laſt period of Time. If any thing were in Being before this Frame of Heaven and Earth, and within the compaſs of Time, it receiv'd Being and Duration from the Son of God. The Apoſtle would give an Argument to prove the equity of making him Heir of all things as Mediator, becauſe he was the Framer of all things as God. He may well be the Heir or Lord of Angels as well as Men, who created Angels as well as Men: All things were juſtly under his Power as Mediator, ſince they deriv'd their Exiſtence from him as Creator.

* Evidence.

3. But thirdly, What Evaſion can there be for that, Coloſſ. 1. 16. By whom were all things created that are in Heaven, and that are in Earth, whether they be Thrones, or Dominions, or Principalities, or Powers, all things were created by him and for him. He is ſaid to be the Creator of Material and Viſible things, as well as Spiritual and Inviſible; of things in Heaven, which needed no reſtoration, as well as things on Earth, which were polluted by Sin, and ſtood in need of a new Creation. How could the Angels belong to the new Creation, who had never put off the honour and purity of the firſt? Since they never diveſted themſelves of their original Integrity, they could not be reinveſted with that which they never loſt. Beſides, ſuppoſe the holy

holy Angels be one way or other reduc'd as parts of the new Creation, as being under the Mediatory Government of our Saviour, as their Head, and in regard of their Confirmation by him in that happy ſtate. In what manner ſhall the Devils be rank'd among new Creatures? They are called Principalities and Powers as well as the Angels, and may come under the Title of Things inviſible: That they are called Principalities and Powers is plain, Epheſ. 6. 12. For we wreſtle not againſt Fleſh and Blood, but againſt Principalities and Powers, the Rulers of the darkneſs of this world; againſt Spiritual wickedneſs in high places. Good Angels are not there meant, for what War hath Believers with them, or they with Believers? They are the Guardians of them, ſince Chriſt hath taken away the Enmity between our Lord and theirs, in whoſe quarrel they were engag'd againſt us: And ſince the Apoſtle ſpeaking of All things created by him, expreſſeth it ſo, that it cannot be conceived he ſhould except any thing; how come the finally Impenitent and Unbelievers, which are things in earth, and viſible, to be liſted here in the Roll of New Creatures? None of theſe can be called New Creatures, becauſe they are ſubjected to the Government of Chriſt; no more than the Earth and Sea, and the Animals in it, are made New Creatures, becauſe they are all under the Dominion of Chriſt and his Providential Government. Again, the Apoſtle manifeſtly makes the Creation he here ſpeaks of, to be the Material, and not the New Creation; for that he ſpeaks of afterwards as a diſtinct act of our Lord Jeſus under the Title of Reconciliation, Coloſſ. 1. 20, 21. which was the reſtoration of the World, and the ſatisfying for that Curſe that lay upon it. His intent is here to ſhew, that not an Angel in Heaven, nor a Creature upon Earth, but was placed in their ſeveral degrees of Excellency by the Power of the Son of God, who after that act of Creation and the entrance of Sin, was the Reconciler of the World through the Blood of his Croſs.

4. There is another place as clear, John 1. 3. All things were made by him, and without him was nothing made that was made. The Creation is here aſcrib'd to him; Affirmatively, All things were made by him; Negatively, There was nothing made without him: and the words are Emphatical, οὐδὲ ἕν, Not one thing: excepting nothing; including inviſible things, as well as things conſpicuous to ſenſe only, mentioned in the ſtory of the Creation, Gen. 1. not only the intire Maſs, but the diſtinct Parcels, the ſmalleſt Worm and the higheſt Angel, owe their Original to him. And if not one thing, then the Matter was not created to his hands; and his Work conſiſted not only in the forming things from that Matter: If that one thing of Matter were excepted, a chief thing were excepted; if not one thing were excepted, then he created Something of Nothing, becauſe Spirits, as Angels and Souls, are not made of any pre-exiſting or fore-created Matter. How could the Evangeliſt phraſe it more extenſively and comprehenſively? This is a Character of Omnipotency; to create the World, and every thing in it, of Nothing, requires an Infinite Virtue and Power. If all things were created by him, they were not created by him as Man, becauſe Himſelf, as Man, was not in Being before the Creation: If all things were made by him, then Himſelf was not made, Himſelf was not created; and to be exiſtent without being made, without being created, is to be unboundedly Omnipotent. And if we underſtand it of the New Creation, as they do that will not allow him an exiſtence in his Deity before his Humanity, it cannot be true of that; for how could he regenerate Abraham, make Simeon and Anna new Creatures, who waited for the ſalvation of Iſrael, and form John Baptiſt, and fill him with the Holy Ghoſt, even from the womb * (who belong'd to the new Creation, and was to prepare the way) if Chriſt had not a Being before him? The Evangeliſt alludes to, and explains the Hiſtory of the Creation in the beginning, and acquaints us what was meant by God ſaid, ſo often, viz. the Eternal Word, and deſcribes him in his Creative Power, manifeſted in the framing the World, before he deſcribes him in his Incarnation, when he came to lay the Foundation of the reſtoration of the World, John 1. 14. The Word was made fleſh, this Word who was with God, who was God, who made all things, and gave Being to the moſt glorious Angels and the meaneſt Creature without exception; this Word, in time was made fleſh. * Luke 1. 15.

5. The Creation of things mentioned in theſe Scriptures cannot be attributed to him as an Inſtrument. As if when it is ſaid, God created all things by him, and by him made the Worlds, we are to underſtand the Father to be the Agent, and the Son to be a Tool in his Father's hand, as an Ax in the hand of a Carpenter, or a File in the hand of a Smith, or a Servant acting by Command as the Organ of his Maſter. The Prepoſition Per, or διὰ, doth not alway ſignifie an Inſtrumental cauſe: When it is ſaid, that the Apoſtle gave the Theſſalonians a Command by Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Theſſ. 4. 2, was Chriſt the Inſtrument, and not the Lord of that Command the Apoſtle gave? The immediate operation of Chriſt dwelling in the Apoſtles, was that whereby they gave the Commands to their Diſciples. When we are called by God, 1 Cor. 1. 9. Is he the Inſtrumental or Principal cauſe of our effectual Vocation? And can the Will of God be the Inſtrument of putting Paul into the Apoſtleſhip, or the Soveraign cauſe of inveſting him with that Dignity, when he calls himſelf an Apoſtle by the will of God? Epheſ. 1. 3. And when all things are ſaid to be through God, as well as of him, muſt he be counted the Inſtrumental cauſe of his own Creation; Counſels, and Judgments *? When we mortifie the deeds of the Body through the Spirit, Rom. 8. 13. or keep the Treaſure of the Word by the Holy Ghoſt, 2 Tim. 1. 14. Is the Holy Ghoſt of no more dignity in ſuch acts than Inſtrument? Nor doth the gaining a thing by a Perſon make him a meer Inſtrument or Inferior; as when a Man gains his Right in a way of Juſtice againſt his Adverſary by the Magiſtrate, is the Judge inferior to the Suppliant? If the Word were an Inſtrument in the Creation, it muſt be a created or uncreated Inſtrument: If created, it could not be true what the Evangeliſt ſaith, that All things were made by him, ſince himſelf the principal thing could not be made by himſelf; if Uncreated, he was God, and ſo acted by a Divine Omnipotency, which ſurmounts an Inſtrumental cauſe. But indeed, an Inſtrument is impoſſible in Creation, ſince it is wrought only by an act of the Divine Will. Do we need any Organ to an Act of Volition? the efficacious Will of the Creator is the cauſe of the Original of the Body of the World, with its particular Members and exact Harmony: It was form'd by a Word and eſtabliſh'd by a Command †; the beauty of the Creation ſtood up at the Precept of his Will. Nor was the Son a Partial cauſe; as when many are ſaid to build a Houſe, one works one part, and another frames another part: God created all things by the immediate operation of the Son, in the Unity of Eſſence, Goodneſs, Power, Wiſdom; not an extrinſick, but a connatural Agent. As the Sun doth illuſtrate all things by his Light, and quickens all things by his Heat; ſo God created the * Rom. 11. 36.

Worlds

Worlds by Christ, as he was the brightness or splendor of his Glory, the exact image of his Person; which follows the declaration of his making the Worlds by him *, to shew, that he acted not as an Instrument, but one in Essential conjunction with him; as Light and Brightness with the Sun. But suppose he did make the World as a kind of Instrument, He was then before the World, not bounded by Time; and Eternity cannot well be conceiv'd belonging to a Being without Omnipotency: He is the End as well as the Autor of the Creatures †; not only the Principle which gave them Being, but the Sea into whose glory they run and dissolve themselves, which consists not with the meanness of an Instrument.

* Heb. 1. 3, 4.

† Colos. 1. 16.

2. As Creation, so Preservation is ascribed to him, Colos. 1. 17. By him all things consist. As he preceded all things in his Eternity, so he establishes all things by his Omnipotency, and fixes them in their several Centers, that they sink not into that nothing from whence he fetched them. By him they flourish in their several Beings, and observe the Laws and Orders he first appointed: That Power of his which extracted them from insensible Nothing, upholds them in their several Beings with the same facility as he spake Being into them, even by the word of his Power *, and by one Creative continued Voice called all Generations from the beginning to the Period of the World †, and causes them to flourish in their several seasons. 'Tis by him Kings reign, and Princes decree Justice, and all things are confin'd within the limits of Government. All which are Acts of an Infinite Power.

* Heb. 1. 3.

† Isa. 41. 4.

3. Resurrection is also ascrib'd to him. The Body crumbled to Dust, and that Dust blown to several quarters of the World, cannot be gathered in its distinct parts, and new formed for the entertainment of the Soul, without the Strength of an Infinite Arm. This he will do and more; change the vileness of an Earthly Body into the glory of an Heavenly one; a Dusty Flesh into a Spiritual Body, which is an argument of a Power invincible, to which all things cannot but stoop; for it is by such an operation, which testifies an ability to subdue all things to himself *; especially when he works it with the same ease as he did the Creation, by the power of his Voice. John 5. 28. All that are in the Graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth: Speaking them into a restored Life from insensible Dust, as he did into Being from an empty Nothing. The greatest acts of Power are own'd to belong to Creation, Preservation, Resurrection: Omnipotence therefore is his Right; and therefore a Deity cannot be denied to him that inherits a Perfection essential to none but God, and impossible to be entrusted in, or managed by the hands of any Creatures.

* Phil. 3. 21.

And this is no mean comfort to those that believe in him: He is, in regard of his Power, the Horn of Salvation; so Zechariah sings of him, Luk. 1. 69. Nor could there be any more Mighty found out upon whom God could have laid our help *. No reason therefore to doubt his ability to save to the utmost, who hath the Power of Creation, Preservation, and Resurrection in his hands. His Promises must be accomplish'd, since nothing can resist him: He hath Power to fulfil his Word, and bring all things to a final issue, because he is Almighty; by his outstretched Arm in the deliverance of his Israel from Egypt, (for it was his Arm, 1 Cor. 10.) he shew'd, that he was able to deliver us from Spiritual Egypt. The charge of Mediator to expiate Sin, vanquish Hell, form a Church, conduct and perfect it, are not to be effected by a Person of less ability than Infinite. Let this Almightiness of his be the Bottom, wherein to cast and fix the Anchor of our Hopes.

* Psal. 89. 19.

2. Information. Hence may be inferred the Deity of the Holy Ghost. Works of Omnipotency are ascribed to the Spirit of God: By the motion of the Wings of this Spirit, as a Bird over her Eggs, was that rude and unshapen Mass hatch'd into a comely World *. The Stars, or perhaps the Angels, are meant by the garnishing of the Heavens in the Verse before the Text, were brought forth in their comeliness and dignity, as the Ornaments of the upper World, by this Spirit; By his Spirit he hath garnished the Heavens. To this Spirit Job ascribes the formation both of the Body and Soul under the Title of Almighty, Job 33. 4. The Spirit of God hath made, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life. Resurrection, another work of Omnipotency, is attributed to him, Rom. 8. 11. The Conception of our Saviour in the Womb; the Miracles that he wrought, were by the power of the Spirit in him. Power is a Title belonging to him, and sometimes both are put together, 1 Thess. 1. 5. and other places. And that great Power of changing the Heart, and sanctifying a polluted Nature, a work greater than Creation, is frequently acknowledg'd in the Scripture to be the peculiar act of the Holy Ghost. The Father, Son, Spirit, are one Principle in Creation, Resurrection, and all the Works of Omnipotence.

* Gen. 1. 2. So the word Moved properly signifies.

3. Inference from the Doctrine. The Blessedness of God is hence evidenc'd. If God be Almighty, he can want nothing; all want speaks Weakness. If he doth what he will, he cannot be miserable; all Misery consists in those things which happen contrary to our Will. There is nothing can hinder his Happiness, because nothing can resist his Power. Since he is Omnipotent, nothing can hurt him, nothing can strip him of what he hath, of what he is *. If he can do whatsoever he will, he cannot want any thing that he wills: He is as happy, as great, as glorious as he will; for he hath a perfect liberty of Will to will, and a perfect Power to attain what he will; His Will cannot be restrained, nor his Power mated. It would be a defect in Blessedness, to will what he were not able to do: Sorrow is the result of a want of Power, with a presence of Will. † If he could will any thing which he could not effect, he would be miserable, and no longer God: He can do whatsoever he pleases, and therefore can want nothing that pleases him. He cannot be infinitely happy, the original of whose Happiness is not in himself: Nothing can be infinitely happy, that is limited and bounded.

* Sabunde, Tit. 39.

† Pont. par. 6. med. 16. p. 531.

4. Hence is a ground for the Immutability of God. As he is uncapable of changing his Resolves, because of his Infinite Wisdom, so he is uncapable of being forced to any Change, because of his Infinite Power. Being Almighty, He can be no more changed from Power to Weakness; than being All-wise, He can be changed from Wisdom to Folly; or being Omniscient, from Knowledge to Ignorance. He cannot be alter'd in his Purposes, because of his Wisdom, nor in the manner and method of his Actions, because of his Infinite Strength. Men indeed, when their Designs are laid deepest, and their Purposes stand firmest, yet are forced to stand still, or change the manner of the execution of their Resolves, by reason of some outward Accidents that obstruct them in their course; for having not Wisdom to foresee future hindrances, they have not power to prevent them, or strength to remove them, when they unexpectedly interpose themselves between their desire and performance: But no created Power has strength enough to be a bar against God. By the same act of his Will that he resolves a thing, he can puff away any Impediments that seem to rise up against him. He that wants no Means to effect effect his purposes, cannot be check'd by any thing that riseth up to stand in his way: Heaven, Earth, Sea, the deepest places, are too weak to resist his

* Psal. 135. 6. Will *. The Purity of the Angels will not, and the Devil's Malice cannot frustrate his Will; the one voluntarily obeys the beck of his hand, and the other are vanquisht by the power of it. What can make him change his Purposes, who (if he please) can dash the Earth against the Heavens in the twinkling of an Eye, untying the World from its Center, clap the Stars and Elements together into one Mass, and blow the whole Creation of Men and Devils into Nothing. Because he is Almighty, therefore he is Immutable.

5. Hence is inferred the Providence of God, and his Government of the World. His Power, as well as his Wisdom, gives him a right to Govern: Nothing can equal him, therefore nothing can share the Command with him; since All things are his Works, 'tis fittest they should be under His Order: He that frames a work, is fittest to guide and govern it. God hath the most Right to Govern, because he hath Knowledge to direct his Power, and Power to execute the results of his Wisdom: He knows what is convenient to order, and hath Strength to effect what he orders. As his Power would be oppressive without Goodness and Wisdom, so his Goodness and Wisdom would be fruitless without Power. An Artificer that hath lost his hands may direct, but cannot make an Engine: A Pilot that hath lost his Arms, may advise the way of Steerage, but cannot hold the Helm; something is wanting in him to be a compleat Governour: But since both Counsel and Power are Infinite in God, hence results an Infinite Right to Govern, and an Infinite Fitness, because his Will cannot be resisted, his Power cannot be enfeebled or diminish'd; he can quicken and encrease the strength of all Means as he pleases. He can hold all things in the World together, and preserve them in those Functions wherein he setled them, and conduct them to those ends for which he designed them.

Every Artificer, the more Excellent he is, and the more Excellency of Power appears in his work, is the more careful to maintain and cherish it. Those that deny Providence, do not only ravish from him the bowels of his Goodness, but strip him of a main exercise of his Power, and engender in Men a suspicion of Weariness and Feebleness in him; as tho' his strength had been spent in making them, that none is left to guide them. They would make him Headless in regard of his Wisdom, and Bowelless in regard of his Goodness, and Armless in regard of his Strength: If he did not, or were not able to preserve and provide for his Creatures, his Power in making them would be in a great part an Invisible Power; if he did not preserve what he made, and govern what he preserves, it would be a kind of strange and rude Power, to make, and suffer it to be dasht in pieces at the pleasure of others. If the Power of God should relinquish the World, the life of things would be extinguisht, the Fabrick would be confounded, and fall into a deplorable Chaos. That which is composed of so many various pieces, could not maintain its Union, if there were not a secret Virtue binding them together, and maintaining those varieties of links.

Well then, since God is not only so good, that he cannot will any thing but what is good: so Wise, that he cannot err or mistake; but also so Able, that he cannot be defeated or mated: He hath every way a full Ability to govern the World; where those three are Infinite, the right and fitness resulting from thence is unquestionable: And indeed, to deny God this Active part of his Power, is to render him Weak, Foolish, Cruel, or all.

6. Here is a ground for the Worship of God. Wisdom and Power are the grounds of the Respect we give to Men; they being both infinite in God, are the foundation of a solemn Honour to be returned to him by his Creatures. If a Man make a curious Engine, we honour him for his skill; if another vanquish a vigorous Enemy, we admire him for his Strength: And shall not the efficacy of God's Power in Creation, Government, Redemption, enflame us with a sense of the Honour of his Name and Perfections? We admire those Princes that have vast Empires, numerous Armies, that have a power to conquer their Enemies, and preserve their own People in Peace: How much more ground have we to pay a mighty Reverence to God, who without Trouble and Weariness made and manages this vast Empire of the World by a Word and Beck? What sensible thoughts have we of the noise of Thunder, the power of the Sun, the storms of the Sea? These things that have no Understanding have struck Men with such a Reverence, that many have ador'd them as gods. What Reverence and Adoration doth this Mighty Power, joyned with an Infinite Wisdom in God, demand at our hands?

All Religion and Worship stands especially upon two Pillars, Goodness and Power in God; if either of these were defective, all Religion would faint away. We can expect no entertainment with him without Goodness, nor any benefit from him without Power. This God prefaceth to the Command to Worship him, the benefit his Goodness had conferr'd upon them, and the Powerful manner of conveyance of it to them, 2 Kin. 17. 36. The Lord brought you up from the Land of Egypt with great Power and an Out-stretched Arm; him shall you fear, and him shall you worship, and to him shall you do sacrifice. Because this Attribute is a main foundation of Prayer, the Lord's Prayer is concluded with a doxology of it, For thine is the Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory. As he is Rich, possessing all Blessings; so he is Powerful, to confer all Blessings on us, and make them efficacious to us. The * Jews repeat many times in their Prayers, some say an hundred times מלך העולם The King of the World; 'tis both an Awe and an Encouragement. We could not without consideration of it pray in Faith of Success; nay, we could not pray at all, if his Power were defective to help us, and his Mercy too weak to relieve us. Who would sollicite a Lifeless, or lye a prostrate Suppliant to a feeble Arm! Upon this Ability of God, our Saviour built his Petitions, Heb. 5. 7. He offered up strong Cries unto him that was able to save him from death. Abraham's Faith hung upon the same string, Rom. 4. 21. and the Captiv'd Church supplicates God to act according to the greatness of his power, Psal. 79. 11. In all our Addresses this is to be ey'd and consider'd, God is able to help, to relieve, to ease me, let my misery be never so great, and my strength never so weak. If thou wilt thou canst make me clean, was the Consideration the Leper had when he came to worship Christ; he was clear in his Power, and therefore worshiped him, though he was not equally clear in his Will. All Worship is shot wrong that is not directed to, and conducted by the thoughts of this Attribute, whose assistance we need. When we beg the Pardon of our Sins, we should eye Mercy and Power; when we beg his righting us in any case where we are unjustly oppress, we do not eye Righteousness without Power; when we plead the performance of his Promise, we do not regard his Faithfulness only without the prop of his Power. As Power ushers in all the Attributes of God in their exercise and manifestation in the World, so should it be the Butt our Eyes should be fixed upon in all our acts of Worſhip: As without his Power his other Attributes would be uſeleſs, ſo without Apprehenſions of his Power our Prayers will be Faithleſs and Comfortleſs. The Title in the Lord's Prayer directs us to a proſpect both of his Goodneſs and Power; his Goodneſs in the word Father, his Greatneſs, Excellency and Power in the word Heaven. The heedleſs Conſideration of the Infiniteneſs of this Perfection roots up Piety in the midſt of us, and makes us ſo careleſs in Worſhip. Did we more think of that Power that rais'd the World out of nothing; that orders all Creatures by an act of his Will; that perform'd ſo great an exploit, as that of our Redemption, when maſterleſs Sin had triumphed over the World, we ſhould give God the Honour and Adoration which ſo great an excellency challengeth and deſerves at our hands, tho' we our ſelves had not been the work of his hands, or the monuments of his ſtrength; How could any Creature engroſs to it ſelf that reverence from us which is due to the powerful Creator, of whom it comes infinitely ſhort in Strength, as well as Wiſdom?

7. From this we have a ground for the belief of the Reſurrection. God aims at the glory of his Power, as well as the glory of any other Attribute. Moſes elſe would not have cull'd out this as the main Argument in his pleading with God, for the ſheathing the Sword which he began to draw out againſt them in the Wilderneſs, Numb. 14. 16. The Nations will ſay, becauſe the Lord was not able to bring theſe people into the Land which he ſware to them, &c. As the finding out the particulars of the duſt of our Bodies diſcovers the vaſtneſs of his Knowledge; ſo to raiſe them, will manifeſt the glory of his Power as much as Creation: Bodies that have moulder'd away into multitudes of Atoms, been reſolved into the Elements, paſſed thro' varieties of changes; been ſometimes the matter to lodge the form of a Plant, or been turned into the ſubſtance of a Fiſh or Fowl, or vapour'd up into a Cloud, and been part of that matter which hath compacted a Thunder-bolt; diſpos'd of in places far diſtant, ſcatter'd by the Winds, ſwallow'd and concocted by Beaſts; for theſe to be called out from their different places of abode, to meet in one Body, and be reſtored to their former Conſiſtency in a marriage union in the twinkling of an eye *, 'tis a Conſideration that may juſtly amaze us; and our ſhallow Underſtandings are too feeble to comprehend it. But is it not credible, ſince all the Diſputes againſt it may be ſilenc'd by reflections on Infinite Power, which nothing can oppoſe, for which nothing can be eſteem'd too difficult to effect, which doth not imply a Contradiction in it ſelf. It was no leſs amazing to the bleſſed Virgin, to hear a Meſſage that ſhe ſhould Conceive a Son without knowing a Man; but ſhe is quickly anſwer'd by the Angel, with a Nothing is impoſſible to God, Luk. 1. 34, 37. The diſtinct parts of our Bodies cannot be hid from his All-ſeeing Eye, where-ever they are lodged, and in all the Changes they paſs through, as was diſcourſed when the Omniſcience of God was handled; ſhall then the collection of them together be too hard for his Invincible Power and Strength, and the uniting all thoſe parts into a Body, with new diſpoſitions, to receive their ſeveral Souls, be too big and bulky for that Power which never yet was acquainted with any bar? Was not the Miracle of our Saviour's multiplying the Loaves, ſuppoſe it had not been by a new Creation, but a collection of Grain from ſeveral parts, very near as ſtupendous as this? Had any one of us been the only Creatures made juſt before the matter of the World, and beheld that inform Chaos covered with a thick darkneſs, mentioned Gen. 1. 2. would not the Report, that from this dark deep, next to nothing, ſhould be rais'd ſuch a multitude of comely Creatures, with ſuch innumerable varieties of Members, Voices, Colours, Motions, and ſuch numbers of ſhining Stars; a bright Sun, one uniform Body of Light from this Darkneſs, that ſhould like a Giant, rejoyce to run a race for many thouſands of years together, without ſtop or wearineſs: Would not all theſe have ſeemed as incredible as the Collection of ſcatter'd Duſt? What was it that erected the innumerable Hoſt of Heaven, the glorious Angels, and glittering Stars, for ought we know, more numerous than the Bodies of Men, but an act of the Divine Will; and ſhall the Power that wrought this, ſink under the Charge of gathering ſome diſpers'd Atoms, and compacting them into a Humane Body? † Can you tell how the Duſt of the ground was kneaded by God into the Body of Man, and changed into Fleſh, Skin, Hair, Bones, Sinews, Veins, Arteries and Blood, and fitted for ſo many ſeveral Activities, when a Humane Soul was breath'd into it? Can you imagine how a Rib taken from Adam's ſide, a lifeleſs Bone, was formed into Head, Hands, Feet, Eyes? Why may not the matter of men which have been, be reſtor'd, as well as that which was not, be firſt erected? Is it harder to repair thoſe things which were, than to create thoſe things which were not? Is there not the ſame Artificer? Hath any Diſeaſe or Sickline's abated his Power? Is the Ancient of days grown feeble; or ſhall the Elements and other Creatures, that alway yet obey'd his Command, ruffle againſt his raiſing Voice, and refuſe to diſgorge thoſe remains of Humane Bodies they have ſwallow'd up in their ſeveral Bowels? Did the whole World, and all the parts of it riſe at his word, and ſhall not ſome parts of the World, the Duſt of the Dead, ſtand up out of the Graves at a word of the ſame mighty Efficacy? Do we not annually ſee thoſe Marks of Power which may ſtun our Incredulity in this concern? Do you ſee in a ſmall Acorn or little Seed, any ſuch ſights, as a Tree with Body, Bark, Branches, Leaves, Flowers, Fruit, where can you find them? Do you know the inviſible Corners where they lurk in that little Body? And yet theſe you afterwards view riſing up from this little Body, when ſown in the Ground, that you could not poſſibly have any proſpect of when you roul'd it in your hand, or open'd its Bowels. And why may not all the particulars of our Bodies, however diſpos'd as to their diſtinct Natures inviſibly to us, remain diſtinct, as well as if you mingle a thouſand Seeds together, they will come up in their diſtinct kinds, and preſerve their diſtinct Vertues?

Again, Is not the making Heaven and Earth, the Union of the Divine and Humane Nature, Eternity and Infirmity, to make a Virgin conceive a Son, bear the Creator, and bring forth the Redeemer, to form the Blood of God of the Fleſh of a Virgin, a greater work than the Calling together and uniting the ſcatter'd parts of our Bodies, which are all of one Nature and Matter? And ſince the Power of God is manifeſted in pardoning innumerable Sins, is not the ſcattering our Tranſgreſſions, as far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, as the expreſſion is, Pſal. 103. 12. and caſting ſuch numbers into the depths of the Sea, which is God's Power over himſelf, a greater Argument of Might, than the recalling and repairing the Atoms of our Bodies from their various receptacles? 'Tis not hard for them to believe this of the Reſurrection, that have been ſenſible of the weight and force of their Sins, and the Power of God in pardoning and vanquiſhing that mighty reſiſtance which was made in their Hearts againſt the the power of his renewing and ſanctifying Grace. The conſideration of the Infinite Power of God, is a good ground of the belief of the Reſurrection.

8. Since the Power of God is ſo great and incomprehenſible, How ſtrange is it that it ſhould be contemned and abuſed by the Creatures as it is? The Power of God is beaten down by ſome, outraged by others, blaſphemed by many under their Sufferings. The ſtripping God of the honour of his Creation, and the glory of his Preſervation of the World, falls under this charge: Thus do they that deny his framing the World alone, or thought the firſt matter was not of God's creation: and ſuch as fancied an Evil Principle, the Author of all Evil, as God is the Author of all Good, and ſo exempt from the Power of God, that it could not be vanquiſh'd by him. Theſe things have formerly found Defenders in the World; but they are in themſelves ridiculous and vain, and have no footing in common Reaſon, and are not worthy of debate in a Chriſtian Auditory.

In General, all Idolatry in the World did ariſe from the want of a due Notion of this Infinite Power. The Heathen thought one God was not ſufficient for the managing all things in the World, and therefore they feign'd ſeveral gods that had ſeveral charges: As Ceres preſided over the Fruits of the Earth; Eſculapius over the Cure of Diſtempers; Mercury for Merchandiſe and Trade; Mars for War and Battels; Apollo and Minerva for Learning and Ingenious Arts; and Fortune for Caſual things. Whence doth the other ſort of Idolatry, the adoring our Bags and Gold, our dependencies on, and truſting in Creatures for help, ariſe, but from Ignorance of God's Power, or mean and ſlender Apprehenſions of it?

Firſt, There is a Contempt of it.
Secondly, An Abuſe of it.

1. 'Tis contemn'd in every Sin, eſpecially in obſtinacy in Sin. All Sin whatſoever is built upon ſome falſe Notion or monſtrous Conception of one or other of God's Perfections, and in particular of this. It includes a ſecret and lurking Imagination, that we are able to grapple with Omnipotence, and enter the liſts with Almightineſs; what elſe can be judged of the Apoſtle's expreſſion, 1 Cor. 10. 22. Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſie, are we ſtronger than he? Do we think we have an Arm too powerful for that Juſtice we provoke, and can repel that Vengeance we exaſperate? Do we think we are an even match for God, and are able to deſpoil him of his Divinity? To deſpiſe his Will, violate his Order, practiſe what he forbids with a ſevere Threatning, and pawns his Power to make it good; is to pretend to have an Arm like God, and be able to thunder with a Voice equal or ſuperior to him, as the expreſſion is Job 40. 9. All Security in Sin is of this ſtrain; When Men are not concerned at Divine Threatnings, nor ſtagger'd in their ſinful Race, they intimate, that the Declarations of Divine Power are but Vain-glorious boaſtings; that God is not ſo ſtrong and able as he reports himſelf to be; and therefore they will venture it, and dare him to try, whether the ſtrength of his Arm be as forcible as the Words of his Mouth are terrible in his Threats; this is to believe themſelves Creators, not Creatures. We magnifie God's Power in our wants, and debaſe it in our Rebellions; as though Omnipotence were only able to ſupply our Neceſſities, and unable to revenge the Injuries we offer him.

2. This Power is Contemn'd in Diſtruſt of God. All Diſtruſt is founded in a doubting of his Truth, as if he would not be as good as his Word; or of his Omniſcience, as if he had not a memory to retain his Word; or of his Power, as if He could not be as great as his Word. We meaſure the Infinite Power of God by the ſhort Line of our Underſtandings, as if Infinite Strength were bounded within the narrow compaſs of our Finite Reaſon; as if He could do no more than we were able to do.

How ſoon did thoſe Iſraelites loſe the remembrance of God's out-ſtretched Arm, when they utter'd that Atheiſtical Speech, Pſal. 78. 9. Can God furniſh a Table in the Wilderneſs? As if he that turned the Duſt of Egypt into Lice, for the puniſhment of their Oppreſſors, could not turn the Duſt of the Wilderneſs into Corn, for the ſupport of their Bodies? As if he that had miraculouſly rebuked the Red Sea, for their Safety, could not provide Bread for their Nouriſhment? Though they had ſeen the Egyptians with loſt Lives in the Morning, in the ſame place where Their Lives had been miraculouſly preſerved in the Evening; yet They diſgrace that Experimented Power, by oppoſing to it the Stature of the Anakims, the Strength of their Cities, and the height of their Walls, Num. 13. 32. and Num. 14. 3. Wherefore hath the Lord brought us into this Land to fall by the Sword? As tho' the Giants of Canaan were too ſtrong for Him, for whom they had ſeen the Armies of Egypt too weak. How did they contract the Almightineſs of God into the littleneſs of a Little man, as if he muſt needs ſink under the Sword of a Canaanite?

This Diſtruſt muſt ariſe either from a flat Atheiſm, a denial of the Being of God, or his Government of the World; or unworthy Conceits of a Weakneſs in him, that he had made Creatures too hard for himſelf; that he were not ſtrong enough to grapple with thoſe mighty Anakims, and give them the poſſeſſion of Canaan againſt ſo great a Force. Diſtruſt of him implies either, that he was alway deſtitute of Power, or that his Power is exhauſted by his former Works, or that it is limited, and near a Period: 'Tis to deny him to be the Creator that moulded Heaven and Earth. Why ſhould we by Diſtruſt put a ſlight upon that Power which he hath ſo often expreſt, and which in the minuteſt Works of his hands ſurmount the force of the ſharpeſt Underſtanding?

3. 'Tis Contemn'd in too great a fear of Man which ariſeth from a diſtruſt of Divine Power. Fear of Man, is a crediting the Might of Man with a diſrepute of the Arm of God; it takes away the glory of his Might, and renders the Creature ſtronger than God, and God feebler than a Mortal; as if the Arm of Man were a Rod of Iron, and the Arm of God a brittle Reed. How often do Men tremble at the Threatnings and Hectorings of Ruffians, yet will ſtand as Stakes againſt the Precepts and Threatnings of God, as though he had leſs Power to preſerve us, than Enemies had to deſtroy? With what diſdain doth God ſpeak to Men infected with this Humour? Iſa. 51. 12, 13. Who art thou, that art afraid of a Man that ſhall die, and of the Son of Man that ſhall be made as graſs; and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker, that hath ſtretched forth the Heavens, and laid the foundation of the Earth; and haſt feared continually every day, becauſe of the fury of the Oppreſſor?

To fear Man, that is as Graſs, that cannot think a Thought without a Divine concourſe, that cannot breath, but by a Divine Power, nor touch a Hair without Licenſe firſt granted from Heaven: This is a forgetfulneſs, and conſequently a ſlight of that Infinite Power, which hath been manifeſted in founding the Earth and garniſhing the Heavens. All Fear of Man, in the way of our Duty, doth in ſome ſort thruſt out the remembrance, and diſcredit the great Actions of the Creator. Would not a Mighty Prince think it a Diſparagement to him, if his Servant ſhould decline his Command for fear of one of his Subjects? And hath not the Great God juſt cauſe to think himſelf diſgrac'd by us, when we deny him Obedience for fear of a Creature: As though he had but an Infant ability too feeble to bear us out in Duty, and uncapable to ballance the ſtrength of an Arm of Fleſh?

4. 'Tis Contemn'd by truſting in our ſelves, in Means, in Man, more than in God. When in any Diſtreſs we will try every Creature-refuge, before we have recourſe to God; and when we apply our ſelves to him, we do it with ſuch ſlight and perfunctory frames, and with ſo much deſpondency, as if we deſpair'd either of his Ability or Will to help us; and implore him with cooler Affections, than we ſollicite Creatures: Or, when in a Diſeaſe we depend upon the vertue of the Medicine, the ability of the Phyſician, and reflect not upon that Power that endued the Medicine with that vertue, and ſupports the quality in it, and concurs to the operation of it. When we depend upon the activity of the Means, as if they had power originally in themſelves, and not derivatively; and do not eye the Power of God animating and aſſiſting them. We cannot expect relief from any thing with a neglect of God, but we render it in our Thoughts more powerful than God: We acknowledge a greater fulneſs in a ſhallow Stream, than in an Eternal Spring; we do in effect depoſe the true God, and create to our ſelves a new one; we aſſert by ſuch a kind of acting, the Creature, if not ſuperior, yet equal with God, and independent on him. When we truſt in our own ſtrength, without begging his Aſſiſtance, or boaſt of our own ſtrength, without acknowledging his concurrence, as the Aſſyrian; By the ſtrength of my hand have I done this, I have put down the Inhabitants like a valiant man, Iſa. 10.13. 'Tis as if the Ax ſhould boaſt it ſelf againſt him that hews therewith, and thinks it ſelf more mighty than the Arm that weilds it, Verſ. 15, when we truſt in others more than in God. Thus God upbraids thoſe by the Prophet that ſought help from Egypt, telling them, Iſa. 31. 3. The Egyptians were men, and not gods; intimating, that by their dependance on them, they render'd them gods, and not Men, and advanc'd them from the ſtate of Creatures to that of Almighty Deities. 'Tis to ſet a Pile of Duſt, a heap of Aſhes, above Him that created and preſerves the World. To truſt in a Creature, is to make it as Infinite as God; to do that which is impoſſible in it ſelf to be done. God himſelf cannot make a Creature infinite, for that were to make him God.

'Tis alſo contemn'd when we aſcribe what we receive to the Power of Inſtruments, and not to the Power of God. Men, in whatſoever they do for us, are but the Tools whereby the Creator works. Is it not a diſgrace to the Limner to admire his Penſil, and not himſelf; to the Artificer, to admire his File and Engines, and not his Power? 'Tis not I, ſaith Paul, that labour, but the Grace, the efficacious Grace, of God which is in me. Whatſoever good we do is from him, not from our ſelves; to aſcribe it to our ſelves, or to Inſtruments, is to overlook and contemn his Power.

5. Unbelief of the Goſpel is a contempt and diſowning Divine Power. This Perfection hath been diſcover'd in the Conception of Chriſt, the union of the two Natures, his Reſurrection from the Grave, the Reſtoration of the World, and the Converſion of Men, more than in the Creation of the World: Then what a diſgrace is Unbelief to all that Power, that ſo ſeverely puniſh'd the Jews for the rejecting the Goſpel; turn'd ſo many Nations from their beloved Superſtitions; humbled the Power of Princes and the Wiſdom of Philoſophers; chas'd Devils from their Temples, by the weakneſs of Fiſhermen; planted the Standard of the Goſpel, againſt the common Notions and inveterate Cuſtoms of the World? What a diſgrace is Unbelief to this Power which hath preſerved Chriſtianity from being extinguiſh'd by the force of Men and Devils, and kept it flouriſhing in the midſt of Sword, Fire, and Executioners; that hath made the Simplicity of the Goſpel overpower the Eloquence of Orators, and multiply'd it from the aſhes of Martyrs, when it was deſtitute of all Humane Aſſiſtances? Not heartily to believe and embrace that Doctrine, which hath been attended with ſuch marks of Power, is a high reflection upon this Divine Perfection, ſo highly manifeſted in the firſt publication, propagation, and preſervation of it.

II. The power of God is abuſed, as well as contemned.

1. When we make uſe of it to juſtifie Contradictions. The Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is an abuſe of this Power. When the Maintainers of it cannot anſwer the Abſurdities alledg'd againſt it, they have recourſe to the Power of God. It implies a Contradiction, that the ſame Body ſhould be on Earth and in Heaven at the ſame inſtant of time; that it ſhould be at the Right Hand of God, and in the Mouth and Stomach of a Man; that it ſhould be a Body of Fleſh, and yet Bread to the Eye and to the Taſte; that it ſhould be Viſible and Inviſible, a glorious Body, and yet gnawn by the Teeth of a Creature; that it ſhould be multiplied in a Thouſand places, and yet an entire Body in every one, where there is no Member to be ſeen, no Fleſh to be taſted; that it ſhould be above us in the higheſt Heavens, and yet within us in our lower Bowels: Such Contradictions as theſe are an Abuſe of the Power of God.

Again, We abuſe this Power when we believe every idle Story that is reported, becauſe God is able to make it ſo, if he pleaſed. We may as well believe Æſop's Fables to be true, that Birds ſpake, and Beaſts reaſoned, becauſe the Power of God can enable ſuch Creatures to ſuch acts. God's Power is not the Rule of our Belief of a thing without the exerciſe of it in matter of Fact, and the declaration of it upon ſufficient Evidence.

2. The Power of God is abus'd, by preſuming on it, without uſing the means he hath appointed. When Men ſit with folded Arms, and make a Confidence in his Power, a glorious Title to their Idleneſs and Diſobedience; they would have his Strength do all, and his Precept ſhould move them to do nothing; this is a truſt of his Power againſt his Command, a pretended glorifying his Power with a ſlight of his Sovereignty. Though God be Almighty, yet for the moſt part he exerciſeth his Might in giving life and ſucceſs to Second Cauſes and lawful Endeavours. When we ſtay in the Mouth of Danger, without any Call ordering us to continue, and againſt a Door of Providence open'd for our reſcue, and ſanctuary our ſelves in the Power of God without any Promiſe, without any Providence conducting us; this is not to glorifie the Divine Might, but to neglect it, in neglecting the means which his Power affords to us for our eſcape: *To condemn it to our humors; to work Miracles for us according to our wills, and againſt his own. God could have ſent a Worm to be Herod's Executioner, when he ſought the life of our Saviour, or imploy'd an Angel from Heaven to have tied his hands or ſtopt his breath, and not put Joſeph upon a flight to Egypt with our Saviour; yet had it not been an abuſe of the Power of God, for Joſeph to have neglected the Precept, and ſlighted the Means God gave him for the the preſerving his own life and that of the Childs? Chriſt himſelf, when the Jews conſulted to deſtroy him, preſum'd not upon the Power of God to ſecure him, but uſed ordinary means for his preſervation, by walking no more openly, but retiring himſelf into a City near the Wilderneſs till the hour was come, and the Call of his Father manifeſt †. A raſh running upon Danger, though for the Truth it ſelf, is a preſuming upon, and conſequently an abuſe of this Power; a proud challenging it to ſerve our turns againſt the Authority of his Will, and the Force of his Precept: A not reſting in his Ordinate Power, but demanding his Abſolute Power to pleaſure our Follies and Preſumptions; concluding and expecting more from it than what is authoriz'd by his Will.

† John 11. 53, 54.

2. Inſtruction. If Infinite Power be a peculiar Property of God, How miſerable will all wicked Rebels be under this Power of God? Men may break his Laws, but not impair his Arm; they may ſlight his Word, but cannot reſiſt his Power. If he ſwear that he will ſweep a place with the Beſom of Deſtruction, As he hath thought, ſo ſhall it come to paſs; and as he hath purpoſed, ſo ſhall it ſtand, Iſa. 14. 23, 24. Rebels againſt an Earthly Prince may exceed him in ſtrength, and be more powerful than their Soveraign: None can equal God, much leſs exceed him. As none can exerciſe an act of hoſtility againſt him without his permiſſive Will, ſo none can ſtruggle from under his hand without his poſitive Will. He hath an Arm not to be moved, a Hand not to be wrung aſide. God is repreſented on his Throne like a Jaſper Stone, Rev. 4. 3. as one of Invincible Power when he comes to Judge; the Jaſper is a Stone which withſtands the greateſt Force *. Though Men reſiſt the order of his Laws, they cannot reſiſt the Sentence of their puniſhment, nor the execution of it. None can any more exempt themſelves from the Arm of his Strength, than they can from the Authority of his Dominion. As they muſt bow to his Sovereignty, ſo they muſt ſink under his Force. A Priſoner in this World may make his eſcape, but a Priſoner in the World to come cannot; Job 10. 7. There is none that can deliver out of thine hand. There is none to deliver when he tears in pieces, Pſal. 50. 22. His Strength is uncontroulable; hence his Throne is repreſented as a Fiery flame, Dan. 7. 9. As a ſpark of Fire hath power to kindle one thing after another, and encreaſe till it conſumes a Forreſt, a City, ſwallow up all combuſtible Matter, till it conſumes a World, and many Worlds, if they were in Being. What power hath a Tree to reſiſt the Fire, though it ſeems mighty when it outbraves the Winds? What Man to this day hath been able to free himſelf from that Chain of Death, God clapt upon him for his Revolt? And if he be too feeble to reſcue himſelf from a Temporal, much leſs from an Eternal Death. The Devils have to this minute groaned under the Pile of Wrath, without any ſucceſs in delivering themſelves by all their ſtrength, which much ſurmounts all the ſtrength of Mankind, nor have they any hopes to work their reſcue to Eternity.

* Grot. in loc.

How fooliſh is every Sinner? Can we poor Worms ſtrut it out againſt Infinite Power? We cannot reſiſt the meaneſt Creatures when God commiſſions them, and puts a Sword into their hands. They will not, no not the Worms, be ſtartled at the glory of a King, when they have their Creator's Warrant to be his Executioners *. Who can withſtand him, when he commands the Waves and Inundations of the Sea to leap over the Shore; when he divides the Ground in Earthquakes, and makes it gape wide to ſwallow the Inhabitants of it; when the Air is corrupted to breed Peſtilences; when Storms and Showers, unſeaſonably falling, putrifie the Fruits of the Earth; what created Power can mend the matter, and with a prevailing Voice ſay to him, What doſt thou?

* Acts 12. 23.

There are two Attributes God will make glitter in Hell to the full, his Wrath and his Power, Rom. 9. 22. What if God willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much Long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction? If it were meer Wrath, and no Power to ſecond it, it were not ſo terrible; but 'tis Wrath and Power, both are joyn'd together: 'Tis not only a ſharp Sword, but a powerful Arm; and not only that, for then it were well for the damned Creature, To have many ſharp blows, and from a ſtrong Arm; this may be without putting forth the higheſt ſtrength a Man hath: But in this God makes it his deſign to make his Power known and conſpicuous; He takes the Sword (as it were) in both hands, that he may ſhew the ſtrength of his Arm in ſtriking the harder blow; and therefore the Apoſtle calls it, 2 Theſſ. 1. 9. the Glory of his Power, which puts a Sting into this Wrath; and it is called, Rev. 19. 15, the fierceneſs of the wrath of the Almighty. God will do it in ſuch a manner, as to make Men ſenſible of his Almightineſs in every ſtroke. How great muſt that Vengeance be, that is back'd by all the Strength of God? When there will be a powerful Wrath without a powerful Compaſſion; when all his Power ſhall be exerciſed in Puniſhing, and not the leaſt mite of it exercis'd in Pitying; how irreſiſtible will be the load of ſuch a weighty Hand? How can the duſt of the Ballance break the mighty Bars, or get out of the Liſts of a powerful Vengeance, or hope for any grain of Comfort? Oh, that every obſtinate Sinner would think of this, and conſider his unmeaſurable boldneſs in thinking himſelf able to grapple with Omnipotence! What force can any have to reſiſt the preſence of him, before whom Rocks melt, and the Heavens at length ſhall be ſhrivel'd up as a Parchment by the laſt Fire? As the Light of God's Face is too dazling to be beheld by us; ſo the Arm of his Power is too mighty to be oppoſed by us. His Almightineſs is above the reach of our Potſheard ſtrength, as his Infiniteneſs is above the capacity of our purblind Underſtandings. God were not Omnipotent, if his Power could be render'd ineffectual by any.

Uſe II. Comfort.

A Second Uſe of this Point from the Conſideration of the Infinite Power of God, is of Comfort. As Omnipotence is an Ocean that cannot be fathom'd; ſo the Comforts from it are ſtreams that cannot be exhauſted. What Joy can be wanting to him that finds himſelf folded in the Arms of Omnipotence?

This Perfection is made over to Believers in the Covenant, as well as any other Attribute; I am the Lord your God; therefore that Power which is as eſſential to the Godhead as any other Perfection of his Nature, is in the rights and extent of it aſſur'd unto you. Nay, we may not ſay, it is made over more than any other, becauſe it is that which animates every other Perfection, and is the Spirit that gives them Motion and Appearance in the World. If God had expreſt himſelf in particular, as, I am a True God, a Wiſe God, a Loving God, a Righteous God, I am yours; what would all or any of thoſe have ſignified, unleſs the other alſo had been imply'd, as, I am an Almighty God, I am your God? In God's making over himſelf in any particular Attribute, this of his Power is included in every one, without which all his other Grants would be inſignificant. 'Tis a Comfort that Power is in the hand of God; it can never be better placed, for he can never uſe his Power to injure his confiding Creature:

ture: If it were in our own hands, we might uſe it to injure our ſelves. 'Tis a Power in the hand of an indulgent Father, not a hard-hearted Tyrant: 'Tis a juſt Power, His right hand is full of Righteouſneſs, Pſal. 48. 10. becauſe of his Righteouſneſs he can never uſe it ill, and becauſe of his Wiſdom he can never uſe it unſeaſonably. Men that have ſtrength, often miſplace the actings of it, becauſe of their Folly; and ſometimes imploy it to baſe ends, becauſe of their Wickedneſs: But this Power in God is alway awaken'd by Goodneſs, and conducted by Wiſdom; 'tis never exercis'd by Self-will and Paſſion, but according to the Immutable Rule of his own Nature, which is Righteouſneſs. How Comfortable is it to think that you have a God that can do what he pleaſes; nothing ſo difficult but he can effect, nothing ſo ſtrong but he can over-rule? You need not dread Men, ſince you have One to reſtrain them; nor fear Devils, ſince you have One to chain them: No Creature but is acted by this Power; no Creature but muſt fall upon the withdrawing of this Power. It was not all laid out in Creation: 'Tis not weaken'd by his preſervation of things; he hath yet a fulneſs of Power, and a reſidue of Spirit: For whom ſhould that Eternal Arm of the Lord be diſplay'd, and that Incomprehenſible Thunder of his Power be ſhot out, but for thoſe for whoſe ſake, and for whoſe comfort, it is revealed in his Word?

In Particular,

1. Here is Comfort in all Afflictions and Diſtreſſes. Our Evils can never be ſo great to oppreſs us, as his Power is great to deliver us. The ſame Power that brought a World out of a Chaos, and conſtituted, and hath hitherto preſerved the regular Motion of the Stars, can bring Order out of our Confuſions, and Light out of our Darkneſs. When our Saviour was in the greateſt diſtreſs, and beheld the Face of his Father frowning, while he was upon the Croſs, in his Complaint to him he exerciſeth Faith upon his Power, Matth. 27. 46. Eli, Eli; My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? that is, My ſtrong, my ſtrong; El is a Name of Power belonging to God: He comforts himſelf in his Power while he complains of his Frowns. Follow his pattern, and forget not that Power that can ſcatter the Clouds, as well as gather them together. The Pſalmiſt's ſupport in his Diſtreſs was in the Creative Power of God, Pſal. 121. 2. My help comes from the Lord which made Heaven and Earth.

2. 'Tis Comfort in all ſtrong and ſtirring Corruptions and mighty Temptations. 'Tis by this we may arm our ſelves, and be ſtrong in the power of his might, Epheſ. 6. 10. By this we may conquer Principalities and Powers as dreadful as Hell, but not ſo mighty as Heaven. By this we may triumph over Luſts within, too ſtrong for an Arm of Fleſh. By this the Devils that have poſſeſſed us may be caſt out; the batter'd Walls of our Souls may be repaired, and the Sons of Anak laid flat. That Power that brought Light out of Darkneſs, and over-maſter'd the deformity of the Chaos, and ſet bounds to the Ocean, and dried up the Red Sea by a Rebuke, can quell the Tumults in our Spirits, and level Spiritual Goliahs by his Word. When the Diſciples heard the terrifying Speech of our Saviour, concerning Rich men, that it was eaſier for a Camel to go through the Eye of a Needle, than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God, Matth. 19. 24. to entertain the Goſpel, which commanded Self-denial; and that, becauſe of the Alurements of the World, and the ſtrong Habits in their Soul; Chriſt refers them to the Power of God, Verſe 26. who could expel thoſe ill Habits, and plant good ones; with Men this is impoſſible, but with God all all things are poſſible. There is no reſiſtance but he can ſurmount; no ſtrong Hold but he can demoliſh; no Tower, but he can level.

3. 'Tis Comfort from hence, that all Promiſes ſhall be performed. Goodneſs is ſufficient to make a Promiſe, but Power is neceſſary to perform a Promiſe. Men that are honeſt, cannot often make good their words, becauſe ſomething may intervene that may ſhorten their Ability; but nothing can diſable God, without diminiſhing his Godhead. He hath an Infiniteneſs of Power to accompliſh his Word, as well as an Infiniteneſs of Goodneſs to make and utter his Word. That Might whereby he made Heaven and Earth, and his keeping Truth for ever, are joyn'd together, Pſal. 146. 5, 6. His Father's Faithfulneſs, and His Creative Power, are link'd together. 'Tis upon this Baſis the Covenant, and every part of it, is eſtabliſh'd, and ſtands as firm as the Almightineſs of God, whereby he ſprung up the Earth, and rear'd the Heavens. No power can reſiſt his will, Rom. 9. 19. Who can diſanul his purpoſe, and turn back his hand when it is ſtretched out? Iſa. 14. 27. His Word is unalterable, and his Power is invincible. He could not deceive himſelf, for he knew his own ſtrength when he promiſed: No unexpected event can change his Reſolution, becauſe nothing can happen without the compaſs of his Foreſight. No Created Strength can ſtop him in his Action, becauſe all Creatures are ready to ſerve him at his Command; not the Devils in Hell, nor all the Wicked Men on Earth, ſince he hath ſtrength to reſtrain them, and an Arm to puniſh them. What can be too hard for him that created Heaven and Earth? Hence it was, that when God promiſed any thing anciently to his People, he uſed often the Name of the Almighty, the Lord that created Heaven and Earth, as that which was an undeniable Anſwer to any Objection, againſt any thing that might be made againſt the greatneſs and ſtupendiouſneſs of any Promiſe; by that Name in all his Works of Grace was he known to them, Exod. 6. 3. When we are ſure of his Will, we need not queſtion his Strength, ſince he never over-engageth himſelf above his Ability. He that could not be reſiſted by nothing in Creation, nor vanquiſh'd by Devils in Redemption, can never want Power to glorifie his Faithfulneſs in his Accompliſhment of whatſoever he hath promiſed.

4. From this Infiniteneſs of Power in God, we have ground of Aſſurance for Perſeverance. Since Converſion is reſembled to the Works of Creation and Reſurrection, two great Marks of his Strength, he doth not ſurely employ himſelf in the firſt work of Changing the Heart, to let any Created ſtrength baffle that Power which he began and intends to glorifie. It was this Might that ſtruck off the Chain, and expell'd that ſtrong one that poſſeſſed you. What if you are too weak to keep him out of his loſt poſſeſſion, will God loſe the glory of his firſt ſtrength, by ſuffering his foiled Adverſary to make a re-entry, and regain his former uſurpation? His Out-ſtretched Arm will not do leſs by his Spiritual, than it did by his National Iſrael: It guarded them all the way to Canaan, and left them not to ſhift for themſelves, after he had ſtruck off the Fetters of Egypt, and buried their Enemies in the Red Sea, Deut. 1. 31. This Greatneſs of the Father above all, our Saviour makes the ground of Believers continuance for ever, againſt the blaſts of Hell and Engines of the World, John 10. 29. My Father is greater than all, and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hands. Our keeping is not in our own weak hands, but in the hands of him who is mighty to ſave. That Power of God keeps us which intends our Salvation. In all fears of falling away, ſhelter your ſelves in the Power of God: He ſhall be holden up, ſaith the Apoſtle, ſpeaking concerning one weak in Faith; and no other Reaſon is rendred by him but this, for God is able to make him to ſtand, Rom. 14. 4.

5. From this Attribute of the Infinite Power of God, we have a ground of comfort in the loweſt eſtate of the Church. Let the ſtate of the Church be never ſo deplorable, the condition never ſo deſperate, that Power that created the World, and ſhall raiſe the Bodies of Men, can create a happy ſtate for the Church, and raiſe her from an overwhelming Grave: Though the Enemies trample upon her, they cannot upon the Arm that holds her, which by the leaſt motion of it, can lift her up above the heads of her Adverſaries, and make them feel the thunder of that Power that none can underſtand: By the blaſt of God they periſh, and by the breath of his Noſtrils they are conſumed, Job 4.9. they ſhall be ſcattered as Chaff before the wind: If once he draw his hand out of his boſom, all muſt *Pſal. 74.11. fly before him, or ſink under him *: And when there is none to help, his own Arm ſuſtains him, and † Iſa. 63.5. brings ſalvation †, and his fury doth uphold him. What if the Church totter under the underminings of Hell? What if it hath a ſad Heart and wet Eyes? In what a little moment can he make the night turn into day, and make the Jews that were preparing for death in Shuſhan, triumph over the Necks of their Enemies, and march in one hour with Swords in their hands, that expected the laſt hour ropes about their necks? Eſth. 9.1,5. If Iſrael be purſued by Pharaoh, the Sea ſhall open its arms to protect them: If they be thirſty, a Rock ſhall ſpout out water to refreſh them: If they be hungry, Heaven ſhall be their Granary for Manna: If Jeruſalem be beſieg'd, and hath not force enough to encounter Senacherib, an Angel ſhall turn the Camp into an Aceldema, a Field of Blood. His People ſhall not want deliverances, till God want a Power of working Miracles, for their ſecurity: He is more jealous of his Power, than the Church can be of her Safety. And if we ſhould want other Arguments to preſs him, we may implore him by virtue of his Power: For when there is nothing in the Church as a Motive to him to ſave it, there is enough in his own Name, and the illuſtration of his Power, Pſal. 106. 8. Who can grapple with the Omnipotency of that God, who is jealous of, and zealous for the honour of it? And therefore God, for the moſt part, takes ſuch opportunities to deliver, wherein his Almightineſs may be moſt conſpicuous, and his Counſels moſt admirable. He awakened not himſelf to deliver Iſrael, till they were upon the brink of the Red Sea; nor to reſcue the three Children, till they were in the fiery Furnace; nor Daniel, till he was in the Lions Den. 'Tis in the weakneſs of his Creature that his ſtrength is perfected; not in a way of addition of perfectneſs to it, but in a way of manifeſtation of the perfection of it. As it is the perfection of the Sun to ſhine and enlighten the World, not that the Sun receives an increaſe of light by the darting of his Beams, but diſcovers his Glory to the admiration of Men, and pleaſure of the World. If it were not for ſuch occaſions, the World would not regard the Mightineſs of God, nor know what Power were in him. It traverſes the Stage in its fulneſs and liveline upon ſuch occaſions, when the Enemies are ſtrong, and their ſtrength edg'd with an intenſe hatred, and but little time between the contrivance and execution. 'Tis the great comfort that the loweſt Diſtreſſes of the Church are a fit Scene for the diſcovery of this Attribute, and that the Glory of God's Omnipotence, and the Churches Security, are ſo ſtraitly linkt together. 'Tis a promiſe that will never be forgotten by God, and ought never to be forgotten by us, that in this Mountain, the hand of the Lord ſhall reſt ‖; that is, the Power of the Lord ſhall ‖ Iſa. 25.10. abide; and Moab ſhall be trodden under him, even as Straw is trodden down for the Dunghil. And the Plagues of Babylon ſhall come in one day, death and mourning, and famine; for ſtrong is the Lord who judges her, Rev. 18. 8.

Uſe III.

The Third Uſe is for Exhortation.

1. Meditate on this Power of God, and preſs it often upon your Minds. We conclude many things of God that we do not practically ſuck the comfort of, for want of deep thoughts of it, and frequent inſpection into it. We believe God to be true, yet diſtruſt him; we acknowledge him powerful, yet fear the motion of every ſtraw. Many Truths, though aſſented to in our Underſtandings, are kept under hatches by corrupt Affections, and have not their due influence, becauſe they are not brought forth into the open Air of our Souls by Meditation. If we will but ſearch our hearts, we ſhall find it is the Power of God we often doubt of. When the heart of Ahaz and his Subjects trembled at the Combination of the Syrian and Iſraelitiſh Kings againſt him, for want of a confidence in the Power of God, God ſends his Prophet with Commiſſion to work a miraculous ſign at his own choice, to rear up his fainting heart; and when he refus'd to ask a ſign out of diffidence of that Almighty Power, the Prophet complains of it as an affront to his Maſter *. Moſes ſo great a Friend of God, was o- * Iſa. 7.12, 13. vertaken with this kind of Unbelief, after all the Experiments of God's miraculous Acts in Egypt; the Anſwer God gives him, manifeſts this to be at the Core: Is the Lord's hand waxed ſhort? Numb. 11.23.

For want of actuated Thoughts of this, we are many times turned from our known Duty by the blaſt of a Creature; as though Man had more power to diſmay us, than God hath to ſupport us in his commanded way. The belief of God's Power is one of the firſt ſteps to all Religion; without ſettled Thoughts of it, we cannot pray lively and believingly, for the obtaining the Mercies we want, or the averting the Evils we fear; we ſhould not love him, unleſs we are perſwaded he hath a Power to bleſs us; nor fear him, unleſs we were perſwaded of his Power to puniſh us. The frequent thoughts of this would render our Faith more ſtable, and our Hopes more ſtedfaſt; it would make us more feeble to ſin, and more careful to obey. When the Virgin ſtagger'd at the Meſſage of the Angel, that ſhe ſhould bear a Son, he in his Anſwer turns her to the Creative Power of God, Luke 1. 35. The Power of the higheſt ſhall over-ſhadow thee. Which ſeems to be in alluſion to the Spirits moving upon the face of the Deep, and bringing a comely World out of a confus'd Maſs. Is it harder for God to make a Virgin conceive a Son by the power of his Spirit, than to make a World? Why doth he reveal himſelf ſo often under the Title of Almighty, and preſs it upon us, but that we ſhould preſs it upon our ſelves? And ſhall we be forgetful of that, which every thing about us, every thing within us is a mark of? How come we by a power of ſeeing and hearing, a faculty and act of Underſtanding and Will, but by this Power framing us, this Power aſſiſting us? What though the Thunder of his Power cannot be underſtood, no more can any other perfection of his Nature; ſhall we therefore ſeldom think of it? The Sea cannot be fathom'd, yet the Merchant excuſeth not himſelf from ſailing upon the Surface of it. We cannot glorifie God, without due conſideration of this Attribute, for his Power is his Glory as much as any other, and called both by the Name of Glory, Rom. 6. 4.

ſpeaking of Chriſt's Reſurrection by the Glory of the Father; and alſo the riches of his Glory, Eph. 3. 16. Thoſe that have ſtrong Temptations in their courſe and over-preſſing Corruptions in their hearts, have need to think of it out of Intereſt, ſince nothing but this can relieve them. Thoſe that have experimented the working of it in their new Creation, are oblig'd to think of it out of gratitude. It was this mighty Power over himſelf that gave riſe to all that pardoning Grace already conferred, or hereafter expected; without it our Souls had been conſum'd, the World overturned; we could not have expected a happy Heaven, but have lain yelling in an Eternal Hell; had not the power of his Mercy exceeded that of his Juſtice, and his Infinite Power executed what his Infinite Wiſdom had contrived for our Redemption. How much alſo ſhould we be raiſ'd in our Admirations of God, and raviſh our ſelves in contemplating that Might that can raiſe innumerable Worlds in thoſe Infinite imaginary Spaces without this Globe of Heaven and Earth, and exceed unconceivably what he hath done in the Creation of this?

2. From the preſſing the conſideration of this upon our ſelves, Let us be induc'd to truſt God upon the account of his Power. The main end of the revelation of his power to the Patriarchs, and of the miraculous Operations of it in Egypt, was to induce them to an entire repoſing themſelves in God: And the Pſalmiſt doth ſcarce ſpeak of the Divine Omnipotence without making this Inference from it; and ſcarce exhorts to a truſt in God, but backs it with a Conſideration of his Power in Creation, it being the chief ſupport of the Soul, Pſal. 146. 1. Happy is he whoſe hope is in the Lord his God, which made Heaven and Earth, the Sea and all that therein is. That Power is invincible that drew the World out of nothing: Nothing can happen to us harder than the making the World without the concurrence of Inſtruments: No difficulty can nonplus that ſtrength, that hath drawn all things out of nothing, or out of a confus'd Matter next to nothing: No power can rifle what we commit to him, 2 Tim. 1. 12. He is all Power, above the reach of all Power; all other powers in the World flowing from him, or depending on him. He is worthy to be truſted, ſince we know him true, without ever breaking his word, and Omnipotent, never failing of his purpoſe; and a confidence in it is the chief act whereby we can glorifie this Power, and credit his Arm. A ſtrong God, and a weak Faith in Omnipotence, do not ſute well together. Indeed we are more engaged to a truſt in Divine Power than the Ancient Patriarchs were: They had the Verbal Declaration of his Power, and many of them little other Evidence of it, than in the Creation of the World; and their Faith in God being eſtabliſh'd in this firſt diſcovery of his Omnipotence, drew out it ſelf further to believe, That whatſoever God promiſed by his Word, he was able to perform, as well as the Creation of the World out of nothing; which ſeems to be the intendment of the Apoſtle, Hebr. 11. 3. Not barely to ſpeak of the Creation of the World by God, which was a thing the Hebrews underſtood well enough from their Ancient Oracles; but to ſhew the Foundation of the Patriarchs Faith, viz. God making the World by his Word, and what uſe they made of the Diſcovery of his Power in that, to lead them to believe the promiſe of God concerning the Seed of the Woman to be brought into the World. But we have not only the ſame Foundation, but ſuperadded Demonſtrations of this Attribute in the Conception of our Saviour, the Union of the two Natures, the glorious Redemption, the Propagation of the Goſpel, and the new Creation of the World. They relied upon the naked Power of God, without thoſe more illuſtrious Appearances of it, which have been in the Ages ſince, and arriv'd to our notice: We have the wonderful Effects of that which they had but obſcure Expectations of.

1. Conſider, Truſt in God can never be without taking in God's power as a concurrent Foundation with his Truth. 'Tis the main ground of Truſt, and ſo ſet forth in the Prophet, Iſai. 26. 4. Truſt ye in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength. And the Faith of the Ancients ſo recommended Heb. 11. had this chiefly for its ground; and the Faith in Goſpel-times is called a Truſting on his Arm, Iſai. 51. 5. All the Attributes of God are the Objects of our Veneration, but they do not equally contribute to the producing Truſt in our hearts; his Eternity, Simplicity, Infiniteneſs raviſh and aſtoniſh our Minds when we conſider them: But there is no immediate tendency in their Nature to allure us to a confidence in him, no not in an innocent State; much leſs in a laps'd and revolted Condition: But the other Perfections of his Nature, as his Holineſs, Righteouſneſs, Mercy, are amiable to us in regard of the immediate Operations of them upon and about the Creature, and ſo have ſomething in their own Nature to allure us to repoſe our ſelves in him: But yet thoſe cannot engage to an intire truſt in him, without reflecting upon his Ability, which can only render thoſe uſeful and ſucceſsful to the Creature. For whatſoever Bars ſtand in the way of his holy, righteous, and merciful Proceedings towards his Creatures, are not over-maſter'd by thoſe Perfections, but by that Strength of his which can only relieve us in concurrence with the other Attributes. How could his Mercy ſuccour us without his Arm, or his Wiſdom guide us without his Hand, or his Truth perform Promiſes to us without his ſtrength? As no Attribute can act without it, ſo in our Addreſſes to him upon the account of any particular Perfection in the Godhead according to our Indigency, one Eye muſt be perpetually fixed upon this of his Power; and our Faith would be feeble and diſpirited without eying this: Without this, his Holineſs, which hates Sin, would not be regarded; and his Mercy, pitying a grieving Sinner, would not be valued. As this Power is the ground of a wicked man's Fear, ſo it is the ground of a good man's Truſt. This was that which was the principal ſupport of Abraham, not barely his Promiſe, but his Ability to make it good, Rom. 4. 21. And when he was commanded to ſacrifice Iſaac, the ability of God to raiſe him up again, Heb. 11. 19. All Faith would droop, and be in the mire, without leaning upon this. All thoſe Attributes which we conſider as Moral in God, would have no influence upon us, without this, which we conſider Phyſically in God. Though we value the kindneſs Men may expreſs to us in our Diſtreſſes, yet we make them not the Objects of our confidence, unleſs they have an ability to act what they expreſs. There can be no truſt in God without an eye to his Power.

Amyraut. Moral. Tom. 5. p. 170.

2. Sometimes the Power of God is the ſole Object of Truſt. As when we have no promiſe to aſſure us of his Will, we have nothing elſe to pitch upon but his Ability; and that not his abſolute Power, but his ordinate, in the way of his Providence; we muſt not truſt in it ſo, as to expect he ſhould pleaſe our humour with freſh Miracles, but reſt upon his Power, and leave the manner to his Will. Aſa when ready to Conflict with the vaſt Ethiopian Army, pleaded nothing elſe but this Power of God *. And the three Children, who had no particular promiſe of Deliverance (that we read of) ſtuck to God's Ability to preſerve them againſt the King's threatning, and own'd it in the face of the King, yet with ſome kind of inward intimations in their own Spirits that he would alſo deliver them; Dan. 3. 17. Our God whom we ſerve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery Furnace. And accordingly the Fire burnt the Cords that tied them, without ſinging any thing elſe about them. But when this Power hath been exercis'd upon like occaſions, 'tis a Preſident he hath given us to reſt upon. Preſidents in Law are good Pleas, and ſtrong Encouragements to the Client to expect Succeſs in his Sute. Our Fathers truſted in thee, and thou didſt deliver them, ſaith David, Pſal. 22. 4. And Jehoſaphat in a caſe of diſtreſs, 2 *Chron.*20. 7. Art not thou our God, that didſt drive out the Inhabitants of this Land before thy People Iſrael? When we have not any Statute Law and Promiſe to plead, we may plead his Power, together with the former Preſidents and Acts of it. The Centurion had nothing elſe to act his Faith upon, but the Power of Chriſt, and ſome Evidences of it in the Miracles reported of him; but he is ſilent in the latter, and caſts himſelf only upon the former, acknowledging that Chriſt had the ſame command over Diſeaſes, as himſelf had over his Soldiers *. And our Saviour, when he receives the petition of the blind men, requires no more of them in order to a Cure, but a belief of his Ability to perform it; Matth. 9. 28. Believe you that I am able to do this? His Will is not known but by Revelation, but his Power is apprehended by Reaſon, as eſſentially and eternally linkt with the Notion of a God. God alſo is jealous of the Honour of this Attribute; and ſince it is ſo much virtually diſcredited, he is pleaſed when any do cordially own it, and intirely reſign themſelves to the aſſiſtance of it.

* 2 Chron. 14. 11.

* Matth. 8. 10.

Well then, in all Duties where Faith is particularly to be acted, forget not this as the main prop of it: Do you pray for a flouriſhing and triumphing Grace? Conſider him as able to make all Grace to abound in you, 2 Cor. 9. 8. Do you want comfort and reviving under your Contritions and godly Sorrow? Conſider him as he declares himſelf, The high and lofty One, Iſa. 57. 15. Are you under preſſing Diſtreſſes? take Eliphaz his Advice to Job, when he tells him what he himſelf would do if he were in his caſe; Job 5. 8. I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my Cauſe: But obſerve under what conſideration, Verſe 9. as to one that doth great things and unſearchable; marvellous things without number. When you beg of him the melting your rocky Hearts, the daſhing in pieces your ſtrong Corruptions, the drawing his beautiful Image in your Soul, the quickning your dead Hearts, and reviving your drooping Spirits, and ſupplying your Spiritual wants, conſider him as one able to do abundantly, not only above what you can ask, but above what you can think, Eph. 3. 20. Faith will be ſpiritleſs, and Prayer will be liveleſs, if Power be not eyed by us in thoſe things which cannot be done without an Arm of Omnipotence.

3. This Doctrine teacheth us Humility and Submiſſion. The vaſt diſproportion between the mightineſs of God, and the meanneſs of a Creature, inculcates the Leſſon of Humility in his Preſence: How becoming is Humility under a mighty hand? 1 Pet. 5. 6. What is an Infant in a Giant's hand, or a Lamb in a Lions paw? Submiſſion to irreſiſtible Power is the beſt Policy, and the beſt Security: This gratifies and draws out Goodneſs, whereas Murmuring and Reſiſtance exaſperates and ſharpens Power. We ſanctifie his Name, and glorifie his ſtrength by falling down before it; 'tis an acknowledgment of his inviſible ſtrength, and our inability to match it. How low ſhould we therefore lye before him, againſt whoſe Power our Pride and Murmuring can do no good, who can out-wreſtle us in our Conteſts, and alway overcome when he judges? Rom. 3. 4.

4. This Doctrine teacheth us, not to fear the pride and force of Man. How unreaſonable is it, to fear a limited above an unbounded Power? How unbecoming is the fear of a Man in him, who hath an intereſt in a Strength able to curb the ſtrongeſt Devils? Who would tremble at the Threats of a Dwarf, that hath a mighty and watchful Giant for his Guard? If God doth but ariſe, his Enemies are ſcattered, Pſal. 68. 1. the leaſt motion makes them fly before him: 'Tis no difficult thing for him, that made them by a word, to unmake their deſigns, and ſhiver them in pieces by the breath of his mouth: He brings Princes to nothing, and makes the Judges of the Earth vanity; they wither when he blows upon them, and their ſtock ſhall not take root in the Earth. He can command a whirlwind to take them away as ſtubble, Iſa. 40. 23, 24. yea, with the ſhaking of his hand, he makes Servants to become Rulers of thoſe that were their Maſters, Zech. 2. 9. Whole Nations are no more in his hands than a morning Cloud, or the dew upon the ground, or the chaff before the wind, or the ſmoak againſt the motion of the Air, which though it appear out of a Chimney like a black invincible Cloud, is quickly diſperſt, and becomes inviſible *. How inconſiderable are the moſt Mighty to this Strength, which can puff away a whole World of proud Graſhoppers, and a whole Sky of daring Clouds? He that by his word maſters the Rage of the Sea, can overrule the Pride and Power of Men. Where is the Fury of the Oppreſſor? It cannot over-leap the Bounds he hath ſet it, nor march an inch beyond the point he hath preſcrib'd it. Fear not the Confederacies of Man, but ſanctifie the Lord of Hoſts, let him be your fear, and let him be your dread, Iſa. 8. 13. To fear Men is to diſhonour the Name of God, and regard him as a feeble Lord, and not as the Lord of Hoſts, who is mighty in ſtrength, ſo that they that harden themſelves againſt him ſhall not proſper.

* Hoſ. 13 3

5. Therefore this Doctrine teacheth us the fear of God. The Prophet Jeremiah counts it as an impoſſible thing for Men to be deſtitute of the Fear of God, when they ſeriouſly conſider his Name to be great and mighty. Jer. 10. 6, 7. Thou art great, and thy Name is great in might; who would not fear thee, O thou King of Nations? Shall we not tremble at his Preſence, who hath placed the Sand for the bound of the Sea by a perpetual Decree; that though the Waves thereof toſs themſelves, yet they cannot prevail, Jer. 5. 22. He can Arm the weakeſt Creature for our deſtruction, and diſarm the ſtrongeſt Creatures which appear for our preſervation. He can command a Hair, a Crumb, a Kernel to go awry, and ſtrangle us. He can make the Heavens braſs over our head, ſtop cloſe the Bottles of the Clouds, and make the Fruit of the Fields droop, when there is a ſmall diſtance to the Harveſt; he can arm Mens Wit, Wealth, Hands againſt themſelves: He can turn our ſweet Morſels into bitter, and our own Conſciences into devouring Lions: He can root up Cities by Moles, and conquer the proudeſt by Lice and Worms. The Omnipotence of God is not only the Object of a Believer's truſt, but a Believer's fear. 'Tis from the conſideration of this Power only, that our Saviour preſſes his Diſciples, whom he intitles his Friends, to fear God; which Leſſon he preſſes by a double repetition, and with a kind of Aſſeveration, without rendring any other Reaſon than this of the abi- lity of God to caſt into Hell, Luke 12. 5. We are to fear him becauſe he can; but bleſs his Goodneſs becauſe he will not. In regard of his Omnipotence, he is to be reverenc'd, not only by mortal Men, but by the bleſſed Angels, who are paſt the fear of any danger by his Power, being confirm'd in a happy ſtate by his unalterable Grace: When they adore him for his Holineſs, they reverence him for his Power with covered Faces: The Title of the Lord of Hoſts is joyned in their reverential praiſe with that of his Holineſs, Iſai. 6. 3. Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hoſts. How ſhould we adore that Power which can preſerve us, when Devils and Men conſpire to deſtroy us? How ſhould we ſtand in awe of that Power which can deſtroy us, though Angels and Men ſhould combine to preſerve us? The parts of his ways which are diſcovered, are ſufficient Motives to an humble and reverential Adoration: But who can fear and adore him according to the vaſtneſs of his Power, and his excellent Greatneſs, ſince the Thunder of his Power who can underſtand?

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Holineſs of GOD.

EXODUS XV. 11.

Who is like unto thee, Oh Lord, among the gods? Who is like thee, glorious in Holineſs, fearful in Praiſes, doing Wonders?

THIS Verſe is one of the loftieſt deſcriptions of the Majeſty and Excellency of God in the whole Scripture *. 'Tis a part of Moſes's Ἐπινίκιον, or Triumphant Song, after a great, and real, and a Typical Victory; in the Womb of which all the deliverances of the Church were couch'd. 'Tis the firſt Song upon Holy Record, and it conſiſts of Gratulatory and Prophetick Matter: It caſts a look backward, to what God did for them in their Deliverance from Egypt; and a look forward, to what God ſhall do for the Church in future Ages. That Deliverance was but a rough draught of ſomething more excellent to be wrought towards the cloſing up of the World; when his Plagues ſhall be poured out upon the Antichriſtian Powers, which ſhould revive the ſame Song of Moſes in the Church; as fitted ſo many Ages before for ſuch a Scene of Affairs †. 'Tis obſerv'd therefore, that many Words in this Song are put in the Future Tenſe, noting a time to come; and the very firſt word, ver. 1. Then ſang Moſes and the Children of Iſrael this Song: יָשִׁר ſhall ſing; implying, that it was compos'd and calculated for the celebrating ſome greater Action of God's, which was to be wrought in the World ‖. Upon this account ſome of the Jewiſh Rabbins, from the conſideration of this Remark, aſſerted the Doctrine of the Reſurrection to be meant in this place; That Moſes and thoſe Iſraelites ſhould riſe again to ſing the ſame Song, for ſome greater Miracles God ſhould work, and greater Triumphs he ſhould bring forth, exceeding thoſe Wonders at their Deliverance from Egypt.

2. An Hiſtorical Narration of Matter of Fact, Verſ. 3, 4. Pharaoh's Chariots and his Hoſt hath he caſt into the Red Sea; which he ſolely aſcribes to God, verſ. 6. Thy right hand, oh Lord, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, oh Lord, hath daſht in pieces the Enemy; which he doth Prophetically, as reſpecting ſomething to be done in After-times; or further, for the compleating of that Deliverance; or, as others think, reſpecting their entring into Canaan; for the words in theſe two Verſes are put in the Future Tenſe. The manner of the Deliverance is deſcribed verſ. 8. The Floods ſtood upright as an heap, and the Depths were congeal'd in the heart of the Sea. In the 9th Verſe he magnifies the Victory from the Vainglory and Security of the Enemy; The Enemy ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil, &c. And Verſ. 16, 17. he prophetically deſcribes the fruit of this Victory, in the influence it ſhall have upon thoſe Nations, by whoſe Confines they were to travel to the Promiſed Land; Fear and dread ſhall fall upon them: By the greatneſs of thy Arm they ſhall be as ſtill as a ſtone, till thy People paſs over which thou haſt purchaſed. The phraſe of this, and the 17th and 18th Verſes, ſeems to be more magnificent than to deſign only the bringing the Iſraelites to the Earthly Canaan; but ſeems to reſpect the gathering his Redeemed Ones together, to place them in the Spiritual Sanctuary which he had eſtabliſh'd, wherein the Lord ſhould reign for ever and ever, without any Enemies to diſturb his Royalty; The Lord ſhall reign for ever and ever, v. 18. The Prophet, in the midſt of his Hiſtorical Narrative, ſeems to be in an extaſie, and breaks out in a ſtately exaltation of God in the Text.

Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods, &c.] Interrogations are in Scripture the ſtrongeſt Affirmations or Negations: 'Tis here a ſtrong Affirmation of the Incomparableneſs of God, and a ſtrong denial of the worthineſs of all Creatures to be Partners with him in the degrees of his Excellency: 'Tis a preference of God before all Creatures in Holineſs, to which the purity of Creatures is but a ſhadow; in deſert of Reverence and Veneration, he being Fearful in Praiſes. The Angels cover their Faces when they adore him in his particular Perfections.

Amongſt the gods.] Among the Idols of the Nations, ſay ſome; Others ſay *, 'Tis not to be found that the Heathen Idols are ever dignified with the Title of Strong or Mighty, as the word tranſlated Gods doth import; and therefore underſtand it of the Angels, or other Potentates of the World; or rather incluſively, of all that are noted for, and can lay claim to the Title of Strength and Might upon the Earth or in Heaven. God is ſo Great and Majeſtick, that no Creature can ſhare with him in his Praiſe.

* Rivet.

Fearful in Praiſes.] Various are the Interpretations of this paſſage: To be reverenc'd in praiſes; his Praiſe ought to be celebrated with a Religious Fear. Fear is the Product of his Mercy as well as his Juſtice; He hath forgiveneſs that he may be fea- red, Pſal. 130. 4. Or, Fearful in praiſes; whom none can praiſe without amazement at the conſiderations of his works. * None can truly praiſe him without being affected with aſtoniſhment at his Greatneſs. Or, Fearful in praiſes †; whom no Mortal can ſufficiently praiſe, ſince he is above all praiſe. Whatſoever a Human Tongue can ſpeak, or an Angelical Underſtanding think of the Excellency of his Nature, and the Greatneſs of his Works, falls ſhort of the vaſtneſs of the Divine Perfection. A Creature's Praiſes of God are as much below the tranſcendent Eminency of God, as the meaneſs of a Creature's Being is below the Eternal Fulneſs of the Creator. Or rather, Fearful, or Terrible in praiſes; that is, in the Matter of thy Praiſe: And the Learned Rivet concurs with me in this ſenſe. The Works of God celebrated in this Song were Terrible: It was the miraculous overthrow of the Strength and Flower of a Mighty Nation, His Judgments were ſevere, as well as his Mercy was ſeaſonable. The word נורא ſignifies Glorious and Illuſtrious, as well as Terrible and Fearful. No Man can hear the Praiſe of thy Name, for thoſe great Judicial Acts, without ſome Aſtoniſhment at thy Juſtice, the Stream, and thy Holineſs the Spring of thoſe Mighty Works. This ſeems to be the ſenſe of the following words, Doing wonders: Fearful in the Matter of thy Praiſe, they being Wonders which thou haſt done among us and for us.

* Calvin.

Doing wonders.] Congealing the Waters by a Wind, to make them ſtand like Walls for the reſcue of the Iſraelites, and melting them by a Wind, for the overthrow of the Egyptians, are Prodigies that challenge the greateſt Adorations of that Mercy which delivered the one, and that Juſtice which puniſh'd the other; and of the Arm of that Power whereby he effected both his gracious and his righteous Purpoſes.

Doctr. Whence obſerve, That the Judgments of God upon his Enemies, as well as his Mercies to his People, are matter of Praiſe. The Perfections of God appear in both. Juſtice and Mercy are ſo link'd together in his acts of Providence, that the one cannot be forgotten whiles the other is acknowledg'd. He is never ſo Terrible as in the Aſſemblies of his Saints, and the Deliverance of them, Pſal. 89. 7. As the Creation was erected by him for his glory, ſo all the Acts of his Government are deſign'd for the ſame end; and his Creatures deny him his due, if they acknowledge not his Excellency in whatſoever dreadful, as well as pleaſing Garbs, it appears in the World. His Terror as well as his Righteouſneſs appears, when he is a God of Salvation, Pſal. 65. 5. By terrible things in righteouſneſs wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our Salvation.

But the Expreſſion I pitch upon in the Text to handle, is Glorious in Holineſs. He is Magnified or Honourable in Holineſs; ſo the word נאדר is tranſlated, Iſa. 42. 21. He will magnifie the Law, and make it honourable. Thy Holineſs hath ſhone forth admirably in this laſt Exploit, againſt the Enemies and Oppreſſors of thy People. The Holineſs of God is his glory, as his Grace is his Riches: Holineſs is his Crown, and his Mercy is his Treaſure. This is the Bleſſedneſs and Nobleneſs of his Nature; it renders him glorious in himſelf, and glorious to his Creatures, that underſtand any thing of this lovely Perfection.

Doctr. Holineſs is a glorious Perfection belonging to the Nature of God. Hence he is in Scripture ſtiled often the Holy one, the Holy one of Jacob, the Holy one of Iſrael; and oftner entituled Holy, than Almighty, and ſet forth by this part of his Dignity more than by any other. This is more affix'd as an Epithete to his Name than any other: You never find it expreſt, his Mighty Name, or his Wiſe Name, but his Great Name, and moſt of all, his Holy Name. This is his greateſt Title of Honour, in this doth the Majeſty and Venerableneſs of his Name appear. When the Sinfulneſs of Senacherib is aggravated, the Holy Ghoſt takes the riſe from this Attribute, 2 Kin. 19. 22. Thou haſt lift up thine eyes on high, even againſt the Holy One of Iſrael; not againſt the Wiſe, Mighty, &c. but againſt the Holy One of Iſrael, as that wherein the Majeſty of God was moſt illuſtrious. 'Tis upon this account he is called Light, as Impurity is called Darkneſs; both in this ſence are oppoſed to one another: He is a pure and unmixt Light, free from all blemiſh in his Eſſence, Nature, and Operations.

1. Heathens have own'd it. Proclus calls him, the Undefiled Governour of the World *. The Poetical Transformations of their Falſe gods, and the Extravagancies committed by them, was (in the account of the wiſeſt of them) an unholy thing to report and hear †. ‖ And ſome vindicate Epicurus from the Atheiſm wherewith he was commonly charged; that he did not deny the Being of God, but thoſe adulterous and contentious Deities the People worſhipped, which were Practiſes unworthy and unbecoming the Nature of God. Hence they aſſerted, that Virtue was an imitation of God, and a Virtuous Man bore a reſemblance to God: If Virtue were a Copy from God, a greater Holineſs muſt be own'd in the Original. And when ſome of them were at a loſs, how to free God from being the Author of Sin in the World, they aſcribe the birth of Sin to Matter, and run into an abſurd Opinion, fancying it to be uncreated, that thereby they might exempt God from all mixture of Evil; ſo ſacred with them was the Conception of God, as a Holy God.

‖ Gaſſend. Tom. 1. Phyſ. §. 1. lib. 4. cap. 2. p. 289.

2. The Abſurdeſt Hereticks have own'd it. * The Manichees and Marchionites, that thought Evil came by Neceſſity, yet would ſalve God's being the Author of it, by aſſerting two diſtinct Eternal Principles, One the Original of Evil, as God was the Fountain of good: So rooted was the Notion of this Divine Purity, that none would ever ſlander Goodneſs it ſelf with that which was ſo diſparaging to it.

* Petav. Theol. Dogmat. tom. 1. lib. 6. cap. 5. p. 415.

3. The Nature of God cannot rationally be conceived without it. Tho' the Power of God be the firſt Rational Concluſion, drawn from the ſight of his Works; Wiſdom the next, from the order and connexion of his Works: Purity muſt reſult from the beauty of his Works: That God cannot be deform'd by Evil, who hath made every thing ſo beautiful in its time. The Notion of a God cannot be entertain'd without ſeparating from him whatſoever is impure and beſpotting both in his Eſſence and Actions. Tho' we conceive him Infinite in Majeſty, Infinite in Eſſence, Eternal in Duration, Mighty in Power, and Wiſe and Immutable in his Counſels; Merciful in his Proceedings with Men, and whatſoever other Perfections may dignifie ſo Sovereign a Being; yet if we conceive him deſtitute of this excellent Perfection, and imagine him poſſeſſed with the leaſt contagion of Evil, we make him but an Infinite Monſter, and ſully all thoſe Perfections we aſcrib'd to him before; we rather own him a Devil, than a God. 'Tis a contradiction to be God and to be Darkneſs, or to have one Mote of Darkneſs mixed with his Light. 'Tis a leſs Injury to him to deny his Being, than to deny the Purity of it; the one makes him no God, the other a deform'd, unlovely, and a deteſtable God.

Plutarch ſaid not amiſs, that he ſhould count himſelf leſs injur'd by that Man that ſhould deny that there was ſuch a Man as Plutarch, than by him that that ſhould affirm that there was ſuch a one indeed, but he was a debauch'd Fellow, a looſe and vicious Perſon. 'Tis a leſs wrong to God to diſcard any acknowledgments of his Being, and to count him Nothing, than to believe him to exiſt, but imagine a baſe and unholy Deity: He that ſaith, God is not Holy, ſpeaks much worſe than he that ſaith, There is no God at all.

Let theſe two Things be conſider'd:

I. If any, this Attribute hath an excellency above his other Perfections. There are ſome Attributes of God we prefer, becauſe of our Intereſt in them, and the relation they bear to us: As we eſteem his Goodneſs before his Power; and his Mercy whereby he relieves us, before his Juſtice whereby he puniſheth us. As there are ſome we more delight in, becauſe of the goodneſs we receive by them; ſo there are ſome that God delights to honour, becauſe of their Excellency.

1. None is ſounded out ſo loftily with ſuch ſolemnity, and ſo frequently by Angels that ſtand before his Throne, as this. Where do you find any other Attribute trebled in the Praiſes of it, as this? Iſai. 6. 3. Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hoſts, the whole Earth is full of his Glory; and Rev. 4. 8. The four Beaſts reſt not day and night, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy Lord God, Almighty, &c. His Power or Soveraignty, as Lord of Hoſts, is but once mention'd; but with a ternal repetition of his Holineſs. Do you hear in any Angelical Song any other Perfection of the Divine Nature thrice repeated? Where do we read of the crying out Eternal, eternal, eternal; or Faithful, faithful, faithful Lord God of Hoſts? Whatſoever other Attribute is left out, this God would have to fill the Mouths of Angels and Bleſſed Spirits for ever in Heaven.

2. He ſingles it out to ſwear by. Pſal. 89. 35. Once have I ſworn by my Holineſs, that I will not lie unto David: And Amos 4. 2. The Lord will ſwear by his Holineſs: He twice ſwears by his Holineſs; once by his Power, Iſa. 62. 8. once by all, when he ſwears by his Name, Jer. 44. 26. He lays here his Holineſs to pledge for the aſſurance of his Promiſe, as the Attribute moſt dear to him, moſt valued by him, as tho' no other could give an aſſurance parallel to it in this concern of an Everlaſting Redemption, which is there ſpoken of: He that ſwears, ſwears by a greater than himſelf; God having no greater than himſelf, ſwears by himſelf: And ſwearing here by his Holineſs, ſeems to equal that ſingle one to all his other Attributes; as if he were more concern'd in the Honour of it, than of all the reſt. 'Tis as if he ſhould have ſaid, ſince I have not a more excellent Perfection to ſwear by, than that of my Holineſs, I lay this to pawn for your ſecurity, and bind my ſelf by that which I will never part with, were it poſſible for me to be ſtript of all the reſt. 'Tis a tacit Imprecation of himſelf, If I lye unto David, let me never be counted holy, or thought righteous enough to be truſted by Angels or Men. This Attribute he makes moſt of.

3. 'Tis his glory and beauty. Holineſs is the Honour of the Creature, Sanctification and Honour are link'd together, 1 Theſſ. 4. 4: much more is it the honour of God; 'tis the Image of God in the Creature *: When we take the Picture of a Man, we draw the moſt beautiful part, the Face, which is a Member of the greateſt Excellency. When God would be drawn to the Life, as much as can be in the Spirit of his Creatures, He is drawn in this Attribute, as being the moſt beautiful Perfection of God, and moſt valuable with him. Power is his Hand and Arm, Omniſcience, his Eye, Mercy, his Bowels; Eternity, his Duration; his Holineſs is his Beauty; 2 Chron. 20. 21. — ſhould praiſe the Beauty of Holineſs. In the 27th Pſalm and the 4th Verſe, David deſires to behold the Beauty of the Lord, and enquire in his holy Temple; that is, the Holineſs of God manifeſted in his hatred of Sin in the daily Sacrifices. Holineſs was the Beauty of the Temple, Iſa. 46. 11. Holy and Beautiful Houſe are joyn'd together; much more the Beauty of God that dwelt in the Sanctuary.

* Epheſ. 4. 24.

This renders him lovely to all his Innocent Creatures, tho' formidable to the Guilty ones. * A Heathen Philoſopher could call it, the Beauty of the Divine Eſſence, and ſay, That God was not ſo happy by an Eternity of Life, as by an Excellency of Virtue. And the Angels Song intimate it to be his glory, Iſa. 6. 3. The whole Earth is full of thy Glory; that is, of his Holineſs in his Laws, and in his Judgments againſt Sin; that being the Attribute applauded by them before.

* Plutarch. Eugubin. de Perenni Phil. lib. 6. cap. 6.

4. 'Tis his very Life. So it is called, Eph. 4. 18. Alienated from the Life of God; that is, from the Holineſs of God; ſpeaking of the oppoſite to it, the Uncleanneſs and Prophaneneſs of the Gentiles. We are only alienated from that which we are bound to imitate; but this is the perfection, alway ſet out as the pattern of our actions, Be you Holy, as I am Holy; no other is propos'd as our Copy. Alienated from that Purity of God, which is as much as his Life, without which he could not live. If he were ſtript of this, he would be a dead God more, than by the want of any other Perfection. His Swearing by it intimates as much: He Swears often by his own Life, As I live, ſaith the Lord: ſo he Swears by his Holineſs, as if it were his Life, and more his Life than any other. Let me not live, or Let me not be holy, are all one in his Oath. His Deity could not outlive the Life of his Purity.

II. As it ſeems to challenge an Excellency above all his other Perfections, ſo 'tis the glory of all the reſt. As it is the glory of the Godhead, ſo 'tis the glory of every Perfection in the Godhead. As his Power is the Strength of them, ſo his Holineſs is the Beauty of them. As all would be weak without Almightineſs to back them; ſo all would be uncomely without Holineſs to adorn them. Should this be ſullied, all the reſt would loſe their Honour and their comfortable Efficacy. As at the ſame inſtant that the Sun ſhould loſe its Light, it would loſe its Heat, its Strength, its generative and quickning Vertue. As Sincerity is the luſtre of every Grace in a Chriſtian; ſo is Purity the ſplendor of every Attribute in the Godhead. His Juſtice is a holy Juſtice; his Wiſdom, a holy Wiſdom; his Arm of Power, a Holy Arm, Pſal. 98. 1. his Truth or Promiſe, a Holy Promiſe, Pſal. 105. 42. Holy and True go hand in hand, Revel. 6. 10. His Name, which ſignifies all his Attributes in conjunction, is Holy, Pſal. 103. 1. Yea, he is Righteous in all his ways, and Holy in all his works, Pſal. 145. 17. 'Tis the Rule of all his Acts, the Source of all his Puniſhments. If every Attribute of the Deity were a diſtinct Member, Purity would be the Form, the Soul, the Spirit to animate them. Without it his Patience would be an Indulgence to Sin, his Mercy a Fondneſs, his Wrath a Madneſs, his Power a Tyranny, his Wiſdom an unworthy Subtility. This gives a Decorum to all. His Mercy is not exerciſed without it, ſince he pardons none but thoſe that have an Intereſt, by Union in the Obedience of a Mediator, which was ſo delightful to his Infinite Purity. His Juſtice, which Guilty Man is apt to tax with Cruelty and Violence in the exerciſe of it, is not acted out of the compaſs of this Rule. In Acts of Man's vindictive Juſtice there is ſomething of Impurity, Perturbation, Paſſion, ſome mixture of Cruelty; but none of theſe fall upon God in the ſevereſt Acts of Wrath. When God appears to Ezekiel in the reſemblance of Fire, to ſignifie his Anger againſt the Houſe of Judah, for their Idolatry, from his Loins downward there was the appearance of Fire; but from the Loins upward, the appearance of Brightneſs, as the colour of Amber, Ezek. 8. 2. His Heart is clear in his moſt terrible acts of Vengeance, it is a pure Flame wherewith he ſcorcheth and burns his Enemies: He is Holy in the moſt fiery appearance.

This Attribute therefore is never ſo much applauded, as when his Sword hath been drawn, and he hath manifeſted the greateſt fierceneſs againſt his Enemies. The Magnificent and Triumphant expreſſion of it in the Text, follows juſt upon God's Miraculous defeat and ruine of the Egyptian Army, The Sea covered them; they ſank as Lead in the mighty waters: Then it follows, Who is like unto thee, O Lord, glorious in Holineſs? And when it was ſo celebrated by the Seraphims, Iſa. 6. 3. It was when the Poſts moved, and the Houſe was filled with ſmoke, v. 4. which are ſigns of Anger, Pſal. 18. 7, 8. And when he was about to ſend Iſaiah upon a Meſſage of Spiritual and Temporal Judgments, that he would make the heart of that people fat, and their ears heavy, and their eyes ſhut; waſte their Cities without Inhabitant, and their Houſes without Man, and make the Land deſolate, Verſes 9, 10, 11, 12. and the Angels which here applaud him for his Holineſs, are the Executioners of his Juſtice; and here called Seraphims, from burning, or fiery Spirits, as being the Miniſters of his Wrath. His Juſtice is part of his Holineſs, whereby he doth reduce into order thoſe things that are out of order. When he is conſuming Men by his Fury, he doth not diminiſh, but manifeſt Purity; Zephany 3. 5. The juſt Lord is in the midſt of her, he will do no iniquity. Every Action of his is free from all tincture of Evil. 'Tis alſo celebrated with praiſe by the four Beaſts about his Throne, when he appears in a Covenant Garb, with a Rainbow about his Throne, and yet with Thundrings and Lightnings ſhot out againſt his Enemies. Rev. 4. 8. compared with Verſe 3. 5. to ſhew, that all his Acts of Mercy as well as Juſtice, are clear from any ſtain.

This is the Crown of all his Attributes, the Life of all his Decrees, the Brightneſs of all his Actions: Nothing is Decreed by him, nothing is acted by him but what is worthy of the Dignity, and becoming the Honour of this Attribute.

For the better underſtanding this Attribute, obſerve,

1. The Nature of this Holineſs.
2. The Demonſtration of it.
3. The Purity of his Nature in all his Acts about Sin.
4. The Uſe of all to our ſelves.

First, The Nature of Divine Holineſs.

In General.

The Holineſs of God Negatively, is a perfect and unpolluted freedom from all Evil. As we call Gold pure that is not embaſed by any Droſs, and that Garment clean that is free from any Spot; ſo the Nature of God is eſtranged from all ſhadow of Evil, all imaginable contagion.

Poſitively, 'Tis the Rectitude or Integrity of the Divine Nature, or that conformity of it in Affection and Action to the Divine Will, as to his Eternal Law, whereby he works with a becomingneſs to his own Excellency, and whereby he hath a delight and complacency in every thing agreeable to his Will, and an abhorrency of every thing contrary thereunto.

As there is no Darkneſs in his Underſtanding, ſo there is no ſpot in his Will: As his Mind is poſſeſſed with all Truth, ſo there is no deviation in his Will from it. He loves all Truth and Goodneſs; He hates all Falſity and Evil. In regard of his Righteouſneſs, he loves Righteouſneſs; Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs, and hath no pleaſure in wickedneſs, Pſal. 5. 4. He values Purity in his Creatures, and deteſts all Impurity, whether inward or outward. * We may indeed diſtinguiſh the Holineſs of God from his Righteouſneſs in our Conceptions: Holineſs is a Perfection abſolutely conſidered in the Nature of God; Righteouſneſs, a Perfection as referred to others in his Actions towards them and upon them.

*Martin. de Deo, p. 86.

In Particular.

This Property of the Divine Nature is,

First, An eſſential and neceſſary Perfection: He is eſſentially and neceſſarily Holy. 'Tis the eſſential Glory of his Nature: His Holineſs is as neceſſary as his Being; as neceſſary as his Omniſcience: As he cannot but know what is right, ſo he cannot but do what is juſt. His Underſtanding is not as Created Underſtandings, capable of Ignorance as well as Knowledge; ſo his Will is not as Created Wills, capable of Unrighteouſneſs, as well as Righteouſneſs. There can be no contradiction or contrariety in the Divine Nature, to know what is right, and to do what is wrong: If ſo, there would be a diminution of his Bleſſedneſs, he would not be a God alway bleſſed, Bleſſed for ever, as he is *. He is as neceſſarily Holy, as he is neceſſarily God; as neceſſarily without Sin, as without Change. As he was God from Eternity, ſo he was Holy from Eternity. † He was Gracious, Merciful, Juſt in his own Nature, and alſo Holy; though no Creature had been framed by him to exerciſe his Grace, Mercy, Juſtice, or Holineſs upon. If God had not created a World, he had in his own Nature been Almighty, and able to Create a World. If there never had been any thing but himſelf, yet he had been Omniſcient, knowing every thing that was within the verge and compaſs of his Infinite Power; ſo he was Pure in his own Nature, though he never had brought forth any Rational Creature whereby to manifeſt this Purity. Theſe Perfections are ſo neceſſary, that the Nature of God could not ſubſiſt without them. And the acts of thoſe ad intra, or within himſelf, are neceſſary; for being Omniſcient in Nature, there muſt be an act of Knowledge of Himſelf and his own Nature. Being Infinitely Holy, an act of Holineſs in Infinitely loving himſelf, muſt neceſſarily flow from this Perfection ‖. As the Divine Will cannot but be perfect; ſo it cannot be wanting to render the higheſt Love to it ſelf, to its Goodneſs, to the Divine Nature, which is due to him. Indeed, the acts of thoſe ad extra are not neceſſary, but upon a Condition. To love Righteouſneſs without himſelf, or to deteſt Sin, or inflict Puniſhment for the committing of it, could not have been, had there been no Righteous Creature for him to love, no Sinning Creature for him to loath, and to exerciſe his Juſtice upon as the Object of Puniſhment.

*Rom. 9. 5.

†Turretin. de Satisfact. p. 28.

‖ Ochino, prædic. part 3. Bodic. 51. p. 347, 348.

Some Attributes require a Condition to make the Acts of them neceſſary. As it is at God's liberty, whether he will create a Rational Creature, or no: But when he decrees to make either Angel or Man, 'tis neceſſary from the Perfection of his Nature to make them Righteous. 'Tis at God's liberty whether he will ſpeak to Man, or no; but if he doth, 'tis impoſſible for him to ſpeak that which is falſe, becauſe of its Infinite Perfection of Veracity. 'Tis at his liberty whether he will permit a Creature to ſin; but if he ſees good to ſuffer it, 'tis impoſſible but that he ſhould deteſt that Creature that goes croſs to his Righteous Nature. His Holineſs is not ſolely ſolely an Act of his Will, for then he might be Unholy as well as Holy; he might love Iniquity and hate Righteouſneſs; he might then command that which is good, and afterwards command that which is bad and unworthy: For what is only an act of his Will, and not belonging to his Nature, is indifferent to him. As the poſitive Law he gave to Adam, of not eating the Forbidden Fruit, was a pure Act of his Will; he might have given him liberty to eat of it, if he had pleaſed, as well as prohibited him. But what is moral and good in its own Nature, is neceſſarily willed by God, and cannot be changed by him, becauſe of the tranſcendent eminency of his Nature, and righteouſneſs of his Will. As it is impoſſible for God to command his Creature to hate him, or to diſpence with a Creature for not loving him; for this would be to command a thing intrinſecally Evil, the higheſt Ingratitude, the very Spirit of all Wickedneſs, which conſiſts in the hating God. Yet though God be thus neceſſarily Holy, he is not ſo by a bare and ſimple neceſſity, as the Sun ſhines, or the Fire burns; but by a free neceſſity, not compelled thereunto, but inclined from the fulneſs of the Perfection of his own Nature and Will; ſo as by no means he can be Unholy, becauſe he will not be Unholy; 'tis againſt his Nature to be ſo.

1 Sam. 2. 2. 2. God is only abſolutely Holy. There is none Holy as the Lord. 'Tis the peculiar glory of his Nature. As there is none good but God, ſo none Holy but God. No creature can be eſſentially Holy, becauſe mutable: Holineſs is the Subſtance of God; but a Quality and Accident in a Creature. God is Infinitely Holy, Creatures Finitely Holy. He is holy from Himſelf, Creatures are holy by derivation from him. He is not only Holy, but Holineſs: Holineſs, in the higheſt degree, is his ſole Prerogative. As the higheſt Heaven is called the Heaven of Heavens, becauſe it embraceth in its Circle all the Heavens, and contains the magnitude of them, and hath a greater vaſtneſs above all that it incloſeth; ſo is God the Holy of Holies, He contains the Holineſs of all Creatures put together, and infinitely more. As all the Wiſdom, Excellency, and Power of the Creatures, if compared with the Wiſdom, Excellency, and Power of God, is but folly, vileneſs, and weakneſs; ſo the higheſt created Purity, if ſet in parallel with God, is but impurity and uncleanneſs, Rev. 15. 4. Thou only art Holy: 'Tis like the light of a Glow-worm to that of the Sun *; The Heavens are not pure in his ſight, and his Angels he charged with folly, Job 4. 18. Though God hath Crowned the Angels with an unſpotted Sanctity, and placed them in a habitation of Glory; yet as Illuſtrious as they are, they have an Unworthineſs in their own Nature to appear before the Throne of ſo Holy a God; Their Holineſs grows dim and pale in his Preſence. 'Tis but a weak ſhadow of that Divine Purity, whoſe Light is ſo glorious, that it makes them cover their faces out of weakneſs to behold it, and cover their Feet out of ſhame in themſelves. They are not pure in his ſight, becauſe though they love God (which is a Principle of Holineſs) as much as they can, yet not ſo much as he deſerves: They love him with the intenſeſt degree, according to their Power; but not with the intenſe degree, according to his own Amiableneſs: For they cannot infinitely love God, unleſs they were as Infinite as God, and had an underſtanding of his Perfections equal with himſelf, and as immenſe as his own Knowledge. God having an Infinite Knowledge of himſelf, can only have an Infinite love to himſelf, and conſequently an Infinite Holineſs without any defect; becauſe he loves himſelf according to the vaſtneſs of his own Amiableneſs, which no finite Being can. Therefore, though the Angels be exempt from Corruption and Soil, they cannot enter into compariſon with the Purity of God, without acknowledgment of a dimneſs in themſelves. Beſides, He charges them with folly, and puts no truſt in them; becauſe they have the power of ſinning, though not the act of ſinning: They have a poſſible folly in their own Nature to be charged with. Holineſs is a quality ſeparable from them, but it is inſeparable from God. Had they not at firſt a mutability in their Nature, none of them could have ſinned, there had been no Devils; but becauſe ſome of them ſinned, the reſt might have ſinned: And though the ſtanding Angels ſhall never be changed, yet they are ſtill changeable in their own Nature, and their ſtanding is due to Grace, not by Nature, and though they ſhall be for ever preſerved, yet they are not, nor ever can be Immutable in Nature. for then they ſhould ſtand upon the ſame bottom with God himſelf; but they are ſupported by Grace againſt that Changeableneſs of Nature which is eſſential to a Creature: The Creator only hath Immortality, that is Immutability †.

'Tis as certain a Truth, that no Creature can be naturally Immutable and Impeccable, as that God cannot create any thing actually polluted and imperfect. 'Tis as poſſible that the higheſt Creature may ſin, as it is poſſible that it may be annihilated: It may become not holy, as it may become not a Creature, but Nothing. The Holineſs of a Creature may be reduc'd into Nothing, as well as his Subſtance: But the Holineſs of the Creator cannot be diminiſh'd, dimm'd, or overſhadowed; James 1. 17. He is the Father of lights, with whom is no variableneſs or ſhadow of turning. 'Tis as impoſſible his Holineſs ſhould be blotted, as that his Deity ſhould be extinguiſh'd: For whatſoever Creature hath eſſentially ſuch or ſuch qualities, cannot be ſtript of them, without being turn'd out of its Eſſence. As a Man is eſſentially Rational; and if he ceaſeth to be Rational, he ceaſeth to be Man. The Sun is eſſentially Luminous; if it ſhould become dark in its own Body, it would ceaſe to be the Sun. In regard of this abſolute and only Holineſs of God, 'tis thrice repeated by the Seraphims, Iſai. 6. 3. The Threefold Repetition of a word, notes the certainty or abſoluteneſs of the Thing, or the irreverſibleneſs of the Reſolve; as Ezek. 21. 27. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, notes the certainty of the Judgment; alſo Rev. 8. 8. Woe, woe, woe, Three times repeated, ſignifies the ſame. The Holineſs of God is ſo abſolutely peculiar to him, that it can no more be expreſt in Creatures, than his Omnipotence, whereby they may be able to create a World; or his Omniſcience, whereby they may be capable of knowing all things, and knowing God as he knows himſelf.

* Job 15. 15.

3. God is ſo holy, that he cannot poſſibly approve of any Evil done by another, but doth perfectly abhor it; it would not elſe be a glorious holineſs: Pſal. 5. 3. He hath no pleaſure in wickedneſs. He doth not only love that which is juſt, but abhor with a perfect hatred all things contrary to the Rule of Righteouſneſs. Holineſs can no more approve of ſin than it can commit it: To be delighted with the Evil in another's Act, contracts a Guilt, as well as the Commiſſion of it; for approbation of a thing is a conſent to it: Sometime the approbation of an Evil in another, is a more grievous Crime than the Act it ſelf, as appears in Rom. 1. 32. who knowing the Judgment of God, not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do it: Where the (not only) manifeſts it to be a greater Guilt to take pleaſure in them. Every ſin is aggravated by the delight in it; to take pleaſure in the evil of another's

Action,

Action, ſhews a more ardent affection and love to ſin, than the Committer himſelf may have. This therefore can as little fall upon God, as to do an evil act himſelf; yet as a Man may be delighted with the Conſequences of another's ſin, as it may occaſion ſome publick good, or private good to the guilty perſon; as ſometimes it may be an occaſion of his Repentance, when the horridneſs of a Fact ſtares him in the face, and occaſions a ſelf-reflection for that and other Crimes, which is attended with an indignation againſt them, and ſincere remorſe for them; ſo God is pleaſed with thoſe good things his Goodneſs and Wiſdom bring forth upon the occaſion of Sin. But in regard of his Holineſs, he cannot approve of the evil, whence his Infinite Wiſdom drew forth his own Glory, and his Creatures good: His Pleaſure is not in the ſinful act of the Creature, but in the act of his own Goodneſs and Skill, turning it to another end than what the Creature aim'd at.

1. He abhors it neceſſarily. Holineſs is the Glory of the Deity, therefore neceſſary. The Nature of God is ſo holy, that he cannot but hate it. Habb. 1. 13. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look on iniquity: He is more oppoſite to it than Light to Darkneſs, and therefore it can expect no countenance from him: A love of Holineſs cannot be without a hatred of every thing that is contrary to it: As God neceſſarily loves himſelf ſo he muſt neceſſarily hate every thing that is againſt himſelf: And as he loves himſelf for his own Excellency and Holineſs, he muſt neceſſarily deteſt whatſoever is repugnant to his Holineſs, becauſe of the evil of it: Since he is infinitely good, he cannot but love goodneſs, as it is a reſemblance to himſelf; and cannot but abhor unrighteouſneſs, as being moſt diſtant from him, and contrary to him. If he have any eſteem for his own Perfections, he muſt needs have an implacable averſion to all that is ſo repugnant to him, that would, if it were poſſible, deſtroy him, and is a point directed not only againſt his Glory, but againſt his Life. If he did not hate it, he would hate himſelf: for ſince Righteouſneſs is his Image, and Sin would deface his Image; if he did not love his Image, and loath what is againſt his Image, he would loath himſelf, he would be an Enemy to his own Nature: * Nay, if it were poſſible for him to love it, it were poſſible for him not to be Holy, it were poſſible then for him to deny himſelf, and will that he were no God, which is a palpable contradiction. Yet this neceſſity in God of hating Sin, is not a brutiſh neceſſity, ſuch as is in meer Animals, that avoid by a natural Inſtinct, not of choice, what is prejudicial to them; but moſt free, as well as neceſſary, ariſing from an infinite knowledge of his own Nature, and of the evil nature of Sin, and the contrariety of it to his own Excellency, and the order of his works.

† Turretin. de ſatisfac. p. 35, 36.

2. Therefore intenſely. Nothing do Men act for more than their glory. As he doth infinitely, and therefore perfectly know himſelf, ſo he infinitely, and therefore perfectly knows what is contrary to himſelf, and, as according to the manner and meaſure of his knowledge of himſelf, is his love to himſelf, as infinite as his knowledge, and therefore unexpreſſible and unconceivable by us: So from the perfection of his knowledge of the evil of Sin, which is infinitely above what any Creature can have, doth ariſe a diſpleaſure againſt it ſuitable to that knowledge. In Creatures the degrees of affection to, or averſion from a thing, are ſuited to the ſtrength of their apprehenſions of the good or evil in them. God knows not only the workers of wickedneſs, but the wickedneſs of their works, * for he knows vain Men, he ſees Wickedneſs alſo. The vehemency of this hatred is expreſt variouſly in Scripture; he loaths it ſo, that he is impatient of beholding it; the very ſight of it affects him with deteſtation, Hab. 1. 13. He hates the firſt ſpark of it in the Imagination, Zech. 8. 17. With what variety of expreſſions doth he repeat his indignation at their polluted Services? Amos 5. 21, 22. I hate, I deteſt, I deſpiſe, I will not ſmell, I will not accept, I will not regard; take away from me the noiſe of thy Songs, I will not hear. So, Iſa. 1. 14. My Soul hates, they are a trouble to me, I am weary to bear them. 'Tis the abominable thing that he hates, Jer. 44. 4. he is vexed and fretted at it, Iſa. 63. 10. Ezek. 16. 43. He abhors it ſo, that his hatred redounds upon the perſon that commits it, Pſal. 5. 5. He hates all workers of Iniquity. Sin is the only primary Object of his Diſpleaſure: He is not diſpleas'd with the nature of man as man, for that was derived from him; but with the Nature of man as ſinful, which is from the Sinner himſelf. When a man hath but one Object for the exerciſe of all his Anger, 'tis ſtronger than when diverted to many Objects: A mighty Torrent, when diverted into many Streams, is weaker than when it comes in a full Body upon one place only. The Infinite Anger and Hatred of God, which is as Infinite as his Love and Mercy, has no other Object, againſt which he directs the mighty force of it, but only Unrighteouſneſs. He hates no Perſon for all the Penal Evils upon him, tho' they were more by Ten thouſand times than Job was ſtruck with, but only for his Sin. Again, Sin being only evil, and an unmixt evil, there is nothing in it that can abate the deteſtation of God, or ballance his hatred of it; there is not the leaſt grain of goodneſs in it, to incline him to the leaſt affection to any part of it. This hatred cannot but be intenſe; for as the more any Creature is ſanctified, the more is he advanc'd in the abhorrence of that which is contrary to Holineſs; therefore God being the Higheſt, moſt Abſolute and Infinite Holineſs, doth infinitely, and therefore intenſly, hate unholineſs; being infinitely righteous, doth infinitely abhor unrighteouſneſs; being infinitely true, doth infinitely abhor falſity, as it is the greateſt and moſt deformed evil. As it is from the righteouſneſs of his Nature, that he hath a content and ſatisfaction in Righteouſneſs, Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs; ſo it is from the ſame righteouſneſs of his Nature that he deteſts whatſoever is morally evil: As his Nature therefore is infinite, ſo muſt his Abhorrence be.

* Job 11. 11.

3. Therefore univerſally, becauſe neceſſarily and intenſly, He doth not hate it in one, and indulge it in another, but loaths it where-ever he finds it; not one worker of Iniquity is exempt from it: Pſal. 5, 5. Thou hateſt all workers of Iniquity: For it is not Sin, as in this or that Perſon, or as great or little; but Sin, as Sin, is the Object of his hatred: And therefore let the Perſon be never ſo great, and have particular Characters of his Image upon him, it ſecures him not from God's hatred of any evil action he ſhall commit. He is a jealous God, jealous of his Glory *; a Metaphor taken from jealous Husbands, who will not endure the leaſt Adultery in their Wives, nor God the leaſt defection of man from his Law. Every act of Sin is a ſpiritual Adultery, denying God to be the chief Good, and giving that Prerogative by that Act to ſome vile thing. He loves it no more in his own People than he doth in his Enemies; he frees them not from his Rod, the teſtimony of his loathing their Crimes: Whoſoever ſows Iniquity ſhall reap Affliction. It might be thought that he affected their Droſs, if he did not refine them; and loved their Filth, if he did not cleanſe them; becauſe of his deteſtation of their

* Exod. 20. 5.

ſin,

ſin, he will not ſpare them from the Furnace, tho' becauſe of love to their Perſons in Chriſt, he will exempt them from Tophet. How did the Sword ever and anon drop down upon David's Family after his unworthy dealing in Uriah's Caſe, and cut off ever and anon ſome of the Branches of it? He doth ſometimes puniſh it more ſeverely in this Life in his own People, than in others: Upon Jonah's Diſobedience a Storm purſues him, and a Whale devours him, while the prophane World lived in their Luſts without controul. Moſes, for one act of unbelief, is excluded from Canaan, when greater Sinners attained that Happineſs. 'Tis not a light puniſhment, but a Vengeance he takes on their Inventions *, to manifeſt that he hates ſin as ſin, and not becauſe the worſt Perſons commit it. Perhaps had a prophane Man touched the Ark, the hand of God had not ſo ſuddenly reach'd him: But when Uzzah, a man zealous for him, as may be ſuppoſed by his care for the ſupport of the tottering Ark, would ſtep out of his place, he ſtrikes him down for his diſobedient Action, by the ſide of the Ark, which he would indirectly (as not being a Levite) ſuſtain †. Nor did our Saviour ſo ſharply reprove the Phariſees, and turn ſo ſhort from them as he did from Peter, when he gave a carnal advice, and contrary to that wherein was to be the greateſt manifeſtation of God's Holineſs, viz. the Death of Chriſt *. He calls him Satan, a Name ſharper than the Title of the Devil's Children, wherewith he marked the Phariſees, and given (beſides him) to none but Judas, who made a profeſſion of love to him, and was outwardly rank'd in the number of his Diſciples. A Gardener hates a Weed the more, for being in the Bed with the moſt precious Flowers. God's hatred is univerſally fixed againſt Sin, and he hates it as much in thoſe whoſe Perſons ſhall not fall under his Eternal Anger, as being ſecured in the arms of a Redeemer, by whom the guilt is wip'd off, and the filth ſhall be totally waſh'd away: Tho' he hates their ſin, and cannot but hate it, yet he loves their Perſons, as being united as Members to the Mediator and Myſtical Head. A Man may love a gangren'd Member, becauſe 'tis a Member of his own Body, or a Member of a dear Relation, but he loaths the Gangrene in it more than in thoſe wherein he is not ſo much concern'd.

*Pſal. 99. 8.

† 2 Sam. 6. 7.

* Mat. 16. 23.

Tho' God's hatred of Believers Perſons is remov'd by Faith in the ſatisfactory Death of Jeſus Chriſt; yet his Antipathy againſt ſin was not taken away by that Blood; nay, it was impoſſible it ſhould: It was never deſign'd, nor had it any capacity to alter the unchangeable Nature of God, but to manifeſt the unſpottedneſs of his Will, and his eternal Averſion to any thing that was contrary to the Purity of his Being, and the Righteouſneſs of his Laws.

4. Perpetually: This muſt neceſſarily follow upon the others. He can no more ceaſe to hate Impurity, than he can ceaſe to love Holineſs: If he ſhould in the leaſt inſtant approve of any thing that is filthy, in that moment he would diſapprove of his own Nature and Being; there would be an interruption in his love of himſelf, which is as Eternal as it is Infinite. How can he love any ſin, which is contrary to his Nature, but for one moment, without hating his own Nature, which is eſſentially contrary to ſin? Two Contraries cannot be loved at the ſame time; God muſt firſt begin to hate himſelf, before he can approve of any evil which is directly oppoſite to himſelf. We indeed are chang'd with a Temptation, ſometimes bear an affection to it, and ſometimes teſtifie an indignation againſt it; but God is always the ſame without any ſhadow of change, and is angry with the wicked every day, Pſal. 7. 11. that is uninterruptedly in the nature of his Anger, tho' not in the effects of it. God indeed may be reconcil'd to the Sinner, but never to the ſin; for then he ſhould renounce himſelf, deny his own Eſſence and his own Divinity, if his inclinations to the love of Goodneſs, and his averſion from Evil, could be changed; if he ſuffer'd the Contempt of the one, and encourag'd the Practice of the other.

4. God is ſo holy, that he cannot but love Holineſs in others. Not that he owes any thing to his Creature, but from the unſpeakable Holineſs of his Nature, whence affections to all things that bear a reſemblance of him do flow; as Light ſhoots out from the Sun, or any glittering Body: 'Tis eſſential to the Infinite Righteouſneſs of his Nature, to love Righteouſneſs where-ever he beholds it: Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs. He cannot becauſe of his Nature, but love that which bears ſome agreement with his Nature, that which is the curious Draught of his own Wiſdom and Purity: He cannot but be delighted with a copy of Himſelf: He would not have a holy Nature, if he did not love Holineſs in every Nature: His own Nature would be denied by him, if he did not affect every thing that had a ſtamp of his own Nature upon it. There was indeed nothing without God, that could invite him to manifeſt ſuch Goodneſs to Man, as he did in Creation: But after he had ſtampt that Rational Nature with a Righteouſneſs convenient for it, it was impoſſible but that he ſhould ardently love that impreſſion of himſelf, becauſe he loves his own Deity, and conſequently all things which are any Sparks and Images of it: And were the Devils capable of an act of Righteouſneſs, the Holineſs of his Nature would incline him to love it, even in thoſe dark and revolted Spirits.

5. God is ſo holy, that he cannot poſitively will or encourage Sin in any. How can he give any encouragement to that, which he cannot in the leaſt approve of, or look upon without loathing, not only the Crime, but the Criminal? Light may ſooner be the cauſe of Darkneſs, than Holineſs it ſelf be the cauſe of Unholineſs, abſolutely contrary to it: 'Tis a Contradiction, that he that is the Fountain of Good ſhould be the ſource of Evil; as if the ſame Fountain ſhould bubble up both ſweet and bitter Streams; ſalt and freſh *. Since whatever Good is in man, acknowledges God for its Author, it follows, that men are evil by their own fault. There is no need for men to be incited to that, to which the Corruption of their own Nature doth ſo powerfully bend them. Water hath a forcible principle in its own Nature to carry it downward; it needs no force to haſten the motion: God tempts no man, but every man is drawn away by his own Luſt, Jam. 1. 13, 14. All the preparations for glory are from God, Rom. 9. 23. But men are ſaid to be fitted to deſtruction, ver. 22. but God is not ſaid to fit them; they by their Iniquities fit themſelves for ruine, and he by his long-ſuffering keeps the deſtruction from them for a while.

* Jam. 3. 11.

1. Firſt, God cannot command any Unrighteouſneſs. As all Virtue is ſumm'd up in a love to God, ſo all Iniquity is ſumm'd up in an enmity to God: Every wicked Work declares a man an Enemy to God: Col. 1. 21. Enemies in your minds by wicked Works. If he could command his Creature any thing which bears an enmity in its Nature to himſelf, he would then implicitly command the hatred of himſelf, and he would be in ſome meaſure a hater of himſelf: He that commands another to deprive him of his Life, cannot be ſaid to bear any love to his own Life. God can never hate himſelf, and therefore cannot command any thing that is hateful to him, and tends to a hating of him, and driving the Creature further from him. In that very moment that God ſhould command ſuch a thing, he would ceaſe to be good. What can be more abſurd to imagine, than that infinite Goodneſs ſhould enjoyn a thing contrary to it ſelf, and contrary to the eſſential Duty of a Creature, and order him to do any thing that beſpeaks an enmity to the nature of the Creator, or a deflouring and diſparaging his Works? God cannot but love himſelf, and his own Goodneſs, he were not otherwiſe Good; and therefore cannot order the Creature to do any thing oppoſite to this Goodneſs, or any thing hurtful to the Creature it ſelf, as Unrighteouſneſs is.

2. Nor can God ſecretly inſpire any Evil into us. 'Tis as much againſt his Nature to incline the heart to ſin, as it is to command it: As it is impoſſible but that he ſhould love himſelf, and therefore impoſſible to enjoyn any thing that tends to a hatred of himſelf; by the ſame reaſon it is as impoſſible that he ſhould infuſe ſuch a Principle in the heart, that might carry a man out to any act of enmity againſt him. To enjoyn one thing, and incline to another, would be an Argument of ſuch inſincerity, unfaithfulneſs, contradiction to it ſelf, that it cannot be conceiv'd to fall within the compaſs of the Divine Nature *, who is a God without iniquity, becauſe a God of truth and ſincerity, juſt and right is he. To beſtow excellent Faculties upon Man in Creation, and incline him by a ſudden impulſion to things contrary to the true end of him, and induce an inevitable ruin upon that Work, which he had compoſed with ſo much Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and pronounced good with ſo much delight and pleaſure, is inconſiſtent with that love which God bears to the Creature of his own framing: To incline his Will to that which would render him the object of his hatred, the fuel for his Juſtice, and ſink him into deplorable Miſery, 'tis moſt abſurd and unchriſtian-like to imagine.

* Deut 32. 4.

3. Nor can God neceſſitate man to ſin. Indeed ſin cannot be committed by force; there is no ſin but is in ſome ſort voluntary: Voluntary in the root, or voluntary in the branch; voluntary by an immediate act of the Will, or voluntary by a general or natural inclination of the Will. That is not a Crime to which a man is violenc'd, without any concurrence of the Faculties of the Soul to that act; 'tis indeed not an act, but a paſſion; a man that is forced, is not an Agent, but a Patient under the force: But what neceſſity can there be upon Man from God, ſince he hath implanted ſuch a Principle in him, that he cannot deſire any thing but what is good, either really or apparently; and if a Man miſtakes the Object, 'tis his own fault; for God hath endow'd him with Reaſon to diſcern, and liberty of Will to chooſe upon that Judgment.

And tho' 'tis to be acknowledg'd, that God hath an Abſolute Soveraign Dominion over his Creature, without any limitation, and may do what he pleaſes, and diſpoſe of it according to his own Will, as a Potter doth with his Veſſel, Rom. 9. 21. according as the Church ſpeaks, Iſa. 64. 8. We are the Clay, and thou our Potter; and we all are the work of thy hand: Yet he cannot pollute any undefiled Creature by vertue of that Soveraign Power, which he hath to do what he will with it; becauſe ſuch an act would be contrary to the foundation and right of his Dominion, which conſiſts in the excellency of his Nature, his immenſe Wiſdom and unſpotted Purity: If God ſhould therefore do any ſuch act, he would expunge the right of his Dominion, by blotting out that nature which renders him fit for that Dominion, and the exerciſe of it *. Any Dominion which is exercis'd without the Rules of Goodneſs, is not a true Soveraignty, but an inſupportable Tyranny. God would ceaſe to be a righteful Soveraign, if he ceaſed to be good; and he would ceaſe to be good, if he did command, neceſſitate, or by any poſitive operation incline inwardly the heart of a Creature directly to that which were morally evil, and contrary to the eminency of his own Nature.

*Amyrald. diſſert. p. 103, 104.

But that we may the better conceive of this, let us trace Man in his firſt Fall, whereby he ſubjected himſelf, and all his Poſterity, to the Curſe of the Law and Hatred of God; we ſhall find no footſteps either of Precept, outward Force, or inward Impulſion *. The plain ſtory of Man's Apoſtacy diſchargeth God from any intereſt in the Crime as an encouragement, and excuſeth him from any appearance of ſuſpicion, when he ſhew'd him the Tree he had reſerv'd, as a mark of his Soveraignty, and forbad him to eat of the Fruit of it: He back'd the prohibition with the threatning the greateſt Evil, viz. Death; which could be underſtood to imply nothing leſs than the loſs of all his happineſs; and in that couch'd an aſſurance of the perpetuity of his Felicity, if he did not rebelliouſly reach forth his Hand to take and eat of the Fruit †. 'Tis true, God had given that Fruit an excellency, a goodneſs for Food, and a pleaſantneſs to the Eye ‖. He had given Man an Appetite, whereby he was capable of deſiring ſo pleaſant a Fruit; but God had by Creation rang'd it under the command of Reaſon, if Man would have kept it in its due Obedience; he had fixed a ſevere threatning to bar the unlawful Excurſions of it: He had allow'd him a multitude of other Fruits in the Garden, and given him liberty enough to ſatisfie his Curioſity in all except this only. Could there be any thing more obliging to Man, to let God have his reſerve of that one Tree, than the grant of all the reſt: and more deterring from any diſobedient Attempt than ſo ſtrict a Command, ſpirited with ſo dreadful a Penalty? God did not ſollicite him to rebel againſt him: A ſollicitation to it, and a command againſt it, were inconſiſtent. The Devil aſſaults him, and God permitted it, and ſtands as it were a Spectator of the iſſue of the Combat. There could be no neceſſity upon Man to liſten to and entertain the ſuggeſtions of the Serpent: He had a power to reſiſt him, and he had an Anſwer ready for all the Devil's Arguments, had they been multiplied to more than they were; the oppoſing the Order of God had been a ſufficient Confutation of all the Devil's plauſible reaſonings: That Creator who hath given me my being, hath order'd me not to eat of it. Tho' the pleaſure of the Fruit might allure him, yet the force of his Reaſon might have quell'd the liquoriſhneſs of his ſenſe: The perpetual thinking of, and ſounding out the Command of God, had ſilenc'd both Satan and his own Appetite; had diſarm'd the Tempter, and preſerv'd his ſenſitive part in its due ſubjection. What Inclination can we ſuppoſe there could be from the Creator, when upon the very firſt offer of the Temptation, Eve oppoſes to the Tempter the Prohibition and Threatning of God, and ſtrains it to a higher peg than we find God had deliver'd it in? For in Gen. 2. 17. 'tis, you ſhall not eat of it; but ſhe adds, Gen. 3. 3. Neither ſhall you touch it: which was a Remark that might have had more influence to reſtrain her. Had our firſt Parents kept this fixed upon their Underſtandings and Thoughts, that God had forbidden any ſuch act as the Eating of the Fruit, and that he was true to execute the Threatning he had utter'd, of which Truth of God they could not but have a natural Notion; with what eaſe might they have withſtood the Devil's attack, and defeated his Deſign? And it had been eaſie with them to have kept their Underſtandings by the force of ſuch a Thought, from entertaining any any contrary Imagination. There is no ground for any Jealouſie of any Encouragements, inward Impulſions, or neceſſity from God in this Affair. A diſcharge of God from this firſt Sin, will eaſily induce a freedom of him from all other Sins which follow upon it.

God doth not then Encourage, or Excite, or Incline to Sin. How can he excite to that, which when it is done, he will be ſure to condemn? How can he be a Righteous Judge to ſentence a Sinner to Miſery, for a Crime acted by a ſecret Inſpiration from himſelf? Iniquity would deſerve no reproof from him, if he were any way poſitively the Author of it. Were God the Author of it in us, what is the reaſon our own Conſciences accuſe us for it, and convince us of it? That, being God's Deputy, would not accuſe us of it, if the Soveraign Power by which it acts, did incline us to it: How can he be thought to excite to that which he hath enacted ſuch ſevere Laws to reſtrain, or incline Man to that which he hath ſo dreadfully puniſh'd in his Son, and which it is impoſſible but the excellency of his Nature muſt incline him eternally to hate? We may ſooner imagine that a pure Flame ſhall engender Cold, and Darkneſs be the Off-ſpring of a Sunbeam, as imagine ſuch a thing as this. What ſhall we ſay? Is there Unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid. The Apoſtle execrates ſuch a thought, Rom. 9. 14.

6. God cannot act any Evil, in or by himſelf. If he cannot approve of Sin in others, nor excite any to Iniquity, which is leſs, he cannot commit Evil himſelf, which is greater: What he cannot poſitively will in another, can never be willed in himſelf; he cannot do evil thro' Ignorance, becauſe of his Infinite Knowledge; nor thro' Weakneſs, becauſe of his Infinite Power; nor thro' Malice, becauſe of his Infinite Rectitude. He cannot will any unjuſt thing, becauſe having an infinitely perfect Underſtanding, he cannot judge that to be true which is falſe; or that to be good, which is evil; his Will is regulated by his Wiſdom: If he could Will any unjuſt and irrational thing, his Will would be repugnant to his Underſtanding; there would be a diſagreement in God, Will againſt Mind, and Will againſt Wiſdom: He being the Higheſt Reaſon, the firſt Truth, cannot do an unreaſonable, falſe, defective Action. 'Tis not a defect in God that he cannot do Evil, but a fulneſs and excellency of Power: As it is not a weakneſs in the Light, but the perfection of it, that it is unable to produce Darkneſs: God is the Father of Lights, with whom is no variableneſs, Jam. 1. 17. Nothing pleaſes him, nothing is acted by him, but what is beſeeming the Infinite Excellency of his own Nature: The voluntary neceſſity whereby God cannot be unjuſt, renders him a God bleſſed for ever: He would hate himſelf as the chief Good, if in any of his Actions he ſhould diſagree with his Goodneſs. He cannot do any unworthy thing, not becauſe he wants an Infinite Power, but becauſe he is poſſeſſed of an Infinite Wiſdom, and adorn'd with an Infinite Purity; and being infinitely pure, cannot have the leaſt mixture of Impurity. As if you can ſuppoſe Fire infinitely hot, you cannot ſuppoſe it to have the leaſt mixture of Coldneſs: The better any thing is, the more unable it is to do evil: God being the only Goodneſs, can as little be changed in his Goodneſs, as in his Eſſence.

II. The Second thing.

2. The next Enquiry is, The Proof that God is Holy, or the manifeſtation of it. Purity is as requiſite to the Bleſſedneſs of God, as to the Being of God: As he could not be God without being Bleſſed, ſo he could not be Bleſſed without being Holy. He is called by the Title of Bleſſed, as well as by that of Holy, Mark 14. 61. Art thou the Chriſt, the Son of the Bleſſed? Unrighteouſneſs is a miſery and turbulency in any Spirit wherein it is: For it is a privation of an excellency which ought to be in every intellectual Being, and what can follow upon the privation of an Excellency but unquietneſs and grief, the Moth of Happineſs? An unrighteous Man, as an unrighteous Man, can never be bleſſed, tho' he were in a local Heaven. Had God the leaſt Spot upon his Purity, it would render him as Miſerable in the midſt of his Infinite Sufficiency, as Iniquity renders a man in the confluence of his earthly Enjoyments. The Holineſs and Felicity of God are inſeparable in him. The Apoſtle intimates, that the Heathen made an attempt to ſully his Bleſſedneſs, when they would liken him to corruptible, mutable, impure Man; Rom. 1. 23, 25. They changed the Glory of the Incorruptible God into an Image made like to Corruptible Man: And after he entitles God, a God bleſſed for ever. The Goſpel is therefore called, The glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God, 1 Tim. 1. 11. In regard of the holineſs of the Goſpel Precepts, and in regard of the Declaration of the Holineſs of God in all the ſtreams and branches wherein his Purity, in which his Bleſſedneſs conſiſts, is as illuſtrious as any other Perfection of the Divine Being. God hath highly manifeſted this Attribute in the ſtate of Nature; in the Legal Adminiſtration; in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel. His Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Power, are declared in Creation; his Soveraign Authority in his Law; his Grace and Mercy in the Goſpel: and his Righteouſneſs in all. Suitable to this threefold ſtate, may be that ternal Repetition of his Holineſs in the Prophecy, Iſa. 6. 3. holy, as Creator and Benefactor; holy, as Law-giver and Judge; holy, as Reſtorer and Redeemer.

1. His Holineſs appears as he is Creator, in framing Man in a perfect Uprightneſs. Angels, as made by God, could not be evil; for God beheld his own Works with pleaſure, and could not have pronounced them all good, had ſome been created pure, and others impure: Two Moral Contrarieties could not be good. The Angels had a firſt eſtate, wherein they were happy *; and had they not left their own habitation and ſtate, they could not have been miſerable. But becauſe the Scripture ſpeaks only of the Creation of Man, we will conſider, that the Humane Nature was well ſtrung and tun'd by God, according to the Note of his own Holineſs: Eccl. 7. 29. God hath made Man upright: He had declared his Power in other Creatures, but would declare in his Rational Creature, what he moſt valu'd in himſelf; and therefore created him upright, with a Wiſdom which is the rectitude of the Mind, with a Purity which is the rectitude of the Will and Affections. He had declared a Purity in other Creatures, as much as they were capable of, viz. in the exact tuning them to anſwer one another. And that God, who ſo well tun'd and compos'd other Creatures, would not make Man a jarring Inſtrument, and place a crack'd Creature to be Lord of the reſt of his earthly Fabrick. God being holy, could not ſet his Seal upon any Rational Creature, but the Impreſſion would be like himſelf, pure and holy alſo; he could not be created with an error in his Underſtanding; that had been inconſiſtent with the Goodneſs of God to his Rational Creature; if ſo, the erroneous motion of the Will, which was to follow the Dictates of the Underſtanding, could not have been imputed to him as his Crime, becauſe it would have been, not a voluntary, but a neceſſary effect of his Nature; had there been an error in the firſt Wheel, the error of the next could not have been imputed to the Nature of that, but to the irregular motion of the firſt Wheel in the Engine. The ſin of Men and Angels proceeded not from any natural defect in their Underſtandings, but from Inconſideration: He that was the Author of Harmony in his other Creatures, could not be the Author of Diſorder in the chief of his Works: Other Creatures were his Footſteps, but Man was his Image †; Let us make Man in our image, after our likeneſs: Which tho' it ſeems to imply no more in that place, than an Image of his Dominion over the Creatures, yet the Apoſtle raiſes it a peg higher, and gives us a larger Interpretation of it, Col. 3. 10. And have put on the new man, which is renew'd in knowledge after the Image of him that created him; making it to conſiſt in a reſemblance to his Righteouſneſs. Image, ſay ſome, notes the Form, as Man was a Spirit in regard of the Soul: Likeneſs notes the Quality implanted in his Spiritual Nature: The Image of God was drawn in him, both as he was a Rational, and as he was a holy Creature. The Creatures manifeſted the being of a Superiour Power, as their Cauſe, but the Righteouſneſs of the firſt Man evidenc'd not only a Soveraign Power, as the Donor of his Being, but a holy Power, as the Pattern of his Work: God appear'd to be a holy God in the Righteouſneſs of his Creature, as well as an Underſtanding God in the Reaſon of his Creature, while he form'd him with all neceſſary knowledge in his Mind, and all neceſſary uprightneſs in his Will: The Law of Love to God, with his whole ſoul, his whole mind, his whole heart and ſtrength, was originally writ upon his Nature: All the parts of his Nature were framed in a Moral Conformity with God, to anſwer this Law, and imitate God in his purity, which conſiſts in a love of himſelf, and his own Goodneſs and Excellency. Thus doth the clearneſs of the ſtream point us to the purer Fountain, and the brightneſs of the Beam evidence a greater ſplendor in the Sun which ſhot it out.

† Gen. 1. 26, 27.

2. His Holineſs appears in his Laws, as he is a Law-giver and a Judge. Since Man was bound to be ſubject to God, as a Creature, and had a capacity to be ruled by the Law, as an underſtanding and willing Creature, God gave him a Law taken from the depths of his holy Nature, and ſuited to the Original Faculties of Man. The Rules which God hath fixed in the World, are not the reſolvés of bare Will, but reſult particularly from the goodneſs of his Nature: They are nothing elſe but the Tranſcripts of his Infinite Deteſtation of ſin, as he is the unblemiſh'd Governor of the World. This being the moſt adorable Property of his Nature, he hath impreſs'd it upon that Law which he would have inviolably obſerv'd as a perpetual Rule for our Actions, that we may every moment think of this beautiful Perfection. God can command nothing, but what hath ſome ſimilitude with the rectitude of his own Nature: All his Laws, every Paragraph of them therefore ſcent of this, and glitter with it. Deut. 4. 8. What Nation hath Statutes and Judgments ſo righteous as all this Law I ſet before you this day? and therefore they are compar'd to fine Gold, that hath no ſpeck or droſs *.

* Pſal. 19. 10.

This Parity is evident,

1. In the Moral Law, or Law of Nature.
2. In the Ceremonial Law.
3. In the Allurements annex'd to it for keeping it, and the Affrightments to reſtrain from the breaking of it.
4. In the Judgments inflicted for the Violation of it.

1. In the Moral Law: Which is therefore dignified with the Title of holy, twice in one Verſe, Rom. 7. 12. Wherefore the Law is holy, and the Commandment is holy, juſt, and good. It being the expreſs Image of God's Will, as our Saviour was of his Perſon, and bearing a reſemblance to the Purity of his Nature. The Tables of this Law were put into the Ark, that as the Mercy Seat was to repreſent the Grace of God, ſo the Law was to repreſent the Holineſs of God *. The Pſalmiſt, after he had ſpoken of the Glory of God in the Heavens, wherein the Power of God is expos'd to our view, introduceth the Law, wherein the Purity of God is evidenc'd to our Minds †; perfect, pure, clean, righteous, are the titles given to it. 'Tis clearer in Holineſs, than the Sun is in Brightneſs; and more mighty in it ſelf to command the Conſcience, than the Sun is to run its Race. As the Holineſs of the Scripture demonſtrates the Divinity of its Author; ſo the Holineſs of the Law doth the Purity of the Lawgiver.

* Pſal. 19.

† Ver. 7, 8, &c.

1. The Purity of this Law is ſeen in the Matter of it. It preſcribes all that becomes a Creature towards God, and all that becomes one Creature towards another of his own rank and kind. The Image of God is compleat in the Holineſs of the firſt Table, and the Righteouſneſs of the ſecond; which is intimated by the Apoſtle, Eph. 4. 24. the one being the Rule of what we owe to God; the other being the Rule of what we owe to man: There is no Good but it enjoyns, and no Evil but it diſowns. 'Tis not ſickly and lame in any part of it; not a good action, but it gives it its due praiſe; and not an evil action, but it ſets a condemning mark upon. The Commands of it are frequently in Scripture call'd Judgments, becauſe they rightly judge of good and evil, and are a clear light to inform the Judgment of Man in the knowledge of both. By this was the Underſtanding of David enlightned to know every falſe way, and to hate it ‖. There is no Caſe can happen, but may meet with a Determination from it; it teaches Men the nobleſt manner of living a life like God himſelf; honourably for the Law-giver, and joyfully for the Subject. It directs us to the higheſt End; ſets us at a diſtance from all baſe and ſordid Practiſes; it propoſeth Light to the Underſtanding, and Goodneſs to the Will. It would tune all the Strings, ſet right all the Orders of Mankind: It cenſures the leaſt Mote, countenanceth not any ſtain in the Life. Not a wanton Glance can meet with any juſtification from it †: not a raſh Anger, but it frowns upon ‖. As the Law-giver wants nothing as an addition to his Bleſſedneſs; ſo his Law wants nothing as a ſupplement to its Perfection, Deut. 4. 2. What our Saviour ſeems to add, is not an addition to mend any Defects; but a reſtoration of it from the corrupt Gloſſes, wherewith the Scribes and Phariſees had eclips'd the brightneſs of it: They had curtail'd it, and diminiſh'd part of its Authority, cutting off its Empire over the leaſt Evil, and left its power only to check the groſſer Practiſes. But Chriſt reſtores it to the due extent of its Soveraignty, and ſhews it in thoſe dimenſions in which the holy men of God conſider'd it, as exceeding broad, Pſal. 119. 96. reaching to all Actions, all Motions, all Circumſtances attending them; full of inexhauſtible Treaſures of Righteouſneſs. And tho' this Law, ſince the Fall, doth irritate Sin, 'tis no diſparagement, but a Teſtimony to the Righteouſneſs of it; which the Apoſtle manifeſts by his Wherefore, Rom. 7. 8. Sin taking occaſion by the Commandment, wrought in me all manner of Concupiſcence; and repeating the ſame ſenſe, ver. 11. ſubjoyns a Wherefore, ver. 22. Wherefore the Law is holy. The riſing of Mens ſinful hearts againſt the Law of God, when it ſtrikes with its Perceptive and Minatory parts upon their Conſciences, evidenceth the Holineſs of the Law and the Law-giver.

In

In its own nature it is a Directing Rule, but the malignant nature of Sin is exaſperated by it; as an hoſtile quality in a Creature, will awaken it ſelf at the appearance of its Enemy. The Purity of this Beam, and Tranſcript of God, bears witneſs to a greater clearneſs and beauty in the Sun and Original. Undefiled Streams manifeſt an untainted Fountain.

2. It is ſeen in the manner of its Precepts. As it preſcribes all Good, and forbids all Evil; ſo it doth enjoyn the one, and baniſh the other as ſuch. The Laws of Men command Virtuous things; not as Virtuous in themſelves, but as uſeful for Human Society; which the Magiſtrate is the Conſervator of, and the Guardian of Juſtice *. The Laws of Men contain not all the Precepts of Virtue, but only ſuch as are accommodated to their Cuſtoms, and are uſeful to preſerve the Ligaments of their Government. The deſign of them is not ſo much to render the Subjects good Men, as good Citizens: They order the Practice of thoſe Virtues that may ſtrengthen Civil Society, and diſcountenance thoſe Vices only which weaken the Sinews of it: But God, being the Guardian of Univerſal Righteouſneſs, doth not only enact the Obſervance of all righteouſneſs, but the obſervance of it as Righteouſneſs. He commands that which is Juſt in it ſelf; enjoyns Virtues as Virtues, and prohibits Vices as Vices; as they are profitable or injurious to our ſelves, as well as to others.

* Ames de Conſc. lib. 5. cap. 1. queſt. 7.

Men command Temperance and Juſtice; not as Virtues in themſelves, but as they prevent Diſorder and Confuſion in a Common-wealth: And forbid Adultery and Theft; not as Vices in themſelves, but as they are Intrenchments upon Property: Not as hurtful to the Perſon that commits them, but as hurtful to the Perſon againſt whoſe Right they are committed. Upon this account perhaps Paul applauds the Holineſs of the Law of God, in regard of its own Nature, as conſider'd in it ſelf, more than he doth the Juſtice of it in regard of Man, and the goodneſs and conveniency of it to the World; Rom. 7. 12. the Law is Holy twice, and Juſt and Good but once.

3. In the Spiritual extent of it. The moſt Righteous Powers of the World do not ſo much regard in their Laws what the Inward Affections of their Subjects are: The External Acts are only the Objects of their Decrees, either to encourage them if they be uſeful, or diſcourage them if they be hurtful to the Community. And indeed they can do no other, for they have no Power proportion'd to Inward Affections, ſince the Inward Diſpoſition falls not under their Cenſure; and it would be fooliſh for any Legiſlative Power to make ſuch Laws, which it is impoſſible for it to put in Execution. They can prohibit the Outward Acts of Theft and Murder, but they cannot command the Love of God, the Hatred of Sin, the Contempt of the World; they cannot prohibit Unclean Thoughts, and the Atheiſm of the Heart. But the Law of God ſurmounts in Righteouſneſs all the Laws of the beſt regulated Commonwealths in the World: It reſtrains the licentious Heart, as well as the violent Hand; it damps the very firſt bubblings of corrupt Nature, orders a Purity in the Spring; commands a clean Fountain, clean Streams, clean Veſſels. It would frame the Heart to an inward, as well as the Life to an outward Righteouſneſs, and make the inſide purer than the outſide. It forbids the firſt belchings of a Murderous or Adulterous intention: It obligeth Man as a Rational Creature, and therefore exacts a conformity of every Rational Faculty, and of whatſoever is under the Command of them. It commands the Private Cloſet to be free from the leaſt Cobweb, as well as the outward Porch to be clean from Mire and Dirt. It frowns upon all ſtains and pollutions of the moſt retired thoughts: Hence the Apoſtle calls it, a Spiritual Law, Rom. 7. 14. as not Political, but extending its force further than the Frontiers of the Man; placing its Enſigns in the Metropolis of the Heart and Mind, and curbing with its Scepter the inward motions of the Spirit, and commanding over the ſecrets of every Man's Breaſt.

4. In regard of the perpetuity of it. The purity and perpetuity of it are link'd together by the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 19. 9. The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever; the fear of the Lord, that is, that Law which commands the fear and worſhip of God, and is the Rule of it. And indeed, God values it at ſuch a rate, that rather than part with a tittle, or let the honour of it lie in the duſt, he would not only let Heaven and Earth paſs away, but expoſe his Son to death for the reparation of the wrong it had ſuſtain'd. So holy it is, that the Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God cannot diſpenſe with it, cannot abrogate it, without deſpoiling himſelf of his own Being: 'Tis a Copy of the Eternal Law. Can he ever abrogate the command of Love to himſelf, without ſhewing ſome contempt of his own Excellency and very Being? Before he can enjoyn a Creature not to love him, he muſt make himſelf unworthy of Love, and worthy of Hatred; this would be the higheſt Unrighteouſneſs, to order us to hate that which is only worthy of our higheſt Affections. * So God cannot change the firſt Command, and order us to worſhip many Gods; this would be againſt the Excellency and Unity of God: For God cannot conſtitute another God, or make any thing worthy of an Honour equal with himſelf. Thoſe things that are good, only becauſe they are commanded, are alterable by God: Thoſe things that are intrinſecally and eſſentially good, and therefore commanded, are unalterable as long as the Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God ſtand firm. The intrinſick Goodneſs of the Moral Law, the concern God hath for it; the perpetuity of the Precepts of the firſt Table, and the care he hath had to imprint the Precepts of the Second upon the Minds and Conſciences of Men, as the Author of Nature for the preſervation of the World, manifeſts the Holineſs of the Law-maker and Governor.

* Suarez.

2. His Holineſs appears in the Ceremonial Law. In the variety of Sacrifices for Sin, wherein he writ his deteſtation of Unrighteouſneſs in bloody Characters. His Holineſs was more conſtantly expreſt in the continual Sacrifices, than in thoſe rarer ſprinklings of Judgments now and then upon the world, which often reach'd not the worſt, but the moſt moderate Sinners, and were the occaſions of the queſtioning of the Righteouſneſs of his Providence both by Jews and Gentiles. In Judgments his Purity was only now and then manifeſt: By his long Patience, he might be imagin'd by ſome reconcil'd to their Crimes, or not much concern'd in them; but by the Morning and Evening Sacrifice he witneſs'd a perpetual and uninterrupted Abhorrence of whatſoever was evil.

Beſides thoſe, the occaſional Waſhings and Sprinklings upon Ceremonial Defilements, which polluted only the Body, gave an evidence, that every thing that had a reſemblance to Evil, was loathſom to him. Add alſo the Prohibitions of eating ſuch and ſuch Creatures that were filthy; as the Swine that wallow'd in the Mire, a fit Emblem for the prophane and brutiſh Sinner; which had a Moral ſignification, both of the loathſomneſs of Sin to God, and the averſion themſelves ought to have to every thing that was filthy.

3. His

3. His Holineſs appears in the Allurements annex'd to the Law for keeping it; and the Affrightments to reſtrain from the breaking of it. Both Promiſes and Threatnings have their Fundamental Root in the Holineſs of God, and are both Branches of this peculiar Perfection. As they reſpect the Nature of God, they are Declarations of his hatred of Sin, and his love of Righteouſneſs; the one belong to his Threatnings, the other to his Promiſes; both joyn together to repreſent this Divine Perfection to the Creature, and to excite to an imitation in the Creature. In the one, God would render Sin odious, becauſe dangerous; and curb the practice of Evil, which would otherwiſe be licentious: In the other, he would commend Righteouſneſs, and excite a love of it, which would otherwiſe be cold. By theſe God ſutes the two great Affections of Men, Fear and Hope; both the branches of Self-love in Man: The Promiſes and Threatnings are both the Branches of Holineſs in God. The end of the Promiſes is the ſame with the Exhortation the Apoſtle concludes from them, 2 Cor. 7. 1. Having theſe Promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of Fleſh and Spirit, perfecting Holineſs in the fear of God. As the end of Precepts is to direct, the end of Threatnings is to deter from Iniquity; ſo that of the Promiſes, is to allure to Obedience. Thus God breaths out his Love to Righteouſneſs in every Promiſe, his Hatred of Sin in every Threatning. The Rewards offer'd in the one, are the Smiles of pleaſed Holineſs; and the Curſes thunder'd in the other, are the Sparklings of enraged Righteouſneſs.

4. His Holineſs appears in the Judgments inflicted for the violation of this Law. Divine Holineſs is the Root of Divine Juſtice, and Divine Juſtice is the Triumph of Divine Holineſs. Hence both are expreſſed in Scripture by one word of Righteouſneſs, which ſometimes ſignifies the rectitude of the Divine Nature, and ſometimes the vindicative ſtroke of his Arm; Pſal. 103. 6. The Lord executeth Righteouſneſs and Judgment for all that are oppreſſed. So Dan. 9. 7. Righteouſneſs (that is, Juſtice) belongs to thee. The Vials of his Wrath are filled from his implacable averſion to Iniquity. All Penal Evils ſhowr'd down upon the heads of wicked Men, ſpread their root in, and branch out from this Perfection. All the dreadful Storms and Tempeſts in the World are blown up by it. Why doth he rain Snares, Fire and Brimſtone, and a horrible Tempeſt? becauſe the righteous Lord loveth Righteouſneſs, Pſal. 11. 6, 7. And (as was obſerv'd before) when he was going about the dreadful'ſt Work that ever was in the World; the overturning the Jewiſh ſtate, hardening the Hearts of that Unbelieving People, and caſhiering a Nation (once dear to him) from the honour of his Protection; His Holineſs, as the Spring of all this, is applauded by the Seraphims, Iſa. 6. 3. compar'd with verſ. 9, 10, 11, &c. Impunity argues the approbation of a Crime, and Puniſhment the abhorrency of it. The greatneſs of the Crime, and the Righteouſneſs of the Judge, are the firſt Natural Sentiments that ariſe in the minds of Men upon the appearance of Divine Judgments in the World, by thoſe that are near them *. As when Men ſee Gibbets erected, Scaffolds prepared, Inſtruments of Death and Torture provided, and grievous Puniſhments inflicted; the firſt reflection in the Spectators, is the Malignity of the Crime, and the deteſtation the Governors are poſſeſſed with.

*Amiraut. Moral. tom. 5. p. 388.

2. How ſeverely hath he puniſh'd his moſt noble Creatures for it? The once glorious Angels, upon whom he had been at greater coſt than upon other Creatures, and drawn more lively Lineaments of his own Excellency, upon the Tranſgreſſion of his Law, are thrown into the Furnace of Juſtice without any Mercy to pity them, Jude 6. And tho' there were but one ſort of Creatures upon the Earth that bore his Image, and were only fit to publiſh and keep up his Honour below the Heavens; yet upon their Apoſtacy (tho' upon a Temptation from a ſubtile and inſinuating Spirit) the Man, with all his Poſterity, is ſentenc'd to miſery in Life, and Death at laſt; and the Woman, with all her Sex, have ſtanding Puniſhments inflicted on them; which as they begun in their Perſons, were to reach as far as the laſt Member of their ſucceſſive Generations. So Holy is God, that he will not endure a Spot in his choiceſt Work. Men indeed, when there is a crack in an excellent piece of Work, or a ſtain upon a rich Garment, do not caſt it away; they value it for the remaining Excellency, more than hate it for the contracted Spot: But God ſaw no Excellency in his Creature worthy regarding, after the Image of that which he moſt eſteem'd in himſelf, was defaced.

2. How deteſtable to him are the very Inſtruments of Sin? For the ill uſe, the Serpent (an Irrational Creature) was put to death by the Devil, as an Inſtrument in the Fall of Man, the whole brood of thoſe Animals are Curſt, Gen. 3. 14. Curſed above all Cattel, and above every Beaſt of the Field. Not only the Devil's Head is threatned to be for ever bruiſed, and (as ſome think) render'd irrecoverable upon this further Teſtimony of his Malice in the Seduction of Man; who perhaps without this new Act, might have been admitted into the Arms of Mercy, notwithſtanding his firſt Sin; [tho' the Scripture gives us no account of this, only this is the only Sentence we read of pronounc'd againſt the Devil, which puts him into an irrecoverable ſtate by a mortal bruiſing of his Head.] But, I ſay, He is not only puniſh'd, but the Organ whereby he blew in his Temptation, is put into a worſe condition than it was before. Thus God hated the Spunge, whereby the Devil deform'd his beautiful Image: Thus God, to manifeſt his deteſtation of Sin, order'd the Beaſt whereby any Man was ſlain, to be ſlain as well as the Malefactor, Levit. 20. 15. The Gold and Silver that had been abuſed to Idolatry, and were the Ornaments of Images; tho' good in themſelves, and uncapable of a Criminal Nature, were not to be brought into their Houſes, but deteſted and abhorred by them, becauſe they were curſed, and an abomination to the Lord. See with what loathing Expreſſions this Law is enjoyn'd to them, Deut. 7. 25, 26. So contrary is the holy Nature of God to every Sin, that it curſeth every thing that is Inſtrumental in it.

3. How deteſtable is every thing to him that is in the Sinner's poſſeſſion? The very Earth, which God had made Adam the Proprietor of, was Curſed for his ſake, Gen. 3. 17, 18. It loſt its Beauty, and lies languiſhing to this day; and notwithſtanding the Redemption by Chriſt, hath not recover'd its health, nor is it like to do, till the compleating the Fruits of it upon the Children of God, Rom. 8. 20, 21, 22. The whole Lower Creation was made ſubject to vanity, and put into Pangs upon the Sin of Man, by the Righteouſneſs of God deteſting his Offence. How often hath his implacable averſion from Sin been ſhewn; not only in his Judgments upon the Offender's Perſon, but by wrapping up in the ſame Judgment thoſe which ſtood in a near relation to them? Achan, with his Children and Cattel, are overwhelmed with Stones, and burned togethet, Joſh. 7. 24, 25. In the deſtruction of Sodom; not only the grown Malefactors, but the young Spawn, the Infants (at preſent uncapable of the ſame Wickedneſs) and their Cattel were burnt up by the ſame Fire from Heaven; and the place where their Habitations ſtood, is at this day partly a heap of Aſhes, and partly an Infectious Lake, that choaks any Fiſh that ſwim into it from Jordan, and ſtifles (as is related) by its vapor, any Bird that attempts to fly over it. Oh, how deteſtable is Sin to God, that cauſes him to turn a pleaſant Land, as the Garden of the Lord (as it is ſtiled Gen. 13. 10.) into a Lake of Sulphur; to make it both in his Word and Works, as a laſting Monument of his abhorrence of Evil!

4. What Deſign hath God in all theſe Acts of Severity and Vindictive Juſtice, but to ſet off the luſtre of his Holineſs? He teſtifies himſelf concern'd for thoſe Laws, which he hath ſet as Hedges and Limits to the Luſts of Men; and therefore when he breaths forth his fiery Indignation againſt a People, he is ſaid to get himſelf Honor: As when he intended the Red Sea ſhould ſwallow up the Egyptian Army, Exod. 14. 17, 18. which Moſes in his triumphant Song ecchoes back again, Exod. 15. 1. Thou haſt triumphed glorioufly; glorioufly in his Holineſs, which is the glory of his Nature; as Moſes himſelf interprets it in the Text. When Men will not own the Holineſs of God in a way of Duty, God will vindicate it in a way of Juſtice and Puniſhment. In the deſtruction of Aaron's Sons, that were Will-worſhippers, and would take ſtrange Fire, Sanctified and Glorified are coupled, Lev. x. 3. He glorified himſelf in that Act, in vindicating his Holineſs before all the People, declaring, that he will not endure Sin and Diſobedience. He doth therefore in this Life more ſeverely puniſh the Sins of his People, when they preſume upon any act of Diſobedience; for a Teſtimony, that the nearneſs and dearneſs of any Perſon to him, ſhall not make him unconcern'd in his Holineſs, or be a Plea for Impurity. The end of all his Judgments, is to witneſs to the World his abominating of Sin. To puniſh and witneſs againſt Men, are one and the ſame thing, Micah 1. 2. The Lord ſhall witneſs againſt you; and it is the Witneſs of God's Holineſs, Hoſ. 5. 5. And the pride of Iſrael doth teſtifie to his face: One renders it, the excellency of Iſrael, and underſtands it of God; the word גאון which is here in our tranſlation Pride, is render'd Excellency, Amos 8. 7. The Lord God hath ſworn by his Excellency; which is interpreted Holineſs, Amos 4. 2. The Lord God hath ſworn by his Holineſs. What is the iſſue or end of this ſwearing by Holineſs, and of his Excellency teſtifying againſt them? In all thoſe places you will find them to be ſweeping Judgments: In one, Iſrael and Ephraim ſhall fall in their Iniquity; in another, He will take them away with hooks, and their Poſterity with fiſh-hooks; and in another, He would never forget any of their Works. He that puniſheth wickedneſs in thoſe he before us'd with the greateſt Tenderneſs, furniſheth the World with an undeniable evidence of the deteſtableneſs of it to him. Were not Judgments ſometimes poured out upon the World, it would be believ'd, that God were rather an approver, than an enemy to Sin.

To Conclude, Since God hath made a ſtricter Law to guide Men; annex'd Promiſes above the merit of Obedience, to allure them; and Threatnings, dreadful enough to affright Men from Diſobedience. He cannot be the cauſe of Sin, nor a lover of it. How can he be the Author of that which he ſo ſeverely forbids; or love that which he delights to puniſh; or be fondly indulgent to any evil, when he hates the ignorant Inſtruments in the Offences of his reaſonable Creatures?

III. The Holineſs of God appears in our Reſtoration. 'Tis in the Glaſs of the Goſpel we behold the *Glory of the Lord, that is, the Glory of the Lord, into whoſe Image we are changed; but we are changed into nothing, as the Image of God, but into Holineſs: We bore not upon us by Creation, nor by Regeneration, the Image of any other Perfection: We cannot be chang'd into his Omnipotence, Omniſcience, &c. but into the Image of his Righteouſneſs. This is the pleaſing and glorious ſight the Goſpel Mirror darts in our Eyes. The whole Scene of Redemption is nothing elſe but a diſcovery of Judgment and Righteouſneſs, Iſaiah 1. 27. Zion ſhall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteouſneſs.

* 2 Cor. 3. 18.

1. This Holineſs of God appears in the manner of our Reſtoration, viz. by the death of Chriſt. Not all the Vials of Judgments, that have, or ſhall be poured out upon the wicked World, nor the flaming Furnace of a Sinner's Conſcience, nor the irreverſible Sentence pronounc'd againſt the rebellious Devils, nor the groans of the damned Creatures, give ſuch a demonſtration of God's hatred of Sin, as the Wrath of God let looſe upon his Son. Never did Divine Holineſs appear more beautiful and lovely, than at the time our Saviour's Countenance was moſt marr'd in the midſt of his dying Groans. This himſelf acknowledges in that Prophetical Pſalm, Pſal. 22. 1, 2. when God had turn'd his ſmiling Face from him, and thruſt his ſharp Knife into his Heart, which forced that terrible cry from him, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? He adores this perfection of Holineſs, ver. 3. But thou art holy: Thy Holineſs is the Spring of this ſharp Agony, and for this thou inhabiteſt, and ſhalt for ever inhabit the Praiſes of all thy Iſrael. Holineſs drew the Veil between God's Countenance and our Saviour's Soul. Juſtice indeed gave the ſtroke, but Holineſs order'd it. In this his Purity did ſparkle, and his irreverſible Juſtice manifeſted, that all thoſe that commit Sin are worthy of Death; this was the perfect Index of his Righteouſneſs *, that is, of his Holineſs and Truth; then it was that God that is Holy, was ſanctified in Righteouſneſs, Iſa. 5. 16. * Rom. 3. 29.

It appears the more, if you conſider,

1. The Dignity of the Redeemer's Perſon. One that had been from Eternity; had laid the Foundations of the World; had been the Object of the Divine Delight: He that was God bleſſed for ever, becomes a Curſe: He who was bleſſed by Angels, and by whom God bleſſed the World, muſt be ſeiz'd with Horror: The Son of Eternity muſt bleed to death. Where did ever Sin appear ſo irreconcilable to God? Where did God ever break out ſo furiouſly in his deteſtation of Iniquity? The Father would have the moſt Excellent Perſon, one next in order to himſelf, and equal to him in all the glorious Perfections of his Nature *, Dye on a diſgraceful Croſs, and be expos'd to the flames of Divine Wrath, rather than Sin ſhould live, and his Holineſs remain for ever diſparag'd by the Violations of his Law. * Phil. 2. 6.

2. The near relation he ſtood in to the Father. He was his own Son that he delivered up, Rom. 8. 32. His Eſſential Image, as dearly beloved by him as himſelf; yet he would abate nothing of his hatred of thoſe Sins imputed to one ſo dear to him, and who never had done any thing contrary to his Will. The ſtrong Cries utter'd by him, could not cauſe him to cut off the leaſt Fringe of this Royal Garment, nor part with a Thread the Robe of his Holineſs was woven with. The torrent of Wrath is open'd upon him, and the Father's Heart beats not in the leaſt notice of tenderneſs to Sin, in the midſt of his Son's Agonies. * God ſeems to lay aſide the Bowels of a Father, and put on the Garb of an irreconcileable Enemy. Upon which account, probably, our Saviour in the midſt of his Paſſion gives him * Lingend. Tom. 3. p. 699, 700.

him the Title of God; not of Father, the Title he uſually before Addreſt to him with, Matth. 27. 46. My God, my God; not, My Father, my Father, why haſt thou forſaken me? He ſeems to hang upon the Croſs like a diſinherited Son, while he appear'd in the garb and rank of a Sinner. Then was his head loaded with Curſes, when he ſtood under that Sentence of, Curſed is every one that hangs upon a tree, Gal. 3. 13. and look'd as one forlorn and rejected by the Divine Purity and Tenderneſs. God dealt not with him, as if he had been one in ſo near a relation to him. He left him not the Will only of the Inſtruments of his Death, he would have the chiefeſt blow himſelf of bruiſing him, Iſa. 53. 10. It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him: the Lord, becauſe the power of Creatures could not ſtrike a blow ſtrong enough, to ſatisfie and ſecure the Rights of Infinite Holineſs. It was therefore a Cup temper'd and put into his hands by his Father; a Cup given him to drink. In other Judgments he lets out his Wrath againſt his Creatures; in this he lets out his Wrath (as it were) againſt Himſelf, againſt his Son, One as dear to him as himſelf. As in his making Creatures, his Power over Nothing to bring it into Being appear'd; but in pardoning Sin he hath power over himſelf; ſo in puniſhing Creatures, his Holineſs appears in his Wrath againſt Creatures, againſt Sinners by inherency: But by puniſhing Sin in his Son, his Holineſs ſharpens his Wrath againſt him who was his Equal, and only a reputed Sinner: As if his Affection to his own Holineſs, ſurmounted his Affection to his Son: For he choſe to ſuſpend the breakings out of his Affections to his Son, and ſee him plung'd in a ſharp and ignominious Miſery, without giving him any viſible Token of his Love, rather than ſee his Holineſs lie groaning under the Injuries of a Tranſgreſſing World.

3. The Value he puts upon his Holineſs appears further, in the advancement of this Redeeming Perſon after his death. Our Saviour was advanc'd, not barely for his Dying, but for the reſpect he had in his Death to this Attribute of God. Heb. 1. 9. Thou haſt loved Righteouſneſs, and hated Iniquity: therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oyl of gladneſs, &c. By Righteouſneſs is meant this Perfection, becauſe of the oppoſition of it to Iniquity. Some think [Therefore] to be the final Cauſe; as if this were the ſenſe, Thou art anointed with the oyl of gladneſs, that thou mighteſt love righteouſneſs and hate iniquity. But the Holy Ghoſt ſeeming to ſpeak in this Chapter, not only of the Godhead of Chriſt, but of his Exaltation; the Doctrine whereof he had begun in Verſe 3. and proſecutes in the following Verſes; I would rather underſtand [Therefore] For this cauſe, or reaſon, hath God anointed thee; not, to this end. Chriſt indeed had an Unction of Grace, whereby he was fitted for his Mediatory work; He had alſo an Unction of Glory, whereby he was rewarded for it. In the firſt regard, it was a qualifying him for his Office; in the ſecond regard, it was a ſolemn inaugurating him in his Royal Authority. And the Reaſon of his being ſetled upon a Throne for ever and ever, is, becauſe he loved Righteouſneſs. He ſuffer'd himſelf to be pierced to death, that Sin, the Enemy of God's Purity, might be deſtroy'd; and the Honour of the Law, the Image of God's Holineſs, might be repair'd and fulfill'd in the Fallen Creature. He reſtor'd the credit of Divine Holineſs in the World, in manifeſting by his Death, God, an irreconcileable Enemy to all Sin; in aboliſhing the Empire of Sin, ſo hateful to God, and reſtoring the rectitude of Nature, and new framing the Image of God in his choſen ones.

And God ſo valued this Vindication of his Holineſs, that he confers upon him; in his Human Nature, an Eternal Royalty and Empire over Angels and Men. Holineſs was the great Attribute reſpected by Chriſt in his dying, and manifeſted in his death; and for his love to this, God would beſtow an Honour upon his Perſon, in that Nature wherein he did vindicate the Honour of ſo dear a Perfection. In the death of Chriſt, he ſhew'd his Reſolution to preſerve its Rights. In the exaltation of Chriſt, he evidenc'd his mighty pleaſure for the vindication of it. In both, the Infinite value he had for it, as dear to him as his Life and Glory.

4. It may be further conſider'd, that in this way of Redemption, his Holineſs in the hatred of Sin ſeems to be valued above any other Attribute. He proclaims the value of it above the Perſon of his Son; ſince the Divine Nature of the Redeemer is diſguis'd, obſcur'd and veil'd, in order to the reſtoring the Honour of it. And Chriſt ſeems to value it above his own Perſon, ſince he ſubmitted himſelf to the Reproaches of Men, to clear this perfection of the Divine Nature, and make it Illuſtrious in the Eyes of the World. You heard before, at the beginning of the handling this Argument; It was the Beauty of the Deity, the Luſtre of his Nature, the Link of all his Attributes, his very Life; he values it equal with Himſelf, ſince he ſwears by it, as well as by his Life. And none of his Attributes would have a due decorum without it: 'Tis the glory of Power, Mercy, Juſtice, Wiſdom, that they are all holy. So that tho' God had an infinite tenderneſs and compaſſion to the fallen Creature, yet it ſhould not extend it ſelf in his relief to the prejudice of the Rights of his Purity: He would have this triumph in the tenderneſs of his Mercy, as well as the ſeverities of his Juſtice. His Mercy had not appear'd in its true colours, nor attain'd a regular End, without Vengeance on Sin. It would have been a Compaſſion, that would (in ſparing the Sinner) have encourag'd the Sin, and affronted Holineſs in the Iſſues of it: Had he diſperſed his Compaſſions about the World without the regard to his hatred of Sin, his Mercy had been too cheap, and his Holineſs had been contemn'd. His Mercy would not have triumph'd in his own Nature, whilſt his Holineſs had ſuffer'd: He had exercis'd a Mercy with the impairing his own Glory.

But now, in this way of Redemption, the Rights of both are ſecur'd, both have their due luſtre: The odiouſneſs of Sin is equally diſcover'd with the greateſt of his Compaſſions; an infinite abhorrence of Sin, and an infinite love to the World march hand in hand together: Never was ſo much of the irreconcileableneſs of Sin to him, ſet forth, as in the moment he was opening his Bowels in the reconciliation of the Sinner. Sin is made the chiefeſt mark of his Diſpleaſure, while the poor Creature is made the higheſt object of Divine Pity. There could have been no motion of Mercy, with the leaſt injury to Purity and Holineſs. In this way Mercy and Truth, Mercy to the miſery of the Creature, and Truth to the purity of the Law, have met together; the Righteouſneſs of God, and the Peace of the Sinner, have kiſſed each other, Pſal. 85. 10.

II. The Holineſs of God in his hatred of Sin, appears in our Juſtification, and the conditions he requires of all that would enjoy the benefit of Redemption. His Wiſdom hath ſo temper'd all the Conditions of it, that the honour of his Holineſs is as much preſerv'd, as the ſweetneſs of his Mercy is experimented by us. All the conditions are Records of his exact Purity, as well as of his condeſcending Grace. Our Juſtification is not by the imperfect Works of Creatures, but by an exact and infinite Righteouſneſs, as great as that of the Deity, which had had been offended: It being the Righteouſneſs of a Divine Perſon, upon which account it is call'd the Righteouſneſs of God; not only in regard of God's appointing it, and God's accepting it, but as it is a Righteouſneſs of that Perſon that was God, and is God. Faith is the Condition God requires to Juſtification; but not a dead, but an active Faith, ſuch a Faith as purifies the Heart *. He calls for Repentance, which is a Moral retracting our Offences, and an approbation of contemn'd Righteouſneſs and a violated Law; an endeavour to regain what is loſt, and to pluck out the heart of that Sin we have committed. He requires Mortification, which is called Crucifying; whereby a Man would ſtrike as full and deadly a blow at his Luſts, as was ſtruck at Chriſt upon the Croſs, and make them as certainly die, as the Redeemer did.

* James 2. 20. Acts 15. 9.

Our own Righteouſneſs muſt be condemn'd by us, as impure and imperfect: We muſt diſown every thing that is our own, as to Righteouſneſs, in reverence to the Holineſs of God, and the valuation of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt. He hath reſolv'd, not to beſtow the Inheritance of Glory, without the Root of Grace. None are partakers of the Divine Bleſſedneſs, that are not partakers of the Divine Nature: There muſt be a renewing of his Image, before there be a viſion of his Face *. He will not have Men brought only into a Relative ſtate of Happineſs by Juſtification, without a Real ſtate of Grace by Sanctification. And ſo reſolved he is in it, that there is no admittance into Heaven of a ſtarting, but a perſevering Holineſs; Rom. 2. 7. a patient continuance in well-doing: Patient under the ſharpneſs of Affliction, and continuing under the pleaſures of Proſperity. Hence it is that the Goſpel, the reſtoring Doctrine, hath not only the motives of Rewards to allure us to Good, and the danger of Puniſhments to ſcare us from Evil, as the Law had; but they are ſet forth in a higher ſtrain, in a way of ſtronger Engagement, the Rewards are Heavenly, and the Puniſhments Eternal: And more powerful Motives beſides, from the choicer Expreſſions of God's Love in the Death of his Son. The whole Deſign of it is to re-inſtate us in a reſemblance to this Divine Perfection; whereby he ſhews what an Affection he hath to this Excellency of his Nature, and what a deteſtation he hath of Evil, which is contrary to it.

* Heb. 12. 14.

3. It appears in the actual Regeneration of the Redeemed Souls, and a carrying it on to a full perfection. As Election is the effect of God's Soveraignty, our Pardon the fruit of his Mercy, our Knowledge a ſtream from his Wiſdom, our Strength an impreſſion of his Power; ſo our Purity is a Beam from his Holineſs. The whole Work of Sanctification, and the preſervation of it, our Saviour begs for his Diſciples of his Father, under this Title, John 17. 11, 17. Holy Father, keep them through thy own name, and ſanctifie them through thy truth, as the proper ſource whence Holineſs was to flow to the Creature: As the Sun is the proper Fountain whence Light is derived, both to the Stars above, and Bodies here below. Whence He is not only called Holy, but the Holy one of Iſrael, Iſai. 43. 15. I am the Lord your Holy One, the Creator of Iſrael: Diſplaying his Holineſs in them, by a new Creation of them as his Iſrael. As the rectitude of the Creature at the firſt Creation was the effect of his Holineſs; ſo the Purity of the Creature by a New Creation, is a draught of the ſame Perfection. He is called the Holy One of Iſrael more in Iſaiah, that Evangelical Prophet, in erecting Zion, and forming a People for himſelf, than in the whole Scripture beſides. As he ſent Jeſus Chriſt to ſatisfie his Juſtice for the Expiation of the Guilt of Sin, ſo he ſends the Holy Ghoſt for the cleanſing the Filth of Sin, and over-maſtering the Power of it: Himſelf is the Fountain, the Son is the Pattern, and the Holy Ghoſt the immediate Imprinter of this ſtamp of Holineſs upon the Creature. God hath ſuch a value for this Attribute, that he deſigns the glory of this in the renewing the Creature, more than the happineſs of the Creature; tho' the one doth neceſſarily follow upon the other, yet the one is the principal Deſign, and the other the conſequent of the former: Whence our Salvation is more frequently ſet forth, in Scripture, by a Redemption from Sin, and Sanctification of the Soul, than by a poſſeſſion of Heaven *.

* Tit. 2. 11, 12, 13, 14. and many other places.

Indeed, as God could not create a Rational Creature, without intereſting this Attribute in a ſpecial manner; ſo he cannot reſtore the Fallen Creature without it. As in creating a Rational Creature, there muſt be Holineſs to adorn it, as well as Wiſdom to form the deſign, and Power to effect it; ſo in the reſtoration of the Creature, as he could not make a Reaſonable Creature unholy; ſo he cannot reſtore a Fallen Creature, and put him in a meet poſture to take pleaſure in him, without communicating to him a Reſemblance of himſelf. As God cannot be bleſſed in himſelf without this perfection of Purity; ſo neither can a Creature be bleſſed without it. As God would be Unlovely to Himſelf without this Attribute; ſo would the Creature be unlovely to God, without a ſtamp and mark of it upon his Nature. So much is this Perfection one with God, valued by him, and intereſted in all his Works and Ways.

The third Thing I am to do, is to lay down ſome Propoſitions in the defence of God's holineſs in all his acts, about or concerning ſin. It was a prudent and pious advice of Camero; Not to be too buſie and raſh in Inquiries and Concluſions about the reaſon of God's Providence in the matter of Sin. The Scripture hath put a Bar in the way of ſuch Curioſity, by telling us, That the ways of God's Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs in his Judgments are unſearchable *: Much more the ways of God's Holineſs, as he ſtands in relation to Sin, as a Governour of the World; we cannot conſider thoſe things without danger of ſlipping: Our Eyes are too weak to look upon the Sun without being dazled: Too much Curioſity met with a juſt Check in our firſt Parent. To be deſirous to know the reaſon of all God's proceedings in the matter of Sin, is to ſecond the Ambition of Adam, to be as wiſe as God, and know the reaſon of his actings equally with himſelf. 'Tis more eaſie, as the ſame Author ſaith, to give an account of God's Providence ſince the Revolt of Man, and the Poyſon that hath univerſally ſeiz'd upon Human Nature, than to make gueſſes at the manner of the Fall of the firſt Man. The Scripture hath given us but a ſhort account of the manner of it, to diſcourage too curious Inquiries into it.

* Rom. 11. 33.

'Tis certain that God made Man upright; and when Man ſinned in Paradice, God was active in ſuſtaining the ſubſtantial nature and act of the Sinner while he was ſinning, tho' not in ſupporting the ſinfulneſs of the act. He was permiſſive in ſuffering it: He was [illegible]ve in withholding that Grace which might certainly have prevented his Crime, and conſequently his Ruin; though he withheld nothing that was ſufficient for his reſiſtance of that Temptation wherewith he was aſſaulted. And ſince the Fall of Man, God, as a wiſe Governour, is directive of the Events of the Tranſgreſſion, and draws the choiceſt Good out of the blackeſt Evil, and limits the ſins of Men, that they creep not ſo far as the evil Nature of Men would urge them to; and as a righteous Judge, he takes away the Talent from idle Servants, and the Light from wicked ones, whereby they ſtumble and fall into Crimes, by the inclinations and proneneſs of their own corrupt Natures, leaves them to the byaſs of their own vicious Habits, denies that Grace which they have forfeited, and have no right to challenge; and turns their ſinful actions into Puniſhments, both to the committers of them, and others.

1. Propoſition. God's Holineſs is not chargeable with any blemiſh for his creating man in a mutable ſtate. 'Tis true, Angels and Men were created with a changeable Nature; and though there was a rich and glorious ſtamp upon them by the hand of God, yet their Natures were not uncapable of a baſe and vile ſtamp from ſome other Principle. As the Silver which bears upon it the Image of a great Prince, is capable of being melted down, and imprinted with no better an Image than that of ſome vile and monſtrous Beaſt. Though God made Man upright, yet he was capable of ſeeking many inventions, Eccl. 7. 29. yet the hand of God was not defiled by Forming Man with ſuch a Nature. It was ſuitable to the Wiſdom of God to give the Rational Creature, whom he had furniſh'd with a power of acting Righteouſly, the liberty of Choice, and not fix him in an unchangeable State, without a trial of him in his natural; that if he did obey, his Obedience might be the more valuable; and if he did freely offend, his Offence might be more inexcuſable.

1. No Creature can be capable of immutability by Nature. Mutability is ſo eſſential to a Creature, that a Creature cannot be ſuppoſed without it: You muſt ſuppoſe it a Creator, not a Creature, if you allow it to be of an Immutable Nature. Immutability is the property of the Supream Being. God only hath immortality, 1 Tim. 6. 16. Immortality, as oppoſed not only to a natural, but to a ſinful death; the word only appropriates every ſort of Immortality to God, and excludes every Creature, whether Angel or Man, from a Partnerſhip with God in this by Nature. Every Creature therefore is capable of a Death in Sin. None is good but God, and none is naturally free from change but God; which excludes every Creature from the ſame Prerogative; and certainly if one Angel ſinned, all might have ſinned, becauſe there was the ſame root of Mutability in one as well as another. 'Tis as poſſible for a Creature to be Creator, as for a Creature to have naturally an incommunicable property of the Creator. All things, whether Angels or Men, are made of nothing, and therefore capable of defection *; becauſe a Creature being made of nothing, cannot be good per eſſentiam, or eſſentially good, but by participation from another. Again, every rational Creature, being made of nothing, hath a Superiour which created him and governs him, and is capable of a Precept; and conſequently capable of Diſobedience as well as Obedience to the Precept, to tranſgreſs it as well as obey it. God cannot ſin, becauſe he can have no Superiour to impoſe a Precept on him. A Rational Creature, with a liberty of W[illegible] and Power of Choice, cannot be made by Na[illegible] of ſuch a mould and temper, but he muſt be as [illegible]pable of chuſing wrong, as of chuſing right; [illegible] therefore the ſtanding Angels, and glorified Saints, though they are immutable, 'tis not by Nature they are ſo, but by Grace, and the good pleaſure of God; for tho' they are in Heaven, they have ſtill in their nature a remote power of ſinning, but it ſhall never be brought into act, becauſe God will always incline their wills to love him, and never concur with their wills to any evil act. Since therefore Mutability is eſſential to a Crea[illegible]ure, as a Creature, this changeableneſs cannot properly be charged upon God as the Author of it; for it was not the term of God's creating act, but did neceſſarily reſult from the nature of the Creature, as unchangeableneſs doth reſult from the Eſſence of God. The brittleneſs of a Glaſs is no blame to the Art of him that blew up the Glaſs into ſuch a faſhion; that imperfection of brittleneſs is not from the Workman, but the Matter: So tho' changeableneſs be an imperfection, yet it is ſo neceſſary a one, that no Creature can be naturally without it: Beſides, tho' Angels and Men were mutable by Creation, and capable to exerciſe their Wills, yet they were not neceſſitated to evil; and this mutability did not infer a neceſſity that they ſhould fall; becauſe ſome Angels, which had the ſame root of changeableneſs in their Natures with thoſe that fell, did not fall, which they would have done, if capableneſs of changing, and neceſſity of changing were one and the ſame thing.

2. Though God made the Creature mutable, yet he made him not evil. There could be nothing of evil in him that God created after his own Image, and pronounced good, Gen. 1. 27, 31. Man had an ability to ſtand, as well as a capacity to fall: He was created with a principle of acting freely, whereby he was capable of loving God as his chief Good, and moving to him as his laſt end; there was a beam of Light in Man's Underſtanding to know the Rule he was to conform to, a harmony between his Reaſon and his Affections, an original Righteouſneſs: So that it ſeem'd more eaſie for him to determine his Will to continue in Obedience to the Precept, then to ſwerve from it; to adhere to God as his chief Good, than to liſten to the Charms of Satan. God created him with thoſe advantages, that he might with more facility have kept his eyes fix'd upon the Divine Beauty, than turn his back upon it; and with greater eaſe have kept the Precept God gave him, than have broken it. The very firſt thought darted, or impreſſion made by God upon the Angelical or Human Nature, was the knowledge of himſelf as their Author, and could be no other than ſuch whereby both Angels and Men might be excited to a love of that adorable Being that had framed them ſo glorioufly out of nothing: And if they turned their Wills and Affections to another Object, it was not by the direction of God, but contrary to the impreſſion God had made upon them, or the firſt thought he flaſh'd into them: They turn'd themſelves to the admiring their own Excellency, or affecting an advantage diſtinct from that which they were to look for only from God. 1 Tim. 3. 6. Pride was the Cauſe of the Condemnation of the Devil. Tho' the Wills of Angels and Men were created mutable, and ſo were imperfect, yet they were not created evil. Tho' they might ſin, yet they might not ſin, and therefore were not evil in their own nature. What reflection then could this mutability of their Nature be upon God? So far is it from any, that he is fully cleared, by ſtoring up in the Nature of Man ſufficient proviſion againſt his departure from him. God was ſo far from creating him evil, that he fortified him with a knowledge in his Underſtanding, and a ſtrength in his Nature to withſtand any Invaſion. The Knowledge was exerciſed by Eve in the very moment of the Serpent's aſſaulting her; Gen. 3. 3. Eve ſaid to the Serpent, God hath ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of it: And had her thoughts been intent upon this God hath ſaid, and not diverted to the motions of the Senſitive Appetite and Liquoriſh Palate, it had been ſufficient to put by all the paſſes the Devil did, or could have made at her. So that you ſee, though God made the Creature mutable, yet he made him not evil. This clears the Holineſs of God,

* Suarez. Vol. 2. p. 548.

3. Therefore it follows, That tho' God created Man changeable, yet he was not the cauſe of his change by his fall. Tho' Man was created defectible, yet he was not determin'd by God, influencing his Will by any poſitive act to that change and apoſtacy. God placed him in a free poſture, ſet Life and Happineſs before him on the one Hand, Miſery and Death on the other: As he did not draw him into the Arms of perpetual Bleſſedneſs, ſo he did not drive him into the Gulph of his Miſery *: He did not incline him to Evil. It was repugnant to the Goodneſs of God to corrupt the Righteouſneſs of thoſe Faculties he had ſo lately beautified him with. It was not likely he ſhould deface the beauty of that Work he had compos'd with ſo much Wiſdom and Skill. Would he by any Act of his own make that bad, which but a little before he had acquieſced in as good? Angels and Men were left to their liberty and conduct of their Natural Faculties; and if God inſpir'd them with any motions, they could not but be motions to Good, and ſuted to that righteous Nature he had endued them with. But it is moſt probable that God did not in a Supernatural way act inwardly upon the Mind of Man, but left him wholly to that power which he had in Creation furniſh'd him with. The Scripture frees God fully from any blame in this, and lays it wholly upon Satan as the Tempter, and upon Man as the Determiner of his own Will. Gen. 3. 6. Eve took of the Fruit, and did eat; and Adam took from her of the Fruit, and did eat. And Solomon, Eccl. 7. 29. diſtinguiſheth God's Work in the Creation of Man upright, from Man's Work in ſeeking out thoſe ruining inventions. God created Man in a righteous ſtate, and Man caſt himſelf into a forlorn ſtate. As he was a mutable Creature, he was from God; as he was a changed and corrupted Creature, it was from the Devil ſeducing, and his own pliableneſs in admitting. As Silver, and Gold, and other Metals, were created by God in ſuch a form and figure, yet capable of receiving other forms by the induſtrious Art of Man: When the Image of a Man is put upon a piece of Metal, God is not ſaid to create that Image, tho' he created the Subſtance with ſuch a Property, that it was capable of receiving it: This Capacity is from the nature of the Metal by God's Creation of it, but the carving the Figure of this or that Man, is not the act of God, but the act of Man. As Images in Scripture are called the Work of Mens hands, in regard of the Imagery, tho' the Matter, Wood or Stone, upon which the Image was carv'd, was a Work of God's Creative Power. When an Artificer frames an excellent Inſtrument, and a Muſician exactly tunes it, and it comes out of their Hands without a blemiſh, but capable to be untun'd by ſome rude Hand, or receive a crack by a ſuddain fall, if it meet with a Diſaſter; is either the Workman or Muſician to be blam'd? The ruin of a Houſe, cauſed by the waſtfulneſs or careleſsneſs of the Tenant, is not to be imputed to the Workman that built it ſtrong, and left it in a good poſture.

* Amyral. Moral. tom. 1. p. 615, 616.

2. Propoſition. God's Holineſs is not blemiſh'd by enjoyning Man a Law, which he knew he would not obſerve.

1. The Law was not above his ſtrength. Had the Law been impoſſible to be obſerved, no Crime could have been imputed to the Subject, the fault had lain wholly upon the Governour; the Non-obſervance of it had been from a want of ſtrength, and not from a want of will. Had God commanded Adam to fly up to the Sun, when he had not given him Wings, Adam might have a will to obey it, but his power would be too ſhort to perform it. But the Law ſet him for a Rule, had nothing of impoſſibility in it; it was eaſie to be obſerved; the Command was rather below, than above his ſtrength; and the ſanction of it was more apt to reſtrain and ſcare him from the breach of it, than encourage any daring attempts againſt it: He had as much power, or rather more, to conform to it, than to warp from it; and greater Arguments and Intereſt to be obſervant of it, than to violate it; his All was ſecured by the one, and his Ruin aſcertained by the other. * The Commands of God are not grievous; from the firſt to the laſt Command, there is nothing impoſſible, nothing hard to the original and created Nature of Man, which were all ſum'd up in a love to God, which was the pleaſure and delight of Man, as well as his Duty, if he had not by inconſiderateneſs neglected the dictates and reſolves of his own Underſtanding. The Law was ſuted to the ſtrength of Man, and fitted for the Improvement and Perfection of his Nature: In which reſpect the Apoſtle calls it good, as it refers to Man, as well as holy, as it refers to God †. Now ſince God created Man a Creature capable to be governed by a Law, and as a rational Creature endued with Underſtanding and Will, not to be govern'd according to his Nature without a Law; was it congruous to the Wiſdom of God to reſpect only the future ſtate of Man, which from the depth of his Infinite Knowledge, he did infallibly foreſee would be miſerable, by the wilful defection of Man from the Rule? Had it been agreeable to the Wiſdom of God to reſpect only this future ſtate, and not the preſent ſtate of the Creature; and therefore leave him lawleſs, becauſe he knew he would violate the Law? Should God forbear to act like a wiſe Governour, becauſe he foreſaw that Man would ceaſe to act like an obedient Subject? Shall a righteous Magiſtrate forbear to make juſt and good Laws, becauſe he foreſees, either from the diſpoſitions of his Subjects, their ill humor, or ſome Circumſtances which will intervene, that Multitudes of them will incline to break thoſe Laws, and fall under the Penalty of them? No blame can be upon that Magiſtrate who minds the Rule of Righteouſneſs, and the neceſſary Duty of his Government, ſince he is not the Cauſe of thoſe turbulent Affections in Men, which he wiſely foreſees will riſe up againſt his juſt Edicts.

* 1 John 5. 3.

† Rom 7. 12.

2. Though the Law now be above the ſtrength of Man, yet is not the holineſs of God blemiſh'd by keeping it up. 'Tis true, God hath been graciouſly pleaſed to mitigate the ſeverity and rigour of the Law by the entrance of the Goſpel; yet where Men refuſe the terms of the Goſpel, they continue themſelves under the Condemnation of the Law, and are juſtly guilty of the breach of it, though they have no ſtrength to obſerve it. The Law, as I ſaid before, was not above Mans ſtrength, when he was poſſeſſed of Original Righteouſneſs, tho' it be above Man's ſtrength, ſince he was ſtript of Original Righteouſneſs. The Command was dated before Man had contracted his Impotency, when he had a power to keep it as well as to break it. Had it been enjoyned to Man only after the Fall, and not before, he might have had a better pretence to excuſe himſelf, becauſe of the impoſſibility of it; yet he would not have had ſufficient excuſe, ſince the impoſſibility did not reſult from the Nature of the Law, but from the corrupted Nature of the Creature. It was weak through the fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. but it was promulg'd when Man had a ſtrength proportion'd to the Commands of it. And now ſince Man hath unhappily made himſelf uncapable of obeying it, muſt God's Holineſs in his Law be blemiſh'd for enjoyning it? Muſt he abrogate thoſe

Commands, and prohibit what before he enjoyned, for the Satisfaction of the corrupted Creature? would not this be his ceasing to be holy, that his Creature might be unblameably unrighteous? Must God strip himself of his Holiness, because Man will not discharge his Iniquity? He cannot be the cause of sin, by keeping up the Law, who would be the cause of all the unrighteousness of Men, by removing the Authority of it. Some things in the Law that are intrinsecally good in their own nature are indispensable, and it is repugnant to the Nature of God not to command them. If he were not the Guardian of his indispensable Law, he would be the cause and countenancer of the Creatures Iniquity. So little reason have Men to charge God with being the cause of their sin, by not repealing his Law to gratifie their Impotence, that he would be unholy if he did. God must not lose his Purity, because Man hath lost his, and cast away the right of his Soveraignty, because Man hath cast away his Power of Obedience.

3. God's foreknowledge that his Law would not be observ'd, lays no blame upon him. Tho' the foreknowledge of God be infallible, yet it doth not necessitate the Creature in acting. It was certain from Eternity, that Adam would fall, that Men would do such and such Actions, that Judas would betray our Saviour; God foreknew all those things from Eternity; but it is as certain that this foreknowledge did not necessitate the Will of Adam, or any other Branch of his Posterity, in the doing those Actions that were so foreseen by God; they voluntarily run into such Courses, not by any impulsion. God's Knowledge was not suspended between certainty and uncertainty: He certainly foreknew that his Law would be broken by Adam; he foreknew it in his own Decree of not hindering him, by giving Adam the efficacious Grace which would infallibly have prevented it; yet Adam did freely break this Law, and never imagin'd that the foreknowledge of God did necessitate him to it: He could find no cause of his own sin, but the liberty of his own will: He charges the occasion of his sin upon the woman, and consequently upon God in giving the woman to him *. He could not be so ignorant of the Nature of God, as to imagine him without a foresight of future things, since his knowledge of what was to be known of God by Creation, was greater than any man's since, in all probability. But however, if he were not acquainted with the Notion of God's foreknowledge, he could not be ignorant of his own act; there could not have been any necessity upon him, any kind of constraint of him in his action that could have been unknown to him; and he would not have omitted a Plea of so strong a nature, when he was upon his trial for Life or Death; especially when he urgeth so weak an Argument to impute his Crime to God, as the gift of the Woman; as if that which was design'd him for a help, were intended for his ruine. If God's prescience takes away the liberty of the Creature, there is no such thing as a free action in the World, for there is nothing done but is foreknown to God, else we render God of a limited understanding, nor ever was, no not by God himself ad extra. For whatsoever he hath done in Creation, whatsoever he hath done since the Creation, was foreknown by him; he resolved to do it, and therefore foreknew that he would do it: Did God do it therefore necessarily, as necessity is oppos'd to liberty? As he freely decrees what he will do, so he effects what he freely decreed. Foreknowledge is so far from intrenching upon the liberty of the will, that predetermination, which in the notion of it speaks something more, doth not dissolve it. God did not only foreknow, but determine the Suffering of Christ †. It was necessary therefore that Christ should suffer, that God might not be mistaken in his foreknowledge, or come short of his determinate decree: But did this take away the liberty of Christ in Suffering? Eph. 5. 2. Who offered himself up to God; that is, by a voluntary act, as well as design'd to do it by a determinate Counsel. It did infallibly secure the event, but did not annihilate the liberty of the Action, either in Christ's willingness to suffer, or the Crime of the Jews that made him suffer. God's prescience is God's prevision of things arising from their proper Causes. As a Gardiner foresees in his Plants the Leaves and the Flowers that will arise from them in the Spring, because he knows the strength and nature of their several Roots which lye under ground, but his foresight of these things is not the cause of the rise and appearance of those Flowers. If any of us see a Ship moving towards such a Rock or Quick-sand, and know it to be govern'd by a negligent Pilot, we shall certainly foresee that the Ship will be torn in pieces by the Rock, or swallowed up by the Sands; but is this foresight of ours from the Causes, any cause of the Effect, or can we from hence be said to be the Authors of the Miscarriage of the Ship, and the loss of the Passengers and Goods? The fall of Adam was foreseen by God to come to pass by the consent of his Freewill in the choice of the proposed Temptation: God foreknew Adam would sin, and if Adam would not have sinned, God would have foreknown that he would not sin. Adam might easily have detected the Serpent's fraud, and made a better Election; God foresaw that he would not do it; God's foreknowledge did not make Adam guilty or innocent; whether God had foreknown it or no, he was guilty by a free choice, and a willing neglect of his own Duty. Adam knew that God foreknew that he might eat of the Fruit, and fall and dye, because God had forbidden him; the foreknowledge that he would do it, was no more a cause of his Action, than the foreknowledge that he might do it. Judas certainly knew that his Master foreknew that he should betray him, for Christ had acquainted him with it, John 13. 21. 26. yet he never charg'd this foreknowledge of Christ with any guilt of his Treachery.

† Acts 4. 27, 28.

3. The third Proposition. The Holiness of God is not blemish'd by decreeing the eternal Rejection of some Men. Reprobation in its first Notion is an act of preterition, or passing by. A Man is not made wicked by the act of God, but it supposeth him wicked, and so 'tis nothing else but God's leaving a Man in that guilt and filth wherein he beholds him. In its second Notion 'tis an Ordination not to a Crime, but to a Punishment, Jude 4. An ordaining to condemnation. And tho' it be an eternal act of God, yet in order of Nature it follows upon the foresight of the Transgression of Man, and supposeth the Crime. God considers Adam's Revolt, and views the whole mass of his corrupted Posterity, and chuses some to reduce to himself by his Grace, and leaves others to lye sinking in their Ruins. Since all Mankind fell by the Fall of Adam, and have Corruption conveyed to them successively by that Root whereof they are Branches: All Men might justly be left wallowing in that miserable Condition to which they were reduced by the Apostacy of their common Head; and God might have passed by the whole Race of Man, as well as he did the fallen Angels, without any hope of Redemption. He was no more bound to restore Man, than to restore Devils, nor bound to repair the Nature of any one Son of Adam; and had he dealt with Men as he dealt with the Devils, they had had

had all of them as little just ground to complain of God; for all Men deserved to be left to themselves, for all were concluded under sin: But God calls out some to make Monuments of his Grace, which is an act of the Soveraign Mercy of that Dominion whereby he hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, Rom. 9. 18. Others he passes by, and leaves them remaining in that Corruption of Nature wherein they were born. If Men have a power to dispose of their own Goods, without any unrighteousness, why should not God dispose of his own Grace, and bestow it upon whom he pleases; since it is a Debt to none, but a free Gift to any that enjoy it? * God is not the cause of sin in this, because his operation about this is Negative; 'tis not an action, but a denial of action, and therefore cannot be the cause of the evil actions of Men. God acts nothing, but withholds his Power; he doth not enlighten their Minds, nor encline their Wills so powerfully, as to expel their darkness, and root out those evil habits which possess them by Nature. God could, if he would, savingly enlighten the Minds of all Men in the World, and quicken their Hearts with a new Life by an invincible Grace; but in not doing it, there is no positive act of God, but a cessation of Action: We may with as much reason say, that God is the cause of all the sinful Actions that are committed by the Corporation of Devils, since their first Rebellion, because he leaves them to themselves, and bestows not a new Grace upon them: As say God is the Cause of the sins of those that he overlooks and leaves in that state of guilt wherein he found them. God did not pass by any without the consideration of sin; so that this act of God is not repugnant to his Holiness, but conformable to his Justice.

*Amyrald. defens. de Calv. p. 145

4. Proposition. The Holiness of God is not blemished by his secret will to suffer sin to enter into the world. God never willed sin by his preceptive Will. It was never founded upon, or produced by any Word of his, as the Creation was. He never said, Let there be sin under the Heaven, as he said, Let there be Water under the Heaven. Nor doth he Will it by infusing any Habit of it, or stirring up Inclinations to it; no, God tempts to Man, James 1. 13. Nor doth he Will it by his approving Will; 'tis detestable to him, nor ever can be otherwise: He cannot approve it either before Commission or after.

1. The Will of God is in some sort concurrent with sin. He doth not properly Will it, but he Wills not to hinder it, to which by his Omnipotence he could put a bar. If he did positively Will it, it might be wrought by himself, and so could not be evil. If he did in no sort Will it, it would not be committed by his Creature: Sin entred into the World, either God willing the permission of it, or not willing the permission of it. The latter cannot be said; for then the Creature is more powerful than God, and can do that which God will not permit. God can, if he be pleased, banish all sin in a moment out of the World: He could have prevented the Revolt of Angels, and the Fall of Man; they did not sin whether he would or no; He might by his Grace have kept in the first moment, and made a special impression upon them of the Happiness they already possessed, and the Misery they would incur by any wicked attempt. He could as well have prevented the sin of the fallen Angels, and confirmed them in Grace, as of those that continued in their happy state. He might have appeared to Man, informed him of the Issue of his Design, and made secret Impressions upon his Heart, since he was acquainted with every avenue to his Will. God could have kept all sin out of the World, as well as all Creatures from breathing in it; he was as well able to bar sin for ever out of the World, as to let Creatures lye in the Womb of nothing, wherein they were first wrapped. To say God doth will sin as he doth other things, is to deny his Holiness; to say it entred without any thing of his Will, is to deny his Omnipotence. If he did necessitate Adam to fall, what shall we think of his Purity? If Adam did fall without any concern of God's Will in it, what shall we say of his Soveraignty? The one taints his Holiness, and the other clips his Power. If it came without any thing of his Will in it, and he did not foresee it, where is his Omniscience? If it entred whether he would or no, where is his Omnipotence? Rom. 9. 19. Who hath resisted his Will? There cannot be a lustful act in Abimelech, if God will withhold his Power; Gen. 20. 6. I withheld thee: Nor a cursing word in Balaam's Mouth, unless God give power to speak it, Numb. 22. 38. Have I now any power at all to say any thing? The Word that God puts in my mouth, that shall I speak. As no Action could be sinful if God had not forbidden it; so no sin could be committed, if God did not will to give way to it.

2. God doth not will sin directly, and by an efficacious Will. He doth not directly will it, because he hath prohibited it by his Law, which is a discovery of his Will: So that if he should directly will sin, and directly prohibit it, he would will good and evil in the same manner, and there would be Contradictions in God's Will: To will sin absolutely, is to work it; Psal. 115. 3. God hath done what soever he pleased. God cannot absolutely will it, because he cannot work it. * God wills good by a positive Decree, because he hath decreed not to give that Grace which would certainly prevent it. † God doth not will sin simply, for that were to approve it; but he wills it, in order to that Good his Wisdom will bring forth from it. He wills not sin for it self, but for the event. To will sin as sin, or as purely evil, is not in the capacity of a Creature, neither of Man nor Devil. The Will of a Rational Creature cannot will any thing but under the appearance of good, of some good in the sin it self, or some good in the issue of it. Much more is this far from God, ‖ who being infinitely good, cannot will evil as evil; and being infinitely knowing, can not will that for good which is evil. Infinite Wisdom can be under no Error or Mistake: To will sin as sin, would be an unanswerable blemish on God; but to will to suffer it in order to good, is the glory of his Wisdom: It could never have peep'd up its head, unless there had been some Decree of God concerning it. And there had been no Decree of God concerning it, had he not intended to bring Good and Glory out of it. If God did directly will the Discovery of his Grace and Mercy to the World, he did in some sort will sin, as that without which there could not have been any appearance of Mercy in the World: For an Innocent Creature is not the Object of Mercy, but a Miserable Creature, and no Rational Creature but must be sinful before it be miserable.

3. God Wills the permission of sin. He doth not positively will Sin, but he positively wills to permit it. And though he doth not approve of sin, yet he approves of that act of his Will, whereby he permits it. For since that sin could not enter into the World without some concern of God's Will about it, that act of his Will that gave way to it, could not be displeasing to him: God could never be displeased with his own act: He is not a man, that he should repent, 1 Sam. 15. 29. What God cannot repent of, he cannot but approve of: 'Tis contrary to the Blessedness of God to disapprove of, of, and be diſpleaſed with any act of his own Will. If he hated any act of his own Will, he would hate himſelf, he would be under a torture: Every one that hates his own acts, is under ſome diſturbance and torment for them. That which is permitted by him, is in it ſelf, and in regard of the evil of it, hateful to him: But as the proſpect of that good which he aims at in the permiſſion of it is pleaſing to him; ſo that act of his Will whereby he permits it, is uſhered in by an approving act of his Underſtanding. Either God approved of the permiſſion, or not; if he did not approve his own act of permiſſion, he could not have decreed an act of permiſſion. 'Tis unconceivable that God ſhould decree ſuch an act which he deteſted, and poſitively will that which he hated. Tho' God hated ſin, as being againſt his Holineſs, yet he did not hate the permiſſion of ſin, as being ſubſervient by the immenſity of his Wiſdom to his own Glory. He could never be diſpleaſed with that which was the reſult of his Eternal Counſel, as this decree of permitting ſin was, as well as any other Decree reſolved upon in his own Breaſt. For as God acts nothing in Time, but what he Decreed from Eternity, ſo he permits nothing in Time, but what he Decreed from Eternity to permit. To ſpeak properly therefore, God doth not will ſin, but he Wills the permiſſion of it, and this Will to permit is Active and Poſitive in God.

4. This act of permiſſion is not a meer and naked permiſſion, but ſuch an one as is attended with a certainty of the event. The Decrees of God to make uſe of the ſin of Man for the glory of his Grace in the Miſſion and Paſſion of his Son, hung upon this entrance of ſin. Would it conſiſt with the Wiſdom of God to Decree ſuch great and ſtupendious things, the event whereof ſhould depend upon an uncertain Foundation which he might be miſtaken in? God would have ſat in Council from Eternity to no purpoſe, if he had only permitted thoſe things to be done, without any knowledge of the event of this permiſſion: God would not have made ſuch proviſion for Redemption to no purpoſe, or an uncertain purpoſe, which would have been, if Man had not fallen; or if it had been an uncertainty with God whether he would fall or no. Tho' the Will of God about ſin was permiſſive, yet the Will of God about that Glory he would promote by the defect of the Creature, was poſitive; and therefore he would not ſuffer ſo many poſitive acts of his Will to hang upon an uncertain Event; and therefore he did wiſely and righteouſly order all things to the accompliſhment of his great and gracious Purpoſes.

5. This act of permiſſion doth not taint the holineſs of God. That there is ſuch an act as permiſſion, is clear in Scripture, Acts 14.16. Who in times paſt ſuffered all Nations to walk in their own ways. But that it doth not blemiſh the Holineſs of God will appear.

1. From the nature of this permiſſion.

1. 'Tis not a moral permiſſion, a giving liberty of toleration by any Law to commit ſin with impunity; when what one Law did forbid, another Law doth leave indifferent to be done or not, as a Man ſees good in himſelf. As when there is a Law made among Men, That no Man ſhall go out of ſuch a City or Country without Licenſe; To go out without Licenſe is a Crime by the Law; but when that Law is repealed by another, that gives liberty for Men to go and come at their pleaſure: It doth not make their going or coming neceſſary, but leaves thoſe which were before bound, to do as they ſee good in themſelves. Such a permiſſion makes a Fact lawful, tho' not neceſſary; a Man is not obliged to do it, but he is left to his own diſcretion to do as he pleaſes, without being chargeable with a Crime for doing it. Such a permiſſion there was granted by God to Adam of eating of the Fruits of the Garden, to chuſe any of them for Food, except the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. It was a Precept to him, not to eat of the Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil; but the other was a permiſſion, whereby it was lawful for him to feed upon any other that was moſt agreeable to his Appetite: But there is not ſuch a permiſſion in the caſe of Sin; this had been an Indulgence of it, which had freed Man from any Crime, and conſequently from Puniſhment; becauſe by ſuch a permiſſion by Law, he would have had authority to ſin, if he pleaſed. God did not remove the Law, which he had before placed as a Bar againſt Evil, nor ceas'd that Moral Impediment of his Threatning: Such a permiſſion as this, to make Sin lawful or indifferent, had been a Blot upon God's Holineſs.

2. But this Permiſſion of God in the caſe of Sin, is no more than the not hindering a ſinful Action, which he could have prevented. 'Tis not ſo much an Action of God, as a Suſpenſion of his Influence, which might have hindred an Evil Act, and a forbearing to reſtrain the Faculties of Man from Sin; 'tis properly the not exerting that Efficacy, which might change the Counſels that are taken, and prevent the Action intended. As when one Man ſees another ready to fall, and can preſerve him from falling by reaching out his hand; he permits him to fall, that is, he hinders him not from falling. So God deſcribes his Act about Abimelech, Gen. 20. 6. I withheld thee from ſinning againſt me, therefore ſuffered I thee not to touch her. If Abimelech had ſinned, he had ſinned by God's permiſſion; that is, by God's not hindring, or not reſtraining him, by making any Impreſſions upon him. So that Permiſſion is only a withholding that Help and Grace, which (if beſtowed) would have been an effectual Remedy to prevent a Crime: And it is rather a Suſpenſion or Ceſſation, then properly a permiſſion; and Sin may be ſaid to be committed not without God's permiſſion, rather than by his permiſſion.

Thus in the Fall of Man, God did not hold the Reins ſtrict upon Satan to reſtrain him from laying the Bait, nor reſtrain Adam from ſwallowing the Bait: He kept to himſelf that Efficacious Grace, which he might have darted out upon Man to prevent his Fall. God left Satan to his malice of Tempting, and Adam to his liberty of Reſiſting, and his own ſtrength, to uſe that ſufficient Grace he had furniſh'd him with, whereby he might have reſiſted and overcome the Temptation. As he did not drive Man to it, ſo he did not ſecretly reſtrain him from it. So in the Jews crucifying our Saviour; God did not imprint upon their Minds by his Spirit, a Conſideration of the greatneſs of the Crime, and the horror of his Juſtice due to it: And being without thoſe Impediments, they run furiouſly of their own accord to the commiſſion of that Evil. As when a Man lets a Wolf or Dog out upon his Prey, he takes off the Chain which held them, and they preſently act according to their Natures *. In the Fall of Angels and Men, God's Act was a leaving them to their own ſtrength: In ſins after the Fall, 'tis God's giving them up to their own Corruption. The firſt is a pure Suſpenſion of Grace; the other hath the nature of a Puniſhment, Pſal. 81. 12. So I gave them up to their own hearts luſts. The firſt Object of this permiſſive Will of God was, to leave Angels and Men to their own liberty, and the uſe of their Free-will, which was Natural to them †, not adding that Supernatural Grace which was was neceſſary, not that they ſhould not at all ſin, but that they ſhould infallibly not ſin: They had a ſtrength ſufficient to avoid ſin, but not ſufficient infallibly to avoid ſin; a Grace ſufficient to preſerve them, but not ſufficient to confirm them.

* Lawſon, pag. 64.

3. Now this permiſſion is not the cauſe of ſin, nor doth blemiſh the Holineſs of God. It doth not intrench upon the Freedom of Men, but ſuppoſeth it, eſtabliſheth it, and leaves Man to it. God acted nothing, but only ceaſed to Act; and therefore could not be the efficient Cauſe of Man's ſin. As God is not the Author of good, but by willing and effecting it; ſo he is not the Author of evil, but by willing and effecting it: But he doth not poſitively Will evil, nor effect it by any Efficacy of his own. Permiſſion is no Action, nor the cauſe of that Action which is permitted; but the will of that Perſon who is permitted to do ſuch an Action, is the cauſe *. God can no more be ſaid to be the Cauſe of Sin, by ſuffering a Creature to act as it will: than he can be ſaid to be the Cauſe of the not Being of any Creature, by denying it Being, and letting it remain Nothing: 'Tis not from God that it is Nothing, 'tis Nothing in it ſelf. Tho' God be ſaid to be the Cauſe of Creation, yet he is never by any ſaid to be the Cauſe of that Nothing which was before Creation. This permiſſion of God is not the cauſe of Sin, but the cauſe of not hindring Sin. Man and Angels had a Phyſical Power of ſinning from God, as they were created with Free-will, and ſupported in their natural ſtrength; but the Moral power to ſin was not from God: He counſell'd them not to it, laid no Obligation upon them to uſe their natural power for ſuch an end, He only left them to their freedom, and not hinder'd them in their acting what he was reſolved to permit.

* Suarez. de Legib. l. 43.

2. The Holineſs of God is not tainted by this, becauſe he was under no obligation to hinder their Commiſſion of Sin. Ceaſing to act, whereby to prevent a Crime of Miſchief, brings not a Perſon permitting it, under guilt, unleſs where he is under an Obligation to prevent it: But God, in regard of his abſolute Dominion, cannot be charged with any ſuch Obligation. One Man that doth not hinder the Murder of another, when it is in his power, is guilty of the Murder in part; but it is to be conſidered, that he is under a tye by Nature, as being of the ſame kind, and being the other's Brother by a Communion of Blood; alſo under an Obligation of the Law of Charity, enacted by the Common Soveraign of the World: But what tye was there upon God? ſince the Infinite Tranſcendency of his Nature, and his Soveraign Dominion frees him from any ſuch Obligation; Job 9. 12. If he takes away, who ſhall ſay, What doſt thou? God might have prevented the Fall of Men and Angels, he might have confirm'd them all in a ſtate of perpetual Innocency; but where is the Obligation? He had made the Creature a Debtor to himſelf, but he ow'd nothing to the Creature. Before God can be charged with any guilt in this caſe, it muſt be proved, not only that he could, but that he was bound to hinder it. No Perſon can be juſtly charged with anothers Fault, meerly for not preventing it, unleſs he be bound to prevent it; elſe not only the Firſt ſin of Angels and Man would be imputed to God, as the Author, but all the ſins of Men. He could not be obliged by any Law, becauſe he had no Superiour to impoſe any Law upon him; and it will be hard to prove, that he was obliged from his own Nature to prevent the entrance of Sin, which he would uſe as an occaſion to declare his own Holineſs ſo tranſcendent a Perfection of his Nature, more than ever it could have been manifeſted by a total excluſion of it, viz. in the Death of Chriſt. He is no more bound in his own Nature, to preſerve by Supernatural Grace his Creature from Falliug, after he had framed him with a ſufficient ſtrength to ſtand; than he was obliged in his own Nature to bring his Creature into Being, when it was Nothing. He is not bound to create a Rational Creature, much leſs bound to create him with Supernatural Gifts; tho' ſince God would make a Rational Creature, he could not but make him with a Natural Uprightneſs and Rectitude.

God did as much for Angels and Men, as became a Wiſe Governour. He had publiſh'd his Law, back'd it with ſevere Penalties, and the Creature wanted not a Natural ſtrength to obſerve and obey it. Had not Man a power to obey all the Precepts of the Law, as well as one? How was God bound to give him more Grace, ſince what he had already was enough to ſhield him, and keep up his Reſiſtance againſt all the power of Hell? It had been enough to have pointed his Will againſt the Temptation, and he had kept off the force of it. Was there any Promiſe paſt to Adam of any further Grace, which he could plead as a tye upon God? No ſuch voluntary Limit upon God's Supream Dominion appears upon Record. Was any thing due to Man, which he had not? Any thing promis'd him, which was not perform'd? What Action of Debt then can the Creature bring againſt God? Indeed, when Man began to neglect the light of his own Reaſon, and became Inconſiderate of the Precept, God might have enlightned his Underſtanding by a ſpecial Flaſh, a ſupernatural Beam, and Imprinted upon him a particular conſideration of the neceſſity of his Obedience, the Miſery he was approaching to by his Sin, the folly of any ſuch apprehenſion of an equality in Knowledge; he might have convinc'd him of the falſity of the Serpent's Arguments, and uncas'd to him the Venom that lay under thoſe Baits. But how doth it appear that God was bound to thoſe Additional Acts, when he had already lighted up in him a Spirit, which was the Candle of the Lord, Prov. 20. 27. whereby he was able to diſcern all, if he had attended to it. It was enough that God did not neceſſitate Man to ſin, did not counſel him to it; that he had given him ſufficient warning in the Threatning, and ſufficient ſtrength in his Faculties, to fortifie him againſt Temptation. He gave him what was due to him as a Creature of his own framing; he withdrew no help from him, that was due to him as a Creature, and what was not due he was not bound to impart. Man did not beg preſerving Grace of God, and God was not bound to offer it, when he was not petition'd for it eſpecially: Yet if he had begg'd it, God having before furniſh'd him ſufficiently, might by the right of his Soveraign Dominion have denied it without any Impeachment of his Holineſs and Righteouſneſs. Tho' he would not in ſuch a caſe have dealt ſo bountifully with his Creature, as he might have done; yet he could not have been impleaded, as dealing unrighteouſly with his Creature. The ſingle word that God had already utter'd, when he gave him his Precept, was enough to oppoſe againſt all the Devils wiles, which tended to invalidate that Word: The Underſtanding of Man could not imagine, that the Word of God was vainly ſpoken; and the very ſuggeſtion of the Devil, as if the Creator ſhould envy his Creature, would have appear'd ridiculous, if he had attended to the voice of his own Reaſon. God had done enough for him, and was obliged to do no more, and dealt not Unrighteouſly in leaving him to act according to the Principles of his Nature.

To Conclude, If God's permiſſion of Sin were enough to charge it upon God, or if God had been obliged

obliged to give Adam Supernatural Grace: Adam, that had ſo capacious a Brain, could not be without that Plea in his Mouth, Lord, thou mighteſt have prevented it; the commiſſion of it by me could not have been without thy permiſſion of it: Or, Thou haſt been wanting to me, as the Author of my Nature. No ſuch Plea is brought by Adam into the Court, when God Tried and Caſt him: No ſuch Pleas can have any ſtrength in them. Adam had reaſon enough to know, that there was ſufficient Reaſon to over-rule ſuch a Plea.

Since the Permiſſion of Sin caſts no Dirt upon the Holineſs of God, as I think hath been clear'd, we may under this Head conſider Two things more.

1. That God's Permiſſion of Sin is not ſo much as his Reſtraint or Limitation of it. Since the entrance of the Firſt Sin into the World by Adam, God is more a hinderer than a permitter of it. If he hath permitted that which he could have prevented, he prevents a World more, that he might, if he pleas'd, permit: The Hedges about Sin are larger than the Outlets; they are but a few Streams that glide about the World, in compariſon of that mighty Torrent he dams up both in Men and Devils. He that underſtands, what a Lake of Sodom is in every Man's Nature, ſince the univerſal Infection of Human Nature, as the Apoſtle deſcribes it, Rom. 3. 9, 10, &c. muſt acknowledge, That if God ſhould caſt the Reins upon the Necks of ſinful Men, they would run into Thouſands of abominable Crimes more than they do: The Impreſſion of all Natural Laws would be raz'd out, the World would be a publick Stew, and a more bloody Slaughter-houſe; Human Society would ſink into a Chaos; no Star-light of commendable Morality would be ſeen in it; the World would be no longer an Earth, but an Hell, and have lain deeper in Wickedneſs than it doth. If God did not limit Sin, as he doth the Sea, and put Bars to the Waves of the Heart, as well as thoſe of the Waters, and ſay of them, Hitherto you ſhall go, and no further; Man hath ſuch a furious Ocean in him, as would overflow the Banks; and where it makes a breach in one place, it would in a thouſand, if God ſhould ſuffer it to act according to its impetuous Current.

As the Devil hath Luſt enough to deſtroy all Mankind, if God did not bridle him; deal with every man as he did with Job, ruine their Comforts, and deform their Bodies with Scabs; infect Religion with a Thouſand more Errors; fling Diſorders into Commonwealths, and make them as a Fiery Furnace, full of nothing but Flame. If he were not Chain'd by that Powerful Arm, that might let him looſe to fulfil his malicious Fury; what Rapines, Murders, Thefts, would be committed, if he did not ſtint him? Abimelech would not only luſt after Sarah, but deflower her; Laban not only purſue Jacob, but rifle him; Saul not only hate David, but murder him; David not only threaten Nabal, but root him up, and his Family, did not God girdle in the wrath of Man *: A greater remainder of Wrath is pent in, than flames out, which yet ſwells for an Outlet. God may be concluded more Holy in preventing Mens Sins, than the Author of Sin in permitting ſome; ſince were it not for his reſtraints by the pull-back of Conſcience, and infus'd Motions and outward Impediments, the World would ſwarm more with this Curſed Brood.

* Pſal. 76. 10. as the word Reſtrain ſignifies.

2. His Permiſſion of Sin is in order to his own Glory, and a greater Good. 'Tis no reflection upon the Divine Goodneſs to leave Man to his own Conduct, whereby ſuch a Deformity as Sin ſets foot in the World; ſince he makes his Wiſdom illuſtrious in bringing Good out of Evil, and a Good greater than that Evil he ſuffer'd to ſpring up *. God did not permit Sin, as Sin, or permit it barely for it ſelf. As Sin is not lovely in its own Nature, ſo neither is the permiſſion of Sin intrinſecally good or amiable for it ſelf, but for thoſe ends aim'd at in the permiſſion of it. God permitted Sin, but approv'd not of the Object of that permiſſion, Sin; becauſe, that conſider'd in its own nature, is ſolely Evil: Nor can we think that God could approve of the Act of Permiſſion, conſider'd only in it ſelf as an Act; but as it reſpected that Event which his Wiſdom would order by it. We cannot ſuppoſe that God ſhould permit Sin, but for ſome great and glorious End: for it is the manifeſtation of his own glorious Perfections he intends in all the Acts of his Will. Prov. 16. 4. The Lord hath made all things for himſelf; 'הפעל hath wrought all things; which is not only his act of Creation, but Ordination: [For Himſelf] that is, for the diſcovery of the Excellency of his Nature, and the communication of himſelf to his Creature. Sin indeed in its own nature hath no tendency to a good End, the Womb of it teems with nothing but Monſters; 'tis a ſpurn at God's Soveraignty, and a ſlight of his Goodneſs: It both deforms and torments the Perſon that acts it; 'tis black and abominable, and hath not a mite of Goodneſs in the Nature of it. If it ends in any good, 'tis only from that Infinite Tranſcendency of Skill, that can bring Good out of Evil, as well as Light out of Darkneſs.

* Majus bonum, ſaith Bradward.

Therefore God did not permit it as Sin, but as it was an occaſion for the manifeſtation of his own Glory. Though the Goodneſs of God would have appear'd in the preſervation of the World, as well as it did in the Creation of it; yet his Mercy could not have appear'd without the entrance of Sin, becauſe the Object of Mercy is a Miſerable Creature; but Man could not be Miſerable as long as he remain'd Innocent. The Reign of Sin open'd a door for the Reign and Triumph of Grace, Rom. 5. 21. As ſin hath reigned unto death, ſo might grace reign through righteouſneſs to eternal life: Without it, the Bowels of Mercy had never ſounded, and the raviſhing Muſick of Divine Grace could never have been heard by the Creature. Mercy, which renders God ſo amiable, could never elſe have beam'd out to the World. Angels and Men upon this occaſion beheld the ſtirrings of Divine Grace, and the tenderneſs of Divine Nature, and the glory of the Divine Perſons in their ſeveral Functions about the Redemption of Man, which had elſe been a Spring ſhut up, and a Fountain ſealed; the Song of Glory to God, and Good-will to Men, in a way of Redemption had never been ſung by them. It appears in his dealings with Adam, that he permitted his Fall, not only to ſhew his Juſtice in puniſhing, but principally his Mercy in reſcuing; ſince he proclaims to him firſt the Promiſe of a Redeemer, to bruiſe the Serpent's head, before he ſetled the Puniſhment he ſhould ſmart under in the World * And what fairer proſpect could the Creature have of the Holineſs of God, and his hatred of Sin, than in the edge of that Sword of Juſtice, which puniſh'd it in the Sinner; but glitter'd more in the Puniſhment of a Surety ſo near ally'd to him. Had not Man been Criminal, he could not have been Puniſhable, nor any been puniſhable for him: And the Pulſe of Divine Holineſs could not have beaten ſo quick, and been ſo viſible, without an exerciſe of his Vindicative Juſtice. He left Man's mutable Nature, to fall under Unrighteouſneſs, that thereby he might commend the Righteouſneſs of his own Nature †. Adam's Sin in its Nature tended to the ruine of the World, and God takes an occaſion from it for the glory of his Grace in the Redemption of the World: He brings forth thereby

* Gen. 3. 15, 16, 17.

† Rom. 3. 7.

thereby a new Scene of Wonders from Heaven, and a ſurprizing knowledge on Earth; as the Sun breaks out more ſtrongly after a Night of Darkneſs and Tempeſt. As God in Creation fram'd a Chaos by his Power, to manifeſt his Wiſdom in bringing Order out of Diſorder, Light out of Darkneſs, Beauty out of Confuſion and Deformity; when he was able by a word to have made all Creatures ſtand up in their Beauty, without the precedency of a Chaos: So God permitted a Moral Chaos, to manifeſt a greater Wiſdom in the repairing a broken Image, and reſtoring a deplorable Creature, and bringing out thoſe Perfections of his Nature, which had elſe been wrapt up in a perpetual Silence in his own Boſom *. It was therefore very congruous to the Holineſs of God, to permit that which he could make ſubſervient for his own Glory, and particularly for the manifeſtation of this Attribute of Holineſs, which ſeems to be in oppoſition to ſuch a permiſſion.

*But of the Wiſdom of God in the permitting Sin in order to Redemption, I have handled in the Attribute of Wiſdom.

5. Propoſition: The Holineſs of God is not blemiſh'd by his concurrence with the Creature in the material part of a ſinful Act. Some, to free God from having any hand in Sin, deny his concurrence to the Actions of the Creature; becauſe if he concurs to a ſinful Action, he concurs to the Sin alſo: Not underſtanding how there can be a diſtinction between the Act, and the ſinfulneſs or viciouſneſs of it; and how God can concur to a Natural Action, without being ſtain'd by that Moral Evil which cleaves to it.

For the underſtanding of this, obſerve,

1. There is a concurrence of God to all the acts of the Creature, Acts 17. 21. In him we live, and move, and have our being, We depend upon God in our Acting, as well as in our Being: There is as much an efficacy of God in our Motion, as in our Production; as none have Life without his Power in producing it, ſo none have any Operation without his Providence concurring with it. In him, or by him, that is, by his Virtue preſerving and governing our Motions, as well as by his Power bringing us into Being. Hence Man is compar'd to an Ax, Iſa. 10. 15. an Inſtrument that hath no action, without the co-operation of a ſuperior Agent handling it: And the Actions of the Second Cauſes are aſcrib'd to God; the Graſs, that is the product of the Sun, Rain, and Earth, he is ſaid to make to grow upon the mountains, Pſal. 147. 8. and the skin and fleſh, which is by natural generation, he is ſaid to cloath us with, Job 10. 5. in regard of his co-working with Second Cauſes, according to their Natures. As nothing can exiſt, ſo nothing can operate without him; let his concurrence be removed, and the Being and Action of the Creature ceaſe: Remove the Sun from the Horizon, or a Candle from a Room, and the Light which flowed from either of them ceaſeth. Without God's preſerving and concurring Power, the courſe of Nature would ſink, and the Creation be in vain. * All Created things depend upon God as Agents, as well as Beings, and are ſubordinate to him in a way of Action, as well as in a way of Exiſting. If God ſuſpend his Influence from their Action, they would ceaſe to Act, (as the Fire did from burning the three Children) as well as if God ſuſpend his Influence from their Being, they would ceaſe to be. God ſupports the Nature whereby Actions are wrought, the Mind where Actions are conſulted, and the Will where Actions are determin'd, and the Motive Power whereby Actions are produced. The Mind could not contrive, nor the Hand act a Wickedneſs, if God did not ſupport the Power of the one in deſigning, and the Strength of the other in executing a wicked Intention. Every faculty in its Being, and every faculty in its Motion, hath a dependance upon the Influence of God. To make the Creature Independent upon God in any thing which ſpeaks Perfection, as Action conſider'd as Action is, is to make a Creature a Soveraign Being. Indeed we cannot imagine the Concurrence of God to the good Actions of Men ſince the Fall, without granting a concurrence of God to evil Actions; becauſe there is no Action ſo purely Good, but hath a mixture of Evil in it, tho' it takes its denomination of Good from the better part, Eccleſ. 7. 20. There is no man that doth good and ſins not.

*Suarez, Metaph. par. 1, p. 552.

2. Tho' the Natural Virtue of doing a ſinful Action be from God, and ſupported by him, yet this doth not blemiſh the Holineſs of God; while God concurs with them in the Act, he inſtils no evil into Men.

1. No Act, in regard of the ſubſtance of it, is Evil. Moſt of the Actions of our Faculties, as they are Actions, might have been in the ſtate of Innocency. Eating is an Act Adam would have uſed, if he had ſtood firm, but not Eating to exceſs. Worſhip was an act that ſhould have been perform'd to God in Innocence, but not hypocritically. Every Action is good by a phyſical goodneſs, as it is an act of the mind or hand, which have a Natural goodneſs by Creation; but every Action is not Morally good: The Phyſical Goodneſs of the Action depends on God, the Moral Evil on the Creature *. There is no Action, as a Corporeal Action, is prohibited by the Law of God; but as it ſprings from an Evil diſpoſition, and is tainted by a venomous temper of mind. There is no Action ſo bad, as attended with ſuch Objects and Circumſtances; but if the Objects and Circumſtances were chang'd, might be a brave and commendable Action: So that the Moral Goodneſs or Badneſs of an Act is not to be eſteem'd from the ſubſtance of the Act, which hath always a Phyſical Goodneſs; but from the Objects, Circumſtances, and Conſtitution of the Mind in the doing of it. Worſhip is an act good in it ſelf, but the Worſhip of an Image is bad in regard of the Object. Were that act of Worſhip directed to God that is paid to a Statue, and offer'd up to him with a ſincere frame of Mind, it would be morally good. The act, in regard of the ſubſtance, is the ſame in both, and conſider'd as ſeparated from the Object to which the Worſhip is directed, hath the ſame real goodneſs in regard of its ſubſtance; but when you conſider this Action in relation to the different Objects, the one hath a Moral Goodneſs, and the other a Moral Evil. So in Speaking; Speaking being a motion of the Tongue in the forming of words, is an excellency belonging to a reaſonable Creature; an Endowment beſtow'd, continu'd, and ſupported by God. Now, if the ſame Tongue forms words whereby it curſeth God this minute, and forms words whereby it bleſſes and praiſes God the next minute; the faculty of Speaking is the ſame, the motion of the Tongue is the ſame in pronouncing the Name of God either in a way of Curſing or Bleſſing, Jam. 3. 9, 10. 'Tis the ſame mouth that bleſſeth and curſeth; and the motion of it is naturally good, in regard of the ſubſtance of the Act in both; 'tis the uſe of an excellent Power God hath given, and which God preſerves in the uſe of it. But the eſtimation of the Moral Goodneſs or Evil is not from the act it ſelf, but from the diſpoſition of the Mind. Once more, Killing, as an Act, is good; nor is it unlawful as an Act: for, if ſo, God would never have commanded his People Iſrael to wage any War, and Juſtice could not be done upon Malefactors by the Magiſtrate. A Man were bound to ſacrifice his Life to the fury of an Invader, rather than ſecure it by diſpatching that of an Enemy. But killing an Innocent, or killing without Authority, or out of revenge, is bad. 'Tis not the material part of the Act, but the Object, Manner, and Circumſtance that makes it good or evil. 'Tis no blemiſh to God's

*Amyrald. de libero arbit. p. 98, 99.

Holineſs to concur to the ſubſtance of an Action, without having any hand in the Immorality of it, becauſe whatſoever is real in the ſubſtance of the Action, might be done without Evil. 'Tis not Evil as it is an Act, as it is a motion of the Tongue or Hand, for then every motion of the Tongue or Hand would be Evil.

2. Hence it follows, that an Act as an Act is one thing, and the Viciouſneſs another. †The Action is the efficacy of the Faculty, extending it ſelf to ſome outward Object; but the Sinfulneſs of an Act conſiſts in a privation of that Comlineſs and Righteouſneſs, which ought to be in an Action; in a want of conformity of the act with the Law of God, either written in Nature, or revealed in the Word. Now the Sinfulneſs of an Action is not the Act it ſelf, but is conſider'd in it as it is related to the Law, and is a deviation from it; and ſo it is ſomething cleaving to the Action, and therefore to be diſtinguiſh'd from the Act it ſelf, which is the Subject of the Sinfulneſs. When we ſay, ſuch an Action is ſinful, the Action is the Subject, and the Sinfulneſs of the Action is that which adheres to it. The Action is not the Sinfulneſs, nor the Sinfulneſs the Action; they are diſtinguiſh'd as the Member, and a Diſeaſe in the Member, the Arm and the Palſie in it: The Arm is not the Palſie, nor is the Palſie the Arm; but the Palſie is a Diſeaſe that cleaves to the Arm: So Sinfulneſs is a deformity that cleaves to an Action.

*Amyrald. p. 321, 322.

The Evil of an Action is not the Effect of an Action, nor attends it as it is an Action, but as it is an Action ſo circumſtantiated, and converſant about this or that Object; for the ſame Action done by two ſeveral Perſons, may be good in one, and bad in the other. As when two Judges are in joynt Commiſſion for the Trial of a Malefactor, both upon the appearance of his Guilt condemn him. This Action in both, conſider'd as an Action, is good: for it is an adjudging a Man to death, whoſe Crime deſerves ſuch a Puniſhment. But this ſame Act, which is but one joynt Act of both, may be morally good in one Judge, and morally evil in the other: Morally good in him that condemns him out of an unbyaſs'd conſideration of the Demerit of his Fact, Obedience to the Law, and Conſcience of the Duty of his place; and Morally evil in the other, who hath no reſpect to thoſe Conſiderations, but joyns in the act of Condemnation, principally moved by ſome private Animoſity againſt the Priſoner, and deſire of Revenge for ſome Injury he hath really receiv'd, or imagines that he hath receiv'd from him. The Act in it ſelf is the ſame materially in both; but in one it is an Act of Juſtice, and in the other an Act of Murder, as it reſpects the Principles and Motives of it in the two Judges; take away the reſpect of private Revenge, and the Action in the ill Judge had been as laudable as the Action of the other. The ſubſtance of an Act, and the ſinfulneſs of an Act, are ſeparable and diſtinguiſhable; and God may concur with the ſubſtance of an Act, without concurring with the ſinfulneſs of the Act: As the good Judge, that condemn'd the Priſoner out of Conſcience, concurr'd with the evil Judge, who condemn'd the Priſoner out of private Revenge; not in the Principle and Motive of Condemnation, but in the Material part of Condemnation. So God aſſiſts in that Action of a Man wherein Sin is placed, but not in that which is the Formal Reaſon of Sin, which is a privation of ſome Perfection the Action ought morally to have.

3. It will appear further in this, that hence it follows, that the Action and the viciouſneſs of the Action may have two diſtinct Cauſes. That may be a cauſe of the one, that is not the cauſe of the other, and hath no hand in the producing of it. God concurs to the Act of the Mind as it Counſels, and to the external Action upon that Counſel, as he preſerves the Faculty, and gives ſtrength to the Mind to conſult, and the other parts to execute; yet he is not in the leaſt tainted with the viciouſneſs of the Action. Tho' the Action be from God as a concurrent Cauſe, yet the ill quality of the Action is ſolely from the Creature with whom God concurs. The Sun and the Earth concur to the production of all the Plants that are formed in the womb of the one, and Midwif'd by the other: The Sun diſtributes Heat, and the Earth communicates Sap; 'tis the ſame Heat diſpers'd by the one, and the ſame Juice beſtow'd by the other: It hath not a ſweet Juice for one, and a ſoure Juice for another. This general Influx of the Sun and Earth is not the immediate cauſe that one Plant is poyſonous, and another wholſome; but the Sap of the Earth is turned by the nature and quality of each Plant: If there were not ſuch an Influx of the Sun and Earth, no Plant could exert that Poyſon which is in its Nature; but yet the Sun and Earth are not the cauſe of that poyſon which is in the Nature of the Plant. If God did not concur to the Motions of Men, there could be no ſinful Action, becauſe there could be no Action at all; yet this Concurrence is not the cauſe of that Venom that is in the Action, which ariſeth from the Corrupt Nature of the Creature, no more than the Sun and Earth are the cauſe of the Poyſon of the Plant, which is purely the effect of its own Nature upon that general Influx of the Sun and Earth. The Influence of God pierceth through all Subjects; but the Action of Man done by that Influence is vitiated according to the Nature of its own Corruption. As the Sun equally ſhines through all the Quarrels in the Window; if the Glaſs be bright and clear, there is a pure ſplendor; if it be red or green, the ſplendor is from the Sun, but the diſcolouring of that Light upon the Wall, is from the quality of the Glaſs. * But to be yet plainer; the Soul is the Image of God, and by the Acts of the Soul, we may come to the knowledge of the Acts of God; the Soul gives motion to the Body, and every Member of it, and no Member could move without a concurrent virtue of the Soul; if a Member be Paralitick or Gouty, whatſoever motion that Gouty Member hath, is derived to it from the Soul; but the Goutineſs of the Member was not the Act of the Soul, but the fruit of Ill Humors in the Body; the lameneſs of the Member, and the motion of the Member, have two diſtinct cauſes, the motion is from one Cauſe, and the Ill motion from another. As the Member could not move irregularly without ſome Ill humor or cauſe of that Diſtemper; ſo it could not move at all without the activity of the Soul: So tho' God concur to the act of Underſtanding, Willing, and Execution, why can he not be as free from the Irregularity in all thoſe, as the Soul is free from the Irregularity of the motion of the Body, while it is the cauſe of the motion it ſelf? There are two Illuſtrations generally uſed in this caſe, that are not unfit; the motion of the Pen in writing is from the hand that holds it, but the Blurs by the Pen are from ſome fault in the Pen it ſelf: And the Muſick of the Inſtrument is from the hand that touches it, but the jarring from the faultineſs of the Strings; both are the cauſes of the motion of the Pen and Strings, but not the blurs or jarrings.

* Zanch. Tom. 2. lib. 3. cap. 4. qu. 4. p. 226.

4. 'Tis very congruous to the Wiſdom of God, to move his Creatures according to their particular Natures; but this Motion makes him not the cauſe of Sin. Had our Innocent Nature continued, God had moved us according to that Innocent Nature; but when the ſtate was chang'd for a Corrupt one, God muſt either forbear all concourſe, and ſo annihilate the World, or move us according to that Nature he finds finds in us. If he had overthrown the World upon the entrance of Sin, and created another upon the ſame terms, Sin might have as ſoon defac'd his ſecond Work, as it did the firſt; and then it would follow, that God would have been alway building and demoliſhing. It was not fit for God to ceaſe from acting as a Wiſe Governour of his Creature, becauſe Man did ceaſe from his Loyalty as a Subject. Is it not more agreeable to God's Wiſdom as a Governour, to concur with his Creature according to his Nature, than to deny his concurrence upon every evil determination of the Creature? God concurr'd with Adam's mutable Nature in his firſt act of Sin; he concurr'd to the act, and left him to his Mutability. If Adam had put out his hand to eat of any other unforbidden Fruit, God would have ſupported his Natural faculty then, and concurr'd with him in his motion.

When Adam would put out his hand to take the Forbidden Fruit, God concurr'd to that Natural Action, but left him to the choice of the Object, and to the uſe of his mutable Nature: And when Man became apoſtate, God concurs with him according to that condition wherein he found him, and cannot move him otherwiſe, unleſs he ſhould alter that Nature Man had contracted. God moving the Creature as he found him, is no cauſe of the ill motion of the Creature: As when a Wheel is broken the ſpace of a Foot, it cannot but move ill in that part till it be mended. He that moves it, uſes the ſame motion (as it is his Act) which he would have done had the Wheel been ſound, the motion is good in the Mover, but bad in the Subject: 'Tis not the fault of him that moves it, but the fault of that Wheel that is moved, whoſe breaches came by ſome other cauſe. A Man doth not uſe to lay aſide his Watch for ſome Irregularity, as long as it is capable of motion, but winds it up: Why ſhould God ceaſe from concurring with his Creature in its vital Operations and other Actions of his Will, becauſe there was a flaw contracted in that Nature, that came right and true out of his hand? And as he that winds up his diſorder'd Watch is in the ſame manner the cauſe of its motion then, as he was when it was regular; yet by that act of his, he is not the cauſe of the falſe motion of it, but that is from the deficiency of ſome part of the Watch it ſelf: So, tho' God concurs to that action of the Creature, whereby the Wickedneſs of the Heart is drawn out, yet is not God therefore as Unholy as the Heart.

5. God hath one End in his concurrence, and Man another in his Action. So that there is a righteous, and often a gracious End in God, when there is a baſe and unworthy End in Man. God concurs to the ſubſtance of the Act; Man produceth the circumſtance of the Act, whereby it is evil. God orders both the Action wherein he concurs, and the Sinfulneſs over which he preſides, as a Governour, to his own Ends. In Joſeph's caſe, Man was ſinful, and God merciful; his Brethren acted Envy, and God deſign'd Mercy, Gen. 45. 4, 5. They would be rid of him as an Eyeſore, and God concurr'd with their Action to make him their Preſerver, Gen. 50. 20. Ye thought evil againſt me, but God meant it unto good. God concurr'd to Judas's Action of betraying our Saviour; he ſupported his Nature while he contracted with the Prieſts, and ſupported his Members while he was their Guide to apprehend him; God's End was the manifeſtation of his choiceſt love to Man, and Judas's End was the gratification of his own Covetouſneſs. The Aſſyrian did a divine work againſt Hieruſalem, but not with a divine End *: He had a mind to enlarge his Empire, enrich his Coffers with the Spoil, and gain the Title of a Conqueror; he is deſirous to Invade his Neighbors, and God imploys him to puniſh his Rebels; but he means not ſo, nor doth his heart think ſo: He intended not as God intended. The Ax doth not think what the Carpenter intends to do with it. But God uſed the Rapine of an ambitious Natufe as an Inſtrument of his Juſtice: As the expoſing Malefactors to wild Beaſts was an ancient Puniſhment, whereby the Magiſtrate intended the execution of Juſtice, and to that purpoſe uſed the natural fierceneſs of the Beaſts to an end different from what thoſe ravaging Creatures aim'd at. God concurr'd with Satan in ſpoiling Job of his Goods, and ſcarrifying his Body; God gave Satan licenſe to do it, and Job acknowledges it to be God's act: But their ends were different; God concurr'd with Satan for the clearing the Integrity of his Servant, when Satan aim'd at nothing but the provoking him to Curſe his Creator. The Phyſician applies Leeches to ſuck the ſuperfluous Blood, but the Leeches ſuck to glut themſelves, without any regard to the intention of the Phyſician, and the welfare of the Patient. In the ſame act where Men intend to hurt, God intends to correct; ſo that his concurrence is in a holy manner, while men commit unrighteous actions. A Judge commands the Executioner to execute the Sentence of Death which he hath juſtly pronounc'd againſt a Malefactor, and admoniſheth him to do it out of love to Juſtice; the Executioner hath the Authority of the Judge for his Commiſſion, and the Protection of the Judge for his Security: The Judge ſtands by to countenance and ſecure him in the doing of it; but if the Executioner hath not the ſame intention as the Judge, viz. a love to Juſtice in the performance of his Office, but a private hatred to the Offender; the Judge, tho' he commanded the Fact of the Executioner, yet did not command this Error of his in it; and tho' he protects him in the Fact, yet he owns not this corrupt diſpoſition in him in the doing of what was enjoyn'd him, as any act of his own.

Job 1. 12, 21.

To Conclude this. Since the Creature cannot act without God, cannot lift up a Hand, or move his Tongue, without God's preſerving and upholding the Faculty, and preſerving the power of Action, and preſerving every Member of the Body in its actual Motion, and in every circumſtance of its Motion, we muſt neceſſarily ſuppoſe God to have ſuch a way of concurrence as doth not intrench upon his Holineſs. We muſt not equal the Creature to God, by denying its dependence on him: Nor muſt we imagine ſuch a concurrence to the ſinfulneſs of an act, as ſtains the Divine Purity, which is, I think, ſufficiently ſalv'd, by diſtinguiſhing the matter of the act from the evil adhering to it: For ſince all evil is founded in ſome good, the evil is diſtinguiſhable from the good, and the deformity of the action from the action it ſelf, which, as it is a created act, hath a dependence on the Will and Influence of God: And as it is a ſinful act, is the product of the Will of the Creature.

6. Propoſition. The Holineſs of God is not blemiſht by propoſing Objects to a man, which he makes uſe of to ſin. There is no Object propos'd to man, but is directed by the Providence of God, which influenceth all motions in the World; and there is no Object propos'd to Man, but his active Nature may, according to the goodneſs or badneſs of his diſpoſition, make a good or an ill uſe of. That two men, one of a charitable, the other of a hard-hearted diſpoſition, meet with an indigent and neceſſitous Object, is from the Providence of God, yet this indigent perſon is relieved by the one, and neglected by the other. There could be no Action in the World, but about ſome Object; there could be no Object offer'd to do us by Divine Providence; the active Nature of Man would be in vain, if there were not Objects about which it might be exercis'd. Nothing could preſent it ſelf to Man as an Object, either to excite his Grace, or awaken his Corruption, but by the conduct of the Governour of the World. That David ſhould walk upon the Battlements of his Palace, and Bathſheba be in the Bath at the ſame time, was from the Divine Providence which orders all the affairs of the World*; and ſo ſome underſtand Jer. 6. 21. Thus ſaith the Lord, I will lay ſtumbling blocks before this People, and the Fathers and Sons together ſhall fall upon them. Since they have offered Sacrifices without thoſe due qualifications in their hearts, which were neceſſary to render them acceptable to me, I will lay in their way ſuch Objects, which their Corruption will uſe ill to their further ſin and ruin; ſo *Pſal.*105.25. He turned their heart to hate his people; that is, by the multiplying his People, he gave occaſion to the Egyptians of hating them, inſtead of careſſing them as they had formerly done.

* Iſa. 10. 5, 6, 7.

* 2 Sam. 11.7.

But God's Holineſs is not blemiſht by this; for

1. This propoſing or preſenting of Objects invades not the liberty of any man: The Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil ſet in the midſt of the Garden of Eden, had no violent influence on Man to force him to eat of it, his liberty to eat of it, or not, was reſerved intire to himſelf; no ſuch Charge can be brought againſt any Object whatſoever. If a Man meet accidentally at a Table with Meat that is grateful to his Palate, but hurtful to the preſent temper of his Body; doth the preſenting this ſort of Food to him ſtrip him of his liberty to decline it, as well as to feed of it? Can the Food have any internal Influence upon his Will, and lay the freedom of it aſleep whether he will or no? Is there any Charm in that, more than in other ſorts of Diet? No, but it is the habit of love which he hath to that particular Diſh, the curioſity of his Fancy, and the ſtrength of his own Appetite, whereby he is brought into a kind of ſlavery to that particular Meat, and not any thing in the food it ſelf. When the Word is propoſed to two Perſons, 'tis embrac'd by the one, rejected by the other; is it from the Word it ſelf, which is the Object that theſe two perſons perform different acts? The Object is the ſame to both, but the manner of acting about the Object is not the ſame: Is there any invaſion of their liberty by it? Is the one forced by the word to receive it, and the other forced by the word to reject it? Two ſuch contrary effects cannot proceed from one and the ſame Cauſe: Outward things have only an objective influence, not an inward: * If the meer propoſal of things did ſuſpend or ſtrike down the liberty of Man, no Angels in Heaven, no Man upon Earth, no not our Saviour himſelf, could do any thing freely, but by force: Objects that are ill uſed are of God's Creation, and tho' they have allurements in them, yet they have no compulſive power over the Will. The Fruit of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil was pleaſing to the ſight; it had a quality to allure, there had not elſe needed a Prohibition to bar the eating of it; but it could not have ſo much power to allure as the Divine threatning to deter.

* Amyral. de libero arbit. p.224.

2. The Objects are good in themſelves, but the ill uſe of them is from Man's corruption. Bathſheba was by God's Providence preſented to David's ſight, but it was David's diſpoſition moved him to ſo evil an act: What if God knew that he would uſe that Object ill? yet he knew he had given him a power to refrain from any ill uſe of it: The Objects are innocent, but our Corruption poiſons them. The ſame Object hath been uſed by one to holy purpoſes and holy improvements, that hath been uſed by another to ſinful ends; when a charitable Object is preſented to a good Man and a cruel Man, one relieves him, the other reviles him: The Object was rather an occaſion to draw out the Charity of one, as well as the other; but the refuſing to reach out a helping hand, was not from the Perſon in Calamity, but the diſpoſition of the Refuſer to whom he was preſented: 'Tis not from the nature of the Object that Men do good or evil, but from the diſpoſition of the Perſon; what is good in it ſelf, is made bad by our Corruption. As the ſame Meat which nouriſhes and ſtrengthens a ſound Conſtitution, cheriſheth the Diſeaſe of another that eats at the ſame Table, not from any unwholſome quality in the Food, but the vicious quality of the Humours lodging in the Stomach, which turn the Diet into fuel for themſelves, which in its own nature was apt to engender a wholſome juice. Some are perfected by the ſame things whereby others are ruin'd. Riches are uſed by ſome, not only for their own, but the advantage of others in the World; by others only for themſelves, and ſcarcely ſo much as their Neceſſities require. Is this the fault of the Wealth, or the diſpoſitions of the Perſons who are covetous inſtead of being generous? 'Tis a Calumny therefore upon God to charge him with the ſin of Man upon this account: The Rain that drops from the Clouds upon the Plants, is ſweet in it ſelf; but when it moiſtens the root of any venomous Plant, 'tis turn'd into the Juice of the Plant, and becomes venomous with it. The Miracles that our Saviour wrought, were applauded by ſome, and envied by the Phariſees; the ſin aroſe not from the nature of the Miracles, but the Malice of their Spirits: The Miracles were fitter in their own nature, to have induced them to an Adoration of our Saviour, than to excite ſo vile a Paſſion againſt one that had ſo many marks from Heaven to dignifie him, and proclaim him worthy of their reſpect. The Perſon of Chriſt was an Object propoſed to the Jews; ſome worſhip him, others condemn and crucifie him, and according to their ſeveral vices and baſe ends they uſe this object. Judas to content his Covetouſneſs, the Phariſees to glut their revenge, Pilate for his Ambition, to preſerve himſelf in his Government, and avoid the Articles the People might charge him with of Countenancing an Enemy to Cæſar. * God at that time put into their minds a rational and true Propoſition which they apply to ill purpoſes. Caiphas ſaid, that it was expedient for one man to die for the people, which he ſpake not of himſelf, Joh. 11. 50, 51. God put it into his mind, but he might have applied it better than he did, and conſidered, tho' the Maxim was commendable, whether it might juſtly be applied to Chriſt, or whether there was ſuch a neceſſity that he muſt dye, or the Nation be deſtroy'd by the Romans: The Maxim was ſound and holy, decreed by God; but what an ill uſe did the High Prieſt make of it to put Chriſt to death as a ſeditious Perſon, to ſave the Nation from the Roman Fury?

* Amyrald. Ironic. p.337.

3. Since the natural Corruption of men will uſe ſuch Objects ill, may not God, without tainting himſelf, preſent ſuch Objects to them in ſubſerviency to his gracious Decrees? Whatſoever God ſhould preſent to Men in that ſtate, they would make an ill uſe of; hath not God then the Soveraign Prerogative to preſent what he pleaſes, and ſuppreſs others? To offer that to them which may ſerve his holy purpoſe, and hide other things from them which are not ſo conducing to his gracious ends, which would be as much the occaſions of exciting their their ſin, as the others which he doth bring forth to their view? The Jews at the time of Chriſt, were of a turbulent and ſeditious humour, they expected a Meſſiah, a Temporal King, and would readily have embraced any occaſion to have been up in Arms to have delivered themſelves from the Roman yoke; to this purpoſe the People attempted once to make him King: And probably the expectation they had that he had ſuch a Deſign to head them, might be one reaſon of their Hoſanna's, becauſe without ſome ſuch conceit it was not probable they ſhould ſo ſoon change their note, and vote him to the Croſs in ſo ſhort a time, after they had applauded him as if he had been upon a Throne; but their being defeated of ſtrong expectations, uſually ended in a more ardent Fury. This turbulent and ſeditious humour God directs in another Chanel, ſuppreſſeth all Occurrences that might excite them to a Rebellion againſt the Romans, which if he had given way to, the crucifying Chriſt, which was God's deſign to bring about at that time, had not probably been effected, and the Salvation of Mankind been hindred or ſtood at a ſtay for a time. God therefore orders ſuch Objects and Occaſions, that might direct this ſeditious Humour to another Chanel, which would elſe have run out in other Actions, which had not been conducing to the great Deſign he had then in the World. Is it not the right of God, and without any blemiſh to his Holineſs, to uſe thoſe Corruptions which he finds ſown in the Nature of his Creature by the hand of Satan, and to propoſe ſuch Objects as may excite the exerciſe of them for his own Service? Sure God hath as much right to ſerve himſelf of the Creature of his own framing, and what Natures ſoever they are poſſeſſed with, and to preſent Objects to that purpoſe, as a Faulconer hath to offer this or that Bird to his Hawk to exerciſe his Courage, and excite his ravenouſneſs, without being termed the Author of that ravenouſneſs in the Creature. God planted not thoſe Corruptions in the Jews, but finds them in thoſe Perſons over whom he hath an abſolute Soveraignty in the right of a Creator, and that of a Judge for their ſins: And by the right of that Soveraignty may offer ſuch Objects and Occaſions, which, tho' innocent in themſelves, he knows they will make uſe of to ill purpoſes, but which by the ſame decree that he reſolves to preſent ſuch occaſions to them, he alſo reſolves to make uſe of them for his own Glory. * 'Tis not conceivable by us what way that Death of Chriſt, which was neceſſary for the ſatisfaction of Divine Juſtice, could be brought about without ordering the evil of ſome Mens hearts by ſpecial Occaſions to effect his purpoſe; we cannot ſuppoſe that Chriſt can be guilty of any Crime that deſerved Death by the Jewiſh Law; had he been ſo a Criminal, he could not have been a Redeemer: A perfect Innocence was neceſſary to the deſign of his coming. Had God himſelf put him to that Death, without uſing Inſtruments of Wickedneſs in it, by ſome remarkable hand from Heaven, the Innocence of his Nature had been for ever eclipſed, and the voluntarineſs of his Sacrifice had been obſcur'd: The ſtrangeneſs of ſuch a Judgment would have made his Innocence incredible; he could not reaſonably have been propos'd as an Object of Faith; What, to believe in one that was ſtruck dead by a Hand from Heaven? The propagation of the Doctrine of Redemption had wanted a Foundation; and tho' God might have raiſed him again, the certainty of his Death had been as queſtionable as his Innocence in dying, had he not been raiſed. But God orders every thing ſo, as to anſwer his own moſt wiſe and holy ends, and maintain his Truth, and the fulfilling the Predictions of the minuteſt Concerns about them, and all this by preſenting Occaſions innocent in themſelves; which the Corruptions of the Jews took hold of, and whereby God, unknown to them, brought about his own Decrees: And may not this be conceived without any taint upon God's Holineſs; for when there are Seeds of all ſin in Man's Nature, why may not God hinder the ſprouting up of this or that kind of Seed, and leave liberty to the growth of the other, and ſhut up other ways of ſinning, and reſtrain Men from them, and let them looſe to that Temptation which he intends to ſerve himſelf of, hiding from them thoſe Objects which were not ſo ſerviceable to his purpoſe, wherein they would have ſinned, and offer others, which he knew their Corruption would uſe ill, and were ſerviceable to his ends; ſince the depravation of their Natures would neceſſarily hurry them to evil without reſtraining Grace, as a Scale will neceſſarily riſe up when the weight in it, which kept it down, is taken away?

* This I have ſpoken of before, but it is neceſſary now.

7. Propoſition. The Holineſs of God is not blemiſht by withdrawing his Grace from a ſinful Creature, whereby he falls into more ſin. That God withdraws his Grace from Men, and gives them up ſometimes to the fury of their Luſts, is as clear in Scripture as any thing; Deut. 29. 4. Yet the Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear, &c. Judas was delivered to Satan after the Sop, and put into his power for deſpiſing former Admonitions. He often leaves the Reins to the Devil, that he may uſe what efficacy he can in thoſe that have offended the Majeſty of God; he withholds further Influences of Grace, or withdraws what before he had granted them. Thus he withheld that Grace from the Sons of Eli, that might have made their Fathers pious Admonitions effectual to them, 1 Sam. 2. 25. They hearkned not to the voice of their Father, becauſe the Lord would ſlay them. He gave Grace to Eli to reprove them, and withheld that Grace from them, which might have enabled them againſt their natural Corruption and Obſtinacy to receive that Reproof.

But the Holineſs of God is not blemiſht by this.

1. Becauſe the act of God in this is only negative *. Thus God is ſaid to harden Men: not by poſitive hardning, or working any thing in the Creature, but by not working, not ſoftning, leaving a Man to the hardneſs of his own heart, whereby it is unavoidable by the depravation of Man's Nature, and the Fury of his Paſſions, but that he ſhould be further hardned, and increaſe unto more ungodlineſs, as the Expreſſion is 2 Tim. 2. 16. As a Man is ſaid to give another his Life, when he doth not take it away when it lay at his Mercy; ſo God is ſaid to harden a Man, when he doth not mollifie him when it was in his power, and inwardly quicken him with that Grace, whereby he might infallibly avoid any further provoking of him. God is ſaid to harden Men, when he removes not from them the Incentives to ſin, curbs not thoſe Principles, which are ready to comply with thoſe Incentives, withdraws the common aſſiſtances of his Grace, concurs not with counſels and admonitions to make them effectual, flaſheth not in the convincing light which he darted upon them before. If hardneſs follows upon God's withholding his ſoftening Grace, 'tis not by any poſitive act of God, but from the natural hardneſs of Man. If you put Fire near to Wax or Roſin, both will melt, but when that fire is removed, they return to their natural quality of hardneſs and brittleneſs; the poſitive act of the Fire is to melt and ſoften, and the ſoftneſs of the Roſin is to be aſcribed to that, but the hardneſs is from the Roſin it ſelf, wherein the Fire hath no influence, * Teſtard. de natur. & grat. Theſ. 150, 151. Amy on diverſ Texts. p. 311.

fluence, but only a negative act by a removal of it: So when God hardens a Man, he only leaves him to that ſtony heart which he derived from Adam, and brought with him into the World. All Mens underſtandings being blinded, and their wills perverted in Adam, God's withdrawing his Grace, is but a leaving them to their natural pravity, which is the cauſe of their further ſinning, and not God's removal of that ſpecial light he before afforded them, or reſtraint he held over them. As when God withdraws his preſerving Power from the Creature, he is not the efficient, but deficient cauſe of the Creatures deſtruction; ſo in this caſe, God only ceaſeth to bind and dam up that ſin which elſe would break out.

2. The whole poſitive cauſe of this hardneſs is from man's corruption. God infuſeth not any ſin into his Creatures, but forbears to infuſe his Grace and reſtrain their Luſts, which upon the removal of his Grace work impetuouſly: God only gives them up to that, which he knows will work ſtrongly in their hearts. And therefore the Apoſtle wipes off from God any poſitive act in that uncleanneſs the Heathens were given up to (Rom. 1.24. Wherefore God gave them up to uncleanneſs, through the luſts of their own hearts: And verſe 26. God gave them up to vile affections; but they were their own affections, none of God's inſpiring) by adding through the luſts of their own hearts: God's giving them up was the Logical cauſe, or a cauſe by way of Argument; their own Luſts were the true and natural cauſe; their own they were, before they were given up to them; and belonging to none as the Author, but themſelves after they were given up to them. The Luſt in the Heart, and the temptation without, eaſily cloſe and mix intereſts with one another: As the Fire in a Cole-pit will with the Fuel, if the ſtreams derived into it for the quenching it, be damp'd up: The natural Paſſions will run to a temptation, as the Waters of a River tumble towards the Sea. When a Man that hath bridled in a high-metled Horſe from running out, gives him the Reins; or a Huntſman takes off the ſtring that held the Dog, and lets him run after the Hare; are they the immediate cauſe of the motion of the one, or the other? no, but the mettle and ſtrength of the Horſe, and the natural inclination of the Hound, both which are left to their own motions to purſue their own natural inſtincts. Man doth as naturally tend to ſin as a ſtone to the Center, or as a weighty thing inclines to a motion to the Earth: 'Tis from the propenſion of Man's Nature that he drinks up iniquity like water; and God doth no more when he leaves a Man to ſin, by taking away the Hedge which ſtopt him, but leave him to his natural Inclination. As a Man that breaks up a damm he hath placed, leaves the ſtream to run in its natural Chanel; or one that takes away a prop from a Stone to let it fall, leaves it only to that nature which inclines it to a deſcent; both have their motion from their own Nature, and Man his Sin from his own Corruption. *The withdrawing the Sun-beams is not the cauſe of Darkneſs, but the Shadineſs of the Earth; nor is the departure of the Sun the cauſe of Winter, but the coldneſs of the Air and Earth, which was temper'd and beaten back into the bowels of the Earth by the vigor of the Sun, upon whoſe departure they return to their natural ſtate: The Sun only leaves the Earth and Air as it found them at the beginning of the Spring, or the beginning of the Day. If God do not give a Man Grace to melt him, yet he cannot be ſaid to communicate to him that Nature which hardens him, which Man hath from himſelf. As God was not the cauſe of the firſt ſin of Adam, which was the root of all other, ſo he is not the cauſe of the following ſins, which as branches ſpring from that root; Man's Free-will was the cauſe of the firſt ſin, and the corruption of his Nature by it the cauſe of all ſucceeding ſins. God doth not immediately harden any Man, but doth propoſe thoſe things, from whence the natural Vice of Man takes an occaſion to ſtrengthen and nouriſh it ſelf: Hence God is ſaid to harden Pharaoh's heart *, by concurring with the Magicians in turning their Rods into Serpents, which ſtiffned his Heart againſt Moſes, conceiving him by reaſon of that to have no more power than other Men, and was an occaſion of his further hardening: And Pharaoh is ſaid to harden himſelf †, that is, in regard of his own natural Paſſion.

3. God is holy and righteous, becauſe he doth not withdraw from man, till man deſerts him: To ſay that God withdrew that Grace from Adam, which he had afforded him in Creation, or any thing that was due to him, till he had abuſed the Gifts of God, and turned them to an end contrary to that of Creation, would be a reflection upon the Divine Holineſs: God was firſt deſerted by Man before Man was deſerted by God; and Man doth firſt contemn and abuſe the common Grace of God, and thoſe reliques of natural light that enlighten every man that comes into the World *, before God leaves him to the hurry of his own Paſſions. Ephraim was firſt joyned to Idols, before God pronounced the fatal ſentence, Let him alone †: And the Heathens firſt changed the glory of the incorruptible God, before God withdrew his common Grace from the corrupted Creature ‖; and they firſt ſerved the Creature more than the Creator, before the Creator gave them up to the ſlaviſh Chains of their vile affections *. Iſrael firſt caſt off God before God caſt off them, but then he gave them up to their own hearts luſts, and they walked in their own Counſels, Pſal. 81. 11, 12. Since ſin entred into the World by the fall of Adam, and the Blood of all his Poſterity was tainted, Man cannot do any thing that is formally good; not for want of faculties, but for the want of a righteous habit in thoſe faculties, eſpecially in the Will; yet God diſcovers himſelf to Man in the works of his hands; he hath left in him footſteps of natural reaſon, he doth attend him with common motions of his Spirit, corrects him for his faults with gentle Chaſtiſements. He is near unto all in ſome kind of Inſtructions: He puts many times providential bars in their way of ſinning; but when they will ruſh into it as the Horſe into the battle, when they will rebel againſt the light, God doth often leave them to their own courſe, ſentence him that is filthy to be filthy ſtill †, which is a righteous act of God, as he is Rector and Governour of the World. Man's not receiving, or not improving what God gives, is the cauſe of God's not giving further, or taking away his own, which before he had beſtowed. This is ſo far from being repugnant to the Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God, that it is rather a commendable act of his Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, as the Rector of the World, not to let thoſe gifts continue in the hand of a Man who abuſes them contrary to his glory. Who will blame a Father, that after all the good Counſels he hath given his Son to reclaim him, all the Corrections he hath inflicted on him for his irregular practice, leaves him to his own courſes, and withdraws thoſe aſſiſtances which he ſcoft at, and turned the deaf Ear unto? Or who will blame the Phyſician for deſerting the Patient, who rejects his Counſel, will not follow his Preſcriptions, but daſheth his Phyſick againſt the Wall? No Man will blame him, no Man will ſay that he is the cauſe of the Patient's death, but the true cauſe is the fury of the Diſtemper, and the obſtinacy of the diſeaſed Perſon, to which the Phyſician left him. And who can juſtly blame God in this caſe, who yet never denied ſupplies of Grace to any that ſincerely ſought it at his hands; and what Man is there that lies under a hardneſs, but firſt was guilty of very provoking ſins? What unholineſs is it to deprive Men of thoſe aſſiſtances becauſe of their ſin, and afterwards to direct thoſe counſels and practiſes of theirs which he hath juſtly given them up unto, to ſerve the ends of his own glory in his own methods?

4. Which will appear further by conſidering, that God is not oblig'd to continue his Grace to them. It was at his liberty whether he would give any renewing Grace to Adam after his fall, or to any of his Poſterity: He was at his own liberty to withhold it or communicate it: But if he were under any Obligation then, ſurely he muſt be under leſs now, ſince the multiplication of Sin by his Creatures: But if the Obligation were none juſt after the fall, there is no pretence now to faſten any ſuch Obligation on God. That God had no Obligation at firſt hath been ſpoken to before: He is leſs obliged to continue his Grace after a repeated refuſal, and a peremptory abuſe, than he was bound to proffer it after the firſt Apoſtacy. God cannot be charg'd with unholineſs in withdrawing his Grace after we have received it, unleſs we can make it appear that his Grace was a thing due to us, as we are his Creatures, and as he is Governour of the World. What Prince looks upon himſelf as oblig'd to reſide in any particular place of his Kingdom? But ſuppoſe he be bound to inhabit in one particular City, yet after the City rebels againſt him, is he bound to continue his Court there, ſpend his Revenue among Rebels, endanger his own Honour and Security, enlarge their Charter, or maintain their Ancient Priviledges? Is it not moſt juſt and righteous for him to withdraw himſelf and leave them to their own Tumultuouſneſs and Sedition, whereby they ſhould eat the fruit of their own doings? If there be an Obligation on God as a Governour, it would rather lye on the ſide of Juſtice, to leave Man to the Power of the Devil whom he courted, and the prevalency of thoſe Luſts he hath ſo often careſſed, and wrap up in a Cloud all his common Illuminations, and leave him deſtitute of all common workings of his Spirit.

8. Propoſition. God's Holineſs is not blemiſht, by his commanding thoſe things ſometimes which ſeem to be againſt Nature, or thwart ſome other of his Precepts. As when God commanded Abraham with his own hand to Sacrifice his Son *, there was no thing of Unrighteouſneſs in it. God hath a Soveraign Dominion over the Lives and Beings of his Creatures, whereby as he creates one day, he might annihilate the next; and by the ſame right that he might demand the Life of Iſaac, as being his Creature, he might demand the Obedience of Abraham in a ready return of that to him, which he had ſo long enjoy'd by his grant. 'Tis true, killing is unjuſt when it is done without cauſe, and by a private Authority: But the Authority of God ſurmounts all private and publick Authority whatſoever. Our Lives are due to him when he calls for them, and they are more than once forfeit to him by reaſon of Tranſgreſſion. But howſoever the Caſe is, God commanded him to do it for the trial of his Grace, but ſuffered him not to do it in favour to his ready Obedience: But had Iſaac been actually ſlain and offer'd, how had it been unrighteous in God, who enacts Laws for the Regulation of his Creature, but never intended them to the prejudice of the Rights of his Soveraignty? Another Caſe is that of the Iſraelites borrowing Jewels of the Egyptians by the order of God †. Is not God Lord of Man's Goods, as well as their Lives? What have any, they have not received? and that not as Proprietors independent on God, but his Stewards, and may not he demand a portion of his Steward to beſtow upon his Favourite? He that had power to diſpoſe of the Egyptians Goods, had power to order the Iſraelites to ask them. Beſides, God acted the part of a juſt Judge in ordering them their Wages for their Service in this method, and making their Task-maſters give them ſome Recompence for their unjuſt oppreſſion ſo many years: It was a Command from God therefore, rather for the preſervation of Juſtice, (the Baſis of all thoſe Laws which link Human Society) than any infringement of it. It was a material Recompence in part, tho' not a formal one in the intention of the Egyptians: It was but in part a Recompence; It muſt needs come ſhort of the Damage the poor Captives had ſuſtained by the tyranny of their Maſters, who had inſlav'd them contrary to the Rules of Hoſpitality; and could not make amends for the Lives of the poor Infants of Iſrael, whom they had drowned in the River. He that might for the unjuſt Oppreſſion of his People have taken away all their Lives, deſtroy'd the whole Nation, and put the Iſraelites into the poſſeſſion of their Lands, could without any unrighteouſneſs diſpoſe of part of their Goods: And it was rather an Act of Clemency to leave them ſome part, who had doubly forfeited all. Again, the Egyptians were as ready to lend by God's influence, as the Iſraelites were to ask by God's order: And tho' it was a Loan, God as Soveraign of the World, and Lord of the Earth and the Fulneſs thereof, alienated the property by aſſuming them to the uſe of the Tabernacle, to which Service moſt, if not all of them, were afterwards dedicated. God who is Law-giver hath power to diſpence with his own Law, and make uſe of his own Goods, and diſpoſe of them as he pleaſes. 'Tis no unholineſs in God to diſpoſe of that which he hath a right unto. Indeed God cannot command that which is in its own Nature intrinſecally evil; as to command a Rational Creature not to love him, not to worſhip him, to call God to witneſs to a Lye; theſe are intrinſecally evil; but for the diſpoſing of the Lives and Goods of his Creatures, which they have from him in right, and not in abſolute propriety, is not evil in him, becauſe there is no Repugnancy in his own Nature to ſuch Acts, nor is it any thing inconſiſtent with the natural Duty of a Creature, and in ſuch caſes he may uſe what Inſtruments he pleaſes.

* Gen. 22. 2.

† Exod. 11.2,3. Exod. 12. 36.

The Point was, That Holineſs is a glorious Perfection of the Nature of God. We have ſhew'd the Nature of this Holineſs in God; what it is, and we have demonſtrated it, and proved that God is holy, and muſt needs be ſo; and alſo the purity of his Nature in all his acts about ſin: Let us now improve it by way of Uſe.

Is Holineſs a tranſcendent Perfection belonging to the Nature of God? The firſt Uſe ſhall be of Inſtruction and Information. Uſe.

1. How great and how frequent is the contempt of this eminent Perfection in the Deity? Since the Fall, this Attribute, which renders God moſt amiable in himſelf, renders him moſt hateful to his Apoſtate Creature. 'Tis impoſſible that he that loves Iniquity can affect that which is irreconcileably contrary to the Iniquity he loves. Nothing ſo contrary to the ſinfulneſs of man as the Holineſs of God, and nothing is thought of by the Sinner with ſo much deteſtation.

teſtation. How do Men account that which is the moſt glorious perfection of the Divinity, unworthy to be regarded as an accompliſhment of their own Souls? And when they are preſſed to an imitation of it, and a deteſtation of what is contrary to it, have the ſame Sentiments in their Heart which the Devil had in his Language to Chriſt, Why art thou come to torment us before our time? What an enmity the World naturally hath to this Perfection, I think is viſible in the practiſe of the Heathen, who among all their Heroes which they deified, elevated none to that dignity among them for this or that moral Virtue that came neareſt to it, but for their Valour, or ſome uſefulneſs in the concerns of this Life. Æſculapius was deified for his skill in the cure of Diſeaſes; Bacchus for the uſe of the Grape; Vulcan for his operations by Fire; Hercules for his deſtroying of Tyrants and Monſters; but none for their meer Virtue: As if any thing of Purity were unworthy their conſideration in the frame of a Deity, when it is the glory of all other Perfections: So eſſential it is, that when Men reject the imitation of this, God regards it as a total rejection of himſelf, tho' they own all the other Attributes of his Nature; Pſal. 81. 11, Iſrael would none of me; why? becauſe they walked not in his ways, Ver. 13. thoſe ways wherein the purity of the Divine Nature was moſt conſpicuous: They would own him in his Power, when they ſtood in need of a Deliverance; they would own him in his Mercy, when they were plung'd in Diſtreſs; but they would not imitate him in his Holineſs. This being the luſtre of the Divine Nature, the contempt of it is an obſcuring all his other Perfections, and a daſhing a blot upon his whole Scutcheon. To own all the reſt, and deny him this, is to frame him as an unbeautiful Monſter, a deform'd Power. Indeed, all Sin is againſt this Attribute; all Sin aims in general at the Being of God, but in particular at the Holineſs of his Being: All Sin is a violence to this Perfection: There is not an Iniquity in the World, but directs its venomous ſting againſt the Divine Purity: Some Sins are directed againſt his Omniſcience, as ſecret Wickedneſs; ſome againſt his Providence, as Diſtruſt; ſome againſt his Mercy, as Unbelief; ſome againſt his Wiſdom, as neglecting the means inſtituted by him, cenſuring his ways and actings; ſome againſt his Power, as truſting in means more than in God, and the immoderate fear of Men more than of God; ſome againſt his Truth, as diſtruſting his Promiſe, or not fearing his Threatning; but all agree together in their Enmity againſt this, which is the peculiar Glory of the Deity, every one of them is a receding from the Divine Image; and the blackneſs of every one is the deeper, by how much the diſtance of it from the Holineſs of God is the greater. This contrariety to the Holineſs of God is the cauſe of all the abſolute Atheiſm (if there be any ſuch) in the World; What was the reaſon the fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God? but becauſe the Fool is corrupt, and hath done abominable works *. If they believe the being of a God, their own Reaſon will enforce them to imagine him holy: Therefore rather than fancy a holy God, they would fain fancy none at all.

* Pſal. 14. 1.

In particular,

I. The Holineſs of God is injur'd in unworthy repreſentations of God, and imaginations of him in our own minds. The Heathen fell under this guilt, and aſcrib'd to their Idols thoſe Vices which their own Senſuality inclin'd them to, unworthy of a man, much more unworthy of a God, that they might find a protection of their Crimes in the practiſe of their Idols. But is this only the notion of the Heathens? May there not be many among us, whoſe love to their Luſts, and deſires of ſinning without controul, move them to ſlander God in their Thoughts, rather than reform their Lives, and are ready to frame by the power of their imaginative faculty, a God not only winking, but ſmiling at their Impurities? I am ſure God charges the Impieties of Men upon this ſcore, in that Pſalm, (Pſal. 50. 21.) which ſeems to be a repreſentation of the Day of Judgment, as ſome gather from Verſe 6. when God ſums up all together, Theſe things haſt thou done, and I kept ſilence, thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thy ſelf; not a deteſter, but approver of thy Crimes. And the Pſalmiſt ſeems to expreſs God's loathing of Sin in ſuch a manner, as intimates it to be contrary to the Ideas and Reſemblances Men make of him in their minds, Pſal. 5. 4. For thou art not a God that haſt pleaſure in wickedneſs. As we ſay in vindication of a man, he is not ſuch a man as you imagine him to be; Thou art not ſuch a God as the World commonly imagines Thee to be, a God taking pleaſure in iniquity. 'Tis too common for men to fancy God not as he is, but as they would have him; ſtrip him of his excellency for their own ſecurity. As God made man after his Image, man would dreſs God after his own Modes, as may beſt ſuit the content of his Luſts, and encourage him in a courſe of ſinning; for when they can frame ſuch a notion of God, as if he were a countenancer of Sin, they will derive from thence a reputation to their Crimes, commit Wickedneſs with an unbounded Licentiouſneſs, and crown their Vices with the name of Virtues, becauſe they are ſo like to the Sentiments of that God they fancy: From hence, as the Pſalmiſt in the Pſalm before mention'd, ariſeth that maſs of Vice in the World; ſuch Conceptions are the Mother and Nurſe of all Impiety; I queſtion not but the firſt Spring is ſome wrong notion of God in regard of his Holineſs: We are as apt to imagin God as we would have him, as the black Ethiopians were to draw the Image of their gods after their own dark hue, and paint him with their own colour: As a Philoſopher in Theodoret ſpeaks; if Oxen and Lions had hands, and could paint as Men do, they would frame the Images of their gods according to their own likeneſs and complexion: Such notions of God render him a Swiniſh Being, and worſe than the vileſt Idols ador'd by the Egyptians, when Men fancy a God indulgent to their Appetites and moſt fordid Luſts.

2. In defacing the Image of God in our Souls. God in the firſt draught of Man conform'd him to his own Image, or made him an Image of himſelf; becauſe we find that in Regeneration this Image is renew'd, Eph. 4. 24. The New Man, which after God is created in Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. He did not take Angels for his Pattern in the firſt poliſhing the Soul, but himſelf. In defacing this Image we caſt Dirt upon the Holineſs of God, which was his Pattern in the framing of us; and rather chuſe to be conformed to Satan, who is God's grand Enemy, to have God's Image wip'd out of us, and the Devil's pictur'd in us: Therefore natural Men in an unregenerate ſtate, may juſtly be called Devils, ſince our Saviour called the worſt man, Judas, ſo *, and Peter one of the beſt †: And if this Title be given by an infallible Judge to one of the worſt, and one of the beſt, it may without wrong to any be aſcrib'd to all men that wallow in their Sin, which is directly contrary to that illuſtrious Image God did imprint upon them. How often is it ſeen that Men controul the light of their own Nature, and ſtain the cleareſt beams of that Candle of the Lord in their own Spirits, that fly in the face of their own Conſciences, and ſay to them, as Ahab to Micaiah, Thou didſt never prophecy good to me; Thou didſt never encourage me in thoſe things that are pleaſing to the Fleſh; and uſe it at the ſame rate as the wicked King did the Prophet, impriſon it in unrighteouſneſs ‖; becauſe it ſtarts up in them ſometimes Sentiments of the Holineſs of God, which it repreſents in the Soul of Man. How jolly are many Men when the exhalations of their Senſitive part riſe up to Cloud the exacteſt Principle of Moral Nature in their Minds, and render the monſtrous Principles of the Law of Corruption more lively? Whence ariſeth the Wickedneſs which hath been committed with an open face in the World, and the applauſe that hath been often given to the worſt of villanies? Have we not known among our ſelves, Men to glory in their ſhame, and eſteem that a moſt gentile accompliſhment of Man, which is the greateſt blot upon his Nature, and which, if it were upon God, would render him no God, but an impure Devil, ſo that to be a Gentleman among us hath been the ſame as to be an incarnate Devil? and to be a Man, was to be no better, but worſe than a Brute? Vile wretches! Is not this a contempt of Divine Holineſs, to kill that Divine Seed which lies languiſhing in the midſt of corrupted Nature; to cut up any ſprouts of it as Weeds unworthy to grow in their Gardens, and cultivate what is the Seed of Hell? prefer the rotten Fruits of Sodom, mark'd with a Divine Curſe, before thoſe Relicks of the Fruits of Eden, of God's own planting?

‖ Rom. 1. 18.

3. The Holineſs of God is injur'd in charging our ſin upon God. Nothing is more natural to Men, than to ſeek Excuſes for their Sin, and transfer it from themſelves to the next at hand; and rather than fail, ſhift it upon God himſelf; and if they can bring God into a ſociety with them in Sin, they will hug themſelves in a ſecurity that God cannot puniſh that guilt wherein he is a Partner: Adam's Children are not of a different diſpoſition from Adam himſelf, who after he was arraign'd and brought to his Trial, boggles not at flingiug his Dirt in the face of God his Creator, and accuſeth him as if he had given him the Woman, not to be his help, but his ruine, Gen. 3. 12. And the man ſaid, the Woman whom thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the Tree, and I did eat. He never ſupplicates for Pardon, nor ſeeks a Remedy, but reflects his Crime upon God: Had I been alone, as I was firſt created, I had not eaten, but the Woman whom I receiv'd as a ſpecial Gift from thee, hath prov'd my Tempter and my Bane. When man could not be like God in Knowledge, he endeavour'd to make God like him in his Crime; and when his Ambition fail'd of equalizing himſelf with God, he did with an Inſolence too common to corrupted Nature, attempt by the imputation of his Sin, to equal the Divinity with himſelf. Some think Cain had the ſame ſentiment in his anſwer to God's demand, where his Brother was, Gen. 2. 9. Am I my Brother's keeper? Art not thou the Keeper and Governor of the World, why didſt not thou take care of him, and hinder my killing him, and drawing this guilt upon my ſelf, and terror upon my Conſcience? David was not behind, when after the murder of Uriah, he ſweeps the Dirt from his own Door to God's, 2 Sam. 2. 11, 25. The Sword devoureth one as well as another; fathering that ſolely upon Divine Providence, which was his own wicked Contrivance: Tho' afterwards he is more ingenuous in clearing God, and charging himſelf, Pſal. 51. 4. Againſt thee, thee only, have I ſinned; and he clears God in his Judgment too: 'Tis too common for the fooliſhneſs of man to pervert his way, and then his Heart frets againſt the Lord, Prov. 19. 3. He ſtudies miſchief, runs in a way of ſin, and when he hath conjur'd up troubles to himſelf by his own folly, he excuſeth himſelf, and with indignation charges God as the Author both of his ſin and miſery, and ſets his mouth againſt the Heavens. 'Tis a more horrible thing to accuſe God as a Principal or Acceſſory in our Guilt, than to conceive him to be a favourer of our Iniquity; yet both are bad enough.

4. The Holineſs of God is injur'd, when Men will ſtudy Arguments from the holy Word of God to colour and ſhelter their Crimes. When Men will ſeek for a ſhelter for their Lies, in that of the Midwives to preſerve the Children; or in that of Rahab, to ſave the Spies; as if becauſe God rewarded their fidelity he countenanc'd their ſin. How often is Scripture wreſted to be a Plea for unbecoming Practiſes, that God in his Word may be imagin'd a Patron for their Iniquity? 'Tis not unknown that ſome have maintain'd their quaffing and carrouſing from Eccl. 8. 11. That a man hath no better thing under the Sun, than to eat and drink and be merry: And their Gluttony from Matth. 5. 11. That which goes into the belly defiles not a man. The Jeſuites Morals are a tranſcript of this. How often hath the Paſſion of our Saviour, the higheſt expreſſion of God's Holineſs, been employ'd to ſtain it, and encourage the moſt debauch'd Practiſes? Grace hath been turn'd into wantonneſs, and the abundance of Grace been us'd as a blaſt to encreaſe the flames of Sin; as if God had no other aim in that Work of Redemption, but to diſcover himſelf more indulgent to our Senſual Appetites, and by his Severity with his Son, become more gracious to our Luſts: This is to feed the Roots of Hell with the Dews of Heaven, to make Grace a Pandor for the abuſe of it, and to imploy the expreſſions of his Holineſs in his Word to be a Sword againſt the eſſential Holineſs of his Nature: As if a man ſhould draw an Apology for his Treaſon out of that Law that was made to forbid, not to protect his Rebellion. Not the meaneſt Inſtrument in the Temple was to be alienated from the uſe it was by Divine Order appointed to, nor was it to be employ'd in any common uſe; and ſhall the Word of God, which is the Image of his Holineſs, be transferr'd by baſe Interpretations to be an Advocate for Iniquity? Such an ill uſe of his Word reflects upon that Hand which imprinted thoſe Characters of Purity and Righteouſneſs upon it: As the miſinterpretation of the wholſome Laws of a Prince, made to diſcourage Debauchery, reflects upon his righteouſneſs and ſincerity in enacting them.

5. The Holineſs of God is injur'd, when men will put up Petitions to God to favour them in a wicked Deſign. Such there are, and tax'd by the Apoſtle, Jam. 4. 3. Ye ask amiſs, that you may conſume it upon your Luſts: who deſir'd Mercies from God, with an intent to make them Inſtruments of Sin, and Weapons of Unrighteouſneſs; as it is reported of a Thief, that he always pray'd for the ſucceſs of his Robbery. It hath not been rare in the World to appoint Faſts and Prayers for ſucceſs in Wars manifeſtly unjuſt, and commenc'd upon breaches of Faith. Many covetous men petition God to proſper them in their unjuſt gain; as if the bleſſed God ſate in his pure Majeſty upon a Throne of Grace, to eſpouſe unjuſt Practiſes, and make Iniquity proſperous. There are ſuch as offer Sacrifice with an evil mind *, to barter with God for a Divine Bleſſing to ſpirit a wicked contrivance. How great a contempt of the Holineſs of God is this? How inexcuſable would it be for a Favourite to addreſs himſelf to a juſt Prince with this Language? Sir, I deſire a Boon of ſuch Lands that lye near me, for an addition to my Eſtate, that I may have ſupports for my Debauchery, and be able to play the Villain more powerfully among my Neighbours. Hereby he implies, that his Prince is a Friend to ſuch Crimes and Wickedneſs he intends his Petition for. Is not this the Language of many many mens Hearts in the immediate Preſence of God? The Order of Prayer runs thus, Hallowed be thy Name; firſt to have a deep ſenſe of the Holineſs of the Divine Nature, and an ardent deſire for the glory of it: This Order is inverted by asking thoſe things which are not agreeable to the Will of God; not meet for us to ask, nor meet for God to give; or asking things agreeable to the Will of God, but with a wicked intention: This is, in effect, to deſire God to ſtrip himſelf of his Holineſs, and commit Sacriledge upon his own Nature, to gratifie our Luſts.

* Prov. 21. 27.

6. The Purity of God is contemn'd, in hating and ſcoffing at the Holineſs which is in a Creature. Whoever looks upon the Holineſs of a Creature as an unlovely thing, can have no good Opinion of the amiableneſs of Divine Purity. Whoſoever hates thoſe qualities and graces that reſemble God in any perſon, muſt needs contemn the Original Pattern, which is more eminent in God. If there be no comlineſs in a Creature's holineſs, to render it grateful to us, we ſhould ſay of God himſelf, were he viſible among us, with thoſe in the Prophet, Iſai. 53. There is no beauty in him, that we ſhould deſire him: Holineſs is beautiful in it ſelf. If God be the moſt lovely Being, that which is a likeneſs to him, ſo far as it doth reſemble him, muſt needs be amiable, becauſe it partakes of God: And therefore thoſe that ſee no beauty in an inferiour Holineſs, but contemn it becauſe it is a Purity above them, contemn God much more: He that hates that which is imperfect meerly for that excellency which is in it, doth much more hate that which is perfect, without any mixture or ſtain. Holineſs being the Glory of God, the peculiar Title of the Deity, and from him derived unto the Nature of a Creature; he that mocks this in a Perſon, derides God himſelf; and when he cannot abuſe the Purity in the Deity, he will do it in his Image. As Rebels that cannot wrong the King in his Perſon, will do it in his Picture, and his Subjects that are Loyal to him: He that hates the Picture of a Man, hates the Perſon repreſented by it much more; he that hates the Beams, hates the Sun; the Holineſs of a Creature is but a Beam from that Infinite Sun, a Stream from that Eternal Fountain. Where there is a deriſion of the Purity of any Creature; there is a greater reflection upon God in that deriſion, as he is the Author of it. If a mix'd and ſtain'd Holineſs be more the ſubject of any man's Scoffs than a great deal of Sin, that Perſon hath a diſpoſition more roundly to ſcoff at God himſelf, ſhould he appear in that unbiemiſh'd and unſpotted Purity which infinitely ſhines in his Nature. O! 'tis a dangerous thing to ſcoff and deride Holineſs in any Perſon, tho' never ſo mean; ſuch do deride and ſcoff at the moſt holy God.

7. The Holineſs of God is injur'd by our unprepared Addreſſes to him, when like Swine we come into the preſence of God with all our Mire reeking and ſteaming upon us. A holy God requires a holy Worſhip: And if our beſt Duties, having Filth in every part, as perform'd by us, are unmeet for God; how much more unſuitable are dead and dirty Duties to a living and immenſe Holineſs? Slight approaches and droſſy frames ſpeak us to have Imaginations of God as of a ſlight and ſottiſh Being: this is worſe than the Heathens practis'd, who would purge their Fleſh before they ſacrific'd, and make ſome preparations in a ſeeming Purity, before they would enter into their Temples. God is ſo holy, that were our Services as refin'd as thoſe of Angels, we could not preſent him with a Service meet for his holy Nature*. We contemn then this Perfection when we come before him without due preparation; as if God himſelf were of an impure Nature, and did not deſerve our pureſt thoughts in our applications to him; as if any blemiſh'd and polluted Sacrifice were good enough for him, and his Nature deſerv'd no better. When we excite not thoſe elevated frames of Spirit which are due to ſuch a Being; when we think to put him off with a lame and imperfect Service, we worſhip him not according to the excellency of his Nature, but put a ſlight upon his Majeſtick Sanctity: When we nouriſh in our Duties thoſe fooliſh Imaginations which creep upon us; when we bring into and continue our worldly, carnal, debauch'd Fancies in his Preſence, worſe than the naſty Servants, or bemired Dogs, a man would bluſh to be attended with in his Viſits to a neat Perſon. To be converſing with ſordid Senſualities, when we are at the feet of an Infinite God, ſitting upon the Throne of his Holineſs, is as much a contempt of him, as it would be of a Prince, to bring a Veſſel full of naſty Dung with us, when we come to preſent a Petition to him clothed in his Royal Robes. Or as it would have been to God, if the High-prieſt ſhould have ſwept all the Blood and Excrements of the Sacrifices from the foot of the Altar into the Holy of Holies, and heap'd it up before the Mercy-ſeat, where the Preſence of God dwelt between the Cherubims, and afterwards ſhovel'd it up into the Ark, to be lodg'd with Aaron's Rod, and the Pot of Manna.

8. God's Holineſs is ſlighted in depending upon our imperfect Services to bear us out before the Tribunal of God. This is too ordinary: The Jews were often infected with it*, who not well underſtanding the enormity of their Tranſgreſſions, the interweaving of Sin with their Services, and the unſpottedneſs of the Divine Purity, mingled an Opinion of Merit with their Sacrifices, and thought by the cutting the Throat of a Beaſt, and offering it upon God's Altar, they had made a ſufficient Compenſation to that Holineſs they had offended. Not to ſpeak of many among the Romaniſts, who have the ſame notion, thinking to make Satisfaction to God, by erecting an Hoſpital, or endowing a Church, as if this injur'd Perfection could be contented with the Dregs of their Purſes, and the offering of an unjuſt Mammon, more likely to mind God of the Injury they have done him, than contribute to the appeaſing of him. But is it not too ordinary with miſerable Men, whoſe Conſciences accuſe them of their Crimes, to rely upon the mumbling of a few formal Prayers, and in the ſtrength of them to think to ſtand before the tremendous Tribunal of God, and meet with a Diſcharge upon this account from any Accuſation this Divine Perfection can preſent againſt them? Nay, do not the beſt Chriſtians ſometimes find a Principle in them, that makes them ſtumble in their goings forth to Chriſt, and glorifying the Holineſs of God in that method which he hath appointed? Sometimes caſting an eye at their Grace, and ſticking a while to this or that Duty, and gazing at the glory of the Temple-building, while they ſhould more admire the glorious Preſence that fills it. What is all this but a vilifying of the Divine Nature, as tho' it would be well enough contented with our Impurities and Imperfections, becauſe they look like a Righteouſneſs in our eſtimation? As tho' Droſs and Dung, which are the Titles the Apoſtle gives to all the Righteouſneſs of a Fallen Creature*, were valuable in the ſight of God, and ſufficient to render us comely before him. 'Tis a Blaſphemy againſt this Attribute, to pretend that any thing ſo imperfect, ſo daub'd as the beſt of our Services are, can anſwer to that which is infinitely perfect, and be a ground of demanding Eternal Life: 'Tis at beſt, to ſet up a gilded Dagon as a fit Companion for the Ark of his Holineſs; our own Righ-

Righteouſneſs as a ſuitable Mate for the Righteouſneſs of God: As if he had repented of the Claim he made by the Law to an exact conformity, and thrown off the Holineſs of his Nature for the fondling of a Corrupted Creature. Rude and Fooliſh Notions of the Divine Purity, are clearly evidenc'd by any confidence in any Righteouſneſs of our own, tho' never ſo ſplendid. 'Tis a rendring the Righteouſneſs of God as dull and obſcure as that of Men; a meer Out-ſide, as their own: As blind as the Heathens pictur'd their Fortune, that knew as little how to diſcern the Nature and Value of the Offerings made to her, as to diſtribute her gifts, as if it were all one to them to have a Dog or a Lamb preſented in Sacrifice. As if God did not well underſtand his own Nature, when he enacted ſo Holy a Law, and ſtrengthen'd it with ſo ſevere a Threatning; which muſt follow upon our Conceit, that he will accept a Righteouſneſs lower than that, which bears ſome ſuitableneſs to the Holineſs of his own Nature, and that of his Law; and that he could eaſily be put off with a pretended and counterfeit Service. What are the Services of the generality of Men, but Suppoſitions, that they can bribe God to an indulgence of them in their Sins, and by an Oral Sacrifice, cauſe him to diveſt himſelf of his Hatred of their former Iniquities, and countenance their following Practices. As the Harlot that would return freſh to her Uncleanneſs, upon the confidence that her Peace-Offerings had contented the Righteouſneſs of God *; as tho' a ſmall Service could make him wink at our Sins, and lay aſide the Glory of his Nature; when alas, the beſt Duties in the moſt gracious Perſons in this life, are but as the ſteams of a Spiced Dunghil, a compoſition of Myrrh and Filth, ſince there are ſwarms of Corruptions in their Nature, and ſecret Sins that they need a cleanſing from.

* Prov. 7. 14.

9. 'Tis a contemning the Holineſs of God, when we charge the Law of God with rigidneſs. We caſt Dirt upon the Holineſs of God, when we blame the Law of God becauſe it ſhackles us, and prohibits our deſired pleaſures; and hate the Law of God, as they did the Prophets, becauſe they did not Prophecy ſmooth things; but called to them, to get them out of the way, and turn aſide out of the path, and cauſe the Holy One of Iſrael to ceaſe from before them, Iſa. 30. 10, 11. Put us no more in mind of the Holineſs of God, and the Holineſs of his Law: 'tis a troubleſome thing for us to hear of it: Let him be gone from us, ſince he will not countenance our Vices, and indulge our Crimes; We would rather hear there is no God, than you ſhould tell us of a Holy One. We are contrary to the Law, when we wiſh it were not ſo exact; and therefore contrary to the Holineſs of God, which ſet the ſtamp of Exactneſs and Righteouſneſs upon it. We think him injurious to our Liberty, when by his Precept he thwarts our Pleaſure; we wiſh it of another frame, more mild, more ſuitable to our Minds: 'Tis the ſame, as if we ſhould openly blame God for conſulting with his own Righteouſneſs, and not with our Humors, before he ſettled his Law; that he ſhould not have drawn it from the depths of his Righteous Nature, but ſquar'd it to accommodate our Corruption.

This being the Language of ſuch Complaints, is a reproving God becauſe he would not be Unholy, that we might be Unrighteous with Impunity. Had the Divine Law been ſuited to our Corrupt ſtate, God muſt have been Unholy to have comply'd with his Rebellious Creature. To charge the Law with rigidneſs, either in Language or Practice, is the higheſt contempt of God's Holineſs; for it is an implicit Wiſh, that God were as defil'd, polluted, diſorderly as our Corrupted Selves.

10. The Holineſs of God is injur'd Opinionatively.

(1.) In the Opinion of Venial Sins. The Romaniſts divide Sins into Venial and Mortal: Mortal, are thoſe which deſerve Eternal Death; Venial, the lighter ſort of Sins, which rather deſerve to be pardon'd than puniſh'd; or if puniſh'd, not with an Eternal, but Temporal Puniſhment. This Opinion hath no foundation in, but is contrary to Scripture. How can any Sin be in its own nature venial, when the due Wages of every Sin is death, Rom. 6. 23. and he who continues not in every thing that the Law commands, falls under a Curſe. Gal. 3. 10. 'Tis a mean thought of the Holineſs and Majeſty of God to imagine, that any Sin which is againſt an Infinite Majeſty, and as Infinite a Purity both in the Nature of God and the Law of God, ſhould not be conſider'd as Infinitely hainous. All Sins are Tranſgreſſions of the Eternal Law, and in every one the Infinite Holineſs of God is ſome way ſlighted.

(2.) In the Opinion of Works of Supererrogation. That is, ſuch Works as are not commanded by God, which yet have ſuch a dignity and worth in their own nature, that the performers of them do not only merit at God's hands for themſelves, but fill up a Treaſure of Merits for others, that come ſhort of fulfilling the Precepts God hath enjoyn'd. 'Tis ſuch a mean thought of God's Holineſs, that the Jews in all the Charges brought againſt them in Scripture, were never guilty of. And if you conſider what pitiful things they are, which are within the compaſs of ſuch Works, you have ſufficient reaſon to bewail the Ignorance of Man, and the low eſteem he hath of ſo glorious a Perfection. The Whipping themſelves often in a Week, extraordinary Watchings, Faſtings, Macerating their Bodies, wearing a Capuchin's Habit, &c. are pitiful things to give content to an Infinite Purity. As if the Precept of God requir'd only the inferiour degrees of Virtue, and the Counſels the more high and excellent; as if the Law of God, which the Pſalmiſt counts perfect *, did not command all Good, and forbid all Evil; as if the Holineſs of God had forgotten it ſelf in the framing the Law, and made it a ſcanty and defective Rule; and the Righteouſneſs of a Creature were not only able to make an Eternal Righteouſneſs, but ſurmount it. As Man would be at firſt as knowing as God, ſo ſome of his Poſterity would be more holy than God; ſet up a Wiſdom againſt the Wiſdom of God, and a Purity above the Divine Purity. Adam was not ſo preſumptuous, he intended no more than an equalling God in Knowledge; but thoſe would exceed him in Righteouſneſs, and not only preſume to render a Satisfaction for themſelves to the Holineſs they have injur'd, but to make a Purſe for the ſupply of others that are Indigent, that they may ſtand before the Tribunal of God with a Confidence in the Imaginary Righteouſneſs of a Creature. How horrible is it for thoſe that come ſhort of the Law of God themſelves, to think that they can have enough for a Loan to their Neighbours? An unworthy Opinion.

† Pſal. 19. 7.

2. Information. It may inform us, how great is our Fall from God, and how diſtant we are from him. View the Holineſs of God, and take a proſpect of the Nature of Man, and be aſtoniſh'd to ſee a Perſon created in the Divine Image, degenerated into the Image of the Devil. We are as far fallen from the Holineſs of God, which conſiſts in a Hatred of Sin, as the loweſt Point of the Earth is from the higheſt Point of the Heavens. The Devil is not more fallen from the rectitude of his Nature and Likeneſs to God, than we are; and that we are not in the ſame condition with thoſe Apoſtate Spirits, is not from any thing in our Nature, but from the Mediation of Chriſt, upon which account God hath indulg'd in us a continuance of ſome Remainders of that which Satan is wholly depriv'd of. We are departed from our Original Pattern; we were created to live the Life of God, that is, a Life of Holineſs; but now we are alienated from the life of God *, and of a beautiful piece we are become deform'd, daub'd over with the moſt defiling Mud: We work uncleanneſs with greedineſs, according to our ability, as Creatures; as God doth work Holineſs with affection and ardency, according to his Infiniteneſs, as Creator. More diſtant we are from God by reaſon of Sin, than the vileſt Creature, the moſt deform'd Toad or poyſonous Serpent is from the higheſt and moſt glorious Angel. By forſaking our Innocence, we departed from God as our Original Copy. The Apoſtle might well ſay, Rom. 3. 23. that by Sin we are come ſhort of the glory of God. Interpreters trouble themſelves much about that place, Man is come ſhort of the glory of God, that is, of the Holineſs of God, which is the glory of the Divine Nature, and was pictur'd in the Rational, Innocent Creature. By the Glory of God is meant the Holineſs of God; as, 1 Cor. 3. 18. Beholding, as in a glaſs, the Glory of the Lord, we are changed into the ſame Image from glory to glory; that is, the Glory of God in the Text, into the Image of which we are chang'd; but the Scripture ſpeaks of no other Image of God, but that of Holineſs: We are come ſhort of the glory of God; of the Holineſs of God, which is the Glory of God; and the Image of it, which was the glory of Man. By Sin, which is particular in oppoſition to the Purity of God, Man was left many Leagues behind any reſemblance to God; he ſtript off that which was the glory of his Nature, and was the only means of glorifying God as his Creator. The word ὑστεροῦνται, the Apoſtle uſes, is very ſignificant, Poſtpon'd by Sin an infinite diſtance from any imitation of God's Holineſs, or any appearance before him in a garb of Nature pleaſing to him. Let us lament our Fall, and diſtance from God.

* Eph. 4. 18.

3. Information. All Unholineſs is vile and oppoſite to the Nature of God. 'Tis ſuch a loathſome thing, that the Purity of God's eye is averſe from beholding, Hab. 1. 3. 'Tis not ſaid there, that he will not, but he cannot look on evil; there cannot be any amicableneſs between God and Sin, the Natures of both are ſo directly and unchangeably contrary to one another. Holineſs is the Life of God, it endures as long as his Life; He muſt be Eternally averſe from Sin, he can live no longer than he lives in the hatred and loathing of it. If he ſhould for one inſtant ceaſe to hate it, he would ceaſe to live. To be a Holy God, is as eſſential to him as to be a living God; and he would not be a living, but a dead God, if he were in the leaſt point of time an unholy God. He cannot look on Sin without loathing it, he cannot look on Sin but his Heart riſeth againſt it: It muſt needs be moſt odious to him, as that which is againſt the glory of his Nature, and directly oppoſite to that which is the luſtre and varniſh of all his other Perfections. 'Tis the Abominable thing which his Soul hates, Jer. 44. 4. the vileſt terms imaginable are uſed to ſignifie it: Do you underſtand the loathſomneſs of a miry Swine, or the nauſeouſneſs of the Vomit of a Dog? Theſe are Emblems of Sin *. Can you endure the ſteams of putrified Carcaſſes from an open Sepulchre †? Is the ſmell of the ſtinking ſweat or Excrements of a Body delightful? the word ῥυπαρία, in Jam. 1. 21. ſignifies as much. Or is the ſight of a Body overgrown with Scabs and Leproſie grateful to you? So vile, ſo odious, is Sin in the ſight of God. 'Tis no light thing then to fly in the Face of God, to break his Eternal Law, to daſh both the Tables in pieces, to trample the Tranſcript of God's own Nature under our feet, to cheriſh that which is inconſiſtent with his Honour, to lift up our heels againſt the glory of his Nature, to joyn iſſue with the Devil in ſtabbing his Heart, and depriving him of his Life. Sin in every part of it is an oppoſition to the Holineſs of God, and conſequently an envying him a Being and Life, as well as a Glory. If Sin be ſuch a thing, ye that love the Lord, hate evil.

* 2 Pet. 2. 22.
† Rom. 3. 23.

4. Information. Sin cannot eſcape a due puniſhment. A hatred of Unrighteouſneſs, and conſequently a will to puniſh it, is as eſſential to God, as a love of Righteouſneſs. Since he is not as an Heathen Idol, but hath Eyes to ſee, and Purity to hate every Iniquity, he will have an Infinite Juſtice to puniſh whatſoever is againſt Infinite Holineſs. As he loves every thing that is amiable, ſo he loaths every thing that is filthy, and that conſtantly without any change; his whole Nature is ſet againſt it, he abhors nothing but this. 'Tis not the Devil's knowledge or activity that his hatred is terminated in, but the Malice and Unholineſs of his Nature; 'tis this only is the Object of his Severity: 'Tis in the recompence of this only, that there can be a manifeſtation of his Juſtice.

Sin muſt be puniſh'd; for,

1. This deteſtation of Sin muſt be manifeſted. How ſhould we certainly know his loathing of it, if he did not manifeſt by ſome act how ungrateful it is to him? As his love to Righteouſneſs would not appear, without rewarding it; ſo his hatred of Iniquity would be as little evidenc'd, without puniſhing it: His Juſtice is the great Witneſs to his Purity. The Puniſhment therefore inflicted on the wicked ſhall be, in ſome reſpect, as great as the Rewards beſtow'd upon the Righteous. Since the hatred of Sin is natural to God, 'tis as natural to him to ſhew one time or other his hatred of it. And ſince Men have a conceit that God is like them in Impurity, there is a neceſſity of ſome manifeſtation of himſelf to be infinitely diſtant from thoſe Conceits they have of him, Pſal. 50. 21. I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thine eyes. He would elſe encourage the Injuries done to his Holineſs, favour the Extravagancies of the Creature, and condemn, or at leaſt ſlight, the righteouſneſs both of his own Nature and his Sovereign Law. What way is there for God to manifeſt this Hatred, but by threatning the Sinner? And what would this be but a vain Affrightment, and ridiculous to the Sinner, if it were never to be put in execution? There is an indiſſolvable connexion between his Hatred of Sin, and Puniſhment of the Offender, Pſal. 11. 5, 6. The wicked his Soul hates: Upon the wicked he ſhall rain ſnares, fire, and brimſtone, &c. He cannot approve of it without denying himſelf, and a total Impunity would be a degree of Approbation.

The Diſpleaſure of God is Eternal and Irreconcileable againſt Sin; for Sin being abſolutely contrary to his holy Nature, he is Eternally contrary to it: If there be not therefore a way to ſeparate the Sin from the ſinner, the ſinner muſt lie under the diſpleaſure of God; no diſpleaſure can be manifeſted without ſome marks of it upon the Perſon that lies under that diſpleaſure. The Holineſs of God will right it ſelf of the wrongs done to it, and ſcatter the Prophaners of it at the greateſt diſtance from him, which is the greateſt Puniſhment that can be inflicted; to be removed far from the Fountain of Life, is the worſt of Deaths: God can as ſoon lay aſide his Purity, as always forbear his diſpleaſure againſt an Impure Perſon; 'tis all one not to hate it, and not to manifeſt his hatred of it.

2. As his Holineſs is natural and neceſſary, ſo is the puniſhment of Unholineſs neceſſary to him. 'Tis ne-

neceſſary that he ſhould abominate Sin, and therefore neceſſary he ſhould diſcountenance it. The Severities of God againſt Sin are not vain Scare-crows, they have their Foundation in the Righteouſneſs of his Nature; 'tis becauſe he is a Righteous and Holy God, that he will not forgive our Tranſgreſſions and Sins, Joſh. 24. 19. that is, that he will puniſh them. The Throne of his Holineſs is a fiery Flame, Dan. 7. 9. there is both a pure light and a ſcorching heat. Whatſoever is contrary to the Nature of God, will fall under the Juſtice of God; he would elſe violate his own Nature, deny his own Perfection, ſeem to be out of love with his own Glory and Life. He doth not hate it out of choice, but from the Immutable propenſion of his Nature; 'tis not ſo free an act of his Will, as the Creation of Man and Angels, which he might have forborn as well as effected. As the deteſtation of ſin reſults from the univerſal rectitude of his Nature, ſo the puniſhment of Sin follows upon that, as he is the righteous Governour of the World: 'Tis as much againſt his Nature not to puniſh it, as it is againſt his Nature not to loath it; He would ceaſe to be Holy, if he ceas'd to hate it; and he would ceaſe to hate it, if he ceas'd to puniſh it. Neither the Obedience of our Saviour's Life, nor the ſtrength of his Cries, could put a bar to the Cup of his Paſſion; God ſo hated ſin, that when it was but imputed to his Son, without any commiſſion of it, he would bring a Hell upon his Soul. Certainly, if God could have hated ſin without puniſhing it, his Son had never felt the ſmart of his wrath: His love to his Son had been ſtrong enough to have cauſed him to forbear, had not the Holineſs of his Nature been ſtronger to move him to inflict a Puniſhment according to the demerit of his Sin. God cannot but be Holy, therefore cannot but be Juſt, becauſe Injuſtice is a part of Unholineſs.

3. Therefore there can be no Communion between God and Unholy Spirits. How is it conceivable, that God ſhould hate the Sin, and cheriſh the Sinner with all his filth in his Boſom; that he ſhould Eternally deteſt the Crime, and Eternally fold the Sinner in his Arms? Can leſs be expected from the Purity of his Nature, than to ſeparate an impure Soul, as long as it remains ſo? Can there be any delightful Communion between thoſe whoſe Natures are contrary? Darkneſs and Light may as ſoon kiſs each other, and become one Nature; God and the Devil may as ſoon enter into an Eternal League and Covenant together: For God to have pleaſure in wickedneſs, and to admit Evil to dwell with him, are things equally impoſſible to his
* Pſal. 5. 4. Nature *; while he hates Impurity, he cannot have Communion with an impure Perſon. It may as ſoon be expected, that God ſhould hate himſelf, offer violence to his own Nature, lay aſide his Purity as an Abominable thing, and blot his own Glory as love an Impure Perſon, entertain him as his delight, and ſet him in the ſame Heaven and Happineſs with Himſelf, and his holy Angels: he muſt needs loath him, he muſt needs baniſh him from his Preſence, which is the greateſt Puniſhment. God's Holineſs and Hatred of Sin, neceſſarily infer the Puniſhment of it.

5. Information. There is therefore a neceſſity of the ſatisfaction of the Holineſs of God by ſome ſufficient Mediator. The Divine Purity could not meet with any acquieſcence in all Mankind after the Fall: Sin was hated, the Sinner would be ruin'd, unleſs ſome way were found out to repair the Wrongs done to the Holineſs of God; either the Sinner muſt be condemned for ever, or ſome Satisfaction muſt be made, that the Holineſs of the Divine Nature might Eternally appear in its full luſtre. That it is Eſſential to the Nature of God to hate all Unrighteouſneſs, as that which is abſolutely repugnant to his Nature, none do queſtion. That the Juſtice of God is ſo Eſſential to him, as that Sin could not be pardon'd without Satisfaction, ſome do queſtion; though this latter ſeems rationally to follow upon the former *. That Holineſs is Eſſential to the Nature of God is evident, becauſe elſe God may as much be conceived without Purity, as he might be conceived without the creating the Sun or Stars. No Man can in his right Wits frame a right Notion of a Deity, without Purity. It would be a leſs Blaſphemy againſt the Excellency of God, to conceit him not Knowing, than to imagine him not Holy: And for the Eſſentialneſs of his Juſtice, Joſhua joyns both his Holineſs and his Jealouſie as going hand in hand together, Joſh. 24. 19. He is a holy God, he is a jealous God, he will not forgive your ſin.

† Turretin. de Satisfact. p. 8.

But conſider only the Purity of God, ſince it is contrary to Sin, and conſequently hating the Sinner; the guilty Perſon cannot be reduc'd to God, nor can the Holineſs of God have any complacency in a filthy Perſon, but as Fire hath in Stubble, to conſume it. How the Holy God ſhould be brought to delight in Man, without a Salvo for the Rights of his Holineſs is not to be conceiv'd without an impeachment of the Nature of God. The Law could not be aboliſh'd, that would reflect indeed upon the Righteouſneſs of the Law-giver; to aboliſh it, becauſe of Sin, would imply a change of the Rectitude of his Nature: Muſt he change his Holineſs for the ſake of that which was againſt his Holineſs, in a compliance with a prophane and unrighteous Creature? This ſhould engage him rather to maintain his Law than to null it. And to abrogate his Law as ſoon as he had enacted it, ſince Sin ſtept into the World preſently after it, would be no credit to his Wiſdom.

There muſt be a reparation made of the Honour of God's Holineſs; by our ſelves it could not be without Condemnation; by another it could not be without a ſufficiency in the Perſon: No Creature could do it. All the Creatures being of a finite Nature, could not make a compenſation for the diſparagements of Infinite Holineſs. He muſt have deſpicable and vile Thoughts of this excellent Perfection, that imagines that a few Tears, and the glavering Fawnings at the death of a Creature, can be ſufficient to repair the Wrongs, and reſtore the Rights of this Attribute. It muſt therefore be ſuch a compenſation as might be commenſurate to the Holineſs or the Divine Nature and the Divine Law, which could not be wrought by any, but him that was poſſeſſed of a Godhead, to give efficacy and exact congruity to it. The Perſon deſign'd and appointed by God for ſo great an Affair, was one in the form of God, one equal with God, Phil. 2. 6. who could not be term'd by ſuch a Title of Dignity, if he had not been equal to God in the univerſal rectitude of the Divine Nature, and therefore in his Holineſs. The puniſhment due to Sin is tranſlated to that Perſon for the righting Divine Holineſs, and the Righteouſneſs of that Perſon is communicated to the Sinner for the Pardon of the Offending Creature.

If the Sinner had been Eternally damn'd, God's hatred of Sin had been evidenc'd by the ſtrokes of his Juſtice; but his Mercy to a Sinner had lain in obſcurity. If the Sinner had been Pardoned and Saved without ſuch a Reparation, Mercy had been evident; but his Holineſs had hid its Head for ever in his own boſom. There was therefore a neceſſity of ſuch a way to manifeſt his Purity, and yet to bring forth his Mercy: That Mercy might not alway way figh for the deſtruction of the Creature, and that Holineſs might not mourn for the neglect of his Honour.

6. Information. Hence it will follow, There is no Juſtification of a Sinner by any thing in himſelf. After Sin had ſet foot in the World, Man could preſent nothing to God acceptable to him, or bearing any proportion to the Holineſs of his Law, till God ſet forth a Perſon, upon whoſe account the Acceptation of our Perſons and Services is founded, Epheſ. 1. 6. Who hath made us accepted in the Beloved. The Infinite Purity of God is ſo glorious, that it ſhames the Holineſs of Angels, as the light of the Sun dims the light of the Fire: Much more will the Righteouſneſs of Fallen Man, who is vile, and drinks up Iniquity like water, vaniſh into Nothing in his Preſence. With what Self-abaſement and Abhorrence ought he to be poſſeſſed, that comes as ſhort of the Angels in Purity, as a Dunghill doth of a Star? The higheſt Obedience that ever was perform'd by any meer Man, ſince lapſed Nature, cannot challenge any acceptance with God, or ſtand before ſo exact an Inquiſition. What Perſon hath ſuch a clear Innocence, and unſpotted Obedience in ſuch a Perfection, as in any degree to ſute the Holineſs of the Divine Nature? Pſal. 143. 2. Enter not into Judgment with thy Servant, for in thy ſight ſhall no Man living be juſtified. If God ſhould debate the Caſe ſimply with Man in his own Perſon, without reſpecting the Mediator, he were not able to anſwer one of a thouſand. Tho' we are his Servants, as David was, and perform a ſincere Service, yet there are many little Motes and Duſt of Sin in the beſt Works, that cannot lye undiſcover'd from the Eye of his Holineſs: And if we come ſhort in the leaſt of what the Law requires, we are guilty of all *. So that in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified: In the ſight of thy Infinite Holineſs, which hates the leaſt ſpot; in the ſight of thy Infinite Juſtice, which puniſhes the leaſt Tranſgreſſion.

* James 2. 10.

God would deſcend below his own Nature, and vilifie both his Knowledge and Purity, ſhould he accept that for a Righteouſneſs and Holineſs which is not ſo in it ſelf; and nothing is ſo, which hath the leaſt ſtain upon it contrary to the Nature of God. The moſt holy Saints in Scripture, upon a proſpect of his Purity, have caſt away all confidence in themſelves; every flaſh of the Divine Purity has ſtruck them into a deep ſenſe of their own Impurity and Shame for it, Job 42. 6. Wherefore I abhor my ſelf in duſt and aſhes. What can the language of any Man be that lies under a ſenſe of Infinite Holineſs, and his own Defilement in the leaſt, but that of the Prophet, Iſai. 6. 5. Wo is me, I am undone? And what is there in the World can adminiſter any other thought than this, unleſs God be conſidered in Chriſt, reconciling the World to himſelf? As a holy God, ſo righted, as that he can diſpenſe with the Condemnation of a Sinner, without diſpenſing with his hatred of Sin; pardoning the Sin in the Criminal, becauſe it hath been puniſhed in the Surety. That Righteouſneſs which God hath ſet forth for Juſtification, is not our own, but a Righteouſneſs which is of God, Phil. 3. 9, 10. of God's appointing, and of God's performing; appointed by the Father, who is God, and performed by the Son, who is one with the Father. A Righteouſneſs ſurmounting that of all the glorious Angels, ſince it is an Immutable one which can never fail, an Everlaſting Righteouſneſs, Dan. 9. 24. A Righteouſneſs wherein the Holineſs of God can acquieſce, as conſidered in it ſelf, becauſe it is a Righteouſneſs of one equal with God. As we therefore diſhonour the Divine Majeſty, when we inſiſt upon our own bemir'd Righteouſneſs for our Juſtification; (as if a Mortal Man were as juſt as God, and a Man as pure as his Maker, Job 4. 17.) So we highly honour the Purity of his Nature, when we charge our Selves with Folly, acknowledge our ſelves Unclean, and accept of that Righteouſneſs which gives a full content to his Infinite Purity. There can be no Juſtification of a Sinner by any thing in himſelf.

7. It informs us, If Holineſs be a glorious Perfection of the Divine Nature, then the Deity of Chriſt might be argued from hence. He is indeed dignified with the Title of the Holy One, Acts 3. 14, 16. a Title often given to God in the Old Teſtament; and he is called, The Holy of Holies, Dan. 9. 24. but becauſe the Angels ſeemed to be termed Holy Ones, Dan. 4. 13, 17. and the moſt Sacred place in the Temple was alſo called the Holy of Holies, I ſhall not inſiſt upon that. But you find our Saviour particularly applauded by the Angels, as Holy; when this Perfection of the Divine Nature, together with the Incommunicable Name of God, are link'd together, and aſcrib'd to him. Iſai. 6. 3. Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hoſts, and the whole Earth is full of his glory, which the Apoſtle interprets of Chriſt, John 12. 39, 41. Iſaiah again, He hath blinded their Eyes, and hardned their Hearts, that they ſhould not ſee with their Eyes, nor underſtand with their Hearts, and be converted, and I ſhould heal them. Theſe things, ſaith Iſaiah, when he ſaw his glory, and ſpake of him. He that Iſaiah ſaw environ'd with the Seraphims in a Reverential Poſture before his face, and praiſed as moſt Holy by them, was the True and Eternal God; ſuch Acclamations belong to none, but the great Jehovah, God bleſſed for ever: But, ſaith John, It was the glory of Chriſt that Iſaiah ſaw in this Viſion; Chriſt therefore is God bleſſed for ever, of whom it was ſaid, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of Hoſts *. The Evangeliſt had been ſpeaking of Chriſt, the Miracles which he wrought, the obſtinacy of the Jews againſt believing on him; his Glory therefore is to be referred to the Subject he had been ſpeaking of. The Evangeliſt was not ſpeaking of the Father, but of the Son, and cites thoſe words out of Iſaiah; not to teach any thing of the Father, but to ſhew that the Jews could not believe in Chriſt. He ſpeaks of him that had wrought ſo many Miracles; but Chriſt wrought thoſe Miracles: He ſpeaks of him whom the Jews refuſed to believe on; but Chriſt was the Perſon they would not believe on, while they acknowledged God. It was the Glory of this Perſon Iſaiah ſaw, and this Perſon Iſaiah ſpake of, if the words of the Evangeliſt be of any credit. The Angels are too holy to give Acclamations belonging to God, to any but Him that is God.

* Placeus de Deitat. Chriſti in locum.

8. It informs us, That God is fully fit for the Government of the World. The Righteouſneſs of God's Nature qualifies Him to be Judge of the World: If he were not perfectly Righteous and Holy, he were uncapable to Govern and Judge the World; Rom. 3. 5. If there be unrighteouſneſs with God, how ſhall he judge the World? God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert Judgment, Job 34. 12. How deſpicable is a Judge that wants Innocence? As Omniſcience fits God to be a Judge, ſo Holineſs fits him to be a Righteous Judge; Pſal. 1. 6. The Lord knows, that is, loves the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly ſhall periſh.

9. Information. If Holineſs be an eminent Perfection of the Divine Nature, The Chriſtian Religion is of a Divine Extraction. It diſcovers the Holineſs of God, and forms the Creature to a conformity formity to him. It gives us a proſpect of his Nature, repreſents him in the Beauty of Holineſs, Pſal. 110. 3. more than the whole Glaſs of the Creation. 'Tis in this Evangelical Glaſs the Glory of the Lord is beheld, and rendred amiable and imitable *. 'Tis a Doctrine according to Godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 3. directing us to live the Life of God: a Life worthy of God, and worthy of our firſt Creation by his hand. It takes us off from our ſelves, fixeth us upon a noble End, points our Actions and the Scope of our Lives to God. It quells the Monſters of Sin, diſcountenanceth the Motes of Wickedneſs; and it is no mean Argument for the Divinity of it, that it ſets us no lower a Pattern for our Imitation, than the Holineſs of the Divine Majeſty. God is exalted upon the Throne of his Holineſs in it, and the Creature advanc'd to an Image and Reſemblance of it, 1 Pet. 1. 16. Be ye holy, for I am holy.

* 2 Cor. 3. 18.

Uſe 2. The ſecond Uſe is for Comfort. This Attribute frowns upon Lapſed Nature, but ſmiles in the Reſtorations made by the Goſpel. God's Holineſs, in conjunction with his Juſtice, is terrible to a guilty Sinner; but now, in conjunction with his Mercy, by the Satisfaction of Chriſt, 'tis ſweet to a Believing Penitent. 'In the firſt Covenant, the Purity of his Nature was joyned with the Rigours of his Juſtice: In the ſecond Covenant, the Purity of his Nature is joyned with the Sweetneſs and Tenderneſs of his Mercy. In the one, Juſtice flames againſt the Sinner in the right of Injur'd Holineſs: In the other, Mercy yearns towards a Believer, with the conſent of Righted Holineſs. To rejoyce in the Holineſs of God, is the true and genuine Spirit of the Renewed Man: My heart rejoyceth in the Lord; what follows? There is none holy as the Lord, 1 Sam. 2. 1, 2. Some Perfections of the Divine Nature are aſtoniſhing, ſome affrighting; but this may fill us both with Aſtoniſhment at it, and a Joy in it.

1. By Covenant we have an Intereſt in this Attribute, as well as any other. In that Clauſe of God's being our God, entire God with all his Glory, all his Perfections are paſt over as a portion, and a gracious Soul is brought into Union with God, as his God: Not with a part of God, but with God in the Simplicity, Extent, Integrity, of his Nature; and therefore in this Attribute. And upon ſome account it may ſeem more in this Attribute, than in any other; for if he be our God, he is our God in his Life and Glory, and therefore in his Purity eſpecially, without which he could not live, he could not be happy and bleſſed. Little comfort will it be to have a dead God, or a vile God made over to us: And as by this Covenant he is our Father, ſo he gives us his Nature, and communicates his Holineſs in all his Diſpenſations; and in thoſe that are ſevereſt, as well as thoſe that are ſweeteſt; Heb. 12. 10. But he corrects us for our profit, that we might be partakers of his Holineſs. Not ſimply, partakers of Holineſs, but of his Holineſs; to have a Portraiture of it in our Nature, a Meddal of it in our Hearts, a Spark of the ſame Nature with that immenſe ſplendor and flame in himſelf. The Holineſs of a Covenant Soul, is a reſemblance of the Holineſs of God, and formed by it: As the Picture of the Sun in a Cloud is a fruit of his Beams, and an Image of its Author. The fulneſs of the perfection of Holineſs remains in the Nature of God, as the fulneſs of the Light doth in the Sun; yet there are tranſmiſſions of Light from the Sun to the Moon, and it is a Light of the ſame Nature both in the one and in the other. The Holineſs of a Creature, is nothing elſe but the reflection of the Divine Holineſs upon it; and to make the Creature capable of it, God takes various methods, according to his Covenant Grace.

2. This Attribute renders God a fit Object for Truſt and Dependance. The Notion of an Unholy and Unrighteous God, is an uncomfortable Idea of him, and beats off our hands from laying any hold of him. 'Tis upon this Attribute the Reputation and Honour of God in the World is built: What encouragement can we have to believe him, or what Incentives could we have to ſerve him, without the luſtre of this in his Nature: The very thought of an Unrighteous God, is enough to drive Men at the greateſt diſtance from him: As the honeſty of a Man gives a reputation to his Word; ſo doth the Holineſs of God give credit to his Promiſe. 'Tis by this he would have us ſtifle our Fears, and fortifie our Truſt, Iſai. 41. 14. Fear not thou worm Jacob, and ye Men of Iſrael; I will help thee, ſaith the Lord, and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Iſrael: He will be in his Actions, what he is in his Nature. Nothing ſhall make him defile his own Excellency: Unrighteouſneſs is the ground of Mutability; but the Promiſe of God doth never fail, becauſe the rectitude of his Nature doth never languiſh: Were his Attributes without the conduct of this, they would be altogether formidable. As this is the glory of all his other Perfections; ſo this only renders him comfortable to a Believing Soul. Might we not fear his Power to cruſh us, his Mercy to overlook us, his Wiſdom to deſign againſt us, if this did not influence them? What an oppreſſion is Power without Righteouſneſs in the hand of a Creature, deſtructive inſtead of protecting: The Devil is a mighty Spirit, but not fit to be truſted, becauſe he is an Impure Spirit. When God would give us the higheſt Security of the ſincerity of his Intentions, he ſwears by this Attribute *: His Holineſs as well as his Truth, is laid to pawn for the ſecurity of his Promiſe. As we make God the Judge between us and others, when we ſwear by him; ſo he makes his Holineſs the Judge between himſelf and his People, when he ſwears by it.

* Pſal. 8. 35.

1. 'Tis this renders him fit to be confided in for the anſwer of our Prayers. This is the ground of his readineſs to give, * If you, being evil, know how to give good gifts; how much more ſhall your Father which is in Heaven give good things to them that ask him? Though the Holineſs of God be not mention'd, yet it is to be underſtood; the Emphaſis lies in thoſe words, If you being evil: God is then conſidered in a diſpoſition contrary to this, which can be nothing but his Righteouſneſs. If you that are unholy, and have ſo much Corruption in you, to render you cruel, can beſtow upon your Children the good things they want, how much more ſhall God, who is Holy, and hath nothing in him to check his mercifulneſs to his Creatures, grant the Petitions of his Suppliants? 'Twas this Attribute edg'd the fiduciary importunity of the Souls under the Altar, for the revenging their Blood unjuſtly ſhed upon the Earth, Rev. 6. 10. How long, O Lord, holy and true, doſt thou not avenge our blood on them that dwell on the Earth? Let not thy Holineſs ſtand with folded Arms, as careleſs of the eminent Sufferings of thoſe that fear thee, we implore thee by the Holineſs of thy Nature, and the Truth of thy Word.

* Matth. 7. 11.

2. This renders him fit to be confided in, for the comfort of our Souls in a broken condition. The reviving the hearts of the ſpiritually afflicted, is a part of the Holineſs of his Nature, Iſai. 57. 15. Thus ſaith the high and lofty One, that inhabits Eternity, whoſe name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him alſo that is of a contrite and humble ſpirit, to revive the ſpirit of the humble. He acknowledg-

eth

eth himſelf the lofty One, they might therefore fear he would not revive them; but he is alſo the Holy One, and therefore he will refreſh them; he is not more lofty than he is holy; beſides the argument of the immutability of his Promiſe, and the might of his Power, here is the holineſs of his Nature moving him to pity his drooping Creature: His Promiſe is uſher'd in with the name of Power, high and lofty One, to bar their diſtruſt of his ſtrength; and with a declaration of his holineſs, to check any deſpair of his Will: There is no ground to think I ſhould be falſe to my Word, or miſemploy my Power, ſince that cannot be, becauſe of the holineſs of my Name and Nature.

3. This renders him fit to be confided in for the maintenance of Grace, and protection of us againſt our ſpiritual Enemies. What our Saviour thought an argument in Prayer, we may well take as a ground of our confidence. In the ſtrength of this he puts up his ſute, when in his mediatory capacity he intercedes for the preſervation of his People; John 17. 11. Holy Father, keep through thy own Name thoſe that thou haſt given me, that they may be one as we are. Holy Father, not merciful Father, or powerful, or wiſe Father, but holy; and Verſe 25. righteous Father. Chriſt pleads that Attribute for the performance of God's Word, which was laid to pawn when he paſt his word: For it was by his Holineſs that he ſwore, That his Seed ſhould endure for ever, and his Throne as the Sun before *Pſ.89.36. him *; which is meant of the perpetuity of the Covenant which he had made with Chriſt, and is alſo meant of the preſervation of the myſtical Seed of David, and the perpetuating his loving † Verſ. 32, 33. kindneſs to them †. Grace is an Image of God's holineſs, and therefore the holineſs of God is moſt proper to be uſed as an Argument to intereſt and engage him in the preſervation of it. In the midſt of Church provocations, he will not utterly extin- ‖Hoſ.11.9. guiſh, becauſe he is the holy One in the midſt of her ‖: Nor in the midſt of Judgments will he condemn *Hab.1.12 his People to Death, becauſe he is their holy One *; but their Enemies ſhall be ordained for Judgment, and eſtabliſhed for Correction. One Prophet aſſures them in the Name of the Lord, upon the ſtrength of this Perfection; and the other upon the ſame ground is confident of the protection of the Church, becauſe of God's holineſs engag'd in an inviolable Covenant.

4. Comfort. Since Holineſs is a glorious Perfection of the Nature of God, he will certainly value every holy Soul. 'Tis of greater value with him than the Souls of all Men in the World that are deſtitute of it: Wicked men are the worſt of vile- * Pſal.12.8 neſſes, meer droſs and dunghil *. Purity then, which The vileſt Men. זלות is contrary to wickedneſs, muſt be the moſt precious thing in his eſteem; he muſt needs love that quality which he is moſt pleas'd with in himſelf, as a Father looks with moſt delight upon the Child which is poſſeſs'd with thoſe diſpoſitions he moſt values in his own Nature. His countenance doth behold the upright, Pſal.11.7. He looks upon them with a full and open face of favour, with a countenance clear, unmask'd and ſmiling, with a Face full of delight: Heaven it ſelf is not ſuch a pleaſing Object to him, as the Image of his own increated Holineſs in the created Holineſs of Men and Angels: As a Man eſteems that moſt, which is moſt like him, of his own Generation, more than a piece of Art, which is meerly the product of his Wit or Strength. And he muſt love Holineſs in the Creature, he would not elſe love his own Image, and conſequently would undervalue himſelf: He de- †Pſ.73.20. ſpiſeth the Image the wicked bears †, but he cannot diſeſteem his own Stamp on the godly; he cannot but delight in his own work, his choice work, the Maſter-piece of all his works, the new Creation of things; that which is next to himſelf, as being a Divine Nature like himſelf ‖: When he over- ‖2 Pet.1.4 looks Strength, Parts, Knowledge, he cannot overlook this; He ſets apart him that is godly for himſelf, Pſal. 4. 3. as a peculiar Object to take pleaſure in, he reſerves ſuch for his own complacency, when he leaves the reſt of the World to the Devil's power; he is choice of them above all his other Works, and will not let any have ſo great a propriety in them as himſelf. If it be ſo dear to him here in its imperfect and mixt condition, that he appropriates it as a peculiar Object for his own delight; how much more will the unſpotted Purity of glorified Saints be infinitely pleaſing to him? So that he will take leſs pleaſure in the material Heavens, than in ſuch a Soul. Sin only is deteſtable to God, and when this is done away, the Soul becomes as lovely in his account, as before it was loathſome.

4. 'Tis comfort, upon this account, That God will perfect holineſs in every upright Soul. We many times diſtruſt God, and deſpond in our ſelves, becauſe of the Infinite Holineſs of the Divine Nature, and the dunghil Corruptions in our own; but the Holineſs of God engageth him to the preſervation of it, and conſequently to the perfection of it; as appears by our Saviour's Argument, John 17.11. Holy Father, keep through thy own Name, thoſe whom thou haſt given me; to what end? that they may be one as we are; one with us, in the reſemblances of Purity. And the holineſs of the Soul is uſed as an Argument by the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 86. 2. Preſerve my ſoul, for I am holy; that is, I have an ardent deſire to Holineſs: Thou haſt ſeparated me from the maſs of the corrupted World, preſerve and perfect me with the Aſſembly of the glorified Quire. The more holy any are, the more communicative they are; God being moſt holy, is moſt communicative of that which he moſt eſteems in himſelf, and delights to ſee in his Creature: He is therefore more ready to impart his holineſs to them that beg for it, than to communicate his knowledge or his power. Though he were holy, yet he let Adam fall, who never petition'd his Holineſs to preſerve him; he let him fall, to declare the holineſs of his own Nature, which had wanted its due manifeſtation without it: But ſince that cannot be declar'd in a higher manner than it hath been already in the death of the Surety that bore our Guilt, there is no fear he ſhould caſt the work out of his hands, ſince the deſign of the permiſſion of Man's Apoſtacy, in the diſcovery of the perfections of his Nature has been fully anſwered. The finiſhing the good work he hath begun, hath a relation to the glory of Chriſt; and his own glory in Chriſt to be manifeſted in the day of his appearing *, wherein * Phil.1.6. the glory, both of his own holineſs, and the holineſs of the Mediator, are to receive their full manifeſtation. As it is a part of the holineſs of Chriſt to ſanctifie his Church †, till not a wrinkle or ſpot †Eph.5.26 be left; ſo it is the part of God not to leave that work imperfect, which his Holineſs hath attempted a ſecond time to beautifie his Creature with. He will not ceaſe, exalting this Attribute, which is the Believers by the new Covenant, till he utters that applauding Speech of his own work, *Cant.*4.7. Thou art all fair, my Love, there is no ſpot in thee.

Uſe 3. Is for Exhortation. Is Holineſs an eminent perfection of the Divine Nature? then hearts; and the more diſtinct Conceptions we have of this, and the reſt of his Attributes, the more we glorifie him. When Moſes conſider'd God as his * Exod. 15. 2. ſtrength and ſalvation, he would exalt him*, and he could never break out in ſo admirable a Doxology as that in the Text, without a deep ſenſe of the glory of his Purity, which he ſpeaks of with ſo much admiration. Such a ſenſe will be of uſe to us.

1. Let us get and preſerve right and ſtrong apprehenſions of this Divine Perfection. Without a due ſenſe of it, we can never exalt God in our hearts;

1. In promoting genuine Convictions. A deep conſideration of the Holineſs of God cannot but be follow'd with a deep conſideration of our impure and miſerable condition by reaſon of Sin: We cannot glance upon it without reflections upon our own Vileneſs. Adam no ſooner heard the Voice of a holy God in the Garden, but he conſider'd his own naked- * Gen. 3. 10. neſs with ſhame and fear*: Much leſs can we fix our Minds upon it, but we muſt be touched with a ſenſe of our own Uncleanneſs. The clear beams of the Sun diſcover that filthineſs in our Garments and Members, which was not viſible in the darkneſs of the night. Impure Metals are diſcern'd by comparing them with that which is pure and perfect in its kind. The ſenſe of guilt is the firſt natural Reſult upon a ſenſe of this excellent Perfection; and the ſenſe of the Imperfection of our own Righteouſneſs is the next. Who can think of it, and reflect upon himſelf as an Object fit for Divine Love? Who can have a due thought of it without regarding himſelf as ſtubble before a conſuming Fire? Who can, without a confuſion of Heart and Face, glance upon that pure Eye which beholds with deteſtation, the foul Motes as well as the filthier and bigger Spots? When Iſaiah ſaw his glory, and heard how highly the Angels exalted God for this Perfection, he was in a cold ſweat, ready to ſwoon, till a Seraphim with a Coal from the Altar, both purg'd † Iſa. 6. 5, 6, 7. and reviv'd him†. They are ſound and genuine Convictions, which have the proſpect of Divine Purity for their immediate Spring, and not a foreſight of our own Miſery; when it is not the puniſhment we have deſerved, but the holineſs we have offended, moſt grates our hearts. Such Convictions are the firſt rude Draughts of the Divine Image in our Spirits; and grateful to God, becauſe they are an acknowledgment of the glory of this Attribute, and the firſt mark of honour given to it by the Creature. Thoſe that never had a ſenſe of their own Vileneſs, were alway deſtitute of a ſenſe of God's Holineſs. And by the way we may obſerve, That thoſe that ſcoff at any for hanging down the head under the Conſideration and Conviction of Sin, (as is too uſual with the World) ſcoff at them for having deeper Apprehenſions of the Purity of God than themſelves, and conſequently make a mock of the Holineſs of God, which is the ground of thoſe Convictions; a ſenſe of this would prevent ſuch a damnable reproaching.

2. A ſenſe of this will render us humble in the poſſeſſion of the greateſt holineſs a Creature were capable of. We are apt to be proud with the Phariſee, when we look upon others wallowing in the Mire of baſe and unnatural Luſts; but let any clap their Wings if they can in a vain boaſting and exaltation, when they view the holineſs of God. What Torch, if it had reaſon, would be proud, and ſwagger in its own light, if it compar'd it ſelf with the Sun? Who can ſtand before this holy Lord God? is the juſt reflection of the holieſt Perſon, as it was of thoſe 1 Sam. 6. 20. that had felt the marks of his Jealouſie after their looking into the Ark, tho' likely out of affection to it, and triumphant joy at its return. When did the Angels teſtifie, by the covering of their Faces, their weakneſs to bear the luſtre of his Majeſty, but when they beheld his glory? When did they ſignifie by their covering their feet the ſhame of their own Vileneſs, but when their hearts were fulleſt of the applaudings of this Perfection*? * Iſai. 6. 2, 3. Tho' they found themſelves without ſpot, yet not with ſuch a holineſs, that they could appear either with their faces or feet unveil'd and unmask'd in the Preſence of God. Doth the immenſe ſplendor of this Attribute engender ſhaming reflections in thoſe pure Spirits? What will it, what ſhould it do in us, that dwell in Houſes of Clay, and creep up and down with that Clay upon our Backs, and too much of it in our Hearts? The Stars themſelves which appear beautiful in the night, are mask'd at the awaking of the Sun: What a dim light is that of a Glow-worm to that of the Sun? The apprehenſions of this made the Elders humble themſelves in the midſt of their glory, by caſting down their † Rev. 4. 8, 10. Crowns before his Throne†; a Metaphor taken from the triumphing Generals among the Romans, who hung up their victorious Laurels in the Capitol, dedicating them to their Gods, acknowledging them their ſuperiors in ſtrength, and Authors of their Victory. This ſelf-emptineſs at the conſideration of Divine Purity, is the note of the true Church repreſented by the 24 Elders, and a note of a true Member of the Church; whereas boaſting of Perfection and Merit is the property of the Antichriſtian tribe that have mean thoughts of this adorable Perfection, and think themſelves more righteous than the unſpotted Angels. What a ſelf-annihilation is there in a good man when the ſenſe of Divine Purity is moſt lively in him; yea, how deteſtable is he to himſelf? There is as little proportion between the Holineſs of the Divine Majeſty, and that of the moſt righteous Creature, as there is between a nearneſs of a Perſon that ſtands upon a Mountain to the Sun, and of him that beholds him in a Vale, one is nearer than the other, but it is an advantage not to be boaſted of, in regard of the vaſt diſtance that is between the Sun and the elevated Spectator.

3. This would make us full of an affectionate Reverence in all our approaches to God. By this Perfection God is render'd venerable, and fit to be reverenc'd by his Creature; and magnificent thoughts of it in the Creature would awaken him to an actual reverence of the Divine Majeſty. Pſal. 111. 9. Holy and reverend is his Name; a good Opinion of this would engender in us a ſincere reſpect towards him, we ſhould then ſerve the Lord with fear, as the Expreſſion is Pſal. 2. 11. that is, be afraid to caſt any thing before him that may offend the eyes of his Purity. Who would venture raſhly and gariſhly into the preſence of an eminent Moraliſt, or of a righteous King upon his Throne? The fixedneſs of the Angels aroſe from the continual proſpect of this. What if we had been with Iſaiah when he ſaw the Viſion, and beheld him in the ſame glory, and the Heavenly Quire in their reverential poſture in the Service of God; would it not have barr'd our wandrings, and ſtak'd us down to our Duty? Would not the fortifying an Idea of it in our Minds produce the ſame effect? 'Tis for want of this we carry our ſelves ſo looſely and unbecomingly in the Divine preſence, with the ſame, or meaner Affections than thoſe wherewith we ſtand before ſome vile Creature, that is our ſuperiour in the World; as tho' a piece of filthy fleſh were more valuable than this Perfection of the Divinity. How doth the Pſalmiſt double his Exhortation to men to ſing praiſe to God, Pſal. 47. 6. Sing praiſe to God, ſing Praiſes; ſing praiſe to our King, ſing praiſe, becauſe of His Majeſty, and the Purity of his Dominion: And ver. 8. God reigns over the Heathen, God ſits upon the Throne of his Holineſs. How would this elevate us in Praiſe, and proſtrate us in Prayer, when we praiſe and pray with an underſtanding and inſight of that Nature we bleſs or implore; as he ſpeaks, verſe 7. Sing ye praiſe with underſtanding. The Holineſs of God in his Government and Dominion, the holineſs of his Nature, and the holineſs of his Precepts, ſhould beget in us an humble reſpect in our Approaches. The more we grow in a ſenſe of this, the more ſhall we advance in the true performance of all our Duties *. Thoſe Nations which ador'd the Sun, had they at firſt ſeen his Brightneſs wrapp'd and mask'd in a Cloud, and paid a veneration to it, how would their Adorations have mounted to a greater point, after they had ſeen it in its full brightneſs, ſhaking off thoſe Veils, and chaſing away the Miſts before it; what a profound Reverence would they have paid it, when they beheld it in its Glory and Meridian Brightneſs? Our reverence to God in all our Addreſſes to him will arrive to greater degrees, if every act of Duty be uſher'd in, and ſeaſon'd with the thoughts of God as ſitting upon a Throne of Holineſs; we ſhall have a more becoming ſenſe of our own vileneſs, a greater ardour to his Service, a deeper reſpect in his Preſence, if our underſtanding be more clear'd, and poſſeſs'd with Notions of this Perfection. Thus take a view of God in this part of his Glory, before you fall down before his Throne, and aſſure your ſelves you will find your hearts and ſervices quicken'd with a new and lively Spirit.

* Amyrald. Moral. Tom. 5. p. 462.

4. A due ſenſe of this Perfection in God would produce in us a fear of God, and arm us againſt Temptations and Sin. What made the Heathens ſo wanton and looſe, but the repreſentations of their Gods as vicious? Who would ſtick at Adulteries and more prodigious Luſts, that can take a Pattern for them from the Perſon he adores for a Deity? Upon which account Plato would have Poets baniſh'd from his Common-wealth, becauſe by dreſſing up their gods in wanton garbs in their Poems, they encourag'd wickedneſs in the People. But if the thoughts of God's Holineſs were impreſt upon us, we ſhould regard ſin with the ſame eye, mark it with the ſame deteſtation in our meaſures as God himſelf doth. So far as we are ſenſible of the Divine Purity, we ſhould account ſin vile as it deſerves; we ſhould hate it entirely, without a grain of love to it, and hate it perpetually. Pſal. 119.104. Through thy Precepts I get underſtanding, therefore I hate every falſe way. He looks into God's Statute-Book, and thereby arrives to an underſtanding of the Purity of his Nature, whence his hatred of Iniquity commenc'd. This would govern our Motion, check our Vices; it would make us tremble at the hiſſing of a Temptation: When a Corruption did but peep out, and put forth its head, a look to the Divine Purity would be attended with a freſh Convoy of Strength to reſiſt it. There is no ſuch Fortification, as to be wrapped up in the ſenſe of this: This would fill us with an awe of God; we ſhould be aſham'd to admit any filthy thing into us, which we know is deteſtable to his pure Eye. As the approach of a grave and ſerious Man makes Children haſten their Trifles out of the way, ſo would a conſideration of this Attribute make us caſt away our Idols, and fling away our ridiculous thoughts and deſigns.

5. A due ſenſe of this Perfection, would enflame us with a vehement deſire to be conform'd to him. All our Deſires would be ardent to regulate our ſelves according to this Pattern of Holineſs and Goodneſs, which is not to be equall'd; the Contemplating it as it ſhines forth in the Face of Chriſt, will transform us into the ſame Image *. Since our lapſed ſtate, we cannot behold the Holineſs of God in it ſelf without affrightment; nor is it an Object of Imitation, but as temper'd in Chriſt to our view. When we cannot without blinding our ſelves, look upon the Sun in its Brightneſs, we may behold it through a colour'd Glaſs, whereby the luſtre of it is moderated, without dazling our eyes. The ſenſe of it will furniſh us with a greatneſs of mind, that little things will be contemn'd by us; Motives of a greater alloy would have little influence upon us; we ſhould have the higheſt Motives to every Duty, and Motives of the ſame ſtrain which influence the Angels above. It would change us, not only into an Angelical Nature, but a Divine Nature: We ſhould act like men of another Sphere; as if we had receiv'd our Original in another World, and ſeen with Angels the raviſhing Beauties of Heaven. How little would the mean Imployments of the World ſink us into Dirt and Mud? How often hath the Meditation of the Courage of a valiant Man, or Acuteneſs and Induſtry of a Learned Perſon, ſpurr'd on ſome Men to an imitation of them, and transform'd them into the ſame Nature? As the looking upon the Sun imprints an Image of the Sun upon our eye, that we ſeem to behold nothing but the Sun a while after. The view of the Divine Purity would fill us with a holy generoſity to imitate him, more than the Examples of the beſt men upon Earth. It was a ſaying of a Heathen, That if Virtue were viſible, it would kindle a noble flame of Love to it in the heart, by its raviſhing beauty. Shall the Infinite Purity of the Author of all Virtue come ſhort of the ſtrength of a Creature? Can we not render that viſible to us by frequent Meditation, which tho' it be inviſible in his Nature, is made viſible in his Law, in his Ways, in his Son? It would make us ready to obey him, ſince we know he cannot command any thing that is ſinful, but what is holy, juſt, and good: It would put all our Affections in their due place, elevate them above the Creature, and ſubject them to the Creator.

* 2 Cor. 3. 19.

6. It would make us patient and contented under all God's Diſpenſations. All Penal Evils are the Fruits of his Holineſs, as he is Judge and Governor of the World: He is not an Arbitrary Judge, nor doth any Sentence pronounc'd, nor Warrant for Execution iſſue from him, but what bears upon it a Stamp of the Righteouſneſs of his Nature; he doth nothing by Paſſion or Unrighteouſneſs, but according to the Eternal Law of his own unſtain'd Nature, which is the Rule to him in his Works, the Baſis and Foundation of his Throne and Sovereign Dominion. Pſal. 89. 14. Juſtice, or Righteouſneſs, and Judgment are the Habitation of thy Throne; upon theſe his Soveraign Power is eſtabliſh'd: So that there can be no juſt Complaint or Indictment brought againſt any of his Proceedings with Men. How doth our Saviour, who had the higheſt Apprehenſions of God's Holineſs, juſtifie God in his deepeſt diſtreſſes, when he cried and was not anſwer'd in the particular he deſir'd, in that Prophetick Pſalm of him, Pſal. 22. 2, 3. I cry day and night, but thou heareſt not. Thou ſeemeſt to be deaf to all my Petitions, afar off from the words of my roaring, but thou art holy. I caſt no blame upon thee: All thy dealings are ſquar'd by thy holineſs, this is the only Law to thee, in this I acquieſce. 'Tis part of thy holineſs to hide thy face from me, to ſhew thereby thy deteſtation of ſin. Our Saviour adores the Divine Purity in his ſharpeſt Agony, and a like ſenſe of it would guide us in the ſame ſteps to acknowledge and glorifie it, in our greateſt deſertions and afflictions; eſpecially ſince as they are the fruit of the holineſs of his Nature, ſo they are the means to impart to us clearer ſtamps of Holineſs, according to that in himſelf, which is the original Copy *. He melts us down as Gold, to fit us for the receiving a new Impreſſion, to mortifie the Affections of the Fleſh, and cloath us with the Graces of his Spirit. The due ſenſe of this would make us to

* Heb. 12. 10.

ſub-

ſubmit to his ſtroke, and to wait upon him for a good iſſue of his dealings.

2. Exhortation. Is holineſs a Perfection of the Divine Nature? Is it the glory of the Deity? Then let us glorifie this holineſs of God. Moſes glorifies it in the Text, and glorifies it in a Song, which was a Copy for all Ages. The whole Corporation of Seraphims have their Mouths fill'd with the praiſes of it. The Saints, whether Militant on Earth, or Triumphant in Heaven, are to continue the ſame Acclamation, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hoſts *. Neither Angels nor glorified Spirits exalt at the ſame rate the Power which formed them Creatures, nor Goodneſs which preſerves them in a bleſſed Immortality; as they do Holineſs, which they bear ſome beams of in their own Nature, and whereby they are capacitated to ſtand before his Throne. Upon the account of this, a Debt of Praiſe is demanded of all Rational Creatures by the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 99. 3. Let them praiſe thy great and terrible Name, for it is holy. Not ſo much for the greatneſs of his Majeſty, or the Treaſures of his Juſtice, but as they are conſider'd in conjunction with his holineſs, which renders them beautiful; for it is holy. Grandeur and Majeſty, ſimply in themſelves, are not Objects of Praiſe, nor do they merit the Acclamations of Men when deſtitute of Righteouſneſs: This only renders every thing elſe adorable: and this adorns the Divine Greatneſs with an amiableneſs: Iſa. 12. 6. Great is the holy one of Iſrael in the midſt of thee; and makes his Might worthy of Praiſe, Luke 1. 49. In honouring this which is the Soul and Spirit of all the reſt, we give a glory to all the Perfections which conſtitute and beautifie his Nature: And without the glorifying this, we glorifie nothing of them, tho' we ſhould extol every other ſingle Attribute a thouſand times. He values no other Adoration of his Creatures, unleſs this be intereſted, nor accepts any thing as a glory from them; * Levit. 10. 3. I will be ſanctified in them that come near me, and I will be glorified. As if he had ſaid, in manifeſting my Name to be holy, you truly, you only honour me. And as the Scripture ſeldom ſpeaks of this Perfection without a particular Emphaſis, it teaches us not to think of it without a ſpecial Elevation of heart: By this act only, while we are on Earth, can we joyn Conſort with the Angels in Heaven; he that doth not honour it, delight in it, and in the meditation of it, hath no reſemblance of it; he hath none of the Image, that delights not in the Original. Every thing of God is glorious, but this moſt of all. If he built the World principally for any thing, it was for the communication of his Goodneſs, and diſplay of his Holineſs. He formed the Rational Creature to manifeſt his Holineſs in that Law whereby he was to be govern'd: Then deprive not God of the deſign of his own Glory.

* Rev. 4. 8.

We honour this Attribute,

1. When we make it the ground of our love to God. Not becauſe he is gracious to us, but holy in himſelf. As God honours it, in loving himſelf for it, we ſhould honour it, by pitching our Affections upon him chiefly for it. What renders God amiable to himſelf, ſhould render him lovely to all his Creatures, Iſa. 42. 21. The Lord is well pleaſed for his righteouſneſs ſake. If the hatred of evil be the immediate reſult of a love to God, then the peculiar object or term of our love to God, muſt be that Perfection which ſtands in direct oppoſition to the hatred of evil. Pſal. 97. 10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil. When we honour his holineſs in every ſtamp and impreſſion of it; his Law, not principally becauſe of its uſefulneſs to us, its accommodateneſs to the order of the World, but for its innate Purity, and his People not for our intereſt in them, ſo much as for bearing upon them this glittering mark of the Deity, we honour then the Purity of the Law-giver, and the Excellency of the Sanctifier.

2. We honour it, when we regard chiefly the illuſtrious appearance of this in his Judgments in the World. In a caſe of Temporal Judgment, Moſes celebrates it in the Text: In a caſe of Spiritual Judgments, the Angels applaud it in Iſaiah. All his ſevere proceedings are nothing but the ſtrong breathings of this Attribute. Purity is the flaſh of his revenging Sword. If he did not hate evil, his Vengeance would not reach the Committers of it: He is a Refiner's Fire in the day of his Anger *: By his ſeparating Judgments, he takes away the wicked of the earth like Droſs, Pſal. 119. 119. How is his Holineſs honour'd, when we take notice of his ſweeping out the Rubbiſh of the World: How he ſuits puniſhment to ſin, and diſcovers his hatred of the matter and circumſtances of the Evil, in the matter and circumſtances of the Judgment. This Perfection is legible in every ſtroke of his Sword; we honour it when we read the ſyllables of it, and not by ſtanding amaz'd only at the greatneſs and ſeverity of the Blow, when we read how holy he is in his moſt terrible Diſpenſations: For as in them God magnifies the greatneſs of his Power, ſo he ſanctifies himſelf, that is, declares the Purity of his Nature as a Revenger of all Impiety. Ezek. 38. 22, 23. And I will plead againſt him with Peſtilence, and with Blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the People that are with him, an overflowing Rain and great Hail-ſtones, Fire and Brimſtone. Thus will I magnifie my ſelf, and ſanctifie my ſelf.

* Mal. 3. 2.

3. We honour this Attribute, when we take notice of it in every accompliſhment of his Promiſe, and every grant of a Mercy. His Truth is but a branch of his Righteouſneſs, a Slip from this Root. He is glorious in Holineſs in the account of Moſes, becauſe he led forth his People whom he had redeemed, Exod. 15. 13. His People, by a Covenant with their Fathers, being the God of Moſes, the God of Iſrael, and the God of their Fathers: Verſe 2. My God, and my Father's God, I will exalt thee. For what? for his faithfulneſs to his Promiſe. The holineſs of God, which Mary, Luke 1. 49. magnifies, is ſumm'd up in this, the help he afforded his Servant Iſrael, in the remembrance of his mercy, as he ſpake to our Fathers, to Abraham and his Seed for ever, Ver. 54, 55. The certainty of his Covenant-Mercy depends upon an unchangeableneſs of his holineſs. What are * ſure Mercies are holy Mercies in the Septuagint; and in Acts 13. 34. which makes that Tranſlation Canonical. His nearneſs to anſwer us when we call upon him for ſuch Mercies, is a fruit of the holineſs of his Name and Nature. Pſal. 145. 17. The Lord is holy in all his works; the Lord is nigh to all them that call upon him. Hannah, after a return of Prayer, ſets a particular mark upon this in her Song, 1 Sam. 2. 2. There is none holy as the Lord; ſeparated from all Droſs, firm to his Covenant, and righteous in it to his Suppliants that confide in him, and plead his Word. When we obſerve the workings of this in every return of Prayer, we honour it; 'tis a ſign the Mercy is really a return of Prayer, and not a Mercy of courſe, bearing upon it only the characters of a common Providence. This was the Perfection David would bleſs for the Catalogue of Mercies in Pſal. 103. 1, &c. Bleſs his (Holy) Name. Certainly one reaſon why ſincere Prayer is ſo delightful to him, is becauſe it puts him upon the exerciſe of this his beloved Perfection, which he ſo much delights to honour. Since God acts in all thoſe as the Governour of the World, we honour him not, unleſs we take notice of that Righteouſneſs which fits him for a Governour, and is the inward Spring of all his Motions. Gen. 18. 25. Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right? It was his deſign, in his pity to Iſrael, as well as the Calamities he intended againſt the Heathens, to be ſanctified in them; that is, declared holy in his Merciful, as well as his Judicial procedure †. Hereby God credits his Righteouſneſs, which ſeem'd to be forgotten by the one, and contemn'd by the other ‖, he removes by this all ſuſpicion of any unfaithfulneſs in him.

* Iſa. 55. 3.

† Ez. 36. 21, 23.
‖ Sanct. in loc.

4. We honour this Attribute, when we truſt his Covenant and Promiſe againſt outward Appearances. Thus our Saviour in the Prophecy of him *; when God ſeem'd to bar up the Gates of his Palace againſt the entry of any more Petitions. This Attribute proves the ſupport of the Redeemer's Soul; But thou art holy, O thou that inhabiteſt the praiſes of Iſrael: As it refers to what goes before, it has been twice explain'd; as it refers to what follows, it is a ground of truſt, Thou inhabiteſt the praiſes of Iſrael: Thou haſt had the Praiſes of Iſrael for many Ages for thy holineſs. How? Our Fathers truſted in thee, and thou didſt deliver them; They honour'd thy holineſs by their truſt, and thou didſt honour their Faith by a deliverance; Thou always hadſt a Purity that would not ſhame nor confound them. I will truſt in thee as thou art holy, and expect the breaking out of this Attribute for my good, as well as my Predeceſſors; Our Fathers truſted in thee, &c.

* Pſal. 22. 2, 3, 4.

5. We honour this Attribute, when we ſhew a greater Affection to the marks of his holineſs in times of the greateſt contempt of it. As the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 119. 126, 127. They have made void thy Law, therefore I love thy Commandments above Gold, While they ſpurn at the purity of thy Law, I will value it above the Gold they poſſeſs; I'll eſteem it as Gold, becauſe others count it as Droſs: By their ſcorn of it, my love to it ſhall be the warmer, and my hatred of Iniquity ſhall be the ſharper: The diſdain of others ſhould enflame us with a zeal and fortitude to appear in the behalf of his deſpiſed Honour. We honour this Holineſs many other ways; by preparation for our Addreſſes to him, out of a ſenſe of his Purity: When we imitate it; As he honours us by teaching us his Statutes *, ſo we honour him by learning and obſerving them. When we beg of him to ſhew himſelf a Refiner of us, to make us more conformable to him in holineſs, and bleſs him for any communication of it to us, it renders us beautiful and lovely in his ſight.

* Pſal. 119. 135.

To Conclude; to honour it, is the way to engage it for us: To give it the glory of what it hath done by the Arm of Power for our reſcue from Sin, and beating down our Corruptions at his feet, is the way to ſee more of its marvellous works, and behold a clearer brightneſs. As Unthankfulneſs makes him withdraw his Grace *, ſo glorifying him cauſes him to impart it. God honours men in the ſame way they honour him: When we honour him by acknowledging his Purity, he will honour us by communicating of it to us. This is the way to derive a greater excellency to our Souls.

* Rom. 1. 21, 24.

3. Exhortation. Since Holineſs is an eminent Perfection of the Divine Nature, let us labour after a Conformity to God in this Perfection. The Nature of God is preſented to us in the Scripture, both as a Pattern to imitate, and a Motive to perſwade the Creature to Holineſs *. Since it is therefore the Nature of God, the more our Natures are beautified with it, the more like we are to the Divine Nature. 'Tis not the Pattern of Angels, nor Arch-angels, that our Saviour or his Apoſtle propoſeth for our imitation, but the Original of all Purity, God himſelf, the ſame that created us, to be imitated by us. Nor is an equal degree of Purity enjoyn'd us; tho' we are to be pure, and perfect, and merciful as God is, yet not eſſentially ſo, for that would be to command us an impoſſibility in it ſelf; as much as to order us to ceaſe to be Creatures, and commence Gods. No Creature can be eſſentially holy, but by participation from the chief Fountain of holineſs; but we muſt have the ſame kind of holineſs, the ſame truth of holineſs. As a ſhort line may be as ſtrait as another, tho' it parallel it not in the immenſe length of it: A Copy may have the likeneſs of the Original, tho' not the ſame Perfection: We cannot be good, without eying ſome Exemplar of Goodneſs as the Pattern. No Pattern is ſo ſuitable as that which is the higheſt Goodneſs and Purity. That Limner that would draw the moſt excellent piece, fixes his eyes upon the moſt perfect Pattern. He that would be a good Orator, or Poet, or Artificer, conſiders ſome perſon moſt excellent in each kind, as the Object of his imitation. Who ſo fit as God to be view'd, as the Pattern of Holineſs, in our intendment of and endeavour after Holineſs? The Stoicks, one of the beſt ſects of Philoſophers, adviſed their Diſciples to pitch upon ſome eminent Example of Virtue, according to which to form their lives; as Socrates, &c. but true Holineſs doth not only endeavour to live the life of a good man, but chuſes to live a divine life: As before the man was alienated from the life of God †, ſo upon his return he aſpires after the life of God. To endeavour to be like a good man, is to make one Image like another; to ſet our Clocks by other Clocks, without regarding the Sun: But true Holineſs conſiſts in a likeneſs to the moſt exact Sampler. God being the firſt Purity, is the Rule as well as the Spring of all Purity in the Creature, the chief and firſt Object of Imitation. We diſown our ſelves to be his Creatures, if we breath not after a reſemblance to him in what he is imitable. There was in man, as created according to God's Image, a natural Appetite to reſemble God: It was at firſt planted in him by the Author of his Nature. The Devil's temptation of him by that Motive to tranſgreſs the Law, had been as an Arrow ſhot againſt a brazen Wall, had there not been a deſire of ſome likeneſs to his Creator engraven upon him ‖: It would have had no more influence upon him, than it could have had upon a meer Animal. But Man miſtook the term; he would have been like God in knowledge, whereas he ſhould have affected a greater reſemblance of him in Purity. O that we could exemplifie God in our Nature! Precepts may inſtruct us more, but Examples affect us more; one directs us, but the other attracts us. What can be more attractive of our imitation, than that which is the Original of all Purity both in Men and Angels?

† Eph. 4. 19.
‖ Gen. 3. 5.

This conformity to him conſiſts in an imitation of him,

1, In his Law. The Purity of his Nature was firſt viſible in this Glaſs; hence 'tis call'd a holy Law: Rom. 7. 12. a pure Law: Pſal. 19. 8. Holy and pure as it is a Ray of the pure Nature of the Law-giver. When our Lives are a Comment upon his Law, they are expreſſive of his Holineſs: We conform to his Holineſs, when we regulate our ſelves by his Law, as it is a Tranſcript of his Holineſs: We do not imitate it, when we do a thing in the matter of it agreeable to that holy Rule, but when we do it with reſpect to the Purity of the Law-giver beaming in it. If it be agreeable to God's Will, and convenient for ſome deſign of our own, and we do any thing only with a reſpect to that deſign, we make not God's Holineſs diſcover'd in the Law our Rule, but our own conveniency: 'Tis not a conformity to God, but a conformity of our Actions to Self. As in abſtinence from intemperate Courſes, not becauſe the holineſs of God in his Law hath preſcrib'd it, but be-

* 1 John 3. 3. Mat. 5. 48. Lev. 11. 44. 1 Pet. 1. 15, 16.

becauſe the health of our Bodies, or ſome noble Contentments of Life, require it; then it is not God's holineſs that is our Rule, but our own ſecurity, conveniency, or ſomething elſe which we make a God to our ſelves.

It muſt be a real conformity to the Law: Our holineſs ſhould ſhine as really in the practiſe, as God's Purity does in the Precept. God hath not a pretence of Purity in his Nature, but a reality: 'Tis not only a ſudden boiling up of an admiration of him, or a ſtarting wiſh to be like him, from ſome ſudden impreſſion upon the Fancy, (which is a meer temporary blaze) but a ſettled temper of Soul, loving every thing that is like him, doing things out of a firm deſire to reſemble his Purity in the Copy he hath ſet; not a reſting in Negatives, but aſpiring to Poſitives; Holy and harmleſs are diſtinct things: they were diſtinct qualifications in our High Prieſt in his Obedience to the Law *, ſo they muſt be in us.

* Heb. 7. 26

2. In his Chriſt. As the Law is the Tranſcript, ſo Chriſt is the Image of his Holineſs: The glory of God is too dazling to be beheld by us: The acute eye of an Angel is too weak to look upon that bright Sun without covering his Face. We are much too weak to take our Meaſures from that Purity which is infinite in his Nature. But he hath made his Son like us, that by the imitation of him in that temper, and ſhadow of human Fleſh we may arrive to a reſemblance of him *. Then there is a conformity to him, when that which Chriſt did is drawn in lively Colours in the Soul of a Chriſtian; when as he died upon the Croſs we dye to our ſins; as he roſe from the Grave, we riſe from our Luſts; as he aſcended on high, we mount our Souls thither: When we expreſs in our Lives what ſhined in his, and exemplifie in our hearts what he acted in the World, and become with him, as he was ſeparate from ſinners. The holineſs of God in Chriſt is our ultimate Pattern: As we are not only to believe in Chriſt, but by Chriſt in God †, ſo we are not only to imitate Chriſt, but the holineſs of God as diſcovered in Chriſt.

* 2 Cor. 3. 18.

† Joh. 14. 1

And to enforce this upon us, let us conſider,

1. 'Tis this only wherein he commands our imitation of him. We are not commanded to be mighty and wiſe, as God is mighty and wiſe; but be holy as I am holy. The declarations of his power are to enforce our ſubjection; thoſe of his wiſdom to encourage our direction by him; but this only to attract our imitation. When he ſaith, I am holy, the immediate Inference he makes, is be ye ſo too, which is not the proper inſtruction from any other Perfection *. Man was created by Divine Power, and harmoniz'd by Divine Wiſdom, but not after them, or according to them, as the true Image; this was the Prerogative of Divine Holineſs, to be the Pattern of his Rational Creature †: Wiſdom and Power were ſubſervient to this, the one as the Penſil, the other as the Hand that mov'd it. The condition of a Creature is too mean to have the communications of the Divine Eſſence, the true Impreſſions of his Righteouſneſs and Goodneſs we are only capable of. 'Tis only in thoſe moral Perfections we are ſaid to reſemble God. The Devils, thoſe impure and ruin'd Spirits, are nearer to him in ſtrength and knowledge than we are; yet in regard of that natural and intellectual Perfection, never counted like him, but at the greateſt diſtance from him, becauſe at the greateſt diſtance from his Purity. God values not a natural Might, nor an acute Underſtanding, nor vouchſafes ſuch Perfections the glorious Title of that of his Image. ‖ Plutarch ſaith, God is angry with thoſe that imitate his Thunder or Lightning, his Works of Majeſty, but delighted with thoſe that imitate his Vertue. In this only we can never incur any reproof from him, but for falling ſhort of him and his Glory. Had Adam endeavour'd after an imitation of this, inſtead of that of Divine Knowledge, he had eſcap'd his fall, and preſerv'd his ſtanding; And had Lucifer wiſh'd himſelf like God in this, as well as his Dominion, he had ſtill been a glorious Angel, inſtead of being now a ghaſtly Devil: To reach after a Union with the Supream Being in regard of Holineſs, is the only generous and commendable Ambition.

* In this ſaith Plato, God is ἐν μέσῳ πυξίδος ἕστηκε.

† Eph. 4. 24 Col. 3. 10.

‖ Eugub. de perenni Philoſo. lib. 6. cap. 6

2. This is the prime way of honouring God. We do not ſo glorifie God by elevated Admirations, or eloquent Expreſſions, or pompous Services of him, as when we aſpire to a converſing with him with unſtained Spirits, and live to him in living like him. The Angels are not called holy for applauding his Purity, but conforming to it. The more perfect any Creature is in the rank of Beings, the more is the Creator honoured; As it is more for the honour of God to create an Angel or Man, than a meer Animal; becauſe there are in ſuch, clearer Characters of Divine Power and Goodneſs, than in thoſe that are Inferiour. The more perfect any Creature is morally, the more is God glorified by that Creature; 'tis a real declaration that God is the beſt and moſt amiable Being; that nothing beſides him is valuable, and worthy to be the Object of our imitation. 'Tis a greater honouring of him, than the higheſt acts of Devotion, and the moſt religious bodily Exerciſe, or the ſinging this Song of Moſes in the Text, with a Triumphant Spirit. As it is more the honour of a Father to be imitated in his Vertues by his Son, than to have all the glavering Commendations by the Tongue or Pen of a vicious and debauch'd Child. By this we honour him in that Perfection which is deareſt to him, and counted by him as the chiefeſt glory of his Nature. God ſeems to accept the glorifying this Attribute, as if it were a real addition to that Holineſs which is infinite in his Nature, and becauſe infinite, cannot admit of any increaſe: And therefore the word ſanctified is uſed inſtead of glorified. Iſai. 8. 13. Sanctifie the Lord of Hoſts himſelf, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And Iſai. 29. 23. They ſhall ſanctifie the holy One of Jacob, and fear the God of Iſrael. This ſanctification of God is by the fear of him, which ſignifies in the Language of the old Teſtament, a Reverence of him, and a Righteouſneſs before him. He doth not ſay, when he would have his Power or Wiſdom glorified, empower me, or make me wiſe; but when he would have Holineſs glorified by the Creature, 'tis ſanctifie me; that is, manifeſt the Purity of my Nature by the Holineſs of your Lives: But he expreſſeth it in ſuch a term, as if it were an addition to this infinite Perfection; ſo acceptable it is to him, as if it were a Contribution from his Creature for the inlarging an Attribute ſo pleaſing to him, and ſo glorious in his Eye. 'Tis as much as in the Creature lies, a preſerving the Life of God, ſince this Perfection is his Life; and that he would as ſoon part with his Life as part with his Purity. It keeps up the Reputation of God in the World, and attracts others to a love of him; whereas unworthy carriages defame God in the Eyes of Men, and bring up an ill report of him, as if he were ſuch a one as thoſe that profeſs him, and walk unſutably to their Profeſſion, appear to be.

3. This is the excellency and beauty of a Creature. The Title of Beauty is given to it in Pſal. 110. 3. Beauties in the Plural Number, as comprehending in it all other Beauties whatſoever. What is a Divine Excellency cannot be a Creatures Deformity:

The

The natural beauty of it is a repreſentation of the Divinity; and a holy Man ought to eſteem himſelf excellent, in being ſuch in his meaſure as his God is, and put his principal felicity in the poſſeſſion of the ſame Purity in Truth. This is the refin'd Complexion of the Angels that ſtand before his Throne. The Devils loſt their comelineſs when they fell from it. It was the honour of the Humane Nature of our Saviour, not only to be united to the Deity, but to be ſanctified by it. He was fairer then all the children of men, becauſe he had a Holineſs above the Children of Men: Grace was poured into his lips, Pſal. 45. 2. It was the Jewel of the reaſonable Nature in Paradiſe: Conformity to God was Man's original happineſs in his created ſtate, and what was naturally ſo, cannot but be immutably ſo in its own Nature. The beauty of every copied thing conſiſts in its likeneſs to the Original: Every thing hath more of lovelineſs, as it hath greater impreſſions of its firſt Pattern: In this regard Holineſs hath more of beauty on it, than the whole Creation, becauſe it partakes of a greater excellency of God than the Sun, Moon, and Stars. No greater glory can be, than to be a conſpicuous and viſible Image of the inviſible, and holy, and bleſſed God. As this is the ſplendor of all the Divine Attributes, ſo it is the flower of all a Chriſtian's Graces, the Crown of all Religion: 'Tis the glory of the Spirit. In this regard the King's Daughter is ſaid to be all glorious within *. 'Tis more excellent than the Soul it ſelf, ſince the greateſt Soul is but a deformed piece without it: (A Diamond without luſtre †.) What are the noble Faculties of the Soul without it, but as a curious ruſty Watch, a delicate heap of Diſorder and Confuſion? 'Tis impoſſible there can be Beauty, where there are a multitude of ſpots and wrinkles that blemiſh a Countenance ‖. It can never be in its true brightneſs, but when it is perfect in Purity, when it regains what it was poſſeſſed of by Creation, and diſpoſſeſſed of by the fall, and recovers its primitive temper. We are not ſo beautiful by being the Work of God, as by having a Stamp of God upon us. Worldly Greatneſs may make Men honourable in the ſight of creeping Worms. Soft lives, ambitious reaches, luxurious pleaſures, and a pompous Religion render no Man excellent and noble in the ſight of God: This is not the excellency and nobility of the Deity which we are bound to reſemble; Other Lines of a Divine Image muſt be drawn in us to render us truly excellent.

* Pſ. 45. 13.

† Vaughan. p. 4, 5.

‖ Eph. 5. 27.

4. 'Tis our life. What is the life of God, is truly the life of a rational Creature *. The life of the Body conſiſts not in the perfection of its Members, and the integrity of its Organs, theſe remain when the Body becomes a Carcaſs; but in the preſence of the Soul, and its vigorous animation of every part, to perform the diſtinct Offices belonging to each of them. The life of the Soul conſiſts not in its Being, or Spiritual Subſtance, or the excellency of its Faculties of Underſtanding and Will, but in the moral and becoming operations of them. The ſpirit is only life becauſe of righteouſneſs †. The Faculties are turned by it, to acquit themſelves in their Functions, according to the Will of God; the abſence of this doth not only deform the Soul, but in a ſort annihilate it, in regard of its true eſſence and end: Grace gives a Chriſtian Being, and a want of it is the want of a true Being, 1 Cor. 15. 10. When Adam deveſted himſelf of his original Righteouſneſs, he came under the force of the threatning, in regard of a Spiritual Death: Every perſon is morally dead whiles he lives an unholy life ‖. What life is to the body, that is righteouſneſs to the Spirit; and the greater meaſure of holineſs it hath, the more of life it hath, becauſe it is in a greater nearneſs, and partakes more fully of the Fountain of Life. Is not that the moſt worthy life, which God makes moſt account of, without which his life could not be a pleaſant and bleſſed life, but a life worſe than death? What a miſerable life is that of the Men of the World, that are carried with greedy inclinations to all manner of unrighteouſneſs, whither their Intereſts or their Luſts invite them? The moſt beautiful Body is a Carcaſs, and the moſt honourable Perſon hath but a brutiſh life *; miſerable Creatures when their life ſhall be extinct without a Divine rectitude, when all other things will vaniſh as the ſhadows of the Night at the appearance of the Sun.

Holineſs is our Life.

5. 'Tis this only fits us for Communion with God. Since it is our Beauty and our Life, without it, what Communion can an excellent God have with deformed Creatures, a living God with dead Creatures? Without Holineſs none ſhall ſee God, Heb. 12. 14. The Creature muſt be ſtript of his Unrighteouſneſs, or God of his Purity, before they can come together. Likeneſs is the ground of Communion and of Delight in it: The oppoſition between God and unholy Souls, is as great as that between Light and Darkneſs *, Divine fruition is not ſo much by a union of Preſence, as a Union of Nature. Heaven is not ſo much an outward, as an inward life; the foundation of Glory is laid in Grace; a reſemblance to God is our vital happineſs, without which the Viſion of God would not be ſo much as a cloudy and ſhadowy happineſs, but rather a torment than a felicity; unleſs we be of a like Nature to God, we cannot have a pleaſing fruition of him. Some Philoſophers think, that if our Bodies were of the ſame nature with the Heavens, of an Æthereal Subſtance, the nearneſs to the Sun would cheriſh, not ſcorch us. Were we partakers of a Divine Nature, we might enjoy God with delight; whereas remaining in our unlikeneſs to him, we cannot think of him, and approach to him without terrour. As ſoon as ſin had ſtript Man of the Image of God, he was an Exile from the comfortable Preſence of God, unworthy for God to hold any correſpondence with: He can no more delight in a defiled Perſon, than a Man can take a Toad into intimate converſe with him; he would hereby diſcredit his own Nature, and juſtifie our Impurity. The holineſs of a Creature only prepares him for an eternal conjunction with God in glory. Enoch's walking with God, was the cauſe of his being ſo ſoon wafted to the place full of a fruition of him; he hath as much delight in ſuch, as in Heaven it ſelf; one is his Habitation as well as the other: The one is his habitation of Glory, and the other is the Houſe of his Pleaſure: If he dwell in Zion, it muſt be a holy Mountain †, and the Members of Zion muſt be upheld in their rectitude and integrity, before they be ſet before the face of God for ever ‖. Such are ſtil'd his Jewels, his Portion, as if he lived upon them, as a Man upon his Inheritance. As God cannot delight in us, ſo neither can we delight in God without it. We muſt purifie our ſelves as he is pure, if we expect to ſee him as he is in the comfortable glory and beauty of his Nature *, elſe the ſight of God would be terrible and troubleſome: We cannot be ſatisfied with the likeneſs of God at the Reſurrection, unleſs we have a righteouſneſs wherewith to behold his face †. 'Tis a vain imagination in any to think that Heaven can be a place of Happineſs to him, in whoſe eye the Beauty of Holineſs, which fills and adorns it, is an unlovely thing: Or that any can have a ſatisfaction in that Divine Purity which is loathſome to him in the imitations of it. We cannot enjoy

enjoy him, unleſs we reſemble him; nor take any pleaſure in him if we were with him, without ſomething of likeneſs to him.

Holineſs fits us for Communion with God.

6. We can have no Evidence of our Election and Adoption without it. Conformity to God in Purity, is the fruit of electing Love, Eph. 1. 4. He hath choſen us that we ſhould be holy. The goodneſs of the Fruit evidenceth the Nature of the Root: This is the Seal that aſſures us the Patent is the Authentick Grant of the Prince. Whatſoever is holy, ſpeaks it ſelf to be from God; and whoſoever is holy, ſpeaks himſelf to belong to God. This is the only evidence that we are born of God *. The ſubduing our ſouls to him, the forming us into a reſemblance to himſelf, is a more certain ſign we belong to him, than if we had with Iſaiah ſeen his glory in the Viſion with all his train of Angels about him. This juſtifies us to be the Seed of God, when he hath as it were taken a ſlip from his own Purity, and engrafted it in our Spirits: He can never own us for his Children without his mark, the ſtamp of Holineſs. The Devil's ſtamp is none of God's Badge. Our ſpiritual Extraction from him is but pretended, unleſs we do things worthy of ſo illuſtrious a Birth, and becoming the honour of ſo great a Father: What evidence can we elſe have of any Child-like love to God, ſince the proper act of Love is to imitate the Object of our Affections?

* 1 John 2. 29.

And that we may be in ſome meaſure like to God in this excellent Perfection;

1. Let us be often viewing and ruminating on the holineſs of God, eſpecially as diſcovered in Chriſt. 'Tis by a believing Meditation on him, that we are changed into the ſame Image *. We can think often of nothing that is excellent in the World, but it draws our Faculties to ſome kind of ſutable Operation; and why ſhould not ſuch an excellent Idea of the holineſs of God in Chriſt perfect our Underſtandings, and awaken all the powers of our Souls to be formed to actions worthy of him? A Painter employed in the limning ſome excellent Piece, has not only his Pattern before his eyes, but his eye frequently upon the Pattern, to poſſeſs his fancy to draw forth an exact reſemblance. He that would expreſs the Image of God, muſt imprint upon his Mind the Purity of his Nature; Cheriſh it in his thoughts, that the excellent beauty of it may paſs from his Underſtanding to his Affections, and from his Affections to his Practiſe. How can we ariſe to a conformity to God in Chriſt, whoſe moſt holy Nature we ſeldom glance upon, and more rarely ſink our Souls into the depths of it by meditation? Be frequent in the meditation of the holineſs of God.

† 2 Cor. 3. 18.

2. Let us often exerciſe our ſelves in acts of love to God, becauſe of this Perfection. The more adoring thoughts we have of God, the more delightfully we ſhall aſpire to, and more raviſhingly catch after any thing that may promote the more full draught of his Divine Image in our hearts. What we intenſly affect, we deſire to be as near to as we can, and to be that very thing rather than our ſelves. All imitations of others, ariſe from an intenſe love to their Perſons or Excellency. When the Soul is raviſht with this Perfection of God, it will deſire to be united with it; to have it drawn in it, more than to have its own being continued to it. It will deſire and delight in its own being, in order to this heavenly and ſpiritual work. The impreſſions of the Nature of God upon it, and the imitations of the Nature of God by it, will be more deſirable than any natural perfection whatſoever. The Will in loving is rendred like the Object beloved; is turned into its nature, and imbibes * its qualities. The Soul by loving God, will find it ſelf more and more transform'd into the Divine Image, whereas ſlighted enſamples are never thought worthy of Imitation.

* Amor naturam induit & mores imbibit rei amatæ.

3. Let us make God our end. Every Man's mind forms it ſelf to a likeneſs to that which it makes its chief end. An earthly Soul is as droſſy as the Earth he gapes for: An ambitious Soul is as elevated as the Honour he reaches at: The ſame Characters that are upon the thing aimed at, will be imprinted upon the Spirit of him that aims at it. When God and his Glory are made our end, we ſhall find a ſilent likeneſs paſs in upon us; the Beauty of God will by degrees enter upon our Souls.

4. In every deliberate action, let us reflect upon the Divine Purity as a pattern. Let us examine whether any thing we are prompted unto, bear an impreſſion of God upon it: Whether it looks like a thing, that God himſelf would do in that caſe, were he in our Natures, and in our Circumſtances. See whether it hath the Livery of God upon it, how congruous it is to his Naure: whether, and in what manner the Holineſs of God can be glorified thereby; and let us be induſtrious in all this: For can ſuch an imitation be eaſie which is reſiſted by the conſtant aſſaults of the Fleſh, which is diſcouraged by our own ignorance, and depreſt by our faint and languiſhing Deſires after it? O! happy we, if there were ſuch a Heart in us.

5. A fourth Exhortation. If Holineſs be a Perfection belonging to the Nature of God; then, where there is ſome weak conformity to the holineſs of God, let us labour to grow up in it, and breathe after fuller meaſures of it. The more likeneſs we have to him, the more love we ſhall have from him. Communion will be ſutable to our imitation; his love to himſelf in his Eſſence, will caſt out beams of love to himſelf in his Image. If God loves holineſs in a lower meaſure, much more will he love it in a higher degree, becauſe then his Image is more illuſtrious and beautiful, and comes nearer to the lively Lineaments of his own Infinite Purity. Perfection in any thing is more lovely and amiable than Imperfection in any ſtate; and the nearer any thing arrives to Perfection, the further are thoſe things ſeparated from it which might cool an affection to it. An increaſe in holineſs is attended with a manifeſtation of his love, John 14. 21. He that hath my Commandments, and keeps them, he it is that loves me, and he ſhall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and I will manifeſt my ſelf to him: 'Tis a teſtimony of love to God, and God will not be behind hand with the Creature in kindneſs: He loves a holy Man for ſome reſemblance to him in his Nature; but when there is an abounding in ſanctified Diſpoſitions ſutable to it, there is an increaſe of favour: The more we reſemble the Original, the more ſhall we enjoy the bleſſedneſs of that Original: As any partake more of the Divine Likeneſs, they partake more of the Divine Happineſs.

6. Exhortation. Let us carry our ſelves holily in a ſpiritual manner in all our religious approaches to God; Pſal. 93. 5. Holineſs becomes thy Houſe, O Lord, for ever. This Attribute ſhould work in us a deep and reverential reſpect to God. This is the reaſon rendred why we ſhould worſhip at his Footſtool, in the loweſt poſture of humility proſtrate before him, becauſe he is holy *. Shoes muſt be put off from our feet, Exod. 3. 5. that is, Luſts from our Affections, every thing that our Souls are clogged and bemired with, as the Shoe is with dirt. He is not willing we ſhould offer to him an impure Soul, mired Hearts, rotten Carcaſſes, putrefied in vice, rotten in iniquity: Our Services are to be as free from Prophaneneſs, as the ſacrifices of the Law were to be free from ſicklineſs or any blemiſh. Whatſoever is contrary to his Purity is abhorred by him, and unlovely in his ſight, and can meet with no other ſucceſs at his hands, but a diſdainful turning away both of his eye and ear *. Since he is an immenſe Purity, he will reject from his preſence, and from having any communion with him, all that which is not conformable to him; as light chaſes away the darkneſs of the night, and will not mix with it. If we ſtretch out our hands towards him, we muſt put iniquity far away from us †; the fruits of all ſervice will elſe drop off to nothing. Then ſhall the offering of Judah and Jeruſalem be pleaſant to the Lord: When? when the heart is purg'd by Chriſt fitting as a purifier of ſilver ‖. Not all the Incenſe of the Indies yield him ſo ſweet a Savour, as one ſpiritual act of Worſhip from a heart eſtranged from the vileneſs of the World, and raviſh'd with an affection to, and a deſire of imitating the Purity of his Nature.

* Iſa. 1. 15.

† Job 11. 13, 14.

‖ Mal. 3. 3, 4.

7. Exhortation. Let us addreſs for Holineſs to God the Fountain of it. As he is the Author of bodily life in the Creature, ſo he is the Author of his own life, the life of God in the Soul. By his holineſs he makes men holy, as the Sun by his light enlightens the Air. He is not only the Holy One, but our Holy One *: The Lord that ſanctifies us, Levit. 20. 8. As he hath mercy to pardon us, ſo he hath holineſs to purifie us, the excellency of being a Sun to comfort us, and a Shield to protect us, giving Grace and Glory †; Grace, whereby we may have Communion with him to our comfort, and ſtrength againſt our ſpiritual enemies for our defence: Grace as our preparatory to Glory, and Grace growing up till it ripen in Glory. He only can mould us into a divine frame. The great Original can only derive the excellency of his own nature to us. We are too low, too lame to lift up our ſelves to it; too much in love with our own Deformity, to admit of this Beauty without a heavenly power inclining our deſires for it, our affections to it, our willingneſs to be partakers of it. He can as ſoon ſet the beauty of Holineſs in a deformed Heart, as the beauty of harmony in a confuſed maſs when he made the World. He can as ſoon cauſe the light of Purity to riſe out of the darkneſs of Corruption, as frame glorious ſpirits out of the inſufficiency of nothing. His beauty doth not decay, he hath as much in himſelf now as he had in his Eternity: He is as ready to impart it, as he was at the Creation; only we muſt wait upon him for it, and be content to have it by ſmall meaſures and degrees. There is no fear of our ſanctification, if we come to him as a God of holineſs, ſince he is a God of Peace, and the breach made by Adam is repair'd by Chriſt, 1 Theſſ. 5. 23. And the very God of Peace ſanctifie you wholly, &c. He reſtores the ſanctifying ſpirit which was withdrawn by the Fall, as he is a God pacified, and his Holineſs righted by the Redeemer. The beauty of it appears in its ſmiles upon a man in Chriſt, and is as ready to impart it ſelf to the reconcil'd Creature, as before Juſtice was to puniſh the rebellious one. He loves to ſend forth the Streams of this perfection into created Chanels, more than any elſe. He did not deſign the making the Creature ſo powerful as he might, becauſe power is not ſuch an excellency in its own Nature, but as it is conducted and manag'd by ſome other excellency. Power is indifferent, and may be uſed well or ill, according as the poſſeſſor of it is righteous or unrighteous. God makes not the Creature ſo powerful as he might, but he delights to make the Creature that waits upon him as holy as it can be, beginning it in this World, and ripening it in the other: 'Tis from him we muſt expect it, and from him that we muſt beg it, and draw Arguments from the holineſs of his Nature to move him to work holineſs in our Spirits: We cannot have a ſtronger plea. Purity is the Favourite of his own Nature, and delights it ſelf in the reſemblances of it in the Creature. Let us alſo go to God, to preſerve what he hath already wrought and imparted. As we cannot attain it, ſo we cannot maintain it without him. God gave it Adam, and he loſt it: When God gives it us, we ſhall loſe it without his influencing and preſerving Grace: The channel will be without a Stream, if the Fountain do not bubble it forth; and the ſtreams will vaniſh, if the Fountain doth not conſtantly ſupply them: let us apply our ſelves to him for holineſs as he is a God glorious in holineſs; by this we honour God, and advantage our ſelves.

A

UPON THE

Goodneſs of GOD.

MARK X. 18.

And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God.

THE words are part of a Reply of our Saviour to the young Man's Petition to him: A certain Perſon came in haſte, running, as being eager for ſatisfaction, to entreat his directions, what he ſhould do, to inherit Everlaſting Life: The Perſon is deſcribed only in general, verſe 17. There came one, A certain Man: But Luke deſcribes him by his Dignity, * A certain Ruler; One of Authority among the Jews. He deſires of him an Anſwer to a Legal Queſtion. [What he ſhould do?] Or, as Matthew hath it, What good thing ſhall I do, that I may have Eternal Life? † He imagin'd Everlaſting Felicity was to be purchaſed by the Works of the Law; He had not the leaſt Sentiments of Faith: Chriſt's Anſwer implies, there was no hopes of the Happineſs of another World by the Works of the Law; unleſs they were perfect and anſwerable to every Divine Precept. He doth not ſeem to have any ill, or hypocritical intent in his Addreſs to Chriſt; not to tempt him, but to be inſtructed by him. He ſeems to come with an ardent deſire, to be ſatisfi'd in his Demand; he performed a ſolemn Act of Reſpect to him, he kneeled to him, γονυπετήσας, proſtrated himſelf upon the ground: Beſides Chriſt is ſaid, v. 21. to love him, which had been inconſiſtent with the knowledge Chriſt had of the Hearts and Thoughts of Men, and the abhorrence he had of Hypocrites, had he been only a Counterfeit in this Queſtion.

* Luke 18.18.

† Matth. 19.16.

But the firſt Reply Chriſt makes to him, reſpects the Title of Good Maſter, which this Ruler gave him in his Salutation.

1. Some think, that Chriſt hereby would draw him to an acknowledgment of him as God; You acknowledge me good, How come you to ſalute me with ſo great a Title, ſince you do not afford it to your greateſt Doctors? Lightfoot in loc. obſerves, that the Title of Rabbi bone is not in all the Talmud. You muſt own me to be God, ſince you own me to be good: Goodneſs being a Title only due and properly belonging to the Supream Being.

If you take me for a common Man, with what Conſcience can you ſalute me in a manner proper to God? Since no Man is good, no, not one, but the Heart of Man is evil continually. The Arrians uſed this place to back their denying the Deity of Chriſt: Becauſe, ſay they, he did not acknowledge himſelf Good, therefore he did not acknowledge himſelf God. * But he doth not here deny his Deity, but reproves him for calling him Good, when he had not yet confeſt him to be more than a Man. † You behold my Fleſh, but you conſider not the fulneſs of my Deity; If you account me Good, account me God, and imagine me not to be a ſimple and a meer Man. He diſowns not his own Deity, but allures the young Man to a confeſſion of it. Why call'ſt thou me Good, ſince thou doſt not diſcover any apprehenſions of my being more than a Man? Tho' thou comeſt with a greater Eſteem to me, than is commonly entertain'd of the Doctors of the Chair, why doſt thou own me to be good, unleſs thou own me to be God? If Chriſt had deny'd himſelf in this Speech to be good, he had rather entertain'd this Perſon with a frown and ſharp reproof for giving him a Title due to God alone, than have received him with that courteſie and complaiſance as he did ‖. Had he ſaid there is none good but the Father, he had excluded himſelf; but in ſaying, There is none good but God, he comprehends himſelf.

* Eraſm. in loc.

† Auguſtin.

‖ Heinſius in Matth.

2. Others ſay, That Chriſt had no intention to draw him to an acknowledgment of his Deity, but only aſſerts his Divine Authority or Miſſion from God. * For which interpretation Maldonat calls Calvin an Arrianizer. He doth not here aſſert the Eſſence of his Deity, but the Authority of his Doctrine: As if he ſhould have ſaid, You do without ground give me the Title of good, unleſs you believe I have a Divine Commiſſion for what I declare and act. Many do think me an Impoſtor, an Enemy of God, and a Friend to Devils; you muſt firmly believe, that I am not ſo as your Rulers report me, but that I am ſent of God, and authorized by him; you cannot elſe give me the Title of good, but of wicked. And the reaſon they give for this interpretation, is, becauſe it is a queſtion, whether any of the Apoſtles underſtood him at this time, to be God, which ſeems to have no great ſtrength in it; ſince not only the Devil had publickly owned him, to be the Holy One of God †; but John the Baptiſt had born Record, that he was the Son of God ‖; and before this time Peter had confeſt him openly, in the hearing of the reſt of the Diſciples, That he was the Chriſt the Son of the living God *. But I think Paræus his interpretation is beſt, which takes in both thoſe; Either you are ſerious or deceitful in this Addreſs; if you are ſerious, Why do you call me good, and make bold to fix ſo great a Title upon one you have no higher Thought of than of a meer Man? Chriſt takes occaſion from hence, to aſſert God to be only and ſoveraignly good: † There is none good but God. God only hath the honour of abſolute goodneſs, and none but God merits the name of good. ‖ A Heathen could ſay much after the ſame manner: All other things are far from the nature of good; call none elſe good but God, for this would be a profane Errour: Other things are only good in opinion, but have not the true ſubſtance of Goodneſs: He is good in a more excellent way, than any Creature can be denominated good.

* Calvin in loc.

* Matth. 16. 16.

1. God is only originally Good, Good of himſelf. All Created Goodneſs is a Rivulet from this Fountain, but Divine Goodneſs hath no Spring; God depends upon no other for his Goodneſs, he hath it in, and of himſelf: Man hath no Goodneſs from himſelf, God hath no Goodneſs from without himſelf: his Goodneſs is no more derived from another, than his Being: If he were Good by any External thing, that thing muſt be in being before him, or after him: If before him, he was not then himſelf from Eternity; If after him, he was not Good in himſelf from Eternity. The end of his Creating things then, was not to confer a Goodneſs upon his Creatures, but to partake of a Goodneſs from his Creatures. God is good by and in himſelf, ſince all things are only Good by him; and all that Goodneſs which is in Creatures, is but the breathing of his own Goodneſs upon them. They have all their Lovelineſs from the ſame Hand they have their Being from. Tho' by Creation God was declar'd Good, yet he was not made Good by any, or by all the Creatures. He partakes of none, but all things partake of him. He is ſo Good that he gives all, and receives nothing; Only Good becauſe nothing is Good but by him: Nothing hath a Goodneſs but from him.

2. God only is infinitely Good.

A boundleſs Goodneſs that knows no limits, a Goodneſs as infinite as his Eſſence, not only Good, but beſt; not only Good, but Goodneſs it ſelf, the Supream unconceivable Goodneſs. All things elſe are but little Particles of God, ſmall Sparks from this Immenſe Flame, Sips of Goodneſs to this Fountain. Nothing that is good by his influence, can equal him, who is good by himſelf: Derived goodneſs, can never equal Primitive goodneſs; Divine goodneſs communicates it ſelf to a vaſt number of Creatures in various degrees; to Angels, glorified Spirits, Men on Earth, to every Creature; and when it hath communicated all that the preſent World is capable of, there is ſtill leſs diſplay'd, than left to enrich another World. All poſſible Creatures are not capable of exhauſting the Wealth, the Treaſures, that Divine Bounty is filled with.

3. God is only perfectly good, becauſe only Infinitely good.

He is good without indigence, becauſe he hath the whole Nature of Goodneſs, not only ſome Beams that may admit of increaſe of degree. As in him is the whole Nature of Entity, ſo in him is the whole Nature of Excellency. As nothing hath an abſolute perfect Being but God, ſo nothing hath an abſolutely perfect goodneſs but God. As the Sun hath a perfection of Heat in it, but what is warm'd by the Sun, is but imperfectly hot, and equals not the Sun in that perfection of heat, wherewith it is naturally endued. The goodneſs of God is the meaſure and rule of goodneſs in every thing elſe.

4. God only is immutably good.

Other things may be perpetually good by Supernatural Power, but not Immutably good in their own Nature. Other things are not ſo good, but they may be bad; God is ſo good, that he cannot be bad. * It was the Speech of a Philoſopher, That it was a hard thing to find a good Man, yea impoſſible; but tho' it were poſſible to find a good Man, he would be good but for ſome moment, or a ſhort time: For tho' he ſhould be good at this inſtant, it was above the Nature of Man to continue in a habit of goodneſs, without going awry and warping.

* Eugubin. Peren. Philoſ. l. 5. c. 9.

But the goodneſs of God endureth for ever †. God always glitters in goodneſs, as the Sun, which the Heathens call'd the viſible Image of the Divinity, doth with Light. There is not ſuch a perpetual light in the Sun, as there is a fulneſs of goodneſs in God; no variableneſs in him, as he is the Father of Lights ‖.

† Pſ. 52. 1.
‖ Jam. 1. 17

Before I come to the Doctrine, that is the chief ſcope of the words, ſome remarks may be made upon the young Man's Queſtion and Carriage, What muſt I do to inherit Eternal Life?

1. The opinion of gaining Eternal Life by the outward obſervation of the Law, will appear very unſatisfactory to an inquiſitive Conſcience. This Ruler affirm'd, and certainly did confidently believe, that he had fulfill'd the Law: All this have I obſerved from my youth; yet he had not any full ſatisfaction in his own Conſcience; his heart miſgave, and ſtarted upon ſome Sentiments in him, that ſomething elſe was requir'd, and what he had done might be too weak, too ſhort to ſhoot Heavens lock for him. And to that purpoſe he comes to Chriſt, to receive Inſtructions for the piecing up whatſoever was defective. Whoſoever will conſider the Nature of God, and the Relation of a Creature, cannot with reaſon think, that Eternal Life was of it ſelf due from God as a Recompence to Adam, had he perſiſted in a ſtate of Innocence: Who can think ſo great a Reward due, for having perform'd that, which a Creature in that Relation was oblig'd to do? Can any Man think another oblig'd to convey an Inheritance of 1000 l. per Annum upon his payment of a few Farthings, unleſs any compact appears to ſupport ſuch a conceit? And if it were not to be expected in the integrity of Nature, but only from the goodneſs of God, how can it be expected ſince the Revolt of Man, and the Univerſal Deluge of Natural Corruption? God owes nothing to the holieſt Creature; what he gives is a Preſent from his Bounty, not the Reward of the Creatures Merit. And the Apoſtle defies all Creatures from the greateſt to the leaſt, from the talleſt Angel to the loweſt Shrub, to bring out any one Creature that hath firſt given to God; * Who hath firſt given to him; And it ſhall be recompenced to him again? The Duty of the Creature, and God's gift of Eternal Life is not a Bargain and Sale.

Verſe 20.

* Rom. 11. 35.

God gives to the Creature, he doth not properly repay: For he that repays hath received ſomething of an equal value and worth before. When God crowns Angels and Men, he beſtows upon them purely what is his own, not what is theirs by Merit and Natural Obligation: Tho' indeed what God gives by virtue of a Promiſe made before, is upon the performance of the Condition due by gracious Obligation. God was not indebted to Man in Innocence, but every Man's Conſcience may now mind him, that he is not upon the ſame level as in the State of Integrity; And that he cannot expect any thing from God, as the Salary of his Merit, but the free gift of Divine Liberality. * Man is oblig'd to the practiſe of what is good, both from the Excellency of the Divine Precepts, and the Duty he owes to God, and cannot without ſome Declaration from God, hope for any other Reward, than than the ſatisfaction of having well acquitted himſelf.

2. 'Tis the Diſeaſe of Human Nature ſince its Corruption, to hope for Eternal Life by the tenor of the Covenant of Works.

Tho' this Ruler's Conſcience was not throughly ſatisfy'd with what he had done, but imagin'd he might for all that fall ſhort of Eternal Life, yet he ſtill hugs the imagination of obtaining it by doing, * What ſhall I do, that I may inherit Eternal Life? This is natural to corrupted Man: Cain thought to be accepted for the ſake of his Sacrifice; and when he found his miſtake, he was ſo weary of ſeeking Happineſs by doing, that he would court Miſery by Murdering. All Men ſet too high a value upon their own Services: Sinful Creatures would fain make God a Debtor to them, and be Purchaſers of Felicity; They would not have it conveyed to them by God's Soveraign Bounty, but by an Obligation of Juſtice upon the value of their Works. The Heathens thought God would treat Men according to the Merit of their Services, and 'tis no wonder they ſhould have this Sentiment, when the Jews educated by God in a wiſer School, were wedded to that Notion. The Phariſees were highly fond of it, it was the only Argument they uſed in Prayer, for Divine Bleſſing: You have one of them boaſting of his frequency in Faſting, and his exactneſs in paying his Tithes †; as if God had been beholding to him, and could not without manifeſt wrong deny him his Demand. And Paul confeſſeth it to be his own Sentiment before his Converſion, he accounted this Righteouſneſs of the Law gain to him ‖; he thought by this to make his Market with God. The whole Nation of the Jews affected it, * compaſſing Sea and Land to make out a Righteouſneſs of their own, as the Phariſees did to make Proſelytes.

Going about to eſtabliſh their own Righteouſneſs.

The Papiſts follow their ſteps, and diſpute for Juſtification by the Merit of Works, and find out another Key of Works of Supererogation, to unlock Heaven's Gate, than whatever the Scripture informed us of: 'Tis from hence alſo, that Men are ſo ready to make Faith as a Work, the cauſe of our Juſtification. Man fooliſhly thinks he hath enough to ſet up himſelf after he hath proved Bankrupt, and loſt all his Eſtate. This Imagination is born with us, and the beſt Chriſtians may find ſome Sparks of it in themſelves, when there are ſpringings up of Joy in their Hearts, upon the more cloſe performance of one Duty than of another, as if they had wiped off their ſcores, and given God a ſatisfaction for their former neglects. We have forſaken all and followed thee, was the boaſt of his Diſciples: What ſhall we have therefore? was a Branch of this Root *. Eternal Life is a gift not by any Obligation of Right, but an abundance of goodneſs; 'tis owing not to the dignity of our Works, but the magnificent Bounty of the Divine Nature, and muſt be ſued for by the Title of God's Promiſe, not by the Title of the Creatures Services. We may obſerve,

* Matth. 19.27.

3. How inſufficient are ſome Aſſents to Divine Truth, and ſome Expreſſions of Affection to Chriſt, without the Practice of Chriſtian Precepts. This Man addreſt to Chriſt with a profound Reſpect, acknowledging him more than an ordinary Perſon, with a more Reverential Carriage than we read any of his Diſciples paid to him in the days of his Fleſh: he fell down at his Feet, kiſt his Knees, as the Cuſtom was, when they would teſtifie the great Reſpect they had to any eminent Perſon, eſpecially to their Rabbins. All this ſome think to be included in the word γονυπλήσας; * He ſeems to acknowledge him the Meſſiah by giving him the Title of Good, a Title they did not give to their Doctors of the Chair; He breathes out his opinion, that he was able to inſtruct him beyond the ability of the Law; He came with a more than ordinary Affection to him, and expectation of advantage from him, evident by his departing ſad, when his Expectations were fruſtrated by his own perverſity; it was a ſign he had a high eſteem of him, from whom he could not part without marks of his Grief. What was the cauſe of his refuſing the inſtructions, he pretended ſuch an affection to receive? He had Poſſeſſions in the World. How ſoon do a few drops of worldly Advantages quench the firſt Sparks of an ill-grounded love to Chriſt? How vain is a complemental and cringing Devotion, without a ſupream preference of God, and valuation of Chriſt above every outward Allurement? We may obſerve this,

*Verſe 17. Lightfoot in loc.

4. We ſhould never admit any thing to be aſcrib'd to us, which is proper to God. Why calleſt thou me Good? There is none good but One, that is God. If you do not acknowledge me God, aſcribe not to me the Title of Good. It takes off all thoſe Titles which fawning Flatterers give to Men, Mighty, Invincible to Princes, Holineſs to the Pope. We call one another good, without conſidering how Evil; and Wiſe, without conſidering how Fooliſh; Mighty, without conſidering how Weak; and Knowing, without conſidering how Ignorant. No Man but hath more of Wickedneſs than Goodneſs; of Ignorance than Knowledge; of Weakneſs than Strength. God is a jealous God of his own Honour, he will not have the Creature ſhare with him in his Royal Titles. 'Tis a part of Idolatry to give Men the Titles which are due to God; a kind of a Worſhip of the Creature together with the Creator. Worms will not ſtand out, but aſſault Herod in his Purple, when he uſurps the Prerogative of God, and prove ſtiff and invincible Vindicators of their Creators Honour, when ſummoned to Arms by the Creator's Word *.

The Obſervation which I intend to proſecute is this:

Doctr.

Pure and Perfect Goodneſs is only the Royal Prerogative of God. Goodneſs is a choice Perfection of the Divine Nature.

This is the true and genuine Character of God; He is good, He is goodneſs, good in Himſelf, good in his Eſſence, good in the Higheſt Degree, poſſeſſing whatſoever is Comely, Excellent, Deſirable; the Higheſt Good, becauſe the Firſt Good; whatſoever is perfect Goodneſs, is GOD; whatſoever is truly goodneſs in any Creature, is a reſemblance of God *. All the Names of God are comprehended in this one of Good. All gifts, all variety of goodneſs, are contained in him as one common good. He is the efficient cauſe of all good, by an overflowing goodneſs of his Nature; He refers all things to Himſelf as the end, for the repreſentation of his own goodneſs; Truly God is good †. Certainly it is an undoubted Truth, 'tis written in his Works of Nature; and his Acts of Grace ‖, He is abundant in Goodneſs.

And every thing is a Memorial, not of ſome few Sparks, but of his greater goodneſs *. This is often celebrated in the Pſalms, and Men invited more than once, to ſing forth the Praiſes of it †. It may better be admired than ſufficiently ſpoken of, or thought of, as it Merits. 'Tis diſcover'd in all his Works, as the goodneſs of a Tree in all its Fruits; 'tis eaſie to be ſeen, and more pleaſant to be contemplated. In general,

† Pſal. 107. 8, 15, 21, 31.

1. All Nations in the World have acknowledged GOD Good, τὸ Ἀγαθὸν, was one of the Names the Platoniſts expreſt him by, and Good, and God are almoſt the ſame words in our Language. All as readily conſented in the Notion of his Goodneſs, as in that of his Deity. Whatſoever Diviſions or Diſputes there were among them in the other Perfections of God, they all agreed in this without diſpute, ſaith Syneſius *. One calls him Venus, in regard of his Lovelineſs †: Another calls him Ἔρωτα, Love, as being the Band which ties all things together. No Perfection of the Divine Nature is more eminently, nor more ſpeedily viſible in the whole Book of the Creation than this. His greatneſs ſhines not in any part of it, where is goodneſs doth not as glorioufly gliſter. Whatſoever is the Inſtrument of his Work, as his Power; Whatſoever is the orderer of his Work, as his Wiſdom; yet nothing can be ador'd as the Motive of his Work, but the goodneſs of his Nature. This only could induce him, to reſolve to Create: His Wiſdom then ſteps in, to diſpoſe the Methods of what hereſolved; And his Power follows to execute, what his Wiſdom hath diſpoſed, and his Goodneſs deſign'd. His Power in making, and his Wiſdom in ordering, are ſubſervient to his Goodneſs; and this Goodneſs, which is the end of the Creation, is as viſible to the Eyes of Men, as legible to the Underſtanding of Men, as his Power in forming them, and his Wiſdom in tuning them. And as the Book of Creation, ſo the Records of his Government muſt needs acquaint them with a great part of it, when they have often beheld him, ſtretching out his Hand, to ſupply the Indigent, relieve the Oppreſſed, and puniſh the Oppreſſors, and give them in their Diſtreſſes, what might fill their Hearts with Food and Gladneſs. ‖ Tis this the Apoſtle means by his Godhead, which he links with his Eternity and Power, as clearly ſeen in the things that are made, as in a pure Glaſs. For the inviſible things of him from the Creation of the World, are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his Eternal Power and Godhead. The Godhead which comprehends the whole Nature of God as diſcoverable to his Creatures, was not known, yea, was impoſſible to be known by the Works of Creation. There had been nothing then reſerv'd to be manifeſted in Chriſt. But his Goodneſs, which is properly meant there by his Godhead, was as clearly viſible as his Power. The Apoſtle upbraids them with their Unthankfulneſs, and argues their inexcuſableneſs, becauſe the Arm of his Power in Creation made no due impreſſions of fear upon their Spirits, nor the Beams of his Goodneſs wrought in them ſufficient Sentiments of Gratitude. Their not glorifying God, was a contempt of the former, and their not being thankful, was a ſlight of the latter. God is the Object of Honour, as he is powerful, and the Object of Thankfulneſs properly, as he is bountiful.

All the Idolatry of the Heathens, is a clear teſtimony of their common Sentiment of the Goodneſs of God: Since the more eminently uſeful any Perſon was in ſome advantagious Invention for the benefit of Mankind, they thought he merited a rank in the number of their Deities. The Italians eſteemed Pythagoras a God becauſe he was φιλανθρωπότατος *: To be Good and Uſeful, was an Approximation to the Divine Nature: Hence it was, that when the Lyſtrians ſaw a reſemblance of the Divine Goodneſs in the charitable and miraculous Cure of one of their cripled Citizens, preſently they miſtook Paul and Barnabas for Gods, and inferred from thence their right to Divine Worſhip, inquiring into nothing elſe but the viſible Character of their goodneſs and uſefulneſs, to capacitate them for the Honour of a Sacrifice †. Hence it was that they adored thoſe Creatures, that were a common Benefit, as the Sun, and Moon, which muſt be founded upon a præexiſtent Notion not only of the Being, but of the Bounty, and Goodneſs of God, which was naturally implanted in them, and legible in all God's Works. And the more beneficial any thing was to them, and the more ſenſible advantages they received from it, the higher ſtation they gave it in the rank of their Idols, and beſtowed upon it a more ſolemn Worſhip. An abſurd miſtake to think every thing that was ſenſibly good to them, to be God, cloathing himſelf in ſuch a form, to be adored by them. And upon this account the Egyptians worſhipped God under the figure of an Ox, and the Eaſt Indians in ſome parts of their Country Deifie a Heifer, intimating the Goodneſs of God as their Nouriſher and Preſerver, in giving them Corn, whereof the Ox is an inſtrument in ſerving for Plowing, and preparing the Ground.

2. The Notion of Goodneſs is inſeparable from the Notion of a God.

We cannot own the Exiſtence of God, but we muſt confeſs alſo the Goodneſs of his Nature. Hence the Apoſtle gives to his Goodneſs the Title of his Goodhead, as if Goodneſs and Godhead were convertible terms *. As it is indiſſolubly linkt with the Being of a Deity, ſo it cannot be ſever'd from the Notion of it: We as ſoon Undeifie him by denying him Good, as by denying him Great: Optimus, Maximus, the Beſt, Greateſt, was the name whereby the Romans entitled Him. His Nature is as Good, as it is Majeſtick; ſo doth the Pſalmiſt joyn them †. I will declare thy Greatneſs, they ſhall abundantly utter the memory of thy great Goodneſs. They conſidered his Goodneſs before his Greatneſs, in putting Optimus before Maximus; Greatneſs without Sweetneſs, is an unruly and affrighting Monſter in the World; like a vaſt turbulent Sea, always caſting out Mire, and Dirt. Goodneſs is the brightneſs and lovelineſs of our Majeſtical Creator. To fancy a God without it, is to fancy a miſerable, ſcanty, narrow-hearted ſavage God, and ſo an unlovely, and horrible Being: For he is not a God that is not Good, he is not a God that is not the higheſt Good: Infinite Goodneſs is more neceſſary to, and more ſtraitly joyned with an infinite Deity, than infinite Power, and infinite Wiſdom: We cannot conceive him God, unleſs we conceive him the higheſt Good, having nothing ſuperiour to Himſelf in Goodneſs, as he hath nothing Superiour to Himſelf, in Excellency and Perfection. No Man can poſſibly form a Notion of God in his Mind, and yet form a Notion of ſomething better than God: for whoever thinks any thing better than God, fancieth a God with ſome defect. By how much the better he thinks that thing to be, by ſo much the more imperfect he makes God in his Thoughts. This Notion of the Goodneſs of God was ſo natural, that ſome Philoſophers and others, being ſtartled at the Evil they ſaw in the World, fancy'd beſides a good God, an evil Principle, the Author of all Puniſhments in the World. This was ridiculous; for thoſe two muſt be of equal Power, or one inferiour to the other; If Equal, the Good could do nothing, but the Evil one would reſtrain him; and the Evil one could do nothing, but the Good one would contradict him: So they would be always contending and never conquering: If one were inferiour to the other, then there would be nothing but what that Superiour order'd. Good, if the Good one were Superiour, and nothing but Evil, if the Bad one were Superiour. In the proſecution of this let us ſee,

2. Some Propoſitions concerning the Nature of it.
3. That God is Good.
4. The manifeſtation of it, in Creation, Providence, and Redemption.
5. The Uſe.

1. What this Goodneſs is. There is a Goodneſs of Being, which is the natural perfection of a thing; There is the Goodneſs of Will, which is the Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of a Perſon: There is the Goodneſs of the Hand, which we call Liberality, or Beneficence, a doing good to others.

1. We mean not by this, the Goodneſs of his Eſſence, or the Perfection of his Nature. God is thus Good, becauſe his Nature is infinitely Perfect, He hath all things requiſite to the compleating of a moſt Perfect and Sovereign Being. All Good meets in his Eſſence, as all Water meets in the Ocean. Under this Notion all the Attributes of God, which are requiſite to ſo illuſtrious a Being, are comprehended. All things that are, have a goodneſs of Being in them, derived to them by the Power of God, as they are Creatures; ſo the Devil is good, as he is a Creature of God's making: He hath a natural goodneſs, but not a moral goodneſs: When he fell from God, he retain'd his natural goodneſs as a Creature; becauſe he did not ceaſe to be, he was not reduced to that nothing, from whence he was drawn; but he ceaſed to be morally good, being ſtript of his Righteouſneſs by his Apoſtacy; as a Creature he was God's Work, as a Creature he remains ſtill God's Work, and therefore as a Creature remains ſtill good, in regard of his created Being. The more of Being any thing hath, the more of this ſort of natural goodneſs it hath; and ſo the Devil hath more of this natural goodneſs than Men have; becauſe he hath more marks of the excellency of God upon him, in regard of the greatneſs of his Knowledge, and the extent of his power, the largeneſs of his capacity, and the acuteneſs of his underſtanding, which are natural Perfections belonging to the nature of an Angel; tho' he hath loſt his moral Perfections. God is ſovereignly and infinitely good in this ſort of Goodneſs. He is unſearchably perfect *, nothing is wanting to his Eſſence, that is neceſſary to the perfection of it; yet this is not that which the Scripture expreſſeth under the term of Goodneſs, but a Perfection of God's Nature as related to us, and which he poureth forth upon all his Creatures, as Goodneſs which flows from this Natural Perfection of the Deity.

* Job 11. 7.

2. Nor is it the ſame with the Bleſſedneſs of God, but ſomething flowing from his Bleſſedneſs. Were he not firſt infinitely Bleſſed, and Full in himſelf, he could not be infinitely Good and Diffuſive to us; had he not an infinite abundance in his own nature, he could not be overflowing to his Creatures.

Had not the Sun a fulneſs of Light in it ſelf, and the Sea a vaſtneſs of Water, the one could not enrich the World with its Beams, nor the other fill every Creek with its Waters.

3. Nor is it the ſame with the Holineſs of God. The Holineſs of God is the rectitude of his Nature, whereby he is Pure, and without Spot in himſelf. The Goodneſs of God is the efflux of his Will, whereby he is beneficial to his Creatures. The Holineſs of God is manifeſt in his rational Creatures; but the Goodneſs of God extends to all the Works of his Hands. His Holineſs beams moſt in his Law, his Goodneſs reacheth to every thing that had a Being from him *. The Lord is good to all. And tho' he be ſaid in the ſame Pſalm, verſe 17. to be holy in all his Works, 'tis to be underſtood of his Bounty, Bountiful in all his Works; the Hebrew word ſignifying both Holy and Liberal, and the Margent of the Bible reads it Merciful or Bountiful.

* Pſ. 145. 9

4. Nor is this Goodneſs of God the ſame with the Mercy of God. Goodneſs extends to more Objects than Mercy; Goodneſs ſtretcheth it ſelf out to all the Works of his Hands; Mercy extends only to a miſerable Object; for it is joyn'd with a ſentiment of pity, occaſion'd by the calamity of another. The Mercy of God is exerciſed about thoſe that merit Puniſhment; the Goodneſs of God is exerciſed upon Objects that have not merited any thing contrary to the acts of his Bounty. Creation is an act of Goodneſs, not of Mercy; Providence in governing ſome part of the World, is an act of Goodneſs, not of Mercy *. The Heavens, ſaith Auſtin, need the Goodneſs of God to govern them, but not the Mercy of God to relieve rhem: The Earth is full of the Miſery of Man, and the Compaſſions of God; but the Heavens need not the Mercy of God to pity them, becauſe they are not miſerable; tho' they need the Goodneſs and Power of God to ſuſtain them; becauſe as Creatures they are impotent without him. God's Goodneſs extends to the Angels, that kept their ſtanding, and to Man in Innocence, who in that ſtate ſtood not in need of Mercy. Goodneſs and Mercy are diſtinct, tho' Mercy be a Branch of Goodneſs; there may be a manifeſtation of Goodneſs, tho' none of Mercy. Some think Chriſt had been incarnate, had not Man fallen: Had it been ſo, there had been a manifeſtation of Goodneſs to our Nature, but not of Mercy; becauſe Sin had not made our Natures miſerable. The Devils are Monuments of God's creating Goodneſs, but not of his pardoning Compaſſions. The Grace of God reſpects the rational Creature, Mercy the miſerable Creature, Goodneſs all his Creatures, Brutes, and the ſenſleſs Plants, as well as reaſonable Man.

* Lombard, lib. 4. diſt. 46. p. 286.

5. By Goodneſs is meant the Bounty of God. This is the notion of Goodneſs in the World; when we ſay a good Man, we mean either a holy Man in his life, or a charitable and liberal Man in the management of his Goods. A righteous Man, and a good Man are diſtinguiſh'd *: For ſcarcely for a righteous Man will one die; yet for a good Man one would even dare to die. For an innocent Man, one as innocent of the Crime as Himſelf would ſcarce venture his Life; but for a good Man, a liberal tender-hearted Man, that had been a common Good in the place where he liv'd, or had done another as great a benefit as life it ſelf amounts to, a Man out of gratitude might dare to die. The Goodneſs of God is his inclination to deal well and bountifully with his Creatures †. 'Tis that whereby he wills, there ſhould be ſomething beſides Himſelf for his own Glory. God is good in Himſelf, and to Himſelf, i. e. highly amiable to Himſelf: and therefore ſome define it a Perfection of God, whereby he loves himſelf and his own Excellency; but as it ſtands in relation to his Creatures, 'tis that Perfection of God, whereby he delights in his Works, and is beneficial to them. God is the higheſt Goodneſs, becauſe he doth not act for his own profit, but for his Creatures welfare, and the manifeſtation of his own Goodneſs. He ſends out his Beams, without receiving any addition to himſelf, or ſubſtantial advantage from his Creatures. 'Tis from this Perfection that he loves whatſoever is good, and that is, whatſoever he hath made, for every Creature of God is good ‖; every Creature hath ſome Communications from him, which cannot be without ſome Affection to them; every Creature hath a Footſtep of Divine Goodneſs upon it; God therefore loves that Goodneſs in the Creature, elſe he would not love himſelf. * God hates no Creature, no, not the Devils and Damn'd, as Creatures; he is not an Enemy to them, as they are the Works of his hands: He is properly an Enemy, that doth ſimply and abſolutely wiſh Evil to another; but God doth not abſolutely wiſh Evil to the Damned; that Juſtice that inflicts upon them the deſerved Puniſhment of their Sin, is part of his Goodneſs, (as ſhall afterward be ſhewn.)

This is the moſt pleaſant Perfection of the Divine Nature; His Creating Power amazes us, His Conducting Wiſdom aſtoniſheth us, His Goodneſs, as furniſhing us with all Conveniencies, delights us, and renders both his amazing Power and aſtoniſhing Wiſdom delightful to us.

As the Sun, by effecting things, is an Emblem of God's Power, by diſcovering things to us, is an Emblem of his Wiſdom, but by refreſhing and comforting us, is an Emblem of his Goodneſs; and without this refreſhing Virtue it communicates to us, we ſhould take no pleaſure in the Creatures it produceth, nor in the Beauties it diſcovers. As God is Great and Powerful, he is the Object of our Underſtanding; but as Good and Bountiful, he is the Object of our Love and Deſire.

6. The Goodneſs of God comprehends all his Attributes. All the Acts of God are nothing elſe but the Effluxes of his Goodneſs, diſtinguiſh'd by ſeveral names, according to the Objects it is exerciſed about. As the Sea, tho' it be one maſs of Water, yet we diſtinguiſh it by ſeveral Names, according to the Shores it waſheth, and beats upon, as the Britiſh and German Ocean, tho' all be one Sea. When Moſes long'd to ſee his Glory, God tells him, he would give him a proſpect of his Goodneſs; * I will make all my goodneſs to paſs before thee. His Goodneſs is his Glory and Godhead, as much as is delightfully viſible to his Creatures, and whereby he doth benefit Man; I will cauſe my Goodneſs, or Comelineſs, as Calvin renders it, to paſs before thee; What is this, but the Train of all his lovely Perfections ſpringing from his Goodneſs? † The whole Catalogue of Mercy, Grace, Long-ſuffering, abundance of Truth, ſummed up in this one word. All are Streams from this Fountain; he could be none of this, were he not firſt Good. When it confers Happineſs without Merit, 'tis Grace; when it beſtows Happineſs againſt Merit, 'tis Mercy; when he bears with provoking Rebels, it's long-ſuffering; when he performs his Promiſe, 'tis Truth; when it meets with a Perſon to whom it is not oblig'd, 'tis Grace; when he meets with a Perſon in the World to which he hath oblig'd himſelf by Promiſe, 'tis Truth ‖; when it commiſerates a Diſtreſſed Perſon, 'tis Pity; when it ſupplies an Indigent Perſon, 'tis Bounty; when it ſuccours an Innocent Perſon, 'tis Righteouſneſs; and when it pardons a Penitent Perſon, 'tis Mercy; all ſumm'd up in this one name of Goodneſs: And the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth the ſame Sentiment in the ſame words: * They ſhall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodneſs, and ſhall ſing of thy righteouſneſs. The Lord is gracious and full of compaſſion, ſlow to anger, and of great mercy: the Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. He is firſt Good, and then Compaſſionate. Righteouſneſs is often in Scripture taken, not for Juſtice, but Charitableneſs: This Attribute, ſaith one, † is ſo full of God, that it doth Deifie all the reſt, and verifie the Adorableneſs of him. His Wiſdom might contrive againſt us, his Power bear too hard upon us; one might be too hard for an Ignorant, and the other too mighty for an Impotent Creature; his holineſs would ſcare an impure and guilty Creature, but his goodneſs conducts them all for us, and makes them all amiable to us; Whatever Comelineſs they have in the eye of a Creature, whatever Comfort they afford to the Heart of a Creature, we are oblig'd for all to his Goodneſs. This puts all the reſt upon a delightful Exerciſe, this makes his Wiſdom deſign for us, and this makes his Power to act for us: This vails his Holineſs from affrighting us, and this ſpirits his Mercy to relieve us: ‖ All his acts towards Man, are but the Workmanſhip of this. What mov'd him at firſt to create the World out of nothing, and erect ſo noble a Creature as Man, endow'd with ſuch excellent gifts; was it not his goodneſs? What made him ſeparate his Son to be a Sacrifice for us, after we had endeavour'd to raze out the firſt marks of his favour; was it not a ſtrong bubbling of goodneſs? What moves him to reduce a fallen Creature to the due ſenſe of his Duty, and at laſt bring him to an Eternal Felicity; is it not only his goodneſs? This is the Captain Attribute that leads the reſt to act. This attends them, and ſpirits them in all his ways of acting. This is the Compliment and Perfection of all his Works; had it not been for this, which ſet all the reſt on work, nothing of his Wonders had been ſeen in Creation, nothing of his Compaſſions had been ſeen in Redemption. The Second thing is ſome Propoſitions to explain the Nature of this Goodneſs.

1. He is good by his own Eſſence. God is not only good in his Eſſence, but good by his Eſſence: The Eſſence of every created thing is good, ſo the unerring God pronounc'd every thing which he had made *. The Eſſence of the worſt Creatures, yea, of the impure and ſavage Devils, is good; but they are not good per eſſentiam, for then they could not be bad, malicious and oppreſſive. God is good as he is God, and therefore good by himſelf, and from himſelf, not by participation from another; He made every thing good, but none made him good: Since his Goodneſs was not receiv'd from another, he is good by his own Nature. He could not receive it from the things he Created, they are later than he: Since they receiv'd all from him, they could beſtow nothing on him, and no God preceded him, in whoſe Inheritance and Treaſures of Goodneſs he could be a Succeſſor: He is abſolutely his own Goodneſs, he needed none to make him good; but all things needed him, to be good by him. Creatures are good, by being made ſo by him, and cleaving to him: He is good without cleaving to any Goodneſs without him; Goodneſs is not a Quality in him, but a Nature †, not a Habit added to his Eſſence, but his Eſſence it ſelf; He is not firſt God, and then afterwards good, but he is good as he is God, his Eſſence being one and the ſame, is formally and equally God and good. Αυτάγαθον, good of himſelf, was one of the Names the Platoniſts gave him. He is eſſentially good in his own Nature, and not by any outward action which follows his Eſſence. He is an Independent Being, and hath nothing of goodneſs or happineſs from any thing without him, or any thing he doth act about. If he were not good by his Eſſence, he could not be eternally good, he could not be the firſt good, he would have ſomething before him, from whence he derived that Goodneſs wherewith he is poſſeſſed; Nor could he be perfectly good, for he could not be equally good to that, from whom he derived his goodneſs: No Star, no ſplendid Body that derives light from the Sun, doth equal that Sun by which it's enlightned.

Hence his Goodneſs muſt be infinite, and circumſcrib'd by no limits: The exerciſe of his Goodneſs may be limited by himſelf, but his Goodneſs the Principle, cannot; For ſince his Eſſence is Infinite, and his Goodneſs is not diſtinguiſh'd from his Eſſence, 'tis Infinite alſo; if it were limited, it were Finite; he cannot be bounded by any thing without him; if ſo, then he were not God, becauſe he would have ſomething ſuperiour to him, to put bars in his way; way; if there were any thing to fix him, it muſt be a good or evil Being; Good it cannot be, for it is the property of goodneſs to encourage goodneſs, not to bound it; Evil it cannot be, for then it would extinguiſh Goodneſs, as well as limit it; it would not be content with the circumſcribing it, without deſtroying it; for it is the nature of every Contrary to endeavour the deſtruction of its Oppoſite. He is eſſentially good by his own Eſſence, therefore good of himſelf, therefore eternally good, and therefore abundantly good.

2. God is the prime and chief Goodneſs. Being good per ſe, and by his own Eſſence, he muſt needs be the chief Goodneſs, in whom there can be nothing but good, from whom there can proceed nothing but good, to whom all good whatſoever muſt be referr'd as the final cauſe of all good. As he is the chief Being, ſo he is the chief Good. And as we riſe by ſteps from the Exiſtence of Created things, to acknowledge one Supream Being, which is God, ſo we mount by ſteps from the Conſideration of the goodneſs of Created things, to acknowledge one Infinite Ocean of Sovereign Goodneſs, whence the Streams of Created Goodneſs are deriv'd. When we behold things that partake of Goodneſs from another, we muſt acquieſce in one that hath Goodneſs by participation from no other, but originally from himſelf, and therefore ſupreamly in himſelf above all other things. So that as nothing greater and more Majeſtick can be imagin'd, ſo alſo nothing Better and more Excellent can be conceiv'd than God. Nothing can add to him, or make him better than he is, nothing can detract from him, to make him worſe, nothing can be added to him, nothing can be ſever'd from him; no Created Good can render him more Excellent; no Evil from any Creature, can render him leſs Excellent. Our goodneſs extends not to him; Wickedneſs may hurt a Man, as we are, and our Righteouſneſs may profit the Son of Man; but if we be Righteous, what give we to him, or what receives he at our hands? † As he hath no Superior in place above him, ſo being chief of all, he cannot be made better by any Inferior to him. How can he be made better by any, that hath from himſelf all that he hath? The goodneſs of a Creature may be chang'd, but the goodneſs of the Creator is immutable; He is always like himſelf, ſo Good that he cannot be Evil, as he is ſo Bleſſed, that he cannot be Miſerable.

† Job 35. 7, 8.

Nothing is good but God, becauſe nothing is of it ſelf but God: As all things being from nothing are nothing in compariſon of God, ſo all things being from nothing, are ſcanty and evil in compariſon of God. If any thing had been ex Deo, God being the Matter of it, it had been as good as God is; but ſince the Principle whence all things were drawn, was nothing, tho' the Efficient Cauſe by which they were extracted from nothing was God, they are as nothing in goodneſs, and not eſtimable in compariſon of God. Whom have I in Heaven but thee, &c. God is all good, every Creature hath a diſtinct variety of goodneſs. God diſtinctly pronounc'd every days work in the Creation good. Food communicates the goodneſs of its Nouriſhing Vertue to our Bodies, Flowers the goodneſs of their Odors to our Smell, every Creature a goodneſs of Comlineſs to our Sight; Plants the goodneſs of Healing Qualities for our Cure. And all derive from themſelves a goodneſs of Knowledge, objectively to our Underſtandings. The Sun by one ſort of goodneſs warms us, Metals enrich us, living Creatures ſuſtain us, and delight us by another; All thoſe have diſtinct kinds of Goodneſs, which are eminently ſummed up in God, and are all but parts of his Immenſe Goodneſs. 'Tis he that enlightens us by his Sun, nouriſheth us by Bread. † 'Tis not by Bread alone that we live, but by the Word of God. 'Tis all but his own Supream Goodneſs, convey'd to us thro' thoſe varieties of Conduit-pipes. God is all Good, other things are good in their kind, as a good Man, a good Angel, a good Tree, a good Plant; but God hath a Good of all kinds eminently in his Nature. He is no leſs All-good, than he is Almighty, and All-knowing: As the Sun contains in it all the light, and more light than is in all the cleareſt Bodies in the World; ſo doth God contain in himſelf all the Good, and more Good than is in the richeſt Creatures. Nothing is good, but as it reſembles him; as nothing is hot, but as it reſembles Fire, the prime Subject of heat.

* Pſ. 73. 25

† Mat. 4. 4.

God is Omnipotent, therefore no Good can be wanting to him. If he were deſtitute of any which he could not have, he were not Almighty: He is ſo good that there is no mixture of any thing, which can be call'd not good in him; every thing beſides him wants ſome good, which others have. Nothing can be ſo Evil as God is Good. There can be no evil but there is ſome mixture of good with it. No Nature ſo evil, but there is ſome ſpark of goodneſs in it: But God is a Good which hath no taint of Evil; nothing can be ſo Supream an Evil, as God is Supream Goodneſs.

He is only good without capacity of Encreaſe: He is all good, and unmixedly good; none good but God. A goodneſs like the Sun, that hath all Light, and no Darkneſs. That is the ſecond thing, He is the ſupream and chief goodneſs.

3. This Goodneſs is Communicative. None ſo communicatively good as God. As the Notion of God includes Goodneſs, ſo the Notion of Goodneſs includes Diffuſiveneſs; without Goodneſs he would ceaſe to be a Deity, and without Diffuſiveneſs he would ceaſe to be good. The being Good is neceſſary to the being God: for Goodneſs is nothing elſe in the Notion of it, but a ſtrong inclination to do good; either to find, or make an Object, wherein to exerciſe it ſelf, according to the Propenſion of its own Nature; and it is an Inclination of Communicating it ſelf, not for its own intereſt, but the good of the Object it pitcheth upon. Thus God is good by Nature, and his Nature is not without activity, he acts conveniently to his own Nature. Thou art good, and doſt good. And nothing accrews to him by the Communications of himſelf to others, ſince his Bleſſedneſs was as great before the frame of any Creature, as ever it was ſince the erecting of the World; ſo that the Goodneſs of Chriſt himſelf encreaſeth not the luſtre of his Happineſs: † My goodneſs extends not to thee. He is not of a niggardly and envious Nature; He is too rich to have any cauſe to envy, and too good to have any will to envy. He is as liberal as he is rich, according to the capacity of the Object about which his Goodneſs is exercis'd. The Divine Goodneſs being the Supream Goodneſs, is Goodneſs in the higheſt degree of Activity; not an idle, enclos'd, pent up Goodneſs, as a Spring ſhut up, or a Fountain ſealed, bubbling up within it ſelf, but bubbling out of it ſelf. A Fountain of Gardens to water every part of his Creation; He is an Ointment poured forth ‖: Nothing ſpreads it ſelf more than Oyl, and takes up a larger ſpace, whereſoever it drops. It may be no leſs ſaid of the Goodneſs of God, as it is of the Fulneſs of Chriſt, * He fills all in all: He fills Rational Creatures with Underſtanding, Senſitive Nature with Vigor and Motion, the whole World with Beauty and Sweetneſs. Every Taſte, every Touch of a Creature is a Taſte and Touch of Divine Goodneſs. Divine Goodneſs offers it ſelf in one ſpark in this Creature, in another ſpark in the other Creature, and altogether make up a good-a goodneſs inconceivable by any Creature. The whole Maſs and extracted Spirit of it is infinitely ſhort of the Goodneſs of the Divine Nature, imperfect ſhadows of that Goodneſs which is in himſelf.

Indeed, The more excellent any thing is, the more nobly it acts; How remotely doth Light, that excellent brightneſs of the Creation, diſperſe it ſelf? How doth that glorious Creature, which God hath ſet in the Heavens, ſpread its Wings over Heaven and Earth, roll it ſelf about the World, caſt its Beams upward and downward, inſinuate into all Corners, pierce the Depths, and ſhoot up its Rays into the Heights, encircle the higher and lower Creatures in its Arms, reach out its Communications to influence every thing under the Earth, as well as dart its Beams of Light and Heat on things above, or upon the Earth? Nothing is hid from it; * not from its Power, nor from its Sweetneſs. How communicative alſo is Water, a neceſſary and excellent Creature? How active is it in a River, to nouriſh the living Creatures engendred in its Womb? Refreſheth every Shore it runs by, promotes the propagation of Fruits for the Nouriſhment, and beſtows a Verdure upon the Ground for the delight of Man; and where it cannot reach the higher Ground in its Subſtance, it doth by its Vapours mounted up, and concocted by the Sun, and gently diſtilled upon the Earth, for the opening its Womb to bring forth its Fruits. † God is more prone to communicate himſelf, than the Sun to ſpread its Wings, or the Earth to mount up its Fruits, or the Water to multiply living Creatures. Goodneſs is his Nature. Hence were there internal Communications of himſelf from Eternity; Diffuſions of himſelf without himſelf in time, in the Creation of the World, like a full Veſſel running over. He created the World that he might impart his Goodneſs to ſomething without him, and diffuſe larger meaſures of his Goodneſs, after he had laid the firſt Foundation of it in its Being: And therefore he created ſeveral ſorts of Creatures, that they might be capable of various, and diſtinct meaſures of his Liberality, according to the diſtinct Capacities of their Nature; but imparted moſt to the Rational Creature, becauſe that is only capable of an Underſtanding to know him, and Will to embrace him. He is the higheſt Goodneſs, and therefore a communicative Goodneſs, and acts excellently according to his Nature.

* Pſ. 19. 6.

† Tom. 2. p. 926.

4. God is neceſſarily Good. None is neceſſarily Good but God; he is as neceſſarily Good, as he is neceſſarily God. His goodneſs is as inſeparable from his Nature as his Holineſs. He is good by Nature, not only by Will; as he is Holy by Nature not not only by Will; he is good in his Nature, and good in his Actions; and as he cannot be bad in his Nature, ſo he cannot be bad in his Communications: He can no more act contrary to this Goodneſs in any of his Actions, than he can un-God himſelf. 'Tis not neceſſary that God ſhould create a World; he was at his own choice whether he would create or no: But when he reſolves to make a World, 'tis neceſſary that he ſhould make it good, becauſe he is goodneſs it ſelf, and cannot act againſt his own Nature. He could not create any thing without goodneſs in the very act: The very act of Creation, or Communicating being to any thing without himſelf, is in it ſelf an act of Goodneſs, as well as an act of Power: Had he not been good in himſelf, nothing could have been endued with any goodneſs by him. In the act of giving Being, he is Liberal, the Being he beſtows is a diſplaying his own Liberality: He could not confer what he needs not, and which could not be deſerved, without being Bountiful. Since what was nothing, could not merit to be brought into Being, the very act of giving to nothing a Being, was an act of choice Goodneſs.

He could not create any thing without Goodneſs as the Motive, and the neceſſary Motive: His Goodneſs could not neceſſitate him to make the World, but his Goodneſs could only move him to reſolve to make a World; He was not bound to erect and faſhion it becauſe of his Goodneſs, but he could not frame it without his Goodneſs as the moving Cauſe. He could not create any thing, but he muſt create it Good. It had been inconſiſtent with the Supream Goodneſs of his Nature, to have created only Murderous, Ravenous, Injurious Creatures: To have created a Bedlam rather than a World. A meer heap of Confuſion would have been as inconſiſtent with his Divine Goodneſs, as with his Divine Wiſdom.

Again, When his Goodneſs had moved him to make a Creature, his Goodneſs would neceſſarily move him to be beneficial to his Creature; not that this neceſſity reſults from any Merit in the Creature which he had framed; but from the Excellency and Diffuſiveneſs of his own Nature, and his own Glory, the end for which he form'd it, which would have been obſcure, yea, nothing, without ſome degrees of his Bounty. What occaſion of Acknowledgments and Praiſe could the Creature have for its Being, if God had given him only a miſerable Being, while it was innocent in action: The Goodneſs of God would not ſuffer him to make a Creature, without providing Conveniencies for it, ſo long as he thought good to maintain its Being, and furniſhing it with that which was neceſſary to anſwer that End for which he created it; And his own Nature would not ſuffer him to be unkind to his Rational Creature, while it was innocent. It had been Injuſtice to inflict Evil upon the Creature, that had not offended, and had no relation to an offending Creature; The Nature of God could not have brought forth ſuch an act. * And therefore ſome ſay, That God, after he had created Man, could not preſently annihilate him, and take away his Life and Being. As a Soveraign he might do it, as Almighty he was able to do it, as well as create him; but in regard of his Goodneſs, he could not Morally do it: For had he annihilated Man as ſoon as ever he had made him, he had not made Man for himſelf, and for his own Glory; to be loved, worſhipped, ſought, and acknowledged by him: He would not then have been the End of Man; He had created him in vain, and the World in vain, which he aſſures he did not †. And certainly, if the gifts of God be without Repentance, Man could not have been annihilated after his Creation without Repentance in God, without any Cauſe, had not Sin entred into the World. If God did not ſay to Man, after Sin had made its entrance into the World, Seek ye me in vain; he could not, becauſe of his Goodneſs, have ſaid ſo to Man in his Innocence. As God is neceſſarily Mind, ſo he is neceſſarily Will; as he is neceſſarily Knowing, ſo he is neceſſarily Loving. He could not be Bleſſed, if he did not know Himſelf, and his own Perfection: Nor Good, if he did not delight in Himſelf, and his own Perfections. And this Goodneſs whereby he delights in Himſelf, is the ſource of his delight in his Creatures, wherein he ſees the footſteps of Himſelf. If he loves Himſelf, he cannot but love the Reſemblance of Himſelf, and the Image of his own Goodneſs. He loves Himſelf, becauſe he is the higheſt Goodneſs and Excellency, and loves every thing as it reſembles Himſelf, becauſe it is an efflux of his own Goodneſs: And as he doth neceſſarily love Himſelf, and his own Excellency, ſo ſo he doth neceſſarily love any thing that reſembles that Excellency, which is the Primary Object of his Eſteem. But,

* Coccei ſum Theo- log. p. 91.

† Iſai. 45. 18, 19.

5. Tho' he be neceſſarily Good, yet he is alſo freely Good. The neceſſity of the Goodneſs of his Nature hinders not the liberty of his Actions: The matter of his acting is not at all neceſſary, but the manner of his acting in a good and bountiful way, is neceſſary, as well as free *. He created the World and Man freely, becauſe he might chooſe whether he would create it, but he created them good neceſſarily, becauſe he was firſt neceſſarily good in his Nature, before he was freely a Creator. When he created Man, he freely gave him a poſitive Law, but neceſſarily a Wiſe and Righteous Law; becauſe he was neceſſarily Wiſe and Righteous, before he was freely a Lawgiver. When he makes a Promiſe, he freely lets the Word go out of his Lips, but when he hath made it, he is neceſſarily a faithful Performer; becauſe he was neceſſarily True and Righteous in his Nature, before he was freely a Promiſer. God is neceſſarily good in his Nature, but free in his Communications of it: To make him neceſſarily to communicate his Goodneſs in the firſt Creation of the Creature, would render him but Impotent, good without liberty and without will: If the Communications of it be not free, the Eternity of the World muſt neceſſarily be concluded, which ſome anciently aſſerted from the Naturalneſs of God's Goodneſs, making the World flow from God as Light from the Sun.

* Gilbert. de Dei Domine, p. 6.

God indeed is neceſſarily good Affectivè, in regard of his Nature; but freely good Effectivè, in regard of the Effluxes of it to this or that particular Subject he pitcheth on. He is not neceſſarily Communicative of his Goodneſs as the Sun of his Light, or a Tree of its cooling Shade, that chooſeth not its Objects, but enlightens all indifferently, without any variation or diſtinction: This were to make God of no more Underſtanding than the Sun, to ſhine not where it pleaſeth, but where it muſt. He is an underſtanding Agent, and hath a Soveraign Right to chooſe his own Subjects. It would not be a Supream Goodneſs, if it were not a voluntary Goodneſs. 'Tis agreeable to the Nature of the higheſt Good, to be abſolutely free, to diſpenſe his Goodneſs in what methods and meaſures he pleaſeth, according to the free Determinations of his own Will, guided by the Wiſdom of his Mind, and regulated by the Holineſs of his Nature. He is not to give an account of any of his matters *. He will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and he will have compaſſion on whom he will have compaſſion †. And he will be good to whom he will be good: When he doth act, he cannot but act well, ſo it's neceſſary; yet he may act this good, or that good, to this or that degree, ſo it is free. As it is the Perfection of his Nature, 'tis neceſſary; as 'tis the communication of his Bounty, 'tis voluntary. The Eye cannot but ſee if it be open, yet it may glance upon this or that colour, fix upon this or that object, as it is conducted by the Will. God neceſſarily loves Himſelf, becauſe he is good, yet not by conſtraint, but freedom; becauſe his affection to himſelf is from a knowledge of Himſelf: He neceſſarily loves his own Image; becauſe 'tis his Image, yet freely, becauſe not blindly, but from motions of Underſtanding and Will. What neceſſity could there be upon him, to reſolve to communicate his Goodneſs? It could not be to make Himſelf better by it; for he had a Goodneſs uncapable of any addition: He confers a goodneſs on his Creatures, but reaps not a Harveſt of goodneſs to his own Eſſence from his Creatures. What Obligation could there be from the Creature, to confer a goodneſs on him to this or that degree, for this or that duration? If he had not created a Man, nor Angel, he had done them no wrong. If he had given them only a ſimple Being, he had manifeſted a part of his Goodneſs, without giving them a right to challenge any more of him. If he had taken away their Beings after a time when he had anſwered his End, he had done them no Injury: For what Law oblig'd him to enrich them, and leave them in that Being wherein he had inveſted them, but his ſole Goodneſs? Whatever ſparks of goodneſs any Creature hath, are the free effuſions of God's Bounty, the Offſpring of his own Inclination to do well, the ſimple favour of the Donor; not purchaſed, not merited by the Creature. God is as unconſtrained in his Liberty in all his Communications, as Infinite in his Goodneſs, the Fountain of them.

* Job 33. 13.

† Rom. 9. 15.

6. This Goodneſs is Communicative with the greateſt Pleaſure. Moſes deſired to ſee his Glory, God aſſures him, he ſhould ſee his Goodneſs *, intimating that his Goodneſs is his Glory, and his Glory his Delight alſo. He ſends not forth his Bleſſings with an ill Will; He doth not ſtay till they are ſqueez'd from him; He prevents Men with his Bleſſings of Goodneſs †; He is moſt delighted, when he is moſt diffuſive, and his pleaſure in beſtowing, is larger than his Creatures in poſſeſſing; He is not covetous of his own Treaſures; He lays up his Goodneſs in order to laying it out with a complacency wholly Divine. The jealouſie Princes have of their Subjects, makes them ſparing of their Gifts, for fear of giving them Materials for Rebellion. God's foreſight of the ill uſe Men would make of his Benefits, dampt him not in beſtowing his Largeſſes. He is uncapable of Envy: His own Happineſs can no more be diminiſh'd, than it can be encreaſed. None can over-top him in goodneſs, becauſe nothing hath any Good, but what is derived from him; his Gifts are without Repentance: Sorrow hath no footing in him, who is infinitely Happy, as well as infinitely Good. Goodneſs and Envy are inconſiſtent. How unjuſtly then did the Devil accuſe God? What God gives out of Goodneſs, he gives with joy and gladneſs. He did not only Will what we ſhould be, but rejoyce that he had brought us into Being. He rejoyced in his Works ‖. And his Wiſdom ſtood by him, delighting in the habitable parts of the Earth *. He beheld the World after its Creation with a Complacency, and ſtill governs it with the ſame pleaſure wherewith he reviewed it. Infinite Chearfulneſs attends Infinite Goodneſs. He would not give, if he had not a pleaſure that others ſhould enjoy his Goodneſs; Since he is better than any thing, and more Communicative than any thing; He is more joyful in giving out, than the Sun can be to run its Race in pouring forth Light. He is ſaid only to repent and grieve, when Men anſwer not the Obligations and Ends of his Goodneſs; which would be their own Felicity as well as his Glory. Though he doth not force greater degrees of his Goodneſs upon thoſe that neglect it, yet he denies them not to thoſe that ſollicite him for it. 'Tis always greatet pleaſure to him to impart upon the importunities of the Creatures, than it is to a Mother to reach out her Breaſt to her crying and longing Infant. He is not wearied by the ſollicitations of Men, he is pleaſed with their Prayers; becauſe he is pleaſed with the imparting of his own Goodneſs. He ſeems to be in travel with it, longing to be delivered of it into the lap of his Creature. He is as much delighted with Petitions for his Liberality in beſtowing his beſt Goodneſs, as Princes are weary of the craving of their Subjects. None can be ſo deſirous to ſqueeze thoſe that are under them, as God is delighted to enlarge his hand towards them. 'Tis the nature of his Goodneſs to be glad of Mens ſollicitations for it: becauſe they are ſignificant valuations of it, and therefore fit occaſions for him to beſtow it. Since he doth not delight in the unhappineſs of any of his Creatures, he certainly delights in what may conduce unto their Felicity. He doth with the ſame delight multiply the effects of his Goodneſs, where his Wiſdom ſees it convenient, as he beheld the Firſt-fruits of his Goodneſs, with a complacency upon the laying the Top-ſtone of the Creation.

* Prov. 8. 31.

7. The diſplaying of this Goodneſs was the Motive and End of all his Works of Creation and Providence *. God being infinitely Wiſe, could not act without the higheſt Reaſon, and for the higheſt End: The reaſon that induced him to create, muſt be of as great an Eminency as Himſelf: The Motive could not be taken from without him, becauſe there was nothing but Himſelf in Being: It muſt be taken therefore from within Himſelf, and from ſome one of thoſe moſt Excellent Perfections whereby we conceive Him. But upon the exact Conſideration of all of them, none can ſeem to challenge that Honour of being the Motive of them, to reſolve the ſetting forth any Work but his own Goodneſs; This being the firſt thing manifeſt in his Creation, ſeems to be the firſt thing moving him to a Reſolution to Create; Wiſdom may be conſidered as directing; Power conſidered as Acting; but it is natural to reflect upon Goodneſs as moving the one to Direct, the other to Act: Power was the Principle of his Action, Wiſdom the Rule of his Action: Goodneſs the Motive of his Action: Principle and Rule are awakened by the Motive, and ſubſervient to the End. That which is the moſt amiable Perfection in the Divine Nature, and that which he firſt took notice of as the Foot-ſteps of them in the diſtinct view of every days Work, and the general view of the whole Frame, ſeems to claim the beſt right to be entitled the Motive and End of his Creation of Things.

* Amyral. Moral. Tom. 1. *p.*260.

God could have no End but Himſelf, becauſe there was nothing beſides Himſelf. Again, The end of every Agent is that which he eſteems good, and the beſt good for that kind of Action. Since nothing is to be eſteemed good but God, nothing can be the ultimate End of God but Himſelf and his own Goodneſs: What a Man wills chiefly, is his End; but God cannot will any other thing but Himſelf as his End, becauſe there is nothing Superiour to Himſelf in Goodneſs. He cannot will any thing, that ſupreamly ſerves Himſelf and his own Goodneſs as his End: for if he did, that which he wills, muſt be Superiour to Himſelf in Goodneſs, and then he is not God; or Inferiour to them in Goodneſs, and then he would not be Righteous, in willing that which is a lower Good before a higher. God cannot will any thing as his End of acting but Himſelf, without undeifying Himſelf. God's Will being Infinitely Good, cannot move for any thing but what is Infinitely Good; and therefore whatſoever God made, he made for Himſelf, * that whatſoever he made might bear a badge of this Perfection upon it, and be a diſcovery of his wonderful Goodneſs: For the making things for Himſelf doth not ſignifie any Indigence in God, that he made any thing to encreaſe his Excellency (for that is capable of no addition) but to manifeſt his Excellency. God poſſeſſing every thing eminently in Himſelf, did not create the World for any need he had of it; Finite things were unable to make any acceſſion to that which is Infinite. Man indeed builds a Houſe to be a ſhelter to him againſt wind and weather, and makes Clothes to ſecure him from cold, and plants Gardens for his recreation and health. God is above all thoſe little helps: he did not make the World for Himſelf in ſuch a kind, but for Himſelf, i. e. the manifeſtation of Himſelf, and the riches of his Nature. Not to make Himſelf bleſſed, but to diſcover his own bleſſedneſs to his Creatures, and communicate ſomething of it to them. He did not garniſh the World with ſo much Bounty, that he might live more happily than he did before; but that his rational Creatures might have fit Conveniencies. As the end for which God demands the performance of our Duty, is not for his own advantage, but for our good; † ſo the end why he conferr'd upon us the excellency of ſuch a Being, was for our good, and the diſcovery of his Goodneſs to us: For had not God created the World, he had been wholly unknown to any but himſelf; He produced Creatures that he might be known. As the Sun ſhines not only to diſcover other things, but to be ſeen it ſelf in its beauty and brightneſs. God would create things, becauſe he would be known in his Glory and Liberality; Hence is it that he created Intellectual Creatures, becauſe without them, the reſt of the Creation could not be taken notice of: It had been in ſome ſort in vain; for no Nature lower than an Underſtanding Nature, was able to know the Marks of God in the Creation, and acknowledge him as God. In this regard, God is good above all Creatures, becauſe he intends only to communicate his Goodneſs in Creation, not to acquire any Goodneſs or Excellency from them, as Men do in their framing of things. God is all, and is deſtitute of nothing, and therefore nothing accrues to him by the Creation, but the acknowledgment of his Goodneſs. This Goodneſs therefore muſt be the Motive and End of all his Works.

* Prov. 26. 4.

† Deut. 10. 13.

The third thing, That God is good.

1. The more excellent any thing is in Nature, the more of goodneſs and kindneſs it hath. For we ſee more of love and kindneſs in Creatures that are endued with Senſe, to their Deſcendents, than in Plants, that have only a Principle of Growth. Plants preſerve their Seeds whole that are incloſed in them; Animals look to their young only after they are dropt from them; yet after ſome time take no more notice of them than of a Stranger that never had any Birth from them. But Man, that hath a higher Principle of Reaſon, cheriſheth his Offspring, and gives them Marks of his goodneſs while he lives, and leaves not the World at the time of his Death without ſome Teſtimonies of it; Much more muſt God, who is a higher Principle than Senſe or Reaſon, be good and bountiful to all his Offspring. The more perfect any thing is, the more it doth communicate it ſelf. The Sun is more excellent than the Stars, and therefore doth more ſenſibly, more extenſively diſperſe its liberal Beams than the Stars do. And the better any Man is, the more charitable he is. God being the moſt excellent Nature, having nothing more excellent than himſelf, becauſe nothing more ancient than himſelf, who is the Ancient of Days; There is nothing therefore better and more bountiful than himſelf.

2. He is the cauſe of all created Goodneſs, he muſt therefore himſelf be the Supream Good. What Good is in the Heavens, is the Product of ſome Being above the Earth; and thoſe varieties of Goodneſs in the Earth, and ſeveral Creatures, are ſome where in their Fulneſs and Union: That therefore which poſſeſſes all thoſe ſcattered Goodneſſes in their fulneſs, muſt be all Good, All that Good which

which is diſplay'd in Creatures; therefore Soveraignly beſt. Whatſoever Natural or Moral Goodneſs there is in the World, in Angels, or Men, or Inferiour Creatures, is a Line drawn from that Center, the Bublings of that Fountain. God cannot but be better then all, ſince the Goodneſs that is in Creatures is the Fruit of his own, if he were not good, he could produce no good: he could not beſtow what he had not. If the Creature be good, as the Apoſtle ſays, every Creature is *, he muſt needs be better than all, becauſe they have nothing but what is derived to them from him; and much more goodneſs than all, becauſe Finite Beings are not capable of receiving into them, and containing in themſelves all that goodneſs which is in an Infinite Being. When we ſearch for good in Creatures, they come ſhort of that ſatisfaction which is in God. † As the certainty of a firſt Principle of all things, is neceſſarily concluded from the Being of Creatures, and the upholding and ſuſtaining Power and Vertue of God is concluded from the mutability of thoſe Things in the World; whence we infer, that there muſt be ſome ſtable Foundation of thoſe tottering things, ſome firm Hinge upon which thoſe changeable Things do move, without which, there would be no Stability in the kinds of Things, no Order, no Agreement, or Union among them: So from the goodneſs of every Thing, and their uſefulneſs to us, we muſt conclude him Good, who made all thoſe Things. And ſince we find diſtinct Goodneſſes in the Creature, we muſt conclude that one Principle whence they did flow, excels in the Glory of Goodneſs: All thoſe little Glimmerings of Goodneſs which are ſcattered in the Creatures, as the Image in the Glaſs, repreſent the Face, Poſture, Motion of him whoſe Image it is, but not in the fulneſs of Life and Spirit, as in the Original; 'Tis but a Shadow at the beſt, and ſpeaks ſomething more excellent in the Copy. As God hath an Infiniteneſs of Being above them, ſo he hath a Supremacy of Goodneſs beyond them: What they have, is but a Participation from him; what he hath, muſt be infinitely ſuper-eminent above them. If any thing be good by it ſelf, it muſt be Infinitely Good, it would ſet it ſelf no bounds; we muſt make as many Gods, as parriculars of Goodneſs in the World: But being Good by the bounty of another, that from whence they flow muſt be the chief Goodneſs. ‖ 'Tis God's Excellency and Goodneſs, which like a Beam pierceth all things: He decks Spirits with Reaſon, endues Matter with Form, furniſheth every thing with uſeful Qualities.

* 1 Tim. 4. 4.

† Pſal. 4. 6.

* Ficinus in Com. Amor. Orat. 2. cap. 1326.

As one Beam of the Sun illuſtrates Fire, Water, Earth; ſo one Beam of God enlightens and endows Minds, Souls, and Univerſal Nature: Nothing in the World had its goodneſs from it ſelf, any more than it had its being from it ſelf. The Cauſe muſt be richer than the Effect.

But that which I intend is the Defence of this Goodneſs.

1. The Goodneſs of God is not impair'd by ſuffering Sin to enter into the World, and Man to fall thereby. 'Tis rather a Teſtimony of God's Goodneſs, that he gave Man an ability to be Happy, than any Charge againſt his Goodneſs, that he ſettled Man in a capacity to be Evil. God was firſt a Benefactor to Man, before Man could be a Rebel againſt God. May it not be enquired, whether it had not been againſt the Wiſdom of God, to have made a Rational Creature with Liberty, and not ſuffer him to act according to the Nature he was endowed with, and to follow his own choice for ſome time? Had it been Wiſdom to frame a Free Creature, and totally to reſtrain that Creature from following its Liberty? Had it been Goodneſs, as it were, to force the Creature to be happy againſt its will? God's Goodneſs furniſh'd Adam with a power to ſtand; was it contrary to his Goodneſs, to leave Adam to a free uſe of that Power? To make a Creature, and not let that Creature act according to the freedom of his Nature, might have been thought to have been a blot upon his Wiſdom, and a conſtraint upon the Creature, not to make uſe of that freedom of his Nature, which the Divine Goodneſs had beſtowed upon him. 'To what purpoſe did God make a Law to govern his Rational Creature, and yet reſolve that Creature ſhould not have his choice, whether he would obey it or no? Had he been really conſtrained to obſerve it, his Obſervation of it could no more have been call'd Obedience, than the acts of Brutes that have a kind of Natural conſtraint upon them by the inſtinct of their Nature, can be called Obedience: In vain had God endowed a Creature with ſo great and noble a Principle as Liberty. Had it been Goodneſs in God after he had made a Reaſonable Creature, to govern him in the ſame manner as he did Brutes, by a neceſſary Inſtinct? It was the Goodneſs of God to the Nature of Men and Angels, to leave them in ſuch a Condition, to be able to give him a voluntary Obedience, a nobler Offering than the whole Creation could preſent him with; And ſhall this Goodneſs be undervalued, and accounted mean, becauſe Man made an ill uſe of it, and turn'd it into wantonneſs? As the unbelief of Man doth not diminiſh the Redeeming Grace of God, * ſo neither doth the Fall of Man leſſen the Creating Goodneſs of God. Beſides, why ſhould the permiſſion of ſin be thought more a blemiſh to his Goodneſs, than the providing a way of Redemption for the deſtroying the Works of Sin, and the Devil be judged the Glory of it, whereby he diſcover'd a goodneſs of Grace that ſurpaſt the bounds of Nature? If this were a thing that might ſeem too obſcure, or deface the Goodneſs of God, in the permiſſion of the fall of Angels and Adam, it was in order to bring forth a greater Goodneſs in a more illuſtrious pomp to the view of the World: † God hath concluded them all in Unbelief, that he might have Mercy upon all. But if nothing could be alledged for the defence of his Goodneſs in this, it were moſt comely for an ignorant Creature, not to Impeach his Goodneſs, but adore him in his proceedings, in the ſame language the Apoſtle doth, ver. 33. O the depth of the riches both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God! How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out?

* Rom. 3. 3.

† Rom. 11. 32.

2. Nor is his goodneſs prejudic'd, by not making all things the equal Subjects of it.

1. 'Tis true all things are not Subjects of an equal Goodneſs. The Goodneſs of God is not ſo illuſtriouſly manifeſted in one thing as another. In the Creation he hath dropt goodneſs upon ſome, in giving them Beings and Senſe; and pour'd it upon others, in endowing them with Underſtanding and Reaſon. The Sun is full of Light, but it hath a want of Senſe; Brutes excel in the vigor of Senſe, but they are deſtitute of the Light of Reaſon: Man hath a Mind and Reaſon conferr'd on him, but he hath neither the acuteneſs of Mind, nor the quickneſs of Motion equal with an Angel. In Providence alſo he doth give abundance: and opens his hand to ſome, to others he is more ſparing; He gives greater gifts of Knowledge to ſome, while he lets others remain in Ignorance; he ſtrikes down ſome, and raiſeth others; He afflicts ſome with a continual Pain, while he bleſſeth others with an uninterrupted Health; He hath choſen one Nation wherein to ſet up his Goſpel Sun, and leaves another benighted in their own Ignorance. Known was God in Judea, they were a peculiar People alone * Deut. 12. 4. of all the Nations of the Earth *. He was not equally good to the Angels: He held forth his hand to ſupport ſome in their happy Habitation, while he ſuffered others to ſink in irreparable Ruine; and he is not ſo diffuſive here of his Goodneſs to his own, as he will be in Heaven. Here their Sun is ſometimes clouded, but there all Clouds and Shades will be blown away, and melted into nothing: Inſtead of Drops here, there will be above Rivers of Life. Is any Creature deſtitute of the open Marks of his Goodneſs, tho' all are not enrich'd with thoſe ſignal Characters which he vouchſafes to others? He that is unerring pronounced every thing good diſtinctly in its Production, and the whole good in † Gen. 1. 4, 10, 12, 18, 21, 25, 31. its Univerſal Perfection. † Tho' he made not all things equally good, yet he made nothing evil; and tho' one Creature in regard of its Nature, may be better than another, yet an Inferiour Creature, in regard of its uſefulneſs in the order of the Creation, may be better than a Superiour. The Earth hath a goodneſs in bringing forth Fruits, and the Waters in the Sea a goodneſs in multiplying Food. That any of us have a Being, is goodneſs; that we have not ſo healthful a Being as others, is unequal, but not unjuſt goodneſs. He is good to all, tho' not in the ſame degree. The whole Earth is full of ‖ Pſal. 119. 64. his Mercy ‖. A good Man is good to his Cattle, to his Servants; he makes a proviſion for all, but he beſtows not thoſe Floods of Bounty upon them, that he doth upon his Children. As there are va- * 1 Cor. 12. 4. rious Gifts, but one Spirit *; ſo there are various Diſtributions, but from one Goodneſs; The Drops as well as the fuller Streams, are of the ſame Fountain, and reliſh of the Nature of it; And tho' he do not make all Men partake of the riches of his Grace after the corruption of their Nature, Is his Goodneſs diſgraced hereby? Or doth he merit the Title of Cruelty? Will any diminiſh the goodneſs of a Father, for his not ſetting up his Son, after he hath fooliſhly and wilfully proved Bankrupt; or not rather admire his liberality in giving him ſo large a Stock to Trade with, when he firſt ſet him up in the World?

2. The goodneſs of God to Creatures, is to be meaſured by their diſtinct Uſefulneſs to the Common End. It were better for a Toad or Serpent to be a Man, i. e. better for the Creature it ſelf, if it were advanced to a higher degree of Being, but not better for the Univerſe: He could have made every Pebble a living Creature, and every living Creature a Rational one: But that he made every thing as we ſee, it was a goodneſs to the Creature it ſelf; But that he did not make it of a higher Elevation in Nature, was a part of his goodneſs to the Rational Creature. If all were Rational Creatures, there would have been wanting Creatures of an Inferiour Nature for their conveniency; There would have wanted the manifeſtation of the variety and fulneſs of his goodneſs. Had all things in the World been Rational Creatures, much of that goodneſs which he hath communicated to Rational Creatures, would not have appear'd: How could Man have ſhew'd his skill in Taming and Managing Creatures more mighty than himſelf? What Materials would there have been to manifeſt the goodneſs of God, beſtowed upon the reaſonable Creatures for framing Excellent Works and Inventions? Much of the Goodneſs of God hath lain wrapt up from Senſe and Underſtanding. All other things partake not of ſo great a Goodneſs as Man; yet they are ſo ſubſervient to that Goodneſs pour'd forth on Man, that little of it could have been ſeen without them. Conſider Man, every Member in his Body hath a goodneſs in it ſelf, but a greater goodneſs, as referred to the whole, without which, the goodneſs of the more Noble Part would not be manifeſted. The Head is the moſt excellent Member, and hath greater Impreſſions of Divine Goodneſs upon it, in regard that it is the Organ of Underſtanding: Were every Member of the Body a Head, what a deform'd Monſter would Man be? If he were all Head, where would be feet for Motion? and Arms for Action? Man would be fit only for Thought, and not for Exerciſe. The goodneſs of God in giving Man ſo noble a part as the Head, could not be known without a Tongue, whereby to expreſs the Conception of his Mind; and without Feet and Hands whereby to act much of what he conceives and determines, and execute the reſolves of his Will: All thoſe have a Goodneſs in themſelves, an Honour, a Comelineſs from the Goodneſs of God, * but not ſo great a Goodneſs as the * 1 Cor. 12. 22, 23. Nobler Part: Yet if you conſider them in their Functions, and refer them to that excellent Member which they ſerve, their Inferiour Goodneſs is abſolutely neceſſary to the goodneſs of the other, without which, the goodneſs of the Head and Underſtanding would lie in Obſcurity, be inſignificant to the whole World, and in a great meaſure to the Perſon himſelf that wants ſuch Members.

3. The Goodneſs of God is more ſeen in this inequality. If God were equally good to all, it would deſtroy Commerce, Unity, the Links of Humane Society; damp Charity, and render that uſeleſs which is one of the nobleſt and delightfulleſt Duties to be exerciſed here; It would cool Prayer, which is excited by wants, and is a neceſſary demonſtration of the Creatures dependance on God. But in this inequality, every Man hath enough in his Enjoyments for Praiſe, and in his Wants matter for his Prayer. Beſides, the inequality of the Creature is the Ornament of the World: What pleaſure could a Garden afford, if there were but one ſort of Flowers, or one ſort of Plants? Far leſs than when there is variety to pleaſe the Sight, and every other Senſe.

Again, The freedom of Divine Goodneſs, which is the Glory of it, is evident hereby; Had he been alike good to all, it would have look'd like a neceſſary, not a free Act: But by the inequality, it is manifeſt that he doth not do it by a Natural neceſſity as the Sun ſhines, but by a voluntary Liberty, as being the entire Lord, and free Diſpoſer of his own Goods: And that it is the gift of the Pleaſure of his Will, as well as the Efflux of his Nature; That he hath not a Goodneſs without Wiſdom, but a Wiſdom as rich as his Bounty.

4. The Goodneſs of God could not be equally communicated to all, after their ſettlement in their ſeveral Beings. Becauſe they have not a capacity in their Natures for it: He doth beſtow the Marks of his Goodneſs according to that natural Capacity of fitneſs he perceives in his Creatures: As the Water of the Sea fills every Creek and Gulf with different Meaſures, according to the compaſs each have to contain it; And as the Sun doth diſperſe Light to the Stars above, and the places below, to ſome more, to ſome leſs, according to the meaſures of their Reception. God doth not do good to all Creatures according to the greatneſs of his own Power, and the extent of his own Wealth, but according to the Capacity of the Subject: Not ſo much Good as he can do, but ſo much Good as the Creature can receive. The Creature would ſink, if God would pour out all his Goodneſs upon it: As Moſes would have periſhed, if God ſhould have ſhewn him all his Glory *. He doth manifeſt more * Exod. 33. 18, 20. Goodneſs to his Reaſonable Creatures, becauſe they are more capable of acknowledging, and ſetting forth his Goodneſs.

are

5. God ought to be allow'd the free diſpoſal of his own Goodneſs. Is not God the Lord of his own Gifts; and will you not allow him the priviledge of having ſome more peculiar Objects of his love and pleaſure, which you allow without blame to Man, and uſe your ſelf without any ſenſe of a Crime? Is a Prince eſteem'd good, tho' he be not equally bountiful to all his Servants, nor equally gracious in pardoning all his Rebels; And ſhall the Goodneſs of the great Soveraign of the World be impeach'd, notwithſtanding thoſe mighty diſtributions of it, becauſe he will act according to his own Wiſdom and Pleaſure, and not according to Mens fancies and humours? Muſt purblind Reaſon be the Judge and Director, how God ſhall diſpoſe of his own, rather than his own Infinite Wiſdom and Soveraign Will? Is God leſs good, becauſe there are numberleſs nothings, which he is able to bring into being? He could create a World of more Creatures than he hath done: Doth he therefore wiſh evil to them by letting them remain in that nothing from whence he could draw them? No, but he denies that good to them, which he is able, if he pleaſed, to confer upon them.

If God doth not give that good to a Creature which it wants by his own demerit, can he be ſaid to wiſh evil to it; or only to deny that goodneſs which the Creature hath forfeited, * and which is at God's liberty to retain or diſperſe? Tho' God cannot but love his own Image where he finds it, yet when this Image is loſt, and the Devil's Image voluntarily received, he may chooſe whether he will manifeſt his Goodneſs to ſuch a one or no. Will you not account that Man liberal, that diſtributes his Alms to a great Company, tho' he rejects ſome? Much more will you account him good, if he rejects none that implore him, but diſpenſeth his Doles to every one upon their Petition: And is he not good, becauſe he will not beſtow a Farthing upon thoſe that Addreſs not themſelves to him? God is ſo good, that he denies not the beſt good to thoſe that ſeek him: He hath promiſed Life and Happineſs to them that do ſo. Is he leſs good, becauſe he will not diſtribute his Goodneſs to thoſe that deſpiſe him? Tho' he be Good, yet his Wiſdom is the Rule of diſpenſing his Goodneſs.

* Camero p. 30.

6. The ſevere Puniſhment of Offenders, and the Afflictions he inflicts upon his Servants, are no violations of his Goodneſs. The Notion of God's vindictive Juſtice is as naturally inbred, and implanted in the mind of Man, as that of his Goodneſs, and thoſe two Sentiments never ſhock'd one another. The Heathen never thought him bad becauſe he was Juſt, nor unrighteous becauſe he was Good. God being Infinitely Good, cannot poſſibly intend or act any thing but what is good: Thou art good, and thou doſt good; i. e. whatſoever thou doſt is good, whatſoever it be, pleaſant or painful to the Creature: * Puniſhments themſelves are not a Moral Evil in the Perſon that inflicts, tho' they are a Natural Evil in the Perſon that ſuffers them. In ordering Puniſhment to the Wicked, Good is added to Evil; In ordering Impunity to the Wicked, Evil is added to Evil. To puniſh Wickedneſs is Right, therefore Good: To leave Men uncontroul'd in their Wickedneſs, is Unrighteous, and therefore Bad. But again, Shall his Juſtice in ſome few Judgments in the World, impeach his Goodneſs, more than his wonderful Patience to Sinners is able to ſilence the Calumnies againſt him? Is not his hand fuller of gracious Doles, than of dreadful Thunderbolts? Doth he not oftner ſeem forgetful of his Juſtice, when he pours upon the Guilty the Streams of his Mercy, than to be forgetful of his Goodneſs, when he ſprinkles in the World ſome Drops of his Wrath?

*Pſal. 119. 68.

Boetius.

Firſt, God's Judgments in the World, do not infringe his Goodneſs; For,

1. The Juſtice of God is a part of the Goodneſs of his Nature. God himſelf thought ſo, when he told Moſes, he would make all his Goodneſs paſs before him *: He leaves not out in that enumeration of the parts of it, his Reſolution, by no means to clear the Guilty, but to viſit the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children †. 'Tis a property of Goodneſs to hate Evil, and therefore a Property of Goodneſs to puniſh it: 'Tis no leſs Righteouſneſs to give according to the deſerts of a Perſon in a way of Puniſhment, than to reward a Perſon that obeys his Precepts in a way of Recompence. Whatſoever is Righteous is Good; Sin is evil, and therefore whatſoever doth witneſs againſt it, is good: His Goodneſs therefore ſhines in his Juſtice, for without being Juſt he could not be Good. Sin is a Moral Diſorder in the World: Every Sin is Injuſtice: Injuſtice breaks God's Order in the World; there is a neceſſity therefore of Juſtice to put the World in Order. Puniſhment orders the Perſon committing the Injury, who when he will not be in the order of Obedience, muſt be in the order of ſuffering for God's Honour. The goodneſs of all things which God pronounced ſo, conſiſted in their order and beneficial helpfulneſs to one another: When this order is inverted, the goodneſs of the Creature ceaſeth: If it be a bad thing to ſpoil this order, Is it not a part of Divine Goodneſs to reduce them into order, that they may be reduced in ſome meaſure to their goodneſs? Do we ever account a Governour leſs in goodneſs, becauſe he is exact in Juſtice, and puniſheth that which makes a diſorder in his Government? And is it a diminution of the Divine Goodneſs, to puniſh that which makes a Diſorder in the World? As Wiſdom without Goodneſs would be a Serpentine Craft, and iſſue in Deſtruction; ſo Goodneſs without Juſtice would be impotent Indulgence, and caſt things into Confuſion. When Abel's Blood cried out for Vengeance againſt Cain, it ſpake a good thing; Chriſt's Blood ſpeaking better things than the Blood of Abel, implies that Abel's Blood ſpake a good thing; the Comparative implies a Poſitive *. If it were the goodneſs of that Innocent Blood to demand Juſtice, it could not be a badneſs in the Soveraign of the World to execute it. How can God ſuſtain the part of a Good and Righteous Judge if he did not preſerve Humane Society? And how would it be preſerved, without manifeſting himſelf by Publick Judgments againſt Publick Wrongs? Is there not as great a neceſſity that Goodneſs ſhould have Inſtruments of Judgment, as that there ſhould be Priſons, Bridewells, and Gibbets in a good Commonwealth? Did not the Thunderbolts of God ſometimes roar in the ears of Men, they would ſin with a higher hand than they do, fly more in the Face of God, make the World as much a Moral, as it was at firſt a Natural Chaos: The Ingenuity of Men would be damp'd, if there were not ſomething to work upon their Fears, to keep them in their due order. Impunity of the nocent Perſon is worſe than any Puniſhment. 'Tis a Miſery to want Medicines for the Cure of a ſharp Diſeaſe; and a Mark of Goodneſs in a Prince to conſult for the Security of the Political Body, by cutting off a Gangreen'd and Corrupting Member: And what Prince would deſerve the noble Title of Good, if he did not reſtrain by Puniſhment thoſe Evils which impair the Publick Welfare? Is it not neceſſary that the Examples of Sin, whereby others have been encourag'd to Wickedneſs, ſhould be made Examples of Juſtice, whereby the ſame Perſons, and others, may be diſcourag'd from what before they were greedily inclin'd unto? Is not a Hatred of what is bad and unworthy, as much a part of Divine Goodneſs, as a love to what is Excellent, and bears a Reſemblance to himſelf? Could he poſſibly be accounted Good, that ſhould bear the ſame degree of Affection to a prodigious Vice, as to a ſublime Vertue? And ſhould behave himſelf in the ſame manner of carriage to the Innocent and Culpable? Could you account him Good, if he did always with pleaſure behold Evil, and perpetually ſuffer the Oppreſſions of the Innocent under unpuniſh'd Wickedneſs? How ſhould we know the Goodneſs of the Divine Nature, and his Affection to the goodneſs of his Creature, if he did not by ſome acts of Severity witneſs his implacable averſion againſt Sin, and his care to preſerve the good Government of the World? If corrupted Creatures ſhould always be exempt from the effects of his Indignation, he would declare himſelf not to be Infinitely Good, becauſe he would not be really Righteous. No Man thinks it a Natural Vice in the Sun, by the power of its ſcorching heat, to dry up and conſume the unwholſom Vapours of the Air; nor are the Demonſtrations of Divine Juſtice any Blots upon his Goodneſs, ſince they are both for the defence and glory of his Holineſs, and for the preſervation of the beauty and order of the World.

2. Is it not part of the Goodneſs of God to make Laws, and annex Threatnings; And ſhall it be an Impeachment of his Goodneſs to ſupport them? The more ſevere Laws are made for deterring Evil, the better is that Prince accounted, in making ſuch proviſion for the welfare of the Community. The deſign of Laws, and the deſign of upholding the honour of thoſe Laws by the puniſhment of Offenders, is to promote Goodneſs and reſtrain Evil; The Execution of thoſe Laws muſt be therefore purſuant to the ſame deſign of Goodneſs, which firſt ſettled them. Would it not be contrary to Goodneſs, to ſuffer that which was deſign'd for the ſupport of Goodneſs, to be ſcorn'd and ſlighted? It would neither be Prudence nor Goodneſs, but Folly and Vice, to let Laws, which were made to promote Vertue, be broken with Impunity. Would not this be to weaken Vertue, and give a new Life and Vigour to Vice? Not only the Righteouſneſs of the Law it ſelf, but the Wiſdom of the Lawgiver would be expoſed to contempt, if the Violations of it remain'd uncontroul'd, and the Violence offer'd by Men paſſed unpuniſhed. None but will acknowledge the Divine Precepts to be the Image of the Righteouſneſs of God, and beneficial for the common good of the World; * The Law is holy, juſt and good, and ſo is every Precept of it: The Law was for no other end, but to keep the Creature in ſubjection to, and dependance on God: This dependance could not be preſerved without a Law, nor that Law be kept in Reputation without a Penalty; nor would that Penalty be ſignificant without an Execution. Every law loſeth the nature of a Law, without a Penalty; and the Penalty loſeth its vigour, without the infliction of it: How can thoſe Laws attain their end, if the Tranſgreſſions of them be not puniſhed? Would not the Wickedneſs of Mens hearts be encouraged by ſuch a kind of uncomely Goodneſs? And all the Threatnings be to no other end, than to engender vain and fruitleſs Fears in the Minds of Men? Is it good for the Majeſty of God to ſuffer it ſelf to be trampled on by his Vaſſals? To ſuffer Men by their Rebellion to level his Law with the wickedneſs of their own hearts; and by Impunity ſlight his own Glory, and incourage their Diſobedience? Who would give any Man, any Prince, any Father that ſhould do ſo, the name of a good Governour? If it were a Fruit of Divine Goodneſs to make Laws, is it contrary to Goodneſs to ſupport the honour of them? 'Tis every whit as rational, and as good to vindicate the honour of his Laws by Juſtice, as at firſt to ſettle them by Authority; As much goodneſs to vindicate it from Contempt, as at firſt to Enact it; As it is as much Wiſdom to preſerve a Law, as at firſt to frame it: Shall his Precepts be thought by him unworthy of a ſupport, that were not thought by him unworthy to be made? The ſame reaſon of Goodneſs that led him to frown them, will lead him to revenge them. Did evil appear odious to him, while he Enacted his Law; and would not his own Goodneſs, as well as his Wiſdom, appear odious to him, if he did never execute it? Would it not be a denial of his own Goodneſs, to be led by the fooliſh and corrupt Judgment of his Creatures, and ſlight his own Law, becauſe his Rebels ſpurn at it? Since he valued it before they could actually contemn it, would he not miſ-judge his own Law and his own Wiſdom, diſcount from the true value of them, condemn his own Acts, cenſure his Precepts as Unrighteous, and therefore Evil and Injurious? Remove the differences between Good and Evil, look upon Vice as Vertue, and Wickedneſs as Righteouſneſs, if he thought his Commands unworthy of a Vindication? How can there be any ſupport to the honour of his Precepts, without ſometimes Executing the ſeverity of his Threatnings?

* Rom. 7. 12.

And as to his Threatnings of Puniſhment for the breach of his Laws, are they not deſigned to diſcourage Wickedneſs, as the Promiſes of Reward were deſigned to encourage Goodneſs? Hath he not multiplyed the one to ſcare Men from Sin, as well as the other to allure Men to Obedience? Is not the ſame Truth engaged to ſupport the one as well as the other? And how could he be abundant in Goodneſs, if he were not abundant in Truth? Both are link'd together; * If he neglected his Truth, he would be out of love with his own Goodneſs; ſince it cannot be manifeſted in performing the Promiſes to the Obedient, if it be not alſo manifeſted in executing his Threatnings upon the Rebellious. Had not God annex'd Threatnings to his Laws, he would have had no care of his own Goodneſs. The Order btween God and the Creature wherein the Declaration of his Goodneſs conſiſted, might have been eaſily broken by his Creature: Man would have freed himſelf from ſubjection to God, been unaccountable to him. Had this conſiſted with that Infinite Goodneſs whereby he loves himſelf, and loves his Creatures? As therefore the annexing Threatnings to his Law, was a part of his Goodneſs; the Execution of them is ſo far from being a blemiſh, that it is the honour of his Goodneſs. The Rewards of Obedience, and the Puniſhment of Diſobedience refer to the ſame end, viz. the due manifeſtation of the valuation of his own Law, the glorifying his own Goodneſs, which enjoyned ſo beneficial a Law for Man, and the ſupport of that Goodneſs in the Creatures which by that Law he demands righteouſly and kindly of them.

* Exod. 34. 6.

3. Hence it follows, that not to puniſh Evil would be a want of Goodneſs to himſelf. The Goodneſs of God is an indulgent Goodneſs in a way of Wiſdom and Reaſon; not a fond Goodneſs in a way of Weakneſs and Folly: Would it not be a Weakneſs always to bear with the Impenitent? A want of expreſſing a goodneſs to Goodneſs it ſelf? Would not not Goodneſs have more reaſon to complain for a want of Juſtice to reſcue it, than Men have reaſon to complain for want of Juſtice in the vindication of it? If God eſtabliſh'd all things in Order with Infinite Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and God ſilently beheld for ever this Order broken, would he not either charge himſelf with a want of Power, or a want of Will to preſerve the Marks of his own Goodneſs? Would it be a kindneſs to himſelf to be careleſs of the breaches of his own Orders? His Throne would ſhake, yea, ſink from under him, if Juſtice, whereby he Sentenceth, and Judgment, whereby he Executes his Sentence, were not the ſupports of it. * Juſtice and Judgment are the habitation of thy Throne, מכון כסאך, the Stability or Foundation of thy Throne; So Pſal. 92. 2. Man would forget his Relation to God, God would be unknown to be Soveraign of the World, were he careleſs of the breaches of his own Order. † The Lord is known by his Judgments which he executes. Is it not a part of his Goodneſs to preſerve the indiſpenſible order between himſelf and his Creatures? His own Soveraignty, which is good, and the ſubjection of the Creature to him as Soveraign, which is alſo good; the one would not be maintain'd in its due place, nor the other reſtrain'd in due limits without puniſhment. Would it be a goodneſs in him to ſee Goodneſs it ſelf trampled upon conſtantly, without ſome time or other appearing for the relief of it? Is it not a Goodneſs to ſecure his own Honour, to prevent further Evil? Is it not a Goodneſs to diſcourage Men by Judgments, ſometimes from a contempt and ill uſe of his Bounty, as well as ſometimes patiently to bear with them, and wait upon them for a Reformation? Muſt God be bad to Himſelf, to be kind to his Enemies? And ſhall it be accounted an Unkindneſs and a Mark of Evil in him not to ſuffer himſelf to be always outrag'd and defied? The World is wrong'd by Sin, as well as God is injur'd by it. How could God be good to himſelf, if he righted not his own Honour? Or be a good Governor of the World, if he did not ſometimes witneſs againſt the Injuries it receives ſometimes from the works of his hands? Would he be good to himſelf as a God, to be careleſs of his own Honour? Or good as the Rector of the World, and be regardleſs of the Worlds Confuſion?

* Pſal. 89. 14.

† Pſal. 9. 16.

That God ſhould give an Eternal Good to that Creature that declines its Duty, and deſpiſeth his Soveraignty, is not agreeable to the goodneſs of his Wiſdom, or that of his Righteouſneſs; 'Tis a part of God's goodneſs to love himſelf: Would he love his Soveraignty, if he ſaw it daily ſlighted, without ſometimes diſcovering how much he values the honour of it? Would he have any eſteem for his own Goodneſs, if he beheld it trampled upon, without any Will to vindicate it? Doth Mercy deſerve the name of Cruelty, becauſe it pleads againſt a Creature that hath ſo often abuſed it, and hath refuſed to have any pity exercis'd towards it in a righteous and regular way? Is Soveraignty deſtitute of Goodneſs, becauſe it preſerves its Honour againſt one that would not have it reign over him? Would he not ſeem by ſuch a regardleſneſs to renounce his own Eſſence, undervalue and undermine his own Goodneſs, if he had not an implacable Averſion to whatſoever is contrary to it? If Men turn Grace into Wantonneſs, is it not more reaſonable he ſhould turn his Grace into Juſtice?

All his Attributes, which are parts of his Goodneſs, engage him to puniſh Sin; without it his Authority would be vilified, his Purity ſtain'd, his Power derided, his Truth diſgraced, his Juſtice ſcorned, his Wiſdom ſlighted: He would be thought to have diſſembled in his Laws, and be judg'd, according to the Rules of Reaſon, to be void of true Goodneſs.

4. Puniſhment is not the primary intention of God. 'Tis his goodneſs that he hath no mind to puniſh; and therefore he hath put a bar to Evil by his Prohibitions and Threatnings, that he might prevent Sin, and conſequently any occaſion of ſeverity againſt his Creature *: The Principal Intention of God in his Law, was to encourage Goodneſs, that he might reward it; And when by the commiſſion of Evil God is provoked to Puniſh, and takes the Sword into his hand, he doth not act againſt the Nature of his Goodneſs, but againſt the firſt intention of his Goodneſs in his Precepts, which was to Reward: As a good Judge principally intends in the exerciſe of his Office, to protect good Men from Violence, and maintain the honour of the Laws; yet conſequently to puniſh bad Men, without which the protection of the Good would not be ſecured, nor the honour of the Law be ſupported: And a good Judge in the exerciſe of his Office, doth principally intend the encouragement of the Good, and wiſheth there were no Wickedneſs that might occaſion Puniſhment; and when he doth Sentence a Malefactor in order to the Execution of him, he doth not act againſt the goodneſs of his Nature, but purſuant to the Duty of his Place; but wiſheth he had no occaſion for ſuch Severity. Thus God ſeems to ſpeak of himſelf; † He calls the act of his Wrath, his Strange Work, his Strange Act; A Work not againſt his Nature, as the Governor of the World; but againſt his firſt Intention as Creator, which was to manifeſt his Goodneſs: Therefore he moves with a ſlow pace in thoſe Acts, brings out his Judgments with relentings of Heart, and ſeems to caſt out his Thunderbolts with a trembling hand: He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men ‖: And therefore he delights not in the death of a Sinner *: Not in Death as Death, in Puniſhment as Puniſhment, but as it reduceth the ſuffering Creature to the Order of his Precept, or reduceth him into order under his Power, or reforms others who are Spectators of the Puniſhment upon a Criminal of their own Nature: God only hates the Sin, not the Sinner: He deſires only the deſtruction of the one, not the miſery of the other: The Nature of a Man doth not diſpleaſe him, becauſe it is a Work of his own goodneſs; but the Nature of the Sinner diſpleaſeth him, becauſe it is a Work of the Sinners own extravagance. Divine Goodneſs pitcheth not its hatred primarily upon the Sinner, but upon the Sin: But ſince he cannot puniſh the Sin, without puniſhing the Subject to which it cleaves, the Sinner falls under his laſh. Who ever regards a good Judge as an Enemy to the Malefactor, but as an Enemy to his Crime, when he doth ſentence and execute him?

5. Judgments in the world have a goodneſs in them, therefore they are no Impeachments of the Goodneſs of God.

1. A Goodneſs in their Preparations. He ſends not Judgments without giving Warnings: His Juſtice is ſo far from extinguiſhing his Goodneſs, that his Goodneſs rather ſhines out in the preparations of his Juſtice: He gives Men time, and ſends them Meſſengers to perſwade them to another temper of mind, that he may change his Hand, and exerciſe his Liberality, where he threatned his Severity. When the Heathen had Preſages of ſome Evil upon their Perſons or Countries, they took them for invitations to Repentance, excited themſelves to many acts of Devotion, implor'd his Favor, and often experimented it. The Ninevites, upon the Proclamation of the deſtruction of their City by Jonah, fell to petitioning him, whereby they ſignified, that they thought thought him good, tho' he were juſt, and more prone to Pity than Severity; and their humble Carriage caus'd the Arrows he had ready againſt them to drop out of his hands *. When he brandiſheth his Sword, he wiſhes for ſome to ſtand in that Gap to mollifie his anger, that he might not ſtrike the fatal blow; † I ſought for a man among them that ſhould make up the Hedge, and ſtand in the Gap before me in the Land, that I ſhould not deſtroy it. He was deſirous that his Creatures might be in a capacity to receive the marks of his bounty ||: This he ſignified, not obſcurely to Moſes, Exod. 32. 10. when he ſpoke to him to let him alone, that his anger might wax hot againſt the People, after they had made a Golden Calf and worſhipped it. Let me alone, ſaid God: Not that Moſes reſtrained him, ſaith Chryſoſtom, who ſpake nothing to him, but ſtood ſilent before him, and knew nothing of the Peoples Idolatry; but God would give him an occaſion of praying for them, that he might exerciſe his Mercy towards them; yet in ſuch a manner, that the People being ſtruck with a ſenſe of their Crime, and the horror of Divine Juſtice, they might be amended for the future; when they ſhould underſtand that their Death was not averted by their own Merit or Interceſſion, but by Moſes's Patronage of them, and pleading for them. As we ſee ſometimes Maſters and Fathers angry with their Servants and Children, and preparing themſelves to puniſh them, but ſecretly wiſh ſome Friend to intercede for them, and take them out of their hands: There is a Goodneſs ſhining in the preparations of his Judgments.

* Jonah 3. 9, 10.

† Ezek. 22. 30.

|| Creſſel Anthelog. Decad. 2. p. 162.

2. A Goodneſs in the execution of them. They are good, as they ſhew God diſaffected to Evil, and conduce to the glory of his Holineſs, and deter others from preſumptuous Sins: * I will be glorified in all that draw near unto me; in his Judgment upon Nadab and Abihu, the Sons of Aaron, for offering ſtrange Fire.

* Deut. 10. 3.

By them God preſerves the excellent Footſteps of his own Goodneſs in his Creation and his Law; and curbs the Licentiouſneſs of Men, and contains them within the bounds of their Duty. Thy Judgments are good, ſaith the Pſalmiſt *; i. e. Thy Judicial proceedings upon the Wicked: For he deſires God there, to turn away by ſome ſignal act the reproach the Wicked caſt upon him. Can there be any thing more miſerable than to live in a World full of wickedneſs, and void of the Marks of Divine Goodneſs and Juſtice to repreſs it? Were there not Judgments in the World, Men would forget God, be inſenſible of his Government of the World, neglect the Exerciſes of Natural and Chriſtian Duties; Religion would be at its laſt gaſp, and expire among them, and Men would pretend to break God's Precepts by God's Authority. Are they not good then, as they reſtrain the Creature from further Evils, affright others from the ſame Crimes, which they were inclinable to commit? He ſtrikes ſome, to reform others that are Spectators; as Apollonius tam'd Pigeons, by beating Dogs before them. Puniſhments are God's gracious Warnings to others, not to venture upon thoſe Crimes which they ſee attended with ſuch Judgments. The Cenſers of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram were to be wrought into Plates for a covering of the Altar, to abide there as a Memento to others, not to approach to the exerciſe of the Prieſtly Office, without an Authoritative Call from God †; and thoſe Judgments exerciſed in the former Ages of the World, were intended by Divine Goodneſs for Warnings, even in Evangelical times. Lot's Wife was turned into a Pillar of Salt, to prevent Men from Apoſtacy: That uſe Chriſt himſelf makes of it, in the Exhortation againſt turning back ||. And * The righteous ſhall waſh his Feet in the Blood of the wicked. When God ſhall drench his Sword in the Blood of the Wicked, the Righteous ſhall take occaſion from thence to purifie themſelves, and reform their ways, and look to the paths of their Feet. Would not Impunity be hurtful to the World, and Men receive encouragement to ſin, if Severities ſometimes did not bridle them from the practice of their Inclinations? Sometimes the Sinner himſelf is reform'd, and ſometimes remov'd from being an Example to others. Tho' Thunder be an affrightning noiſe, and Lightning a ſearing flaſh, yet they have a liberal Goodneſs in them, in ſhattering and conſuming thoſe contagious Vapors which burden and infect the Air, and thereby render it more clear and healthful.

Pſal. 39.

† Num. 16. 38, 40.

|| Luke 17. 32, 33.

* Pſal. 58. 10.

Again; There are few acts of Divine Juſtice upon a People, but are in the very execution of them attended with demonſtrations of his Goodneſs to others; He is a Protector of his own, while he is a Revenger on his Enemies: When he rides upon his Horſes in anger againſt ſome, his Chariots are Chariots of ſalvation to others *. Terrour makes way for Salvation: The overthrow of Pharaoh, and the ſtrength of his Nation, compleated the deliverance of the Iſraelites. Had not the Egyptians met with their deſtruction, the Iſraelites had unavoidably met with their Ruine, againſt all the Promiſes God had made to them, and to the defamation of his former Juſtice in the former Plagues upon their Oppreſſors. The death of Herod was the ſecurity of Peter, and the reſt of the malic'd Chriſtians. The gracious deliverance of Good Men is often occaſion'd by ſome ſevere ſtroke upon ſome eminent Perſecutor: The deſtruction of the Oppreſſor is the reſcue of the Innocent.

* Hab. 3. 8.

Again; Where is there a Judgment but leaves more Criminals behind than it ſweeps away, that deſerv'd to be involv'd in the ſame fate with the reſt? More Egyptians were left behind to poſſeſs and enjoy the goodneſs of their fruitful Land, than they were that were hurried into another World by the overflowing Waves; Is not this a Mark of goodneſs as well as ſeverity?

Again; Is it not a goodneſs in him not to pour out Judgment, according to the greatneſs of his Power? To go gradually to work with thoſe whom he might in a moment blow to deſtruction with one breath of his Mouth?

Again; He ſometimes exerciſeth Judgments upon ſome, to form a new Generation for himſelf; he deſtroy'd an old World, to raiſe a new one more righteous: As a Man pulls down his own Buildings, to erect a ſounder and more ſtately Fabrick. To ſum up what hath been ſaid in this particular, How could God be a Friend to Goodneſs, if he were not an Enemy to Evil? How could he ſhew his enmity to Evil, without revenging the abuſe and contempt of his Goodneſs? God would rather have the Repentance of a Sinner, than his Puniſhment; but the Sinner would rather expoſe himſelf to the ſevereſt frowns of God, than purſue thoſe Methods wherein he hath ſettled the Conveyances of his kindneſs; You will not come to me, that you might have life, ſaith Chriſt. How is Eternity of Puniſhment conſiſtent with the Goodneſs of God? Nay, How can God be good without it? If Wickedneſs always remain in the Nature of Man, Is it not fit the Rod ſhould always remain on the Back of Man? Is it a want of Goodneſs that keeps an incorrigible Offender in Chains, in a Bridewell? While Sin remains, it's fit it ſhould be puniſh'd: Would not God elſe be an Enemy to his own Goodneſs, and ſhew favour to that which doth abuſe it, and is contrary to it? He hath threatned Eternal Flames to Sinners, that he might the more ſtrongly excite them to a Reformation of their Ways, and a Practice of his Precepts.

to

In thoſe Threatnings he hath manifeſted his Goodneſs; And can it be bad in him to defend what his Goodneſs hath Commanded, and Execute what his Goodneſs hath Threatned? His Truth is alſo a part of his Goodneſs; for it is nothing but his Goodneſs performing that which it oblig'd him to do. That is the firſt thing, Severe Judgments in the World are no Impeachments of his Goodneſs.

2. The Afflictions God inflicts upon his Servants, are no violations of his Goodneſs. Sometimes God afflicts Men for their Temporal and Eternal good; for the good of their Grace in order to the good of their Glory; which is a more excellent Good than Afflictions can be an Evil. The Heathens reflected upon Ulyſſes's hardſhip, as a Mark of Jupiter's goodneſs and love to him, that his Virtue might be more conſpicuous. By ſtrong Perſecutions brought upon the Church, her Lethargy is cur'd, her Chaff purg'd, the glorious Fruit of the Goſpel brought forth in the Lives of her Children; the number of her Proſelytes multiply, and the ſtrength of her weak ones is encreaſed, by the Teſtimonies of Courage and Conſtancy which the ſtronger preſent to them in their Sufferings. Do thoſe good Effects ſpeak a want of Goodneſs in God, who brings them into this condition? By thoſe he cures his People of their Corruptions, and promotes their Glory, by giving them the honour of ſuffering for the Truth, and raiſeth their Spirits to a divine pitch. The Epiſtles of Paul to the Epheſ. Philipp. and Coloſſ. wrote by him while he was in Nero's Chains, ſeem to have a higher ſtrain than ſome of thoſe he wrote when he was at liberty.

As for Afflictions, they are Marks of a greater meaſure of Fatherly Goodneſs than he diſcovers to thoſe that live in an uninterrupted Proſperity, who are not dignified with that glorious Title of Sons, as thoſe are that he chaſteneth *. Can any queſtion the Goodneſs of the Father that Corrects his Child to prevent his Vice and Ruine, and breed him up to Virtue and Honour? It would be a Cruelty in a Father leaving his Child without Chaſtiſement, to leave him to that Miſery an ill Education would reduce him to, God judges us that we might not be condemn'd with the World †. Is it not a greater Goodneſs to ſeparate us from the World to Happineſs by his Scourge, than to leave us to the condemnation of the World for our Sins? Is it not a greater Goodneſs to make us ſmart here, than to ſee us ſcorcht hereafter? As he is our Shepherd, it is no part of his Enmity or Ill-will to us, to make us feel ſometimes the weight of his Shepherds Crook, to reduce us from our ſtragling. The viſiting our Tranſgreſſions with Rods, and our Iniquities with Stripes, is one of the Articles of the Covenant of Grace, wherein the greateſt luſtre of his Goodneſs appears ‖. The advantage and gain of our Afflictions is a greater Teſtimony of his Goodneſs to us, than the pain can be of his Unkindneſs: The Smart is well recompenced by the acceſſion of clearer Graces.

* Heb. 12. 6, 7.

† 1 Cor. 11. 32.

* Pſal. 89. 33.

It is rather a high Mark of his Goodneſs, than an Argument for the want of it, that he treats us as his Children, and will not ſuffer us to run into that Deſtruction we are more ambitious of, than the happineſs he hath prepar'd for us, and by Afflictions he fits us for the partaking of, by imparting his Holineſs together with the inflicting his Rod *. That is the third thing, God is Good.

* Heb. 12. 10.

The fourth thing is, The manifeſtation of this Goodneſs in Creation, Redemption, and Providence.

1. In Creation. This is apparent from what hath been ſaid before, That no other Attribute could be the Motive of his Creating, but his Goodneſs; His Goodneſs was the cauſe that he made any thing, and his Wiſdom was the cauſe that he made every thing in order and harmony: He pronounced every thing good, i. e. ſuch as became his Goodneſs to bring forth into being, and reſted in them more, as they were Stamps of his Goodneſs, than as they were Marks of his Power, or Beams of his Wiſdom: And if all Creatures were able to anſwer to this Queſtion, What that was which created them? the Anſwer would be, Almighty Power, but employ'd by the motion of Infinite Goodneſs *. All the varieties of Creatures are ſo many Apparitions of this Goodneſs. Tho' God be one, yet he cannot appear as a God, but in variety. As the greatneſs of Power is not manifeſt but in variety of Works, and an acute Underſtanding not diſcover'd, but in variety of Reaſonings; ſo an Infinite Goodneſs is not ſo apparent, as in variety of Communications.

* Cuſan. p. 228.

1. The Creation proceeds from Goodneſs. 'Tis the Goodneſs of God to extract ſuch multitude of things from the depths of nothing. Becauſe God is good, things have a Being; if he had not been good, nothing could have been good; Nothing could have imparted that which it poſſeſſed not: Nothing but goodneſs could have communicated to things an Excellency, which before they wanted. Being is much more excellent than Nothing. By this Goodneſs therefore the whole Creation was brought out of the dark Womb of Nothing: This form'd their Natures, this beautified them with their ſeveral Ornaments and Perfections, whereby every thing was enabled to act for the good of the Common World. God did not create things becauſe he was a living Being, but becauſe he was a good Being: No Creature brought forth any thing in the World meerly becauſe it is, but becauſe it is good, and by a communicated goodneſs fitted for ſuch a Production. If God had been the Creating Principle of things, only as he was a Living Being, or as he was an underſtanding Being, then all things ſhould have partaken of Life and Underſtanding; becauſe all things were to bear ſome Characters of the Deity upon them. If by Underſtanding ſolely God were the Creator of all things, all things ſhould have born the Mark of the Deity upon them, and ſhould have been more or leſs underſtanding; but he Created things as he was good, and by Goodneſs he renders all things more or leſs like himſelf: Hence every thing is accounted more noble, not in regard of its Being, but in regard of the Beneficialneſs of its Nature. The Being of things was not the End of God in Creating, but the Goodneſs of their Being: God did not reſt from his Works, becauſe they were his Works, i. e. becauſe they had a Being, but becauſe they had a good Being; * becauſe they were naturally uſeful to the Univerſe: Nothing was more pleaſing to him, than to behold thoſe Shadows and Copies of his own Goodneſs in his Works.

* Gen. 1.

2. Creation was the firſt act of Goodneſs without himſelf. * When he was alone from Eternity, he contented himſelf with himſelf, abounding in his own Bleſſedneſs, delighting in that abundance: He was incomprehenſively rich in the poſſeſſion of an unſtain'd Felicity. † This Creation was the firſt Efflux of his Goodneſs without himſelf: For the Work of Creation cannot be called a Work of Mercy: Mercy ſuppoſeth a Creature miſerable; but that which hath no Being, is ſubject to no Miſery: For to be miſerable, ſuppoſeth a Nature in Being, and depriv'd of that Good which belongs to the pleaſure and felicity of Nature; but ſince there was no Being, there could be no Miſery: The Creation therefore was not an act of Mercy, but an act of ſole Goodneſs: and therefore it was the Speech of

3. There is not one Creature but hath a Character of his Goodneſs. The whole World is a Map to repreſent, and a Herald to proclaim this Perfection. 'Tis as difficult not to ſee ſomething of it in every Creature with the Eye of our Minds, as it is not to ſee the Beams of the ſhining Sun with thoſe of our Bodies. * He is good to all: He is therefore good in all; not a drop of the Creation, but is a drop of his Goodneſs.

* Pſal. 145. 9.

Theſe are the Colours worn upon the Heads of every Creature. As in every Spark the light of the Fire is manifeſted, ſo doth every grain of the Creation wear the viſible Badges of this Perfection. In all the Lights, the Father of Lights hath made the Riches of Goodneſs apparent; No Creature is ſilent in it, 'tis legible to all Nations in every work of his hands; that as it is ſaid of Chriſt, * In the Volume of thy Book it is written of me; In the Volume of the Book of the Scripture 'tis written of me, and my Goodneſs in Redemption: So it may be ſaid of God, In the Volume of the Book of the Creature 'tis written of me, and my Goodneſs in Creation. Every Creature is a Page in this Book, whoſe Line is gone through all the Earth, and their Words to the end of the World †. Tho' indeed the leſs goodneſs in ſome is obſcur'd by the more reſplendent Goodneſs he hath imparted unto others: What an admirable piece of Goodneſs is it to communicate Life to a Fly? How ſhould we ſtand gazing upon it, till we turn our Eye inwards, and view our own Frame, which is much more raviſhing?

* Pſ. 40. 7.

† Pſ. 19. 4.

But let us ſee the Goodneſs of God in the Creation of Man.

1. In the Being and Nature of Man. God hath with a liberal hand conferr'd upon every Creature the beſt Being it was capable of in that Station and Order, and conducing to that end and uſe in the World he intended it for: But when you have run over all the meaſures of Goodneſs God hath poured forth upon other Creatures, you will find a greater fulneſs of it in the Nature of Man, whom he hath placed in a more ſublime condition, and endued with choicer Prerogatives than other Creatures: He was made but little lower than the Angels, and much more loftily crown'd with glory and honour than other Creatures *. Had it not been for Divine Goodneſs, this excellent Creature had lain wrapt up in the Abyſs of nothing; Or if he had call'd it out of nothing, there might have been leſs of Skill, and leſs of Goodneſs diſplay'd in the forming of it, and a leſſer kind of Being imparted to it, than what he hath conferr'd.

* Pſal. 8. 5.

1. How much of Goodneſs is viſible in his Body? God drew out ſome part of the Duſt of the Ground, and copy'd out this Perfection, as well as that of his Power, on that mean matter, by erecting it into the form of Man, quickening that Earth by the Inſpiration of a living Soul *: Of this Matter he compos'd an excellent Body, in regard of the Majeſty of the Face, Erectneſs of its Stature, and Grace of every part: How neatly hath he wrought this Tabernacle of Clay, this Earthly Houſe, as the Apoſtle calls it †? A curious wrought piece of Needle-work, a comely Artifice, ‖ an embroider'd Caſe for an Harmonious Lute: What variety of Members, with a due proportion, without confuſion, beautiful to ſight, excellent for uſe, powerful for ſtrength? It hath Eyes to conduct its Motion, to ſerve in Matter for the Food and Delight of the Underſtanding: Ears to let in the pleaſure of Sounds, to convey Intelligence of the Affairs of the World, and the Counſels of Heaven to a more noble Mind: It hath a Tongue to expreſs, and ſound forth what the learn'd Inhabitant in it thinks; and Hands, to act what the Inward Counſellor directs; and Feet to ſupport the Fabrick: 'Tis temper'd with a kindly heat and an oily moiſture for Motion, and endu'd with conveyances for Air to qualifie the fury of the heat, and nouriſhment to ſupply the decays of moiſture: 'Tis a Cabinet fitted by Divine Goodneſs for the encloſing a rich Jewel; a Palace made of Duſt, to lodge in it the Viceroy of the World: An Inſtrument diſpos'd for the Operations of the nobler Soul, which he intended to unite to that refined Matter: What is there in the ſituation of every part, in the proportion of every Member, in the uſefulneſs of every Limb and String to the Offices of the Body, and Service of the Soul? What is there in the whole Structure that doth not inform us of the Goodneſs of God?

* Gen. 2. 7.

† 2 Cor. 5. 1.

‖ Pſal. 139. 15.

2. But what is this to that Goodneſs which ſhines in the Nature of the Soul? Who can expreſs the Wonders of that Comelineſs that is wrapt up in this Mask of Clay? A Soul endu'd with a clearneſs of Underſtanding and freedom of Will: Faculties no ſooner fram'd, but they were able to produce the Operations they were intended for; A Soul that excelled the whole World, that comprehended the whole Creation; A Soul that evidenc'd the extent of its Skill, in giving Names to all that variety of Creatures, which had iſſued out of the hand of Divine Power *; A Soul able to diſcover the Nature of other Creatures, and manage and conduct their motions. In the Ruines of a Palace we may ſee the Curioſity diſplay'd, and the Coſt expended in the building of it; in the Ruines of this fallen Structure, we ſtill find it capable of a mighty Knowledge, a Reaſon able to regulate Affairs, govern States, order more Mighty and Maſſy Creatures, find out witty Inventions: There is ſtill an Underſtanding to irradiate the other Faculties, a Mind to contemplate its own Creator, a Judgment to diſcern the differences between Good and Evil, Vice and Virtue, which the Goodneſs of God hath not granted to any lower Creature. Theſe Excellent Faculties, together with the Power of Self-reflection, and the ſwiftneſs of the Mind in running over the things of the Creation, are aſtoniſhing Gleams of the vaſt Goodneſs of that Divine Hand which ennobled this Frame. To the other Creatures of this World, God had given out ſome ſmall Mites from his Treaſury; but in the Perfections of Man, he hath open'd the more ſecret parts of his Exchequer, and liberally beſtow'd thoſe Doles, which he hath not expended upon the other Creatures on Earth.

* Gen. 2. 19.

3. Beſides this, He did not only make Man ſo noble a Creature in his Frame, but he made him after his own Image in Holineſs. He imparted to him a Spark of his own Comelineſs, in order to a communion with himſelf in Happineſs, had Man ſtood his ground in his Tryal, and uſed thoſe Faculties well, which had been the Gift of his Bountiful Creator: He made Man after his Image, after his own Image *; that as a Coin bears the Image of the Prince, ſo did the Soul of Man the Image of God: Not the Image of Angels, tho' the Speech be in the Plural Number, [Let us make Man.] 'Tis not to a Creature, but to a Creator; Let us that are his Makers, make him in the Image of his Makers. God created Man, Angels did not create him; God created Man in his own Image, not therefore in the Image of Angels: The Nature of God, and the Nature of Angels are not the ſame. Where in the whole Scripture is Man ſaid to be made after the

* Gen. 1. 26, 27.

the Image of Angels? God made Man not in the Image of Angels, to be conformed to them as his Prototype; but in the Image of the Bleſſed God, to be conform'd to the Divine Nature: That as he was conform'd to the Image of his Holineſs, he might alſo partake of the Image of his Bleſſedneſs, which without it could not be attain'd; for as the felicity of God could not be clear without an unſpotted Holineſs, ſo neither can there be a glorious Happineſs without Purity in the Creature; this God provided for in his Creation of Man, giving him ſuch accompliſhments in thoſe two Excellent Pieces of Soul and Body, that nothing was wanting to him but his own Will, to inſtate him in an invariable Felicity. He was poſſeſſed with ſuch a Nature by the hand of Divine Goodneſs, ſuch a loftineſs of Underſtanding, and purity of Faculties, that he might have been for ever happy, as well as the ſtanding Angels: And he was placed in ſuch a condition, that mov'd the envy of fallen Spirits; he had as much Grace beſtow'd upon him, as was proportionable to that Covenant God then made with him: The Tenor of which was, That his Life ſhould continue ſo long as his Obedience, and his Happineſs endure ſo long as his Integrity: And as God by Creation had given him an Integrity of Nature, ſo he had given him a power to perſiſt in it, if he would. Herein is the Goodneſs of God diſplay'd, that he made Man after his own Image.

4. As to the Life of Man in this World, God by an immenſe Goodneſs copied out in him the whole Creation, and made him an Abridgment of the higher and lower World; a little World in a greater one. The Link of the two Worlds, of Heaven and Earth, as the Spiritual and Corporeal Natures are united in him, the Earth in the Duſt of his Body, and the Heavens in the Cryſtal of his Soul: He hath the upper Springs of the Life of Angels in his Reaſon, and the neather Springs of the Life of Animals in his Senſe. God diſplay'd thoſe Virtues in Man, which he had diſcover'd in the reſt of the lower Creation; but beſides the communication which he had with Earth in his Nature, God gave him a participation with Heaven in his Spirit. A meer Bodily Being he hath given to the Heavens, Earth, Elements: a Vegetative Life, or a Life of Growth he hath vouchſafed to the Plants of the Ground: He hath ſtretched out his Liberality more to Animals and Beaſts by giving them Senſe. All theſe hath his Goodneſs link'd in Man, Being, Life, Senſe, with a richer Dole than any of thoſe Creatures have receiv'd in a Rational Intellectual Life, whereby he approacheth to the Nature of Angels. This ſome of the Jews underſtood. * God breathed into his Noſtrils the Breath of Life, and Man became a living Soul; חיים Breath of Lives, in the Hebrew; not one ſort of Life, but that variety of Lives which he had imparted to other Creatures: All the Perfections ſcatter'd in other Creatures, do unitedly meet in Man: So that Philo might well call him every Creature, the Model of the whole Creation: His Soul is Heaven, and his Body is Earth †. So that the Immenſity of his Goodneſs to Man, is as great as all that Goodneſs you behold in Senſitive and Intelligible things.

* Gen. 2. 7.

† Eugubin. lib. 5. cap. 9.

5. All this was free Goodneſs. God eternally poſſeſſed his own Felicity in himſelf, and had no need of the Exiſtence of any thing without himſelf for his ſatisfaction. Man before his Being could have no good qualities to invite God to make him ſo excellent a Fabrick; for being nothing, he was as unable to allure and merit, as to bring himſelf into being: Nay, he created a multitude of Men, who he foreſaw would behave themſelves in as ungrateful a manner, as if they had not been his Creatures, but had beſtow'd that rich variety upon themſelves without the hand of a Superiour Benefactor.

How great is this Goodneſs, that hath made us Models of the whole Creation, ty'd together Heaven and Earth in our Nature, when he might have rank'd us among the lower Creatures of the Earth, made us meer Bodies as the Stones, or meer Animals as the Brutes, and denied us thoſe Capacious Souls whereby we might both know him and enjoy him? What could Man have been more, unleſs he had been the Original, which was impoſſible? He could not be greater, than to be an Image of the Deity, an Epitome of the whole Creation. Well may we cry out with the Pſalmiſt, * O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy Name, the Name of thy Goodneſs in all the Earth? How more particularly in Man? What is Man, that thou art mindful of him? What is a little Clod of Earth and Duſt, that thou ſhouldſt ennoble him with ſo rich a Nature, and engrave upon him ſuch Characters of thy Immenſe Being?

* Pſal. 8. 1, 4.

6. The Goodneſs of God appears in the Conveniencies he provided for, and gave to Man. As God gave him a Being morally perfect in regard of Righteouſneſs, ſo he gave him a Being naturally perfect in regard of delightful Conveniencies, which was the fruit of Excellent Goodneſs; ſince there was no quality in man, to invite God to provide him ſo rich a world, nor to beſtow upon him ſo comely a Being.

1. The World was made for Man. Since Angels have not need of any thing in this World, and are above the Conveniencies of Earth and Air, it will follow, that Man being the nobleſt Creature on the Earth, was the more immediate End of the viſible Creation. All inferior things are made to be ſubſervient to thoſe that have a more excellent Prerogative of Nature, and therefore all things for Man, who exceeds all the reſt in Dignity: As Man was made for the honour of God, ſo the World was made for the ſupport and delight of Man, in order to his performing the Service due from him to God. The Empire God ſettl'd Man in as his Lieutenant over the Works of his Hands, when he gave him poſſeſſion of Paradiſe, is a clear manifeſtation of it. God put all things under his Feet, and gave him a deputed Dominion over the reſt of the Creatures under himſelf, as the abſolute Sovereign; Thou madeſt him to have Dominion over the Works of thy Hands, thou haſt put all things under his Feet, all Sheep and Oxen, yea, and the Beaſts of the Field, the Fowl of the Air, and the Fiſh of the Sea, yea, and whatſoever paſſeth through the Paths of the Sea *. What leſs is witneſs'd to by the Calamity all Creatures were ſubjected to by the Corruption of Man's Nature? Then was the Earth curs'd, and a black Cloud flung upon the Beauty of the Creation, and the ſtrength and vigor of it languiſheth to this day under the Curſe of God †, and groans under that vanity the Sin of Man ſubjected it to ‖. The Treaſons of Man againſt God, brought Miſery upon that which was fram'd for the uſe of Man: As when the Majeſty of a Prince is violated by the Treaſon and Rebellion of his Subjects, all that which belongs to them, and was before the free Gift of the Prince to them, is forfeit, their Habitations, Palaces, Cattle, all that belongs to them bear the Marks of his Sovereign Fury: Had not the Delicacies of the Earth been made for the uſe of Man, they had not fain under the Indignation of God upon the Sin of Man.

God crown'd the Earth with his Goodneſs to gratifie Man; gave Man a right to ſerve himſelf of the delightful Creatures he had provided; * yea, and after Man had forfeited all by Sin, and God had waſh'd again the Creature in a Deluge, he renews the Creation, and delivers it again into the hand of Man, binding all Creatures to pay a reſpect to him, and recognize him as their Lord, either ſpontaneouſly, or by force; † and commiſſions them all to fill the heart of Man with food and gladneſs: And he loves all Creatures as they conduce to the good of, and are ſerviceable to his prime Creature which he ſet up for his own glory: And therefore when he loves a Perſon, he loves what belongs to him: He takes care of Jacob and his Cattle; of penitent Nineveh and their Cattle: ‖ As when he ſends Judgments upon Men, he deſtroys their Goods.

2. God richly furniſh'd the World for Man. He did not only erect a ſtately Palace for his Habitation, but provided all kind of Furniture as a mark of his Goodneſs for the entertainment of his Creature Man: He arch'd over his Habitation with a beſpangled Heaven, and floor'd it with a ſolid Earth, and ſpread a curious wrought Tapeſtry upon the Ground where he was to tread, and ſeem'd to ſweep all the Rubbiſh of the Chaos to the two uninhabitable Poles. When at the firſt creation of the Matter the Waters cover'd the Earth, and render'd it uninhabitable for Man, God drain'd them into the proper Chanels he had founded for them, and ſet a bound, that they might not paſs over, that they turn not again to cover the Earth *: They fled and haſted away to their proper Stations, † as if they were ambitious to deny their own Nature, and content themſelves with an Impriſonment for the convenient Habitation of him, who was to be appointed Lord of the World. He hath ſet up ſtanding Lights in the Heaven, to direct our Motion, and to regulate the Seaſons: The Sun was created, that Man might ſee to go forth to his Labour *: Both Sun and Moon, tho' ſet in the Heaven, were form'd to give light on the Earth *. The Air is his Aviary, the Sea and Rivers his Fiſhponds, the Valleys his Granary, the Mountains his Magazine; The firſt afford Man Creatures for Nouriſhment, the other Metals for Perfection: The Animals were created for the ſupport of the Life of Man, the Herbs of the Ground were provided for the maintenance of their Lives, and gentle Dews and moiſtening Showers, and in ſome places ſlimy Flouds appointed to render the Earth fruitful, and capable to offer to Man and Beaſt what was fit for their nouriſhment. He hath peopled every Element with a variety of Creatures, both for neceſſity and delight; all furniſh'd with uſeful qualities for the ſervice of Man. There is not the moſt deſpicable thing in the whole Creation, but it is endued with a Nature to contribute ſomething for our Welfare; either as Food to nouriſh us when we are healthful, or as Medicine to cure us when we are diſtemper'd, or as a Garment to cloath us when we are naked, and arm us againſt the cold of the Seaſon, or as a refreſhment when we are weary, or as a delight when we are ſad; All ſerve for Neceſſity or Ornament, either to ſpread our Table, beautifie our Dwellings, furniſh our Cloſets, or ſtore our Wardrobes: † The whole Earth is full of his Riches. Nothing but by the rich Goodneſs of God is exquiſitely accommodated in the numerous brood of things, immediately or mediately for the uſe of Man; All in the iſſue conſpire together to render the World a delightful Reſidence for Man. And therefore all the living Creatures were brought by God to attend upon Man after his Creation, to receive a Mark of his Dominion over them by the impoſition of their Names ‖. He did not only give variety of Senſes to Man, but provided variety of delightful Objects in the World for every Senſe: The Beauties of Light and Colours for our Eye, the Harmony of Sounds for our Ear, the Fragrancy of Odours for our Noſtrils, and a delicious Sweetneſs for our Palates: Some have qualities to pleaſure all, every thing a quality to pleaſure one or other. He doth not only preſent thoſe things to our view, as rich Men do in Oſtentation their Goods: He makes us the Enjoyers as well as the Spectators, and gives us the Uſe as well as the Sight: and therefore he hath not only given us the Sight, but the Knowledge of them. He hath ſet up a Sun in the Heavens, to expoſe their outward Beauty and Conveniencies to our Sight; and the Candle of the Lord is in us, to expoſe their inward qualities and conveniencies to our Knowledge, that we might ſerve our ſelves of, and rejoyce in all this Furniture wherewith he hath garniſh'd the World; and have wherewithal to imploy the inquiſitiveneſs of our Reaſon, as well as gratifie the pleaſure of our Senſe. And particularly, God provided for innocent Man a delightful Manſion-houſe, a place of more ſpecial Beauty and Curioſity, the Garden of Eden, a delightful Paradiſe, a Model of the Beauties and Pleaſures of another World, wherein he had placed whatſoever might contribute to the felicity of a Rational, and Animal Life, the Life of a Creature compoſed of Mire and Duſt, of Senſe and Reaſon *: Beſides the other Delicacies conſign'd in that place to the uſe of Man, there was a Tree of Life provided to maintain his Being, and nothing deny'd in the whole compaſs of that Territory but one Tree, that of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, which was no Mark of an Ill-will in his Creator to him, but a Reſerve of God's abſolute Soveraignty, and a Trial of Man's voluntary Obedience. What blur was it to the Goodneſs of God, to reſerve one Tree for his own propriety, when he had given to Man in all the reſt ſuch numerous Marks of his rich Bounty and Goodneſs? What Iſrael after Man's Fall enjoy'd ſenſibly, Nehemiah calls great Goodneſs †. How inexpreſſible then was that Goodneſs manifeſted to Innocent Man, when ſo ſmall a part of it indulg'd to the Iſraelites after the Curſe upon the Ground, is call'd as truly it merits, ſuch great Goodneſs? How can we paſs through any part of this great City, and caſt our Eyes upon the well-furniſh'd Shops, ſtor'd with all kinds of Commodities, without reflections upon this Goodneſs of God, ſtarting up before our Eyes in ſuch varieties, and plainly telling us, that he hath accommodated all things for our uſe, ſuited things both to ſupply our need, content a reaſonable Curioſity, and delight us in our aims at, and paſſage to our Supream End?

3. The Goodneſs of God appears in the Laws he hath given to Man, the Covenant he made with him. It had not been agreeable to the Goodneſs of God, to let a Creature governable by Law, be without a Law to regulate him, his Goodneſs then which had broke forth in the Creation, had ſuffer'd an eclipſe and obſcurity in his Government. As Infinite Goodneſs was the Motive to create, ſo Infinite Goodneſs was the Motive of his Government. And this appears,

1. In the fitting the Law to the Nature of Man. It was rather below than above his ſtrength; he had an Integrity in his Nature to anſwer the Righteouſneſs of the Precept. * God created Man upright; his Nature was ſuited to the Law, and the Law to his Nature; it was not above his underſtanding to know it, nor his Will to embrace it, nor his paſſions to be regulated by it: The Law and his Nature were like two exact ſtreight Lines, touching one another in every part when joyn'd together: God exacted no more by his Law, than what was written by Nature in his Heart: He had a knowledge by Creation to obſerve the Law of his Creation, and he fell not for want of a Righteouſneſs in his Nature: He was enabl'd for more than was commanded him, but wilfully indiſpos'd to leſs than he was able to perform. The Precepts were eaſie, not only be-becoming the Authority of a Soveraign to exact, but the Goodneſs of a Father to demand, and the Ingenuity of a Creature and a Son to pay. † His Commands are not grievous; the obſervance of them had fill'd the Spirit of Man with an extraordinary Contentment. It had been no leſs a pleaſure and a delightful ſatisfaction to have kept the Law in a Created State, than it is to keep it in ſome meaſure in a renew'd State: The renew'd Nature finds a ſuitableneſs in the Law to kindle a delight ‖: It could not then have any wiſe ſhook the Nature of an upright Creature, nor have been a burden too heavy for his Shoulders to bear. Tho' he had not a Grace given him above Nature, yet he had not a Law given him that ſurmounted his Nature: It did not exceed his Created ſtrength, and was ſuited to the Dignity and Nobility of a Rational Nature: It was a juſt Law *, and therefore not above the Nature of the Subject that was bound to obey it. And had it been impoſſible to be obſerv'd, it had been unrighteous to be Enacted: It had not been a matter of Divine Praiſe, and that ſeven times a day; as it is, † Seven times a day do I praiſe thee, becauſe of thy righteous Judgments. The Law was ſo righteous, that Adam had every whit as much reaſon to bleſs God in his Innocence for the Righteouſneſs of it, as David had with the Relicks of Enmity againſt it: His Goodneſs ſhines ſo much in his Law, as merits our Praiſe of him, as he is a ſovereign Lawgiver, as well as a gracious Benefactor in the imparting to us a Being.

2. In fitting it for the Happineſs of Man. For the ſatisfaction of his Soul, which finds a Reward in the very act of keeping it, * Great peace in the loving it; for the preſervation of Human Society, wherein conſiſts the External felicity of Man. It had been inconſiſtent with Divine Goodneſs to enjoyn Man any thing that ſhould be oppreſſive and uncomfortable. Bitterneſs cannot come from that which is altogether ſweet: Goodneſs would not have oblig'd the Creature to any thing, but what is not only free from damaging him, but wholly conducing to his Welfare, and Perfective of his Nature. Infinite Wiſdom could not order any thing, but what was agreeable to Infinite Goodneſs. As his Laws are the moſt rational, as being the contrivance of Infinite Wiſdom; ſo they are the beſt, as being the Fruit of Infinite Goodneſs. His Laws are not only the acts of his Sovereign Authority, but the Effluxes of his Loving Kindneſs, and the Conductors of Man to an enjoyment of a greater Bounty. He minds as well the promotion of his Creatures Felicity, as the aſſerting his own Authority: As good Princes make Laws for their Subjects benefit, as well as their own honour. What was ſaid of a more difficult and burdenſome Law long after Man's Fall, may much more be ſaid of the eaſie Law of Nature in the ſtate of Man's Innocence, that it was for our good†. He never pleaded with the Iſraelites for the obſervation of his Commands upon the account of his Authority, ſo much as upon the ſcore of their benefit by them.

* Pſal. 119. 165.

† Deut. 10. 12, 13. Deut. 4. 40.

And when his Precepts were broken, he ſeems ſometimes to be more griev'd for Mens impairing their own Felicity by it, than for their violating his Authority; * Oh that thou hadſt hearken'd to my Commandments, then had thy Peace been as a River! Goodneſs cannot preſcribe a thing prejudicial; whatſoever it enjoyns, is beneficial to the Spiritual and Eternal Happineſs of the Rational Creature: This was both the deſign of the Law given, and the end of the Law. Chriſt in his Anſwer to the Young Man's Queſtion, refers him to the Moral Law, (which was the Law of Nature in Adam) as that whereby Eternal Life was to be gain'd: which evidenceth, that when the Law was firſt given as the Covenant of Works, it was for the happineſs of Man; and the end of giving it was, that Man might have Eternal Life by it: There would elſe be no ſtrength or truth in that Anſwer of Chriſt to that Ruler. And therefore Stephen calls the Law given by Moſes, which was the ſame with the Law of Nature in Adam, † The Living Oracles: He enjoyned Mens Services to them not ſimply for his own Glory, but his Glory in Mens Welfare: As if there were any Being better than himſelf, his Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs would guide him to love that better than himſelf; becauſe it is good and righteous to love that beſt which is moſt amiable: So if there were any that could do us more good, and ſhowre down more happineſs upon us than himſelf, he would be content we ſhould obey that as Soveraign, and ſteer our courſe according to his Laws: ‖ If God be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him: If the obſervance of the Precepts of Baal be more beneficial to you; if you can advance your Nature by his Service, and gain a more mighty Crown of Happineſs than by mine, follow him with all my Heart: I never intended to enjoyn you any thing to impair, but encreaſe your Happineſs. The chief deſign of God in his Law, is the Happineſs of the Subject; and Obedience is intended by him, as a means for the attaining of Happineſs, as well as preſerving his own Soveraignty. This is the reaſon why he wiſh'd that Iſrael had walk'd in his ways, that their time might have endured for ever, Pſal. 81. 13, 15, 16. And by the ſame reaſon this was his intendment in his Law given to Man, and his Covenant made with Man at the Creation, that he might be fed with the fineſt part of his Bounty, and be ſatisfied with Honey out of the Eternal Rock of Ages. To paraphraſe his Expreſſion there. The Goodneſs of God appears further,

† Acts 7. 38.

3. In engaging Man to Obedience by Promiſes and Threatnings. A Threatning is only mention'd, Gen. 2. 17. but a Promiſe is imply'd: If Eternal Death were fixed for Tranſgreſſion, Eternal Life was thereby deſign'd for Obedience: And that it was ſo, the Anſwer of Chriſt to the Ruler evidenceth, that the firſt intendment of the Precept was the Eternal Life of the Subject, order'd to obey it.

1. God might have acted in ſetling his Law only as a Sovereign. Tho' he might have dealt with Man upon the ſcore of his abſolute Dominion over him as his Creature, and ſignified his pleaſure upon the right of his Sovereignty, threatning only a Penalty if Man tranſgreſs'd, without the promiſing a bountiful acknowledgment of his Obedience by a Reward as a Benefactor: yet he would treat with Man in gentle Methods, and rule him in a tract of Sweetneſs as well as Sovereignty; He would preſerve the Rights of his Dominion in the Authority of his Commands, and honour the condeſcenſions of his Goodneſs in the allurements of a Promiſe. He that might have ſolely demanded a compliance with his Will, would kindly Article with him, to oblige him to obſerve him out of love to himſelf as well as Duty to his Creator; that he might have both the intereſt of avoiding the threatned Evil to affright him, and the intereſt of attaining the promiſed Good to allure him to Obedience. How doth he value the Title of Benefactor above that of a Lord! when he ſo kindly ſolicits, as well as commands, and engageth to reward that Obedience which he might have abſolutely claim'd as his due, by enforcing fears of the ſevereſt Penalty. His Sovereignty ſeems to ſtoop below it ſelf for the elevation of his Goodneſs; and he is pleas'd to have his Kindneſs more taken notice of than his Authority. Nothing imported more condeſcenſion than his bring-bringing forth his Law in the nature of a Covenant, whereby he ſeems to humble himſelf, and veil his Superiority to treat with Man as his equal, that the very manner of his Treatment might oblige him in the richeſt Promiſes he made to draw him, and the ſtartling Threatnings he pronounc'd to link him to his Obedience: And therefore is it obſervable, that when after the Tranſgreſſion of Adam God comes to deal with him, he doth not do it in that thundring Rigor, which might have been expected from an enrag'd Soveraign, but in a gentle Examination, * Haſt thou eaten of the Tree whereof I commanded thee, that thou ſhouldſt not eat? To the Woman he ſaid no more than, What is this that thou haſt done? And in the Scripture we find, when he cites the Iſraelites before him for their Sin, he expoſtulates with them not ſo much upon the abſolute right he had to challenge their Obedience, as upon the equity and reaſonableneſs of his Law, which they had tranſgreſt; that by the ſame Argument of Sweetneſs wherewith he would attract them to their Duty, he might ſhame them after their Offence †.

* Gen. 3. 11, 13.

† Iſa. 1. 2. Ezek. 18. 25.

2. By the Threatnings he manifeſts his Goodneſs, as well as by his Promiſes. He promiſes that he might be a Rewarder, and threatens that he might not be a Puniſher; the one is to elevate our Hope, and the other to excite our Fear, the two Paſſions whereby the Nature of Man is manag'd in the World. He imprints upon Man Sentiments of a Miſery by Sin in his thundring Commination, that he might engage him the more to embrace and be guided by the Motives of Sweetneſs in his gracious Promiſes. The deſign of them was to preſerve Man in his due bounds, that God might not have occaſion to blow upon him the Flames of his Juſtice; to ſuppreſs thoſe irregular Paſſions, which the Nature of Man (tho' created without any diſorder) was capable of entertaining upon the appearance of ſuitable Objects; and to keep the Waves from ſwelling upon any turning Wind, that ſo Man being modeſt in the uſe of the Goodneſs God had allow'd him, might ſtill be capable of freſh ſtreams of Divine Bounty, without ever falling under his Righteous Wrath for any Tranſgreſſion. What a proſpect of Goodneſs is in this proceeding, to diſcloſe Mans Happineſs to be as durable as his Innocence; and ſet before a Rational Creature the extreameſt Miſery due to his Crime, to affright him from neglecting his Creator, and making unworthy Returns to his Goodneſs? What could be done more by Goodneſs to ſuit that paſſion of fear which was implanted in the Nature of Man, than to aſſure him he ſhould not degenerate from the Righteouſneſs of his Nature, and violate the Authority of his Creator, without falling from his own Happineſs, and ſinking into the moſt deplorable Calamity?

3. The Reward he promiſed manifeſts yet further his Goodneſs to Man. It was his Goodneſs to intend a Reward to Man: No Neceſſity could oblige God to reward Man, had he continu'd obedient in his created State: For in all Rewards which are truly merited, beſides ſome kind of equality to be conſider'd between the Perſon doing Service, and the Perſon Rewarding, and alſo between the Act perform'd, and the Reward beſtow'd, there muſt alſo be conſider'd the condition of the Perſon doing the Service, that he is not oblig'd to do it as a Duty, but is at his own choice whether to offer it or no: But Man being wholly dependent on God in his Being and Preſervation, having nothing of his own, but what he had receiv'd from the hands of Divine Bounty, * his Service was due by the ſtrongeſt Obligation to God: But there was no natural Engagement on God to return a Reward to him; for Man could return nothing of his own, but that only which he had receiv'd from his Creator: It muſt be pure Goodneſs that gives a gracious Reward for a due Debt, to receive his own from Man, and return more than he had receiv'd. A Divine Reward doth far ſurmount the value of a Rational Service.

* 1 Cor. 4. 7.

It was therefore a mighty Goodneſs to ſtipulate with man, that upon his Obedience he ſhould enjoy an Immortality in that Nature. * The Article on man's part was Obedience, which was neceſſarily juſt, and founded in the Nature of man: He had been unjuſt, ungrateful, and violated all Laws of Righteouſneſs, had he committed any act unworthy of one that had been ſo great a Subject of Divine Liberality: But the Article on God's part of giving a perpetual Bleſſedneſs to Innocent Man, was not founded upon Rules of ſtrict Juſtice and Righteouſneſs, for that would have argu'd God to be a Debtor to Man; but that God cannot be to the Work of his hands, that had receiv'd the Materials of his Being and Acting from him, as the Veſſel doth from the Potter. But this was founded only on the Goodneſs of the Divine Nature, whereby he cannot but be kind to an innocent and holy Creature. The Nature of God inclin'd him to it by the Rules of Goodneſs, but the Service of Man could not claim it by the Rules of Juſtice without a ſtipulation: So that the Covenant whereby God oblig'd himſelf to continue the Happineſs of Man upon the continuance of his Obedience, in the original of it, ſprings from pure Goodneſs, tho' the performance of it upon the fulfilling the Condition requir'd in the Creature, was founded upon the Rules of Righteouſneſs and Truth, after Divine Goodneſs had brought it forth.

* Amyral. Diſſertat. p. 637, 638.

God did create Man for a Reward and Happineſs. Now God's implanting in the Nature of Man a deſire after Happineſs, and ſome higher Happineſs than he had in Creation inveſted him in, doth evidence, that God did not create Man only for his own Service, but for his attaining a greater Happineſs. All Rational Creatures are poſſeſs'd with a Principle of ſeeking after Good, the higheſt Good, and God did not plant in Man this Principle in vain: It had not been Goodneſs to put this Principle in Man, if he had deſign'd never to beſtow a Happineſs on Man for his Obedience: This had been repugnant to the Goodneſs and Wiſdom of God; and the Scripture doth very emphatically expreſs the Felicity of man to be the deſign of God in the firſt forming him and moulding a Creature, as well as working him a new Creature, * He that hath wrought us for the ſelf-ſame thing, is God: He fram'd this Earthly Tabernacle for a Reſidence in an Eternal Habitation, and a better Habitation than an Earthly Paradiſe. What we expect in the Reſurrection, that very ſame thing God did in Creation intend us for; but ſince the Corruption of our Natures, we muſt undergo a diſſolution of our Bodies, and may have juſt reaſon of a deſpondency, ſince Sin hath ſeem'd to change the courſe of God's Bounty, and brought us under a Curſe. He hath given us the Earneſt of his Spirit, as an aſſurance that he will perform that very ſelf-ſame thing, the conferring that Happineſs upon renew'd Creatures, for which he firſt form'd man in Creation, when he compacted his Earthly Tabernacle of the Duſt of the Ground, and rear'd it up before him.

* 2 Cor. 5. 1, 5.

4. It was a mighty Goodneſs that God ſhould give Man an Eternal Reward. That an Eternity of Reward was promis'd, is imply'd in the Death that was threatned upon Tranſgreſſion: Whatſoever you conceive the threatned Death to be, either for nature or duration upon Tranſgreſſion; of the ſame nature and duration you muſt ſuppoſe the Life to be, which is imply'd upon his conſtancy in his Integrity.

grity. As Sin would render him an Eternal Object of God's hatred, ſo his Obedience would render him an Eternally amiable Object to his Creator, as the ſtanding Angels are preſerved and confirmed in an intire Felicity and Glory. Though the Threatning be only expreſt by God, * yet the other is implied, and might eaſily be concluded from it by Adam. And one reaſon why God only expreſt the Threatning, and not the Promiſe, was, becauſe Man might collect ſome Hopes and Expectations of a perpetual Happineſs from that Image of God which he beheld in himſelf, and from the large Proviſion he had made for him in the World, and the Commiſſion given him to Increaſe and Multiply, and to Rule as a Lord over his other Works; whereas he could not ſo eaſily have imagined himſelf capable of being expos'd to ſuch an extraordinary Calamity as an Eternal Death, without ſome ſignification of it from God. 'Tis eaſily concludable, That Eternal Life was ſuppoſed to be promiſed, to be conferr'd upon him if he ſtood, as well as Eternal Death to be inflicted on him if he rebell'd †. Now this Eternal Life was not due to his Nature, but it was a pure Beam, and Gift of Divine Goodneſs: For there was no proportion between Man's Service in his Innocent Eſtate, and a Reward ſo great both for Nature and Duration: It was a higher Reward than can be imagined either due to the Nature of Man, or upon any Natural Right claimable by his Obedience. All that could be expected by him, was but a Natural Happineſs, not a Supernatural: As there was no neceſſity upon the accounnt of Natural Righteouſneſs, ſo there was no neceſſity upon the account of the Goodneſs of God to elevate the Nature of Man to a Supernatural Happineſs, meerly becauſe he created him: For tho' it be neceſſary for God, when he would create, in regard of his Wiſdom, to create for ſome End, yet it was not neceſſary that End ſhould be a Supernatural End and Happineſs, ſince a Natural Bleſſedneſs had been ſufficient for Man. And tho' God in creating Angels and Men Intellectual and Rational Creatures, did make them neceſſarily for himſelf and his own Glory, yet it was not neceſſary for him to order either Angels or Men to ſuch a Felicity as conſiſts in a clear Viſion, and ſo high a Fruition of himſelf: 'for all other things are made by him for himſelf, and yet not for the Viſion of himſelf. God might have created Man only for a Natural Happineſs, according to the Perfection of his Natural Faculties, and had dealt bountifully with him, if he had never intended him a Supernatural Bleſſedneſs, and an Eternal Recompence: But what a largeneſs of Goodneſs is here, to deſign Man in his Creation for ſo rich a Bleſſedneſs as an Eternal Life, with the Fruition of Himſelf? He hath not only given to Man all things which are neceſſary, but deſign'd for Man that which the poor Creature could not imagine: He garniſht the Earth for him, and garniſht him for an Eternal Felicity, had he not by ſlighting the Goodneſs of God ſtript himſelf of the preſent, and forfeited his future Bleſſedneſs.

2. The Second thing is the manifeſtation of this Goodneſs in Redemption: The whole Goſpel is nothing but one entire Mirror of Divine Goodneſs: The whole of Redemption is wrapt up in that one Expreſſion of the Angels Song, Luke 2. 14. Good will towards Man. The Angels Sang but one Song before, which is upon Record, but the Matter of it ſeems to be the Wiſdom of God chiefly in Creation, Job 38. 7. compar. 9. v. 5, 6, 8, 9. The Angels are there meant by the Morning Stars; The viſible Stars of Heaven were not diſtinctly form'd, when the Foundations of the Earth were laid: And the Title of the Sons of God verifies it, ſince none but Creatures of Underſtanding are dignified in Scripture with that Title. There they Celebrate his Wiſdom in Creation; here his Goodneſs in Redemption, which is the intire Matter of the Song.

1. Goodneſs was the Spring of Redemption. All and every part of it owes only to this Perfection the appearance of it in the World. This only excited Wiſdom to bring forth from ſo great an Evil as the Apoſtacy of Man, ſo great a Good as the Recovery of him. When Man fell from his created Goodneſs, God would evidence that he could not fall from his Infinite Goodneſs: That the greateſt Evil could not ſurmount the Ability of his Wiſdom to contrive, nor the Riches of his Bounty to preſent us a Remedy for it. Divine Goodneſs would not ſtand by a Spectator, without being Reliever of that Miſery Man had plung'd himſelf into; but by aſtoniſhing Methods it would recover him to Happineſs, who had wreſted himſelf out of his hands, to fling himſelf into the moſt deplorable Calamity: And it was the greater, ſince it ſurmounted thoſe Natural Inclinations, and thoſe ſtrong Provocations, which he had to ſhower down the Power of his Wrath. What could be the Source of ſuch a Procedure, but this Excellency of the Divine Nature; Since no Violence could force him, nor was there any Merit to perſwade to ſuch a Reſtoration? This under the name of his Love, is render'd the ſole cauſe of the Redeeming Death of the Son: It was to commend his Love with the higheſt Gloſs, and in ſo ſingular a manner that had not its parallel in Nature, nor in all his other Works, and reaches in the brightneſs of it beyond the manifeſted extent of any other Attribute *. It muſt be only a miraculous Goodneſs that induced him to expoſe the Life of his Son to thoſe difficulties in the World, and Death upon the Croſs for the freedom of ſordid Rebels: His great End was to give ſuch a demonſtration of the liberality of his Nature, as might be attractive to his Creature, remove its ſhakings and tremblings, and encourage its approaches to him. 'Tis in this he would not only manifeſt his Love, but aſſume the name of Love. By this Name the Holy Ghoſt calls him in relation to this good will manifeſted in his Son, † God is Love. In this is manifeſt the Love of God towards us, becauſe that God ſent his only begotten Son into the World, that we might live through him. He would take the Name he never expreſt himſelf in before. He was Jehovah in regard of the truth of his Promiſe; ſo he would be known of old: He is Goodneſs in regard of the grandeur of his Affection in the miſſion of his Son: And therefore he would be known by the Name of Love now in the days of the Goſpel.

2. It was a Pure Goodneſs. He was under no obligation to pity our Miſery, and repair our Ruines: He might have ſtood to the terms of the firſt Covenant, and exacted our Eternal Death, ſince we had committed an infinite Tranſgreſſion: He was under no Tie to put off the Robes of a Judge for the Bowels of a Father, and erect a Mercy Seat above his Tribunal of Juſtice *. The reparation of Man had no neceſſary connexion with his Creation; It follows not, that becauſe Goodneſs had extracted us from nothing by a mighty Power, that it muſt lift us out of wilful Miſery by a mighty Grace. Certainly that God who had no need of Creating us, had far leſs need of Redeeming us: For ſince he Created one World, he could have as eaſily deſtroyed it and rear'd another. It had not been unbecoming the Divine Goodneſs or Wiſdom, to have let Man perpetually wallow in that Sink wherein he had plung'd himſelf, ſince he was Criminal by his own Will, and therefore Miſerable by by his own Fault: Nothing could neceſſitate this Reparation. If Divine Goodneſs could not be oblig'd by the Angelical Dignity to repair that Nature, he is further from any Obligation by the meanneſs of Man to repair Humane Nature. There was leſs neceſſity to reſtore Man, than to reſtore the fallen Angels: What could Man do to oblige God to a reparation of him, ſince he could not render him a Recompence for his Goodneſs manifeſted in his Creation? He muſt be much more impotent to render him a Debtor for the Redemption of him from Miſery. Could it be a Salary for any thing we had done? Alas! we are ſo far from meriting it, that by our daily Demerits, we ſeem ambitious to put a ſtop to any further Effuſioni of it: We could not have complain'd of him, if he had left us in the Miſery we had courted, ſince he was bound by no Law to beſtow upon us the Recovery we wanted. When the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Goſpel of Redemption, he giveth it the Title of the Goſpel of the bleſſed God †. It was the Goſpel of a God abounding in his own Bleſſedneſs, which receiv'd no addition by Man's Redemption; If he had been bleſſed by it, it had been a goodneſs to himſelf, as well as to the Creature: It was not an Indigent Goodneſs needing the receiving any thing from us: but it was a pure Goodneſs, ſtreaming out of it ſelf, without bringing any thing into it ſelf for the Perfection of it: There was no Goodneſs in us to be the Motive of his Love, but his Goodneſs was the Fountain of our Benefit.

† 2 Tim. 1. 11.

3. It was a diſtinct Goodneſs of the whole Trinity. In the Creation of Man we find a general Conſultation,* without thoſe diſtinct Labours and Offices of each Perſon; and without thoſe rais'd Expreſſions and Marks of Joy and Triumph as at Man's Reſtoration. In this there are diſtinct Functions: The Grace of the Father, the Merit of the Son, and the Efficacy of the Spirit: The Father makes the Promiſe of Redemption, the Son Seals it with his Blood, and the Spirit applies it; the Father adopts us to be his Children, the Son Redeems us to be his Members, and the Spirit Renews us to be his Temples. In this the Father teſtifies himſelf well-pleaſed in a Voice; The Son proclaims his own delight to do the Will of God; and the Spirit haſtens with the Wing of a Dove to fit him for his Work; And afterwards in his Apparition in the likeneſs of Fiery Tongues, manifeſts his Zeal for the propagation of the Redeeming Goſpel.

* Gen. 1. 26.

4. The Effects of it proclaim his great Goodneſs. 'Tis by this we are deliver'd from the Corruption of our Nature, the Ruine of our Happineſs, the deformity of our Sins, and the puniſhment of our Tranſgreſſions: He frees us from the Ignorance wherewith we were darkned, and from the Slavery wherein we were fetter'd. When he came to make Adam's Proceſs after his Crime, inſtead of pronouncing the Sentence of Death he had merited, he utters a Promiſe that Man could not have expected: His Kindneſs ſwells above his provoked Juſtice, and while he chaſeth him out of Paradiſe, he gives him hopes of regaining the ſame or a better Habitation; and is in the whole, more ready to prevent him with the Bleſſings of his Goodneſs, than charge him with the horrour of his Crimes *: 'Tis a Goodneſs that pardons us more Tranſgreſſions than there are Moments in our Lives; and overlooks as many Follies as there are Thoughts in our Heart: He doth not only relieve our wants, but reſtores us to our Dignity. 'Tis a greater Teſtimony of Goodneſs to inſtate a Perſon in the higheſt Honour, than barely to ſupply his preſent Neceſſity; 'Tis an admirable Pity, whereby he was inclin'd to Redeem us, and an incomparable Affection whereby he was reſolv'd to exalt us. What can be deſir'd more of him than his Goodneſs hath granted? He hath ſought us out when we were loſt, and Ranſom'd us when we were Captives: He hath pardon'd us when we were Condemn'd, and rais'd us when we were Dead. In Creation he rear'd us from Nothing, in Redemption he delivers our Underſtanding from Ignorance and Vanity, and our Wills from Impotence and Obſtinacy, and our whole Man from a Death worſe than that Nothing he drew us from by Creation.

* Gen. 3. 15.

5. Hence we may conſider the height of this Goodneſs in Redemption to exceed that in Creation. He gave Man a Being in Creation, but did not draw him from unexpreſſible Miſery by that act. His Liberality in the Goſpel doth infinitely ſurpaſs what we admire in the Works of Nature: His Goodneſs in the latter is more aſtoniſhing to our Belief, than his Goodneſs in Creation is viſible to our Eye. There is more of his Bounty expreſt in that one Verſe, (* So God loved the World that he gave his only begotten Son) than there is in the whole Volume of the World: 'Tis an incomprehenſible So; a So, that all the Angels in Heaven cannot Analyze, and few Comment upon, or underſtand the Dimenſions of this So. In Creation he form'd an Innocent Creature of the Duſt of the Ground; in Redemption he reſtores a Rebellious Creature by the Blood of his Son: It is greater than that Goodneſs manifeſted in Creation.

* Joh. 3. 16

1. In regard of the difficulty of effecting it. In Creation meer nothing was vanquiſht, to bring us into Being; In Redemption ſullen Enmity was conquer'd for the enjoyment of our Reſtoration; In Creation he ſubdued a Nullity to make us Creatures; In Redemption his Goodneſs overcomes his Omnipotent Juſtice to reſtore us to Felicity; A word from the Mouth of Goodneſs inſpir'd the Duſt of Mens Bodies with a living Soul; but the Blood of his Son muſt be ſhed, and the Laws of Natural Affection ſeem to be overturn'd, to lay the Foundation of our renew'd Happineſs. In the firſt, Heaven did but ſpeak, and the Earth was form'd; In the ſecond, Heaven it ſelf muſt ſink to Earth, and be clothed with duſty Earth to reduce Man's Duſt to its Original State.

2. This Goodneſs is greater than that manifeſted in Creation, in regard of its Coſt. This was a more expenſive Goodneſs than what was laid out in Creation; The Redemption of one Soul is precious *, much more coſtly than the whole Fabrick of the World, or as many Worlds as the underſtandings of Angels in their utmoſt extent can conceive to be created: For the effecting of this God parts with his deareſt Treaſure, and his Son Eclipſes his choiceſt Glory; for this God muſt be made Man, Eternity muſt ſuffer Death, the Lord of Angels muſt weep in a Cradle, and the Creator of the World muſt hang like a Slave; he muſt be in a Manger in Bethlehem, and die upon a Croſs on Calvary: Unſpotted Righteouſneſs muſt be made Sin, and unblemiſht Bleſſedneſs be made a Curſe. He was at no other Expence than the Breath of his Mouth to form Man; the Fruits of the Earth could have maintained Innocent Man without any other Coſt; but his broken Nature cannot be heal'd without the invaluable Medicine of the Blood of God. View Chriſt in the Womb, and in the Manger, in his weary Steps and hungry Bowels, in his Proſtrations in the Garden, and in his clodded drops of Bloody Sweat; View his Head pierced with a Crown of Thorns, and his Face beſmeared with the Soldiers Slabber; View him in his march to Calvary, and his Elevation on the painful Croſs with his Head hang'd down, and his Side ſtreaming Blood; View him pelted with with the Scoffs of the Governours, and the Deriſions of the Rabble; and ſee in all this, what Coſt Goodneſs was at for Man's Redemption. In Creation his Power made the Sun to ſhine upon us, and in Redemption his Bowels ſent a Son to die for us.

3. This Goodneſs of God in Redemption is greater than that manifeſted in Creation, in regard of Man's deſert of the contrary. In the Creation, as there was nothing without him to allure him to the Expreſſions of his Bounty, ſo there was nothing that did damp the Inclinations of his Goodneſs: The nothing from whence the World was drawn, could never merit nor demerit a Being, becauſe it was nothing: As there was nothing to engage him, ſo there was nothing to diſoblige him: As his Favor could not be merited, ſo neither could his Anger be deſerved. But in this he finds Ingratitude againſt the former Marks of his Goodneſs, and Rebellion againſt the ſweetneſs of his Sovereignty: Crimes unworthy of the Dews of Goodneſs, and worthy of the ſharpeſt ſtrokes of Vengeance: And therefore the Scripture advanceth the honour of it above the title of meer Goodneſs, to that of *Grace, becauſe Men were not only unworthy of a Bleſſing, but worthy of a Curſe. An innocent Nothing more deſerves Creation, than a culpable Creature deſerves an exemption from Deſtruction. When Man fell, and gave occaſion to God to repent of his Created Work, his raviſhing Goodneſs ſurmounted the occaſions he had of repenting, and the provocations he had to the deſtruction of his Frame.

*Rom. 5. 2. Tit. 2. 11.

6. It was a greater Goodneſs than was expreſs'd towards the Angels.

1. A greater Goodneſs than was expreſt towards the ſtanding Angels. The Son of God did no more expoſe his Life for the confirmation of thoſe that ſtood, than for the reſtoration of thoſe that fell: The Death of Chriſt was not for the holy Angels, but for ſinful Man; they needed the Grace of God to confirm them, but not the Death of Chriſt to reſtore or preſerve them; They had a beloved Holineſs to be eſtabliſh'd by the powerful Grace of God, but not any abominable Sin to be expiated and blotted out by the Blood of God: They had no Debt to pay but that of Obedience; but we had both a Debt of Obedience to the Precepts, and a Debt of Suffering to the Penalty after the Fall. Whether the Holy Angels were confirm'd by Chriſt, or no, is a queſtion: Some think they were, from Coloſ. 1. 20. where things in Heaven are ſaid to be reconcil'd; but ſome think that place ſignifies no more than the Reconciliation of things in Heaven, if meant of the Angels, to things on Earth, with whom they were at enmity in the Cauſe of their Soveraign; or the reconciliation of things in Heaven to God, is meant the glorified Saints, who were once in a ſtate of Sin, and whom the Death of Chriſt upon the Croſs reached, tho' dead long before. But if Angels were confirm'd by Chriſt, it was by him not as a ſlain Sacrifice, but as the Soveraign Head of the whole Creation, appointed by God to gather all things into one, which ſome think to be the intendment of, Epheſ. 1. 10. where all things, as well thoſe in Heaven, as thoſe on Earth are ſaid to be gather'd together in one in Chriſt. Where is a Syllable in Scripture of his being crucified for Angels, but only for Sinners? Not for the confirmation of the one, but the reconciliation of the other; ſo that the Goodneſs whereby God continued thoſe Bleſſed Spirits in Heaven thro' the effuſions of his Grace, is a ſmall thing to the reſtoring us to our forfeited Happineſs through the Streams of Divine Blood. The preſerving a Man in Life, is a little thing, and a ſmaller Benefit than the raiſing a Man from Death. The reſcuing a Man from an ignominious Puniſhment, lays a greater Obligation than barely to prevent him from committing a capital Crime. The preſerving a Man ſtanding upon the top of a ſteep Hill is more eaſie, than to bring a Cripled and Ptyſical Man from the bottom to the top. The continuance God gave to the Angels, is not ſo ſignal a Mark of Goodneſs, as the deliverance he gave to us, ſince they were not ſunk into Sin, nor by any Crime fallen into Miſery.

2. His Goodneſs in Redemption is greater than any Goodneſs expreſs'd to the Fallen Angels. 'Tis the wonder of his Goodneſs to us, that he was mindful of Fall'n Man, and careleſs of Fall'n Angels; that he ſhould viſit Man, wallowing in Death and Blood with the Day-ſpring from on high, and never turn the Ægyptian darkneſs of Devils into a chearful day: When they ſinn'd, Divine Thunder daſh'd them into Hell; when Man ſinn'd, Divine Blood wafts the fallen Creature from his Miſery: The Angels wallow in their own Blood for ever, while Chriſt is made partaker of our Blood, and wallows in his Blood, that we might not for ever corrupt in ours; they tumbled down from Heaven, and Divine Goodneſs could not vouchſafe to catch them: Man tumbles down, and Divine Goodneſs holds out a hand drencht in the Blood of him that was from the Foundations of the World, to lift us up, Heb. 2. 16. He ſpared not thoſe dignified Spirits, when they revolted; and ſpared not puniſhing his Son for duſty Man, when he offended, when he might as well for ever have let Man lie in the Chains wherein he had entangled himſelf, as them. We were as fit Objects of Juſtice as they, and they as fit Objects of Goodneſs as we: they were not more wretched by their Fall than we, and the poverty of our Nature render'd us more unable to recover our ſelves, than the dignity of theirs did them: They were his Reuben, his Firſt-born, they were his Might, and the beginning of his Strength, yet thoſe Elder Sons he neglected to prefer the Younger; They were the Prime and Golden Pieces of Creation, not laden with groſs matter, yet they lie under the Ruines of their Fall, while Man, Lead in compariſon of them, is refin'd for another World.

They ſeem'd to be fitter Objects of Divine Goodneſs, in regard of the eminency of their Nature above the Humane: One Angel excelled in Endowments of Mind and Spirit, vaſtneſs of Underſtanding, greatneſs of Power, all the Sons of Men; they were more capable to praiſe him, more capable to ſerve him, and becauſe of the acuteneſs of their Comprehenſion, more able to have a due Eſtimate of ſuch a Redemption, had it been afforded them; yet that Goodneſs which had created them ſo comely, would not lay it ſelf out in reſtoring the Beauty they had defaced. The Promiſe was of bruiſing the Serpent's Head for us, not of lifting up the Serpent's Head with us; Their Nature was not aſſum'd, nor any command given them to believe or repent: Not one Devil ſpar'd, not one Apoſtate Spirit recover'd, not one of thoſe eminent Creatures reſtor'd; every one of them hath only a proſpect of Miſery, without any glimps of Recovery: They were ruin'd under one Sin, and we repair'd under many. All his Redeeming Goodneſs was laid out upon Man, Pſal. 144. 3. What is Man that thou takeſt knowledge of him, and the Son of Man, that thou makeſt account of him? Making account of him above Angels; As they fell without any tempting them, ſo God would leave them to riſe without any aſſiſting them. I know the Schools trouble themſelves to find out the Reaſons of this peculiarity of Grace to Man, and not to them; becauſe the whole Humane Nature fell, but only a part of the Angelical; The one ſinned by a Seduction, and the other by a Sullenness without any Tempter: Every Angel sinned by his own proper Will, whereas Adam's Posterity sinned by the Will of the first Man, the common Root of all. God would deprive the Devil of any Glory in the satisfaction of his envious desire to hinder Man from attainment and possession of that Happiness which himself had lost. The weakness of Man below the Angelical Nature might excite the Divine Mercy: And since all the things of the lower World were created for Man, God would not lose the Honour of his Works, by losing the immediate End for which he framed them. And finally, because in the Restoration of Angels, there would have been only a restoration of one Nature, that was not comprehensive of the Nature of Inferiour Things: But after all such Conjectures, Man must sit down, and acknowledge Divine Goodness to be the only Spring without any other Motive. Since Infinite Wisdom could have contriv'd a way for Redemption for Fallen Angels, as well as for Fallen Man, and restor'd both the one and the other, why might not Christ have assum'd their Nature as well as ours into the Unity of the Divine Person, and suffer'd the Wrath of God in their Nature for them, as well as in his Humane Soul for us? 'Tis as conceivable that two Natures might have been assum'd by the Son of God, as well as three Souls be in Man distinct, as some think there are.

3. To enhance this Goodness yet higher; It was a greater Goodness to us, than was for a time manifested to Christ himself. To demonstrate his Goodness to Man in preventing his Eternal Ruine, he would for a while with-hold his Goodness from his Son, by exposing his Life as the price of our Ransom; not only subjecting him to the derisions of Enemies, desertions of Friends, and malice of Devils, but to the unexpressible bitterness of his own Wrath in his Soul, as made an offering for Sin.

The Particle so, John 3. 16. seems to intimate this Supremacy of Goodness: He so loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son. He so loved the World, that he seem'd for a time not to love his Son in comparison of it, or equal with it. The Person to whom a Gift is given, is in that regard accounted more valuable than the Gift or Present made to him: Thus God valued our Redemption above the Worldly Happiness of the Redeemer, and sentenceth him to an Humiliation on Earth, in order to our Exaltation in Heaven: He was desirous to hear him groaning, and see him bleeding, that we might not groan under his Frowns, and bleed under his Wrath: He spared not him, that he might spare us; refused not to strike him, that he might be well pleas'd with us; drench'd his Sword in the Blood of his Son, that it might not for ever be wet with ours; but that his Goodness might for ever triumph in our Salvation: He was willing to have his Son made Man, and die, rather than Man should perish, who had delighted to ruine himself; He seem'd to degrade him for a time from what he was *: But since he could not be united to any but to an intellectual Creature, he could not be united to any viler and more sordid Creature than the Earthly Nature of Man. And when this Son in our Nature pray'd, That the Cup might pass from him, Goodness would not suffer it, to shew how it valued the manifestation of it self in the Salvation of Man, above the preservation of the Life of so dear a Person.

* Lingeud. de Eucharist. p. 84, 85.

In particular wherein this Goodness appears;

1. The first Resolution to Redeem, and the means appointed for Redemption, could have no other inducement but Divine Goodness. We cannot too highly value the Merit of Christ; but we must not so much extend the Merit of Christ, as to draw a Veil to eclipse the Goodness of God: Tho' we owe our Redemption, and the Fruits of it, to the Death of Christ, yet we owe not the first Resolutions of Redemption, and assumption of our Nature, the means of Redemption, to the merit of Christ. Divine Goodness only, without the association of any Merit, not only of Man, but of the Redeemer himself, begat the first purpose of our Recovery: He was singl'd out, and predestinated to be our Redeemer, before he took our Nature to merit our Redemption. God sent his Son, is a frequent Expression in the Gospel of St. John †. To what end did God send Christ, but to redeem? ‖ The purpose of Redemption therefore preceded the pitching upon Christ as the means and procuring cause of it, i. e. of our actual Redemption, but not of the Redeeming Purpose; the end is always in intention before the means. God so loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son; The love of God to the World was first in Intention and the Order of Nature, before the will of giving his Son to the World. His Intention of saving was before the Mission of a Saviour: So that this Affection rose not from the Merit of Christ, but the Merit of Christ was directed by this Affection. It was the Effect of it, not the Cause. Nor was the Union of our Nature with his merited by him; All his meritorious acts were perform'd in our Nature: The Nature therefore wherein he perform'd it was not merited; that Nature which was not, could not merit what it was: He could not merit that Humanity, which must be assum'd before he could merit any thing for us, because all Merit for us must be offer'd in the Nature which had offended. 'Tis true, Christ gave himself, but by the order of Divine Goodness; he that begat him pitch'd upon him, and call'd him to this great Work: * He is therefore call'd, The Lamb of God, as being set apart by God to be a propitiating and appeasing Sacrifice. He is the Wisdom of God, since from the Father he reveals the Councel and Order of Redemption. In this regard he calls God, his God, in the Prophet †, and in the Evangelist ‖; tho' he was big with affection for the accomplishment, yet he came not to do his own Will, but the Will of Divine Goodness: His own Will it was too, but not principally, as being the first Wheel in Motion, but subordinate to the Eternal Will of Divine Bounty. It was by the Will of God that he came, and by his Will he drank the dreggy Cup of Bitterness. Divine Justice laid upon him the iniquity of us all, but Divine Goodness intended it for our rescue: Divine Goodness singl'd him out, and set him apart: Divine Goodness invited him to it: Divine Goodness commanded him to effect it, and put a Law into his Heart, to bias him in the performing of it. Divine Goodness sent him, and Divine Goodness moved Justice to bruise him; and after his Sacrifice, Divine Goodness accepted him, and cares'd him for it. So earnest was it for our Redemption, as to give out special and irreversible orders: Death was commanded to be endured by him for us, and Life commanded to be imparted by him to us *. If God had not been the Mover, but had receiv'd the Proposal from another, he might have heard it, but was not bound to grant it: His Soveraign Authority was not under any Obligation to receive another's Sponsion for the miserable Criminal. As Christ is the Head of Man, so God is the Head of Christ *; He did nothing but by his directions, as he was not a Mediator but by the constitution of Divine Goodness. As a libe-

*Iſa. 2. 8. a liberal man deviſeth liberal things *, ſo did a bountiful God deviſe a bountiful act, wherein his kindneſs and love as a Saviour appear'd: He was poſſeſt with the reſolutions to manifeſt his Goodneſs in † Prov. 8. 22, 23. Chriſt in the beginning of his way †, before he deſcended to the act of Creation. This intention of Goodneſs preceded his making that Creature Man, who he foreſaw would fall, and by his fall disjoynt and entangle the whole Frame of the World without ſuch a proviſion.

2. In God's giving Chriſt to be our Redeemer, he gave the higheſt Gift that it was poſſible for Divine Goodneſs to beſtow. As there is not a greater God than himſelf to be conceiv'd, ſo there is not a greater Gift for this great God to preſent to his creatures: Never did God go farther in any of his excellent Perfections than this. 'Tis ſuch a Dole that cannot be tranſcended with a choicer: He is as it were come to the laſt Mite of his Treaſure. And tho' he could create Millions of Worlds for us, he cannot give a greater Son to us. He could abound in the Expreſſions of his Power in new Creations of Worlds, which have not yet been ſeen, and in the luſtre of his Wiſdom in more ſtately Structures; but if he ſhould frame as many Worlds as there are Mites of Duſt and Matter in this, and make every one of them as bright and glorious as the Sun; tho' his Power and Wiſdom would be more ſignaliz'd, yet his Goodneſs could not, ſince he hath not a choicer Gift to bleſs thoſe brighter Worlds withal, than he hath conferr'd upon this. Nor can Immenſe Goodneſs contrive a richer means to conduct thoſe worlds to Happineſs, than he hath both invented for this World, and preſented it with. It cannot be imagin'd, that it can extend it ſelf farther, than to give a Gift equal with himſelf, a Gift as dear to him as himſelf. His Wiſdom, had it ſtudied millions of Eternities, (excuſe the Expreſſion, ſince Eternity admits of no millions, it being an interminable duration) it could have found out no more to give, this Goodneſs could have beſtow'd no more, and our Neceſſity could not have requir'd a greater Offering for our relief. When God intended in Redemption the manifeſtation of his higheſt Goodneſs, it could not be without the Donation of the choiceſt Gift. As when he would enſure our Comfort, he ſwears by himſelf, becauſe he cannot ſwear by a greater * Heb. 6. 12 * : So when he would inſure our Happineſs, he gives us his Son, becauſe he cannot give a greater, being equal with himſelf. Had the Father given himſelf in Perſon, he had given one firſt in order, but not greater in Eſſence and glorious Perfections: It could have been no more than the Life of God, that ſhould then have been laid down for us; and ſo it was now, ſince the Human Nature did not ſubſiſt but in his Divine Perſon.

1. 'Tis a greater Gift than Worlds, or all things purchaſed by him. What was this Gift but the Image * Heb. 1. 3. of his Perſon, and the brightneſs of his Glory *? What was this Gift, but one as rich as Eternal Bleſſedneſs could make him? What was this Gift, but one that poſſeſs'd the fulneſs of Earth, and the more Immenſe Riches of Heaven? 'Tis a more valuable Preſent, than if he preſented us with thouſands of Worlds of Angels and inferior Creatures, beeauſe his Perſon is incomparably greater, not only than all conceivable, but inconceivable Creations: We are more obliged to him for it, than if he had made us Angels of the higheſt rank in Heaven, becauſe it is a Gift of more value than the whole Angelical Nature, becauſe he is an Infinite Perſon, and therefore infinitely tranſcends whatſoever is finite, tho' of the higheſt Dignity. The Wounds of an Almighty God for us are a greater Teſtimony of Goodneſs, than if we had all the other Riches of Heaven and Earth. This Perfection had not appeared in ſuch an aſtoniſhing grandeur, had it pardon'd us without ſo rich a ſatisfaction; that had been pardon to our Sin, not a God of our Nature. God ſo loved the World, that he pardon'd it, had not founded ſo great and ſo good, as God ſo loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son. Eſt aliquid in Chriſto formoſius Servatore. There is ſomething in Chriſt more excellent and comely than the Office of a Saviour, the greatneſs of his Perſon is more excellent than the Salvation procur'd by his Death: It was a greater gift than was beſtow'd upon innocent Adam, or the holy Angels. In the Creation, his Goodneſs gave us Creatures for our uſe: In our Redemption, his Goodneſs gives us what was deareſt to him for our ſervice; our Soveraign in Office to benefit us, as well as in a Royalty to govern us.

2. It was a greater gift, becauſe it was his own Son. Not an Angel. It had been a mighty Goodneſs to have given one of the lofty Seraphims; a greater Goodneſs to have given the whole Corporation of thoſe glorious Spirits for us, thoſe Children of the moſt High: But he gave that Son, whom he commands all the Angels to worſhip *; and all * Heb. 1. 6. Men to adore, and pay the loweſt Homage to †; that † Pſal. 2. 12. Son that is to be honour'd by us, as we honour the Father ‖; that Son which was his delight, his delights ‖ Joh. 5. 23. in the Hebrew, wherein all the delights of the Father were gather'd in one, as well as of the whole Creation; and not ſimply a Son, but an only begotten Son, upon which Chriſt lays the ſtreſs with an Emphaſis †. He had but one Son in Heaven or Earth, † John 3. 16. one Son from an unviewable Eternity, and that one Son he gave for a degenerate World; this Son he conſecrated for evermore a Prieſt ‖. The word of ‖ Heb. 7. 28. the Oath makes the Son a Prieſt; The peculiarity of his Sonſhip heightens the Goodneſs of the Donor. It was no meaner a Perſon that he gave to empty himſelf of his Glory, to fulfill an Obedience for us, that we might be render'd happy partakers of the Divine Nature. Thoſe that know the natural affection of a Father to a Son, muſt judge the affection of God the Father to the Son infinitely greater than the affection of an Earthly Father to the Son of his Bowels. It muſt be an unparallel'd Goodneſs, to give up a Son that he loved with ſo ardent an Affection, for the Redemption of Rebels: Abandon a glorious Son to a diſhonourable Death, for the ſecurity of thoſe that had violated the Laws of Righteouſneſs, and endeavour'd to pull the Soveraign Crown from his Head. Beſides, being an only Son, all thoſe Affections center'd in him, which in Parents would have been divided among a multitude of Children: So then, as it was a Teſtimony of the higheſt Faith and Obedience in Abraham, to offer up * Heb. 11. 17. his only begotten Son to God *; ſo it was the Triumph of Divine Goodneſs, to give ſo great, ſo dear a Perſon for ſo little a thing as Man; and for ſuch a piece of nothing and vanity, as a Sinful World.

3. And this Son given to reſcue us by his Death. It was a gift to us; for our ſakes he deſcended from his Throne, and dwelt on Earth; for our ſakes he was made Fleſh, and infirm Fleſh; for our ſakes he was made a Curſe, and ſcorch'd in the Furnace of his Father's Wrath; for our ſakes he went naked, arm'd only with his own Strength, into the Liſts of that Combat with the Devils, that led us Captive. Had he given him to be a Leader for the conqueſt of ſome Earthly Enemies, it had been a great Goodneſs to diſplay his Banners, and bring us under his Conduct; but he ſent him to lay down his Life in the bittereſt and moſt inglorious manner, and expoſed him to a curſed Death for our redemption from that dreadful Curſe which would have broken us to pieces, and irreparably have cruſh'd us. He gave him to us, to ſuffer for us as a Man, and redeem us as a God; to be a Sacrifice to expiate our Sin, by tranſlating the Puniſhment upon himſelf which was merited by us. Thus was he made low to exalt us, and debaſed to advance us, made poor to enrich us *, and eclipſed to brighten our ſullied Natures, and wounded that he might be a Phyſician for our Languiſhments: He was order'd to taſte the bitter Cup of Death, that we might drink of the Rivers of Immortal Life, and Pleaſures: To ſubmit to the frailties of the Humane Nature, that we might poſſeſs the Glories of the Divine: He was order'd to be a Sufferer, that we might be no longer Captives, and to paſs thro' the Fire of Divine Wrath, that he might purge our Nature from the droſs it had contracted. Thus was the Righteous given for Sin, the Innocent for Criminals, the Glory of Heaven for the Dregs of Earth, and the Immenſe Riches of a Deity expended to reſtock Man.

* 2 Cor. 8. 9.

4. And a Son that was exalted for what he had done for us by the order of Divine Goodneſs. The Exaltation of Chriſt was no leſs a ſignal Mark of his miraculous Goodneſs to us, than of his Affection to him; ſince he was obedient by Divine Goodneſs to die for us, his advancement was for his Obedience to thoſe Orders. * The Name given to him above every Name, was a repeated Triumph of this Perfection; ſince his Paſſion was not for himſelf, he was wholly Innocent, but for us who were Criminal. His advancement was not only for himſelf as Redeemer, but for us as redeem'd: Divine Goodneſs center'd in him, both in his Croſs and in his Crown; for it was for the purging our Sins he ſate down on the Right Hand of the Majeſty on high †: And the whole Bleſſed Society of Principalities and Powers in Heaven admire this Goodneſs of God, and aſcribe to him Honour, Glory, and Power for advancing the Lamb ſlain ‖. Divine Goodneſs did not only give him to us, but gave him Power, Riches, Strength, and Honor, for manifeſting this Goodneſs to us, and opening the Paſſages for its fuller conveyances to the Sons of Men. Had not God had thoughts of a perpetual Goodneſs, he would not have ſetled him ſo near him, to manage our Cauſe, and teſtified ſo much Affection to him on our behalf. This Goodneſs gave him to be debas'd for us, and order'd him to be enthron'd for us: As it gave him to us bleeding, ſo it would give him to us triumphing; that as we have a ſhare by Grace in the Merits of his Humiliation, we might partake alſo of the Glories of his Coronation, that from firſt to laſt we may behold nothing but the Triumphs of Divine Goodneſs to fallen Man.

† Heb. 1. 3.

‖ Revel. 5. 11, 12, 13.

5. In beſtowing this Gift on us, Divine Goodneſs gives whole God to us. Whatſoever is great and excellent in the Godhead, the Father gives us, by giving us his Son: The Creator gives himſelf to us in his Son Chriſt. In giving Creatures to us, he gives the Riches of Earth; in giving himſelf to us, he gives the Riches of Heaven, which ſurmount all Underſtanding: 'Tis in this Gift he becomes our God, and paſſeth over the Title of all that he is, for our uſe and benefit, that every Attribute in the Divine Nature may be claim'd by us; not to be imparted to us, whereby we may be deify'd, but imploy'd for our welfare, whereby we may be bleſſed. He gave himſelf in Creation to us, in the Image of his Holineſs; but in Redemption, he gave himſelf in the Image of his Perſon: He would not only communicate the Goodneſs without him, but beſtow upon us the infinite Goodneſs of his own Nature; That that which was his own End and Happineſs, might be our End and Happineſs, viz. Himſelf.

By giving his Son, he hath given himſelf; and in both Gifts he hath given all things to us: The Creator of all things is eminently all things: He hath given all things into the hands of his Son *, and by conſequence given all things into the Hands of his Redeem'd Creatures, by giving them him to whom he gave all things: Whatſoever we were inveſted in by Creation, whatſoever we were depriv'd of by Corruption, and more, he hath depoſited in ſafe hands for our Enjoyment: And what can Divine Goodneſs do more for us? What further can it give unto us, than what it hath given, and in that Gift deſign'd for us?

* Joh. 3. 35.

3. This Goodneſs is enhanc'd by conſidering the State of Man in the firſt Tranſgreſſion, and ſince.

1. Mans firſt Tranſgreſſion. If we ſhould rip up every Vein of that firſt Sin, ſhould we find any want of Wickedneſs to excite a juſt Indignation? What was there but Ingratitude to Divine Bounty, and Rebellion againſt Divine Soveraignty? The Royalty of God was attempted, the Supremacy of Divine Knowledge, above Man's own Knowledge, envy'd; the Riches of Goodneſs whereby he lived and breathed, ſlighted: There is a diſcontent with God upon an unreaſonable Sentiment, that God had deny'd a Knowledge to him, which was his right and due; when there ſhould have been an humble acknowledgment of that unmerited Goodneſs, which had not only given him a Being above other Creatures, but placed him the Governor and Lord of thoſe that were inferiour to him: What alienation of his Underſtanding was there from knowing God, and of his Will from loving him? A Debauch of all his Faculties; a Spiritual Adultery, in preferring not only one of God's Creatures, but one of his deſperate Enemies before him; thinking him a wiſer Counſellor than Infinite Wiſdom, and imagining him poſſeſs'd with kinder Affections to him, than that God who had newly created him. Thus he joyns in League with Hell againſt Heaven, with a Fallen Spirit againſt his Bountiful Benefactor, and enters into Society with Rebels, that juſt before commenc'd a War againſt his and their common Soveraign: He did not only falter in, but caſt off the Obedience due to his Creator; endeavour'd to purloin his Glory, and actually murder'd all thoſe that were vertually in his Loins. * Sin enter'd into the World by him, and Death by Sin, and paſſed upon all men, taking them off from their ſubjection to God, to be Slaves to the Damn'd Spirits, and Heirs of their Miſery: And after all this, he adds a foul Imputation on God, taxing him as the Author of his Sin, and thereby ſtains the Beauty of his Holineſs. But notwithſtanding all this, God ſtops not up the Flood-gates of his Goodneſs, nor doth he entertain Fiery Reſolutions againſt Man, but brings forth a healing Promiſe, and ſends not an Angel upon Commiſſion to reveal it to him, but preaches it himſelf to this Forlorn and Rebellious Creature †.

* Rom. 5. 12.

† Gen. 3. 15.

2. Could there be any thing in this Fallen Creature to allure God to the Expreſſion of his Goodneſs? Was there any good Action in all his Carriage, that could plead for a readmiſſion of him to his former ſtate? Was there one good Quality left, that could be an Orator to perſwade Divine Goodneſs to ſuch a gracious Procedure? Was there any Moral Goodneſs in Man after this Debauch, that might be an Object of Divine Love? What was there in him that was not rather a Provocation than an Allurement? Could you expect, that any Perfection in God ſhould find a Motive in this ungrateful Apoſtate, to open a Mouth for him, and be an Advocate to ſupport him, and bring him off from a juſt Tribunal? Or after Divine Goodneſs had begun to pity and plead for for Man, is it not wonderful that it ſhould not diſcontinue the Plea, after it found Man's Excuſe to be as black as his Crime *; and his Carriage, upon his Examination, to be as diſobliging as his firſt Revolt? It might well be expected, that all the Perfections in the Divine Nature, would have entred into an Aſſociation, eternally, to treat this Rebel according to his Deſerts. What Attractives were there in a ſilly Worm, much leſs in ſuch compleat Wickedneſs, inexcuſable Enmity, infamous Rebellion, to deſign a Redeemer for him, and ſuch a Perſon as the Son of God to a Fleſhy Body, an Eclipſe of Glory, and an Ignominious Croſs? The Meanneſs of Man was further from alluring God to it, than the Dignity of Angels.

* Gen. 3. 12.

3. Was there not a World of Demerit in Man, to animate Grace as well as Wrath againſt him? We were ſo far from deſerving the opening any Streams of Goodneſs, that we had merited Floods of devouring Wrath. What were all Men, but Enemies to God in a high manner? Every Offence was infinite, as being committed againſt a Being of infinite Dignity; it was a ſtroke at the very Being of God; a reſiſtance of all his Attributes; it would degrade him from the height and perfection of his Nature; it would not, by its good will, ſuffer God to be God. If he that hates his Brother, is a Murtherer of his Brother, he that hates his Creator, is a Murtherer of the Deity; *and every carnal mind is enmity to God †: Every Sin envies him his Authority, by breaking his Precept; and envies him his Goodneſs, by defacing the Marks of it: Every Sin comprehends in it more than Men or Angels can conceive: That God who only hath the clear Apprehenſions of his own Dignity, hath the ſole clear Apprehenſions of Sins Malignity. All Men were thus by Nature; thoſe that ſinned before the coming of the Redeemer, had been in a State of Sin; thoſe that were to come after him, would be in a State of Sin by their Birth, and be Criminals as ſoon as ever they were Creatures. All Men, as well the Glorify'd as thoſe in the Fleſh, at the coming of the Redeemer, and thoſe that were to be born after, were conſider'd in a State of Sin by God, when he bruis'd the Redeemer for them: All were filthy and unworthy of the Eye of God: All had employ'd the Faculties of their Souls, and the Members of their Bodies, which they enjoyed by his Goodneſs, againſt the Intereſt of his Glory. Every rational Creature had made himſelf a Slave to thoſe Creatures over whom he had been appointed a Lord; ſubjected himſelf as a Servant to his Inferior, and ſtrutted as a Superior againſt his liberal Sovereign, and by every Sin rendred himſelf more a Child of Satan, and Enemy of God, and more worthy of the Curſes of the Law, and the Torments of Hell: Was it not now a mighty Goodneſs, that would ſurmount thoſe high Mountains of Demerit, and elevate ſuch Creatures by the depreſſion of his Son? Had we been poſſeſſed of the higheſt Holineſs, a Reward had been the natural Effect of Goodneſs: It was not poſſible that God ſhould be unkind to a righteous and innocent Creature: His Grace would have crown'd that, which had been ſo agreeable to him: He had been a Denyer of himſelf, had he numbred innocent Creatures in the Rank of the miſerable. But to be kind to an Enemy; to run Counter to the vaſtneſs of Demerit in Man, was a ſuperlative Goodneſs; a Goodneſs triumphing above all the Provocations of Men, and Pleas of Juſtice. It was an abounding Goodneſs of Grace: Where Sin abounded, Grace did much more abound, ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν. It ſwell'd above the Heights of Sin, and triumphed more than all his other Attributes.

* 1 John 3. 15. † Rom. 8. 7.

* Rom. 5. 20.

4. Man was reduced to the loweſt Condition. Our Crimes had brought us to the loweſt Calamity; we were brought to the Duſt, and prepar'd for Hell. Adam had not the boldneſs to Requeſt, and therefore we may judge he had not the leaſt hopes of Pardon; he was ſunk under Wrath, and could have expected no better an Entertainment than the Tempter, whoſe Sollicitations he ſubmitted to: We had caſt the Diadem from our Heads, and loſt all our Original Excellency: We were loſt to our own Happineſs, and loſt to our Creator's Service, when he was ſo kind as to ſend his Son to ſeek us, Mat. 18. 11. and ſo liberal as to expend his Blood for our Cure and Preſervation. How great was that Goodneſs that would not abandon us in our Miſery, but remit our Crimes, and reſcue our Perſons, and ranſom our Souls by ſo great a Price from the Rights of Juſtice, and Horrors of Hell, we were ſo fitted for?

5. Every Age multiplied Provocations. Every Age of the World proved more degenerate; the Traditions, which were purer and more lively among Adam's immediate Poſterity, were more dark among his further Deſcendents. Idolatry, whereof we have no Marks in the old World before the Deluge, was frequent afterwards in every Nation: Not only the Knowledge of the true God was loſt, but the Natural Reverential Thoughts of a Deity were expelled. Hence Gods were dubb'd according to Mens Humors; and not only human Paſſions, but bruiſh Vices aſcrib'd to them: As by the Fall we were become leſs than Men, ſo we would fancy God no better than a Beaſt, ſince Beaſts were worſhipped as Gods *; yea, fancied God no better than a Devil; ſince that Deſtroyer was worſhipped inſtead of the Creator, and a Homage paid to the Powers of Hell that had ruin'd them, which was due to the Goodneſs of that Benefactor, who had made them and preſerved them in the World. The vileſt Creatures were Deifi'd; Reaſon was debas'd below Common Senſe; and Men ador'd one end of a Log, while they warmed themſelves with the other †; as if that which was ordain'd for the Kitchin, were a fit Repreſentation for God in the Temple. Thus were the Natural Notions of a Deity deprav'd; the whole World drench'd in Idolatry: And tho' the Jews were free from that groſs abuſe of God, yet they were ſunk alſo into loathſom Superſtitions, when the Goodneſs of God brought in his deſign'd Redeemer and Redemption into the World.

* Rom. 1. 21.

† Iſa. 44. 14, 16, 17.

6. The Impotence of Man enhanceth this Goodneſs. Our own Eye did ſcarce pity us, and it was impoſſible for our own Hands to relieve us; we were inſenſible of our Miſery, in love with our Death; we courted our Chains, and the Noiſe of our fettering Luſts were our Muſick, ſerving diverſe Luſts and Pleaſures. Our Luſts were our Pleaſures; Satan's Yoke was as delightful to us to bear, as to him to impoſe: Inſtead of being his Oppoſers in his Attempts againſt us, we were his voluntary Seconds, and every whit as willing to embrace, as he was to propoſe his ruining Temptations. As no Man can recover himſelf from Death, ſo no Man can recover himſelf from Wrath; he is as unable to Redeem, as to Create himſelf; he might as ſoon have ſtripp'd himſelf of his Being, as put an end to his Miſery; his Captivity would have been endleſs, and his Chains remedileſs, for any thing he could do to knock them off, and deliver himſelf; he was too much in love with the Sink of Sin, to leave wallowing in it, and under too powerful a Hand, to ceaſe frying in the Flames of Wrath. As the Law could not be obeyed by Man, after a corrupt Principle had enter'd into him, ſo neither neither could Justice be satisfied by him after his Transgression. The Sinner was indebted, but Bankrupt; as he was unable to pay a Mite of that Obedience he owed to the Precept, because of his Enmity; so he was unable to satisfie what he owed to the Penalty, because of his Feebleness: He was as much without Love to observe the one, as without Strength to bear the other: † He could not, because of his Enmity, be subject to the Law, or compensate for his Sin, because he was * without Strength. His Strength to offend was great; but to deliver himself, a meer nothing. Repentance was not a thing known by Man after the Fall, 'till he had hopes of Redemption; And if he had known and exercised it, what Compensation are the Tears of a Malefactor, for an Injury done to the Crown, and attempting the Life of his Prince? How great was Divine Goodness; not only to pity Men in this State, but to provide a strong Redeemer for them? O Lord, my Strength, and my Redeemer, said the Psalmist †: When he found out a Redeemer for our Misery, he found out a Strength for our Impotency.

* Tit. 3. 3.

†Rom. 8. 7.

* Rom. 5. 6.

† Psal. 19. 14.

To conclude this: Behold the Goodness of God, when we had thus unhandsomely dealt with him; had nothing to allure his Goodness, Multitudes of Provocations to incense him, were reduced to a Condition as low as could be, fit to be the Matter of his Scoffs, and the Sport of Divine Justice, and so weak that we could not repair our own Ruines; then did he open a Fountain of fresh Goodness in the Death of his Son, and sent forth such delightful Streams, as in our Original Creation we could never have tasted: Not only overcame the Resentments of a provoked Justice, but magnified it self by our lowness, and strengthned it self by our weakness: His Goodness had before Created an Innocent, but here it saves a Malefactor; and sends his Son to die for us, as if the Holy of Holies were the Criminal, and the Rebel the Innocent. It had been a pompous Goodness, to have given him as a King; but a Goodness of greater Grandeur, to expose him as a Sacrifice for Slaves and Enemies: Had Adam remain'd innocent, and prov'd thankful for what he had received, it had been great Goodness to have brought him to Glory; but to bring filthy and rebellious Adam to it, surmounts by unexpressible degrees, that sort of Goodness he had experimented before; since it was not from a light Evil, a tolerable Curse unawares brought upon us, but from the Yoke we had willingly submitted to, from the Power of Darkness we had courted, and the Furnace of Wrath we had kindled for our selves. What are we, dead Dogs, that he should behold us with so gracious an Eye? This Goodness is thus enhanced, if you consider the State of Man in his first Transgression, and after.

4. This Goodness further appears, in the high advancement of our Nature, after it had so highly offended. By Creation, we had an Affinity with Animals in our Bodies, with Angels in our Spirits, with God in his Image; but not with God in our Nature, 'till the Incarnation of the Redeemer. Adam by Creation was the Son of God, * but his Nature was not one with the Person of God: He was his Son as created by him, but had no Affinity to him by Vertue of Union with him: But now Man doth not only see his Nature in multitudes of Men on Earth, but by an astonishing Goodness, beholds his Nature united to the Deity in Heaven: That as he was the Son of God by Creation, he is now the Brother of God by Redemption; for with such a Title doth that Person, who was the Son of God, as well as the Son of Man, honour his Disciples †: And because he is of the same Nature with them, he is not ashamed to call them brethren, Heb. 2. 11.

† John 20. 17.

Our Nature, which was Infinitely distant from, and below the Deity, now makes one Person with the Son of God. What Man sinfully aspired to, God hath graciously granted, and more: Man aspired to a Likeness in Knowledge, and God hath granted him an Affinity in Union. It had been astonishing Goodness to Angelize our Natures; but in Redemption, Divine Goodness hath acted higher, in a sort to Deifie our Natures. In Creation, our Nature was exalted above other Creatures on Earth; in our Redemption, our Nature is exalted above all the Host of Heaven: We were higher than the Beasts, as Creatures, but lower than the Angels; * but by the Incarnation of the Son of God, our Nature is elevated many Steps above them. After it had sunk it self by Corruption below the Bestial Nature, and as low as the Diabolical, the fulness of the Godhead dwells in our Nature bodily, † but never in the Angels, Angelically. The Son of God descended to dignifie our Nature, by assuming it, and ascended with our Nature to have it crown'd above those standing Monuments of Divine Power and Goodness. * That Person that descended in our Nature into the Grave, and in the same Nature was raised up again, is in that same Nature set at the right Hand of God in Heaven, far above all Principality, and Power, and Might, and Dominion, and every Name that is named. Our refined Clay, by an indissoluble Union with this Divine Person, is honoured to sit for ever upon a Throne, above all the Tribes of Seraphims and Cherubins; and the Person that wears it, is the Head of the good Angels, and the Conquerour of the bad; the one are put under his Feet, and the other commanded to adore him, that purged our Sins in our Nature †: That Divine Person in our Nature, receives Adoration from the Angels; but the Nature of Man is not ordered to pay any Homage and Adorations to the Angels. How could Divine Goodness to Man more magnifie it self? As we could not have a lower Descent than we had by Sin, how could we have a higher Ascent, than by a substantial Participation of a Divine Life in our Nature, in the Unity of a Divine Person? Our earthly Nature is joyned to a heavenly Person; our undone Nature united to one equal with God *. It may truly be said, that Man is God, which is infinitely more glorious for us, than if it could be said, Man is an Angel. If it were Goodness to advance our innocent Nature above other Creatures, the Advancement of our degenerate Nature above Angels, deserves a higher Title than meer Goodness. 'Tis a more gracious Act, than if all Men had been transformed into the pure Spiritual Nature of the loftiest Cherubins.

† Heb. 1. 3, 6.

5. This Goodness is manifest in the Covenant of Grace made with us, whereby we are freed from the Rigour of that of Works. God might have insisted upon the Terms of the old Covenant, and requir'd of Man the Improvement of his Original Stock; but God hath condescended to lower Terms, and offer'd Man more gracious Methods, and mitigated the Rigor of the first, by the Sweetness of the second.

1. 'Tis Goodness, that he should condescend to make another Covenant with Man. To stipulate with Innocent and Righteous Adam for his Obedience, was a stoop of his Sovereignty: Tho' he gave the Precept as a Sovereign Lord, yet in his Covenanting, he seems to descend to some kind of equality with that Dust and Ashes with whom he treated. Absolute Sovereigns do not usually Covenant with their People, but exact Obedience and Duty, without binding themſelves to beſtow a Reward; and if they intend any, they reſerve the purpoſe in their own Breaſts, without treating their Subjects with a ſolemn declaration of it. There was no Obligation on God to enter into the firſt Covenant, much leſs after the violation of the firſt, to the ſettlement of a new. If God ſeem'd in ſome ſort to equal himſelf to Man in the firſt, he ſeem'd to deſcend below himſelf, in treating with a Rebel upon more condeſcending Terms in the ſecond. If his Covenant with Innocent Adam was a ſtoop of his Sovereignty, this with Rebellious Adam ſeems to be a ſtripping himſelf of his Majeſty, in favour of his Goodneſs; as if his Happineſs depended upon us, and not ours upon him. 'Tis a Humiliation of himſelf to behold the things in Heaven, the glorious Angels, as well as things on Earth, mortal Men; † much more to bind himſelf in gracious Bonds to the glorious Angels, and much more if to Rebel Man. In the firſt Covenant there was much of Sovereignty as well as Goodneſs; in the ſecond there is leſs of Sovereignty, and more of Grace: In the firſt there was a righteous Man for a holy God; in the ſecond, a polluted Creature for a pure and provoked God: In the firſt he holds his Scepter in his Hand, to rule his Subjects: In the ſecond, he ſeems to lay by his Scepter, to Court and eſpouſe a Beggar: * In the firſt he is a Lord; in the ſecond a Husband, and binds himſelf upon gracious Conditions to become a Debtor. How ſhould this Goodneſs fill us with an humble aſtoniſhment, as it did Abraham, when he fell on his Face, when he heard God ſpeaking of making a Covenant with him! † And if God ſpeaking to Iſrael out of the Fire, and making them to hear his Voice out of Heaven, that he might inſtruct them, was a Conſideration whereby Moſes would heighten their admiration of Divine Goodneſs, and engage their affectionate Obedience to him *; How much more admirable is it, for God to ſpeak ſo kindly to us, through the pacifying Blood of the Covenant, that ſilenc'd the Terrors of the Old, and ſettled the Tenderneſs of the New?

2. His Goodneſs is ſeen in the Nature and Tenor of the new Covenant. There are in this richer Streams of Love and Pity. The Language of one was, Die if thou Sin; that of the other, Live if thou Believeſt †: The Old Covenant was founded upon the Obedience of Man; the New is not founded upon the Inconſtancy of Man's Will, but the Firmneſs of Divine Love, and the valuable Merit of Chriſt. The Head of the Firſt Covenant was Humane and mutable; the Head of the Second is Divine and immutable. The Curſe due to us by the Breach of the firſt, is taken off by the Indulgence of the ſecond: * We are by it ſnatch'd from the Jaws of the Law, to be wrapt up in the Boſom of Grace: † For you are not under the Law, but under Grace; from the Curſe and Condemnation of the Law, to the Sweetneſs and Forgiveneſs of Grace. Chriſt bore the one, being made a Curſe for us, * that we might enjoy the Sweetneſs of the other; by this we are brought from Mount Sinai, the Mount of Terror, to Mount Sion, the Mount of Sacrificing, the Type of the Great Sacrifice †: That Covenant brought in Death upon one Offence, this Covenant offers Life after many Offences *: That involved us in a Curſe, and this enricheth us with a Bleſſing: The Breaches of that expell'd us out of Paradiſe, and the embracing of this admits us into Heaven. This Covenant demands, and admits of that Repentance, whereof there was no mention in the firſt: That demanded Obedience, not Repentance upon a failure; and tho' the Exerciſes of it had been never ſo deep in the fall'n Creature, nothing of the Law's Severity had been remitted by any Vertue of it. Again, the firſt Covenant demanded exact Righteouſneſs, but conveyed no Cleanſing Vertue upon the contracting any Filth. The firſt, demands a continuance in the Righteouſneſs conferr'd in Creation; the ſecond, imprints a gracious Heart in Regeneration. I will pour clean water upon you; I will put a new Spirit within you, was the Voice of the ſecond Covenant, not of the firſt. Again, as to Pardon: Adam's Covenant was to puniſh him, not to pardon him if he fell; that threatned Death upon Tranſgreſſion, this remits it; that was an Act of Divine Sovereignty, declaring the Will of God; this is an Act of Divine Grace, paſſing an Act of Oblivion on the Crimes of the Creature: That, as it demanded no Repentance upon a failure, ſo it promiſed no Mercy upon Guilt: That convened our Sin, and condemned us for it; this clears our Guilt, and comforts us under it. The firſt Covenant related us to God as a Judge; every Tranſgreſſion againſt it forfeited his Indulgence as a Father: The ſecond delivers us from God as a condemning Judge, to bring us under his Wing as an affectionate Father: In the one there was a dreadful Frown to ſcare us; in the other, a healing Wing to cover and relieve us. Again, in regard of Righteouſneſs: That demanded our performance of a Righteouſneſs in and by our ſelves, and our own ſtrength; this demands our acceptance of a Righteouſneſs higher than ever the ſtanding Angels had: The Righteouſneſs of the firſt Covenant, was the Righteouſneſs of a Man; the Righteouſneſs of the ſecond, is the Righteouſneſs of a God †. Again, in regard of that Obedience it demands, it exacts not of us, as a neceſſary Condition, the perfection of Obedience, but the ſincerity of Obedience; an uprightneſs in our Intention, not an unſpottedneſs in our Action; an Integrity in our Aims, and an Induſtry in our Compliance with Divine Precepts, * Walk before me, and be thou perfect, i. e. ſincere. What is hearty in our Actions is accepted, and what is defective is over-looked, and not charg'd upon us, becauſe of the Obedience and Righteouſneſs of our Surety. The firſt Covenant rejected all our Services after Sin; the Services of a Perſon under the Sentence of Death, are but dead Services; this accepts our imperfect Services after Faith in it; that adminiſtred no ſtrength to obey, but ſuppoſed it; this ſuppoſeth our inability to obey, and confers ſome ſtrength for it, † I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my Statutes. Again, in regard of the Promiſes; * the Old Covenant hath good, but the new hath better Promiſes of Juſtification after Guilt, and Sanctification after Filth, and Glorification at laſt of the whole Man. In the firſt, there was proviſion againſt Guilt, but none for the removal of it: Proviſion againſt Filth, but none for the cleanſing of it: Promiſe of Happineſs implied, but not ſo great a one as that Life and Immortality in Heaven, brought to light by the Goſpel. † Why ſaid to be brought to light by the Goſpel? Becauſe it was not only buried upon the Fall of Man under the Curſes of the Law, but it was not ſo obvious to the Conceptions of Man in his innocent State. Life indeed was implied to be promiſed upon his ſtanding, but not ſo glorious an Immortality diſcloſed, to be reſerved for him, if he ſtood. As it is a Covenant of better Promiſes, ſo a Covenant of ſweeter Comforts: Comforts more choice, and Comforts more durable; an everlaſting Conſolation, and a good Hope, are the Fruits of Grace, i. e. the Covenant of Grace *: In the whole there is ſuch a Love diſcloſed, as cannot be expreſt; the Apoſtle leaves it to every Man's Mind to conceive it, if he could, what manner of Love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be †1 Joh. 3. 1. call'd the Sons of God †. It instates us in such a manner of the Love of God, as he bears to his Son, * Joh. 17. 23. the Image of his Person; * That the World may know, that thou hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

3. This Goodness appears in the choice Gift of himself, which he hath made over in this Covenant. You know how it runs in Scripture, I will be † Gen. 17. 7. their God, and they shall be my People †: A Propriety in the Deity is made over by it. As he gave the Blood of his Son to Seal the Covenant, so he gave himself as the Blessing of the Covenant; He * Jer. 32. 38. is not ashamed to be called their God. * Tho' he be environ'd with Millions of Angels, and presides Heb. 11. 16. over them in an unexpressible Glory, he is not ashamed of his Condescensions to Man, and to pass over Himself as the Propriety of his People, as well as to take them to be his. 'Tis a diminution of the sense of the place, to understand it of God as Creator; What reason was there for God to be asham'd of the Expressions of his Power, Wisdom, Goodness, in the Works of his Hands? But we might have reason to think, there might be some ground in God, to be ashamed in making himself over in a Deed of Gift to a mean Worm, and a filthy Rebel; this might seem a disparagement to his Majesty; but God is not asham'd of a Title so mean, as the God of his despis'd People. A Title below those others, of the Lord of Hosts, glorious in Holiness, fearful in Praises, doing Wonders, riding on the Wings of the Wind, walking in the Circuits of Heaven. He is no more asham'd of this Title of being our God, than he is of those other that sound more glorious: He would rather have his Greatness vail to his Goodness, than his Goodness be confin'd by his Majesty. He is not only our God, but our God as he is the God of Christ. He is not asham'd to be our Propriety, and Christ is not asham'd to own his People in a Partnership † John 20. 17. with him in this Propriety; † I ascend to my God, and your God. This of God's being our God, is the Quintessence of the Covenant, the Soul of all the Promises: In this he hath promised whatsoever is Infinite in him, whatsoever is the Glory and Ornament of his Nature for our use: Not a part of him, or one single Perfection, but the whole vigour and strength of all. As he is not a God without Infinite Wisdom, and Infinite Power, and Infinite Goodness, and Infinite Blessedness, &c. so he passes over in this Covenant, all that which presents him as the most adorable Being to his Creatures: He will be to them as Great, as Wise, as Powerful, as Good as he is in himself. And the assuring us in this Covenant to be our God, imports also that he will do as much for us, as we would do for our selves, were we furnish'd with the same Goodness, Power, and Wisdom: In being our God, he testifies 'tis all one, as if we had the same Perfections in our own power to employ for our use: For he being possessed with with them, 'tis as much, as if we our selves were possessed them for our own advantage, according to the Rules of Wisdom, and the several Conditions we pass through for his Glory; but this must be taken with a relation to that Wisdom, which he observes in his proceedings with us as Creatures, and according to the several Conditions we pass through for his Glory. Thus God's being ours, is more than if all Heaven and Earth were ours besides: 'Tis more than if we were fully our own, and at our own disposé; it makes * 1 Cor. 3. 22. all things that God hath ours *. And therefore not only all Things he hath created, but all Things that he can create: Not only all Things that he hath contrived, but all Things that he can contrive: For in being ours, his Power is ours, his possible Power as well as his active Power; his Power, whereby he can effect more than he hath done; and his Wisdom, whereby he can contrive more than he hath done; so that if there were need of employing his Power to create many Worlds for our good, he would not stick at it; for if he did, he would not be our God in the extent of his Nature, as the Promise intimates. What a rich Goodness, and a fulness of Bounty is there in this short Expression, as full as the Expression of a God can make it to be intelligible to such Creatures as we are?

4. This Goodness is further manifest in the Confirmation of the Covenant. His Goodness did not only condescend to make it for our Happiness, after we had made our selves Miserable, but further condescended to ratifie it in the solemnest manner for our assurance, to over-rule all the Despondencies Unbelief could raise up in our Souls. The reason why he confirmed it by an Oath, was to shew the Immutability of his glorious Counsel; not to tie himself to keep it: For his Word and Promise is in it self as immutable as his Oath: They were two immutable things, his Word, and his Oath, one as unchangeable as the other; but for the strength of our Consolation, that it might have no reason to shake and totter *: He would condescend as low *Heb. 6. 17, 18. as was possible for a God to do, for the satisfaction of the dejected Creature. When the first Covenant was broken, and it was impossible for Man to fulfil the Terms of it, and mount to Happiness thereby, he makes another: And, as if we had reason to distrust him in the first, he solemnly ratifies it in a higher manner than he had done the other, and swears by himself, that he will be true to it, not so much out of an Affection of himself, as the Object of the Oath. † Because he could not †Heb. 6. 13 swear by a greater, he swears by Himself; whereby the Apostle clearly intimates, that Divine Goodness was raised to such a height for us, that if there had been any thing else more sacred than Himself, or that could have punished him if he had broken it, that he would have sworn by, to silence any diffidence in us, and confirm in us the reality of his Intentions. Now if it were a mighty Mark of Goodness, for God to stoop to a Covenanting with us; it was more for a Sovereign to bind himself so solemnly, to be our Debtor in a Promise, as well as he was our Sovereign in the Precept, and stoop so low in it to satisfie the Distrusts of that Creature, that deserved for ever to lie soaking in his own Ruines, for not believing his bare Word. What Absolute Prince would ever stoop so low, as to Article with Rebellious Subjects, whom he could in a moment set his Foot upon and crush; much less countenance a causeless distrust of his Goodness, by the addition of his Oath, and thereby bind his own Hands, which were unconfin'd before, and free to do what he pleased with them?

5. This Goodness of God is remarkable also in the Condition of this Covenant, which is Faith. This was the easiest Condition in its own Nature, that could be imagin'd: No difficulty in it but what proceeds from the Pride of Man's Nature, and the Obstinacy of his Will: It was not impossible in its self; it was not the old Condition of perfect Obedience: It had been mighty Goodness to set us up again upon our old Stock, and restore us to the Tenor and Condition of the Covenant of Works, or to have requir'd the burdensom Ceremonies of the Law. Nor is it an exact knowledge he requires of us; all Mens Understandings being of a different size,

ſize, they had not been capable of this. It was the moſt reaſonable Condition, in regard of the Excellency of the Things propoſed, and the Effects following upon it; nay, it was neceſſary. It had been a want of Goodneſs to himſelf, and his own Honour; he had caſt that off, had he not inſiſted on this Condition of Faith; it being the loweſt he could condeſcend to, with a Salvo for his Glory. And it was a Goodneſs to us; 'tis nothing elſe he requires, but a willingneſs to accept what he hath contrived, and acted for us: And no Man can be happy againſt his Will; without this belief at leaſt, Man could never voluntarily have arriv'd to his Happineſs. The Goodneſs of God is evidenced in that,

Firſt, 'Tis an eaſie Condition, not impoſſible.

1. It was not the Condition of the Old Covenant. The Condition of that, was an entire Obedience to every Precept, with a Man's whole ſtrength, and without any flaw or crack. But the Condition of the Evangelical Covenant, is a ſincere, tho' weak Faith; he hath ſuited this Covenant to the Miſery of Man's fall'n Condition: He conſiders our weakneſs, and that we are but Duſt, and therefore exacts not of us an entire, but a ſincere Obedience. Had God ſent Chriſt to expiate the Crime of Adam, reſtore him to his Paradiſe Eſtate, and repair in Man the ruin'd Image of Holineſs, and after this to have renewed the Covenant of Works for the future, and ſetled the ſame Condition in exacting a compleat Obedience for the time to come; Divine Goodneſs had been above any Accuſation, and had deſerv'd our higheſt Admiration in the Pardon of former Tranſgreſſions, and giving out to us our firſt Stock. But Divine Goodneſs took larger ſtrides: He had tried our firſt Condition, and found his mutable Creature quickly to violate it: Had he demanded the ſame now, 'tis likely it had met with the ſame iſſue as before, in Man's Diſobedience and Fall; we ſhould have been as Men, as Adam, * tranſgreſſing the Covenant, and then we muſt have lain groaning under our Diſeaſe, and wallowing in our Blood, unleſs Chriſt had come to die for the Expiation of our new Crimes; for every Tranſgreſſion had been a Violation of that Covenant, and a Forfeiture of our Right to the Benefits of it. * If we had broke it but in one tittle, we had rendred our ſelves uncapable to fulfil it for the future; that one Tranſgreſſion had ſtood as a Bar againſt the Pleas of After-Obedience. But God hath wholly laid that Condition aſide as to us, and ſettled that of Faith, more eaſie to be perform'd, and to be renew'd by us. 'Tis infinite Grace in him, that he will accept of Faith in us, inſtead of that perfect Obedience, he requir'd of us in the Covenant of Works.

* Hoſ. 6.7.

2. It is eaſie, not like the burdenſome Ceremonies appointed under the Law. He exacts not now the legal Obedience, expenſive Sacrifices, troubleſom Purifications and Abſtinencies, that Yoke of Bondage, † which they were not able to bear. * He treats us not as Servants, or Children in their Nonage, under the Elements of the World, nor requires thoſe innumerable bodily Exerciſes that he exacted of them: He demands not a thouſand of Lambs, and Rivers of Oyl; but he requires a ſincere Confeſſion and Repentance, in order to our Abſolution; an unfeign'd Faith, in order to our Bleſſedneſs, and Elevation to a glorious Life. He requires only, that we ſhould believe what he ſaith, and have ſo good an Opinion of his Goodneſs and Veracity, as to perſwade our ſelves of the reality of his Intentions, confide in his Word, and rely upon his Promiſe, cordially embrace his crucified Son, whom he hath ſet forth as the means of our Happineſs and have a ſincere reſpect to all the Diſcoveries of his Will. What can be more eaſie than this? Tho' ſome in the Days of the Apoſtles, and others ſince, have endeavoured to introduce a multitude of legal Burthens, as if they envied God the Expreſſions of his Goodneſs, or thought him guilty of too much Remiſneſs, in taking off the Yoke, and treating Man too favourably.

† Gal. 5.1.
* Acts 15. 10.

3. Nor is it a clear knowledge of every Revelation, that is the Condition of this Covenant. God in his kindneſs to Man, hath made Revelations of himſelf, but his Goodneſs is manifeſted in obliging us to believe him, not fully to underſtand him. He hath made them by ſufficient Teſtimonies as clear to our Faith, as they are incomprehenſible to our Reaſon: He hath reveal'd a Trinity of Perſons, in their diſtinct Offices, in the Buſineſs of Redemption, without which Revelation of a Trinity, we could not have a right Notion and Scheme of Redeeming Grace. But ſince the clearneſs of Mens Underſtanding is ſullied by the Fall, and hath loſt its Wings, to fly up to a Knowledge of ſuch ſublime Things as that of the Trinity, and other Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion: God hath manifeſted his Goodneſs, in not obliging us to underſtand them, but to believe them; and hath given us reaſon enough to believe it to be his Revelation (both from the Nature of the Revelation it ſelf, and the way and manner of propagating it; which, is wholly Divine, exceeding all the Methods of Humane Art) tho' he hath not extended our Underſtandings to a Capacity to know them, and render a reaſon of every Myſtery. He did not require of every Iſraelite, or of any of them that were ſtung by the fiery Serpents, that they ſhould underſtand, or be able to diſcourſe of the Nature and Qualities of that Braſs of which the Serpent upon the Pole was made, or by what Art that Serpent was formed, or in what manner the ſight of it did operate in them for their Cure; it was enough, that they did believe the Inſtitution and Precept of God, and that their own Cure was aſſured by it: It was enough, if they caſt their Eyes upon it, according to the Direction. The Underſtandings of Men are of ſeveral Sizes and Elevations, one higher than another: If the Condition of this Covenant had been a greatneſs of Knowledge, the moſt acute Men had only enjoyed the Benefits of it. But it is Faith, which is as eaſie to be performed by the Ignorant and Simple, as by the Strongeſt and moſt Towring Mind: 'Tis that which is within the compaſs of every Man's Underſtanding. God did not require, that every one within the Verge of the Covenant, ſhould be able to diſcourſe of it to the Reaſons of Men: He requir'd not that every Man ſhould be a Philoſopher, or an Orator, but a Believer. What could be more eaſie than to lift up the Eye to the Brazen Serpent, to be cur'd of a fiery Sting? What could be more facile than a Glance, which is done without any pain, and in a moment? 'Tis a Condition may be perform'd by the weakeſt, as well as the ſtrongeſt: Could thoſe that were bitten in the moſt Vital part, caſt up their Eyes, tho' at the laſt Gaſp, they would ariſe to Health by the Expulſion of the Venom.

2. As 'tis eaſie, ſo 'tis reaſonable. Repent and believe, is that which is requir'd by Chriſt and the Apoſtles, for the enjoyment of the Kingdom of Heaven: 'Tis very reaſonable, that Things ſo great and glorious, ſo beneficial to Men, and reveal'd to them by ſo ſound an Authority, and an unerring Truth, ſhould be believed. The Excellency of the thing diſclos'd, could admit of no lower a Condition than to be believ'd and embrac'd. There is a ſort of Faith, that is a Natural Condition in every thing: All Religion in the World, tho' never ſo falſe, depends upon a ſort of it; for unleſs there be a belief of future Things, there would never be a hope of Good, or a fear of Evil, the two great Hinges upon which Religion moves. In all kinds of Learning, many things muſt be believ'd, before a progreſs can be made. Belief of one another is neceſſary in all Acts of Humane Life; without which, Humane Society would be unlink'd and diſſolv'd: What is that Faith that God requires of us in this Covenant, but a willingneſs of Soul to take God for our God, Chriſt for our Mediator, and the Procurer of our Happineſs *? What Prince could require leſs upon any Promiſe he makes his Subjects, than to be believed as true, and depended on as good? That they ſhould accept his Pardon and other gracious Offers, and be ſincere in their Allegiance to him, avoiding all things that may offend him, and purſuing all things that may pleaſe him: Thus God, by ſo ſmall and reaſonable a Condition as Faith, lets in the Fruits of Chriſt's Death into our Soul, and wraps us up in the fruition of all the Priviledges purchas'd by it. So much he hath condeſcended in his Goodneſs, that upon ſo ſlight a Condition we may plead his Promiſe, and humbly challenge by vertue of the Covenant, thoſe good Things he hath promiſed in his Word: 'Tis ſo reaſonable a Condition, that if God did not require it in the Covenant of Grace, the Creature were obliged to perform it: For the publiſhing any Truth from God, naturally calls for Credit to be given it by the Creature, and an Entertainment of it in Practice. Could you offer a more reaſonable Condition your ſelves, had it been left to your choice? Should a Prince proclaim a Pardon to a profligate Wretch, would not all the World cry ſhame of him, if he did not believe it upon the higheſt Aſſurances? And if Ingenuity did not make him ſorry for his Crimes, and careful in the Duty of a ſubject, ſurely the World would cry ſhame of ſuch a Perſon.

* Rev. 22. 17.

3. 'Tis a neceſſary Condition.

1. Neceſſary for the Honour of God. A Prince is diſparag'd, if his Authority in his Law, and if his Graciouſneſs in his Promiſes be not accepted and believed. What Phyſician would undertake a Cure, if his Precepts may not be credited? 'Tis the firſt thing in the Order of Nature, that the Revelation of God ſhould be believed, that the reality of his Intentions, in inviting Man to the acceptance of thoſe Methods he hath preſcribed for their attaining their chief Happineſs, ſhould be acknowledged. 'Tis a debaſing Notion of God, that he ſhould give a Happineſs, purchaſed by Divine Blood, to a Perſon that hath no value for it, nor any abhorrency of thoſe Sins that occaſion'd ſo great a Suffering, nor any will to avoid them: Should he not vilifie himſelf, to beſtow a Heaven upon that Man, that will not believe the offers of it, nor walk in thoſe ways that leads to it? That walks ſo, as if he would declare, there was no Truth in his Word, nor Holineſs in his Nature? Would not God by ſuch an Act verifie a Truth in the Language of their Practice, viz. That he were both falſe and impure, careleſs of his Word, and negligent of his Holineſs? As God was ſo deſirous to enſure the Conſolation of Believers, that if there had been a greater Being than himſelf to atteſt, and for him to be reſponſible to, for the confirmation of his Promiſe, he would willingly have ſubmitted to him, and have made him the Umpire: * He ſwore by himſelf, becauſe he could not ſwear by a greater. By the ſame reaſon, had it ſtood with the Majeſty and Wiſdom of God to ſtoop to lower Conditions in this Covenant, for the reducing of Man to his Duty and Happineſs, he would have done it; but his Goodneſs could not take lower ſteps with the preſervation of the Rights of his Majeſty, and the Honour of his Wiſdom. Would you have had him wholly ſubmitted to the obſtinate Will of a rebellious Creature, and be ruled only by his Terms? Would you have had him receiv'd Men to Happineſs, after they had heightned their Crimes by a contempt of his Grace, as well as of his Creating Goodneſs, and have made them bleſſed under the Guilt of their Crimes, without an acknowledgment? Should he glorifie one that will not believe what he hath reveal'd, nor repent of what himſelf hath committed; and ſo ſave a Man after a repeated Unthankfulneſs to the moſt immenſe Grace that ever was, or can be diſcovered and offer'd, without a deteſtation of his Ingratitude, and a voluntary acceptance of his Offers? 'Tis neceſſary for the Honour of God, that Man ſhould accept of his Terms, and not give Laws to him, to whom he is obnoxious as a guilty Perſon, as well as Subject as a Creature.

*Heb. 6. 19.

Again: It was very equitable and neceſſary for the Honour of God, that ſince Man fell by an unbelief of his Precept and Threatning, he ſhould not riſe again without a belief of his Promiſe, and caſting himſelf upon his Truth in that: Since he had vilified the Honour of his Truth in the Threatning: Since Man in his Fall would lean to his own Underſtanding againſt God, 'tis fit that in his Recovery, the higheſt Powers of his Soul, his Underſtanding and Will ſhould be ſubjected to him in an entire Reſignation. Now, whereas Knowledge ſeems to have a Power over its Object, Faith is a full ſubmiſſion to that which is the Object of it. Since Man intended a glorying in himſelf; the Evangelical Covenant directs its whole Battery againſt it, that Men may glory in nothing but Divine Goodneſs †. Had Man perform'd exact Obedience by his own Strength, he had had ſomething in himſelf as the Matter of his Glory. And tho' after the Fall, Grace made it ſelf illuſtrious, in ſetting him up upon a new Stock, yet had the ſame Condition of exact Obedience been ſettled in the ſame manner; Man would have had ſomething to glory in, which is ſtruck off wholly by Faith; whereby Man in every Act muſt go out of himſelf for a ſupply, to that Mediator which Divine Goodneſs and Grace hath appointed.

† Cor. 1. 29, 30, 31.

2. 'Tis neceſſary for the Happineſs of Man. That can be no contenting Condition wherein the Will of Man doth not concur. He that is forced to the moſt delicious Diet, or to wear the braveſt Apparel, or to be ſtor'd with abundance of Treaſure, cannot be happy in thoſe things without an eſteem of them, and delight in them: If they be nauſeous to him, the Indiſpoſition of his Mind is a dead Fly in thoſe Boxes of precious Ointment. Now Faith being a ſincere willingneſs to accept of Chriſt, and to come to God by him; and Repentance being a deteſtation of that, which made Man's ſeparation from God, 'tis impoſſible he could be voluntarily happy without it: Man cannot attain and enjoy a true Happineſs, without an operation of his Underſtanding about the Object propoſed, and the Means appointed to enjoy it: There muſt be a knowledge of what is offer'd, and of the way of it, and ſuch a knowledge as may determine the Will, to affect that end; and embrace thoſe means; which the Will can never do, 'till the Underſtanding be fully perſwaded of the Truth of the Offerer, and the Goodneſs of the Propoſal it ſelf, and the Conveniency of the Means for the attaining of it. 'Tis neceſſary in the nature of the thing, that what is reveal'd, ſhould be believ'd to be a Divine Revelation. God muſt be judged true in the promiſing

Juſti-

Juſtification and Sanctification, the means of Happineſs; and if any Man deſires to be partaker of thoſe Promiſes, he muſt deſire to be ſanctified; and how can he deſire that which is the Matter of thoſe Promiſes, if he wallow in his own Luſts, and deſire to do ſo, a thing repugnant to the Promiſe it ſelf? Would you have God force Man to be happy againſt his Will? Is it not very reaſonable he ſhould demand the conſent of his reaſonable Creature, to that Bleſſedneſs he offers him? The new Covenant is a Marriage Covenant *, which implies a conſent on our parts, as well as a conſent on God's part; That is no Marriage that hath not the conſent of both parties. Now Faith is our actual Conſent, and Repentance and ſincere Obedience are the Teſtimonies of the truth and reality of this Conſent.

* Hoſ. 2. 16, 19, 20.

6. Divine Goodneſs is eminent in his Methods of treating with Men to embrace this Covenant. They are Methods of gentleneſs and ſweetneſs: 'Tis a wooing Goodneſs, and a bewailing Goodneſs: His Expreſſions are with ſtrong motions of affection: He carrieth not on the Goſpel by force of Arms: He doth not ſolely menace Men into it, as Worldly Conquerors have done: He doth not as Mahomet, plunder Mens Eſtates, and wound their Bodies, to imprint a Religion on their Souls: He doth not erect Gibbets, and kindle Faggots, to ſcare Men to an entring into Covenant with him. What multitudes might he have rais'd by his Power, as well as others? What Legions of Angels might he have rendezvouz'd from Heaven, to have beaten Men into a profeſſion of the Goſpel? Nor doth he only interpoſe his Soveraign Authority in the Precept of Faith, but uſeth Rational Expoſtulations to move Men voluntarily to comply with his Propoſals *: Come now, ſaith the Lord, let us reaſon together. He ſeems to call Heaven and Earth to be judge, whether he had been wanting in any reaſonable ways of Goodneſs to overcome the perverſity of the Creature; † Hear, O Heavens, and give ear, O Earth, I have nouriſhed and brought up Children. What various encouragements doth he uſe agreeable to the Nature of Men, endeavouring to perſwade them with all tenderneſs, not to deſpiſe their own Mercies, and be Enemies to their own Happineſs? He would allure us by his Beauty, and win us by his Mercy. He uſes the Arms of his own Excellency, and our neceſſity to prevail upon us, and this after the higheſt provocations. When Adam had trampled upon his Creating Goodneſs, it was not cruſht; and when Man had caſt it from him, it took the higher rebound: When the Rebels provocation was freſh in his Mind, he ſought him out with a Promiſe in his Hand, tho' Adam fled from him out of enmity, as well as fear ||. And when the Jews had outrag'd his Son, whom he lov'd from Eternity, and made the Lord of Heaven and Earth bow down his Head like a Slave on the Croſs, yet in that place where the moſt horrible Wickedneſs had been committed, muſt the Goſpel be preached: The Law muſt go forth out of that Sion, and the Apoſtles muſt not ſtir from thence till they had receiv'd the Promiſe of the Spirit, and publiſh'd the Word of Grace in that ungrateful City, whoſe Inhabitants yet ſwelled with Indignation againſt the Lord of Life, and the Doctrine he had preached among them: * He would overlook their Indignities out of tenderneſs to their Souls; and expoſe the Apoſtles to the peril of their Lives, rather than expoſe his Enemies to the fury of the Devil.

† Acts 1. 4, 5.

1. How affectionately doth he invite Men? What multitudes of alluring Promiſes, and preſſing Exhortations are there every where ſprinkled in the Scripture, and in ſuch a paſſionate manner, as if God were ſolely concern'd in our good, without a glance on his own glory? How tenderly doth he wooe flinty Hearts, and expreſs more pity to them, than they do to themſelves? With what affection do his Bowels riſe up to his Lips in his Speech in the Prophet, * Hearken to me, O my People, and give ear unto me, O my Nation, my People, my Nation! Melting Expreſſions of a tender God, ſolliciting a rebellious People to make their retreat to him: He never emptied his hand of his Bounty, nor diveſted his Lips of thoſe charitable Expreſſions. He ſent Noah to move the wicked of the old World to an embracing of his Goodneſs, and frequent Prophets to the provoking Jews; and as the World continued, and grew up to a taller ſtature in Sin, he ſtoops more in the manner of his Expreſſions. Never was the World at a higher pitch of Idolatry, than at the firſt publiſhing the Goſpel; yet when we ſhould have expected him to be a puniſhing, he is a beſeeching God. The Apoſtle fears not to uſe the Expreſſion for the glory of Divine Goodneſs, We are Ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us †. The beſeeching voice of God is in the voice of the Miniſtry, as the voice of the Prince is in that of the Herald: 'Tis as if Divine Goodneſs did kneel down to a Sinner with wringed Hands and blubber'd Cheeks, entreating him not to force him to re-aſſume a Tribunal of Juſtice in the nature of a Judge, ſince he would treat with Man upon a Throne of Grace in the nature of a Father; yea, he ſeems to put himſelf into the poſture of the Criminal, that the offending Creature might not feel the puniſhment due to a Rebel. 'Tis not the condeſcenſion, but the intereſt of a Traytor to creep upon his knees in Sackcloth to his Sovereign, to beg his Life: But it is a miraculous Goodneſs in the Sovereign to creep in the loweſt poſture to the Rebel, to importune him not only for an amity to him, but a love to his own Life and Happineſs: This he doth not only in his general proclamations, but in his particular wooings, thoſe inward courtings of his Spirit, ſolliciting them with more diligence (if they would obſerve it) to their Happineſs, than the Devil tempts them to the ways of their Miſery. As he was firſt in Chriſt, reconciling the World, when the World looked not after him; ſo he is firſt in his Spirit, wooing the World to accept of that Reconciliation, when the World will not liſten to him. How often doth he flaſh up the Light of Nature, and the Light of the Word in Mens hearts, to move them not to lye down in ſparks of their own kindling, but to aſpire to a better happineſs, and prepare them to be ſubject to a higher Mercy; if they would improve his preſent Entreaties to ſuch an end? And what are his Threatnings deſign'd for, but to move the Wheel of our Fears, that the Wheel of our Deſire and Love might be ſet on motion for the embracing his Promiſe? They are not ſo much the Thunders of his Juſtice, as the loud Rhetorick of his Good-Will, to prevent Mens Miſery under the Viols of Wrath. 'Tis his kindneſs to ſcare Men by Threatnings, that Juſtice might not ſtrike them with the Sword: 'Tis not the deſtruction, but the preſerving reformation that he aims at: He hath no pleaſure in the death of the Wicked; This he confirms by his Oath. || His Threatnings are gracious Expoſtulations with them, Why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael? They are like the noiſe a favourable Officer makes in the Street, to warn the Criminal he comes to ſeize upon to make his eſcape: He never uſed his Juſtice to cruſh Men, till he had uſed his Kindneſs to allure them. All the dreadful deſcriptions of a future Wrath, as well as the lively deſcriptions of the happineſs of another World, are deſigned to perſwade Men: The Honey of his Goodneſs is in the Bowels of those roaring Lions; such pains doth Goodness take with Men, to make them Candidates for Heaven.

2. How readily doth he receive Men, when they do return? We have David's Experience for it *; I said, I will confess my Transgressions unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the iniquity of my Sin, Selah. A sincere look from the Creature draws out his Arms, and opens his Bosom; he is ready with his Physick to heal us, upon a resolution to acquaint him with our Disease, and by his Medicines prevents the putting our Resolution into a Petition. The Psalmist adds a Selah to it, as a special Note of Thankfulness for Divine Goodness. He doth not only stand ready to receive our Petitions, while we are speaking, but answers us before we call; † listning to the Motions of our Hearts, as well as to the Supplications of our Lips: He is the true Father, that hath a quicker pace in meeting, than the Prodigal hath in returning; who would not have his Embraces and Caresses interrupted by his Confession; ‖ The Confession follows, doth not precede the Father's Compassion. How doth he rejoyce in having an opportunity to express his Grace, when he hath prevail'd with a Rebel to throw down his Arms and lie at his Feet; and this because he delights in mercy? * He delights in the Expressions of it from himself, and the acceptance of it by his Creature.

3. How meltingly doth he bewail Man's wilful refusal of his Goodness? 'Tis a mighty Goodness to offer Grace to a Rebel, a mighty Goodness to give it him after he hath a while stood off from the terms: An astonishing Goodness to regret and lament his wilful Perdition. He seems to utter those words in a sigh; † Oh that my People had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my way! 'Tis true, God hath not Humane Passions, but his Affections cannot be express'd otherwise in a way intelligible to us: The Excellency of his Nature is above the Passions of Men, but such Expressions of himself manifest to us the Sincerity of his Goodness; and that were he capable of our Passions, he would express himself in such a manner as we do. And we find incarnate Goodness bewailing with Tears and Sighs the ruine of Jerusalem: ‖ By the same reason that when a Sinner returns, there is Joy in Heaven, upon his obstinacy there is Sorrow on Earth. The one is as if a Prince should cloath all his Court in triumphant Scarlet upon a Rebel's repentance; and the other, as if a Prince should put himself and his Court in Mourning for a Rebel's obstinate refusal of a Pardon, when he lies at his Mercy. Are not now these affectionate invitations, and deep bewailings of their perversity high Testimonies of Divine Goodness? Do not the unwearied repetitions of Gracious Encouragements deserve a higher Name than that of meer Goodness? What can be a stronger Evidence of the sincerity of it, than the sound of his saving voice in our enjoyments, the motion of his Spirit in our hearts, and his Grief for the neglect of all? These are not Testimonies of any want of Goodness in his Nature to answer us, or willingness to express it to his Creature. Hath he any mind to deceive us, that thus entreats us? The Majesty of his Nature is too great for such shifts; or if it were not, the despicableness of our condition would render him above the using any. Who would charge that Physician with want of kindness, that freely offers his Sovereign Medicine, importunes Men by the love they have to their health to take it, and is dissolved into tears and sorrow, when he finds it rejected by their peevish and conceited Humor?

7. Divine Goodness is evident in the Sacraments he hath affix'd to this Covenant, especially in the Lord's Supper. As he gave himself in his Son, so he gives his Son in the Sacrament: He doth not only give him as a Sacrifice upon the Cross for the expiation of our Crimes, but as a Feast upon the Table for the nourishment of our Souls: In the one he was given to be offer'd; in this he gives him to be partaked of, with all the Fruits of his Death: Under the Image of the Sacramental Signs, every Believer doth eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood of the great Mediator of the Covenant. The words of Christ, This is my Body, and this is my Blood, are true to the end of the World *. This is the most delicious Viand of Heaven, the most exquisite dainty food God can feed us with; the delight of the Deity, the admiration of Angels: A Feast with God is great, but a Feast on God is greater. Under those Signs that Body is presented; that which was conceiv'd by the Spirit, inhabited by the Godhead, bruised by the Father to be our Food, as well as our Propitiation, is presented to us on the Table: That Blood which satisfied Justice, wash'd away our guilt on the Cross, and pleads for our Persons at the Throne of Grace: That Blood which silenc'd the Curse, pacify'd Heaven, and purg'd Earth, is given to us for our refreshment. This is the Bread sent from Heaven, the true Manna; the Cup is the Cup of Blessing, and therefore a Cup of Goodness †. 'Tis true, Bread doth not cease to be Bread, nor the Wine cease to be Wine; neither of them lose their Substance, but both acquire a Sanctification, by the relation they have to that which they represent, and give a nourishment to that Faith that receives them. In those God offers us a remedy for the sting of Sin, and troubles of Conscience: He gives us not the Blood of a meer Man, or the Blood of an incarnate Angel, but of God blessed for ever: A Blood that can secure us against the Wrath of Heaven, and the tumults of our Consciences: a Blood that can wash away our sins, and beautify our souls: a Blood that hath more strength than our Filth, and more prevalency than our Accuser: A Blood that secures us against the Terrors of Death, and purifies us for the Blessedness of Heaven. The Goodness of God complies with our Senses, and condescends to our weakness: He instructs us by the Eye, as well as by the Ear: He lets us see, and taste, and feel him, as well as hear him: He veils his Glory under Earthly Elements, and informs our Understanding in the Mysteries of Salvation by Signs familiar to our Senses; and because we cannot with our bodily Eyes behold him in his Glory, he presents him to the Eyes of our Minds in Elements, to affect our Understandings in the representations of his Death. The Body of Christ crucified is more visible to our Spiritual sense, than the invisible Deity could be visible in his Flesh upon Earth: And the Power of his Body and Blood is as well experimented in our Souls, as the Power of his Divinity was seen by the Jews in his miraculous actions in his Body in the World. 'Tis the Goodness of God, to mind us frequently of the great things Christ hath purchased; that as himself would not let them be out of his mind, to communicate them to us, so he would give us means to preserve them in our minds, to adore him for them, and request them of him; whereby he doth evidence his own solicitousness, that we should not be depriv'd by out own forgetfulness of that Grace Christ hath purchas'd for us: It was to remember the Redeemer, and shew his Death till he came ‖.

1. His Goodness is seen in the end of it, which is a sealing the Covenant of Grace. *. The common Nature and End of Sacraments is to seal the Covenant they belong to, and the truths of the Promises of it. The legal Sacraments of Circumcision and the Passover sealed the legal Promises and the Covenant in the Judaical Administration of it: And the Evangelical Sacraments ſeal the Evangelical Promiſes, as a Ring confirms a contract of Marriage, and a Seal the Articles of a Compact: By the ſame reaſon Circumciſion is call'd a Seal of the Righteouſneſs of Faith †, other Sacraments may have the ſame Title: God doth atteſt, that he will remain firm in his Promiſe; and the Receiver atteſts, he will remain firm in his Faith. In all Reciprocal Covenants there are mutual Engagements, and that which ſerves for a Seal on the part of the one, ſerves for a Seal alſo on the part of the other: God obligeth himſelf to the performance of the Promiſe, and Man engageth himſelf to the performance of his Duty. The thing confirm'd by this Sacrament is the perpetuity of this Covenant in the Blood of Chriſt, whence it is call'd the New Teſtament, or Covenant in the Blood of Chriſt ‖. In every repetition of it, God by preſenting confirms his reſolution to us, of ſticking to this Covenant for the Merit of Chriſt's Blood; and the Receiver by eating the Body, and drinking the Blood, engageth himſelf to keep cloſe to the Condition of Faith, expecting a full Salvation, and a bleſſed Immortality upon the Merit of the ſame Blood alone. This Sacrament could not be call'd the New Teſtament or Covenant, if it had not ſome relation to the Covenant; and what it can be but this, I do not underſtand. The Covenant it ſelf was confirm'd by the Death of Chriſt *, and thereby made unchangeable both in the Benefits to us, and the Condition requir'd of us; but he ſeals it to our ſenſe in a Sacrament to give us ſtrong conſolation: Or rather the Articles of the Covenant of Redemption between the Father and the Son, agreed on from Eternity, were accompliſh'd on Chriſt's part by his Death, on the Father's part by his Reſurrection; Chriſt perform'd what he promis'd in the one, and God acknowledg'd the validity of it, and performs what he had promis'd in the other. The Covenant of Grace founded upon this Covenant of Redemption is ſealed in the Sacrament; God owns his ſtanding to the terms of it, as ſeal'd by the Blood of the Mediator, by preſenting him to us under thoſe Signs, and gives us a right upon Faith to the enjoyment of the Fruits of it: As the right of a Houſe is made over by the delivery of the Key, and the right of Land tranſlated by the delivery of a Turf, whereby he gives us aſſurance of his reality; and a ſtrong ſupport to our confidence in him; not that there is any vertue and power of ſealing in the Elements themſelves, no more than there is in a Turf, to give an Infeoffment in a parcel of Land; but as the power of the one is deriv'd from the Order of the Law, ſo the confirming power of the Sacrament is deriv'd from the Inſtitution of God. As the Oyl wherewith Kings were anointed did not of it ſelf confer upon them that Royal Dignity, but it was a ſign of their inveſtiture into Office, order'd by Divine Inſtitution. We can with no reaſon imagin, that God intended them as naked Signs or Pictures, to pleaſe our Eyes with the Image of them, to repreſent their own Figures to our Eyes, but to confirm ſomething to our underſtanding by the Efficacy of the Spirit accompanying them †: They convey to the believing Receiver what they repreſent, as the Great Seal of a Prince fixed to the Parchment doth the Pardon of the Rebel as well as its own figure. Chriſt's Death and the Grace of the Covenant is not only ſignified, but the Fruits and Merit of that Death communicated alſo. Thus doth Divine Goodneſs evidence it ſelf, not only in making a gracious Covenant with us, but fixing Seals to it; not to ſtrengthen his own Obligation, which ſtood ſtronger than the Foundations of Heaven and Earth, upon the Credit of his Word, but to ſtrengthen our weakneſs, and ſupport our ſecurity, by ſomething which might appear more formal and ſolemn than a bare word. By this the Divine Goodneſs provides againſt our ſpiritual faintings, and ſhews us by real Signs as well as verbal Declarations, that the Covenant ſealed by the Blood of Chriſt, is unalterable; and thereby would fortifie and mount our hopes to degrees in ſome meaſure ſuitable to the kindneſs of the Covenant, and the dignity of the Redeemer's Blood. And it's yet a further degree of his Goodneſs, that he hath appointed us ſo often to celebrate it, whereby he ſhews how careful he is to keep up our tottering Faith, and preſerve us conſtant in our Obedience; obliging us to the payment of our Duty.

2. His Goodneſs is ſeen in the Sacrament in giving us in it an Union and Communion with Chriſt. There is not only a Commemoration of Chriſt dying, but a Communication of Chriſt living. The Apoſtle ſtrongly aſſerts it by way of Interrogation, * The Cup of Bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the Communion of the Blood of Chriſt? The Bread which we break, is it not the Communion of the Body of Chriſt? In the Cup there is a communication of the Blood of Chriſt, a conveyance of a Right to the Merits of his Death, and the Bleſſedneſs of his Life: We are not leſs by this made one Body with Chriſt, than we are by Baptiſm: † And put on Chriſt living in this, as well as in Baptiſm; ‖ That as his taking our infirm Fleſh was a real Incarnation, ſo the giving us his Fleſh to eat, is a Myſtical Incarnation in Believers, whereby they become one Body with him as Crucified, and one Body with him as Riſen; for if Chriſt himſelf be receiv'd by Faith in the Word, * He is no leſs receiv'd by Faith in the Sacrament. When the Holy Ghoſt is ſaid to be receiv'd, the Graces or Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt are receiv'd; So when Chriſt is receiv'd, the Fruits of his Death are really partaked of. The Iſraelites that eat of the Sacrifices, did partake of the Altar †, i. e. had a communion with the God of Iſrael, to whom they had been ſacrific'd; and thoſe that eat of the Sacrifices offer'd to Idols had a fellowſhip with Devils, to whom thoſe Sacrifices were offer'd, Ver. 20. Thoſe that partake of the Sacraments in a due manner, have a communion with that God to whom 'twas ſacrific'd, and a communion with that Body which was ſacrificed to God: not that the ſubſtance of that Body and Blood is wrapped up in the Elements, or that the Bread and Wine are transform'd into the Body and Blood of Chriſt, but as they repreſent him, and by virtue of the Inſtitution are in Eſtimation himſelf, his own Body and Blood; by the ſame reaſon as he is call'd Chriſt our Paſſover, he may be call'd Chriſt our Supper ‖: For as they are ſo reckon'd to an unworthy Receiver, as if they were the real Body and Blood of Chriſt, becauſe by his not diſcerning the Lord's Body in it, or making light of it as common Bread, he is judg'd guilty of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, guilty of treating him in as baſe a manner as the Jews did when they crown'd him with Thorns: * By the ſame reaſon they muſt be reckon'd to a worthy Receiver, as the very Body and Blood of Chriſt: So that as the unworthy Receiver eats and drinks Damnation, the worthy Receiver eats and drinks Salvation. It would be an empty Myſtery, and unworthy of an Inſtitution by Divine Goodneſs, if there were not ſome communion with Chriſt in it: There would be ſome kind of deceit in the Precept, Take, eat, and drink, this is my Body and Blood, if there were not a conveyance of ſpiritual vital influences to our Souls: for the natural End of eating and drinking is the nouriſhment and increaſe of the Body, and preſervation of Life, by that which we eat and drink. wiſe, wiſe, gracious and true God, would never give us empty Figures without accompliſhing that which is ſignified by them, and ſuitable to them. How great is this Goodneſs of God? He would have his Son in us, one with us, ſtraitly joyn'd to us, as if we were his proper Fleſh and Blood: In the Incarnation Divine Goodneſs united him to our Nature, in the Sacrament it doth in a ſort unite him with his purchas'd Priviledges to our Perſons; we have not a communion with a part or a Member of his Body, or a drop of his Blood, but with his whole Body and Blood repreſented in every part of the Elements. The Angels in the Heaven enjoy not ſo great a priviledge; they have the honour to be under him as their Head, but not that of having him for their Food; they behold him, but they do not taſt him. And certainly that Goodneſs that hath condeſcended ſo much to our weakneſs, would impart it to us in a very glorious manner, were we capable of it. But becauſe a Man cannot behold the Light of the Sun in its full ſplendor, by reaſon of the infirmities of his Eyes, he muſt behold it by the help of a Glaſs, and ſuch a communication thro' a colour'd and Opake-Glaſs, is as real from the Sun it ſelf, tho' not ſo glorious, but more ſhrowded and obſcure; 'tis the ſame light that ſhines thro' that Medium, as ſpreads it ſelf glorioufly in the open Air, tho' the one be mask'd, and the other open-fac'd.

To conclude this, by the way we may take notice of the neglect of this Ordinance: If it be a token of Divine Goodneſs to appoint it, 'tis no ſign of our eſtimation of Divine Goodneſs to neglect it. He that values the kindneſs of his friend will accept of his invitation, if there be not ſome ſtrong impediments in the way, or ſo much familiarity with him, that his refuſal upon a light occaſion would not be unkindly taken. But tho' God put on the diſpoſition of a friend to us, yet he loſeth not the Authority of a Sovereign; and the humble familiarity he invites us to doth not diminiſh the condition and duty of a Subject. A Sovereign Prince would not take it well, if a Favourite ſhould refuſe the offer'd honour of his Table. The Viands of God are not to be ſlighted. Can we live better upon our poor pittance, than upon his Dainties? Did not Divine Goodneſs condeſcend in it to the weakneſs of our Faith, and ſhall we conceit our Faith ſtronger than God thinks it? If he thought fit by thoſe Seals to make a Deed of Gift to us, ſhall we be ſo unmannerly to him, and ſuch Enemies to the Security he offers us over and above his Word, as not to accept it? Are we unwilling to have our Souls enflamed with love, our Hearts filled with comfort, and arm'd againſt the attempts of our Enemies? 'Tis true, there is a guilt of the Body and Blood of Chriſt contracted by a ſlightneſs in the manner of attending; is it not alſo contracted by a refuſal and neglect? What is the Language of it? If it ſpeaks not the death of Chriſt in vain, it ſpeaks the inſtitution of this Ordinance as a remembrance of his death to be a Vanity, and no mark of Divine Goodneſs. Let us therefore put ſuch a value upon Divine Goodneſs in this Affair, as to be willing to receive the conveyances of his Love, and freſh Engagements of our Duty; the one is due from us to the kindneſs of our friend, and the other belongs to our Duty, as his Subjects.

8. By this Redemption God reſtores us to a more excellent condition than Adam had in Innocence. Chriſt was ſent by Divine Goodneſs not only to reſtore the Life Adam's ſin had ſtript us of, but to give it more abundantly than Adam's ſtanding could have convey'd it to us, * I am come that they might have Life, and that they might have it more abundantly. More abundantly for ſtrength, more abundantly for duration, a life abounding with greater felicity and glory: The ſubſtance of thoſe better Promiſes of the New Covenant, than what attended the old. There are fuller ſtreams of Grace by Chriſt than flow'd to Adam, or could flow from Adam. As Chriſt never reſtor'd any to health and ſtrength while he was in the World, but he gave them a greater meaſure of both than they had before; ſo there is the ſame kindneſs, no queſtion, manifeſted in our ſpiritual condition. Adam's Life might have preſery'd us, but Adam's Death could not have reſcued either Himſelf or his Poſterity; but in our Redemption we have a Redeemer, who hath died to expiate our Sins, and ſo crowned with Life to ‖ ſave, and for ever preſerve our Perſons, † Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo, So that by Redeeming Goodneſs the Life of a Believer is as perpetual as the Life of the Redeemer Chriſt. Adam, tho' Innocent, was under the danger of periſhing; a Believer, tho' culpable, is above the fears of Mutability. Adam had a Holineſs in his Nature, but capable of being loſt; by Chriſt Believers have a Holineſs beſtow'd, not capable of being rifled, but which will remain till it be at laſt fully perfected: Tho' they have a power to change in their Nature, yet they are above an actual final change by the indulgence of Divine Grace. Adam ſtood by himſelf, Believers ſtand in a Root impoſſible to be ſhaken or corrupted; by this means the Promiſe is ſure to all the Seed. * Chriſt is a ſtronger Perſon than Adam, who can never break Covenant with God, and the Truth of God will never break Covenant with him. We are united to a more excellent Head than Adam. Inſtead of a Root meerly Human, we have a Root Divine, as well as Humane. In him we had the Righteouſneſs of a Creature meerly Humane; in this we have a Righteouſneſs Divine, the Righteouſneſs of God-man; the ſtock is no longer in our own hands, but in the hands of one that cannot imbezzle it, or forfeit it. Divine Goodneſs hath depoſited it ſtrongly for our ſecurity. The ſtamp we receive by the Divine Goodneſs from the ſecond Adam, is more noble than that we ſhould have receiv'd from the firſt, had he remain'd in his created ſtate: Adam was formed of the Duſt of the Earth, and the New Man is form'd by the incorruptible Seed of the Word. And at the Reſurrection the Body of Man ſhall be endu'd with better qualities than Adam had at Creation. They ſhall be like that glorious Body which is in Heaven in union with the Perſon of the Son of God. † Adam at the beſt had but an Earthly Body, but the Lord from Heaven hath a Heavenly Body, the Image of which ſhall be born by the Redeem'd Ones, as they have born the Image of the Earthly ‖. Adam had the Society of Beaſts, Redeemed ones expect by Divine Goodneſs in Redemption a commerce with Angels; as they are reconcil'd to them by his Death, they ſhall certainly come to converſe with them at the conſummation of their Happineſs. As they are made of one Family, ſo they will have a peculiar intimacy. Adam had a Paradiſe, and Redeem'd Ones a Heaven provided for them, a happier place with a richer Furniture. 'Tis much to give ſo compleat a Paradiſe to innocent Adam; but more to give Heaven to an ungrateful Adam, and his Rebellious Poſterity. It had been abundant Goodneſs to have reſtor'd us to the ſame condition in that Paradiſe from whence we were ejected; but a ſuperabundant Goodneſs to beſtow upon us a better Habitation in Heaven, which we could never have expected. How great is that Goodneſs, when by ſin we were fallen to be worſe than nothing, that he ſhould raiſe us to be more than what we were! That reſtor'd us, not to the firſt ſtep of our Creation, but to many degrees of elevation beyond it. Not only only reſtores us, but prefers us, not only ſtriking off our Chains, to ſet us free, but cloathing us with a Robe of Righteouſneſs, to render us honourable. Not only quenching our Hell, but preparing a Heaven; not re-garniſhing an earthly, but providing a richer Palace: His Goodneſs was ſo great, that after it had reſcued us, it would not content it ſelf with the old Furniture, but makes all new for us in another World; a new Wine to drink, a new Heaven to dwell in, a more magnificent Structure for our Habitation: Thus hath Goodneſs prepared for us a ſtraiter Union, a ſtronger Life, a purer Righteouſneſs, an unſhaken Standing, and a fuller Glory. All more excellent than was within the compaſs of innocent Adam's Poſſeſſion.

9. This Goodneſs in Redemption extends it ſelf to the lower Creation. It takes in not only Man, but the whole Creation, except the fallen Angels, and gives a participation of it to inſenſible Creatures; upon the Account of this Redemption, the Sun, and all kind of Creatures were preſerv'd, which otherwiſe had ſunk into Deſtruction upon the Sin of Man, and ceas'd from their Being, as Man had utterly ceas'd from his Happineſs. * By him all things conſiſt. The Fall of Man brought not only a Miſery upon himſelf, but a Vanity upon the Creature: The Earth groaned under a Curſe for his ſake. They were all created for the Glory of God, and the ſupport of Man in the performance of his Duty, who was obliged to uſe them for the Honour of him that created them both. Had Man been true to his Obligations, and uſed the Creatures for that end, to which they were dedicated by the Creator; as God would have then rejoyced in his Works, ſo his Works would have rejoyced in the honour of anſwering ſo excellent an end. But when Man loſt his Integrity, the Creatures loſt their Perfection; the honour of them was ſtain'd, when they were debas'd to ſerve the Luſts of a Traitor, inſtead of ſupporting the Duty of a Subject, and employed in the defence of the Vices of Men, againſt the Precepts and Authority of their common Sovereign. This was a vilifying the Creature, as it would be a vilifying the Sword of a Prince, which is for the maintenance of Juſtice, to be uſed for the Murder of an Innocent; and a diſhonouring a Royal Manſion, to make it a Store-houſe for a Dunghil. Had thoſe things the benefit of Senſe, they would groan under this Diſgrace, and riſe up in Indignation againſt them, that offered them this Affront, and turned them from their proper end. When Sin entred, the Heavens that were made to ſhine upon Man, and the Earth that was made to bear and nouriſh an innocent Creature, were now ſubjected to ſerve a rebellious Creature. And as Man turn'd againſt God, ſo he made thoſe Inſtruments againſt God, to ſerve his Enmity, Luxury, Senſuality. Hence the Creatures are ſaid to groan, * The whole Creation groans, and travels in pain together until now. They would really groan, had they Underſtanding to be ſenſible of the Outrage done them.

*Col. 1. 17.

* Rom. 8. 21.

The whole Creation: 'Tis the Pang of Univerſal Nature, the Agony of the whole Creation, to be alienated from the Original Uſe for which they were intended, and be diſ-joynted from their end, to ſerve the Diſloyalty of a Rebel. The Drunkard's Cup, and the Glutton's Table, the Adulterer's Bed, and the proud Man's Purple, would groan againſt the Abuſer of them. But when all the Fruits of Redemption ſhall be compleated, the Goodneſs of God ſhall pour it ſelf upon the Creatures, deliver them from the Bondage of Corruption, into the glorious Liberty of the Children of God *, they ſhall be reduced to their true End, and return'd in their Original Harmony. As the Creation doth paſſionately groan under its Vanity, ſo it doth earneſtly expect and wait for its deliverance, at the time of the manifeſtation of the Sons of God. The manifeſtation of the Sons of God, is the attainment of the liberty of the Creature. They ſhall be freed from the Vanity under which they are enſlav'd. As it entred by Sin, it ſhall vaniſh upon the total removal of Sin. What uſe they were deſign'd for in Paradiſe, they will have afterwards, except that of the nouriſhment of Men, who ſhall be as Angels, neither eating nor drinking. The Glory of God ſhall be ſeen and contemplated in them. It can hardly be thought, that God made the World to be a little moment after he had rear'd it, ſullied by the Sin of Man, and turn'd from its original End, without thoughts of a Reſtoration of it to its true End, as well as Man to his loſt Happineſs. The World was made for Man: Man hath not yet enjoyed the Creature, in the firſt intention of them; Sin made an interruption in that Fruition. As Redemption reſtores Man to his true end, ſo it reſtores the Creatures to their true uſe. The reſtoration of the World to its Beauty and Order, was the deſign of the Divine Goodneſs in the coming of Chriſt, as it is intimated in Iſa. 11. 6, 7, 8, 9. As he came not to deſtroy the Law, but to fulfil it; ſo he came not to deſtroy the Creatures, but to repair them. To reſtore to God the Honour and Pleaſure of the Creation, and reſtore to the Creatures their Felicity in reſtoring their Order. The Fall corrupted it, and the full Redemption of Men reſtores it. The laſt time is called not a time of Deſtruction, but a time of Reſtitution, and that of all Things *, of univerſal Nature, the main part of the Creation at leaſt. All thoſe things which were the Effects of Sin, will be aboliſh'd; the removal of the Cauſe beats down the Effect. The diſorder and unrulineſs of the Creature, ariſing from the Venom of Man's Tranſgreſſion, all the fierceneſs of one Creature againſt another ſhall vaniſh. The World ſhall be nothing but an Univerſal Smile. Nature ſhall put on triumphant Veſtments: There ſhall be no affrighting Thunders, choaking Miſts, venemous Vapours, or poiſonous Plants. It would not elſe be a Reſtitution of all Things. They are now ſubject to be waſted by Judgments for the Sin of their Poſſeſſor; but the perfection of Man's Redemptions ſhall free them from every Miſery. They have an advancement at the preſent; for they are under a more glorious Head, as being the poſſeſſion of Chriſt, the heavenly Adam, much ſuperiour to the firſt: As it's the Glory of a Perſon to be a Servant to a Prince, rather than a Peaſant. And afterwards they ſhall be elevated to a better ſtate, ſharing in Man's Happineſs, as well as they did in his Miſery; as Servants are intereſted in the good Fortune of their Maſter, and better'd by his advance in his Prince's Favour. As Man in his firſt Creation was mutable and liable to ſin, ſo the Creatures were liable to Vanity: But as Man by Grace ſhould be freed from the Mutability, ſo ſhall the Creatures be freed from the fears of an Invaſion, by the Vanity that ſully'd them before. The Condition of the Servants ſhall be ſuited to that of their Lord, for whom they were deſign'd: Hence all Creatures are call'd upon to rejoyce upon the Perfection of Salvation, and the appearance of Chriſt's Royal Authority in the World. * If they were to be deſtroyed, there would be no ground to invite them to triumph. Thus doth Divine Goodneſs ſpread its kind Arms over the whole Creation.

3. The third thing is the Goodneſs of God in his Government. That Goodneſs that deſpiſed not their Creation, doth not deſpiſe their Conduct. The ſame ſame Goodneſs that was the Head that fram'd them, is the Helm that guides them; his Goodneſs hovers over the whole Frame, either to prevent any wild Diſorders unſuitable to his Creating-end, or to conduct them to thoſe Ends, which might illuſtrate his Wiſdom and Goodneſs to his Creatures. His Goodneſs doth no leſs incline him to provide for them, than to frame them. 'Tis the natural Inclination of Man to love what is purely the Birth of his own Strength or Skill. He is fond of preſerving his own Inventions, as well as laborious in inventing them. 'Tis the Glory of a Man to preſerve them, as well as to produce them. God loves every thing which he hath made, which Love could not be without a continued Diffuſiveneſs to them, ſuitable to the End for which he made them. It would be a vain Goodneſs, if it did not intereſt it ſelf in managing the World, as well as erecting it: Without his Government, every thing in the World would juſtle againſt one another: The Beauty of it would be more defaced, it would be an unruly Maſs, a confus'd Chaos, rather than a Κόσμος, a comely World. If Divine Goodneſs reſpected it when it was as nothing, it would much more reſpect it when it was ſomething, by the ſole Virtue of his Power and Good Will to it, without any Motive from any thing elſe than Himſelf, becauſe there was nothing elſe but Himſelf. But ſince he ſees his own Stamp in things without Himſelf in the Creature, which is a kind of Motive, or moving Object to Divine Goodneſs to preſerve it, when there was nothing without Himſelf, that could be any Motive to him, to create it: As when God hath created a Creature, and it falls into Miſery, that Miſery of the Creature, thou' it doth not neceſſitate his Mercy, yet meeting with ſuch an Affection as Mercy in his Nature, is a moving Object to excite it: As the Repentance of Nineveh drew forth the Exerciſe of his Pity and preſerving Goodneſs. Certainly ſince God is Good, he is Bountiful; and if Bountiful, he is Provident. He would ſeem to envy and malign his Creatures, if he did not provide for them, while he intends to uſe them: But infinite Goodneſs cannot be affected with Envy: For all Envy implies a want of that Good in our ſelves, which we regard with ſo evil an Eye in another. But God being infinitely bleſſed, hath not the want of any Good, that can be a Riſe to ſuch an uncomly Diſpoſition. The Jews thought that Divine Goodneſs extended only to them in an immediate and particular Care, and left all other Nations and Things to the Guidance of Angels. But the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 107. a Pſalm calculated for the Celebration of this Perfection, in the continued Courſe of his Providence, throughout all Ages of the World, aſcribes to Divine Goodneſs, immediately, all the Advantages Men meet with. He helps them in their Actions, preſides over their Motions, inſpects their ſeveral Conditions, labours Day and Night in a perpetual Care of them. The whole Life of the World is link'd together by Divine Goodneſs. Every thing is order'd by him in the place where he hath ſet it, without which the World would be ſtript of that Excellency it hath by Creation.

1. Firſt, This Goodneſs is evident in the Care he hath of all Creatures. There is a peculiar Goodneſs to his People; but this takes not away his general Goodneſs to the World: Tho' a Maſter of a Family hath a choicer Affection to thoſe that have an Affinity to him in Nature, and ſtand in a nearer Relation, as his Wife, Children, Servants; yet he hath a regard to his Cattle, and other Creatures, he nouriſheth in his Houſe. All things are not only before his Eyes, but in his Boſom; he is the Nurſe of all Creatures, ſupplying their Wants, and ſuſtaining them from that Nothing they tend to. * The Earth is full of his Riches, not a Creek or Cranny but partakes of it; abundant Goodneſs daily hovers over it, as well as hatch'd it. *The whole World ſwims in the rich Bounty of the Creator, as the Fiſh do in the Largeneſs of the Sea, and Birds in the Spaciouſneſs of the Air. The Goodneſs of God is the River that waters the whole Earth. As a lifeleſs Picture caſts its Eye upon every one in the Room, ſo doth a living God upon every thing in the World. And as the Sun illuminates all Things which are capable of partaking of its Light, and diffuſeth its Beams to all Things which are capable of receiving them; ſo doth God ſpread his Wings over the whole Creation, and neglects nothing, wherein he ſees a Mark of his firſt Creating Goodneſs.

His Goodneſs is ſeen, 1. In preſerving all things. * Oh Lord thou preſerveſt Man and Beaſt. Not only Man, but Beaſts, and Beaſts as well as Men. Man, as the moſt excellent Creature, and Beaſts as being ſerviceable to Man, and Inſtruments of his worldly Happineſs. He continues the Species of all Things, concurs with them in their diſtinct Offices, and quickens the Womb of Nature. He viſits Man every Day, and makes him feel the Effects of his Providence, in giving him fruitful Seaſons, and filling his Heart with Food and Gladneſs *, as Witneſſes of his Liberality and Kindneſs to Man. The Earth is viſited, and watered by the River of God, He ſettles the Furrows of the Earth, and makes it ſoft with Showers, that the Corn may be nouriſhed in its Womb, and ſpring up to maturity. He crowns the Year with his Goodneſs, and his Paths drop Fatneſs. The little Hills rejoyce on every ſide; the Paſtures are clothed with Flocks, and the Vallies are covered over with Corn; as the Pſalmiſt elegantly *. He waters the Ground by his Showers, and preſerves the little Seed from the Rapine of Animals. He draws not out the evil Arrows of Famine; as the Expreſſion is *. Every Day ſhines with new Beams of his Divine Goodneſs. The vaſtneſs of this City, and the multitudes of living Souls in it, is an aſtoniſhing Argument. What Streams of nouriſhing Neceſſaries are daily convey'd to it? Every Mouth hath Bread to ſuſtain it; And among all the Number of Poor in the Bowels and Skirts of it, how rare is it to hear of any ſtarv'd to Death for want of it? Every Day he ſpreads a Table for us, and that with Varieties, and fills our Cups *. He ſhortens not his Hand, nor withdraws his Bounty: The Increaſe of one Year by his Bleſſing, reſtores what was ſpent by the former. He is the Strength of our Life *, continuing the Vigour of our Limbs, and the Health of our Bodies; ſecures us from Terrors by Night, and the Arrows of Diſeaſes that fly by Day *. Sets a Hedge about our Eſtates *, and defends them againſt the Attempts of Violence. Preſerves our Houſes from Flames that might conſume them, and our Perſons from the Dangers that lie in wait for them. Watcheth over us in our goings out, and our comings in *; and waylays a thouſand Dangers we know not of. And employs the moſt glorious Creatures in Heaven, in the Service of mean Men upon Earth *: Not by a faint Order, but a preſſing Charge over them, to keep them in all his ways. Thoſe that are his immediate Servants before his Throne, he ſends to miniſter to them, that were once his Rebels. By an Angel he conducted the Affairs of Abraham: And by an Angel ſecur'd the Life of Iſhmael †: Glorious Angels for mean Man, holy Angels for impure Man, powerful Angels for weak Man. How in the midſt of great Dangers, doth his ſud-den Light diſſipate our great Darkneſs, and create a Deliverance out of nothing? How often is he found a preſent help in time of trouble? When all other Aſſiſtance ſeems to ſtand at a diſtance, He flies to us beyond our Expectations, and raiſes us up on the ſudden from the Pit of our Dejectedneſs, as well as that of our Danger, exceeding our Wiſhes, and ſhooting beyond our Deſires as well as our Deſerts. How often in a time of Confuſion, doth he preſerve an indefenſible Place from the Attacks of Enemies, like a Spark in the midſt of a tempeſtuous Sea? The Rage falls upon other places round about them, and by a ſecret Efficacy of Divine Goodneſs not able to touch them. He hath peculiar Preſervations for his Iſrael in Egypt, and his Lots in Sodom, his Daniels in the Lions Dens, and his Children in a fiery Furnace. He hath a Tenderneſs for all, but a peculiar Affection to thoſe that are in Covenant with him.

2. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in taking Care of the Animals, and inanimate Things. Divine Goodneſs embraceth in its Arms the loweſt Worm, as well as the loftieſt Cherubim: He provides

And when any met with a Neſt of young Birds, tho' they might take the Young to their uſe, they were forbidden to ſeize upon the Dam, that ſhe might not loſe the Objects of her

*Levit. 22. 28. ſhould not be killed for Sacrifice in one day *. All which Precepts, ſay the Jews, are to teach Men Mercifulneſs to their Beaſts; ſo much doth Divine Goodneſs bow down it ſelf, to take notice of thoſe mean Creatures, which Men have ſo little regard to, but for their own advantage: Yea, he is ſo good, that he would have Worſhip declin'd for a time in favour of a diſtreſſed Beaſt; the helping a Sheep, or an Ox, or an Aſs out of a pit, was indulged them even on the Sabbath-Day, a Day God had peculiarly

Luke 14. 5. he ſeems to remit for a time the Rights of the Deity, for the reſcue of a meer Animal. His Goodneſs extends not only to thoſe kind of Creatures that have Life, but to the inſenſible ones: He cloaths the Graſs, and arrays the Lilies of the Field with a greater Glory than Solomon had upon his
* Mat. 6. 28, 29. Throne* ; and ſuch care he had of thoſe Trees which bore Fruit for the maintenance of Man or Beaſt, that he forbids any Injury to be offer'd to them, and bars the Rapine and Violence, which by Soldiers uſeth to be practiſed, Deut. 20. 19. tho' it were to promote the Conqueſt of their Enemy. How much Goodneſs is it, that he ſhould think of ſo ſmall a thing as Man! How much more that he ſhould concern himſelf in things, that ſeem ſo petty as Beaſts and Trees! Perſons ſeated in a Sovereign Throne, think it a debaſing of their Dignity to regard little things: But God, who is infinitely greater in Majeſty above the mightieſt Potentate, and the higheſt Angel, yet is ſo infinitely good, as to employ his Divine Thoughts about the meaneſt things. He who poſſeſſes the Praiſes of Angels, leaves not off the Care of the meaneſt Creatures: And that Majeſty that dwells in a pure Heaven, and an unconceivable Light, ſtoops to provide for the Eaſe of thoſe Creatures that lie and lodge in the Dirt and Dung of the Earth. How ſhould we be careful not to uſe thoſe unmercifully, which God takes ſuch Care of in his Law, and not to diſtruſt that Goodneſs, that opens his Hand ſo liberally to Creatures of another Rank?

3. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in taking care of the meaneſt rational Creatures: As Servants and Criminals. He provided for the liberty of Slaves, and would not have their Chains continue longer than the Seventh Year, unleſs they would voluntarily continue under the power of their Maſters; and that upon pain of his Diſpleaſure, and the withdrawing his Bleſſing *. And tho' by the Laws of
* Deut. 15. 18. many Nations, Maſters had an abſolute power of Life and Death over their Servants, yet God provided that no Member ſhould be lam'd, not an Eye, no nor a Tooth ſtruck out, but the Maſter was to pay for his folly and fury, the price of the liberty of his Servant *: He would not ſuffer the abuſed
*Exod. 21. 26, 27. Servant to be any longer under the power of that Man, that had not Humanity to uſe him as one of the ſame Kindred and Blood with himſelf. And tho' thoſe Servants might be never ſo wicked, yet when unjuſtly afflicted, God would intereſt himſelf as their Guardian, in their protection and delivery. And when a poor Slave had been provok'd by the Severity of his Maſter's Fury, to turn Fugitive from him, he was, by Divine Order not to be delivered up again to his Maſter's Fury, but dwell in that City, and with that Perſon, to whom he had fled for Refuge *. And when publick Juſtice was to be
* Deut. 23. 15, 16. adminiſtred upon the leſſer ſort of Criminals, the Goodneſs of God order'd the number of Blows not to exceed Forty, and left not the Fury of Man to meaſure out the Puniſhment to exceſs *. And

4. His Goodneſs is ſeen in taking care of the wickedſt Perſons. The Earth is full of his Goodneſs *.
*Ex. 22. 25
* Pſ. 37. 5. The wicked as well as the good enjoy it; they that dare lift up their Hands againſt Heaven in the poſture of Rebels, as well as thoſe that lift up their Eyes in the condition of Suppliants. To do good to a Criminal, far ſurmounts that Goodneſs that flows down upon an innocent Object: Now God is not only good to thoſe that have ſome Degrees of Goodneſs, but to thoſe that have the greateſt Degrees of Wickedneſs, to Men that turn his Liberality into Affronts of him, and have ſcarce an Appetite to any thing but the violation of his Authority and Goodneſs. Tho' upon the Fall of Adam we have loſt the pleaſant Habitation of Paradiſe, and the Creatures made for our uſe are fall'n from their Original Excellency and Sweetneſs; yet he hath not left the World utterly incommodious for us, but yet ſtores it with things not only for the preſervation, but delight of thoſe that make their whole Lives Invectives againſt this good God. Manna fell from Heaven for the Rebellious, as well as for the Obedient Iſraelites. Cain as well as Abel, and Eſau as well as Jacob, had the Influences of his Sun, and the Benefits of his Showers. The World is yet a kind of Paradiſe to the veriеſt Beaſts among Mankind: The Earth affords its Riches, the Heavens its Showers, and the Sun its Light to thoſe that injure and blaſpheme

*Mat. 5.45 him: * He makes his Sun to riſe on the evil, and on the good, and ſends Rain on the juſt, and on the unjuſt. The wicked'ſt breath in his Air, walk upon his Earth, and drink of his Water as well as the beſt. The Sun looks with as pleaſant and bright an Eye upon a rebellious Abſolom, as a righteous David: The Earth yields its Plants and Medicines to one, as well as to the other: 'Tis ſeldom that he deprives any of the Faculties of their Souls, or any Members of their Bodies. God diſtributes his Bleſſings, where he might ſhoot his Thunders, and darts his Light on thoſe who deſerve an Eternal Darkneſs, and preſents the Good Things of the Earth, to thoſe that merit the Miſeries of Hell: For the Earth, and the fulneſs thereof, is the Lords;
* Pſ. 24.1. * every thing in it is his in Propriety, ours in Truſt:
† Hoſ. 2.8. 'Tis his Corn, his Wine; † he never deveſted himſelf of the Propriety, tho' he grants us the Uſe; and by thoſe good things he ſupports multitudes of wicked Men, not one or two, but the whole Shoal of them in the World: For he is the Saviour of all
*1 Tim. 4. Men, i. e. is the Preſerver of all Men *. And as
10. he created them, when he foreſaw they would be wicked, ſo he provides for them, when he beholds them in their Ungodlineſs. The Ingratitude of Man ſtops not the Current of his Bounty, nor tires his liberal Hand; howſoever unprofitable and injurious Men are to him, he is liberal to them; and his Goodneſs is the more admirable, by how much the more the Unthankfulneſs of Men is provoking: He ſometimes affords to the worſt a greater Portion of theſe earthly Goods; they often ſwim in Wealth, when others pine away their Lives in Poverty. And the Silk-worm yields its Bowels to make Purple for Tyrants, while the Oppreſſed ſcarce have from the Sheep Wool enough to cover their Nakedneſs; and tho' he furniſh Men with thoſe good things, upon no other Account than what Princes do, when they nouriſh Criminals in a Priſon 'till the time of their Execution, 'tis a Mark of his Goodneſs. Is it not the kindneſs of a Prince to treat his Rebels deliciouſly? To give them the Liberty of the Priſon, and the Enjoyment of the Delights of the place, rather than to load their Legs with Fetters, and lodge them in a dark and loathſome Dungeon, 'till he orders them for their Crime to be conducted to the Scaffold or Gibbet? Since God is thus kind to the vileſt Men, whoſe meanneſs by reaſon of Sin is beyond that of any other Creature, as to ſhoot ſuch Rays of Goodneſs upon them, how unexpreſſible would be the Expreſſions of his Goodneſs, if the Divine Image were as pure and bright upon them, as it was upon innocent Adam?

2. His Goodneſs is evident in the preſervation of Humane Society. It belongs to his Power that he is able to do it, but to his Goodneſs that he is willing to do it.

1. This Goodneſs appears, in preſcribing Rules for it. The Moral Law conſiſts but of Ten Precepts, and there are more of them order'd for the ſupport of Humane Society, than for the adoration and honour of himſelf; Four for the Rights of God, *Exod. 20. 1, 2. and Six for the Rights of Man, and his Security in his Authority, Relations, Life, Goods, and Reputation; Superiours not to be diſhonoured, Life not to be invaded, Chaſtity not to be ſtain'd, Goods not to be filch'd, Good Name not to be crack'd by Falſe witneſſes, nor any thing belonging to our Neighbour to be coveted: And in the whole Scripture, not only that which was calculated for the Jews, but compil'd for the whole World, he hath fix'd Rules for the ordering all Relations; Magiſtrates, and Subjects, Parents and Children, Husbands and Wives, Maſters and Servants, Rich and Poor find their diſtinct Qualifications and Duties. There would be a Paradiſical State, if Men had a goodneſs to obſerve, what God hath had a Goodneſs to order, for the ſtrengthning the Sinews of Humane Society: The World would not groan under oppreſſing Tyrants, nor Princes tremble under diſcontented Subjects, or mighty Rebels: Children would not be provok'd to Anger by the Unreaſonableneſs of their Parents, nor Parents ſink under Grief by the Rebellion of their Children; Maſters would not tyrannize over the meaneſt of their Servants, nor Servants invade the Authority of their Maſters.

2. The Goodneſs of God in the preſerving Human Society, is ſeen in ſetting a Magiſtracy to preſerve it. Magiſtracy is from God in its Original, the Charter was drawn up in paradiſe; Civil Subordination muſt have been, had Man remained in Innocence; but the Charter was more explicitely renew'd and enlarg'd at the Reſtoration of the World after the Deluge, and giv'n out to Man under the Broad Seal of Heaven, * Whoſo ſheds Man's * Gen. 9.6. Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed. The Command of ſhedding the Blood of a Murderer, was a part of his Goodneſs, to ſecure the Lives of thoſe that bore his Image. Magiſtrates are the Shields of the Earth, but they belong to God *. They are * Pſ. 47. 9. Fruits of his Goodneſs in their Original and Authority; were there no Magiſtracy, there would be no Government, no Security to any Man under his own Vine and Fig-tree; the World would be a Den of wild Beaſts preying upon one another, every one would do what ſeems good in his Eyes; the loſs of Government is a Judgment God brings upon a Nation, * when Men become as the Fiſhes of the * Hab. 1.14 Sea, to devour one another, becauſe they have no Ruler over them. Private Diſſentions will break out into Publick Diſorders and Combuſtions.

3. The Goodneſs of God in the preſervation of Human Society, is ſeen in the Reſtraints of the Paſſions of Men. He ſets Bounds to the Paſſions of Men, as well as to the Roulings of the Sea, * He ſtilleth * Pſ. 65.7. the Noiſe of the Waves, and the Tumults of the People. Tho' God hath erected a Magiſtracy to ſtop the breaking out of thoſe Floods of Licentiouſneſs, which ſwell in the Hearts of Men, yet if God ſhould not hold ſtiff Reins on the Necks of thoſe tumultuous and foaming Paſſions, the World would be a place of unruly Confuſion, and Hell triumph upon Earth: A crazy State would be quickly broke in pieces by boiſterous Nature. The Tumults of a People could no more be quell'd by the Force of Man, than the Rage of the Sea by a Puff of Breath; without Divine Goodneſs, neither the Wiſdom nor Watchfulneſs of the Magiſtrates, nor the Induſtry of Officers could preſerve a State. The Laws of Men would be too ſlight to curb the Luſts of Men, if the Goodneſs of God did not reſtrain ſtrain them by a ſecret Hand, and interweave their Temporal Security with obſervance of thoſe Laws. The Sons of Belial did murmur when Saul was choſen King; and that they did no more, was the Goodneſs of God, for the preſervation of Human Society. If God did not reſtrain the Impetuouſneſs of Mens Luſts, they would be the entire Ruine of Human Society; their Luſts would render them as bad as Beaſts, and change the World into a ſavage Wilderneſs.

4. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in the preſervation of Human Society, in giving various Inclinations to Men for publick advantage. If all Men had an Inclination to one Science or Art, they would all ſtand idle Spectators of one another; but God hath beſtow'd various Diſpoſitions and Gifts upon Men, for the promoting the Common Good, that they may not only be uſeful to themſelves, but to Society. He will have none idle, none unuſeful, but every one acting in a due place, according to their Meaſures, for the good of others.

5. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in the Witneſs he bears againſt thoſe Sins, that diſturb Human Society. In thoſe Caſes he is pleaſed to Intereſt himſelf in a more ſignal manner, to cool thoſe that make it their Buſineſs to overturn the Order he hath eſtabliſhed for the Good of the Earth. He doth not ſo often in this World puniſh thoſe Faults committed immediately againſt his own Honour, as thoſe that put the World into a hurry and confuſion: As a good Governour is more merciful to Crimes againſt himſelf, than thoſe againſt his Community. 'Tis obſerved, that the moſt turbulent ſeditious Perſons in a State, come to moſt violate Ends; as Corah, Adonijah, Zimri, Achitophel draws Abſalom's Sword againſt David and Iſrael; and the next is, he twiſts a Halter for himſelf. Abſalom heads a Party againſt his Father, and God by a Goodneſs to Iſrael hangs him up, and prevents not its Safety by David's Indulgence, and a future Rebellion, had Life been ſpared by the Fondneſs of his Father. His Providence is more evident in diſcovering Diſturbers, and the Cauſes that move them, in defeating their Enterprizes, and digging the Contrivers out of their Caverns and Lurking-holes. In ſuch Caſes, God doth ſo act, and uſe ſuch Methods, that he ſilenceth any Creature from challenging any Partnerſhip with him in the Diſcovery. He doth more ſeverely in this World correct thoſe Actions, that unlink the mutual aſſiſtance between Man and Man, and the charitable and kind Correſpondence he would have kept up. The Sins for which the Wrath of God comes upon the Children of *Col. 3. 5, 6. Diſobedience in this World, are of this ſort: * And when Princes will be oppreſſing the People, God will be pouring contempt on the Princes, and ſet *Pſ. 107. 40, 41. the Poor on high from Affliction. * An Evidence of God's care and kindneſs in the preſerving Human Society, is thoſe ſtrange Diſcoveries of Murders, tho' never ſo clandeſtine and ſubtilly committed, more than of any other Crime among Men. Divine Care never appears more, than in bringing thoſe hidden and injurious Works of Darkneſs to Light, and a due Puniſhment.

6. His Goodneſs is ſeen in ordering mutual Offices to one another, againſt the Current of Mens Paſſions. Upon this Account he ordered in his Laws for the Government of the Iſraelites, that a Man ſhould reduce the wandring Beaſt of his Enemy, to the hand of his rightful Proprietor, tho' he were a provoking Enemy; and alſo help the poor Beaſt, that belonged to one that hated him, when he ſaw *Exod. 23. 4, 5. him ſink under his Burden *. When mutual aſſiſtance was neceſſary, he would not have Men conſider'd as Enemies, or conſider'd as Wicked, but as of the ſame Blood with our ſelves, that we might be ſerviceable to one another for the preſervation of Life and Goods.

7. His Goodneſs is ſeen in remitting ſomething of his own Right, for the preſerving a due dependance and ſubjection. He declines the Right he had to the Vows of a Minor, or one under the power of another, waving what he might challenge by the voluntary obligation of his Creature, to keep up the due order between Parents and Children, Husbands and Wives, Superiors and Inferiors; thoſe that were under the Power of another, as a Child under his Parents, or a Wife under her Husband, if they had vowed a Vow unto the Lord, which concern'd his Honour and Worſhip, it was void without the approbation of that perſon under whoſe charge they were *. Tho' God was the Lord of every Man's * Num. 30. Goods, and Men but his Stewards; and tho' he 3, 4, &c. might have taken to himſelf, what another had offer'd by a Vow, ſince whatſoever could be offer'd was God's own, tho' it was not the Parties own, who offer'd it; yet God would not have himſelf ador'd by his Creature, to the prejudice of the neceſſary ties of Humane Society: He lays aſide what he might challenge by his Sovereign Dominion, that there might not be any breach of that Regular Order, which was neceſſary for the preſervation of the World. If Divine Goodneſs did not thus order things, he would not do the part of a Rector of the World: The beauty of the World would be much defac'd, it would be a confus'd Maſs of Men and Women, or rather Beaſts and Bedlams. Order renders every City, every Nation, yea, the whole Earth beautiful: This is an effect of Divine Goodneſs.

3. His Goodneſs is evident in encouraging any thing of Moral Goodneſs in the World. Tho' Moral Goodneſs cannot claim an Eternal Reward, yet it hath been many times rewarded with a Temporal Happineſs; He hath often ſignally rewarded Acts of Honeſty, Juſtice and Fidelity, and puniſh'd the contrary by his Judgments, to deter Man from ſuch an unworthy practice, and encourage others to what was comely, and of a general good Report in the World. Ahab's Humiliation put a demurrer to God's Judgments intended againſt him; and ſome aſcribe the great Victories and Succeſs of the Romans to that Juſtice which was obſerv'd among themſelves. Baruch was but an Amanuenſis to the Prophet Jeremy, to write his Prophecie, and very deſpondent of his own Welfare; * God upon that ac- * Jer. 45. count provides for his Safety, and rewards the In- 13. duſtry of his Service with the Security of his Perſon: He was not a Stateſman, to declare againſt the corrupt Counſels of them that ſate at the Helm; nor a Prophet, to declare againſt their prophane Practices, but the Prophet's Scribe; and as he writes in God's Service the Prophecies reveal'd to the Prophet, God writes his name in the Roll of thoſe that were deſign'd for preſervation in that Deluge of Judgments, which were to come upon that Nation. Epicurus complain'd of the Adminiſtration of God, that the Virtuous Moraliſt had not ſufficient ſmiles of Divine Favor, nor the Swiniſh Senſualiſt frowns of Divine Indignation. But what if they have not always that confluence of outward Wealth and Pleaſures, but remain in the Common Level? yet they have the happineſs and ſatisfaction of a clear Reputation, the eſteem of Men, and the ſecret applauſes of their very Enemies; beſides the inward raviſhments upon an exerciſe of Virtue, and the commendatory ſubſcription of their own Hearts, a Dainty the vicious Man knows not of; they have an inward Applauſe from God, as a Reward of Divine Goodneſs, inſtead of thoſe Racks of Conſcience upon which the Prophane are ſometimes ſtretched. He will not let the worſt Men do him any ſervice, (tho' they never intended in the act of ſervice, him, but themſelves) without giving them their Wages; He will not let them hit him in the Teeth, as if he were beholden to them. If Nebuchadnezzar be the Inſtrument of God's Judgments againſt Tyrus and Iſrael, he will not only give him that rich City, but a richer Country, Egypt, the Granary of her Neighbors, a Wages above his Work. In this is Divine Goodneſs eminent, ſince in the moſt Moral Actions, as there is ſomething beautiful, ſo there is ſomething mix'd, hateful to the infinitely exact Holineſs of the Divine Nature; yet he will not let that which is pleaſing to him go unrewarded, and defeat the expectations of Men; as Men do with thoſe they imploy, when for one flaw in an Action they deny them the reward due for the other part. God encourag'd and kept up Morality in the Cities of the Gentiles, for the entertainment of a further Goodneſs in the Doctrine of the Goſpel, when it ſhould be publiſh'd among them.

4. Divine Goodneſs is eminent in providing a Scripture as a Rule to guide us, and continuing it in the World. If Man be a rational Creature, governable by a Law, can it be imagin'd there ſhould be no Revelation of that Law to him? Man, by the Light of Reaſon, muſt needs confeſs himſelf to be in another condition than he was by Creation, when he came firſt out of the hands of God; and can it be thought that God ſhould keep up the World under ſo many Sins againſt the Light of Nature, and beſtow ſo many Providential Influences, to invite Men to return to him, and acquaint no Men in the World with the means of that return? Would he exact an Obedience of Men, as their Conſciences witneſs he doth, and furniſh them with no Rules to guide them in the Darkneſs, they cannot but acknowledge, that they have contracted? No, Divine Goodneſs hath otherwiſe provided; this Bible we have is his Word and Rule. Had it been a Falſity and Impoſture, would that Goodneſs that watches over the World, have continued it ſo long? That Goodneſs that overthrew the burdenſom Rites of Moſes, and expell'd the fooliſh Idolatry of the Pagans, would have diſcover'd the Impoſture of this, had it not been a Tranſcript of his own Will. Whatever miſtakes he ſuffers to remain in the World, what Goodneſs had there been to ſuffer this anciently among the Jews, and afterwards to open it to the whole World, to abuſe Men in Religion and Worſhip, which ſo nearly concern'd himſelf and his own Honour, that the World ſhould be deceiv'd by the Devil, without a remedy in the Morning of its appearance? It hath been honour'd and admir'd by ſome Heathens, when they have caſt their Eyes upon it, and their natural Light made them behold ſome Footſteps of a Divinity in it. If this therefore be not a Divine Preſcript, let any that deny it bring as good Arguments for any Book elſe, as can be brought for this. Now the publiſhing this, is an Argument of Divine Goodneſs: 'Tis deſign'd to win the Affections of beggarly Man, to be eſpous'd to a God of Eternal Bleſſedneſs and Immenſe Riches. It ſpeaks Words in ſeaſon; No Doubts but it reſolves; no Spiritual Diſtemper but it cures; no Condition but it hath a Comfort to ſuit it. 'Tis a Garden which the Hand of Divine Bounty hath planted for us; in it he condeſcends to ſhadow himſelf in thoſe Expreſſions that render him in ſome manner intelligible to us. Had God wrote in a loftineſs of Style, ſuitable to the Greatneſs of his Majeſty, his Writing had been as little underſtood by us, as the brightneſs of his Glory can be beheld by us. But he draws Phraſes from our Affairs, to expreſs his Mind to us; He incarnates himſelf in his Word to our Minds, before his Son was incarnate in the Fleſh to the Eyes of Men: He aſcribes to himſelf Eyes, Ears, Hands, that we might have from the Conſideration of our ſelves, and the whole Humane Nature, a conception of his Perfections: He aſſumes to himſelf the Members of our Bodies, to direct our Underſtandings in the knowledge of his Deity: This is his Goodneſs.

Again. Tho' the Scripture was written upon ſeveral occaſions, yet in the dictating of it, the Goodneſs of God caſt his Eye upon the laſt Ages of the World, * They are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the World are come. It was given to the Iſraelites, but Divine Goodneſs intended it for the future Gentiles. The old Writings of the Prophets were thus deſign'd, much more the later Writings of the Apoſtles. Thus did Divine Goodneſs think of us, and prepare his Records for us, before we were in the World: Theſe he hath written plain for our Inſtruction, and wrapt up in them, what is neceſſary for our Salvation: 'Tis clear to inform our Underſtanding, and rich to comfort us in our Miſery; 'tis a Light to guide us, and a Cordial to refreſh us; 'tis a Lamp to our Feet, and a Medicine for our Diſeaſes; a Purifier of our Filth, and a Reſtorer of us in our Faintings. He hath by his Goodneſs ſeal'd the Truth of it, by his Efficacy on multitudes of Men: He hath made it the Word of Regeneration †. Men wilder, and more monſtrous than Beaſts, have been tam'd and chang'd by the power of it: It hath rais'd multitudes of dead Men, from a Grave fuller of Horror than any earthly one. Again, Goodneſs was in all Ages ſending his Letters of Advice and Counſel from Heaven, 'till the Canon of the Scripture was clos'd; ſometimes he wrote to chide a froward People; ſometimes to chear up an oppreſſed and diſconſolate People, according to the ſtate wherein they were; as we may obſerve by the ſeveral Seaſons wherein parts of Scripture were written. It was his Goodneſs that he firſt reveal'd any thing of his Will after the Fall; it was a further degree of Goodneſs, that he would add more Cubits to its Stature; before he would lay aſide his Penſil, it grew up to that bulk wherein we have it. And his Goodneſs is further ſeen in the preſerving it; he hath triumphed over the Powers that oppoſed it, and ſhewed himſelf good in the Inſtruments that propagated it: He hath maintain'd it againſt the Blaſts of Hell, and ſpread it in all Languages againſt the Obſtructions of Men and Devils. The Sun of his Word is by his kindneſs preſerv'd in our Horizon, as well as the Sun in the Heavens. How admirable is Divine Goodneſs! He hath ſent his Son to die for us, and his written Word to inſtruct us, and his Spirit to edge it for an entrance into our Souls: He hath opened the Womb of the Earth to nouriſh us; and ſent down the Records of Heaven, to direct us in our Pilgrimage: He hath provided the Earth for our Habitation, while we are Travellers; and ſent his Word to acquaint us with a Felicity at the end of our Journey, and the way to attain in another World, what we want in this, viz. a happy Immortality.

* 1 Cor. 10. 11.

† Jam. 1. 18

5. His Goodneſs in his Government is evident, in Converſions of Men. Tho' his Work be wrought by his Power, yet his Power was firſt ſollicited by his Goodneſs. It was his rich Goodneſs, that he would employ his Power to pierce the Scales of a Heart as hard as thoſe of the Leviathan. It was this that opened the Ears of Men to hear him, and draws them from the Hurry of worldly Cares, and the Charms of ſenſual Pleaſures; and, which is the top of all, the Impoſtors and Cheats of their own Hearts.

Hearts. It is this that ſends a Spark of his Wrath into Mens Conſciences, to put them to a ſtand in Sin, that he might not ſend down a Shower of Brimſtone eternally to conſume their Perſons. This it was that firſt ſhewed you the Excellency of the Redeemer, and brought you to taſte the Sweetneſs of his Blood, and find your Security in the Agonies of his Death. 'Tis his Goodneſs to call one Man and not another, to turn Paul in his Courſe, and lay hold of no other of his Companions. 'Tis his Goodneſs to call any, when he is not bound to call one.

1. 'Tis his Goodneſs, to pitch upon mean and deſpicable Men in the Eye of the World. To call this poor Publican, and over-look that proud Phariſee; this Man that ſits upon a Dung-hill, and neglect him that gliſters in his Purple. His Majeſty is not enticed by the lofty Titles of Men; nor, which is more worth, by the Learning and Knowledge of Men. Not many wiſe, not many mighty; * not many Doctors, not many Lords, tho' ſome of them; but his Goodneſs condeſcends to the baſe things of the World, and things which are deſpiſed. The *Poor receive the Goſpel; when thoſe that are more acute, and furniſh'd with a more apprehenſive Reaſon, are not touch'd by it.

* 1 Cor. 26, 27, 28.

* Mat. 11. 5.

2. The worſt Men. He ſeizeth ſometimes upon Men moſt ſoil'd, and neglects others that ſeem more clean and leſs polluted. He turns Men in their Courſe in Sin, that by their Infernal Practices, have ſeem'd to have gone to School to Hell, and to have ſuck'd in the ſole Inſtructions of the Devil. He lays hold upon ſome, when they are moſt under actual Demerit, and ſnatcheth them as Firebrands out of the Fire; as upon Paul, when fulleſt of Rage againſt him: And ſhoots a Beam of Grace, where nothing could be juſtly expected but a Thunderbolt of Wrath. 'Tis his Goodneſs to viſit any, when they lie putrifying in their loathſome Luſts; to draw near to them who have been guilty of the greateſt Contempt of God, and the Light of Nature; the murdering Manaſſehs, perſecuting Sauls, Chriſt-crucifying Jews, Perſons in whom Luſts had had a peaceable Poſſeſſion and Empire for many Years.

3. His Goodneſs appears, in converting Men poſſeſt with the greateſt Enmity againſt him, while he was dealing with them. All were in ſuch a State, and framing Contrivances againſt him, when Divine Goodneſs knock'd at the Door *. He look'd after us, when our Backs were turned upon him, and ſought us when we ſlighted him, and were a *gain-ſaying People; when we had ſhaken off his Convictions, and contended with our Maker, and muſtered up the Powers of Nature againſt the Alarms of Conſcience; ſtruggled like wild Bulls in a Net, and blunted thoſe Darts which ſtuck in our Souls. Not a Man that is turn'd to him, but had lifted up the heel againſt his Goſpel-Grace, as well as made light of his Creating-Goodneſs. Yet it hath employed it ſelf about ſuch ungrateful Wretches, to poliſh thoſe knotty and rugged Pieces for Heaven; and ſo invincibly, that he would not have his Goodneſs defeated by the fierceneſs and rebellion of the Fleſh. Tho' the thing was more difficult in it ſelf, (if any thing may be ſaid to have a difficulty to Omnipotency) than to make a Stone live, or to turn a Straw into a Marble Pillar. The Malice of the Fleſh makes a Man more unfit for the one, than the Nature of the Straw unfits it for the other.

* Col. 1. 21.

* Rom. 10. 21.

4. His Goodneſs appears in turning Men, when they were pleaſed with their own Miſery, and unable to deliver themſelves. When they preferr'd a Hell before him, and were in love with their own vileneſs; when his Call was our Torment, and his Neglect of us had been accounted our Felicity. Was it not a mighty Goodneſs to keep the Light cloſe to our Eyes, when we endeavoured to blow it out, and the Corroſive near to our Hearts, when we endeavoured to tear it off, being more fond of our Diſeaſe, than the Remedy? We ſhould have been ſcalded to Death with the Sodomites, had not God laid his good Hand upon us, and drawn us from the approaching Ruine we affected, and were loath to be freed from. And had we been diſpleaſed with our State, yet we had been as unable ſpiritually to raiſe our ſelves from Sin to Grace, as to raiſe our ſelves naturally from Nothing to Being: In this State we were, when his Goodneſs triumphed over us; when he put a Hook into our Noſtrils, to turn us in order to our Salvation; and drew us out of the Pit, which we had digged, when he might have left us to ſink under the Rigors of his Juſtice we had merited. Now this Goodneſs in Converſion is greater than that in Creation; as in Creation there was nothing to oppoſe him, ſo there was nothing to diſoblige him: Creation was terminated to the good of a mutable Nature, and Converſion tends to a ſupernatural Good. God pronounced all Creatures good at firſt, and Man among the reſt; but did not pronounce any of them, or Man himſelf, his Portion, his Inheritance, his Segullah, his Houſe, his Diadem. He ſpeaks ſlightly of all thoſe Things which he made, the nobleſt Heavens, as well as the loweſt Earth, in compariſon of a true Convert. * All thoſe things hath my hand made, and all thoſe things have been, but to this Man will I look, to him that is of a contrite Spirit. 'Tis more Goodneſs to give the eſpouſing Grace of the Covenant, than the compleating Glory of Heaven. As it is more for a Prince to marry a Beggar, than only to bring her to live deliciouſly in his Courts; all other Benefits are of a meaner ſtrain, if compar'd with this; there is little leſs of Goodneſs in imparting the Holineſs of his Nature, than imputing the Righteouſneſs of his Son.

* Iſa. 66. 1, 2

6. The Divine Goodneſs doth appear, in anſwering Prayers. He delights to be familiarly acquainted with his People, and to hear them call upon him. He indulgeth them a free acceſs to him, and delights in every Addreſs of an *upright Man. The wonderful efficacy of Prayer depends not upon the Nature of our Petitions, or the Temper of our Soul, but the Goodneſs of God to whom we addreſs. Chriſt eſtabliſheth it upon this bottom; when he exhorts to ask in his Name, he tells them the Spring of all their Grants, is the Father's Love. * I ſay not, I will pray the Father for you, for the Father himſelf loves you. And ſince it is of it ſelf incredible, that a Majeſty exalted above the Cherubims, ſhould ſtoop ſo low, as to give the miſerable and rebellious Creature admittance to him, and afford him a gracious Hearing, and a quick Supply, Chriſt uſhers in the Promiſe of anſwering Prayer, with a Note of great Aſſurance: * I ſay unto you, Ask and it ſhall be given you. I that know the Mind of my Father, and his good Diſpoſition, aſſure you, your Prayer ſhall not be in vain. Perhaps you will not be ſo ready of your ſelves, to imagine ſo great a Liberality; but take it upon my word, 'tis true, and ſo you will find it. And his Bounty travels as it were in Birth, to give the greateſt Bleſſings, upon our asking, rather than the ſmalleſt. * Your heavenly Father ſhall give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him: Which, in Mat. 7. 11. is called good things. Of all the good and rich things Divine Goodneſs hath in its Treaſury, he delights to give the beſt upon asking, becauſe God doth act ſo, as to manifeſt the Greatneſs of his his Bounty and Magnificence to Men; and therefore is delighted, when Men by their petitioning him, own ſuch a liberal Diſpoſition in him, and put him upon the manifeſting it. He would rather you ſhould ask the greateſt Things Heaven can afford, than the Trifles of this World: Becauſe his Bounty is not diſcovered in meaner Gifts, he loves to have an opportunity to manifeſt his Affection, above the Liberality and Tenderneſs of worldly Fathers. He doth more wait to give in a way of Grace, than we to beg. * And therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you. He ſtands expecting your Suits, and employs his Wiſdom in pitching upon the fitteſt Seaſons, when the Manifeſtation of his Goodneſs may be moſt gracious in it ſelf, and the Mercy you want moſt welcome to you; as it follows, for the Lord is a God of Judgment. He chooſeth the time, wherein his Doles may be moſt acceptable to his Suppliants: * In an acceptable time have I heard thee. He often opens his Hand, while we are opening our Lips, and his Bleſſings meet our Petitions, at the firſt ſetting out upon their Journey to Heaven. * While they are yet ſpeaking, I will hear. How often do we hear a ſecret Voice within us, while we are praying, ſaying, Your Prayer is granted; as well as hear a Voice behind us, while we are erring, ſaying, This is the way, walk in it? And his liberality exceeds often our deſires, as well as our deſerts; and gives out more than we had the Wiſdom or Confidence to ask. The Apoſtle intimates it in that Doxology, † Unto him who is able to do abundantly above all that we ask or think. This Power would not have been ſo ſtrong an Argument of Comfort, if it were never put in practice; He is more liberal than his Creatures are craving. Abraham petition'd for the Life of Iſhmael, and God promiſeth him the birth of Iſaac ‖. Iſaac asks for a Child, and God gives him two, Gen. 25. 21, 22. Jacob deſires Food to eat, and Raiment to put on; God confines not his Bounty within the narrow Limits of his Petition, but inſtead of a Staff, wherewith he paſſed Jordan, makes him repaſs it with two Bands *. David ask'd Life of God, and he gave him Life and a Crown to boot †. The Iſraelites would have been contented with a free Life in Egypt, they only cry'd to have their Chains ſtruck off; God gave them that, and adopts them to be his peculiar People, and raiſes them into a famous ſtate. 'Tis a wonder that God ſhould condeſcend ſo much, that he ſhould hear Prayers ſo weak, ſo cold, ſo wandring, and gather up our ſincere Petitions from the Dung of our Diſtractions and Diffidence. David vents his Aſtoniſhment at it ‖; Bleſſed be God, for he hath ſhew'd me marvelous kindneſs. I ſaid in my haſte, I am cut off from before thy Eyes, nevertheleſs, thou heardſt the voice of my ſupplication. How do we wonder at the Goodneſs of a petty Man in granting our Deſires; how much more ſhould we at the Humility and Goodneſs of the moſt Sovereign Majeſty of Heaven and Earth?

7. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in bearing with the Infirmities of his People, and accepting imperfect Obedience. Tho' Aſa had many Blots in his Scutcheon, yet they are overlook'd, and this Note ſet upon Record by Divine Goodneſs, That his Heart was perfect towards the Lord all his Days; * But the High Places were not removed, nevertheleſs Aſa's heart was perfect with the Lord all his days. He takes notice of a ſincere tho' chequer'd Obedience, to reward it, which could claim nothing but a ſlight from him, if he were extream to mark what is done amiſs. When there is not an opportunity to Work, but only to Will, he accepts the Will, as if it had paſt into Work and Act. He ſees no Iniquity in Jacob †, i. e. He ſees it not ſo as to caſt off a reſpect to their Perſons, and the acceptance of their Services: His Omniſcience knows their Sins, but his Goodneſs doth not reject their Perſons. He is of ſo good a diſpoſition, that he delights in a weak Obedience of his Servants, not in the Imperfection, but in the Obedience; ‖ He delights in the way of a good Man, tho' he ſometimes ſlips in it: He accepts a poor Man's Pigeon, as well as a rich Man's Ox: He hath a Bottle for the Tears, and a Book for the Services of the Upright, as well as for the moſt perfect Obedience of Angels: * He preſerves their Tears, as if they were a rich and generous Wine, as the Vine-dreſſer doth the Expreſſions of the Grape.

8. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in Afflictions and Perſecutions. If it be good for us to be afflicted, for which we have the Pſalmiſt's Vote *, then Goodneſs in God is the principal Cauſe and Orderer of the Afflictions. 'Tis his Goodneſs to ſnatch away that, whence we fetch ſupports for our Security, and encouragements for our Inſolence againſt him: He takes away the thing which we have ſome value for, but ſuch as his Infinite Wiſdom ſees inconſiſtent with our true Happineſs. 'Tis no ill-will in the Phyſician to take away the hurtful Matter the Patient loves, and preſcribe bitter Potions, to advance that health which the other impair'd. Nor any mark of Unkindneſs in a Friend, to wreſt a Sword out of a Mad-man's Hand, wherewith he was about to ſtab himſelf, tho' it were beſet with the moſt Orient Pearls. To prevent what is evil, is to do us the greateſt good. 'Tis a kindneſs to prevent a Man from falling down a Precipice, tho' it be with a violent Blow, that lays him flat upon the Ground at ſome diſtance from the edge of it. By Afflictions he often ſnaps aſunder thoſe Chains which fetter'd us, and quells thoſe Paſſions which ravag'd us: He ſharpens our Faith, and quickens our Prayers; he brings us into the ſecret Chamber of our own Heart, which we had little mind before to viſit by a Self-examination. 'Tis ſuch a Goodneſs, that he will vouchſafe to correct Man in order to his Eternal Happineſs, that Job makes it one part of his Aſtoniſhment; † What is Man, that thou ſhouldſt magnifie him? That thou ſhouldſt ſet thy heart upon him? and that thou ſhouldſt viſit him every morning? and try him every moment? His ſtrokes are often the magnifyings and exaltings of Man. He ſets his Heart upon Man, while he inflicts the ſmart of his Rod: He ſhews thereby what a high account he makes of him, and what a ſpecial affection he bears to him. When he might treat us with more ſeverity after the breach of his Covenant, and make his Jealouſie flame out againſt us in furious Methods; he will not deſtroy his Relation to us, and leave us to our own Inclinations, but deal with us as a Father with his Children; and when he takes this courſe with us, 'tis when it cannot be avoided without ruine: His Goodneſs would not ſuffer him to do it, if our badneſs did not force him to it, ‖ I will melt them, and try them, for how ſhall I do for the daughter of my People? What other Courſe can I take but this, according to the nature of Man? The Goldſmith hath no other way to ſeparate the Droſs from the Metal, but by melting it down. And when the Impurities of his People neceſſitate him to this proceeding, he ſits as a Refiner *. He watches for the purifying the Silver, not for his own profit as the Goldſmith, but out of a care of them, and good-will to them; as himſelf ſpeaks, † I have refined thee, but not with Silver; or, as ſome read it, not for Silver. As when he ſcatters his People abroad for their Sin, he will not leave them without his Preſence for their Sanctuary ‖: He would by his Preſence with them ſupply the place of Ordinances, or be an Ark to them in the midſt of the Deluge: His Hand that ſtruck them is never without a Goodneſs to comfort them and pity them. When Jacob was to go into Egypt, which was to prove a Furnace of Affliction to his Offspring, God promiſes to go down with him, and to bring him *Gen. 46. 4 up again *. A Promiſe not only made to Jacob in his Perſon, but to Jacob in his Poſterity. He return'd not out of Egypt in his Perſon, but as the Father of a numerous Poſterity. He that would go down with their Root, and afterwards bring up the Branches, was certainly with them in all their Oppreſſions; † Harw. Sermon at Oxford, p. 5 I will go down with thee. Down, ſaith one †, What a Word is that for a Deity? Into Egypt, Idolatrous Egypt, What a place is that for his Holineſs? Yet, Oh the Goodneſs of God! He never thinks himſelf low enough to do his People good, nor any place too bad for his ſociety with them. So when he had ſent away into Captivity the People of Iſrael, by the hand of the Aſſyrian, his Bowels yearn ‖ Iſa. 52. 4, 5. after them in their affliction; ‖ The Aſſyrian oppreſt them without cauſe, i. e. without a juſt cauſe in the Conqueror to inflict ſo great an Evil upon them, but not without cauſe from God, whom they had provoked. Now therefore what have I here, ſaith the Lord? What do I here? I will not ſtay behind them. What do I longer here? For I will redeem again thoſe Jewels the Enemy hath carried away. That Chapter is a Prophecy of Redemption: God ſhews himſelf ſo good to his People in their Perſecutions, that he gives them occaſion to glorifie him * Iſa. 24. 15. in the very Fires, as the Divine Order is, * Wherefore glorifie the Lord in the Fires.

9. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in Temptations. In thoſe he takes occaſion to ſhew his care and watchfulneſs, as a Father uſes the diſtreſs of a Child as an opportunity for manifeſting the tenderneſs of his Affection. God is at the beginning and end of every Temptation; He meaſures out both the quality and quantity: He expoſeth them not to Temptation beyond the ability he hath already granted them, or will at the time, or afterwards multiply * 1 Cor. 10. 13. in them. * He hath promiſed his People, that the gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt them: That in all things they ſhall be more than Conquerors thro' him that loved them: That the moſt raging Malice of Hell ſhall not wreſt them out of his Hands. His Goodneſs is not leſs in performing, than it was in promiſing: And as the care of his Providence extends to the leaſt as well as the greateſt, ſo the watchfulneſs of his Goodneſs extends to us in the leaſt as well as in the greateſt Temptation.

1. The Goodneſs of God appears in ſhortening Temptations. None of them can go beyond their * Dan. 11. 35. appointed times: * The ſtrong blaſt Satan breaths cannot blow; nor the Waves he raiſes rage one minute beyond the time God allows them; when they have done their Work, and come to the period of their Time, God ſpeaks the Word, and the Wind and Sea of Hell muſt obey him, and retire into their Dens. The more violent Temptations are, the ſhorter time doth God allot them. The aſſaults Chriſt had at the time of his Death, were of the moſt preſſing and urging nature: The Powers of Darkneſs were all in Arms againſt him; the Reproaches and Scorns put upon him, queſtioning his Sonſhip, were very ſharp; yet a little before his Suffering, † Luke 22. 53. he calls it but an hour, † This is your hour and the power of darkneſs. A ſhort time that Men and Devils were combin'd againſt him; and the time of Temptation that is to come upon all the World for ‖ Rev. 3. 10 their trial, is call'd but an hour ‖. In all ſuch attempts, the greatneſs of the Rage is a certain Prognoſtick of the ſhortneſs of the Seaſon, Rev. 12. 12.

2. The Goodneſs of God appears in ſtrengthening his People under Temptations. If he doth not reſtrain the Arm of Satan from ſtriking, he gives us a Sword to manage the Combat, and a Shield to bear off the Blow. * If he obſcures his Goodneſs in one * Eph. 6. 16, 17. part, he clears and brightens it in another; He either binds the ſtrong Man that he ſhall not ſtir, or gives us Armour to render us victorious. If we fall, it is not for want of Proviſion from him, but for want of our putting on the Armour of God †. When † Eph. 6. 11, 13. we have not a ſtrength by Nature, he gives it us by Grace: He often quells thoſe Paſſions within, which would joyn hands with, and ſecond the Temptation without. He either qualifies the Temptation, ſuitably to the force we have, or elſe ſupplies us with a new ſtrength to mate the Temptation he intends to let looſe againſt us: He knows we are but Duſt, and his Goodneſs will not have us unequally matcht. As the Angels appear'd to Chriſt after his Temptation, to Miniſter to him, ſo they appear'd to him before his Paſſion, the time of the ſtrongeſt Powers of Darkneſs, to ſtrengthen him for it: He is ſo good, that when he knows our Potſheard ſtrength too weak, he furniſheth our Recruits from his own Omnipotence; † Be ſtrong in † Eph. 6. 10 the Lord, and in the power of his Might. He doth as it were breath in ſomething of his own Almightineſs, to aſſiſt us in our wreſtling againſt Principalities and Powers, and make us capable to ſuſtain the violent Storms of the Enemies.

3. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in Temptations, in giving great Comforts in or after them. The Iſraelites had a more immediate Proviſion of Manna from Heaven, when they were in the Wilderneſs. We read not that the Father ſpake audibly to the Son, and gave him ſo loud a Teſtimony that he was his beloved Son, in whom he was well pleas'd, till he was upon the brink of ſtrong Temptations *: Nor * Mat. 3. 17. ſent Angels to miniſter immediately to his Perſon, till after his ſucceſs †. Job never had ſuch Eviden- † Mat. 4. 11 ces of Divine Love, till after he had felt the ſharp ſtrokes of Satan's malice; he had heard of God before by the hearing of the Ear, but afterwards is admitted into greater familiarity ‖: He had more ‖ Job 42. 5. choice Appearances, clearer Illuminations, and more lively Inſtructions. And tho' his People fall into Temptation, yet after their riſing they have more ſignal Marks of his favour than others have, or themſelves, before they fell. Peter had been the Butt of Satan's rage, in tempting him to deny Chriſt, and he had ſhamefully comply'd with the Temptation; yet to him particularly muſt the firſt news of the Redeemer's Reſurrection be carried by God's order in the mouth of an Angel; * Go your ways, tell * Mark 16. 7. his Diſciples and Peter. We have the greateſt Communion with God after a Victory: The moſt refreſhing Truths after the Devil hath done his worſt. God is ready to furniſh us with ſtrength in a Combat, and Cordials after it.

4. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in Temptations, in diſcovering and advancing inward Grace by this means. The iſſue of a Temptation of a Chriſtian is often like that of Chriſt's, the manifeſting a greater vigor of the Divine Nature in affections to God and enmity to Sin. Spices perfume not the Air with their ſcent, till they are invaded by the Fire; the truth truth of Grace is evidenced by them. The aſſault of an Enemy revives, and actuates that Strength and Courage which is in a Man perhaps unknown to himſelf as well as others, till he meets with an Adverſary. Many ſeem good, not that they are ſo in themſelves, but for want of a Temptation. This many times verifies a Virtue, which was own'd upon Truſt before, and diſcovers that we had more Grace than we thought we had. The ſollicitations of Joſeph's Miſtreſs clear'd up his Chaſtity. We are many times under Temptation, as a Candle under the Snuffer, it ſeems to be out, but preſently burns the clearer. Afflictions are like thoſe Clouds, which look black, and eclipſe the Sun from the Earth, but yet when they drop, refreſh that Ground they ſeem to threaten, and multiply the Grain on the Earth, to ſerve for our Food; and ſo our Troubles, while they wet us to the Skin, waſh much of that Duſt from our Graces, which in a clearer day had been blown upon us. Too much Reſt corrupts; Exerciſe teacheth us to manage our Weapons: The Spiritual Armour would grow ruſty, without opportunity to furbiſh it up. Faith receives a new Heart by every Combat, and by every Victory; like a Fire it ſpreads it ſelf further, and gathers ſtrength by the blowing of the Wind. While the Gardener commands his Servant to ſhake the Tree, he intends to faſten its Roots, and ſettle it firmer in its place; And is this an ill-will to the Plant?

5. His Goodneſs is ſeen in Temptations, in preventing Sin, which we were likely to fall into. Paul's Thorn in the Fleſh was to prevent the pride of his
* 2 Cor. 12. 7. Spirit, and let out the windineſs of his Heart *, leſt it ſhould be exalted above meaſure. The Goodneſs of God makes the Devil a Poliſher, while he intends to be a Deſtroyer. The Devil never works, but ſutably to ſome Corruption lurking in us: Divine Goodneſs makes his fiery Darts a Means to diſcover, and ſo to prevent the Treachery of that perfidious Inmate in our own Hearts. Humility is a greater benefit than a putrifying Pride; if God brings us into a Wilderneſs to be tempted of the Devil, 'tis to bring down our Loftineſs, to ſtarve our carnal Confidence, and expel our ruſting Secu-
* Deut. 8. 2. rity *: We many times fly under a Temptation to God, from whom we ſat too looſe before. Is it not Goodneſs to uſe thoſe means that may drive us into his own Arms? 'Tis not a want of Goodneſs to ſoap the Garment, in order to take away the Spots: We have reaſon to bleſs God for the Aſſaults from Hell, as well as pure Mercies from Heaven; and it is a Sin to over-look the one, as well as the other, ſince Divine Goodneſs ſhines in both.

6. The Goodneſs of God is ſeen in Temptations, in fitting us more for his Service. Thoſe whom God intends to make choice Inſtruments in his Service, are firſt ſeaſon'd with ſtrong Temptations, as Timber reſerved for the ſtrong Beams of a Building, is firſt expos'd to Sun and Wind, to make it more compact for its proper uſe. By this Men are brought to anſwer the End of their Creation, the Service of God, which is their proper Goodneſs. Peter, was after his Foil by a Temptation, more courageous in his Maſter's Cauſe than before, and the more fitted to ſtrengthen his Brethren. Thus the Goodneſs of God appears in all parts of his Government.

I ſhall now come to the USE.

Firſt, Of Inſtruction.

1. If God be ſo good, how unworthy is the contempt and abuſe of his Goodneſs?

1. The contempt and abuſe of Divine Goodneſs is frequent and common: It began in the firſt Ages of the World, and commenced a few Moments after the Creation; it hath not to this Day diminiſh'd its Affronts; Adam began the Dance, and his Poſterity have followed him; the Injury was directed againſt this, when he entertain'd the Seducer's Notion of God's being an envious Deity, in not indulging ſuch a Knowledge, as he might have afforded him: * God doth know, that you ſhall be as Gods, knowing Good and Evil. The Charge of Envy is utterly inconſiſtent with pure Gooduеſs. What was the Language of this Notion ſo eaſily entertain'd by Adam, but that the Tempter was better than God, and the Nature of God as baſe and ſordid as the Nature of a Devil? Satan paints God with his own Colours, repreſents him as envious and malicious as himſelf: Adam admires, and believes the Picture to be true, and hangs it up as a beloved one in the Cloſet of his Heart. The Devil ſtill drives on the ſame Game, fills Mens Hearts with the ſame Sentiments, and by the ſame means he murder'd our firſt Parents, he redoubles the Stabs to his Poſterity. Every violation of the Divine Law, is a contempt of God's Goodneſs, as well as his Sovereignty; becauſe his Laws are the Products both of the one and the other. Goodneſs animates them, while Sovereignty enjoys them: God hath commanded nothing but what doth conduce to our Happineſs. All Diſobedience implies, that his Law is a Snare to entrap us, and make us miſerable, and not an Act of Kindneſs, to render us happy; which is a diſparagement to this Perfection, as if he had commanded what would promote our Miſery, and prohibited what would conduce to our Bleſſedneſs: To go far from him, and walk after Vanity, is to charge him with our Iniquity, and Unrighteouſneſs, Baſeneſs, and Cruelty in his Commands: God implies it by his Speech, * What Iniquity have * Jer. 2. 5. your Fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and walked after vanity? As if, like a Tyrant, he had conſulted Cruelty in the Compoſure of them, and deſign'd to Feaſt himſelf with the Blood and Miſery of his Creatures. Every Sin is in its own Nature a denial of God to be the chiefeſt Good and Happineſs, and implies, that it is no great matter to loſe him; 'tis a forſaking him as the Fountain of Life, and a preferring a crack'd and empty Ciſtern, as the chief Happineſs before him *. * Jer. 2. 13. Tho' Sin is not ſo evil as God is good, yet it is the greateſt Evil, and ſtands in oppoſition to God as the greateſt Good. Sin diſorders the Frame of the World, it endeavour'd to fruſtrate all the Communications of Divine Goodneſs in Creation, and to ſtop up the way of any further Streams of it to his Creatures.

2. The abuſe and contempt of the Divine Goodneſs is baſe and diſ-ingenuous. 'Tis the higheſt Wickedneſs, becauſe God is the higheſt Goodneſs, pure Goodneſs, that cannot have any thing in him worthy of our Contempt. Let Men injure God under what Notion they will, they injure his Goodneſs; becauſe all his Attributes are ſumm'd up in this one, and all as it were Deified by it. For whatſoever Power or Wiſdom he might have, if he were deſtitute of this, he were not God: The contempt of his Goodneſs implies him to be the greateſt Evil, and worſt of Beings. Badneſs, not Goodneſs, is the proper Object of Contempt: As Reſpect is a propenſion of Mind to ſomething that is Good, ſo Contempt is an alienation of the Mind from ſomething as Evil, either ſimply or ſuppoſedly Evil in its Nature, or baſe or unworthy in its Action towards that Perſon that contemns it. As Men deſire nothing but what they apprehend to be Good, ſo they ſlight nothing but what they apprehend to be Evil: Since nothing therefore is more contemned by us than God, nothing more ſpurn'd at by us than God, it will follow, that we regard him him as the moſt loathſom and deſpicable Being; which is the greateſt Baſeneſs. And our contempt of him, is worſe than that of the Devils; they injure him under the inevitable Strokes of his Juſtice, and we ſlight him when we are ſurrounded with the Expreſſions of his Bounty; they abuſe him under Vials of Wrath, and we under a Plenteous Liberality; they malice him, becauſe he inflicts on them what is hurtful; and we deſpiſe him, becauſe he commands what is profitable, holy, and honourable in its own Nature, tho' not in our Eſteem. They are not under thoſe high Obligations as we, they abuſe his Creating, and we his Redeeming Goodneſs: He never ſent his Son to ſhed a Drop of Blood for their Recovery, they can expect nothing but the Torment of their Perſons, and the Deſtruction of their Works: But we abuſe that Goodneſs that would reſcue us ſince we are miſerable, as well as that Righteouſneſs which created us innocent. How baſe is it to uſe him ſo ill, that is not once or twice, but a daily, hourly Benefactor to us; whoſe Rain drops upon the Earth for our Food, and whoſe Sun ſhines upon the Earth for our Pleaſure, as well as Profit; ſuch a Benefactor as is the true Proprietor of what we have, and thinks nothing too good for them, that thinks every thing too much for his Service? How unworthy is it to be guilty of ſuch baſe Carriage towards him, whoſe Benefits we cannot want, nor live without? How diſingenuous both to God and our ſelves, to

* Rom. 2. 4. deſpiſe the Riches of his Goodneſs, that are deſign'd to lead us to Repentance*, and by that to Happineſs? And more heinous are the Sins of renew'd Men upon this account, becauſe they are againſt his Goodneſs, not only offer'd to them, but taſted by them; not only againſt the Notion of Goodneſs, but the Experience of Goodneſs, and the reliſh'd Sweetneſs of choiceſt Bounty.

3. God takes this Contempt of his Goodneſs heinouſly. He never upbraids Men with any thing in Scripture, but with the abuſe of the Good Things he hath vouchſafed them, and the unmindfulneſs of the Obligations ariſing from them. This he bears with the greateſt Regret and Indignation. Thus he upbraids Eli with the preference of him to
* 1 Sam. 2. 28. the Prieſthood, above other Families *: And David, with his Exaltation to the Crown of Iſrael,
† 2 Sam. 12. 7, 8, 9. † when they abuſed thoſe Honours to Careleſneſs and Licentiouſneſs. All Sins offend God, but Sins againſt his Goodneſs do more diſparage him; and therefore his Fury is the greater, by how much the more liberally his Benefits have been diſpens'd. It was for abuſe of Divine Goodneſs, as ſoon as it was taſted, that ſome Angels were hurl'd from their bleſſed Habitation, and more happy Nature: It was for this Adam loſt his preſent Enjoyments and future Happineſs; for the abuſe of God's Goodneſs in Creation. For the abuſe of God's Goodneſs, the Old World fell under the Fury of the Flood; and for the Contempt of the Divine Goodneſs in Redemption, Jeruſalem, once the darling City of the infinite Monarch of the World, was made an Acelдema, a Field of Blood. For this cauſe it is, that Candleſticks have been removed, great Lights put out, Nations overturn'd, and Ignorance hath triumph'd in places bright before with the Beams of Heaven. God would have little Care of his own Goodneſs, if he always proſtituted the Fruits of it to our Contempt: Why ſhould we expect he ſhould always continue that to us, which he ſees we will never uſe to his Service? When the Iſraelites would dedicate the Gifts of God to the Service of Baal, then he would return, and take away his Corn and his Wine, and make them know by the loſs, that thoſe things were his in Dominion which they abus'd, as if they had been Sovereign Lords of them *.
* Hoſ. 2. 8, 9 Benefits are entail'd upon us no longer than we obey; † If you forſake the Lord, he will do you hurt, † Joſh. 24. 20. after he hath done you good. While we obey, his Bounty ſhall ſhower upon us; and when we revolt, his Juſtice ſhall conſume us. Preſent Mercies abus'd, are no Bulwarks againſt impendent Judgments. God hath Curſes as well as Bleſſings, and they ſhall light more heavy, when his Bleſſings have been more weighty: Juſtice is never ſo ſevere, as when it comes to right Goodneſs, and revenge its Quarrel for the Injuries received.

A convenient Enquiry may be here, How God's Goodneſs is contemn'd, or abus'd?

1. By a forgetfulneſs of his Benefits. We enjoy the Mercies, and forget the Donor; we take what he gives, and pay not the Tribute he deſerves: The Iſraelites forgot God their Saviour, which had done great things in Egypt *. We ſend God's Mer-
* Pſal. 100. 21. cies, where we would have God ſend our Sins into the Land of Forgetfulneſs, and write his Benefits, where himſelf would write the Names of the Wicked, in the Duſt, which every Wind defaceth: The remembrance ſoon wears out of our Minds, and we are ſo far from remembring what we had before, that we ſcarce think of that Hand that gives, the very inſtant wherein his Benefits drop upon us. Adam baſely forgot his Benefactor, preſently after he had been made capable to remember him, and reflect upon him; the firſt Remark we hear of him, is of his Forgetfulneſs, not a Syllable of his Thankfulneſs. We forget thoſe Souls he hath lodg'd in us, to acknowledge his Favours to our Bodies; we forget that Image wherewith he beautified us, and that Chriſt he expos'd as a Criminal to Death for our Reſcue; which is ſuch an Act of Goodneſs, as cannot be expreſs'd by the Eloquence of the Tongue, or conceiv'd by the Acuteneſs of the Mind. Thoſe things which are ſo common, that they cannot be inviſible to our Eyes, are unregarded by our Minds; our Senſe prompts our Underſtanding, and our Underſtanding is deaf to the plain Dictates of our Senſe. We forget his Goodneſs in the Sun, while it warms us; and his Showers, while they enrich us; in the Corn, while it nouriſheth us, and the Wine while it refreſheth us:
* Hoſ. 2. 8. * She did not know, that I gave her Corn, and Wine, and Oyl: She that might have read my Hand in every Bit of Bread, and every Drop of Drink, did not conſider this. 'Tis an Injuſtice to forget the Benefits we receive from Man; 'tis a Crime of a higher Nature to forget thoſe diſpens'd to us by the Hand of God, who gives us thoſe Things that all the World cannot furniſh us with, without him. The Inhabitants of Troas will condemn us, who worſhipped Mice, in a grateful Remembrance of the Victory they had made eaſie for them, by gnawing their Enemies Bow-ſtrings. They were mindful of the Courteſie of Animals, tho' unintended by thoſe Creatures; and we are regardleſs of the fore-meditated Bounty of God. 'Tis in God's Judgment a Brutiſhneſs beyond that of a ſtupid Ox, or a duller Aſs: * The Ox knows his Owner, and the Aſs his
* Iſai. 1. 3. Maſter's Crib; but Iſrael doth not know, my People do not conſider. The Ox knows his Owner that paſtures him, and the Aſs his Maſter that feeds him; but Man is not ſo good as to be like to them, but ſo bad as to be inferiour to them: He forgets him that ſuſtains him, and ſpurns at him, inſtead of valuing him for the Benefits conferr'd by him. How horrible is it, that God ſhould loſe more by his Bounty, than he would do by his Parcimony? If we had Bleſſings more ſparingly, we ſhould remember him more gratefully. If he had ſent us a Bit of Bread in a Diſtreſs, by a Miracle, as he did to Elijah by the Ravens, it would have ſtuck longer in our Memories; but the ſenſe of daily Favours ſooneſt wears out of our Minds, which are as great Miracles as any in their own Nature, and the Products of the ſame Power; but the wonder they ſhould beget in us, is obſcur'd by their frequency.

2. The Goodneſs of God is contemn'd by an impatient murmuring. Our Repinings proceed from an Inconſideration of God's free Liberality, and an ungrateful Temper of Spirit. Moſt Men are guilty of this. 'Tis implied in the Commendation of Job under his Preſſures: * In all this Job ſinned not, nor *Job 1.22. charged God fooliſhly; as if it were a Character peculiar to him, whereby he verified the Elogy God had given of him before, verſe 8. That there was none like him in the Earth, a perfect and an upright Man. What is imply'd by the Expreſſion? But that ſcarce a Man is to be found without unjuſt Complaints of God, and charging him under their Croſſes with Cruelty; when in the greateſt, they have much more reaſon to bleſs him for his Bounty in the remainder. Good Men have not been innocent. Baruch complains of God, for adding Grief to his Sorrow, not furniſhing him with thoſe great things he expected, whereas he had Matter of Thankfulneſs in God's Gift of his Life as a Prey. * Jer.45.5. * But his Maſter chargeth God in a higher ſtrain, † Jer.20.7. † Oh Lord, thou haſt deceiv'd me, and I was deceived, I am in deriſion daily. When he met with Reproach inſtead of Succeſs, in the execution of his Function, he quarrels with God, as if he had a Mind to cheat him into a Miſchief, when he had more reaſon to bleſs him for the Honour of being employ'd in his Service. Becauſe we have not what we expect, we ſlight his Goodneſs in what we enjoy. If he croſs us in one thing, he might have made us ſucceſsleſs in more: If he take away ſome things, he might as well have taken away all. The unmerited remainder, tho' never ſo little, deſerves our Acknowledgments more than the deſerved Loſs can juſtifie our Repining. And for that which is ſnatch'd from us, there is more cauſe to be thankful, that we have enjoyed it ſo long, than to murmur that we poſſeſs it no longer. Adam's Sin implies a repining: He imagin'd God had been ſhort in his Goodneſs, in not giving him a Knowledge he fooliſhly conceived himſelf capable of, and would venture a forfeiture of what already had been bountifully beſtow'd upon him. Man thought God had envied him; and ever ſince, Man ſtudies to be even with God, and envies him the free diſpoſal of his own Doles: All murmuring, either in our own Cauſe or others, charges God with a want of Goodneſs, becauſe there is a want of that, which he fooliſhly thinks would make himſelf, or others happy. The Language of this Sin is, That Man thinks himſelf better than God, and if it were in his Power, would expreſs a more plentiful Goodneſs than his Maker. As Man is apt to think himſelf more pure than *Job 4.17. God, * ſo of a kinder Nature alſo than an Infinite Goodneſs. The Iſraelites are a wonderful Example of this Contempt of Divine Goodneſs; they had been Spectators of the greateſt Miracles, and Partakers of the choiceſt Deliverance: He had ſollicited their Redemption from Captivity, and when Words would not do, he came to Blows for them; muſters up his Judgments againſt their Enemies, and at laſt, as the Lord of Hoſts, and God of Battles, totally defeats their Purſuers, and drowns them and their proud hopes of Victory in the Red Sea. Little account was made of all this by the Redeem'd Ones. They lightly eſteem'd the Rock of their Salvation, and launch into greater Unworthineſs, inſtead of being thankful for the breaking their Yoke: They are angry with him, that he had done ſo much for them: They repented that ever they had complied with him for their own Deliverance, and had a regret that they had been brought out of Egypt: They were angry that they were Free-men, and that their Chains had been knock'd off: They were more deſirous to return to the Oppreſſion of their Egyptian Tyrants, than to have God for their Governor and Caterer, and be fed with his Manna. It was well with us in Egypt; Why came we forth out of Egypt? Which is call'd a deſpiſing the Land: * They were ſo far from rejoicing in the expecta- * Num.11. 18, 20. tion of the future Benefits promis'd them, that they murmur'd that they had not enjoy'd leſs; they were ſo ſottiſh, as to be deſirous to put themſelves into the Irons whence God had delivered them: They would ſeek a Remedy in that Egypt, which had been the Priſon of their Nation, and under the Succeſſors of that Pharaoh, who had been the Invader of their Liberties; they would ſnatch Moſes from the place, where the Lord by an extraordinary Providence had eſtabliſh'd him; * they would * Num.16. ſtone thoſe that minded them of the Goodneſs of 3,9,10,11. Contempt of God, and his unparallel'd Goodneſs 24. and Care of them. All Murmuring is an Accuſation of Divine Goodneſs.

3. By Unbelief and Impenitency. What is the reaſon we come not to him when he calls us, but ſome ſecret Imagination that he is of an ill Nature, means not as he ſpeaks, but intends to mock us inſtead of welcoming us? When we neglect his Call, ſpurn at his Bowels, ſlight the Riches of his Grace; as it is a diſparagement to his Wiſdom, to deſpiſe his Counſel, ſo it is to his Goodneſs, to ſlight his Offers, as tho' you could make better Proviſion for your ſelves, than he is able or willing to do. It diſgraceth that which is deſign'd to the praiſe of the Glory of his Grace: And renders God cruel to his own Son, as being an unneceſſary Shedder of his Blood. As the Devil by his Temptation of Adam, envied God the Glory of his Creating Goodneſs; ſo Unbelief envies God the Glory of his Redeeming Grace: 'Tis a bidding Defiance to him, and challenging him to muſter up the Legions of his Judgments, rather than have ſent his Son to ſuffer for us, or his Spirit to ſollicit us. Since the ſending of his Son was the greateſt Act of Goodneſs that God could expreſs, the refuſal of him muſt be the higheſt Reproach of that Liberality God deſign'd to commend to the World in ſo rare a Gift: The Ingratitude in this refuſal muſt be as high in the Rank of Sins, as the Perſon ſlighted is in the Rank of Beings, or Rank of Gifts. Chriſt is a Gift, * the * Rom. 5. 16. Royalleſt Gift, an unparallel'd Gift, ſpringing from unconceivable Treaſures of Goodneſs: * What is * John3.16 our turning our Backs upon this Gift, but a low Opinion of it? As tho' the richeſt Jewel of Heaven, were not ſo valuable as a Swiniſh Pleaſure on Earth; and deſerved to be treated at no other rate, than if meer Offals had been preſented to us. The plain Language of it is, That there were no gracious Intentions for our welfare in this preſent; and that he is not as good in the Miſſion of his Son, as he would induce us to imagine. Impenitence is alſo an abuſe of this Goodneſs, either by preſumption, as if God would entertain Rebels that bid defiance againſt him, with the ſame reſpect that he doth his proſtrate and weeping Suppliants; that he will have the ſame regard to the Swine, as to the Children, dren, and lodge them in the ſame Habitation: Or it ſpeaks a ſuſpicion of God as a deceitful Maſter, one of a pretended, not a real Goodneſs; that makes Promiſes to mock Men, and Invitations to delude them; that he is an implacable Tyrant, rather than a good Father; a rigid, not a kind Being, delightful only to mark our Faults, and overlook our Services.

4. The Goodneſs of God is contemned by a diſtruſt of his Providence. As all truſt in him ſuppoſeth him good, ſo all diſtruſt of him ſuppoſeth him evil, either without Goodneſs to exert his Power, or without Power to diſplay his Goodneſs. Job ſeems to have a Spice of this in his Complaint; [†]Job 30. 20 * I cry unto thee, and thou doſt not hear me; I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt me not. 'Tis a Fume of the Serpent's Venom, firſt breath'd into Man, to ſuſpect him of Cruelty, Severity, Regardleſneſs, even under the daily Evidences of his good Diſpoſition: And it is ordinary not to believe him when he ſpeaks, nor credit him when he acts: To queſtion the Goodneſs of his Precepts, and miſinterpret the kindneſs of his Providence; as if they were deſign'd for the Supports of a Tyranny, and the Deceit of the Miſerable. Thus the Iſraelites thought their miraculous Deliverance from Egypt, and the placing them in ſecurity in the Wilderneſs, was intended only to pound them up for a ſlaughter *. Thus [†]Num. 14. 3. they defil'd the Luſtre of Divine Goodneſs, which they had ſo highly experimented, and placed not that Confidence in him, which was due to ſo frequent a Benefactor; and thereby crucifi'd the rich Kindneſs of God, as Genebrard tranſlates the word [†]Pſ. 78. 41. limited *. 'Tis alſo a Jealouſie of Divine Goodneſs, when we ſeek to deliver our ſelves from our ſtraits by unlawful ways; as tho' God had not kindneſs enough to deliver us without committing Evil. What, did God make a World, and all Creatures in it, to think of them no more, not to concern himſelf in their Affairs? If he be good, he is diffuſive, and delights to communicate himſelf; and what Subjects ſhould there be for it, but thoſe that ſeek him and implore his aſſiſtance? 'Tis an Indignity to Divine Bounty, to have ſuch mean thoughts of it, that it ſhould be of a Nature contrary to that of his Works, which the better they are, the more diffuſive they are. Doth a Man diſtruſt that the Sun will not ſhine any more, or the Earth not bring forth its Fruit? Doth he diſtruſt the Goodneſs of an approved Medicine, for the expelling his Diſtemper? If we diſtruſt thoſe things, ſhould we not render our ſelves ridiculous and ſottiſh? And if we diſtruſt the Creator of thoſe things, do we not make our ſelves Contemners of his Goodneſs? If his Caring for us be a principal Argument, to move us to caſt our Care upon him, as it is, 1 Pet. 5. 7. Caſting your Care upon him, for he cares for you: Then if we caſt not our Care upon him, 'tis a denial of his gracious Care of us, as if he regarded not what becomes of us.

5. We do contemn, or abuſe his Goodneſs, by omiſſions of Duty. Theſe ſometimes ſpring from injurious Conceits of God, which end in deſperate Reſolutions. It was the Crime of a good Prophet in [†]2 Kings 6. 33. his Paſſion, * This evil is of the Lord, Why ſhould I wait on the Lord any longer? God deſigns nothing but Miſchief to us, and we will ſeek him no longer. And the Complaint of thoſe in Malachy, Mal. 3. 14. is of the ſame nature: Ye have ſaid, 'tis vain to ſerve God, and what profit is it, that we have kept his Ordinances? We have all this while ſerv'd a hard Maſter, not a Benefactor, and have not been anſwer'd with Advantages proportionable to our Services: We have met with a Hand too nigardly to diſpenſe that Reward which is due to the largeneſs of our Offerings. When Men will not lift up their Eyes to Heaven, and ſollicite nothing but the Contrivance of their own Brain, and the Induſtry of their own Heads, they diſown Divine Goodneſs, and approve themſelves as their own Gods, and the Spring of their own Proſperity. Thoſe that run not to God in their neceſſity, to crave his ſupport, deny either the Arm of his Power, or the Diſpoſition of his Will, to ſuſtain and deliver them: They muſt have very mean Sentiments, or none at all of this Perfection; or think him either too empty to fill them, or too churliſh to relieve them: That he is of a narrow and contracted Temper, and that they may ſooner expect to be made better and happier by any thing elſe than by him. And as we contemn his Goodneſs by a total omiſſion of thoſe Duties, which reſpect our own Advantage and Supply, as Prayer; ſo we contemn him as the chiefeſt Good, by an omiſſion of the due manner of any Act of Worſhip, which is deſign'd purely for the acknowledgment of him. As every omiſſion of the material part of a Duty is a denial of his Sovereignty, as commanding it; ſo every omiſſion of the manner of it, not performing it with a due eſteem and valuation of him, a ſurrender of all the Powers of our Souls to him, is a denial of him, as the moſt amiable Object. But certainly to omit thoſe Addreſſes to God, which his Precept enjoyns, and his Excellency deſerves, ſpeaks this Language, That they can be well enough, and do well enough without God, and ſtand in no need of his Goodneſs to maintain them. The neglect, or refuſal, in a Malefactor to ſupplicate for his Pardon, is a wrong to, and contempt of the Prince's Goodneſs: Either implying, that he hath not a Goodneſs in his Nature worthy of an Addreſs, or that he ſcorns to be oblig'd to him for any Exerciſe of it.

6. The Goodneſs of God is contemned or abuſed, in relying upon our Services, to procure God's good Will to us. * As when we ſtand in need either of ſome particular Mercy, or ſpecial Aſſiſtance: When Preſſures are heavy, and we have little hopes of eaſe in an ordinary way: When the Devotions in courſe have not prevail'd for what we want: We engage our ſelves by extraordinary Vows and Promiſes to God, hereby to open that Goodneſs, which ſeems to be lock'd up from us. Sometimes indeed Vows may proceed from a ſole Deſire to engage our ſelves to God, from a ſenſe of the Levity and Inconſtancy of our Spirits: Binding our ſelves to God by ſomething more ſacred and inviolable than a common Reſolution. But many times the Vowing the Building of a Temple, Endowing an Hoſpital, giving ſo much in Alms, if God will free them from a Fit of Sickneſs, and ſpin out the Thread of their Lives a little longer, (as hath been frequent among the Romaniſts) ariſes from an Opinion of Lazineſs, and a Selfiſhneſs in the Divine Goodneſs; that it muſt be ſqueezed out by ſome ſolemn Promiſes of Returns to him, before it will exerciſe it ſelf to take their parts. Popular Vows are often the Effects of an Ignorance of the free and bubbling Nature of this Perfection of the Generouſneſs and Royalty of Divine Goodneſs: As if God were of a mean and mechanick Temper, not to part with any thing, unleſs he were in ſome meaſure paid for it: And of ſo bad a Nature, as not to give paſſage to any Kindneſs to his Creature, without a Bribe. It implies alſo, that he is of an ignorant, as well as contracted Goodneſs; that he hath ſo little Underſtanding, and ſo much weakneſs of Judgment, as to be taken with ſuch Trifles and Ceremonial Courtſhips, and little Promiſes; and meditated only low Deſigns, in imparting his Bounty: 'Tis juſt as if a Malefactor ſhould ſpeak to a Prince, Sir, If you will but beſtow a Pardon upon me, and prevent the Death I have merited for this Crime, I will give you this Rattle. All Vows made with ſuch a Temper of Spirit to God, are as injurious and abuſive to his Goodneſs, as any Man will judge ſuch an Offer to be to a Majeſtick and Gracious Prince; as if it were a Trading, not a Free and Royal Goodneſs.

* Amyral. Moral. Tom. 4. p. 291.

7. The Goodneſs of God is abus'd, when we give up our Souls and Affections to thoſe Benefits we have from God. When we make thoſe things God's Rivals, which were ſent to Woe us for him, and offer thoſe Affections to the Preſents themſelves, which they were ſent to ſollicite for the Maſter. This is done, when either we place our truſt in them, or glue our choiceſt Affections to them. This Charge God brings againſt Jeruſalem, the truſting in her own Beauty, Glory, and Strength, tho' it was a Comelineſs put upon her by God *. When a little Sun-ſhine of Proſperity breaks out upon us, we are apt to graſp it with ſo much eagerneſs and cloſeneſs, as if we had no other Foundation to ſettle our ſelves upon, no other Being that might challenge from us our ſole dependence. And the love of our ſelves, and of Creatures above God, is very natural to us: * Lovers of themſelves, and Lovers of Pleaſure more than of God. Self-love is the Root, and the Love of Pleaſures the top Branch, that mounts its Head higheſt againſt Heaven. * 'Tis for the love of the World, that the Dangers of the Sea are paſt over, that Men deſcend into the Bowels of the Earth, paſs Nights without Sleep, undertake Suits without intermiſſion, wade through many Inconveniencies, venture their Souls, and contemn God; in thoſe things Men glory, and fooliſhly grow proud by them, and think themſelves ſafe and happy in them. Now to love our ſelves above God, is to own our ſelves better than God, and that we tranſcend him in an amiable Goodneſs; or if we love our ſelves equal with God, it at leaſt manifeſts, that we think God no better than our ſelves, and think our ſelves our own chief Good, and deny any thing above us to out-ſtrip us in goodneſs, whereby to deſerve to be the Center of our Affections and Actions: And to love any other Creature above him, is to conclude ſome defect in God, that he hath not ſo much Goodneſs in his own Nature, as that Creature hath, to compleat our Felicity; that God is a ſlighter thing than that Creature. 'Tis to account God, what all the things in the World are, an imaginary Happineſs, a Goodneſs of Clay, and them what God is, a Supream Goodneſs. 'Tis to value the goodneſs of a Drop above that of the Spring, and the goodneſs of the Spark above that of the Sun. As if the Bounty of God were of a leſs Alloy, than the Advantages we immediately receive from the Hands of a ſilly Worm. By how much the better we think a Creature to be, and place our Affections chiefly upon it; by ſo much the more deficient and indigent we conclude God: For God wants ſo much in our Conception, as the other thing hath goodneſs above him in our Thoughts. Thus is God leſſen'd below the Creature, as if he had a mixture of Evil in him, and were capable of an imperfect Goodneſs. He that eſteems the Sun that ſhines upon him, the Cloaths that warm him, the Food that nouriſheth him, or any other Benefit above the Donor, regards them as more comely and uſeful than God himſelf; and behaves himſelf, as if he were more oblig'd to them, than to God, who beſtowed thoſe advantageous Qualities upon them.

*Ezek.16. 14, 15.

* Creſſol, Antholog. Part 2. p. 29.

8. The Divine Goodneſs is contemn'd, in ſinning more freely upon the account of that Goodneſs, and employing God's Benefits in a Drudgery for our Luſts. This is a treachery to his Goodneſs, to make his Benefits ſerve for an end quite contrary to that for which he ſent them. As if God had been plentiful in his Bleſſings, to hire them to be more fierce in their Rebellions, and fed them to no other purpoſe, but that they might more ſtrongly kick againſt him; this is the Fruit which corrupt Nature produceth. Thus the Egyptians, who had ſo fertile a Country, prove unthankful to the Creator, by adoring the meaneſt Creatures, and putting the Scepter of the Monarch of the World, into the hands of the ſottiſheſt and cruelleſt Beaſts. And the Romans multiply their Idols, as God multiplied their Victories. This is alſo the Complaint of God concerning Iſrael, * She did not know, that I gave her Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, and multiplied her Silver and Gold, which they prepar'd for Baal. They ungratefully employ'd the Bleſſings of God in the Worſhip of an Idol, againſt the Will of the Donor. So in Hoſ. 10. 1. According to the multitude of his Fruit, he hath increas'd the Altars, according to the goodneſs of his Land they have made goodly Images. They followed their own Inventions with the ſtrength of my outward Bleſſings. As their Wealth increas'd, they increas'd the Ornaments of their Images; ſo that what were before of Wood and Stone, they advanc'd to Gold and Silver. And the like Complaint you may ſee, Ezek. 16. 17. Thus,

* Hoſ. 2.8.

1. The Benefits of God are abuſed to Pride: When Men ſtanding upon a higher ground of outward Proſperity, vaunt it loftily above their Neighbours; the common fault of thoſe that enjoy a worldly Sun-ſhine, which the Apoſtle obſerves in his Direction to Timothy: Charge them that are rich in this World, that they be not high-minded. 'Tis an ill uſe of Divine Bleſſings, to be fill'd by them with Pride and Wind. Alſo,

* 1 Tim.6. 17.

2. When Men abuſe Plenty to Eaſe; becauſe they have abundance, ſpend their time in Idleneſs, and make no other uſe of Divine Benefits, than to trifle away their time, and be utterly uſeleſs to the World.

3. When they alſo abuſe Peace, and other Bleſſings, to Security. As they which would not believe the Threatnings of Judgment, and the Storm coming from a far Country, becauſe the Lord was in Sion, and her King in her: * Is not the Lord in Sion? Is not her King in her? Thinking they might continue their progreſs in their Sin, becauſe they had the Temple, the Seat of the Divine Glory, Sion, and the promiſe of an everlaſting Kingdom to David; abuſing the Promiſe of God to Preſumption and Security, and turning the Grace of God into wantonneſs.

* Jer.8.19.

4. Again, When they abuſe the Bounty of God to Senſuality and Luxury, miſimploying the Proviſions God gives them, in reſolving to live like Beaſts, when by a good improvement of them, they might attain the Life of Angels. Thus is the Light of the Sun abus'd to conduct them, and the Fruits of the Earth abus'd to enable them to their prodigious Debauchery: As we do, ſaith one, * with the Thames, which brings us in Proviſion, and we ſoil it with our Rubbiſh. The more God ſows his Gifts, the more we ſow our Cockle and Darnel. Thus we make our outward Happineſs the moſt unhappy part of our Lives, and by the ſtrength of Divine Bleſſings, exceed all Laws of Reaſon and Religion too.

* Young, of Affliction, p. 34.

How unworthy a Carriage is this, to uſe the Expreſſions of Divine Goodneſs, as Occaſions of a greater Outrage and Affront of him? When we ſtab his Honour by thoſe Inſtruments he puts into our Hands to glorifie him: As if a Favorite ſhould turn that Sword into the Bowels of his Prince, wherewherewith he Knighted him. And a Servant enrich'd by a Lord, ſhould hire by that Wealth Murderers to take away his Life. How brutiſh is it, the more God courts us with his Bleſſings, the more to ſpurn at him with our Feet? Like the Mule that lifts up its Heel againſt the Dam, as ſoon as ever it hath ſuck'd her. We never beat God out of our Hearts, but by his own Gifts: He receives no Blows from Men, but by thoſe Inſtruments he gave them to promote their Happineſs. While Man is an Enjoyer, he makes God a Loſer by his own Bleſſings; inflames his Rebellion by thoſe Benefits which ſhould kindle his Love; and runs from him by the ſtrength of thoſe Favours which ſhould endear the Donor to him. Do you thus requite the Lord, Oh fooliſh People and unwiſe? is the Expoſtulation, Deut. 32. 6. Divine Goodneſs appears in the Complaint of the abuſe of it, in giving them Titles below their Crime, and complaining more of their being unfaithful to their own Intereſt, than Enemies to his Glory. Fooliſh and unwiſe, in neglecting their own Happineſs, a Charge below the Crime, which deſerved to be abominable, ungrateful People to a Prodigy. All this Carriage towards God, is as if a Man ſhould knock the Chirurgeon on the Head, as ſoon as he hath ſet and bound up his diſlocated Members. So God compares the ungrateful Behaviour of the Iſ-

9. We contemn the Goodneſs of God, in aſcribing our Benefits to other Cauſes than Divine Goodneſs. Thus Iſrael aſcribed her Felicity, Plenty, and Succeſs to her Idols, as Rewards which her Lo-

'Tis the ſame caſe, when we own him not as the Author of any Succeſs in our Affairs, but by an over-weening Conceit of our own Sagacity, applaud and admire our ſelves, and over-look the Hand that conducted us, and brought our Endeavours to a good iſſue. We eclipſe the Glory of Divine Goodneſs, by ſetting the Crown that is due to it upon the Head of our own Induſtry. A Sacriledge worſe than Belſhazzar's drinking of Wine with his Lords and Concubines, in the Sacred Veſſels pilfer'd from the Temple; as in that place of Daniel. This was the proud Vaunt of the Aſſyrian Conqueror, for which God threatens to puniſh the Fruit of his ſtout
* Iſai. 10. Heart: * By the ſtrength of my hand, I have done
12, 13, 14. it, and by my Wiſdom: For I am prudent, and I have removed the Bounds of the People, and have robbed their Treaſures, and I have put down the Inhabitants like a valiant Man. Not a word of Divine Goodneſs and Aſſiſtance in all this, but applauding his own Courage and Conduct. This is a robbing of God, to ſet up our ſelves, and making Divine Goodneſs a Footſtool, to aſcend into his Throne. And as it is unjuſt, ſo it is ridiculous, to aſcribe to Our ſelves, or Inſtruments, the chief Honour of any Work: As ridiculous, as if a Soldier, after a Victory, ſhould erect an Altar to the Honour of his Sword, or an Artificer offer Sacrifices to the Tools, whereby he compleated ſome excellent and uſeful Invention. A Practice that every rational Man would diſdain, where he ſhould ſee it. 'Tis a diſcarding any Thoughts of the Goodneſs of God, when we imagine, that we chiefly owe any thing in this World to our own Induſtry or Wit, to Friends or Means, as tho' Divine Goodneſs did not open its hand, to intereſt it ſelf in our Affairs, ſupport our Ability, direct our Counſels, and mingle it with any thing we do. God is the principal Author of any Advantage that accrues to us, of any wiſe Reſolution we fix upon, or any proper Way we take to compaſs it; no Man can be wiſe in oppoſition to God, act wiſely or well without him; his Goodneſs inſpires Men with generous and magnificent Counſels, and furniſheth them with fit and proportionable Means; when he withdraws his Hand, Mens Heads grow fooliſh, and their Hands feeble; Folly and Weakneſs drops upon them, as Darkneſs upon the World upon the removal of the Sun. 'Tis an abuſe of Divine Goodneſs, not to own it, but erect an Idol in its place. Ezra was of another mind, when he aſcribed to the good Hand of God, the providing Miniſters for the Temple, and not to his own care and diligence *: * Ezra 8.

2. The Second Information is this: If God be ſo good, 'tis a certain Argument that Man is fallen from his Original State. 'Tis the Complaint of Man ſometimes, that other Creatures have more of earthly Happineſs than Men have, live freer from Care and Trouble, and are not rack'd with that Sollicitouſneſs and Anxiety as Man is: Have not ſuch Diſtempers to embitter their Lives. 'Tis a good ground for Man to look into himſelf, and conſider whether he hath not ſome ways or other, diſobliged God more than other Creatures can poſſibly do. We often find that the Creatures Men have need of in this State, do not anſwer the expectation of Man. Curſed be the Ground for thy ſake *. A fruit- *Gen. 3. 17.
ful Land is made barren, Thorns and Thiſtles triumph upon the Face of the Earth, inſtead of good Fruit. Is it like that Goodneſs which is as infinite as his Power, and knows no more Limits than his Almightineſs ſhould imprint ſo many Scars upon the World, if he had not been heinouſly provoked by ſome miſcarriage of his Creature? Infinite Goodneſs could never move Infinite Juſtice to inflict Puniſhment upon Creatures, if they had not highly merited it: We cannot think, that any Creature was blemiſh'd with a Principle of Diſturbance, as it came firſt out of the hand of God. All things were certainly ſetled in a due order and dependance upon one another: Nothing could be ungrateful, and unuſeful to Man, by the Original Law of their Creation: If there had, it had not been Goodneſs, but Evil and Baſeneſs, that had created the World. When we ſee therefore the Courſe of Nature overturn'd, the Order of Divine Goodneſs had placed, diſturb'd; and the Creatures pronounced good and uſeful to Man, employ'd as Inſtruments of Vengeance againſt him; we muſt conclude ſome horrible Blot upon Human Nature, and very odious to a God of infinite Goodneſs; and that this Blot was daſh'd upon Man by himſelf, and his own Fault; for it is repugnant to the Infinite Goodneſs of God, to put into the Creature a ſinning Nature, to hurry him into Sin, and then puniſh him for that which he had impreſt upon him. The Goodneſs of God inclines him to love Goodneſs, where-ever he finds it, and not to puniſh any, that have not deſerved it by their own Crimes. The Curſe we therefore ſee the Creatures groan under, the Diſorders in Nature, the fruſtrating the Expectations of Man in the Fruits of the Earth, and plentiful Harveſts, the trouble he is continually expos'd to in the World, which tedders down his Spirit from more generous Employments, ſhews, that Man is not what he was, when Divine Goodneſs firſt erected him; but hath admitted into his Nature ſomething more uncomely in the Eye of God; and ſo heinous, that it puts his Goodneſs ſometimes to a ſtand, and makes him lay aſide the Bleſſings, his Hand was fill'd with, to take up the Arms of Vengeance, wherewith to fight againſt the World. Divine Goodneſs would have ſecur'd his Creatures from any ſuch Invaſions, and never us'd thoſe things againſt Man, which he deſign'd in the firſt Frame for Man's Service, were there not ſome deteſtable Diſorder riſen in the Nature of Man, which makes God with-hold his Liberality, and change the Diſpenſation of his numerous Benefits into Legions of Judgments. The Conſideration of the Divine Goodneſs, which is a Notion that Man naturally concludes to be inſeparable from the Deity, would to an unbiaſs'd Reaſon, verifie the Hiſtory of thoſe Puniſhments, ſettled upon Man in the Third Chapter of Geneſis, and make the whole ſeem more probable to Reaſon at the firſt relation. This Inſtruction naturally flows from the Doctrine of Divine Goodneſs. If God be ſo good, it is a certain Argument, that Man is fallen from his Original State.

3. The third Information is this: If God be infinitely good, there can be no juſt Complaint againſt God, if Men be puniſh'd for abuſing his Goodneſs. Man had nothing; nay, it was impoſſible he could have any thing from infinite Goodneſs to diſoblige him, but to engage him. God never did, nay, never could draw his Sword againſt Man, 'till Man had ſlighted him, and affronted him by the ſtrength of his own Bounty. 'Tis by this, God doth juſtifie his ſevereſt proceedings againſt Men, and very ſeldom charges them with any elſe, as the matter of their provocations: * Therefore will I return, and take away my Corn in the time thereof, and my Wine in the ſeaſon thereof, and will recover my Wool and my Flax. And in Ezek. 16. after he had drawn out a Bill of Complaint againſt them, and inſerted only the abuſe of his Benefits, as a Juſtification of what he intended to do: He concludes, Verſe 27. Behold therefore, I have ſtretched out my Hand over thee, and diminiſh'd thy ordinary Food, and delivered thee unto the Will of them that hate thee. When Men ſuffer, they ſuffer juſtly; they were not conſtrained by any violence, or forced by any neceſſity, nor provok'd by any ill uſage, to turn Head againſt God, but broke the Bands of the ſtrongeſt Obligations, and moſt tender Allurements. What Man, what Devil can juſtly blame God for puniſhing them, after they had been ſo intolerably bold, as to fly in the Face of that Goodneſs that had oblig'd them, by giving them Beings of a higher elevation than to inferiour Creatures, and furniſhing them with ſufficient ſtrength to continue in their firſt Habitation? Man ſeems to have leſs reaſon to accuſe God of Rigor than Devils, ſince after his unreaſonable Revolt, a more expreſs Goodneſs than that which created him, hath ſollicited him to Repentance, courted him by melting Promiſes and Expoſtulations, added undeniable Arguments of Bounty, and drawn out the choiceſt Treaſures of Heaven in the Gift of his Son, to prevail over Mens Perverſity. And yet Man, after he might arrive to the height and happineſs of an Angel, will be fond of continuing in the meanneſs and miſery of a Devil; and more ſtrongly link himſelf to the Society of the damn'd Spirits, wherein by his firſt Rebellion he had incorporated himſelf. Who can blame God for vindicating his own Goodneſs from ſuch deſperate Contempts, and the extream Ingratitude of Man? * If God be good, 'tis our Happineſs to adhere to him: If we depart from him, we depart from Goodneſs; and if Evil happen to us, we cannot blame God, but our ſelves, for our departure. Why are Men happy? Becauſe they cleave to God: Why are Men miſerable? Becauſe they recede from God. 'Tis then our own fault that we are miſerable; God cannot be charged with any Injuſtice, if we be miſerable, ſince his Goodneſs gave means to prevent it, and afterwards added means to recover us from it; but all deſpis'd by us. The Doctrine of Divine Goodneſs juſtifies every Stone laid in the Foundation of Hell, and every Spark in that burning Furnace, ſince it is for the abuſe of Infinite Goodneſs, that it was kindled.

4. The fourth Information: Here is a certain Argument both for God's fitneſs to govern the World, and his actual Government of it.

1. This renders him fit for the Government of the World, and gives him a full Title to it. This Perfection doth the Pſalmiſt celebrate throughout the 107th Pſalm, where he declares God's Works of Providence, Verſe 8, 15, 21, 32. Power without Goodneſs would deface, inſtead of preſerving; Ruine is the Fruit of Rigor, without Kindneſs; but God, becauſe of his infinite and immutable Goodneſs, cannot do any thing unworthy of himſelf, and uncomely in it ſelf, or deſtructive to any Moral Goodneſs in the Creature. 'Tis impoſſible he ſhould do any thing that is baſe, or act any thing but for the beſt, becauſe he is eſſentially and naturally, and therefore neceſſarily good. As a good Tree cannot bring forth bad Fruit, ſo a good God cannot produce evil Acts; no more than a pure Beam of the Sun can engender ſo much as a Mite of Darkneſs, or Infinite Heat produce any Particle of Cold. As God is ſo much Light, that he can be no Darkneſs, ſo he is ſo much Good, that he can have no Evil; and becauſe there is no Evil in him, nothing ſimply Evil can be produced by him. Since he is good by Nature, all Evil is againſt his Nature, and God can do nothing againſt his Nature: It would be a part of Impotence in him, to Will that which is Evil; and therefore the Miſery Man feels, as well as the Sin whereby he deſerves that Miſery, are ſaid to be from himſelf: * Oh Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroy'd thy ſelf. And tho' God ſends Judgments upon the World, we have ſhewn theſe to be intended for the ſupport and vindication of his Goodneſs. And Hezekiah judg'd no otherwiſe, when after the Threatning of the Devaſtation of his Houſe, the Plundering his Treaſures, and Captivity of his Poſterity, he replies, Good is the Word of the Lord which thou haſt ſpoken *. God cannot act any thing that is baſe and cruel, becauſe his Goodneſs is as infinite as his Power, and his Power acts nothing, but what his Wiſdom directs, and his Goodneſs moves him to. Wiſdom is the Head in Government, Omniſcience the Eye, Power the Arm, and Goodneſs the Heart and Spirit in them, that animates all.

2. As Goodneſs renders him fit to govern the World, ſo God doth actually govern the World. Can we underſtand this Perfection aright, and yet imagine, that he is of ſo moroſe a Diſpoſition, as to neglect the Care of his Creatures? That his Excellency, which was diſplay'd in framing the World, ſhould withdraw and wrap up it ſelf in his own Boſom, without looking out, and darting it ſelf out in the diſpoſal of them? Can that which moved him firſt to erect a World, ſuffer him to be unmindful of his own Work? Would he deſign firſt to diſplay it in Creation, and afterwards obſcure the Honour of it? That cannot be entitled an infinite permanent Goodneſs, which ſhould be ſo indifferent, as to let the Creatures tumble together, as they pleaſe, without any order, after he had moulded them in his Hand. If Goodneſs be diffuſive and communicative of it ſelf, can it conſiſt with the Nature of it, to extend it ſelf to the giving the Creatures Being, and then withdraw and contract it ſelf, not caring what becomes of them? 'Tis the Nature of Goodneſs after it hath communicated it ſelf, to enlarge its Channels: That Fountain that ſprings up in a little hollow part of the Earth, doth in a ſhort progreſs increaſe its Streams, and widen the Paſſages through which it runs: It would be a Blemiſh to Divine Goodneſs, if it did deſert what it made, and leave things to wild Confuſions; which would be, if a good Hand did not manage them, and a good Mind preſide over them. This is the Leſſon intended to us by all his Judgments, * That the Living may know, that the Moſt High rules in the Kingdoms of Men. If he doth not actually govern the World, he muſt have devolv'd it ſomewhere, either to Men or Angels; not to Men, who naturally want a Goodneſs and Wiſdom to govern themſelves, much more to govern others exactly. And beſides the Miſinterpretations of Actions, they are liable to the want of Patience, to bear with the Provocations of the World. Since ſome of the beſt at one time in the World, and in preſence of the greateſt Example of Meekneſs and Sweetneſs, would have kindled a Fire in Heaven, to have conſumed the Samaritans, for no other Affront, than a Non-Entertainment of their Maſter, and themſelves *. Nor hath he committed the diſpoſal of things to Angels, either good or bad; tho' he uſeth them as Inſtruments in his Government, yet they are not the principal Pilots to ſteer the World. Bad Angels certainly are not; they would make continual Ravages, meditate Ruine, never deſeat their own Counſels, which they manage by the Wicked, as their Inſtruments in the World, nor fill their Spirits with Diſquiet and Reſtleſneſs, when they are engaged in ſome ruinous Deſign, as often is experienc'd: Nor hath he committed it to the good Angels, who, for ought we know, are not more numerous than the evil ones are: But beſides, we can ſcarcely think their finite Nature capable of ſo much goodneſs, as to bear the innumerable Debaucheries, Villanies, Blaſphemies, vented in one Year, one Week, one Day, one Hour, throughout the World; their Zeal for their Creator might well be ſuppos'd to move them, to teſtifie their Affection to him in a conſtant and ſpeedy Righting of his injured Honour, upon the Heads of the Offenders. The evil Angels have too much Cruelty, and would have no care of Juſtice, but take pleaſure in the Blood of the moſt Innocent, as well as the moſt Criminal. And the good Angels have too much Tenderneſs, to ſuffer ſo many Crimes. Since the World therefore continues without thoſe Floods of Judgments, which it daily merits, ſince notwithſtanding all the Provocations, the Order of it is preſerved; 'tis a Teſtimony, that an Infinite Goodneſs holds the Helm in his Hands, and ſpreads its warm Wings over it.

* Dan. 4.17.

* Luke 9. 54.

5. The Fifth Information is this; Hence we may infer the ground of all Religion, 'tis the Perfection of Goodneſs. As the Goodneſs of God is the luſtre of all his Attributes, ſo it is the Foundation and Link of all true Religious Worſhip: The natural Religion of the Heathens was introduc'd by the conſideration of Divine Goodneſs, in the Being he had beſtow'd upon them, and the Proviſions that were made for them. Divine Bounty was the Motive to erect Altars, and preſent Sacrifices; tho' they miſtook the Object of their Worſhip, and offer'd the dues of the Creator to the Inſtruments whereby he convey'd his Benefits to them. And you find, that the Religion inſtituted by him among the Jews, was enforc'd upon them by the conſideration of their miraculous deliverance from Egypt, the preſervation of them in the Wilderneſs, and the inſeoffing them in a Land flowing with Milk and Honey. Every act of bounty and ſucceſs the Heathens receiv'd, mov'd them to appoint new Feaſts, and repeat their adorations of thoſe Deities they thought the Authors and Promoters of their Victories and Welfare. The Devil did not miſtake the common Sentiment of the World in Divine Service, when he alledg'd to God, that Job did not fear him for nought, i. e. worſhip him for nothing *. All acts of Devotion take their riſe from God's Liberality, either from what they have, or from what they hope: Praiſe ſpeaks the Poſſeſſion, and Prayer the expectation of ſome Benefit from his Hand. Tho' ſome of the Heathens made Fear to be the prime Cauſe of the acknowledgment and worſhip of a Deity, yet ſurely ſomething elſe beſides and beyond this Eſtabliſht ſo great a thing as Religion in the World; an ingenuous Religion could never have been born into the World without a Notion of Goodneſs; and would have gaſpt its laſt, as ſoon as this Notion ſhould have expir'd in the Minds of Men. What encouragement can fear of Power give, without ſenſe of Goodneſs? juſt as much as Thunder hath, to invite a Man to the place where it is like to fall, and cruſh him. The nature of Fear is to drive from, and the nature of Goodneſs to allure to the Object. The Divine Thunders, Prodigies, and other Armies of his Juſtice in the World, which are the Marks of his Power, could conclude in nothing but a ſlaviſh Worſhip: Fear alone would have made Men blaſpheme the Deity, inſtead of ſerving him, they would have fretted againſt him; they might have offer'd him a trembling Worſhip, but they could never have in their minds thought him worthy of an Adoration; they would rather have ſecretly complain'd of him, and curſed him in their heart, than inwardly have admir'd him: The iſſue would have been the ſame, which Job's Wife adviſ'd him to, when God withdrew his Protection from his Goods and Body, Curſe God and die †. 'Tis certainly the common Sentiment of Men, that he that acts cruelly and tyrannically, is not worthy of an integrity to be retain'd towards him in the Hearts of his Subjects: But Job fortifies himſelf againſt this Temptation from his Boſom Friend, by the conſideration of the good he had receiv'd from God, which did more deſerve a Worſhip from him, than the preſent Evil had reaſon to diſcourage it. Alas! what is only fear'd, is hated, not ador'd: Would any ſeek to an irreconcileable Enemy? Would any Perſon affectionately liſt himſelf in the ſervice of a Man void of all good diſpoſition? Would any diſtreſſed perſon put up a Petition to that Prince, who never gave any Experiment of the ſweetneſs of his nature, but always ſatiated himſelf with the Blood of the meaneſt Criminals? All affection to Service is rooted up, when hopes of receiving good are extinguiſht. There could not be a ſpark of that in the World, which is properly call'd Religion without a Notion of Goodneſs: The Exiſtence of God is the firſt Pillar, and the Goodneſs of God in rewarding the next, upon which coming to him (which includes all acts of Devotion) is eſtabliſh'd, ‖ He that comes unto God, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a Rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him: If either of thoſe Pillars be not thought to ſtand firm,

all

all Religion falls to the Ground. 'Tis this as the moſt agreeable Motive, that the Apoſtle James uſes, to encourage Mens approach to God, becauſe he gives liberally, and upbraideth not *. A Man of a kind Heart and bountiful Hand, ſhall have his Gate throng'd with Suppliants, who ſometimes would be willing to lay down their Lives: For a good Man one would even dare to die; when one of a niggardly, or tyrannical Temper, ſhall be deſtitute of all free and affectionate Applications. What Eyes would be lifted up to Heaven? What Hands ſtretched out, if there were not a knowledge of Goodneſs there to enliven their Hopes of ſpeeding in their Petitions? Therefore Chriſt orders our Prayers to be directed to God as a Father, which is a Title of Tenderneſs, as well as a Father in Heaven, a Mark of his Greatneſs; the one to ſupport our Confidence, as well as the other to preſerve our Diſtance. God could not be ingenuouſly ador'd and acknowledged, if he were not liberal as well as powerful: The Goodneſs of God is the Foundation of all ingenuous Religion, Devotion, and Worſhip.

* James 1. 5

6. The ſixth Inſtruction: The Goodneſs of God renders God amiable. His Goodneſs renders him beautiful, and his Beauty renders him lovely, both are link'd together: * How great is his Goodneſs, and how great is his Beauty? This is the moſt powerful Attractive, and maſters the Affections of the Soul: 'Tis Goodneſs only ſuppoſed, or real, that is thought worthy to demerit our Affections to any thing. If there be not a reality of this, or at leaſt an opinion and eſtimation of it in an Object, it would want a force and vigour to allure our Will. This Perfection of God is the Loadſtone to draw us, and the Center for our Spirits to reſt in.

* Zech. 9. 17.

1. This renders God amiable to himſelf. His Goodneſs is his Godhead, * by his Godhead is meant his Goodneſs: If he loves his Godhead for it ſelf, he loves his Goodneſs for it ſelf: He would not be good, if he did not love himſelf: And if there were any thing more excellent, and had a greater Goodneſs than himſelf, he would not be good, if he did not love that greater Goodneſs above himſelf: For not only a hatred of Goodneſs is evil, but an indifferent or cold Affection to Goodneſs, hath a Tincture of Evil in it. If God were not good, and yet ſhould love himſelf in the higheſt manner, he would be the greateſt Evil, and do the greateſt Evil in that Act; for he would ſet his Love upon that which is not the proper Object of ſuch an Affection, but the Object of Averſion. His own infinite Excellency and Goodneſs of his Nature, renders him lovely and delightful to himſelf; without this he could not love himſelf in a commendable and worthy way, and becoming the Purity of a Deity; and he cannot but love himſelf for this: For as Creatures by not loving him as the Supream Good, deny him to be the choiceſt Good, ſo God would deny Himſelf, and his own Goodneſs, if he did not love himſelf, and that for his Goodneſs. But the Apoſtle tells us, That God cannot deny himſelf *: Self-love, upon this Account, is the only Prerogative of God, becauſe there is not any thing better than himſelf, that can lay any juſt Claim to his Affections: He only ought to love himſelf, and it would be an Injuſtice in him to himſelf, if he did not. He only can love himſelf for this: An Infinite Goodneſs ought to be infinitely loved; but he only being Infinite, can only love himſelf according to the due Merit of his own Goodneſs. He cannot be ſo amiable to any Man, to any Angel, to the higheſt Seraphim, as he is to himſelf; becauſe he is only capable in regard of his Infinite Wiſdom, to know the Infiniteneſs of his own Goodneſs. And no Creature can love him, as he ought to be loved, unleſs it had the ſame Infinite Capacity of Underſtanding to know him, and of Affection to embrace him. This firſt renders God amiable to himſelf.

* Rom. 1. 20.

* 2 Tim. 2. 13.

2. It ought therefore to render him amiable to us. What renders him lovely to his own Eye, ought to render him ſo to ours; and ſince by the ſhortneſs of our Underſtandings we cannot love him, as he merits, yet we ſhould be induc'd by the Meaſures of his Bounty, to love him, as we can. If this do not preſent him lovely to us, we own him rather a Devil than a God: If his Goodneſs moved him to frame Creatures, his Goodneſs moved him alſo to frame Creatures for himſelf, and his own Glory. 'Tis a mighty wrong to him, not to look with a delightful Eye upon the Marks of it, and return an Affection to God in ſome meaſure ſutable to his Liberality to us; we are deſcended as low as Brutes, if we underſtand him not to be the Perfect Good; and we are deſcended as low as Devils, if our Affections are not attracted by it.

1. If God were not Infinitely Good, he could not be the Object of Supream Love. If he were Finitely Good, there might be other things as good as God, and then God in Juſtice could not challenge our choiceſt Affections to him, above any thing elſe: It would be a defect of Goodneſs in him to demand it; becauſe he would deſpoil that, which were equally good with him, of its due and right to our Affections, which it might claim from us upon the account of its goodneſs: God would be unjuſt to challenge more than was due to him; for he would claim that chiefly to himſelf, which another had a lawful ſhare in. Nothing can be ſupreamly loved, that hath not a triumphant excellency above all other things: Where there is an equality of goodneſs, neither can juſtly challenge a Supremacy, but only an equality of Affection.

2. This Attribute of Goodneſs renders him more lovely than any other Attribute. He never requires our Adoration of him ſo much, as the ſtrongeſt or wiſeſt, but as the beſt of Beings: He uſes this chiefly, to conſtrain and allure us. Why would he be fear'd or worſhipp'd, but becauſe there is forgiveneſs with him *? 'Tis for his Goodneſs ſake, that he is ſued to by his People in diſtreſs, † For thy goodneſs ſake, O Lord. Men may be admir'd becauſe of their Knowledge, but they are affected becauſe of their Goodneſs: The Will, in all the variety of Objects it purſues, centers in this one thing of Good, as the Term of its Appetite. All things are belov'd by Men, becauſe they have been better'd by them, or becauſe they expect to be the better for them. Severity can never conquer Enmity, and kindle Love: Were there nothing but Wrath in the Deity, it would make him be fear'd, but render him odious, and that to an innocent Nature. As the Spouſe ſpeaks of Chriſt, * ſo we may of God: Tho' ſhe commends him for his Head, the excellency of his Wiſdom; his Eyes, the extent of his Omniſcience; his Hands, the greatneſs of his Power; and his Legs, the ſwiftneſs of his Motions, and ways to and for his People; yet the ſweetneſs of his Mouth, in his gracious Words and Promiſes cloſes all, and is follow'd with nothing but an Exclamation, that he is altogether lovely, Verſe 16. His Mouth in pronouncing Pardon of Sin, and Juſtification of the Perſon, preſents him moſt lovely. His Power to do good is admirable, but his Will to do good is amiable: This puts a Gloſs upon all his other Attributes. Tho' he had Knowledge to underſtand the Depth of our Neceſſities, and Power to prevent them, or reſcue us from them, yet his Knowledge would be fruitleſs, and his Power uſeleſs, if he were of a rigid Nature, and not touched with any Sentiments of kindneſs.

3. This Goodneſs therefore lays a ſtrong Obligation upon us. 'Tis true he is lovely in regard of his abſolute Goodneſs, or the Goodneſs of his Nature; but we ſhould hardly be perſwaded to return him an Affection, without his relative Goodneſs, his Benefits to his Creatures; we are oblig'd by both to love him.

1. By his abſolute Goodneſs, or the Goodneſs of his Nature. Suppoſe a Creature had drawn its Original from ſomething elſe, wherein God had no Influx; and had never received the leaſt Mite of a Benefit from him, but from ſome other Hand; yet the infinite Excellency and Goodneſs of his Nature, would merit the Love of that Creature; and it would act ſordidly and diſingenuouſly, if it did not diſcover a mighty Reſpect for God: For what Ingenuity could there be in a rational Creature, that were poſſeſſed with no Eſteem for a Nature fill'd with unbounded Goodneſs and Excellency, tho' he had never been oblig'd to him for any Favour? That Man is accounted odious, and juſtly deſpicable by Man, that reproaches and diſ-eſteems; nay, that doth not value a Perſon of a high Vertue in himſelf, and an univerſal Goodneſs and Charity to others, tho' himſelf never ſtood in need of his Charity, and never had any Benefit conveyed from his Hands, nor ever ſaw his Face, or had any Commerce with him: A value of ſuch a Perſon is but a juſt due to the natural Claim of Vertue. And indeed, the firſt Object of Love is God, in the Excellency of his own Nature, as the firſt Object of Love in Marriage, is the Perſon; the Portion is a thing conſequent upon it. To love God only for his Benefits, is to love our ſelves firſt, and him ſecondarily: To love God for his own Goodneſs and Excellency, is a true love of God; a love of him for himſelf. That flaming Fire in his own Breaſt, tho' we have not a Spark of it, hath a right to kindle one in ours to him.

2. By his relative Goodneſs, or that of his Benefits. Tho' the Excellency of his own Nature, wherein there is a Combination of Goodneſs, muſt needs raviſh an apprehenſive Mind; yet a reflection upon his imparted Kindneſs, both in the Beings we have from him, and the Support we have by him, muſt enhance this Eſtimation. When the Excellency of his Nature, and the Expreſſions of his Bounty are in Conjunction, the Excellency of his own Nature, renders him eſtimable in a way of Juſtice, and the Greatneſs of his Benefits renders him valuable in a way of Gratitude: The firſt raviſheth, and the other allures and melts: He hath enough in his Nature to attract, and ſufficient in his Bounty to engage your Affections. The Excellency of his Nature is ſtrong enough of it ſelf, to blow up our Affections to him, were there not a Malignity in our Hearts, that repreſents him under the Notion of an Enemy; therefore in regard of our corrupt State, the Conſideration of Divine Largeſſes, comes in for a ſhare in the Elevation of our Affections: For, indeed, 'tis a very hard thing, for a Man to love another, tho' never ſo well qualified, and of an eminent Vertue, while he believes him to be his Enemy, and one that will ſeverely handle him; tho' he hath before received many good Turns from him: The Vertue, Valour, and Courteſie of a Prince, will hardly make him affected by thoſe againſt whom he is in Arms, and that are daily pilfer'd by his Soldiers, unleſs they have hopes of a Reparation from him, and future Security from Injuries. Chriſt in the Repetition of the Command, to love God with all our Mind, with all our Heart, and with all our Soul, i. e. with ſuch an ardency, above all things which glitter in our Eye, or can be created by him, conſiders him as our God *. And the Pſalmiſt conſiders him as one, that had kindly employ'd his Power for him, in the eruption of his Love, Pſal. 18. 1. I will love thee, Oh Lord, my ſtrength. And ſo in Pſal. 116. 1. I love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard the Voice of my Supplications. An eſteem of the Benefactor, is inſeparable from Gratitude for the received Benefits: And ſhould not then the unparallel'd Kindneſs of God, advance him in our Thoughts, much more than ſlighter Courteſies do a created Benefactor in ours? 'Tis an Obligation on every Man's Nature, to anſwer Bounty with Gratitude, and Goodneſs with Love. Hence you never knew any Man, nor can the Records of Eternity produce any Man or Devil, that ever hated any Perſon, or any thing as good in it ſelf: 'Tis a thing abſolutely repugnant to the Nature of any rational Creature. The Devils hate not God, becauſe he is good; but becauſe he is not ſo good to them as they would have him; becauſe he will not unlock their Chains, turn them into Liberty, and reſtore them to Happineſs, i. e. becauſe he will not deſert the Rights of abus'd Goodneſs. But how ſhould we ſend up Flames of Love to that God, ſince we are under his direct Beams, and enjoy ſuch plentiful Influences! If the Sun is comely in it ſelf, yet 'tis more amiable to us, by the Light we ſee, and the Warmth we feel.

* Matth. 22. 37.

1. The greatneſs of his Benefits have reaſon to affect us with a Love to him. The Impreſs he made upon our Souls, when he extracted us from the Darkneſs of Nothing: The Comelineſs he hath put upon us, by his own Breath: The Care he took of our Recovery, when we had loſt our ſelves: The Expence he was at, for our Regaining our defac'd Beauty: The Gift he made of his Son: The affectionate Calls we have heard to over-maſter our corrupt Appetites, move us to Repentance, and make us diſaffect our beloved Miſery: The loud Sound of his Word in our Ears, and the more inward Knockings of his Spirit in our Heart: The offering us the Gift of himſelf, and the everlaſting Happineſs he courts us to; beſides thoſe common Favours we enjoy in the World, which are all the Streams of his rich Bounty. The Voice of all is loud enough to ſollicite our Love, and the Merit of all ought to be ſtrong enough to engage our Love: There is none like the God of Jeſurun, who rides upon the Heaven in thy help, and in his Excellency on the Sky *.

* Deut. 33. 26.

2. The Unmeritedneſs of them doth inhance this. 'Tis but reaſon to love him, who hath loved us firſt *: Hath he placed his delight upon any, when they were nothing, and after they were ſinful; and ſhall he ſet his delight upon ſuch vile Perſons, and ſhall not we ſet our Love upon ſo excellent an Object as himſelf? How baſe are we, if his Goodneſs doth not conſtrain us to affect him, who hath been ſo free in his Favour to us, who have merited the quite contrary at his Hands? If his tender Mercies are over all his Works *, he ought for it to be eſteem'd by all his Works, that are capable of a rational Eſtimation.

* 1 Joh. 4. 19.

* Pſal. 145. 9.

3. Goodneſs in Creatures makes them eſtimable, much more ſhould the Goodneſs of God render him lovely to us. If we love a little ſpark of Goodneſs in this or that Creature, if a drop be ſo delicious to us, ſhall not the immenſe Sun of Goodneſs, the ever-flowing Fountain of all, be much more delightful? The Original Excellency always outſtrips what is deriv'd from it: If ſo mean and contracted an Object as a little Creature deſerves Eſtimation for a little Mite communicated to it, ſo great and extended a Goodneſs as is in the Creator, much more merits it at our hands: He is good after the infinite methods of a Deity; A weak reſemblance is lovely, much more amiable than muſt be the incomprehenſible Original of that Beauty. We love Creatures for what we think to be good in them, tho' it may be hurtful; And ſhall we not love God, who is a real and unblemiſht Goodneſs, and from whoſe Hand are pour'd out all thoſe Bleſſings that are convey'd to us by ſecond Cauſes. The Object that delights us, the Capacity we have to delight in it, are both from him; our love therefore to him ſhould tranſcend the Affection we bear to any Inſtruments he moves for our welfare. Among the Gods there is none like thee, O Lord, neither are there any Works like unto thy Works *. Among the pleaſanteſt Creatures, there is none like the Creator, nor any Goodneſs like unto his Goodneſs. Shall we love the Food that nouriſheth us, and the Medicine that cures us, and the Silver whereby we furniſh our ſelves with uſeful Commodities? Shall we love a Horſe or Dog, for the benefits we have by them? And ſhall not the Spring of all thoſe draw our Souls after it, and make us aſpire to the honour of loving and embracing him, who hath ſtor'd every Creature with that which may pleaſure us? But inſtead of endeavouring to parallel our Affection with his Kindneſs, we endeavour to make our Diſingenuity as extenſive and towring as his Divine Goodneſs.

* Pſal. 86. 1

4. This is the true end of the manifeſtation of his Goodneſs, that he might appear amiable, and have a Return of Affection. Did God diſplay his Goodneſs only to be thought of, or to be loved? 'Tis the want of ſuch a return, that he hath uſually aggravated from the Benefits he hath beſtow'd upon Men. Every thought of him ſhould be attended with a motion ſuitable to the Excellency of his Nature and Works. Can we think thoſe nobler Spirits the Angels look upon themſelves, or thoſe Frames of things in the Heavens and Earth, without ſtarting ſome practical Affection to him for them? Their knowledge of his Excellency and Works, cannot be a lazy Contemplation: 'Tis impoſſible their Wills and Affections ſhould be a thouſand Miles diſtant from their Underſtandings in their Operations. 'Tis not the leaſt part of his condeſcending Goodneſs, to court in ſuch Methods the Affections of us Worms, and manifeſt his deſire to be beloved by us. Let us give him then that Affection he deſerves, as well as demands, and which cannot be with-held from him without horrible Sacrilege. There is nothing worthy of Love beſides him; let no Fire be kindled in our Hearts, but what may aſcend directly to him.

7. The ſeventh Inſtruction is this, This renders God a fit Object of Truſt and Confidence. Since none is good but God, none can be a full and ſatisfactory Ground or Object of confidence but God: As all things derive their Beings, ſo they derive their helpfulneſs to us from God; they are not therefore the principal Objects of Truſt, but that Goodneſs alone that renders them fit Inſtruments of our ſupport: They can no more challenge from us a ſtable Confidence, than they can a ſupream Affection. 'Tis by this the Pſalmiſt allures Men to a truſt in him; * Taſte, and ſee how good the Lord is; What is the conſequence? Bleſſed is the Man that truſts in thee. The Voice of Divine Goodneſs ſounds nothing more intelligibly, and a taſte of it produceth nothing more effectually than this. As the Vials of his Juſtice are to make us fear him, ſo the Streams of his Goodneſs are to make us rely on him. As his Patience is deſign'd to broach our Repentance, ſo his Goodneſs is moſt proper to ſtrengthen our aſſurance in him: That Goodneſs which ſurmounted ſo many difficulties, and conquer'd ſo many motions that might be made againſt any repeated Exerciſe of it, after it had been abus'd by the firſt Rebellion of Man: That Goodneſs that after ſo much contempt of it, appear'd in ſuch a Majeſtick tenderneſs, and threw aſide thoſe Impediments which Men had caſt in the way of Divine Inclinations: This Goodneſs is the foundation of all reliance upon God. Who is better than God? And therefore, who more to be truſted than God? As his Power cannot act any thing weakly, ſo his Goodneſs cannot act any thing unbecomingly, and unworthy of his Infinite Majeſty. And here conſider,

* Pſal. 34. 8

1. Goodneſs is the firſt Motive of Truſt. Nothing but this could be the encouragement to Man, had he ſtood in a ſtate of Innocence, to preſent himſelf before God; the Majeſty of God would have conſtrain'd him to keep his due diſtance, but the Goodneſs of God could only hearten his Confidence; 'tis nothing elſe now, that can preſerve the ſame temper in us in our lapſed condition. To regard him only as the Judge of our Crimes, will drive us from him; but only the regard of him as the Donor of our Bleſſings, will allure us to him. The principal Foundation of Faith is not the Word of God, but God himſelf, and God as conſider'd in this Perfection. As the Goodneſs of God in his Invitations, and Providential Bleſſings, leads us to Repentance *; ſo by the ſame reaſon the Goodneſs of God by his Promiſes, leads us to Reliance. If God be not firſt believed to be Good, he would not be believed at all, in any thing that he ſpeaks or ſwears: If you were not ſatisfied in the Goodneſs of a Man, tho' he ſhould ſwear a thouſand times, you would value neither his Word nor Oath, as any ſecurity. Many times where we are certain of the goodneſs of a Man, we are willing to truſt him without his Promiſe. This Divine Perfection gives Credit to the Divine Promiſes; they of themſelves would not be a ſufficient ground of Truſt, without an apprehenſion of his Truth; nor would his Truth be very comfortable, without a belief of his good Will, whereby we are aſſur'd, that what he promiſes to give, he gives liberally, free, and without regret. The Truth of the Promiſer makes the Promiſe credible, but the Goodneſs of the Promiſer makes it chearfully relied on. In Pſal. 73. Aſaph's Penitential Pſalm for his diſtruſt of God, he begins the Firſt Verſe with an Aſſertion of this Attribute, v. 1. Truly God is good to Iſrael, and ends with this fruit of it, Verſe 28, I will put my Truſt in the Lord God. 'Tis a mighty ill Nature, that receives not with aſſurance the Dictates of Infinite Goodneſs, (that cannot deceive or fruſtrate the hopes we conceive of him) that is unconceivably more abundant in the breaſt and Inclinations of the Promiſer, than expreſſible in the words of his Promiſe: All true Faith works by Love †, and therefore neceſſarily includes a particular eying of this Excellency in the Divine Nature, which renders him amiable, and is the Motive and Encouragement of a love to him. His Power indeed is a foundation of Truſt, but his Goodneſs is the principal Motive of it. His Power without good Will would be dangerous, and could not allure Affection; and his good Will without Power would be uſeleſs; and tho' it might merit a love, yet could not create a Confidence; both in conjunction are ſtrong grounds of hope; eſpecially ſince his Goodneſs is of the ſame infinity with his Wiſdom and Power; and that he can be no more wanting in the effuſions of this upon them that ſeek him, than in his Wiſdom to contrive, or his Power to effect his Deſigns and Works.

* Rom. 2. 4.

† Gal. 5. 6.

2. This

2. This Goodneſs is more the foundation and motive of truſt under the Goſpel, than under the Law. They under the Law had more evidences of Divine Power, and their truſt ey'd that much; tho' there was an eminency of goodneſs in the frequent deliverances they had, yet the Power of God had a more glorious dreſs than his Goodneſs, becauſe of the extraordinary and miraculous ways whereby he brought thoſe deliverances about. Therefore in the Catalogue of Believers in Heb. 11. you ſhall find the Power of God to be the Center of their Reſt and Truſt; and their Faith was built upon the extraordinary Marks of Divine Power, which were frequently viſible to them. But under the Goſpel, goodneſs and love was intended by God to be the chief Object of truſt; ſuitable to the Excellency of that Diſpenſation, he would have an Exerciſe of more ingenuity in the Creatures: Therefore 'tis ſaid, Hoſ. 3. 5. a promiſe of Goſpel-times, They ſhall fear God and his Goodneſs in the latter days, when they ſhall return to ſeek the Lord, and David their King. 'Tis not ſaid, they ſhall fear God and his Power, but the Lord and his Goodneſs, or the Lord for his Goodneſs: Fear is often in the Old Teſtament taken for Faith, or Truſt. This Divine Goodneſs, the Object of Faith, is that Goodneſs diſcover'd in David their King, the Meſſiah, our Jeſus. God in this Diſpenſation recommends his Goodneſs and Love, and reveals it more clearly than other Attributes, that the Soul might have more prevailing and ſweeter Attractives to confide in him.

3. A confidence in him gives him the Glory of his Goodneſs. Moſt Nations that had nothing but the light of Nature, thought it a great part of the Honour that was due to God, to implore his Goodneſs, and caſt their Cares upon it. To do good, is the moſt honourable thing in the World, and to acknowledge a goodneſs in a way of confidence, is as high an honour as we can give to it, and a great part of gratitude for what it hath already expreſt: Therefore we find often, that an acknowledgment of one Benefit receiv'd was attended with a Truſt in him, for what they ſhould in the future need; * Thou haſt delivered my Soul from Death, wilt thou not deliver my Feet from falling? So 2 Cor. 1.10. And they who have been moſt eminent for their truſt in him, have had the greateſt Elogies and Commendations from him. As a diffidence doth diſparage this Perfection, thinking it meaner and ſhallower than it is, ſo Confidence highly honours it. We never pleaſe him more, than when we truſt in him, † The Lord takes pleaſure in them that fear him, in them that hope in his Mercy. He takes it for an Honour, to have this Attribute exalted by ſuch a Carriage of his Creature. He is no leſs offended, when we think his Heart ſtraitned, as if he were a Parcimonious God, than when we think his Arm ſhortned, as if he were an impotent and feeble God.

* Pſal. 56. 13.

† Pſal. 147. 11.

Let us therefore make this uſe of his Goodneſs, to hearten our Faith. When we are ſcar'd by the terrors of his Juſtice, when we are dazled by the arts of his Wiſdom, and confounded by the ſplendor of his Majeſty, we may take refuge in the Sanctuary of his Goodneſs; this will encourage us, as well as aſtoniſh us: Whereas the conſideration of his other Attributes would only amaze us, but can never refreſh us, but when they are conſider'd, marching under the Conduct and Banners of this. When all the other Perfections of the Divine Nature are lookt upon in conjunction with this Excellency, each of them ſend forth raviſhing and benign Influences upon the applying Creature. 'Tis more advantageous to depend upon Divine Bounty, than our own Cares; We may have better aſſurance upon this account in his Cares for us, than in ours for our ſelves. Our Goodneſs for our ſelves is Finite, and beſides, we are too ignorant: His Goodneſs is Infinite, and attended with an infinite Wiſdom; we have reaſon to diſtruſt our ſelves, not God. We have reaſon to be at reſt, under that kind influence we have ſo often experimented; He hath ſo much goodneſs, that he can have no deceit: His goodneſs in making the Promiſe, and his goodneſs in working the Heart to a reliance on it, are grounds of truſt in him: * Remember thy word to thy Servant, upon which thou haſt cauſed me to hope. If his Promiſe did not pleaſe him, why did he make it? If Reliance on the Promiſe doth not pleaſe him, why did his Goodneſs work it? It would be inconſiſtent with his Goodneſs, to mock his Creature, and it would be the higheſt Mockery to publiſh his Word, and create a temper in the Heart of his Supplicant, ſuited to his Promiſe, which he never intended to ſatisfie. He can as little wrong his Creature as wrong himſelf, and therefore can never diſappoint that Faith which in his own methods caſts its ſelf into the arms of his Kindneſs, and is his own Workmanſhip, and calls him Author. That Goodneſs that imparted it ſelf ſo freely in Creation, will not neglect thoſe nobler Creatures that put their truſt in him. This renders God a fit Object for Truſt and Confidence.

* Pſal. 119. 49.

8. The eighth Inſtruction; This renders God worthy to be obey'd and honour'd. There is an Excellency in God, to allure, as well as Sovereignty to enjoyn Obedience: The infinite Excellency of his Nature is ſo great, that if his Goodneſs had promiſed us nothing to encourage our Obedience, we ought to prefer him before our ſelves, devote our ſelves to ſerve him, and make his glory our greateſt content; but much more when he hath given ſuch admirable Expreſſions of his Liberality, and ſtor'd us with hopes of richer and fuller Streams of it. When David conſider'd the Abſolute Goodneſs of his Nature, and the Relative Goodneſs of his Benefits, he preſently expreſſeth an ardent deſire to be acquainted with the Divine Statutes, that he might make ingenuous returns in a dutiful obſervance; * Thou art good, and thou doſt good, teach me thy Statutes. As his Goodneſs is the Original, ſo the acknowledgment of it is the end of all, which cannot be without an obſervance of his Will. His Goodneſs requires of us an ingenuous, not a ſervile Obedience.

* Pſal. 119. 68.

And this is Eſtabliſht upon two Foundations.

1. Becauſe the Bounty of God hath laid upon us the ſtrongeſt Obligations. The ſtrength of an Obligation depends upon the greatneſs and numerouſneſs of the Benefits receiv'd. The more excellent the Favours are which are conferr'd upon any Perſon, the more right hath the Benefactor to claim an obſervance from the Perſon better'd by him. Much of the Rule and Empire which hath been in ſeveral Ages conferr'd by Communities upon Princes, hath had its firſt ſpring from a ſenſe of the advantages they have receiv'd by them, either in protecting them from their Enemies, or reſcuing them from an ignoble Captivity; in enlarging their Territories, or encreaſing their Wealth. Conqueſt hath been the Original of a conſtrain'd, but Beneficence always the Original of a voluntary and free Subjection *. Obedience to Parents is founded upon their right, becauſe they are inſtrumental in beſtowing upon us Being and Life; and becauſe this of Life is ſo great a benefit, the Law of Nature never diſſolves this Obligation of Obeying and Honouring Parents: 'Tis as long-liv'd as the Law of Nature, and hath an univerſal practice, by the ſtrength of that Law in all parts of the World: And thoſe rightful Chains are not unlockt, but by that which unties the knot between Soul and Body. Much more hath God a Right to be obey'd and reverenc'd, who is the principal Benefactor, and mov'd all thoſe ſecond Cauſes, to impart to us what conduc'd to our advantage. The juſt Authority of God over us, reſults from the ſuperlativeneſs of his Bleſſings he hath pour'd down upon us, which cannot be equal'd much leſs exceeded by any other. As therefore upon this account he hath a claim to our choiceſt Affections, ſo he hath alſo to our moſt exact Obedience; and neither one, nor other, can be denied him, without a ſordid and diſingenuous ingratitude. God therefore aggravates the Rebellion of the Jews, from the cares he had in the bringing them up †, and the miraculous deliverance from Egypt ‖, implying, that thoſe Benefits were ſtrong Obligations to an ingenuous obſervance of him.

† Iſa. 2. 2.

2. It is Eſtabliſht upon this, That God can enjoyn the obſervance of nothing but what is good. He may by the Right of his Sovereign Dominion, command that which is indifferent in its own Nature, as in poſitive Laws, The not eating the Fruit of the Tree of the knowledge of good and evil, which had not been evil in it ſelf, ſet aſide the Command of God to the contrary; and likewiſe in thoſe Ceremonial Laws he gave the Jews: But in regard of the tranſcendent Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs of his Nature, he will not, he cannot command any thing that is evil in it ſelf, or repugnant to the true intereſt of his Creature; And God never oblig'd the Creature to any thing, but what was ſo free from damaging it, that it highly conduced to its good and welfare, and therefore it is ſaid, * That his Commands are not grievous: Not grievous in their own Nature, nor grievous to one poſſeſt with a true Reaſon. The Command given to Adam in Paradiſe was not grievous in it ſelf, nor could he ever have thought it ſo, but upon a falſe ſuppoſition inſtill'd into him by the Tempter. There is a pleaſure reſults from the Law of God to a holy Rational Nature, a ſweetneſs taſted both by the Underſtanding and by the Will, for they both rejoice the Heart, and enlighten the Eyes of the Mind †. God being eſſentially Wiſdom and Goodneſs, cannot deviate from that Goodneſs in any Orders he gives the Creature; whatſoever he enacts, muſt be agreeable to that Rule, and therefore he can will nothing but what is good and excellent, and what is good for the Creature; for ſince he hath put originally into Man a Natural Inſtinct, to deſire that which is good, he would never enact any thing for the Creature's obſervance, that might controul that deſire imprinted by himſelf, but what might countenance that impreſſion of his own hand; for if God did otherwiſe, he would contradict his own Natural Law, and be a Deluder of his Creatures, if he impreſt upon them Deſires one way, and order'd Directions another. The truth is, all his Moral Precepts are comely in themſelves, and they receive not their goodneſs from God's poſitive Command, but that Command ſuppoſeth their Goodneſs: If every thing were good becauſe God loves it, or becauſe God wills it, i. e. That God's loving it, or willing it, made that good which was not good before, then as Camero well argues ſomewhere, God's Goodneſs would depend upon his loving himſelf; He was good becauſe he loved himſelf, and was not good till he loved himſelf; whereas indeed God's loving himſelf doth not make him good, but ſuppoſeth him good: He was good in the order of Nature before he loved himſelf, and his being good was the ground of his loving himſelf, becauſe, as was ſaid before, if there were any thing better than God, God would love that: For it is inconſiſtent with the Nature of God and Infinite Goodneſs, not to love that which is good, and not to love that ſupreamly, which is the Supream Good. Further to underſtand it, you may conſider, if the Queſtion be askt, Why God loves himſelf? You would think it a reaſonable Anſwer to ſay, Becauſe he is good. But if the Queſtion be askt, Why God is good? You would think that Anſwer, becauſe he loves himſelf, would be deſtitute of Reaſon; but the true Anſwer would be, Becauſe his Nature is ſo, and he could not be God, if he were not good: Therefore God's goodneſs is in order of our conception before his ſelf-love, and not his ſelf-love before his goodneſs: So the moral things God commands are good in themſelves, before God commands them; and ſuch, that if God ſhould command the contrary, it would openly ſpeak him evil and unrighteous. Abſtract from Scripture, and weigh things in your own Reaſon; Could you conceive God good, if he ſhould command a Creature not to love him? Could you preſerve the notion of a good Nature in him, if he did command Murder, Adultery, Tyranny, and cutting of Throats? You would wonder, to what purpoſe he made the World, and fram'd it for Society, if ſuch things were order'd, that ſhould deface all Comelineſs of Society: The Moral Commands given in the Word, appear'd of themſelves very beautiful to meer Reaſon, that had no knowledge of the written Law; they are good, and becauſe they are ſo, his Goodneſs had moved his Sovereign Authority ſtrictly to enjoyn them. Now this Goodneſs, whereby he cannot oblige a Creature to any thing that is evil, ſpeaks him highly worthy of our Obſervance, and our Diſobedience to his Law, to be full of unconceivable Malignity: That is the laſt thing.

2. Uſe is a Uſe of Comfort. He is a Good without mixture, Good without wearineſs, none good but God, none good purely, none good inexhauſtibly but God; becauſe he is good, we may upon our ſpeaking expect his inſtruction; * Good is the Lord, therefore will he teach Sinners in his way. His Goodneſs makes him ſtoop to be the Tutor to thoſe Worms that lie proſtrate before him; and tho' they are Sinners full of filth, he drives them not from his School, nor denies them his Medicines, if they apply themſelves to him as a Phyſician. He is good in removing the Puniſhment due to our Crimes, and good in beſtowing Benefits not due to our Merits; becauſe he is good, Penitent Believers may expect forgiveneſs, † Thou Lord art good, and ready to forgive. He acts not according to the rigor of the Law, but willingly grants his Pardon to thoſe that fly into the Arms of the Mediator: His Goodneſs makes him more ready to forgive, than our neceſſities make us deſirous to enjoy: He charged not upon Job his impatient Expreſſions in curſing the day of his Birth, his Goodneſs paſſed that over in ſilence, and extols him for ſpeaking the thing that is right, right in the main, (‖ when he charges his Friends, for not ſpeaking of him the thing that is right, as his Servant Job had done.) He is ſo good, that if we offer the leaſt thing ſincerely, he will graciouſly receive it; If we have not a Lamb to offer, a Pigeon or Turtle ſhall be accepted upon his Altar: He ſtands not upon coſtly Preſents, but ſincerely tender'd Services. All Conditions are ſweeten'd by it; whatſoever any in the World enjoy, is from a redundancy of this goodneſs; but whatſoever a good Man enjoys, is from a propriety in this Goodneſs.

‖ Job 42. 7.

1. Here is Comfort in our Addreſſes to him. If he be a Fountain and Sea of Goodneſs, he cannot be weary of doing good, no more than a Fountain or Sea are of flowing. All Goodneſs delights to communicate it ſelf: Infinite goodneſs hath then an infinite delight, in expreſſing it ſelf; 'tis a part of his goodneſs not to be weary of ſhewing it; He can never then

then be weary of being ſollicited, for the effuſions of it; If he rejoyces over his People to do them good, he will rejoyce in any opportunities offer'd to him to honour his Goodneſs, and gladly meet with a fit Object for it: He therefore delights in Prayer; Never can we ſo delight in addreſſing, as he doth in imparting: He delights more in our Prayers than we can our ſelves: Goodneſs is not pleaſed with ſhyneſs. To what purpoſe did his immenſe Bounty beſtow his Son upon us, but that we ſhould be accepted both in our Perſons and Petitions? * His Eyes are upon the Righteous, and his Ears are open to their Cry; He fixes the Eye of his Goodneſs upon them, and opens the Ears of his Goodneſs for them; He is pleaſed to behold them, and pleaſed to liſten to them, as if he had no pleaſure in any thing elſe: He loves to be ſought to, to give a vent to his Bounty; † Acquaint thy ſelf with God, and thereby good ſhall come unto thee. The word ſignifies to accuſtom our ſelves to God; The more we accuſtom our ſelves in ſpeaking, the more he will accuſtom himſelf in giving: He loves not to keep his Goodneſs cloſe under Lock and Key, as Men do their Treaſures. If we knock, he opens his Exchequer; His Goodneſs is as flexible to our importunities, as his Power is invincible by the Arm of a ſilly Worm: He thinks his Liberality honour'd, by being apply'd to, and your Addreſs to be a Recompence for his Expence. There is no reaſon to fear, ſince he hath ſo kindly invited us, but he will as heartily welcome us: The Nature of Goodneſs is to compaſſionate, and communicate, to pity and relieve, and that with a heartineſs and chearfulneſs: Man is weary of being often ſollicited, becauſe he hath a finite, not a bottomleſs Goodneſs: He gives ſometimes to be rid of his Suppliant, not to encourage him to a ſecond approach. But every Experience God gives us of his Bounty, is a Motive to ſollicit him afreſh, and a kind of Obligation he hath laid upon himſelf, to renew it ‖: 'Tis one part of his Goodneſs, that it is boundleſs and bottomleſs; we need not fear the waſting of it, nor any wearineſs in him to beſtow it. The Stock cannot be ſpent, and infinite Kindneſs can never become niggardly; When we have enjoy'd it, there is ſtill an infinite Ocean in him to refreſh us, and as full Streams as ever to ſupply us. What an encouragement have we to draw near to God? We run in our ſtraights, to thoſe that we think have moſt good Will, as well as Power to relieve and protect us. The oftner we come to him, and the nearer we approach to him, the more of his influences we ſhall feel: As the nearer the Sun, the more of its heat inſinuates it ſelf into us. The Greatneſs of God joyned with his Goodneſs, hath more reaſon to encourage our approach to him, than our flight from him, becauſe his Greatneſs never goes unattended with his Goodneſs; and if he were not ſo good, he would not be ſo great in the apprehenſions of any Creature. How may his Goodneſs in the great Gift of his Son encourage us to apply to him, ſince he hath ſet him as a Days-man between himſelf and us, and appointed him an Advocate, to preſent our Requeſts for us, and ſpeed them at the Throne of Grace, and he never leaves, till Divine Goodneſs ſubſcribes a Fiat to our believing and juſt Petitions?

* Eph. 1. 6. Pſ. 34. 15. † Job 22. 21. Mat. 7. 7. ‖ 1 Sam. 17. 37.

2. Here is Comfort in Afflictions. What can we fear from the conduct of Infinite Goodneſs? Can his Hand be heavy upon thoſe that are humble before him? They are the hands of infinite Power indeed, but there is not any motion of it upon his People, but is order'd by a Goodneſs as infinite as his Power; which will not ſuffer any Affliction to be too ſharp, or too long. By what ways ſoever he conveys Grace to us here, and prepares us for Glory hereafter, they are good, and thoſe are the good things he hath chiefly oblig'd himſelf to give: * Grace and Glory will he give, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. This David comforted himſelf with, in that which his devout Soul accounted the greateſt Calamity, his abſence from the Courts and Houſe of God. Not an ill Will, but a good Will directs his Scourges; He is not an idle Spectator of our Combats; His Thoughts are fuller of Kindneſs, than ours in any caſe can be of Trouble: And becauſe he is Good, he Wills the beſt Good in every thing he acts; in exerciſing Vertue, or correcting Vice: There is no Affliction without ſome apparent mixtures of Goodneſs; when he ſpeaks, how he had ſmitten Iſrael †, he preſently adds, ‖ Have I been a Wilderneſs to Iſrael, a land of darkneſs? Tho' he led them through a Deſart, yet he was not a Deſart to them; He was no Land of darkneſs to them; while they march'd thro' a Land of barrenneſs, he was a Caterer to provide them Manna, and a place of broad Rivers and Streams. How often hath Divine Goodneſs made our Afflictions our Conſolations; Our Diſeaſes our Medicines, and his gentle Strokes reviving Cordials? How doth he provide for us above our deſerts, even while he doth puniſh us beneath our Merits? Divine Goodneſs can no more mean ill, than Divine Wiſdom can be miſtaken in its End, or Divine Power over-rul'd in its Actions. Charity thinks no evil *, Charity in the Stream doth not, much leſs doth Charity in the Fountain. To be afflicted by a Hand of Goodneſs, hath ſomething comfortable in it, when to be afflicted by an Evil Hand is very odious. Elijah, who was loth to dye by the hand of a Whoriſh, Idolatrous Jezabel, was very deſirous to die by the hand of God †. He accounted it a miſery to have died by her hand, who hated him, and had nothing but Cruelty; and therefore fled from her, when he wiſh'd for death, as a deſirable thing, by the hand of that God who had been good to him, and could not but be good in whatſoever he acted.

3. The third Comfort flowing from this Doctrin of the Goodneſs of God, is, 'Tis a ground of aſſurance of Happineſs. If God be ſo good, that nothing is better, and loves himſelf, as he is good, he cannot be wanting in love to thoſe that reſemble his Nature, and imitate his Goodneſs: He cannot but love his own Image of Goodneſs; where-ever he finds it, he cannot but be bountiful to it; for it is impoſſible there can be any love to any Object, without wiſhing well to it, and doing well for it. If the Soul loves God as its chiefeſt Good, God will love the Soul as his pious Servant: As he hath offer'd to them the higheſt Allurements, ſo he will not with-hold the choiceſt Communications. Goodneſs cannot be a deluding thing; It cannot conſiſt with the nobleneſs and largeneſs of this Perfection, to invite the Creature to him, and leave the Creature empty of him when it comes. 'Tis inconſiſtent with this Perfection, to give the Creature a knowledge of himſelf, and a deſire of enjoyment larger than that knowledge, a deſire to know and enjoy him perpetually, yet never intend to beſtow an Eternal Communication of himſelf upon it. The nature of Man was erected by the goodneſs of God, but with an enlarg'd deſire for the higheſt Good, and a Capacity of enjoying it. Can Goodneſs be thought to be deceitful, to fruſtrate its own Work, be tir'd with its own Effuſions, to let a gracious Soul groan under its burthen, and never reſolve to eaſe him of it? To ſee delightfully the aſpirings of the Creature to another ſtate, and reſolve never to admit him to a happy iſſue of thoſe deſires? 'Tis not agreeable to this unconceivable Perfection, to be unconcern'd in the longings of his Creature, ſince their firſt longings were were placed in them, by that Goodneſs which is ſo free from mocking the Creature, or falling ſhort of its well-grounded Expectations or Deſires, that it infinitely exceeds them. If Man had continued in Innocence, the Goodneſs of God without queſtion would have continued him in Happineſs: And ſince he hath had ſo much goodneſs to reſtore Man, would it not be diſhonourable to that goodneſs to break his own Conditions, and defeat the believing Creature of Happineſs, after it hath comply'd with his terms? He is a Believer's God in Covenant, and is a God in the utmoſt extent of this Attribute, as well as of any other; and therefore will not communicate mean and ſhallow Benefits, but according to the grandeur of it, Soveraign and Divine, ſuch as the gift of a happy Immortality. Since he had no Obligation upon him to make any Promiſe, but the ſweetneſs of his own Nature, the ſame is as ſtrong upon him to make all the Words of his Grace good; They cannot be invalid in any one tittle of them, as long as his Nature remains the ſame; And his Goodneſs cannot be diminiſh'd without the impairing of his Godhead, ſince it is inſeparable from it. Divine Goodneſs will not let any Man ſerve God for nought: He hath promiſed our weak Obedience, more than any Man in his right Wits can ſay it merits: * A cup of cold water ſhall not loſe its reward. He will manifeſt our good Actions, as he gave ſo high a Teſtimony to Job in the Face of the Devil his Accuſer: It will not only be the Happineſs of the Soul but of the Body, the whole Man, ſince Soul and Body were in Conjunction in the Acts of Righteouſneſs; it conſiſts not with the Goodneſs of God to reward the one, and to let the other lie in the Ruines of its firſt Nothing: To beſtow Joy upon the one for its being Ptincipal, and leave the other without any Sentiments of Joy, that was inſtrumental in thoſe good Works both commanded and approv'd by God: He that had the Goodneſs to pity our Original Duſt, will not want a Goodneſs to advance it: And if we put off our Bodies, 'tis but afterwards to put them on repair'd and freſher. From this Goodneſs, the Upright may expect all the Happineſs their Nature is capable of.

* Matth. 10. 42.

4. It is a ground of Comfort in the midſt of Publick Dangers. This hath more Sweetneſs in it to ſupport us, than the Malice of Enemies hath to deject us; becauſe he is good, he is a Strong-hold in the Day of Trouble *. If his Goodneſs extends to all his Creatures, it will much more extend to thoſe that honour him: If the Earth be full of his Goodneſs, that part of Heaven which he hath upon Earth ſhall not be empty of it. He hath a Goodneſs often to deliver the Righteous, and a Juſtice to put the Wicked in his ſtead *. When his People have been under the Power of their Enemies, he hath chang'd the Scene, and put the Enemies under the Power of his People: He hath clapt upon them the ſame Bolts which they did upon his Servants. How comfortable is this Goodneſs, that hath yet maintain'd us in the midſt of Dangers, preſerved us in the Mouth of Lyons, quench'd kindled Fire; hitherto reſcued us from deſign'd Ruine ſubtilly hatch'd, and ſupported us in the midſt of Men, very paſſionate for our deſtruction? How hath this watchful Goodneſs been a Sanctuary to us in the midſt of an upper Hell?

* Nah. 1. 7.

* Prov. 11. 8.

3. The third Uſe is of Exhortation.

1. How ſhould we endeavour after the Enjoyment of God as good? How earneſtly ſhould we deſire him? As there is no other Goodneſs worthy of our Supream Love, ſo there is no other Goodneſs worthy our moſt Ardent Thirſt. Nothing deſerves the Name of a deſirable Good, but as it tends to the attainment of this: Here we muſt pitch our Deſires, which otherwiſe will terminate in Nullities, or unconceivable Diſturbances.

1. Conſider, nothing but Good can be the Object of a rational Appetite. The Will cannot direct its Motion to any thing under the Notion of Evil, evil in it ſelf, or evil to it; whatſoever courts it, muſt preſent it ſelf in the Quality of a Good in its own Nature, or in its preſent Circumſtances to the preſent State and Condition of the Deſire, it will not elſe touch or affect the Will. This is the Language of that Faculty, Who will ſhew me any good *? And Good is as inſeparably the Object of the Will's Motion, as Truth is of the Underſtanding's Enquiry. Whatſoever a Man would allure another to comply with, he muſt propoſe to the Perſon under the Notion of ſome Beneficialneſs to him, in point of Honour, Profit or Pleaſure; to act after this manner, is the proper Character of a rational Creature. And tho' that which is evil is often embrac'd, inſtead of that which is good; and what we entertain as conducing to our Felicity, proves our Misfortune; yet that is from our Ignorance and not from a formal Choice of it as Evil, for what Evil ss choſen, it is not poſſible to chooſe under the conception of Evil, but under the appearance of Good, tho' it be not ſo in reality. 'Tis inſeparable from the Wills of all Men, to propoſe to themſelves that, which in the Opinion and Judgment of their Underſtandings, or Imagination, is good, though they often miſtake and cheat themſelves.

* Pſal. 4. 6.

2. Since that Good is the Object of a rational Appetite, the pureſt, beſt, and moſt univerſal Good, ſuch as God is, ought to be moſt ſought after. Since Good only is the Object of a rational Appetite, all the Motions of our Souls ſhould be carried to the firſt and beſt Good: A real Good is moſt deſirable; the greateſt Excellency of the Creatures cannot ſpeak them ſo, ſince by the Corruption of Man they are ſubjected to Vanity *. God is the moſt excellent Good, without any Shadow: A real ſomething, without that Nothing which every Creature hath in its Nature *. A perfect Good can only give us Content; the beſt Goodneſs in the Creature, is but ſlender and imperfect, had not the Venom of Corruption infus'd a Vanity into it; the Make of it ſpeaks it finite, and the beſt Qualities in it are bounded, and cannot give Satisfaction to a rational Appetite, which bears in its Nature an Imitation of Divine Infiniteneſs, and therefore can never find an Eternal Reſt in mean Trifles. God is above the Imperfection of all Creatures; Creatnres are but Drops of Goodneſs, at beſt but ſhallow Streams; God is like a teeming Ocean, that can fill the largeſt, as well as the narroweſt Creek. He hath an accumulative Goodneſs; ſeveral Creatures anſwer ſeveral Neceſſities, but one God can anſwer all our Wants: He hath an univerſal Fulneſs, to overtop our univerſal Emptineſs: He contains in himſelf the Sweetneſs of all other Goods, and holds in his Boſom plentifully, what Creatures have in their Natures ſparingly. Creatures are uncertain Goods; as they begin to exiſt, ſo they may ceaſe to be; they may be gone with a Breath, they will certainly languiſh, if God blows upon them: * The ſame Breath that rais'd them, can blaſt them; But who can rifle God of the leaſt part of his Excellency? Mutability is inherent in the Nature of every Creature, as a Creature. All ſublunary Things are as Gourds, that refreſh us one moment with their preſence, and the next fret us with their abſence; like fading Flowers ſtrutting to Day, and drooping to Morrow *; while we poſſeſs them, we cannot clip their Wings, that may carry

carry them away from us, and may make us vainly ſeek, what we thought we firmly held. But God is as permanent a Good, as he is a real one: He hath Wings to fly to them that ſeek him, but no Wings to fly from them for ever, and leave them. God is an univerſal Good; that which is good to one, may be evil to another; what is deſirable by one, may be refus'd as inconvenient for another: But God being an univerſal, unſtain'd Good, is uſeful for all, convenient to the Natures of all, but ſuch as will continue in Enmity againſt him: There is nothing in God can diſpleaſe a Soul that deſires to pleaſe him; when we are Darkneſs, he is a Light to ſcatter it; when we are in Want, he hath Riches to relieve us; when we are in a Spiritual Death, he is a Prince of Life to deliver us; when we are defil'd, he is Holineſs to purifie us: 'Tis in vain to fix our Hearts any where but on him, in the Deſire of whom there is a Delight, and in the Enjoyment of whom there is an unconceivable Pleaſure.

3. He is to be moſt ſought after, ſince all things elſe that are deſirable, had their Goodneſs from him. If any thing be deſirable becauſe of its Goodneſs, God is much more deſirable becauſe of his, ſince all things are good by a participation, and nothing good but by his print upon it: As what Being Creatures have, was deriv'd to them by God; ſo what Goodneſs they are poſſeſſed with, they were furniſh'd with it by God: All Goodneſs flow'd from him, and all created Goodneſs is ſum'd up in him. The Streams ſhould not terminate our Appetite, without aſpiring to the Fountain. If the Waters in the Channel, which receive mixture, communicate a pleaſure, the taſte of the Fountain muſt be much more delicious: That Original Perfection of all things, hath an unconceivable Beauty above thoſe things it hath fram'd. Since thoſe things live not by their own Strength, nor nouriſh us by their own Liberality, but by the Word of God *, that God that ſpeaks them into Life, and ſpeaks them into Uſefulneſs, ſhould be moſt ardently deſir'd as the beſt. If the ſparkling Glory of the viſible Heavens delight us, and the Beauty and Bounty of the Earth pleaſe and refreſh us, what ſhould be the Language of our Souls upon thoſe Views and Taſtes, but that of the Pſalmiſt? Whom have I in Heaven but thee, and there is none upon Earth, that I can deſire beſide thee *? No greater Good can poſſibly be deſir'd, and no leſs Good ſhould be ardently deſir'd: As he is the Supream Good, ſo we ſhould bear that regard to him as Supreamly, and above all to thirſt for him: As he is good, he is the Object of Deſire; as the choiceſt and firſt Goodneſs, he is deſirable with the greateſt vehemency. Give me Children, or elſe I die, was an uncomely Speech; * the one was granted, and the other inflicted; ſhe had Children, but the laſt coſt her her Life: But give me God, or I will not be content, is a gracious Speech, wherein we cannot miſcarry: All that God demands of us, is, That we ſhould long for him, and look for our Happineſs only in him. That is the firſt thing, endeavour after the Enjoyment of God as good.

* Matth. 4. 4.

* Pſal. 73. 25.

* Gen. 30. 1.

2. Often meditate on the Goodneſs of God. What was Man produc'd for, but to ſettle his Thoughts upon this? What ſhould have been Adam's Employment in Innocence, but to read over all the Lines of Nature, and fix his Contemplations on that good Hand that drew them? What is Man endued with Reaſon for, above all other Animals, but to take Notice of this Goodneſs, ſpread over all the Creatures, which they themſelves, tho' they felt it, could not have ſuch a ſenſe of, as to make anſwerable Returns to their Benefactor? Can we ſatisfie our ſelves in being Spectators of it, and Enjoyers of it, only in ſuch a manner as the Brutes are? The Beaſts behold things, as well as we; they feel the warm Beams of this Goodneſs as well as we, but without any Reflection upon the Author of them. Shall Divine Bleſſings meet with no more from us, but a brutiſh view, and beholding of them? What is more juſt, than to ſpend a thought upon him, who hath inlarg'd his Hand in ſo many Benefits to us? Are we indebted to any, more than we are to him? Why ſhould we ſend our Souls to viſit any thing more than him in his Works? That we are able to meditate on him, is a part of his Goodneſs to us, who hath beſtowed that Capacity upon us; and if we will not, 'tis a great part of our Ingratitude. Can any thing more delightful enter into us, than that of the kind and gracious Diſpoſition of that God, who firſt brought us out of the Abyſs of an unhappy Nothing, and hath hitherto ſpread his Wings over us? Where can we meet with a Nobler Object than Divine Goodneſs? And what nobler Work can be practiſed by us, than to conſider it? What is more ſenſible in all the Operations of his Hands, than his Skill, as they are conſider'd in themſelves, and his Goodneſs, as they are conſider'd in relation to us? 'Tis ſtrange that we ſhould miſs the Thoughts of it; that we ſhould look upon this Earth, and every thing in it, and yet overlook that which it is moſt full of, viz. Divine Goodneſs; * it runs thro' the whole Web of the World, all is fram'd and diverſified by Goodneſs: 'Tis one entire ſingle Goodneſs, which appears in various Garbs and Dreſſes, in every part of the Creation. Can we turn our Eyes inward, and ſend our Eyes outward, and ſee nothing of a Divinity in both, worthy of our deepeſt and ſerioſeſt Thoughts? Is there any thing in the World we can behold, but we ſee his Bounty, ſince nothing was made, but is one way or other beneficial to us? Can we think of our daily Food, but we muſt have ſome reflecting Thoughts on our great Caterer? Can the Sweetneſs of the Creature to our Palate, obſcure the Sweetneſs of the Provider to our Minds? 'Tis ſtrange that we ſhould be regardleſs of that, wherein every Creature without us, and every Senſe within us, and about us, is a Tutor to inſtruct us! Is it not reaſon we ſhould think of the times wherein we were nothing, and from thence run back to a never-begun Eternity, and view our ſelves in the Thoughts of that Goodneſs, to be in time brought forth upon this Stage, as we are at preſent? Can we conſider but one Act of our Underſtandings, but one Thought, one Bloſſom, one Spark of our Souls mounting upwards, and not reflect upon the Goodneſs of God to us, who in that Faculty that ſparkles out rational Thoughts, has advanced us to a nobler State, and endued us with a nobler Principle, than all the Creatures we ſee on Earth, except thoſe of our own Rank and Kind? Can we conſider but one fooliſh Thought, one ſinful Act, and reflect upon the Guilt and Filth of it, and not behold Goodneſs in ſparing us, and Miracles of Goodneſs in ſending his Son to die for us, for the Expiation of it? This Perfection cannot well be out of our Thoughts, or at leaſt it is horrible it ſhould, when it is writ in every Line of the Creation, and in a legible Rubrick in bloody Letters, in the Croſs of his Son. Let us think with our ſelves, how often he hath multiplied his Bleſſings, when we did deſerve his Wrath; how he hath ſent one unexpected Benefit upon the heel of another, to bring us with a ſwift pace the Tidings of Good Will to us? How often hath he deliver'd us from a Diſeaſe, that had the Arrows of Death in its hand, ready to pierce us? How often hath he

turn'd

turn'd our Fears into Joys, and our Diſtempers into Promoters of our Felicity? How often hath he mated a Temptation, ſent ſeaſonable Supplies in the midſt of a ſore Diſtreſs, and prevented many Dangers which we could not be ſo ſenſible of, becauſe we were in a great meaſure ignorant of them? How ſhould we meditate upon his Goodneſs to our Souls, in preventing ſome Sins, in pardoning others, in darting upon us the Knowledge of his Goſpel, and of himſelf in the Face of his Son Chriſt? This ſeems to ſtick much upon the Spirit of Paul, ſince he doth ſo often ſprinkle his Epiſtles with the Titles of the Grace of God, Riches of Grace, Unſearchable Riches of God, Riches of Glory, and cannot ſatisfie himſelf with the extolling of it. Certainly we ſhould bear upon our Heart, a deep and quick ſenſe of this Perfection; as it was the deſign of God to manifeſt it, ſo it would be acceptable to God for us to have a ſenſe of it: A dull Receiver of his Bleſſings is no leſs nauſeous to him, than a dull Diſpenſer of his Alms: He loves a chearful Giver *: He doth himſelf what he loves in others; is chearful in giving, and he loves we ſhould be ſerious in thinking of him, and have a right apprehenſion and ſenſe of his Goodneſs.

* 2 Cor. 9. 7.

1. A right ſenſe of his Goodneſs would diſpoſe us to an ingenuous Worſhip of God. It would damp our Averſeneſs to any Act of Religion: What made David ſo reſolute, and ready to Worſhip towards his holy Temple, but the ſenſe of his loving kindneſs *? This would render him always in our Mind, a worthy Object of our Devotion, a ſtable Prop of our Confidence. We ſhould then adore him, when we conſider him as our God, and our ſelves as the People of his Paſture, and the Sheep of his Hand *: We ſhould ſend up Prayers with ſtrong Faith and Feeling, and Praiſes with great Joy and Pleaſure. The ſenſe of his Goodneſs would make us love him, and our Love to him would quicken our Adoration of him; but if we regard not this, we ſhall have no Mind to think of him, no Mind to act any thing towards him: We may tremble at his Preſence, but not heartily worſhip him; we ſhall rather look upon him as a Tyrant, and think no other Affection due to him, than what we reſerve for an Oppreſſor, viz. Hatred, and Ill-will.

* Pſal. 138. 2.

* Pſal. 95. 7.

2. A ſenſe of it will keep us humble. A ſenſe of it would effect that for which it ſelf was intended, viz. bring us to a Repentance for our Crimes, and not ſuffer us to harden our ſelves againſt him. When we ſhould deeply conſider, how he hath made the Sun to ſhine upon us, and his Rain to fall upon the Earth for our ſupport; the one to ſupple the Earth, and the other to aſſiſt the Juice of it to bring forth Fruits: How would it reflect upon us our ill Requitals, and make us hang down our Heads before him in a low poſture, pleaſing to him, and advantageous to our ſelves? What would the firſt Charge be upon our ſelves, but what Moſes brings in his Expoſtulation againſt the Iſraelites; * Do I thus requite the Lord? What is this Goodneſs for me, who am ſo much below him? For me, who have ſo much incenſed him? For me, who have ſo much abus'd what he hath allow'd? It would bring to remembrance the horror of our Crimes, and ſet us a Bluſhing before him, when we ſhould conſider the multitude of his Benefits, and our unworthy Behaviour, that hath not conſtrain'd him, even againſt the inclination of his Goodneſs to puniſh us. How little ſhould we plead for a further liberty in Sin, or palliate our former Faults? When we ſet Divine Goodneſs in one Column, and our Tranſgreſſions in another, and compare together their ſeveral Items, it would fill us with a deep Conſciouſneſs of our own Guilt, and deveſt us of any worth of our own in our approaches to him: It would humble us, that we cannot love ſo obliging a God, as much as he deſerves to be loved by us: It would make us humble before Men. Who would be proud of a meer Gift, which he knows he hath not merited? How ridiculous would that Servant be, that ſhould be proud of a rich Livery, which is a Badge of his Service, not a Token of his Merit, but of his Maſter's Magnificence and Bounty; which though he wear this Day, he may be ſtripp'd of to morrow, and be turn'd out of his Maſter's Family?

* Deut. 32. 6.

3. A ſenſe of the Divine Goodneſs would make us faithful to him. The Goodneſs of God obligeth us to ſerve him, not to offend him: The freeneſs of his Goodneſs ſhould make us more ready to contribute to the advancement of his Glory. When we conſider the Benefits of a Friend proceed out of Kindneſs to us, and not out of Self-ends, and vain Applauſe, it works more upon us, and makes us more careful of the Honour of ſuch a Perſon. 'Tis a pure Bounty God hath manifeſted in Creation and Providence, which could not be for himſelf, who being bleſſed for ever, wanted nothing from us: It was not to draw a Profit from us, but to impart an Advantage to us, Our Goodneſs extends not to him *. The Service of the Benefactor is but a rational Return for Benefits; whence Nehemiah aggravates the Sins of the Jews, † They have not ſerved thee in thy great Goodneſs, that thou gaveſt them, i.e. which thou didſt freely beſtow upon them. How ſhould we dare to ſpend upon our Luſts that which we poſſeſs, if we conſider'd by whoſe Liberality we came by it? How ſhould we dare to be unfaithful in the Goods he hath made us Truſtees of? A deep ſenſe of Divine Goodneſs will ennoble the Creature, and make it act for the moſt Glorious and Noble End: It would ſtrike Satan's Temptation dead at a Blow: It would pull off the falſe Mask and Vizor from what he preſents to us, to draw us from the Service of our Benefactor. We could not with a ſenſe of this, think him kinder to us than God hath and will be, which is the great motive of Men, to joyn hands with him and turn their backs upon God.

* Pſal. 16. 2.

† Neh. 9. 35.

4. A ſenſe of the Divine Goodneſs would make us patient under our Miſeries. A deep ſenſe of this, would make us give God the Honour of his Goodneſs in whatſoever he doth, though the Reaſon of his Actions be not apparent to us, nor the Event and Iſſue of his Proceedings foreſeen by us. 'Tis a ſtated Caſe, that Goodneſs can never intend Ill, but deſigns Good in all its Acts, to them that love God *; Nay, he always deſigns the beſt; when he beſtows any thing upon his People, he ſees it beſt they ſhould have it; and when he removes any thing from them, he ſees it beſt they ſhould loſe it. When we have loſt a thing we loved, and refuſe to be comforted, a ſenſe of this Perfection, which acts God in all, would keep us from misjudging our Sufferings, and meaſuring the Intention of the Hand that ſent them, by the Sharpneſs of what we feel. What Patient fully perſwaded of the Affection of the Phyſician, would not value him, though that which is given to purge out the Humours, racks his Bowels? When we loſe what we love, perhaps it was ſome outward Luſtre tickled our Apprehenſions, and we did not ſee the Viper we would have harm'd our ſelves by; but God ſeeing it, ſnatch'd it from us, and we mutter as if he had been cruel, and depriv'd us of the Good we imagin'd, when he was kind to us, and freed us from the Hurt we ſhould certainly have felt. We ſhould regard that, which in Goodneſs he takes from us, at no other rate than ſome gilded Poyſon and lurking Venom;

* Rom. 8. 28.

The

The Sufferings of Men, though upon high Provocation, are often followed with rich Mercies, and many times are intended as Preparations for greater Goodneſs. When God utters that Rhetorick of his Bowels, * How ſhall I give thee up, Oh Ephraim, I will not execute the fierceneſs of my anger! He intended them Mercy in their Captivity, and would prepare them by it, to walk after the Lord. And it is likely the Poſterity of thoſe Ten Tribes were the firſt that ran to God, upon the publiſhing the Goſpel in the Places where they lived: He doth not take away himſelf when he takes away outward Comforts: While he ſnatcheth away the Rattles we play with, he hath a Breaſt in himſelf for us to ſuck, The Conſideration of his Goodneſs, would diſpoſe us to a compos'd frame of Spirit. If we are ſick, 'tis Goodneſs it is a Diſeaſe, and not a Hell. 'Tis Goodneſs that it is a Cloud, and not a total Darkneſs. What if he transfers from us what we have? He takes no more than what his Goodneſs firſt imparted to us; And never takes ſo much from his People, as his Goodneſs leaves them: If he ſtrips them of their Lives, he leaves them their Souls, with thoſe Faculties he furniſhed them with at firſt, and removes them from thoſe Houſes of Clay, to a richer Manſion. The time of our Sufferings here, were it the whole courſe of our Life, bears not the Proportion of a Moment, to that endleſs Eternity wherein he hath deſign'd to manifeſt his Goodneſs to us. The Conſideration of Divine Goodneſs would teach us to draw a Calm, even from Storms, and diſtil Balſom from Rods. If the Reproofs of the Righteous be an excellent Oyl, * we ſhould not think the Corrections of a good God to have a leſs Vertue.

*Hoſ. 11. 8.

*Pſal. 145. 5.

5. A ſenſe of the Divine Goodneſs, would mount us above the World. It would damp our Appetites after meaner things; we ſhould look upon the World not as a God, but a Gift from God, and never think the Preſent better than the Donor. We ſhould never lie ſoaking in muddy Puddles, were we always fill'd with a ſenſe of the Richneſs and Clearneſs of this Fountain wherein we might bath our ſelves: Little petty Particles of Good will give us no Content, when we were ſenſible of ſuch an unbounded Ocean. Infinite Goodneſs rightly apprehended, would dull our Deſires after other things, and ſharpen them with a keener Edge after that which is beſt of all. How earneſtly do we long for the Preſence of a Friend, of whoſe good will towards us we have full experience?

6. It would check any Motions of Envy. It would make us joy in the Proſperity of good Men, and hinder us from envying the outward Felicity of the Wicked. We ſhould not dare with an evil Eye to cenſure his good Hand *, but approve of what he thinks fit to do, both in the Matter of his Liberality, and the Subjects he chooſeth for it. Though if the Diſpoſal were in our Hands, we ſhould not imitate him, as not thinking them Subjects fit for Bounty: Yet ſince it is in his Hands, we be to approve of his Actions, and not to have an ill will towards him for his Goodneſs, or towards thoſe he is pleaſed to make the Subjects of it. Since all his Doles are given, to invite Man to Repentance *, to envy them thoſe Goods God hath beſtowed upon them, is to envy God the Glory of his own Goodneſs, and them the Felicity thoſe things might move them to aſpire to. 'Tis to wiſh God more contracted, and thy Neighbour more miſerable; but a deep Senſe of his Sovereign Goodneſs, would make us rejoice in any Marks of it upon others, and move us to Bleſs him inſtead of Cenſuring him.

*Matth. 20. 15.

*Rom. 2. 4.

7. It would make us Thankful. What can be the moſt proper, the moſt natural Reflection, when we behold the moſt magnificent Characters he hath imprinted upon our Souls; the Conveniency of the Members he hath Compacted in our Bodies, but a Praiſe of him? Such Motion had David upon the firſt Conſideration, * I will praiſe thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. What could be the moſt natural Reflection, when we behold the rich Prerogatives of our Natures above other Creatures, the Proviſion he hath made for us for our Delight in the Beauties of Heaven, for our Support in the Creatures on Earth? What can reaſonably be expected from uncorrupted Man, to be the firſt Motion of his Soul, but an extolling the bountiful Hand of the inviſible Donor, whoever he be? This would make us venture at ſome Endeavours of a grateful Acknowledgment, though we ſhould deſpair of rendring any thing proportionable to the greatneſs of the Benefit; and ſuch an Acknowledgment of our own Weakneſs, would be an acceptable part of our Gratitude; without a due and deep ſenſe of Divine Goodneſs, our Praiſe of it, and Thankfulneſs for it, will be but cold, formal, and cuſtomary; our Tongues may bleſs him, and our Heart ſlight him. And this will lead us to the third Exhortation.

*Pſal. 139. 14.

3. Which is that of Thankfulneſs for Divine Goodneſs. The abſolute Goodneſs of God, as it is the Excellency of his Nature, is the Object of Praiſe: The Relative Goodneſs of God, as he is our Benefactor, is the Object of Thankfulneſs: This was always a Debt due from Man to God; he had Obligations in the time of his Integrity, and was then to render it; he is not leſs, but more oblig'd to it in the State of Corruption; the Benefits being the greater, by how much the more unworthy he is of them by reaſon of his Revolt. The Bounty beſtow'd upon an Enemy that merits the contrary, ought to be received with a greater Reſentment than that beſtow'd on a Friend, who is not unworthy of Teſtimonies of Reſpect. Gratitude to God, is the Duty of every Creature that hath a Senſe of it ſelf. The more excellent Being any enjoy, the more devout ought to be the Acknowledgment. How often doth David ſtir up, not only himſelf, but ſummon all Creatures, even the inſenſible ones, to joyn in the Conſort? * He calls to the Deeps, Fire, Hail, Snow, Mountains and Hills, to bear a part in this Work of Praiſe; not that they are able to do it actively, but to ſhew that Man is to call in the whole Creation to aſſiſt him paſſively, and ſhould have ſo much Charity to all Creatures, as to receive what they offer, and ſo much Affection to God as to preſent to him what he receives from him. Snow and Hail cannot bleſs and praiſe God, but Man ought to praiſe God for thoſe things, wherein there is a Mixture of Trouble and Inconvenience, ſomething to moleſt our Senſe, as well as ſomething that improves the Earth for Fruit. This God requires of us, for this he inſtituted ſeveral Offerings, and required a little Portion of Fruits to be preſented to him, as an Acknowledgment they held the whole from his Bounty. And the End of the Feſtival Days among the Jews, was to revive the Memory of thoſe ſignal Acts wherein his Power for them, and his Goodneſs to them, had been extraordinarily evident. 'Tis no more but our Mouths to praiſe him, and our Hand to obey him, that he exacts at our Hands. He commands us not to expend what he allows us, in the erecting ſtately Temples to his Honour; all the Coyn he requires to be paid with for his Expence, is, the Offering of Thanksgiving *: And this we ought to do as much as we can, ſince we cannot do it as much as he merits, for who can ſhew forth all his Praiſe †? If we have the Fruit of his Goodneſs, 'tis fit he ſhould have the Fruit of our Lips *. The leaſt Kindneſs ſhould enflame our Souls with a kindly Reſentment: Though ſome of his Benefits have a brighter, ſome a darker Aſpect towards us, yet they all come from this common Spring; His Goodneſs ſhines in all; there are the Footſteps of Goodneſs in the leaſt, as well as the Smiles of Goodneſs in the greateſt; the meaneſt therefore is not to paſs without a regard of the Author. As the Glory of God is more illuſtrious in ſome Creatures than in others, yet it glitters in all, and the loweſt as well as the higheſt adminiſters matter of Praiſe. But they are not only little things, but the choicer Favours he hath beſtowed upon us. How much doth it deſerve our Acknowledgment, that he ſhould contrive our Recovery, when we had plotted our Ruine? That when he did from Eternity behold the Crimes wherewith we would incenſe him, he ſhould not according to the Rights of Juſtice, caſt us into Hell, but prize us at the rate of the Blood and Life of his only Son, in Value above the Blood of Men and Lives of Angels. How ſhould we bleſs that God, that we have yet a Goſpel among us, that we are not driven into the utmoſt Regions, that we can attend upon him in the Face of the Sun, and not forced to the ſecret Obſcurities of the Night? Whatſoever we enjoy, whatſoever we receive we muſt own him as the Donor, and read his Hand in it. Rob him not of any Praiſe, to give to an Inſtrument. No Man hath wherewithal to do us good, nor a Heart to do us good, nor Opportunities of benefiting us, without him. When the Cripple received the Soundneſs of his Limbs from Peter, he praiſed the Hand that ſent it, not the Hand that brought it: * He praiſed God. When we want any thing that is good, let the Goodneſs of the Divine Nature move us to David's Practice, to thirſt after God : And when we feel the Motions of his Goodneſs to us, let us imitate the Temper of the ſame Holy Man; Bleſs the Lord, O my Soul: and forget not all his benefits. 'Tis an unworthy Carriage, to deal with him as a Traveller doth with a Fountain, kneel down to drink of it when he is Thirſty, and turn his back upon it, and perhaps never think of it more after he is ſatisfied.

*Pſal. 148.

*Pſal. 50. 14.

4. And laſtly, Imitate this Goodneſs of God. If his Goodneſs hath ſuch an Influence upon us as to make us love him, it will alſo move us with an ardent Zeal to imitate him in it. Chriſt makes this Uſe from the Doctrine of Divine Goodneſs, * Do good to them that hate you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven, for he makes his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good. As Holineſs is a Reſemblance of God's Purity, ſo Charity is a Reſemblance of God's Goodneſs: And this our Saviour calls Perfection; Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect. As God would not be a perfect God without Goodneſs, ſo neither can any be a perfect Chriſtian without Kindneſs; Charity and Love being the Splendor and Lovelineſs of all Chriſtian Graces, as Goodneſs is the Splendor and Lovelineſs of all Divine Attributes. This, and Holineſs are order'd in the Scripture to be the grand Patterns of our Imitation: Imitate the Goodneſs of God in two things.

* Matth. 5. 44, 45.
Verſe 48.

1. In relieving and aſſiſting others in diſtreſs. Let our Heart be as large in the Capacity of Creatures, as God is in the Capacity of a Creator. A large Heart from him to us, and a ſtrait Heart from us to others, will not ſuit: Let us not think any ſo far below us, as to be unworthy of our Care, ſince God thinks none, that are infinitely diſtant from him, too mean for his. His infinite Glory mounts him above the Creature, but his infinite Goodneſs ſtoops him to the meaneſt Works of his Hands. As he lets not the Tranſgreſſions of Proſperity paſs without Puniſhment, ſo he lets not the Diſtreſs of his afflicted People paſs him without ſupport. Shall God provide for the Eaſe of Beaſts, and ſhall not we have ſome Tenderneſs towards thoſe that are of the ſame Blood with our ſelves, and have as good Blood to boaſt of, as runs in the Veins of the Mightieſt Monarch on Earth; and as mean and as little as they are, can lay claim to as ancient a Pedigree as the ſtateſieſt Prince in the World, who cannot aſcend to Anceſtors beyond Adam? Shall we glut our ſelves with Divine Beneficence to us, and wear his Livery only on our own Backs, forgetting the Afflictions of ſome dear Joſeph; when God, who hath an unblemiſh'd Felicity in his own Nature, looks out himſelf to view and relieve the Miſeries of poor Creatures? Why hath God increaſed the Doles of his Treaſures to ſome more than others? Was it meerly for themſelves, or rather that they might have a Bottom, to attain the Honour of imitating him? Shall we embezzle his Goods to our own Uſe, as if we were abſolute Proprietors, and not Stewards entruſted for others? Shall we make a Difficulty to part with ſomething to others, out of that abundance he hath beſtowed upon any of us? Did not his Goodneſs ſtrip his Son of the Glory of Heaven for a time to enrich us? and ſhall we ſhrug when we are to part with a little to pleaſure him? 'Tis not very becoming for any to be backward in ſupplying the Neceſſities of others with a few Morſels, who have had the Happineſs to have had their greateſt Neceſſities ſupplied with his Son's Blood. He demands not that we ſhould ſtrip our ſelves of all for others, but of a Pittance, ſomething of Superfluity, which will turn more to our Account, than what is vainly and uprofitably conſumed on our Backs and Bellies. If he hath given much to any of us, 'tis rather to lay aſide part for the Income of his Service; Elſe we would Monopolize Divine Goodneſs to our ſelves, and ſeem to diſtruſt under our preſent Experiments, his future Kindneſs, as though the laſt thing he gave us was attended with this Language, Hoard up this, and expect no more from me: Uſe it only to the glutting your Avarice, and feeding your Ambition; which would be againſt the whole Scope of Divine Goodneſs. If we do not endeavour to write after the Comely Copy he hath ſet us, we may provoke him to harden himſelf againſt us, and in Wrath beſtow that on the Fire, or on our Enemies, which his Goodneſs hath imparted to us for his Glory, and the ſupplying the Neceſſities of poor Creatures. And on the contrary, he is ſo delighted with this kind of Imitation of him, that a Cup of cold Water, when there is no more to be done, ſhall not be unrewarded.

2. Imitate God in his Goodneſs, in a Kindneſs to our worſt Enemies. The beſt Man is more unworthy to receive any thing from God, than the worſt can be to receive from us. How kind is God to thoſe that blaſpheme him, and gives them the ſame Sun, and the ſame Showers, that he doth to the beſt Men in the World! Is it not more our Glory to imitate God, in doing good to thoſe that hate us, than to imitate the Men of the World in requiting Evil, by a return of a ſevenfold Miſchief? This would be a Goodneſs which would vanquiſh the the Hearts of Men, and render us greater than Alexanders and Cæſars, who did only triumph over Miſerable Carcaſes; Yea, it is to triumph over our ſelves, in being good againſt the Sentiments of Corrupt Nature. Revenge makes us Slaves to our Paſſions as much as the Offenders, and good Returns render us Victorious over our Adverſaries. *Rom. 12. 21. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good. When we took up Arms againſt God, his Goodneſs contrived not our Ruine, but our Recovery. This is ſuch a Goodneſs of God, as could not be diſcover'd in an Innocent State; While Man had continued in his Duty, he could not have been guilty of an Enmity; And God could not but affect him, unleſs he had denied himſelf: So this of being good to our Enemies, could never have been practiſed in a State of Rectitude; ſince where was a perfect Innocence, there could be no ſpark of Enmity to one another. It can be no Diſparagement to any Man's Dignity, to caſt his Influences on his greateſt Oppoſers, ſince God, who acts for his own Glory, thinks not himſelf diſparag'd by ſending forth the Streams of his Bounty on the wickedeſt Perſons, who are far meaner to him than thoſe of the ſame Blood can be to us. Who hath the worſt Thoughts of the Sun for ſhining upon the Earth, that ſends up Vapours to cloud it? It can be no Diſgrace to reſemble God; if his Hand and Bowels be open to us, let not ours be ſhut to any.

A DISCOURSE UPON GOD's Dominion.

PSALM CIII. 19.

The Lord hath prepared his Throne in the Heavens: And his Kingdom Ruleth over all.

THE Pſalm begins with the Praiſe of God, wherein the Pen-man excites his Soul to a right and elevated Management of ſo great a Duty, ver. 1. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, and all that is within me, bleſs his Holy Name: And becauſe himſelf, and all Men were inſufficient to offer up a Praiſe to God, anſwerable to the Greatneſs of his Benefits, he ſummons, in the end of the Pſalm, the Angels and all Creatures to join in Conſort with him.

Obſerve.

1. As Man is too ſhallow a Creature to comprehend the Excellency of God, ſo he is too dull and ſcanty a Creature to offer up a true Praiſe to God, both in regard of the Excellency of his Nature, and the multitude and greatneſs of his Benefits.

2. We are apt to forget Divine Benefits, our Souls muſt therefore be often jogg'd and rous'd up. All that is within me, every Power of my rational, and every Affection of my ſenſitive Part. All his Faculties, all his Thoughts. Our Souls will hang back from God in every Duty, much more in this, if we lay not a ſtrict Charge upon them. We are ſo void of a pure and intire Love to God, that we have no mind to thoſe Duties. Wants will ſpur us on to Prayer, but a pure Love to God can only ſpirit us to Praiſe. We are more ready to reach out a hand to receive his Mercies, than to lift up our heart to recognize them after the Receipt.

After the Pſalmiſt had ſummoned his own Soul to this Task, he enumerates the Divine Bleſſings received by him, to awaken his Soul by a ſenſe of them to ſo noble a Work. He begins at the firſt and Foundation Mercy to himſelf, the pardon of his Sin, and Juſtification of his Perſon, the renewing of his ſickly and languiſhing Nature, Verſe 3. Who forgives all thy Iniquities, and heals all thy Diſeaſes. His Redemption from Death or Eternal Deſtruction; his expected Glorification thereupon, which he ſpeaks of with that Certainty as if it were preſent, ver. 4. Who redeems thy life from deſtruction, who crowns thee with loving kindneſs and tender Mercies. He makes his Progreſs to the Mercy manifeſted to the Church in Protection of it againſt, or delivery of it from Oppreſſions, ver. 6. The Lord executeth Righteouſneſs and Judgment for all that are oppreſſed. In the Diſcovery of his Will and Law, and the glory of his merciful Name to it. Verſe 7, 8. He made known his ways unto Moſes, and his acts unto the children of Iſrael. The Lord is Merciful and Gracious, ſlow to Anger, and plenteous in Mercy. Which latter Words may refer alſo to the free and unmerited ſpring of the Benefits he had reckoned up, viz. The Mercy of God, which he mentions alſo ver. 10. He hath not dealt with us after our ſins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities; and then extols the Perfection of Divine Mercy, in the pardoning of Sin, ver. 11, 12. The Paternal Tenderneſs of God. Verſe 13. The Eternity of his Mercy. Verſe 17. But reſtrains it to the proper Object. Verſe 11, 17. To them that fear him, i. e. To them that believe in him: Fear being the word commonly uſed for Faith in the Old Teſtament, under the legal Diſpenſation wherein the Spirit of Bondage was more eminent than the Spirit of Adoption, and their Fear more than their Confidence.

Obſerve.

1. All the true Bleſſings grow up from the pardon of ſin, ver. 3. Who forgives all thine iniquities. That is the firſt Bleſſing, the Top and Crown of all other Favours, which draws all other Bleſſings after it; and ſweetens all other Bleſſings with it. The principal Intent of Chriſt was Expiation of ſin, Redemption from Iniquity; the Purchaſe of other Bleſſings was conſequent upon it. Pardon of ſin is every Bleſſing vertually, and in the root and ſpring it flows from the Favour of God, and is ſuch a gift as cannot be tainted with a Curſe, as outward things may.

2. Where ſin is pardoned, the ſoul is renewed, verſe 3. Who heals all thy Diſeaſes. Where guilt is remitted, the Deformity and Sickneſs of the Soul is cur'd. Forgiveneſs is a teeming Mercy, it never goes ſingle; when we have an Intereſt in Chriſt, as bearing the Chaſtiſement of our Peace, we receive alſo a balſom from his Blood, to heal the wounds we feel in our Nature, Iſaiah 53. 5. The chaſtiſement of our Peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed. As there is a guilt in ſin, which binds us over to puniſhment, ſo there is a Contagion in ſin, which fills us with peſtilent Diſeaſes, when the one is removed the other is cur'd. We ſhould not know how to love the one without the other. The renewing the Soul is neceſſary for a delightful reliſh of the other Bleſſings of God. A condemn'd Malefactor infected with a Leproſie, or any other loathſom Diſtemper, if pardon'd, could take little Comfort in his Freedom from the Gibbet, without a Cure of his Plague.

3. God is the ſole and ſovereign Author of all ſpiritual Bleſſings. Who forgives all thy Iniquities, and heals all thy Diſeaſes. He refers all to God, nothing to himſelf in his own merit and ſtrength.

All,

All, not the pardon of one sin merited by me, not the cure of one Disease can I owe to my own power, and the strength of my free Will, and the operations of Nature. He, and he alone is the Prince of pardon, the Physician that restores me, the Redeemer that delivers me; 'tis a Sacriledge to divide the praise between God and our selves. God only can knock off our Fetters, expel our Distempers, and restore a deformed Soul to its decayed beauty.

4. Gracious Souls will bless God as much for Sanctification as for Justification. The Initials of Sanctification (and there are no more in this Life) are worthy of solemn acknowledgment. 'Tis a sign of growth in Grace, when our Hymns are made up of acknowledgments of God's sanctifying, as well as pardoning Grace. In blessing God for the one, we rather shew a Love to our selves; in blessing God for the other, we cast out a pure beam of Love to God: Because by purifying Grace we are fitted to the Service of our Maker, prepared to every good Work which is delightful to him; by the other, we are eas'd in our selves. Pardon fills us with inward Peace, but Sanctification fills us with an Activity for God. Nothing is so capable of setting the Soul in a Heavenly tune, as the consideration of God as a Pardoner and as a Healer.

5. Where sin is pardon'd, the punishment is remitted, Verse 3, 4. Who forgives all thy iniquities, and redeems thy life from destruction. A Malefactors pardon puts an end to his Chains, frees him from the stench of the Dungeon, and fear of the Gibbet. Pardon is nothing else but the remitting of guilt, aud guilt is nothing else but an obligation to punishment, as a penal debt for sin. A Creditors tearing a Bond, frees the Debtor from payment and rigour.

6. Growth in Grace is always annex'd to true Sanctification, Verse 3. So that thy youth is renew'd like the Eagles. Interpreters trouble themselves much about the manner of the Eagles renewing its youth, and regaining its vigour: * He speaks best, that saith the Psalmist, speaks only according to the Opinion of the vulgar, and his design was not to write a Natural History. Growth always accompanies Grace, as well as it doth Nature in the Body; not that it is without its qualms and languishing fits, as Children are not, but still their Distempers make them grow; Grace is not an idle, but an active Principle. 'Tis not like the Psalmist means it, of the strength of the Body, or the Prosperity and Stability of his Government, but the vigour of his Grace and Comfort, since they are Spiritual Blessings here that are the matter of his Song. The healing the Disease, conduceth to the sprouting up and flourishing of the Body. 'Tis the Nature of Grace to go from strength to strength.

* Amyrald. in loc.

7. When sin is pardoned, 'tis perfectly pardon'd, Verse 11, 12. as far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us The East and West are the greatest distance in the World, the terms can never meet together. When sin is pardoned, it is never charged again; the guilt of it can no more return, than East can become West, or West become East.

8. Obedience is necessary to an interest in the mercy of God, Verse 17. The mercy of the Lord is to them that fear him, to them that remember his Commandments to do them. Commands are to be remembred in order to Practice, a vain Speculation is not the intent of the Publication of them.

After the Psalmist had enumerated the Benefits of God, he reflects upon the greatness of God, and considers him on his Throne encompass'd with the Angels, the Ministers of his Providence, Verse 19. The Lord hath prepared his Throne in the Heavens, and his kingdom rules over all. He brings in this of his Dominion, just after he had largely treated of his Mercy. Either,

1. To signifie, That God is not only to be praised for his mercy, but for his Majesty, both for the height and extent of his Authority.

2. To extol the greatness of his Mercy and Pity. What I have said now, Oh my Soul, of the Mercy of God, and his Paternal Pity, is commended by his Majesty; his Grandeur hinders not his Clemency: Though his Throne be high, his Bowels are tender. He looks down upon his meanest Servants from the height of his Glory. Since his Majesty is infinite, his Mercy must be as great as his Majesty. It must be a greater pity lodging in his Breast, than what is in any Creature, since it is not damp'd by the greatness of his Sovereignty.

3. To render his Mercy more comfortable. The Mercy I have spoken of, Oh my Soul, is not the Mercy of a Subject, but of a Sovereign. An Executioner may torture a Criminal, and strip him of his Life, and a vulgar pity cannot relieve him, but the Clemency of the Prince can perfectly pardon him. 'Tis that God who hath none above him to controul him, none below him to resist him, that hath performed all the Acts of Grace to thee. If God by his Supream Authority pardons us, who can reverse it? If all the Subjects of God in the World should pardon us, and God with-hold his grant, what will it profit us? Take Comfort, Oh my Soul, since God from his Throne in the highest, and that God who rules over every particular of the Creation, hath granted and sealed thy Pardon to thee. What would his Grace signifie, if he were not a Monarch, extending his Royal Empire over every thing, and swaying all by his Scepter?

4ly, To render the Psalmist's confidence more firm in any pressures, Verse 15, 16. He had considered the misery of Man in the shortness of his Life; his place should know him no more, he should never return to his Authority, Employments, Opportunities, that death would take from him; but howsoever the Mercy and Majesty of God were the ground of his confidence. He draws himself from poring upon any Calamities which may assault him, to Heaven, the place where God orders all things that are done on the Earth. He is able to protect us from our dangers, and to deliver us from our distresses; whatsoever Miseries thou mayest lie under, Oh my Soul, cast thy eye up to Heaven, and see a pitying God in a Majestick Authority. A God who can perform what he hath promised to them that fear him; since he hath a Throne above the Heavens, and bears sway over all that envy thy Happiness, and would stain thy Felicity, A God whose Authority cannot be curtailed and dismembred by any. When the Prophet sollicites the sounding of the Divine Bowels, he urgeth him by his dwelling in Heaven, the habitation of his Holiness, Isaiah 63. 15. His Kingdom ruleth over all: There is none therefore hath any Authority to make him break his Covenant or violate his Promise.

5. As an incentive to Obedience, The Lord is merciful, saith he to them, that remember his Commandments to do them, Verse 17, 18. And then brings in the Text as an Encouragement to observe his Precepts; he hath a Majesty that deserves it from us, and an Authority to protect us in it; if a King in a small spot of Earth is to be obeyed by his Subjects, how much more is God, who is more Majestick than all the Angels in Heaven, and Monarchs on Earth? who hath a Majesty to exact our Obedience, and a Mercy to allure it! We ſhould not ſet upon the performance of any Duty, without an Eye lifted up to God as a great King. It would make us willing to ſerve him; the more Noble the Perſon, the more Honourable and Powerful the Prince, the more glorious is his Service. A view of God upon his Throne, will make us think his Service our Privilege, his Precepts our Ornaments, and Obedience to him the greateſt Honour and Nobility. It will make us weighty and ſerious in our Performances. It would ſtake us down to any duty. The reaſon we are ſo looſe, and unmannerly in the carriage of our Souls before God, is becauſe we conſider him not as a great King, Malachy 1. 14. Our Father which art in Heaven, in regard of his Majeſty, is the Preface to Prayer.

Let us now conſider the Words in themſelves. The Lord hath prepared his Throne in the Heavens, and his Kingdom rules over all.

The Lord hath prepared.] The word ſignifies eſtabliſh'd as well as prepared, and might ſo be rendered. Due preparation is a natural way to the Eſtabliſhment of a thing. Haſty Reſolves break and moulder. This notes,

1. The Peculiarity of his Authority. He prepares it, none elſe for him. 'Tis a Dominion that originally reſides in his Nature, not deriv'd from any by Birth or Commiſſion, he alone prepar'd it. He is the ſole cauſe of his own Kingdom; his Authority therefore is unbounded, as infinite as his Nature: None can ſet Laws to him, becauſe none but himſelf prepar'd his Throne for him. As he will not impair his own Happineſs, ſo he will not abridge himſelf of his own Authority.

2. Readineſs to exerciſe it upon due occaſions. He hath prepared his Throne, he is not at a loſs, he needs not ſtay for a Commiſſion or Inſtructions from any, how to act. He hath all things ready for the aſſiſtance of his People, he hath Rewards, and Puniſhments; his Treaſures, and Axes the great marks of Authority lying by him, the one for the good, the other for the wicked. His Mercy he keeps by him for thouſands, Exod. 34. 7. His Arrows he hath prepared by him for Rebels, Pſal. 7. 13.

3. Wiſe management of it; 'Tis prepared; Preparations imply Prudence; the Government of God is not a raſh and heady Authority. A Prince upon his Throne, a Judge upon the Bench, manages things with the greateſt Diſcretion, or ſhould be ſuppoſed ſo to do.

4. Succeſsfulneſs and duration of it. He hath prepared or eſtabliſhed. 'Tis fixed, not tottering; 'tis an immoveable Dominion, all the Struglings of Men and Devils cannot overturn it, nor ſo much as ſhake it. 'Tis eſtabliſhed above the reach of obſtinate Rebels; he cannot be depoſed from it, he cannot be mated in it. His Dominion, as himſelf, abides for ever. And as his Counſel ſo his Authority ſhall ſtand, and he will do all his pleaſure, Iſaiah 46. 10.

His Throne in the Heavens.] This is an expreſſion to ſignifie the Authority of God, for as God hath no Member properly, though he be ſo repreſented to us, ſo he hath properly no Throne. It ſignifies his power of reigning, and judging. A Throne is proper to Royalty, the Seat of Majeſty in its Excellency, and the place where the deepeſt Reſpect and Homage of Subjects is paid, and their Petitions preſented. That the Throne of God is in the Heavens, that there he ſits as a Sovereign, is the Opinion of all that acknowledge a God; when they ſtand in need of his Authority to aſſiſt them, their eyes are lifted up, and their hands ſtretched out to Heaven; ſo his Son Chriſt prayed, he lifted up his eyes to Heaven, as the place where his Father ſat in Majeſty, as the moſt adorable Object, John 17. 1. Heaven hath the Title of his Throne, as the Earth hath that of his Footſtool, Iſaiah 66. 1. And therefore Heaven is ſometimes put for the Authority of God, Dan. 4. 26. After that thou ſhalt have known, that the Heavens do rule, i. e. That God who hath his Throne in the Heavens, orders earthly Princes and Scepters as he pleaſes, and rules over the Kingdoms of the World.

His Throne in the Heavens, Notes,

1. The Glory of his Dominion. The Heavens are the moſt ſtately and comely pieces of the Creation. His Majeſty is there moſt viſible, his Glory moſt ſplendid. Pſal. 19. 1. The Heavens ſpeak out with a full mouth his Glory. 'Tis therefore called, The habitation of his Holineſs and of his Glory, Iſa. 63. 15. There is the greater glifter and brightneſs of his Glory. The whole Earth indeed is full of his Glory, full of the beams of it, the Heaven is full of the body of it; as the Rays of the Sun reach the Earth, but the full Glory of it is in the Firmament. In Heaven his Dominion is more acknowledged by the Angels, ſtanding at his beck, and by their readineſs and ſwiftneſs obeying his Commands, going and returning as a flaſh of Lightning, Ezek. 1. 14. His Throne may well be ſaid to be in the Heavens, ſince his Dominion is not diſputed there by the Angels that attend him, as it is on Earth by the Rebels that arm themſelves againſt him.

2. The Supremacy of his Empire. The Heavens are the loftieſt part of the Creation, and the only fit Palace for him; 'tis in the Heavens his Majeſty and Dignity are ſo ſublime, that they are elevated above all earthly Empires.

3. Peculiarity of this Dominion. He rules in the Heavens alone. There is ſome ſhadow of Empire in the World. Royalty is communicated to Men as his Subſtitutes. He hath diſpoſed a vicarious Dominion to Men in his Footſtool the Earth, he gives them ſome ſhare in his Authority; and therefore the Title of his Name, Pſal. 82. 6. I have ſaid ye are Gods; but in Heaven he reigns alone, without any Subſtitutes; his Throne is there: He gives out his Orders to the Angels himſelf, the marks of his immediate Sovereignty are the moſt viſible. He hath no Vicars-General of that Empire. His Authority is not delegated to any Creature, he rules the bleſſed Spirits by himſelf; but he rules Men that are on his Footſtool by others of the ſame kind, Men of their own Nature.

4. The vaſtneſs of his Empire. The Earth is but a ſpot to the Heavens; what is England in a Map to the whole Earth, but a ſpot, you may cover with your Finger? Much leſs muſt the whole Earth be to the extended Heavens; 'Tis but a little Point or Atome to what is viſible; the Sun is vaſtly bigger than it, and ſeveral Stars are ſuppoſed to be of a greater bulk than the Earth; and how many and what Heavens are beyond, the Ignorance of Man cannot underſtand. If the Throne of God be there, 'tis a larger Circuit he rules in, than can well be conceived. You cannot conceive the many millions of little Particles there are in the Earth, and if all put together be but one point to that place where the Throne of God is ſeated, how vaſt muſt his Empire be? He rules there over the Angels, which excel in ſtrength, thoſe Hoſts of his which do his pleaſure, in compariſon of whom all the Men in the World, and the Power of the greateſt Potentates is no more than the Strength of an Ant or Fly; Multitudes of them encircle his Throne, and liſten to his Orders without roving, and execute them without Diſputing. And ſince his Throne is in the Heavens, it will follow, that all things under the Heavens are parts of his Dominion; his Throne being in the higheſt Place, the inferior things of Earth cannot but be ſubject to him; and it neceſſarily includes his Influence on all things below: Becauſe the Heavens are the Cauſe of all the Motion in the World, the immediate thing the Earth doth naturally addreſs to for Corn, Wine and Oyl, above which there is no Superior but the Lord. Hoſ. 2. 21, 22. The Earth hears the Corn, Wine and Oyl; the Heavens hear the Earth, and the Lord hears the Heavens.

5. The Eaſineſs of managing this Government. His Throne being placed on high, he cannot but behold all things that are done below; the height of a Place gives Advantage to a pure and clear Eye to behold things below it. Had the Sun an Eye, nothing could be done in the open Air out of its Ken. The Throne of God being in Heaven, he eaſily looks from thence upon all the Children of Men, Pſal. 14. 2. The Lord looked down from Heaven upon the Children of Men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand. He looks not down from Heaven as if he were in regard of his Preſence confined there; but he looks down Majeſtically, and by way of Authority; not as the look of a bare Spectator, but the look of a Governor, to paſs Sentence upon them as a Judge. His being in the Heavens renders him capable of doing whatſoever he pleaſes, Pſal. 115. 3. His Throne being there, he can by a Word, in ſtopping the Motions of the Heavens, turn the whole Earth into Confuſion. In this reſpect it is ſaid, He rides upon the Heaven in thy Help, Deut. 33. 26. Diſcharges his Thunders upon Men, and makes the Influences of it ſerve his Peoples Intereſt. By one turn of a Cock, as you ſee in Grotto's, he can cauſe Streams from ſeveral parts of the Heavens to refreſh, or ruin the World.

6. Duration of it. The Heavens are incorruptible, his Throne is placed there in an incorruptible State. Earthly Empires have their Decays and Diſſolutions. The Throne of God out-lives the Diſſolution of the World.

His Kingdom rules over all.] He hath an abſolute Right over all things within the Circuit of Heaven and Earth; though his Throne be in Heaven, as the Place where his Glory is moſt eminent and viſible, his Authority moſt exactly obey'd, yet his Kingdom extends it ſelf to the lower parts of the Earth. He doth not Muffle and Cloud up himſelf in Heaven, or confine his Soveraignty to that Place; his Royal Power extends to all viſible, as well as inviſible things: He is Proprietor and Poſſeſſor of all, Deut. 10. 14. The Heaven, and the Heaven of Heavens is the Lord's thy God: the Earth alſo, with all that is there. He hath Right to diſpoſe of all as he pleaſes. He doth not ſay, his Kingdom Rules all that fear him, but over all; ſo that it is not the Kingdom of Grace he here ſpeaks of, but his natural and univerſal Kingdom. Over Angels and Men, Jews and Gentiles, Animate and Inanimate things.

The Pſalmiſt conſiders God here as a Great Monarch and General; and all Creatures as his Hoſts and Regiments under him; and takes notice Principally of two things.

1. The Eſtabliſhment of his Throne, together with the Seat of it. [he hath prepared his Throne in the Heavens.]

2. The Extent of his Empire.] His Kingdom rules over all.

This Text, in all the Parts of it, is a fit Baſis for a Diſcourſe upon the Dominion of God; and the Obſervation will be this.

Doctrine. God is Soveraign Lord and King, and exerciſeth a Dominion over the whole World, both Heaven and Earth.

This is ſo clear, that nothing is more ſpoken of in Scripture. The very Name, Lord, imports it; a Name Originally belonging to God, and from him tranſlated to others. And he is frequently called, The Lord of Hoſts, becauſe all the Troops and Armies of Spiritual and Corporeal Creatures are in his Hands, and at his Service. This is one of his principal Titles. And the Angels are called, His Hoſts, v. 21. following the Text, his Camp and Militia. But more plainly, 1 Kings 22. 19. God is preſented upon his Throne, encompaſt with all the Hoſt of Heaven ſtanding on his Right Hand, and on his Left; which can be underſtood of no other than of the Angels that wait for the Commands of their Sovereign, and ſtand about, not to counſel him, but to receive his Orders. The Sun, Moon, and Stars, are called his Hoſts, Deut. 4. 19. Appointed by him for the Government of inferior things. He hath an abſolute Authority over the greateſt and the leaſt Creatures; over thoſe that are moſt dreadful, and thoſe that are moſt beneficial; over the good Angels that willingly obey him, over the evil Angels that ſeem moſt uncapable of Government. And as he is thus Lord of Hoſts, he is the King of Glory, or a glorious King, Pſal. 24. 10. You find him called a great King; the moſt High, Pſal. 92. 1. The ſupream Monarch, there being no Dignity in Heaven or Earth, but what is dim before him, and infinitely inferior to him; yea, he hath the Title of Only King, 1 Tim. 6. 15. The Title of Royalty, truly and properly only belongs to him. You may ſee it deſcribed very magnificently by David, at the Free-will-offering for the Building of the Temple. 1 Chron. 29. 11, 12. Thine, O Lord, is the Greatneſs, and the Power, and the Glory, and the Victory, and the Majeſty: Thine is the Kingdom, O God, and thou art exalted as head over all. Both Riches and Honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all, and in thy Hand is Power and Might, and in thy Hand it is to make Great, and to give Strength to all. He that hath an Eminency of Power or Authority above all. All Earthly Princes received their Diadems from him, yea, even thoſe that will not acknowledge him, and he hath a more abſolute Power over them, than they can challenge over their meaneſt Vaſſals. As God hath a Knowledge infinitely above our Knowledge; ſo he hath a Dominion incomprehenſibly above any Dominion of Man: and by all the Shadows drawn from the Authority of one Man over another, we can have but weak Glimmerings of the Authority and Dominion of God.

There is a Threefold Dominion of God.

1. Natural: Which is abſolute over all Creatures, and is founded in the Nature of God as Creator.

2. Spiritual or Gracious: Which is a Dominion over his Church as Redeemed, and founded in the Covenant of Grace.

3. A glorious Kingdom at the winding up of all, wherein he ſhall Reign over all, either in the Glory of his Mercy, as over the glorified Saints; or in the Glory of his Juſtice in the condemn'd Devils and Men. The firſt Dominion is founded in Nature. The ſecond, in Grace. The third, in regard of the Bleſſed in Grace; in regard of the damn'd, in demerit in them, and Juſtice in him.

He is Lord of all things, and always in regard of Propriety. Pſal. 24. 1. The earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof: the world and all that dwell therein. The Earth, with the Riches and Treaſures in the Bowels of it; the habitable World, with every thing that moves upon it, are his; he hath the ſole Right, and what Right ſoever any others have, is deriv'd from him. In regard alſo of Poſ-

ſeſſion

ſeſſion, Gen. 14. 22. The moſt High God, Poſſeſſor of Heaven and Earth. In reſpect of whom, Man is not the Proprietary nor Poſſeſſor, but Uſufructuary at the Will of this Grand Lord.

In the Proſecution of this,

I. I ſhall lay down ſome general Propoſitions for the clearing and confirming it.

II. I ſhall ſhew whereon this Right of Dominion is founded.

III. What the Nature of it is.

IV. Wherein it conſiſts; and how 'tis manifeſted.

I. Some general Propoſitions for the clearing and confirming of it.

1. We muſt know the Difference between the Might or Power of God, and his Authority. We commonly mean by the Power of God, the Strength of God, whereby he is able to effect all his Purpoſes. By the Authority of God, we mean the Right he hath to act what he pleaſes. Omnipotence is his Phyſical Power, whereby he is able to do what he will. Dominion is his moral Power, whereby it is lawful for him to do what he will. Among Men, Strength and Authority are two diſtinct things. A Subject may be a Giant, and be ſtronger than his Prince, but yet he hath not the ſame Authority as his Prince. Worldly Dominion may be ſeated not in a brawny Arm, but a ſickly and infirm Body. As Knowledge and Wiſdom are diſtinguiſht; Knowledge reſpects the Matter, Being, and Nature of a Thing. Wiſdom reſpects the Harmony, Order, and actual uſefulneſs of a thing. Knowledge ſearcheth the Nature of a thing, and Wiſdom employs that thing to its proper Uſe. A Man may have much Knowledge, and little Wiſdom; ſo a Man may have much Strength and little or no Authority. A greater Strength may be ſetled in the Servant, but a greater Authority reſides in the Maſter; Strength is the natural Vigour of a Man. God hath an infinite Strength, he hath a Strength to bring to paſs whatſoever he decrees; he acts without fainting and weakneſs, Iſaiah 40. 28. and impairs not his Strength by the Exerciſe of it. As God is Lord he hath a Right to Enact; as he is Almighty, he hath a Power to Execute. His Strength is the executive Power belonging to his Dominion: In regard of his Sovereignty, he hath a Right to command all Creatures. In regard of his Almightineſs, he hath Power to make his Commands be obey'd; or to puniſh Men for the Violation of them. His Power is that whereby he ſubdues all Creatures under him; his Dominion is that, whereby he hath a Right to ſubdue all Creatures under him.

This Dominion is a Right of making what he pleaſes, of poſſeſſing what he made, of diſpoſing of what he doth poſſeſs; whereas his Power is an Ability to make, what he hath a Right to Create, to hold what he doth poſſeſs, and to execute the manner, wherein he reſolves to diſpoſe of his Creatures.

2. All the other Attributes of God refer to this Perfection of Dominion. They all beſpeak him fit for it, and are diſcovered in the Exerciſe of it, (which hath been manifeſted in the Diſcourſes of thoſe Attributes, we have paſſed through hitherto.) His Goodneſs fits him for it, becauſe he can never uſe his Authority but for the Good of the Creatures, and conducting them to their true End. His Wiſdom can never be miſtaken in the Exerciſe of it, his Power can accompliſh the Decrees, that flow from his abſolute Authority. What can be more Rightful, than the placing Authority in ſuch an infinite Goodneſs, that hath Bowels to pity, as well as a Scepter to ſway his Subjects? That hath a Mind to contrive, and a Will to regulate his Contrivances for his own Glory, and his Creatures Good; and an Arm of Power to bring to paſs, what he orders. Without this Dominion ſome Perfections, as Juſtice and Mercy, would lye in Obſcurity, and much of his Wiſdom would be ſhrouded from our Sight and Knowledge.

3. This of Dominion, as well as that of Power, hath been acknowledged by all. The High Prieſt was to wave the Offering, or ſhake it to and fro, Exod. 29. 24. which the Jews ſay, was cuſtomarily from Eaſt to Weſt, and from North to South, the four Quarters of the World, to ſignify God's Soveraignty over all the parts of the World. And ſome of the Heathens in their Adorations, turned their Bodies to all Quarters, to ſignifie the extenſive Dominion of God throughout the whole Earth. That Dominion did of right pertain to the Deity, was confeſt by the Heathen in the Name of Baal, given to their Idols, which ſignifies Lord; and was not the Name of one Idol, adored for a God, but common to all the Eaſtern Idols. God hath interwoven the Notion of his Sovereignty in the Nature and Conſtitution of Man, in the nobleſt and moſt inward Acts of his Soul, in that Faculty or Act which is moſt neceſſary for him, in his Converſe in this World, either with God or Man. 'Tis ſtampt upon the Conſcience of Man, and flaſhes in his Face in every act of Self-Judgment Conſcience paſſes upon a Man. Every Reflection of Conſcience implies an Obligation of Man to ſome Law written in his Heart, Rom. 2. 15. This Law cannot be without a Legiſlator, nor this Legiſlator without a Sovereign Dominion; theſe are but natural and eaſie Conſequences in the Mind of Man from every Act of Conſcience. The indelible Authority of Conſcience in Man, in the whole Exerciſe of it, bears a reſpect to the Soveraignty of God, clearly proclaims, not only a Supream Being, but a Supream Governour, and points Man directly to it, that a Man may as ſoon deny his having ſuch a reflecting Principle within him, as deny God's Dominion over him, and conſequently over the whole World of rational Creatures.

4. This Notion of Soveraignty is inſeparable from the Notion of a God. To acknowledge the Exiſtence of a God, and to acknowledge him a Rewarder are linkt together. Heb. 11. 6. To acknowledge him a Rewarder, is to acknowledge him a Governor; Rewards being the Marks of Dominion. The very Name of a God includes in it a Supremacy, and an actual Rule. He cannot be conceived as God, but he muſt be conceived as the higheſt Authority in the World. 'Tis as poſſible for him not to be God, as not to be Supream. Wherein can the Exerciſe of his Excellencies be apparent, but in his Soveraign Rule? To fancy an infinite Power without a Supream Dominion, is to fancy a mighty ſenſleſs Statue fit to be beheld, but not fit to be obey'd; as not being able, or having no right to give out Orders, or not caring for the Exerciſe of it. God cannot be ſuppoſed to be the chief Being, but he muſt be ſuppoſed to give Laws to all, and receive Laws from none. And if we ſuppoſe him with a Perfection of Juſtice and Righteouſneſs (which we muſt do, unleſs we would make a lame and imperfect God) we muſt ſuppoſe him to have an entire Dominion, without which he could never be able to manifeſt his Juſtice. And without a Supream Dominion, he could not manifeſt the Supremacy, and Infiniteneſs of his Righteouſneſs.

1. We cannot ſuppoſe God a Creator, without ſuppoſing a Sovereign Dominion in him. No Creature can be made without ſome Law in its Nature, if it had not Law, it would be created to no purpoſe, to nor egular end; it would be utterly unbecoming an Infinite Wiſdom to create a lawleſs Creature, a Creature wholly vain; much leſs can a rational

Creature

Creature be made without a Law; if it had no Law, it were not rational: For the very Notion of a rational Creature implies Reason to be a Law to it, and implies an acting by Rule. * If you could suppose rational Creatures without a Law, you might suppose, that they might Blaspheme their Creator, and Murder their Fellow Creatures, and commit the most abominable Villanies destructive to humane Society, without Sin; for where there is no Law, there is no transgression. But those things are accounted Sins by all Mankind, and Sins against the Supream Being: So that a Dominion and the Exercise of it is so fast linkt to God, so intirely in him, so intrinsick in his Nature, that it cannot be imagined that a rational Creature, can be made by him without a Stamp and Mark of that Dominion in his very Nature, and Frame; 'tis so inseparable from God in his very Act of Creation.

* Maccov. Colleg. Theolog. 10. Disput. 18, p. 6, 7. or thereabout.

2. 'Tis such a Dominion as cannot be renounced by God himself. 'Tis so intrinsick and connatural to him, so in-laid in the Nature of God, that he cannot strip himself of it, nor of the Exercise of it, while any Creature remains. 'Tis preserv'd by him, for it could not subsist of its self; 'tis govern'd by him, it could not else answer its end. 'Tis impossible there can be a Creature, which hath not God for his Lord. Christ himself, though in regard of his Deity equal with God, yet in regard of his created State, and assuming our Nature, was God's Servant, was govern'd by him in the whole of his Office, acted according to his Command and Directions; God calls him his Servant, Isaiah 42. 1. And Christ in that Prophetick Psalm of him, calls God his Lord. Psal. 16. 2. Oh my Soul, Thou hast said unto the Lord, thou art my Lord. It was impossible it should be otherwise, Justice had been so far from being satisfy'd, that it had been highly incensed, if the order of things in the due subjection to God had been broke, and his Terms had not been complied with. It would be a Judgment upon the World, if God should give up the Government to any else, as it is when he gives Children to be Princes, Isaiah 3. 4. i. e. Children in understanding.

3. 'Tis so inseparable that it cannot be communicated to any Creature. No Creature is able to exercise it, every Creature is unable to perform all the Offices that belong to this Dominion. No Creature can impose Laws upon the Consciences of Men: Man knows not the inlets into the Soul, his Pen cannot reach the inwards of Man. What Laws he hath power to propose to Conscience, he cannot see executed: because every Creature wants Omniscience, he is not able to perceive all those breaches of the Law, which may be committed at the same time in so many Cities, so many Chambers. Or suppose an Angel, in regard of the height of his standing, and the Insufficiency of Walls, and Darkness, and distance to obstruct his view, can behold Mens Actions, yet he cannot know the internal acts of Mens Minds, and Wills without some outward Eruption and Appearance of them. And if he be ignorant of them, how can he execute his Laws? If he only understand the outward Fact without the inward Thought, how can he dispense a Justice proportionable to the crime? He must needs be ignorant of that, which adds the greatest Aggravation sometimes to a sin, and inflict a lighter punishment upon that which receives a deeper Tincture from the inward posture of the Mind, than another Fact may do, which in the outward act may appear more base and unjust; and so while he intends Righteousness, may act a degree of Injustice. * Besides, no Creature can inflict a due Punishment for sin; that which is due to sin, is a loss of the Vision, and sight of God; but none can deprive any of that but God himself; nor can a Creature reward another with Eternal Life, which consists in Communion with God, which none but God can bestow.

* Maccovii Colleg. Theolog. Disp. 18. p. 12, 13.

II. Thing, Wherein the Dominion of God is founded.

1. On the Excellency of his Nature. Indeed a bare Excellency of Nature bespeaks a fitness for Government, but doth not properly convey a right of Government. Excellency speaks aptitude, not Title: A Subject may have more Wisdom than the Prince, and be fitter to hold the Reins of Government, but he hath not a Title to Royalty. A Man of large Capacity, and strong Vertue, is fit to serve his Country in Parliament, but the Election of the People conveys a Title to him. Yet a strain of Intellectual and Moral Abilities beyond others, is a Foundation for Dominion. And it is commonly seen that such Eminences in Men, though they do not invest them with a Civil Authority, or an Authority of Jurisdiction, yet they create a Veneration in the Minds of Men; their Vertue attracts Reverence, and their Advice is regarded as an Oracle. Old Men by their Age, when stored with more Wisdom and Knowledge by reason of their long experience, acquire a kind of power over the younger in their Dictates and Counsels, so that they gain by the strength of that Excellency a real Authority in the Minds of those Men they converse with, and possess themselves of a deep respect from them. God therefore being an incomprehensible Ocean of all Perfection, and possessing infinitely all those Vertues, that may lay a Claim to Dominion, hath the first Foundation of it in his own Nature. His incomparable and unparallel'd Excellency, as well as the Greatness of his Work, attracts the voluntary Worship of him as a Sovereign Lord, Psal. 86. 8. Among the Gods there is none like unto thee, neither are there any Works like unto thy Work. All Nations shall come and Worship before thee. Though his Benefits are great Engagements to our Obedience, and Affection, yet his infinite Majesty and Perfection requires the first place in our Acknowledgments and Adorations. Upon this account God claims it, Isa. 46. 9. I am God, and there is none like me, I will do all my pleasure: And the Prophet Jeremy upon the same account acknowledgeth it, Jer. 10. 6, 7. Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, Oh Lord, thou art great, and thy name is great in might: Who would not fear thee, O King of Nations? For to thee doth it appertain: Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee. And this is a more noble Title of Dominion, it being an uncreated Title, and more eminent than that of Creation or Preservation. * This is the natural Order God hath plac'd in his Creatures, that the more excellent should rule the inferiour. He committed not the Government of lower Creatures to Lions and Tygers, that have a delight in Blood, but no knowledge of Vertue; but to man, who had an eminence in his Nature above other Creatures, and was formed with a perfect rectitude, and a height of reason to guide the Reins over them. In Man the Soul being of a more sublime nature, is set of right to rule over the Body; the Mind, the most excellent Faculty of the Soul, to rule over the other Powers of it; and Wisdom the most excellent habit of the Mind, to guide and regulate that in its determinations; and when the Body and sensitive Appetite controul the Soul and Mind, 'tis an Usurpation against Nature, not a Rule according to Nature; the Excellency therefore of the Divine Nature is the natural Foundation for his Dominion. He hath Wisdom to know what is fit for him to do, and an immutable Righteousness whereby he cannot do any thing base and unworthy. He hath a fore-knowledge whereby he is able to order all things to answer his own glorious Deſigns, and the end of his Government; that nothing can go awry, nothing put him to a ſtand, and conſtrain him to meditate new Counſels.

* Camero p. 271. Amyrald Differt. p. 72, 73.

* So that if it could be ſuppoſed, that the World had not been created by him, that the parts of it had met together by chance, and been compacted into ſuch a Body; none but God the ſupream and moſt excellent being in the World, could have merited, and deſervedly challenged the Government of it: Becauſe nothing had an Excellency of Nature, to capacitate it for it, as he hath, or to enter into a Conteſt with him for a Sufficiency to govern.

2. 'Tis founded in his Act of Creation. He is the Sovereign Lord, as he is the Almighty Creator. The Relation of an entire Creator induceth the Relation of an abſolute Lord; he that gives Being, Life, Motion, that is the ſole cauſe of the Being of a thing, which was before nothing, that hath nothing to concur with him, nothing to aſſiſt him, but by his ſole Power commands it to ſtand up into Being, is the unqueſtionable Lord and Proprietor of that thing, that hath no dependance but upon him. And by this Act of Creation which extended to all things, he became univerſal Sovereign over all things. And thoſe that wave the Excellency of his Nature as the Foundation of his Government, eaſily acknowledge the ſufficiency of it upon his actual Creation. His Dominion of Juriſdiction reſults from Creation. When God himſelf makes an Oration in defence of his Sovereignty, Job 38. His chief Arguments are drawn from Creation, and Pſal. 95. 3, 5. The Lord is a great King above all Gods, the Sea is his, and he made it. And ſo the Apoſtle in his Sermon to the Athenians. As he made the World and all things therein, he is ſtiled Lord of Heaven and Earth, Acts 17. 24. His Dominion alſo of property ſtands upon this Baſis, Pſal. 89. 7. The Heavens are thine, the Earth alſo is thine, as for the World and the fulneſs thereof thou haſt founded them. Upon this Title of forming Iſrael as a Creature, or rather as a Church, he demands their Service to him as their Sovereign. Oh Jacob and Iſrael, thou art my Servant, I have formed thee, thou art my Servant, Oh Iſrael, Iſaiah 44. 21. The Sovereignty of God naturally ariſeth from the Relation of all things to himſelf as their intire Creator, and their natural and inſeparable dependance upon him in regard of their Being and well Beings. It depends not upon the Election of Men; God hath a natural Dominion over us as Creatures, before he hath a Dominion by conſent over us as Converts. As ſoon as ever any thing began to be a Creature, it was a Vaſſal to God, as a Lord. Every Man is acknowledged to have a right of poſſeſſing what he hath made, and a power of Dominion over what he hath fram'd. He may either cheriſh his own work, or daſh it in pieces; he may either add a greater comlineſs to it, or deface what he hath already imparted. He hath a right of property in it; no other Man can without injury pilfer his own Work from him. The Work hath no Propriety in its ſelf: the right muſt lie in the immediate framer, or in the Perſon that imployed him. The Firſt Cauſe of every thing hath an unqueſtionable Dominion of Propriety in it upon the ſcore as Juſtice. By the Law of Nations, the firſt finder of a Country is eſteemed the rightful Poſſeſſor, and Lord of that Country, and the firſt Inventor of an Art hath a right of exerciſing it. If a Man hath a juſt claim of Dominion over that thing, whoſe Materials were not of his framing, but from only the addition of a new Figure from his Skill; as a Limner over his Picture, the Cloth whereof he never made, nor the Colours wherewith he draws it, were ever endued by him with their diſtinct Qualities, but only he applies them by his Art, to compoſe ſuch a Figure; much more hath God a rightful claim of Dominion over his Creatures, whoſe entire Being both in Matter and Form, and every Particle of their Excellency was breathed out by the Word of his Mouth. He did not only give the Matter a Form, but beſtowed upon the Matter it ſelf a Being; it was formed by none to his hand, as the Matter is on which an Artiſt works. He had the Being of all things in his own Power, and it was at his Choice whether he would impart it or no; there can be no juſter and ſtronger ground of a claim than this. A Man hath a right to a piece of Braſs, or Gold by his purchaſe, but when by his engraving he hath form'd it into an excellent Statue, there reſults an increaſe of his Right upon the account of his Artifice. God's Creation of the Matter of Man gave him a Right over Man; but his Creation of him in ſo eminent an Excellency, with reaſon to guide him, a clear Eye of Underſtanding to diſcern Light from Darkneſs, and Truth from Falſhood, a freedom of Will to act accordingly, and an original Righteouſneſs as the varniſh and beauty of all: Here is the ſtrongeſt foundation for a claim of Authority over Man; and the ſtrongeſt Obligation on Man for ſubjection to God. If all thoſe things had been paſt over to God by another hand, he could not be the ſupream Lord, nor could have an abſolute Right to diſpoſe of them at his pleaſure: That would have been the Invaſion of another's Right. Beſides, Creation is the only firſt Diſcovery of his Dominion. * Before the World was framed there was nothing but God himſelf, and properly nothing is ſaid to have Dominion over its ſelf; this is a Relative Attribute, reflecting on the Works of God. He had a right of Dominion in his Nature from Eternity, but before Creation he was actually Lord only of a nullity: Where there is nothing, it can have no Relation, nothing is not the ſubject of Poſſeſſion nor of Dominion. There could be no exerciſe of this Dominion without Creation; What exerciſe can a Sovereign have without Subjects? Sovereignty ſpeaks a Relation to Subjects; and none is properly a Sovereign, without Subjects. To conclude from hence doth reſult God's univerſal Dominion: For being maker of all, he is the Ruler of all. And his perpetual Dominion: For as long as God continues in the Relation of Creator, the Right of his Sovereignty as Creator cannot be aboliſh'd.

* Stoughton Righteous Mans Plea, Serm. 6. p. 28.

3. As God is the final Cauſe, or End of all, he is Lord of all. * The End hath a greater Sovereignty in actions, than the Actor it ſelf: The Actor hath a Sovereignty over others in action, but the end for which any one works hath a Sovereignty over the Agent himſelf. A Limner hath a Sovereignty over the Picture he is framing, or hath fram'd, but the end for which he fram'd it, either his profit he deſign'd from it, or the Honour and Credit of Skill he aim'd at in it, hath a Dominion over the Limner himſelf. The end moves, and excites the Artiſt to work, it ſpirits him in it, conducts him in his whole buſineſs, poſſeſſes his Mind, and ſits triumphant in him in all the progreſs of his work; 'Tis the firſt cauſe for which the whole work is wrought. Now God in his actual Creation of all, is the Sovereign end of all; For thy pleaſure they are, and were created, Rev. 4. 11. The Lord hath made all things for himſelf, Prov. 16. 4. Man indeed is the ſubordinate and immediate end of the lower Creation: And therefore had the Dominion over other Creatures granted to him. But God being the ultimate and principal end, hath the Sovereign and principal Dominion; all things as much refer to him as the laſt end, as they flow from him as the firſt Cauſe. So that as I ſaid before, if the World had been compacted together by a jumbling jumbling chance without a wiſe hand, as ſome have fooliſhly imagined, none could have been an Antagoniſt with God for the government of the World, but God in regard of the Excellency of his Nature, would have been the Rector of it, unleſs thoſe Atomes that had compoſed the World, had had an ability to govern it. Since there could be no univerſal end of all things but God, God only can claim an intire right to the Government of it: For though Man be the end of the lower Creation, yet Man is not the end of himſelf, and his own Being, he is not the end of the Creation of the ſupream Heavens, he is not able to govern them, they are out of his ken, and out of his reach. None fit in regard of the Excellency of Nature, to be the chief end of the whole World but God: And therefore none can have a right to the Dominion of it but God. In this regard God's Dominion differs from the Dominion of all Earthly Potentates. All the Subjects in Creation were made for God as their end, ſo are not People for Rulers, but Rulers made for People for their Protection, and the Preſervation of order in Societies.

* Vid. Leſſium de perfect. Divin. p. 77. 78.

4. The Dominion of God is founded upon his preſervation of things, Pſal. 95.3,4. The Lord is a great King above all Gods, Why? In his hand are all the deep places of the Earth. While his hand holds things, his hand hath a Dominion over them. He that holds a ſtone in the Air, exerciſeth a Dominion over its natural Inclination in hindring it from falling. The Creature depends wholly upon God in its Preſervation; as ſoon as that Divine hand which ſuſtains every thing, were withdrawn, a languiſhment and ſwooning would be the next turn in the Creature. He is call'd Lord, Adonai in regard of his ſuſtentation of all things by his continual influx. The Word coming of אדן which ſignifies a baſis or pillar, that ſupports a Building. God is the Lord of all, as he is the ſuſtainer of all by his Power, as well as the Creator of all by his Word. The Sun hath a Sovereign Dominion over its own beams, which depend upon it, ſo that if he withdraws himſelf, they all attend him, and the World is left in darkneſs. God maintains the vigour of all things, conducts them in their Operations; ſo that nothing that they are, nothing that they have, but is owing to this preſerving Power. The Maſter of this great Family may as well be called the Lord of it, ſince every Member of it depends upon him for the ſupport of that being, he firſt gave them, and holds of his Empire. As the right to govern reſulted from Creation, ſo it is perpetuated by the preſervation of things.

5. The Dominion of God is ſtrengthened by the innumerable benefits he beſtows upon his Creatures. The Benefits he confers upon us after Creation, are not the original ground of his Dominion. A Man hath not Authority over his Servant from the Kindneſs he ſhews to him, but his Authority commenceth before any Act of Kindneſs, and is founded upon a right of purchaſe, conqueſt, or compact. Dominion doth not depend upon meer benefits: Then Inferiours might have Dominion over Superiours. A Peaſant may ſave the Life of a Prince, to whom he was not ſubject; he hath not therefore a right to ſtep up into his Throne, and give Laws to him. And Children that maintain their Parents in their Poverty, might then acquire an Authority over them, which they can never climb to: Becauſe the benefits they confer, cannot parallel the benefits they have received from the Authors of their Lives. The Bounties of God to us add nothing to the intrinſick right of his natural Dominion, they being the Effects of that Sovereignty, as he is a Rewarder and Governour. As the benefits a Prince beſtows upon his Favourite increaſes not that right of Authority, which is inherent in the Crown: But ſtrengthens that Dominion, as it ſtands in relation to the Receiver, by increaſing the Obligation of the Favourite to an Obſervance of him, not only as his natural Prince, but his gracious Benefactor. The Beneficence of God adds, though not an original Right of Power, yet a Foundation of a ſtronger upbraiding the Creature, if he walk in a Violation and Forgetfulneſs of thoſe benefits, and pull in pieces that ingenuous Duty they call for; and an Occaſion of exerciſing of Juſtice in puniſhing the Delinquent; which is a part of his Empire, Iſaiah 1.2. Hear O Heavens, and give Ear O Earth, the Lord hath ſpoken, I have nouriſhed Children, and they have rebelled againſt me. Thus the fundamental Right as Creator, is made more indiſputable by his Relation as a Benefactor, and more as being ſo after a Forfeiture of what was enjoyed by Creation. The benefits of God are innumerable, and ſo magnificent, that they cannot meet with any Compenſation from the Creature: And therefore do neceſſarily require a ſubmiſſion from the Creature, and an Acknowledgment of Divine Authority. But that benefit of Redemption doth add a ſtronger Right of Dominion to God: Since he hath not only as a Creator given them Being, and Life as his Creatures, but paid a price, the price of his Sons Blood for their reſcue from Captivity, ſo that he hath a Sovereignty of Grace as well as Nature, and the ranſom'd ones belong to him as Redeemer, as well as Creator, 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20. Ye are not your own: For ye are bought with a price, therefore your Body and your Spirit are God's. By this he acquir'd a Right of another kind, and bought us from that uncontroulable Lordſhip, we affected over our ſelves by the Sin of Adam, that he might uſe us as his own peculiar, for his own Glory and Service. By this Redemption there reſults to God a Right over our Bodies, over our Spirits, over our Services, as well as by Creation, and to ſhew the ſtrength of this Right, the Apoſtle repeats it; you are bought, a purchaſe cannot be without a price paid; but he adds price alſo [bought with a price.] To ſtrengthen the Title. Purchaſe gave him a new Right; and the greatneſs of the Price eſtabliſhed that Right. The More a Man pays for a thing, the more uſually we ſay, he deſerves to have it, he hath paid enough for it. It was indeed price enough, and too much for ſuch vile Creatures as we are.

III. The Third thing is, The Nature of this Dominion.

1. This Dominion is Independent. His Throne is in the Heavens; the Heavens depend not upon the Earth, nor God upon his Creatures. Since he is Independent in regard of his Eſſence, he is ſo in his Dominion, which flows from the Excellency and Fulneſs of his Eſſence. As he receives his Eſſence from none, ſo he derives his Dominion from none. All other Dominion except paternal Authority, is rooted originally in the Wills of Men. * The firſt Title was the Conſent of the People, or the Conqueſt of others by the help of thoſe People that firſt conſented. And in the Exerciſe of it, earthly Dominion depends upon Aſſiſtance of the Subjects, and the Members being join'd with the Head carry on the work of Government, and prevent Civil Diſſentions; in the ſupport of it, it depends upon the Subjects Contributions, and Taxes. The Subjects in their ſtrength are the Arms, and in their Purſes the Sinews of Government. But God depends upon none in the Foundation of his Government; he is not a Lord by the Votes of his Vaſſals. Nor is it ſucceſſively handed to him by any Predeceſſor, nor conſtituted by the Power of a Superiour. Nor forced he his way by War, and Conqueſt, nor precariouſly attained it by Suit or Flattery, or bribing Promiſes. He holds not the Right of his Empire from any other; he hath no Superior to hand him to his

* Raynaud. Theolog. Natural. p. 760, 761, 762.

Throne, and ſettle him by Commiſſion. He is therefore called King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, having none above him. A great King above all Gods, Pſal. 95. 3. Needing no Licence from any when to act, nor direction how to act, or aſſiſtance in his action: He owes not any of thoſe to any perſon; he was not ordered by any other to create, and therefore receives not Orders from any other to rule over what he hath created. He received not his Power and Wiſdom from another, and therefore is not ſubject to any for the Rule of his Government. He only made his own Subjects, and from himſelf hath the ſole Authority; his own Will was the cauſe of their Beings, and his own Will is the director of their actions. He is not determined by his Creatures, in any of his Motions, but determines the Creatures in all. His Actions are not regulated by any Law without him, but by a Law within him, the Law of his own Nature. 'Tis impoſſible he can have any Rule without himſelf: Becauſe there is nothing Superior to himſelf. Nor doth he depend upon any in the Exerciſe of his Government, he needs no Servants in it, when he uſes Creatures it is not out of want of their help, but for the Manifeſtation of his Wiſdom and Power. What he doth by his Subjects, he can do by himſelf: The Government is upon his Shoulder, Iſaiah 9. 6. To ſhew that he needs not any ſupporters. All other Governments flow from him, all other Authorities depend upon him; Dei Gratia, or Dei Providentia is in the Style of Princes. As their Being is derived from his Power, ſo their Authority is but a branch of his Dominion. They are Governors by Divine Providence; God is Governor by his ſole nature. All Motions depend upon the firſt Heaven, which moves all; but that depends upon nothing. The Government of Chriſt depends upon God's increated Dominion, and is by Commiſſion from him; Chriſt aſſum'd not this Honour to himſelf, But he that ſaid unto him thou art my Son, beſtow'd it upon him. He put all things under his feet, but not himſelf, 1 Cor. 15. 27. When he ſaith all things are put under him, he is excepted, which did put all things under him. He ſits ſtill as an Independent Governour upon his Throne.

2. This Dominion is Abſolute. If his Throne be in the Heavens, there is nothing to controul him. If he be Independent, he muſt needs be Abſolute; ſince he hath no cauſe in Conjunction with him as Creator, that can ſhare with him in his Right, or reſtrain him in the Diſpoſal of his Creature. His Authority is unlimited: in this regard the Title of Lord becomes not any but God properly. Tiberius thought none of the beſt, though one of the ſubtileſt Princes, accounted the Title of Lord a Reproach to him: Since he was not abſolute.*

* Sueton de Tiberio cap. 27.

1. Abſolute in regard of Freedom and Liberty.

1. Thus Creation is a work of meer Sovereignty; he Created, becauſe it was his pleaſure to create, Rev. 4. 11. He is not neceſſitated to do this or that. He might have choſen, whether he would have fram'd an Earth, and Heavens, and laid the Foundations of his Chambers in the Waters. He was under no Obligation, to reduce things from nullity to exiſtence.

2. Preſervation is the fruit of his Sovereignty. When he had called the World to ſtand out, he might have ordered it to return into its dark Den of nothingneſs, ript up every part of its Foundation, or have given Being to many more Creatures than he did. If you conſider his abſolute Sovereignty, why might he not have deveſted Adam preſently of thoſe rational Perfections, wherewith he had endowed him? And might he not have metamorphos'd him into ſome Beaſt, and elevated ſome Beaſt into a rational Nature? Why might he not have degraded an Angel to a Worm, and advanc'd a Worm to the Nature and Condition of an Angel? Why might he not have revok'd that grant of Dominion, which he had paſſed to Man over all Creatures? It was free to him to permit Sin to enter into the Earth, or to have excluded it out of the Earth, as he doth out of Heaven.

3. Redemption is a fruit of his Sovereignty. By his abſolute Sovereignty he might have confirmed all the Angels in their ſtanding by Grace, and prevented the revolt of any of their Members from him; and when there was a revolt both in Heaven and Earth, it was free to him, to have call'd out his Son to aſſume the Angelical, as well as the Humane Nature, or have exerciſed his Dominion in the deſtruction of Men and Devils, rather than in the Redemption of any; he was under no Obligation to reſtore either the one or the other.

4. May he not impoſe what terms he pleaſes? May he not impoſe what Laws he pleaſe, and exact what he will of his Creatures without promiſing any Rewards? May he not uſe his own for his own Honour, as well as Men uſe for their Credit what they do poſſeſs by his Indulgence?

5. Affliction is an Act of his Sovereignty. By this Right of Sovereignty may not God take away any Man's Goods, ſince they were his Doles? As he was not indebted to us, when he beſtow'd them, ſo he cannot wrong us, when he removes them. He takes from us what is more his own, than it is ours, and was never ours but by his Gift, and that for a time only, not for ever. By this Right, he may determine our times, put a period to our days, when he pleaſes, ſtrip us of one Member, and lop off another. Man's being was from him, and why ſhould he not have a Sovereignty to take, what he had a Sovereignty to give? Why ſhould this ſeem ſtrange to any of us, ſince we our ſelves exerciſe an abſolute Dominion over thoſe things in our Poſſeſſion, which have ſenſe and feeling; as well as over thoſe that want it? Doth not every Man think he hath an Abſolute Authority over the Utenſils of his Houſe, over his Horſe, his Dog, to preſerve, or kill him, to do what he pleaſe with him, without rendring any other reaſon, than 'tis my own? May not God do much more? Doth not his Dominion over the Work of his hands tranſcend that which a Man can claim over his Beaſt, that he never gave Life unto? He that dares diſpute againſt God's Abſolute Right, fancies himſelf as much a God as his Creator; underſtands not the vaſt difference between the Divine Nature and his own; between the Sovereignty of God and his own, which is all the Theam God himſelf diſcourſeth upon in thoſe ſtately Chapters, Job 38, 39, &c. Not mentioning a word of Job's Sin, but only vindicating the Rights of his own Authority. Nor doth Job in his reply, Job 40. 4. ſpeak of his Sin, but of his natural Vileneſs as a Creature in the Preſence of his Creator.

By this Right God unſtops the Bottles of Heaven in one place, and ſtops them in another, cauſing it to Rain upon one City and not upon another, Amos 4. 7. Ordering the Clouds to move to this or that quarter, where he hath a mind to be a Benefactor or a Judge.

6. Unequal Diſpenſations are Acts of his Sovereignty. By this Right he is patient toward thoſe, whoſe Sins by the common Voice of Men deſerve ſpeedy Judgments, and pours out pain upon thoſe, that are patterns of Vertue to the World. By this he gives ſometimes the worſt of Men an Ocean of Wealth and Honour to ſwim in, and reduceth an uſeful and exemplary Grace to a ſcanty Poverty. By this he Rules the Kingdoms of men, and ſets a Crown upon the Head of the baſeſt of men, Dan. 4. 17. While he depoſeth another, that ſeem'd to deſerve a weightier Diadem. This is, as he is the Lord of the Ammunition of his Thunders, and the Treaſures of his Bounty.

7. He may inflict what torments he pleaſes. Some ſay by this right of Sovereignty he may inflict what torments he pleaſeth upon an innocent perſon; which indeed will not bear the nature of a puniſhment as an effect of Juſtice, without the ſuppoſal of a crime; but a torment as an effect of that Sovereign Right he hath over his Creature, which is as abſolute over his work, as the Potters power is over his own clay, Jerem. 18. 6. Rom. 9. 21. *May not the Potter after his labour, either ſet his veſſel up to adorn his Houſe, or knock it in pieces, and fling it upon the Dunghill; ſeparate it to ſome noble uſe, or condemn it to ſome ſordid Service? Is the right of God over his Creatures leſs than that of the Potter over his Veſſel, ſince God contributed all to his Creature, but the Potter never made the Clay, which is the ſubſtance of the Veſſel, nor the Water which was neceſſary, to make it tractable, but only moulded the ſubſtance of it into ſuch a ſhape? The Veſſel that is fram'd, and the Potter that frames it differ only in Life, the Body of the Potter whereby he executes his Authority, is of no better a mould than the Clay the matter of his Veſſel; ſhall he have ſo abſolute a power over that, which is ſo near him, and ſhall not God over that which is ſo infinitely diſtant from him? The Veſſel perhaps might plead for it ſelf, that it was once part of the Body of a Man, and as good as the Potter himſelf; whereas no Creature can plead, it was part of God, and as good as God himſelf. Though there be no Man in the World, but deſerves affliction, yet the Scripture ſometimes lays affliction upon the ſcore of God's Dominion, without any reſpect to the ſin of the afflicted perſon, James 5. 15. Speaking of a ſick perſon, if he have committed ſins they ſhall be forgiven him, whereby is implied, that he might be ſtruck into ſickneſs by God, without any reſpect to a particular ſin, but in a way of Tryal; and that his affliction ſprung not from any exerciſe of Divine Juſtice, but from his abſolute Sovereignty. And ſo in the caſe of the blind man, when the Diſciples askt, for what ſin it was, whether for his own, or his Parents Sin he was born blind, John 9. 3. Neither hath this man ſinned nor his Parents; which ſpeaks in its ſelf not againſt the whole current of Scripture; but the words import thus much, that God in this blindneſs from the birth, neither reſpected any ſin of the Man's own, nor of his Parents, but he did it as an abſolute Sovereign, to manifeſt his own Glory in that miraculous Cure, which was wrought by Chriſt. Though afflictions do not happen without the deſert of the Creature, yet ſome afflictions may be ſent without any particular reſpect to that deſert, meerly for the manifeſtation of God's Glory, ſince the Creature was made for God himſelf and his honour, and therefore may be uſed in a ſerviceableneſs to the Glory of the Creator.

*Leſſius de perfect. Divin. p. 66, 67.

2. His Dominion is abſolute in regard of unlimitedneſs by any Law without him. He is an abſolute Monarch, that makes Laws for his Subjects, but is not bound by any himſelf, nor receives any Rules and Laws from his Subjects for the Management of his Government. But moſt Governments in the World are bounded by Laws made by common Conſent. But when Kings are not limited by the Laws of their Kingdoms, yet they are bounded by the Law of Nature, and by the Providence of God. But God is under no Law without himſelf, his Rule is within him, the Rectitude and Righteouſneſs of his own Nature, he is not under that Law he hath preſcribed to Man. The Law was not made for a Righteous Man, 1 Tim. 1. 9. Much leſs for a Righteous God. God is his own Law, his own Nature is his Rule; as his own Glory is his End, himſelf is his End, and himſelf is his Law. He is moved by nothing without himſelf, nothing hath the Dominion of a Motive over him, but his own Will, which is his Rule for all his Actions in Heaven and Earth. Dan. 4. 32. He rules in the Kingdom of Men, and gives it to whomſoever he will. And Rom. 9. 18. He hath Mercy on whom he will have Mercy; As all things are wrought by him, according to his own Eternal Ideas in his own mind, ſo all is wrought by him according to the inward Motive in his own Will, which was the Manifeſtation of his own Honour. The greateſt Motives therefore that the beſt Perſons have uſed, when they have pleaded for any Grant from God, was his own Glory, which would be advanced by an Anſwer of their Petition.

3. His Dominion is Abſolute in regard of Supremacy and uncontroulableneſs. None can implead him, and cauſe him to render a reaſon of his actions. He is the Sovereign King, Who may ſay unto him what doſt thou? Eccleſ. 8. 4. 'Tis an abſurd thing for any to diſpute with God, Rom. 9. 20. Who art thou, O Man, that replyeſt againſt God? Thou a Man, a piece of Duſt, to argue with God, incomprehenſibly above thy Reaſon, about the reaſon of his Works. Let the Potſheard ſtrive with the Potſheards of the Earth, but not with him that faſhioned them, Iſaiah 45. 9. In all the deſolations he works, he aſſerts his own Supremacy to ſilence men, Pſal. 46. 10. Be ſtill, and know, that I am God. Beware of any quarrelling motions in your minds, 'tis ſufficient that I am God, that is, ſupream, and will not be impleaded, and cenſur'd, or worded with by any Creature about what I do. He is not bound to render a reaſon of any of his proceedings. Subjects are accountable to their Princes, and Princes to God, God to none; ſince he is not limited by any Superior, his Prerogative is Supream.

4. His Dominion is Abſolute in regard of Irreſiſtibleneſs. Other Governments are bounded by Law, ſo that what a Governour hath ſtrength to do, he hath not a right to do. Other Governours have a limited ability, that what they have a right to do, they have not always a ſtrength to do, they may want a power, to execute their own Counſels. But God is deſtitute of neither; he hath an infinite right, and an infinite Strength; his word is a Law, he commands things to ſtand out of nothing, and they do ſo. He commanded, or ſpake ὁ ἐπέταξε, light to ſhine out of darkneſs, 2 Cor. 4. 6. There is no diſtance of time between his Word, Let there be Light, and there was Light, Gen. 1. 3. Magiſtrates often uſe not their Authority for fear of giving occaſion to Inſurrections, which may over-turn their Empire. But if the Lord will work, Who ſhall let it? Iſaiah 43. 19. And if God will not work, who ſhall force him? He can check, and overturn all other Powers, his Decrees cannot be ſtopped, nor his Hand held back by any; if he wills to daſh the whole World in pieces, no Creature can maintain its Being againſt his Order. He ſets the Ordinances of the Heavens, and the Dominion thereof in the Earth. And ſends Lightnings, that they may go and ſay unto him, here we are, Job 38. 33, 34.

3. Yet this Dominion, though it be Abſolute, is not Tyrannical; but 'tis managed by the Rules of Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs, and Goodneſs. If his Throne be in the Heavens, it is Pure, and Good: becauſe the Heavens are the pureſt Parts of the Creation, and influence by their Goodneſs, the lower Earth. Since he is his own Rule, and his Nature is infinitely Wiſe, Holy, and Righteous, he cannot do a thing but what is unqueſtionably agreeable with

Wiſdom,

Wiſdom, Juſtice, and Purity. In all the Exerciſes of his Soveraigh Right, he is never unattended with thoſe Perfections of his Nature. Might not God by his abſolute Power have pardon'd Mens Guilt, and thrown the invading Sin out of his Creatures? But in regard of his Truth pawn'd in his Threatning, and in regard of his Juſtice, which demanded Satisfaction, he would not. Might not God by his abſolute Soveraignty, admit a Man into his Friendſhip, without giving him any Grace? But in regard of the Incongruity of ſuch an Act to his Wiſdom and Holineſs, he will not. May he not by his abſolute Power, refuſe to accept a Man that deſires to pleaſe him, and reject a purely innocent Creature? But in regard of his Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs he will not. Though innocence be amiable in its own Nature, yet it is not neceſſary in regard of God's Soveraignty, that he ſhould love it; but in regard of his Goodneſs it is neceſſary, and he will never do otherwiſe. As God never acts to the utmoſt of his Power, ſo he never exerts the utmoſt of his Soveraignty: becauſe it would be inconſiſtent with thoſe other Properties, which render him perfectly adorable to the Creature. As no intelligent Creature, neither Angel nor Man, can be framed without a Law in his Nature; ſo we cannot imagine God without a Law in his own Nature, unleſs we would fancy him a rude, tyrannical, fooliſh Being, that hath nothing of Holineſs, Goodneſs, Righteouſneſs, Wiſdom. If he made the Heavens in Wiſdom, Pſal. 136. 5. He made them by ſome Rule, not by a meer Will, but a Rule within himſelf, not without. A wiſe Work is never the reſult of an abſolute unguided Will.

1. This Dominion is managed by the Rule of Wiſdom. What may appear to us, to have no other Spring than abſolute Sovereignty, would be found to have a Depth of amazing Wiſdom and accountable Reaſon, were our ſhort Capacities long enough to fathom it. When the Apoſtle had been diſcourſing of the eternal Counſels of God, in ſeizing upon one Man, and letting go another, in rejecting the Jews, and gathering in the Gentiles, which appears to us to be Reſults only of an abſolute Dominion, yet he reſolves not thoſe amazing Acts into that, without taking it for granted, that they were govern'd by exact Wiſdom, though beyond his Ken to ſee, and his Line to ſound. Rom. 11. 33. Oh the depth of the Riches both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God; how unſearchable are his Judgments, and his Ways paſt finding out? There are ſome things in Matters of State that may ſeem to be Acts of meer Will, but if we were acquainted with the Arcana Imperii, the inward Engines which moved them, and the Ends aimed at in thoſe Undertakings, we might find a rich Vein of Prudence in them, to incline us to judge otherwiſe than bare arbitrary Proceedings. The other Attributes of Power and Goodneſs are more eaſily perceptible in the Works of God, than his Wiſdom. The firſt view of the Creation ſtrikes us with this Sentiment, that the Author of this great Fabrick was mighty and beneficial; but his Wiſdom lies deeper, than to be diſcern'd at the firſt Glance, without a diligent Enquiry. As at the firſt caſting our Eyes upon the Sea, we behold its Motion, Colour, and ſomething of its Vaſtneſs, but we cannot preſently fathom the Depth of it, and underſtand thoſe lower Fountains, that ſupply that great Ocean of Waters: 'Tis part of God's Soveraignty, as it is of the wiſeſt Princes, that he hath a Wiſdom beyond the reach of his Subjects; 'tis not for a finite Nature to underſtand an infinite Wiſdom, nor for a fooliſh Creature, that hath loſt his Underſtanding by the Fall, to judge of the Reaſon of the Methods of a wiſe Counſellor. Yet thoſe Actions that favour moſt of Sovereignty, preſent Men with ſome Glances of his Wiſdom. Was it meer Will, that he ſuffered ſome Angels to fall? But his Wiſdom was in it for the Manifeſtation of his Juſtice; as it was alſo in the Caſe of Pharaoh. Was it meer Will that he ſuffered Sin to be committed by Man? Was not his Wiſdom in this for the Diſcovery of his Mercy, which never had been known without that, which ſhould render a Creature miſerable? Rom. 11. 32. He hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. Though God had ſuch an abſolute Right to have annihilated the World, as ſoon as ever he had made it, yet how had this conſiſted with his Wiſdom, to have erected a Creature after his own Image one Day, and deſpis'd it ſo much the next, as to caſhier it from Being? What Wiſdom had it been, to make a thing only to deſtroy it? To repent of his Work as ſoon as ever it came out of his Hands, without any Occaſion offered by the Creature. If God be ſuppoſed to be Creator, he muſt be ſuppoſed to have an End in Creation; what End can that be but Himſelf and his own Glory, the Manifeſtation of the Perfection of his Nature? What Perfection could have been diſcovered in ſo quick an annihilation, but that of his Power in Creating, and of his Soveraignty in ſnatching away the Being of his Rational Creature, before it had laid the Methods of Acting? What Wiſdom to make a World and a reaſonable Creature for no Uſe? Not to praiſe and honour him, but to be broken in pieces and deſtroy'd by him?

2. His Soveraignty is managed according to the Rule of Righteouſneſs. Worldly Princes often fancy Tyranny and Oppreſſion to be the chief Marks of Soveraignty, and think their Scepters not beautiful, till died in Blood, nor the Throne ſecure, till eſtabliſhed upon ſlain Carcaſſes. But Juſtice and Judgment are the Foundation of the Throne of God, Pſal. 89. 14. Alluding perhaps to the Supporters of Arms, and Thrones, which among Princes are the Figures of Lions, Emblems of Courage, as Solomon had, 1 Kings 10. 19. But God makes not ſo much Might, as Right the ſupport of his. He ſits on a Throne of Holineſs, Pſal. 47. 8. As he Reigns over the Heathens, referring to the calling of the Gentiles after the rejecting of the Jews; the Pſalmiſt here praiſing the Righteouſneſs of it, as the Apoſtle had the unſearchable Wiſdom of it. Rom. 11. 33. In all his ways he is righteous, Pſal. 145. 17. In his Ways of Terror, as well as thoſe of Sweetneſs; in thoſe Works wherein little elſe but that of his Soveraignty appears to us. 'Tis always linkt with his Holineſs, that he will not do by his abſolute Right any thing but what is conformable to it: ſince his Dominion is founded upon the Excellency of his Nature, he will not do any thing but what is agreeable to it, and becoming his other perfections. Though he be an abſolute Sovereign, he is not an Arbitrary Governour; Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right? Gen. 18. 25. i. e. 'Tis impoſſible, but he ſhould act righteouſly in every punctilio of his Government, ſince his Righteouſneſs capacitates him to be a Judge, not a Tyrant of all the Earth. The Heathen Poets repreſented their chief God Jupiter with Themis, or Right, ſitting by him upon his Throne in all his Orders. God cannot by his abſolute Sovereignty command ſome things: Becauſe they are directly againſt unchangeableneſs as to command a Creature to hate, or blaſpheme the Creator, not to own him, nor praiſe him. It would be a manifeſt unrighteouſneſs, to order the Creature not to own him, upon whom he depends both in its Being and well Being: This would be againſt that natural Duty, which is indiſpenſably due from every rational Creature to God. This would be to order him, to lay aſide his

Reaſon

Reaſon while he retains it, to diſown him to be the Creator, while Man remains his Creature. This is repugnant to the Nature of God, and the true Nature of the Creature: Or to exact any thing of Man, but what he had given him a Capacity, in his original Nature to perform. If any Command were above our natural Power, it would be unrighteous; as to command a Man to graſp the Globe of the Earth, to ſtride over the Sea, to lave out the Waters of the Ocean; theſe things are impoſſible, and become not the Righteouſneſs and Wiſdom of God to enjoyn. There can be no Obligation on Man to an Impoſſibility. God had a free Dominion over Nullity, before the Creation, he could call it out into the Being of Man and Beaſt: But he could not do any thing in Creation Fooliſhly, becauſe of his infinite Wiſdom; nor could he by the Right of his abſolute Sovereignty make Man ſinful, becauſe of his infinite Purity. As it is impoſſible for him not to be Soveraign; 'tis impoſſible for him to deny his Deity, and his Purity. 'Tis lawful for God to do what he will; but his Will being ordered by the Righteouſneſs of his Nature, as Infinite as his Will, he cannot do any thing but what is Juſt: and therefore in his dealing with Men, you find him in Scripture ſubmitting the Reaſonableneſs and Equity of his Proceedings to the Judgment of his deprav'd Creatures, and the inward Dictates of their own Conſciences. Iſaiah 5. 3. And now, Oh inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and men of Judah, judge I pray you, between me and my Vineyard. Though God be the great Soveraign of the World, yet he acts not in a way of abſolute Soveraignty.

He rules by Law, he is a Lawgiver, as well as a King, Iſaiah 33. 22. It had been repugnant to the Nature of a Rational Creature, to be ruled otherwiſe; to be govern'd as a Beaſt, this had been to fruſtrate thoſe Faculties of Will and Underſtanding, which had been given him. To conclude this; when we ſay God cannot do this or that, or command this or that, his Authority is not bounded, and limited properly. Who can reaſonably detract from his Almightineſs, becauſe he cannot do any thing which ſavours of Weakneſs; and what detracting is it from his Authority, that he cannot do any thing unſeemly for the Dignity of his Nature? 'Tis rather from the Infiniteneſs of his Righteouſneſs than the Straitneſs of his Authority; at moſt it is but a voluntary bounding his Dominion by the Law of his own Holineſs.

3. His Soveraignty is managed according to the Rule of Goodneſs. Some Potentates there have been in the World, that have loved to ſuck the Blood, and drink the Tears of their Subjects, that would rule more by Fear than Love, * like Clearchas, the Tyrant of Heraclia, who bore the Figure of a Thunderbolt inſtead of a Scepter, and named his Son Thunder; thereby to tutor him, to terrify his Subjects. But as God's Throne is a Throne of Holineſs, ſo it is a Throne of Grace, Heb. 4. 16. A Throne encircled with a Rainbow. Revel. 4. 23. In ſight like to an Emerald. An Emblem of the Covenant, that hath the Pleaſantneſs of a Green Colour, delightful to the Eye, betokening Mercy. Though his Nature be infinitely excellent above us, and his Power infinitely tranſcendent over us, yet the Majeſty of his Government is temper'd with an unſpeakable Goodneſs. He acts not ſo much as an abſolute Lord, as a gracious Soveraign and obliging Benefactor. He delights not to make his Subjects Slaves. Exacts not of them any ſervile and fearful, but a generous and chearful Obedience. He requires them not to Fear or Worſhip him ſo much for his Power as his Goodneſs. He requires not of a Rational Creature any thing repugnant to the Honour, Dignity, and Principles of ſuch a Nature; not any thing that may ſhame, diſgrace it, and make it weary of its own Being, and the Service it owes to its Sovereign. He draws by the Cords of a Man; his Goodneſs renders his Laws as ſweet as Honey or the Honey-Comb to an unvitiated Palate, and a renew'd Mind. And tho' it be granted, he hath a full diſpoſe of his Creature, as the Potter of his Veſſel, and might by his abſolute Soveraignty, inflict upon an Innocent, an Eternal Torment, yet his Goodneſs will never permit him to uſe this Soveraign Right to the Hurt of a Creature, that deſerves it not. If God ſhould caſt an innocent Creature into the Furnace of his Wrath, who can queſtion him? But who can think that his Goodneſs will do ſo? ſince that is as infinite as his Authority? As not to puniſh the Sinner, would be a denial of his Juſtice, ſo to torment an Innocent, would be a denial of his Goodneſs. A Man hath an abſolute Power over his Beaſt, and may take away his Life, and put him to a great deal of Pain; but that moral Virtue of Pity and Tenderneſs would not permit him to uſe this right, but when it conduceth to ſome greater Good, than that can be Evil; either for the Good of Man, which is the End of the Creature, or for the Good of the poor Beaſt it ſelf, to rid him of a greater Miſery: None but a ſavage Nature, a Diſpoſition to be abhorr'd, would torture a poor Beaſt meerly for his Pleaſure. 'Tis as much againſt the Nature of God, to puniſh one Eternally, that hath not deſerved it, as it is to deny himſelf, and act any thing fooliſhly, and unbeſeeming his other Perfections, which render him Majeſtical, and Adorable. To afflict an innocent Creature for his own Good, or for the Good of the World, as in the caſe of the Redeemer, is ſo far from being againſt Goodneſs, that it is the higheſt Teſtimony of his tender Bowels to the Sons of Men. God, though he be Mighty, withdraws not his Eyes, i. e. his tender Reſpect from the Righteous, Job 36. 5, 7, 8, 9, 10. And if he bind them in Fetters, 'tis to ſhew them their Tranſgreſſions, and open their Ear to Diſcipline, and renewing Commands in a more ſenſible ſtrain, to depart from Iniquity. What was ſaid of Fabritius, you may as ſoon remove the Sun from his Courſe, as Fabritius from his Honeſty; may be of God, you may as ſoon daſh in Pieces his Throne, as ſeparate his Goodneſs from his Soveraignty.

4. Propoſition, This Soveraignty is extenſive over all Creatures. He rules all, as the Heavens do over the Earth. He is King of Worlds, King of Ages, as the World tranſlated Eternal ſignifies, 1 Tim. 1. 17. τῷ δὲ βασιλεῖ τῶν αἰώνων. And the ſame Word is tranſlated, Heb. 1. 2. By whom alſo he made the Worlds, the ſame Word is rendred Worlds, Heb. 11. 3. The Worlds were framed by the Word of God. God is King of Ages or Worlds, of the inviſible World, and the ſenſible, of all from the Beginning of their Creation, of whatſoever is meaſur'd by a time. It extends over Angels and Devils, over Wicked and Good, over Rational and Irrational Creatures; all things bow down under his Hand, nothing can be exempted from him: Becauſe there is nothing but was extracted by him from nothing into Being. All things Eſſentially depend upon him: And therefore muſt be Eſſentially ſubject to him; the Extent of his Dominion flows from the Perfection of his Eſſence, ſince his Effence is unlimited, his Royalty cannot be reſtrained. His Authority is as void of any Imperfection as his Eſſence is; it reaches out to all Points of the Heaven above, and the Earth below. Other Princes reign in a Spot of Ground. Every worldly Potentate hath the Confines of his Dominions. The Pyrenean Mountains divide France from Spain; and the Alpes, Italy from France. None are call'd Kings abſolutely, but Kings of this or that Place. But God is the King, the ſpacious Firmament limits not his Dominion. If we could ſuppoſe him bounded by any place in regard of Preſence; yet he could never be out of his own Dominion; whatſoever he looks upon, whereſoever he were, would be under his Rule. Earthly Kings may ſtep out of their own Country into the Territory of a Neighbour Prince; and as one leaves his Country, ſo he leaves his Dominion behind him; but Heaven and Earth, and every particle of both is the Territory of God. He hath prepared his Throne in the Heavens, and his Kingdom rules over all.

1. The Heaven of Angels and other excellent Creatures belong to his Authority. He is principally call'd the Lord of Hoſts in relation to his intire Command over the Angelical Legions: Therefore Verſe 21. following the Text, they are call'd his Hoſts, and Miniſters that do his pleaſure. Jacob called him ſo before, Gen. 32. 1, 2. When he met the Angels of God, he calls them the Hoſt of God, and the Evangeliſt long after calls them ſo, Luke 2. 13. A multitude of the Heavenly Hoſt praiſing God, and all this Hoſt he commands, Iſaiah 45. 12. My hands have ſtretched out the Heavens, and all their Hoſt have I commanded. He employs them in his Service, and when he iſſues out his Orders to them, to do this or that, he finds no reſiſtance of his Will.

And the inanimate Creatures in Heaven are at his beck, they are his Armies in Heaven, diſpoſed in an excellent order in their ſeveral ranks, Pſal. 147. 4. He calls the Stars by Name; they render a due Obedience to him, as Servants to their Maſter; when he ſingles them out, and calls them by Name, to do ſome ſpecial Service, he calls them out to their ſeveral Offices, as the General of an Army appoints the ſtation of every Regiment in a Battalia. Or he calls them by Name, i. e. He impoſeth Name upon them, a ſign of Dominion. The giving Names to the inferior Creatures being the firſt act of Adam's derivative Dominion over them. Theſe are under the Sovereignty of God. The Stars by their influences fight againſt Siſera, Judg. 5. 20. And the Sun holds in its Reins, and ſtands ſtone ſtill, to light Joſhua to a compleat Victory, Joſh. 10. 12. They are all marſhall'd in their ranks, to receive his Word of Command, and fight in cloſe Order, as being deſirous to have a ſhare in the ruine of the Enemies of their Sovereign. And thoſe Creatures which mount up from the Earth, and take their place in the lower Heavens, Vapours whereof Hail and Snow are form'd, are part of the Army, and do not only receive, but fulfil his word of Command, Pſal. 148. 8. Theſe are his Stores and Magazines of Judgment againſt a time of trouble, and a day of Battle and War, Job 38. 22, 23. The Sovereignty of God is viſible in all their motions, in their going and returning. If he ſays go, they go, if he ſay come, they come, if he ſay do this, they gird up their Loyns, and ſtand ſtiff to their Duty.

2. The Hell of Devils belong to his Authority. They have caſt themſelves out of the Arms of his Grace into the Furnace of his Juſtice; they have by their revolt forfeited the Treaſure of his Goodneſs, but cannot exempt themſelves from the Scepter of his Dominion; when they would not own him as a Lord Father, they are under him as a Lord Judge, they are caſt out of his Affection, but not freed from his yoke. He rules over the good Angels as his Subjects, over the evil ones as his Rebels. In whatſoever relation he ſtands, either as a Friend or Enemy, he never loſes that of a Lord. A Prince is the Lord of his Criminals, as well as of his Loyalleſt Subjects. By this right of his Sovereignty, he uſes them to puniſh ſome, and be the occaſion of benefit to others; on the wicked he employs them as inſtruments of Vengeance, towards the godly, as in the caſe of Job, as an inſtrument of kindneſs for the manifeſtation of his ſincerity againſt the Intention of that malicious Executioner. Though the Devils are the Executioners of his Juſtice, 'tis not by their own Authority but God's; as thoſe that are employed either to rack, or execute a Malefactor, are Subjects to the Prince not only in the quality of Men, but in the execution of their function. * The Devil by drawing Men to ſin acquires no right to himſelf over the ſinner: For Man by Sin offends not the Devil, but God; and becomes guilty of puniſhment under God. When therefore the Devil is us'd by God for the puniſhment of any 'tis an act of his Sovereignty for the manifeſtation of the order of his Juſtice. And as moſt Nations uſe the vileſt perſons in Offices of execution, ſo doth God thoſe vile Spirits. He doth not ordinarily uſe the good Angels in thoſe Offices of Vengeance, but in the preſervation of his People. When he would ſolely puniſh, he employs evil Angels, Pſal. 78. 49. A Troop of Devils. His Sovereignty is extended over the deceiver and the deceived, Job 12. 16. Over both the Malefactor and the Executioner, the Devil and his Priſoner. He uſeth the natural malice of the Devils for his own juſt ends, and by his Sovereign Authority orders them to be the Executioners of his Judgments upon their own Vaſſals, as well as ſometimes inflicters of puniſhments upon his own Servants.

* Suarez. vol. 2. lib. 8. cap. 20. p. 736.

3. The Earth of Men, and other Creatures belong to his Authority, Pſal. 47. 7. God is the King of all the Earth, and rules to the ends of it, Pſal. 59. 13. Ancient Atheiſts confin'd God's Dominion to the Heavenly Orbs, and bounded it within the Circuit of the Celeſtial Sphear, Job 22. 14. He walks in the Circuit of Heaven, i. e. he exerciſeth his Dominion only there. * Pedum poſitio was the ſign of the poſſeſſion of a piece of Land, and the Dominion of the poſſeſſor of it; and Land was reſign'd by ſuch a Ceremony, as now by the delivery of a Twig or Turf.

* Bolduc. in loc.

But his Dominion extends.

1. Over the leaſt Creatures. All the Creatures of the Earth are liſted in Chriſt's Muſter-roll, and make up the number of his Regiments. He hath an Hoſt on Earth, as well as in Heaven, Gen. 2. 1. The Heavens and the Earth were finiſhed, and all the Hoſt of them. And they are all his Servants, Pſal. 119. 91. and move at his pleaſure. And he vouchſafes the Title of his Army to the Locuſt, Caterpillar, and Palmer Worm, Joel 2. 25. And deſcribes their motions by Military Words, climbing the Walls, marching not breaking their ranks, Verſe 7. He hath the Command as a great General over the higheſt Angel, and the meaneſt Worm; all the kinds of the ſmalleſt Inſects he preſſeth for his Service. By this Sovereignty he muzled the devouring nature of the Fire, to preſerve the three Children, and let it looſe to conſume their Adverſaries: And if he ſpeak the word, the ſtormy Waves are huſh, as if they had no principle of rage within them, Pſal. 89. 9. Since the meaneſt Creature attains its end, and no Arrow that God hath by his power ſhot into the World, but hits the mark he aim'd at; we muſt conclude, that there is a Sovereign hand, that governs all. Not a ſpot of Earth, or Air, or Water in the World, but is his Poſſeſſion, not a Creature in any Element, but is his Subject.

2. His Dominion extends over Men. It extends over the higheſt Potentate, as well as the meaneſt Peaſant, the proudeſt Monarch is no more exempt than the moſt languiſhing Beggar. He lays not aſide his Authority to pleaſe the Prince, nor ſtrains it up to terrifie the indigent. He accepts not the perſons of Princes, nor regards the rich more than the poor:

poor: For they are all the work of his hands, Job 34. 19. Both the powers and weakneſſes, the Gallantry and Peaſantry of the Earth ſtand and fall at his Pleaſure. Man in innocence was under his Authority as his Creature, and Man in his revolt, is further under his Authority as a Criminal. As a Perſon is under the Authority of a Prince as a Governour, while he obeys his Laws, and further under the Authority of the Prince as a Judge, when he violates his Laws. Man is under God's Dominion in every thing, in his Settlement, in his Calling, in the ordering his very Habitation, Acts 17. 26. He determines the bounds of their Habitations. He never yet permitted any to be univerſal Monarch in the World, nor over the fourth part of it, though ſeveral in the Pride of their heart, have deſign'd, and attempted it. The Pope who hath bid the faireſt for it in ſpirituals, never attain'd it, and when his power was moſt flouriſhing, there were multitudes, that would never acknowledge his Authority.

3. But eſpecially this Dominion in the peculiarity of its extents, is ſeen in the exerciſe of it over the Spirits and Hearts of Men. Earthly Governours have by his indulgence a ſhare with him in a dominion over Mens Bodies, upon which account he graceth Princes and Judges with the Title of God, Pſal. 82. 6. But the higheſt Prince is but a Prince according to the fleſh, as the Apoſtle calls Maſters in the relation to their Servants, Coloſ. 3. 22.

God is the Sovereign; Man rules over the Beaſt in Man, the Body; and God rules over the Man in Man, the Soul. It ſticks not in the outward Surface, but pierceth to the inward Marrow. 'Tis impoſſible God ſhould be without this; if our Wills were independent on him, we were in ſome ſort equal with himſelf in part Gods as well as Creatures. 'Tis impoſſible a Creature, either in whole or in part, can be exempted from it: Since he is the faſhioner of Hearts as well as of Bodies. He is the Father of Spirits: And therefore hath the right of a paternal dominion over them. When he eſtabliſhed Man Lord of the other Creatures, he did not ſtrip himſelf of the propriety. And when he made Man a free Agent, and Lord of the acts of his Will, he did not deveſt himſelf of the Sovereignty.

His Sovereignty is ſeen.

1. In Gifting of the Spirits of Men. Earthly Magiſtrates have hands too ſhort, to inſpire the Hearts of their Subjects with worthy Sentiments. When they confer an employment, they are not able to convey an ability with it for the ſtation. They may as ſoon frame a Statue of liquid Water, and guild, or paint it over with the coſtlieſt colours, as impart to any a State-Head, for a State-Miniſtry. But when God chuſeth a Saul from ſo mean an employment as ſeeking of Aſſes, he can treaſure up in him a Spirit fit for Government. And fire David, in Age a ſtripling, and by Education a Shepherd, with Courage to encounter, and Skill to defeat a maſſy Goliah. And when he deſigns a Perſon for Glory to ſtand before his Throne, he can put a new and a Royal Spirit into him, Ezek. 36. 26. God only can infuſe Habits into the Soul, to capacitate it to act nobly and generouſly.

2. His Sovereignty is ſeen in regard of the inclinations of mens Wills. No Creature can immediately work upon the Will, to guide it to what point he pleaſeth, though mediately it may, by propoſing Reaſons which may maſter the Underſtanding, and thereby determine the Will. But God bows the hearts of Men by the Efficacy of his Dominion, to what Centre he pleaſeth. When the more overweening ſort of Men, that thought their own Heads as fit for a Crown as Saul's ſcornfully deſpis'd him, yet God touched the Hearts of a Band of Men, to follow and adhere to him, 1 Sam. 10. 26, 27. When the Antichriſtian Whore ſhall be ripe for deſtruction, God ſhall put it into the heart of the ten Horns or Kings, to hate the Whore, burn her with Fire, and fulfil his Will, Rev. 17. 16, 17. He faſhions the Hearts alike, and tunes one String to anſwer another, and both to anſwer his own Deſign. Pſal. 33. 15. And while Men ſeem to gratifie their own Ambition and Malice, they execute the Will of God by his ſecret touch upon their Spirits, guiding their Inclinations, to ſerve the glorious Manifeſtation of his Truth. While the Jews would in a reproachful diſgrace to Chriſt, crucifie two Thieves with him, to render him more uncapable to have any Followers; they accompliſh'd a Propheſie, and brought to light a mark of the Meſſiah, whereby he had been charactered in one of their Prophets, Iſaiah 53. 12. That he ſhould be numbred among Tranſgreſſours. He can make a Man of not willing, willing; the Wills of all Men are in his hand, i. e. under the power of his Scepter, to retain, or let go upon this or that errand, to bend this or that way; as Water is carried by Pipes, to what Houſe or Place the Owner of it is pleas'd to order, Prov. 21. 1. The Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the Rivers of waters he turns it, whitherſoever he will, without any limitation. He ſpeaks of the Heart of Princes: Becauſe, in regard of their height, they ſeem to be more abſolute and impetuous Waters; yet God holds them in his hand under his Dominion, turns them to acts of Clemency or Severity, like Waters, either to overflow and dammage, or to refreſh and fructifie. He can convey a Spirit to them, or cut it off from them, Pſal. 76. 12. 'Tis with reference to his efficacious power, in graciouſly turning the heart of Paul, that the Apoſtle breaks off his diſcourſe of the ſtory of his Converſion, and breaks out into a magnifying and glorifying of God's Dominion, 1 Tim. 1. 17. Now unto the King eternal, &c. be honour and glory for ever and ever. Our hearts are more ſubject to the Divine Sovereignty, than our members in their motions are ſubject to our own Wills. As we can move our hand Eaſt or Weſt to any quarter of the World, ſo can God bend our Wills to what mark he pleaſes. The ſecond Cauſe in every motion depends upon the firſt, and that Will being a ſecond Cauſe, may be furthered or hindered in its inclinations or executions by God; he can bend or unbend it, and change it from one actual Inclination to another. 'Tis as much under his Authority and Power to move or hinder, as the vaſt Engine of the Heavens is in its motion or ſtanding ſtill, which he can effect by a word. The work depends upon the Workman; the Clock upon the Artificer for the Motions of it.

3. His Dominion is ſeen in regard of Terror or Comfort. The Heart or Conſcience is God's ſpecial Throne on Earth, which he hath reſerv'd to himſelf, and never indulg'd humane Authority to ſit upon it. He ſolely orders this in ways of conviction or comfort. He can flaſh terror into Mens ſpirits in the midſt of their earthly Jollities, and put Death into the pot of Conſcience, when they are boyling up themſelves in a high pitch of Worldly Delights; and can raiſe Mens ſpirits above the ſenſe of torment under Racks and Flames. He can draw a Hand-writing, not only in the outward Chamber but the inward Cloſet, bring the Rack into the inwards of a Man. None can infuſe Comfort, when he writes bitter things, nor can any fill the heart with Gall, when he drops in Hony. Men may order outward Duties, but they cannot unlock the Conſcience, and conſtrain Men to think them Duties, which they are forced by humane Laws outwardly to act. And as the Laws of earthly Princes are bounded by the outward Man, ſo do their Executions and Puniſhments reach no further than the caſe of the Body. But God can run upon the inward Man as a Giant, and inflict wounds and gaſhes there.

5. Propoſition, 'Tis an Eternal Dominion. In regard of the exerciſe of it, it was not from Eternity: Becauſe there was not from Eternity any Creature under the Government of it; but in regard of the foundation of it, his Eſſence, his Excellency, 'tis Eternal: As God was from Eternity Almighty, but there was no exerciſe or manifeſtation of it, till he began to create. Men are Kings only for a time, their Lives expire like a Lamp, and their dominion is extinguiſh'd with their lives; they hand their Empire by Succeſſion to others, but many times it is ſnapt off before they are cold in their Graves. How are the famous Empires of the Chaldeans, Medes, Perſians and Greeks, mouldred away, and their place knows them no more? And how are the Wings of the Roman Eagle cut, and that Empire which over-ſpread a great part of the World, hath loſt moſt of its Feathers, and is confin'd to a narrower compaſs. The dominion of God flouriſheth from one Generation to another. He ſits King for ever, Pſal. 29. 10. His ſeſſion ſignifies the Eſtabliſhment, and for ever the Duration, and he ſits now, his Sovereignty is as Abſolute, as Powerful as ever. How many Lords and Princes hath this or that Kingdom had? In how many Families hath the Scepter lodg'd? When as God hath had an uninterrupted Dominion. As he hath been always the ſame in his Eſſence, he hath been always glorious in his Sovereignty. Among Men, he that is Lord to day, may be ſtript of it to morrow; the Dominions in the World vary, he that is a Prince may ſee his Royalty upon the Wings, and feel himſelf laden with Fetters. And a Priſoner may be lifted from his dungeon to a Throne. But there can be no Diminution of God's Government; His Throne is from generation to generation, Lament. 5. 19. It cannot be ſhaken. His Scepter, like Aaron's Rod, is always green. It cannot be wreſted out of his Hands; none rais'd him to it: None therefore can depoſe him from it; it bears the ſame ſplendor in all humane Affairs, he is an Eternal, an Immortal King, 1 Tim. 1. 17. As he is eternally Mighty, ſo he is eternally Sovereign; and being an Eternal King, he is a King that gives not a momentary and periſhing, but a durable and everlaſting Life to them that obey him: A durable and eternal puniſhment to them that reſiſt him.

IV. Wherein this Dominion and Sovereignty conſiſts, and how 'tis manifeſted.

1. The firſt act of Sovereignty is the making Laws. This is Eſſential to God; no Creatures Will can be the firſt Rule to the Creature; but only the Will of God. He only can preſcribe Man his duty, and eſtabliſh the rule of it; hence the Law is call'd, The Royal Law, James 2. 8. It being the firſt and cleareſt manifeſtation of Sovereignty; as the Power of Legiſlation is of the Authority of a Prince. Both are join'd together in Iſaiah 53. 22. The Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King. Legiſlative Power being the great mark of Royalty. God as a King enacts Laws by his own proper Authority, and his Law is a Declaration of his own Sovereignty, and of Mens moral ſubjection to him and dependance on him. * His Sovereignty doth not appear ſo much in his Promiſes as in his Precepts: A Man's power over another is not diſcovered by promiſing: For a promiſe doth not ſuppoſe the Promiſer either ſuperior or inferior to the Perſon to whom the Promiſe is made. 'Tis not an exerciſing Authority over another, but over a Man's ſelf. No Man forceth another to the acceptance of his Promiſe, but only propoſeth and encourageth to an embracing of it. But commanding ſuppoſeth always an Authority in the Perſon giving the Precept. It obligeth the Perſon to whom the Command is directed. A Promiſe obligeth the Perſon by whom the Promiſe is made. God by his Command binds the Creature, by his promiſe he binds himſelf. He ſtoops below his Sovereignty, to lay obligations upon his own Majeſty. By a Precept he binds the Creature, by a Promiſe he encourageth the Creature to an obſervance of his Precept. What Laws God makes, Man is bound by virtue of his Creation to obſerve, that reſpects the Sovereignty of God. What Promiſes God makes, Man is bound to believe, but that reſpects the Faithfulneſs of God. God manifeſted his Dominion more to the Jews than to any other People in the World; he was their Law-giver, both as they were a Church and a Common-wealth. As a Church, he gave them Ceremonial Laws, for the regulating their Worſhip. As a State, he gave them Judicial Laws, for the ordering their Civil Affairs; and as both, he gave them Moral Laws; upon which, both the Laws of the Church and State were founded.

* Suarez. de Legib. P. 23.

This Dominion of God in this regard will be manifeſt.

1. In the Supremacy of it. The ſole power of making Laws doth originally reſide in him, James 4. 12. There is one Law-giver, who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy. By his own Law he judges of the eternal States of Men, and no Law of Man is Obligatory, but as it is agreeable to the Laws of this Supream Law-giver, and purſuant to his righteous Rules for the Government of the World. The power that the Potentates of the World have to make Laws, is but derivative from God. If their Dominion be from him, as it is: For by him Kings reign, Prov. 8. 15. Their Legiſlative Power, which is a prime Flower of their Sovereignty, is deriv'd from him alſo. And the Apoſtle reſolves it into this Original, when he orders us, to be ſubject to the higher Powers, not only for wrath, but for conſcience ſake, Rom. 13. 5. Conſcience, in its operations, ſolely reſpects God: And therefore when it is exerciſed as the Principle of Obedience to the Laws of Men, 'tis not with a reſpect to them ſingly conſidered, but as the Majeſty of God appears in their Station and in their Decrees. This power of giving Laws was acknowledged by the Heathen, to be ſolely in God by way of Original: And therefore the greateſt Law-givers among the Heathen, pretended their Laws to be received from ſome Deity, or Supernatural Power by ſpecial revelation; now whether they did this ſeriouſly, acknowledging themſelves this part of the Dominion of God: (For it is certain, that whatſoever juſt Orders were iſſued out by Princes in the World, was by the ſecret influence of God upon their Spirits, Prov. 8. 15. By me Princes decree Juſtice, by the ſecret conduct of Divine Wiſdom) or whether they pretended it only as a publick Engine, to enforce upon People the obſervance of their Decrees, and gain a greater credit to their Edicts, yet this will reſult from it, that the People in general entertain'd this common Notion, that God was the great Law-giver of the World. The firſt Founders of their Societies could never elſe have ſo abſolutely gain'd upon them by ſuch a pretence. There was always a Revelation of a Law from the mouth of God in every Age: The Exhortation of Eliphaz to Job, Job 22. 22. Of receiving a Law from the mouth of God, at the time before the Moral Law was publiſh'd, had been a vain Exhortation, had there been no Revelation of the mind of God in all Ages.

2. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in the extent of his Laws. As he is the Governour and Sovereign of the whole World, ſo he enacts Laws for the whole World. One Prince cannot make Laws for another unleſs he makes him his Subject by right of Conqueſt. Spain cannot make Laws for England, or England for Spain. But God having the Supream Government, as King over all, is a Law-giver to all, to irrational, as well as rational Creatures. The Heavens have their Ordinances, Job 38. 33. All Creatures have a Law imprinted on their Beings. Rational Creatures have divine Statutes copied in their heart. For Men it is clear, Rom. 2. 14. Every Son of Adam at his coming into the World, brings with him a Law in his Nature, and when Reaſon clears it ſelf up from the Clouds of ſence, he can make ſome difference between Good and Evil; diſcern ſomething of fit and juſt. Every Man finds a Law within him, that checks him if he offends it. None are without a legal Indictment, and a legal Executioner within them; God or none was the Author of this as a Sovereign Lord, in eſtabliſhing a Law in man at the ſame time, wherein, as an Almighty Creator, he imparted a Being. This Law proceeds from God's general Power of Governing, as he is the Author of Nature, and binds not barely as it is the reaſon of Man, but by the Authority of God, as it is a Law engraven on his Conſcience. And no doubt but a Law was given to the Angels; God did not govern thoſe intellectual Creatures as he doth Brutes, and in a way inferiour to his rule of Man. Some ſinned, all might have ſinned in regard of the changeableneſs of their Nature. Sin cannot be but againſt ſome rule: Where there is no Law, there is no Tranſgreſſion; what that Law was, is not reveal'd, but certainly it muſt be the ſame in part with the Moral Law, ſo far as it agreed with their Spiritual Natures; a love to God, a Worſhip of him, and a love to one another in their Societies and Perſons.

3. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in the reaſon of ſome Laws, which ſeem to be nothing elſe than purely his own Will. Some Laws there are for which a reaſon may be rendered from the nature of the thing enjoyned, as to Love, Honour and Worſhip God. For others, none but this, God will have it ſo; ſuch was that poſitive Law to Adam, of not eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, Gen. 2.17. which was meerly an aſſerting his own Dominion, and was different from that Law of Nature God had written in his heart. No other reaſon of this ſeems to us but a reſolve, to try Man's Obedience in a way of abſolute Sovereignty, and to manifeſt his Right over all Creatures, to reſerve what he pleaſed to himſelf, and permit the uſe of what he pleaſed to Man, and to ſignifie to Man, that he was to depend on him who was his Lord, and not on his own Will. There was no more hurt in it ſelf, for Adam to have eaten of that, than of any other in the Garden; the Fruit was pleaſant to the Eye, and good for Food, but God would ſhew the right he had over his own Goods, and his Authority over Man, to reſerve, what he pleaſes of his own Creation from his touch; that ſince Man could not claim a propriety in any thing, he was to meddle with nothing but by the leave of his Sovereign; either diſcovered by a ſpecial or general Licence. Thus God ſhewed himſelf the Lord of Man, and that Man was but his Steward, to act by his Orders. If God had forbidden Man the uſe of more Trees in the Garden, his command had been juſt; ſince as a Sovereign Lord he might diſpoſe of his own Goods; and when he had granted him the whole compaſs of that pleaſant Garden, and the whole World round about for him and his Poſterity, it was a more tolerable exerciſe of his Dominion, to reſerve this one Tree, as a mark of his Sovereignty, when he had left all others to the uſe of Adam. He reſerv'd nothing to himſelf as Lord of the Mannor, but this; and Adam was prohibited nothing elſe but this one, as a ſign of his ſubjection. Now for this no reaſon can be rendered by any Man, but meerly the Will of God; this was meerly a fruit of his Dominion.

For the Moral Laws a Reaſon may be rendred; to Love God, hath reaſon to enforce it beſides God's Will, viz. The Excellency of his Nature, and the Greatneſs and Multitudes of his Benefits. To love our Neighbour, hath enforcing Reaſons, viz. the Conjunction in Blood, and the preſervation of Humane Society, and the need we may ſtand in of their love our ſelves. But no Reaſon can be aſſign'd of this poſitive Command about the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, but meerly the pleaſure of God. It was a Branch of his pure Dominion, to try Man's Obedience; and a mark of his Goodneſs, to try it by ſo eaſie and light a Precept, when he might have extended his Authority further. Had not God given this or the like Order, his Abſolute Dominion had not been ſo conſpicuous. 'Tis true, Adam had a Law of Nature in him, whereby he was obliged to perpetual Obedience; and though it was a part of God's Dominion to implant it in him, yet his Supream Dominion over the Creatures had not been ſo viſible to Man, but by this, or a Precept of the ſame kind. What was commanded, or prohibited by the Law of Nature, did beſpeak a comelineſs in it ſelf, it appear'd Good or Evil to the Reaſon of Man, but this was neither Good nor Evil in it ſelf, it receiv'd its ſole Authority from the abſolute Will of God, and nothing could reſult from the Fruit it ſelf, as a Reaſon why Man ſhould not taſte it, but only the ſole Will of God. And as God's Dominion was moſt conſpicuous in this Precept, ſo Man's Obedience had been moſt eminent in obſerving it. For in his Obedience to it, nothing but the ſole Power and Authority of God, which is the proper Rule of Obedience, could have been reſpected, not any Reaſon from the thing it ſelf.

To this we may refer ſome other Commands, as that of appointing the time of ſolemn and publick Worſhip, the Seventh Day; though the Worſhip of God be a part of the Law of Nature, yet the appointing a particular Day, wherein he would be more formally and ſolemnly acknowledged than on other Days, was grounded upon his abſolute Right of Legiſlation: For there was nothing in the time it ſelf, that could render that Day more holy than another, though God reſpected his finiſhing the work of Creation in his Inſtitution of that Day, Gen. 2. 3. Such were the Ceremonial Commands of Sacrifices, and Waſhings under the Law, and the Commands of Sacraments under the Goſpel: The one to laſt till the firſt Coming of Chriſt, and his Paſſion; the other to laſt till the ſecond Coming of Chriſt, and his Triumph. Thus he made natural and unavoidable uncleanneſſes to be ſins, and the touching a dead Body to be pollution, which in their own nature were not ſo.

4. The Dominion of God appears in the Moral Law, and his Majeſty in publiſhing it. As the Law of Nature was writ by his own Fingers in the Nature of Man, ſo it was Engraven by his own Finger in the Tables of Stone, Exod. 31. 18. Which is very emphatically expreſt to be a mark of God's Dominion, Exod. 32. 16. And the Tables were the work of God; and the Writing, was the Writing of God engraven upon the Tables; and when the firſt Tables were broken, though he orders Moſes to frame the Tables, yet the Writing of the Law, he reſerves to himſelf, Exod. 34. 1. 'Tis not ſaid of any part of the Scripture, that it was writ by the Finger of God, but only of the Decalogue; herein he would have his Sovereignty eminently appear; it was publiſh'd by God in ſtate, with a numerous attendance of his Heavenly Militia, Deut. 32.2. And the Artillery of Heaven was ſhot off at the ſolemnity: And therefore it is call'd a fiery Law, coming from his right hand, i.e. His Sovereign Power. It was publiſh'd with all the marks of Supream Majeſty.

5. The Dominion of God appears in the Obligation of the Law, which reacheth the Conſcience. The Laws of every Prince are fram'd for the outward conditions of Men; they do not by their Authority bind the Conſcience; and what obligations do reſult from them upon the Conſcience, is either from their being the ſame immediately with Divine Laws, or as they are according to the juſt power of the Magiſtrate, founded on the Law of God. Conſcience hath a protection from the King of Kings, and cannot be arreſted by any humane Power. God hath given Man but an Authority over half the Man, and the worſt half too, that which is of an Earthly Original; but reſerved the Authority over the better and more heavenly half to himſelf. The Dominion of Earthly Princes extends only to the Bodies of Men, they have no Authority over the Soul, their puniſhment and rewards cannot reach it: And therefore their Laws by their ſingle Authority cannot bind it, but as they are co-incident with the Law of God, or as the Equity of them is ſubſervient to the preſervation of humane Society, a regular and righteous thing, which is the Divine end in Government, and ſo they bind, as they have a relation to God as the Supream Magiſtrate. The Conſcience is only intelligible to God in its ſecret Motions, and therefore only guidable by God; God only pierceth into the Conſcience by his Eye: And therefore only can conduct it by his Rule. Man cannot tell whether we embrace this Law in our Heart and Conſciences, or only in appearances. He only can judge it, Luke 12. 3, 4. And therefore he only can impoſe Laws upon it; 'tis out of the reach of humane penal Authority, if their Laws be tranſgreſs'd inwardly by it. Conſcience is a Book in ſome ſort as Sacred as the Scripture, no addition can be lawfully made to it, no ſubſtraction from it. Men cannot diminiſh the duty of Conſcience, or raze out the Law God hath ſtampt upon it. They cannot put a ſuperſedeas to the Writ of Conſcience, or ſtop its mouth with a Noli Proſequi. They can make no addition by their Authority to bind it; 'tis a Flower in the Crown of Divine Sovereignty only.

2. His Sovereignty appears in a power of diſpenſing with his own Laws. 'Tis as much a part of his Dominion, to diſpenſe with his Laws, as to enjoin them; he only hath the power of relaxing his own right, no Creature hath power to do it; that would be to uſurp a Superiority over him, and order above God himſelf. Repealing or diſpenſing with the Law, is a Branch of Royal Authority. 'Tis true, God will never diſpenſe with thoſe Moral Laws, which have an eternal reaſon in themſelves, and their own nature: As for a Creature to Fear, Love, and Honour God; this would be to diſpenſe with his own Holineſs, and the Righteouſneſs of his Nature, to ſully the purity of his own Dominion; it would write folly upon the firſt Creation of Man after the Image of God, by writing mutability upon himſelf, in framing himſelf after the corrupted Image of Man. It would null and fruſtrate the Excellency of the Creature, wherein the Image of God moſtly ſhines; nay, it would be to diſpenſe with a Creatures being a Creature, and make him independent upon the Sovereign of the World in Moral Obedience.

But God hath a Right to diſpenſe with the ordinary Laws of Nature in the inferiour Creatures; he hath a power to alter their courſe by an arreſt of Miracles, and make them come ſhort, or go beyond his Ordinances eſtabliſhed for them. He hath a right to make the Sun ſtand ſtill, or move backward; to bind up the Womb of the Earth, and bar the influences of the Clouds, bridle in the Rage of the Fire, and the fury of Lions, make the liquid Waters ſtand like a Wall, or pull up the Dam which he hath ſet to the Sea, and command it to overflow the neighbouring Countries. He can diſpenſe with the natural Laws of the whole Creation, and ſtrain every ſtring beyond its ordinary pitch.

Poſitive Laws he hath revers'd, as the Ceremonial Law given to the Jews: The very nature indeed of that Law requir'd a Repeal, and fell of Courſe; when that which was intended by it was come, it was of no longer ſignificancy; as before it was a uſeful ſhadow, it would afterwards have been an empty one. Had not God took away this, Chriſtianity had not in all likelihood been propagated among the Gentiles. This was the partition wall between Jews and Gentiles, Eph. 2. 14. Which made them a diſtinct Family from all the World, and was the occaſion of the enmity of the Gentiles againſt the Jews. When God had by bringing in what was ſignified by thoſe Rites, declar'd his decree for the ceaſing of them; and when the Jews, fond of thoſe Divine Inſtitutions, would not allow him the Right of Repealing what he had the Authority of enacting, he reſolved for the aſſerting his Dominion, to bury them in the ruines of the Temple and City, and make them for ever uncapable of practiſing the main and eſſential parts of them: For the Temple being the Pillar of the legal Service, by demoliſhing that, God hath taken away the Right of Sacrificing, it being peculiarly annex'd to that place; they have no Altar dignified with a Fire from Heaven to conſume their Sacrifices, no legal High Prieſt to offer them, God hath by his Providence chang'd his own Law, as well as by his Precept.

Yea, he hath gone higher by virtue of his Sovereignty, and chang'd the whole ſcene and methods of his Government after the Fall, from King Creator to King Redeemer. He hath revok'd the Law of Works as a Covenant, releas'd the penalty of it from the believing Sinner, by transferring it upon the Surety who interpos'd himſelf by his own Will and Divine Deſignation. He hath eſtabliſh'd another Covenant upon other Promiſes in a higher root, with greater Privileges and eaſier Terms. Had not God had this right of Sovereignty, not a Man of Adam's Poſterity could have been bleſſed; he and they muſt have lain groaning under the miſery of the Fall, which had render'd both himſelf, and all in his loyns, unable to obſerve the Terms in the firſt Covenant.

He hath, as ſome ſpeak, diſpens'd with his own Moral Law in ſome Caſes; in commanding Abraham to ſacrifice his Son, his only Son, a righteous Son, a Son whereof he had the Promiſe, that in Iſaac ſhould his Seed be call'd; yet he was commanded to ſacrifice him by the Right of his abſolute Sovereignty, as the Supream Lord of the Lives of his Creatures, from the higheſt Angel to the loweſt Worm, whereby he bound his Subjects to this Law, not himſelf. Our Lives are due to him when he calls for them, and they are a juſt forfeit to him at the very moment we ſin, at the very moment we come into the World, by reaſon of the venom of our Nature againſt him, and the diſturbance the firſt ſin of Man (whereof we are inheritors) gave to his Glory. Had Abraham ſacrificed his Son of his own head, he had ſinned, yea in attempting it; but being Authoriz'd from Heaven, his act was Obedience to the Sovereign of the World, who had a power to diſpenſe with his own Law; and with this Law he had before diſpens'd, in the caſe of Cain's murder of Abel, as to the immediate puniſhment of it with Death, which indeed was ſetled afterwards by his Authority, but then omitted becauſe of the paucity of Men, and for the Peopling the World; but ſettled afterwards, when there was almoſt, though not altogether, the like occaſion of omitting it for a time.

3. His Sovereignty appears in puniſhing the Tranſgreſſion of his Law.

1. This is a branch of God's Dominion as Law-giver. So was the vengeance God would take upon the Amalekites, Exod. 17. 16. The Lord hath ſworn, that the Lord will have war. The Hebrew is, the hand upon the Throne of the Lord, as in the Margent. As a Law-giver he ſaves or deſtroys, James 4. 12. He acts according to his own Law, in a congruity to the Sanction of his own Precepts; though he be an Arbitrary Law-giver, appointing what Laws he pleaſes, yet he is not an Arbitrary Judge. As he commands nothing, but what he hath a Right to command, ſo he puniſheth none but whom he hath a right to puniſh, and with ſuch puniſhment as the Law hath denounced. All his acts of Juſtice and Inflictions of Curſes, are the effects of this Sovereign Dominion, Pſal. 29. 10. He ſits King upon the floods: Upon the Deluge of Waters wherewith he drown'd the World, ſay ſome. 'Tis a Right belonging to the Authority of Magiſtrates, to pull up the infectious Weeds that corrupt a Common-wealth. 'Tis no leſs the Right of God as the Law-giver and Judge of all the Earth.

Earth, to ſubject Criminals to his Vengeance, after they have rendered themſelves abominable in his Eyes, and carried themſelves unworthy Subjects of ſo great and glorious a King. The firſt name whereby God is made known in Scripture, is Elohim, Gen. 1. 1. In the beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth. A Name which ſignifies his Power of judging, in the opinion of ſome Criticks; from him it is deriv'd to Earthly Magiſtrates; their Judgment is ſaid therefore to be the Judgment of God, Deut. 1. 17. When Chriſt came, he propos'd this great motive of Repentance, from the Kingdom of Heaven being at hand; the Kingdom of his Grace, whereby to invite Men; the Kingdom of his Juſtice, in the puniſhment of the neglecters of it, whereby to terrifie Men, Puniſhments, as well as Rewards, belong to Royalty; it iſſued accordingly; thoſe that believ'd and repented, came under his gracious Scepter; thoſe that neglected and rejected it, fell under his Iron Rod. Jeruſalem was deſtroyed, the Temple demoliſh'd, the Inhabitants loſt their Lives by the edge of the Sword, or linger'd them out in the Chains of a miſerable Captivity. This term of Judge, which ſignifies a Sovereign Right to govern and puniſh Delinquents, Abraham gives him, when he came to root out the People of Sodom, and make them the Examples of his Vengeance, Gen. 18. 25.

2. Puniſhing the Tranſgreſſions of his Law; This is a neceſſary branch of Dominion. His Sovereignty in making Laws would be a trifle, if there were not alſo an Authority to vindicate thoſe Laws from Contempt and Injury; he would be a Lord only ſpurn'd at by Rebels. Sovereignty is not preſerved without Juſtice. When the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of the Majeſty of God's Kingdom, he tells us, That Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the Habitation of his Throne, Pſal. 97. 1, 2. Theſe are the Engines of Divine Dignity, which render him Glorious and Majeſtick. A Legiſlative power would be trampled on without executive; by this the reverential Apprehenſions of God are preſerved in the World. He is known to be Lord of the World, by the Judgments which he executes, Pſal. 9. 16. When he ſeems to have loſt his Dominion, or given it up in the World, he recovers it by puniſhment. When he takes ſome away with a whirlwind, and in his wrath, the natural conſequence Men make of it, is this, Surely there is a God that judgeth the Earth, Pſal. 58. 9, 11. He reduceth the Creature by the laſh of his Judgments, that would not acknowledge his Authority in his Precepts. Thoſe ſins which diſown his Government in the Heart and Conſcience, as Pride, inward Blaſphemy, &c. he hath reſerved a time hereafter to reckon for. He doth not preſently ſhoot his arrows into the marrow of every Delinquent, but thoſe ſins which traduce his Government of the World, and tear up the Foundations of humane converſe, and a publick reſpect to him, he reckons with particularly here as well as hereafter, that the Life of his Sovereignty might not always faint in the World.

3. This of puniſhing was the ſecond diſcovery of his Dominion in the World. His firſt act of Sovereignty was the giving a Law; the next, his appearance in the State of a Judge. When his Orders were violated, he reſcues the Honour of them by an execution of Juſtice. He firſt judg'd the Angels, puniſhing the evil ones for their crime; the firſt Court he kept among them as a Governour, was to give them a Law; the ſecond Court he kept, was as a Judge trying the Delinquents, and adjudging the Offenders, to be reſerved in chains of darkneſs till the final Execution, Jude 6. And at the ſame time probably he confirmed the good ones in their obedience by Grace. So the firſt Diſcovery of his Dominion to Man, was the giving him a Precept; the next, was the inflicting a puniſhment for the breach of it. He ſummons Adam to the Bar, indicts him for his Crime, finds him guilty by his own Confeſſion, and paſſeth Sentence on him, according to the Rule he had before acquainted him with.

4. The means whereby he puniſheth, ſhews his Dominion. Sometimes he muſters up hail and mildew; ſometimes he ſends Regiments of wild Beaſts, ſo he threatens Iſrael, Levit. 26. 22. Sometimes he ſends out a party of Angels, to beat up the quarters of Men, and make a carnage among them, 2 Kings 19. 35. Sometimes he mounts his Thundring Battery, and ſhoots forth his Ammunition from the Clouds; as againſt the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. 7. 10. Sometimes he ſends the ſlighteſt Creatures to ſhame the Pride, and puniſh the Sin of Man; as Lice, Frogs, Locuſts; as upon the Egyptians, the 8, 9, 10. chap. of Exodus.

2. This Dominion is manifeſted by God, as a proprietor and Lord of his Creatures, and his own Goods.

And this is evident,

1. In the choice of ſome perſons from Eternity. He hath ſet apart ſome from Eternity, wherein he will diſplay the invincible Efficacy of his Grace, and thereby infallibly bring them to the fruition of Glory, Eph. 1. 4, 5. According as he hath choſen us in him before the Foundation of the World, that we ſhould be Holy and without blame before him in Love, having predeſtinated us to the Adoption of Children by Jeſus Chriſt to himſelf, according to the good pleaſure of his Will. Why doth he write ſome Names in the Book of Life, and leave out others? Why doth he enroll ſome, whom he intends to make Denizons of Heaven, and refuſe to put others in his Regiſter? The Apoſtle tells us, 'tis the pleaſure of his Will. You may render a Reaſon for many of God's Actions, till you come to this the top and Foundation of all; and under what head of Reaſon can Man reduce this Act, but to that of his Royal Prerogative? Why doth God ſave ſome, and condemn others at laſt? Becauſe of the Faith of the one, and unbelief of the other. Why do ſome Men believe? Becauſe God hath not only given them the means of Grace, but accompanied thoſe means with the Efficacy of his Spirit. Why did God accompany thoſe means with the Efficacy of his Spirit in ſome, and not in others? Becauſe he had decreed by Grace to prepare them for Glory. But why did he decree, or chuſe ſome, and not others? Into what will you reſolve this, but into his Sovereign Pleaſure? Salvation and Condemnation at the laſt upſhot, are Acts of God, as the Judge conformable to his own Law of giving Life to Believers, and inflicting Death upon Unbelievers; for thoſe a Reaſon may be rendred; but the choice of ſome, and preterition of others, is an act of God as he is a Sovereign Monarch, before any Law was actually tranſgreſs'd, becauſe not actually given. When a Prince condemns a Rebel, he acts as a Judge according to Law; but when he calls ſome out to pardon, he acts as a Sovereign by a Prerogative above Law; into this the Apoſtle reſolves it, Rom. 9. 13, 15. When he ſpeaks of God's loving Jacob and hating Eſau, and that before they had done either good or evil: It is, Becauſe God will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and compaſſion on whom he will have compaſſion. Though the firſt ſcope of the Apoſtle in the beginning of the Chapter, was to declare the Reaſon of God's rejecting the Jews, and calling in the Gentiles; had he only intended to demoliſh the Pride of the Jews, and flat their opinion of Merit, and aim'd no higher than that Providential act of God; he might, convincingly enough to the Reaſon of Men, have argued from the Juſtice of God, provoked by the obſtinacy of the Jews, and not have had recourſe to his Abſolute Will; but ſince he aſſerts this latter, * the ſtrength of his Argument ſeems to lie thus; If God by his Abſolute Sovereignty may reſolve and fix his love upon Jacob, and eſtrange it from Eſau, or any other of his Creatures, before they have done good or evil, and Man have no ground to call his Infinite Majeſty to account, may he not deal thus with the

Jews,

Jews, when their demerit would be a bar to any Complaints of the Creature againſt him? If God were conſidered here in the quality of a Judge, it had been fit to have conſidered the matter of Fact in the Criminal; but he is conſidered as a Sovereign, rendring no other Reaſon of his Action but his own Will, whom he will he hardens, ver. 18. And then the Apoſtle concludes, ver. 20. Who art thou, O man, that replieſt againſt God? If the Reaſon drawn from God's Sovereignty doth not ſatisfie in this enquiry, no other Reaſon can be found wherein to acquieſce. For the laſt Condemnation there will be ſufficient Reaſon to clear the Juſtice of his Proceedings. But in this caſe of Election, no other Reaſon but what is alledg'd, viz. The Will of God can be thought of, but what is liable to ſuch knotty exceptions that cannot well be untied.

1. It could not be any merit in the Creature, that might determine God to chuſe him. If the Decree of Election falls not under the merit of Chriſt's Paſſion, as the procuring Cauſe, it cannot fall under the merit of any part of the corrupted Maſs. The Decree of ſending Chriſt did not precede, but follow'd in order of Nature the determination of chuſing ſome. When Men were choſen as the Subjects for Glory, Chriſt was choſen as the means for the bringing them to Glory, Eph. 1. 4. Choſen us in him, and predeſtinated us to the adoption of children by Jeſus Chriſt. The choice was not meerly in Chriſt as the moving Cauſe; that the Apoſtle aſſerts, to be the good pleaſure of his Will; but in Chriſt, as the means of conveying to the choſen ones the fruits of their Election. What could there be in any Man, that could invite God to this act, or be a cauſe of diſtinction of one branch of Adam from another? Were they not all hew'd out of the ſame Rock, and tainted with the ſame corruption in Blood? Had it been poſſible to inveſt them with a power of merit at the firſt, had not that venom contracted in their nature, degraded all of Power for the future? What merit was there in any but of wrathful puniſhment, ſince they were all conſidered as Criminals, and the curſed brood of an ungrateful Rebel? What dignity can there be in the nature of the pureſt part of clay, to be made a Veſſel of Honour, more than in another part of Clay as pure as that which was form'd into a Veſſel for mean and ſordid uſe? What had any one to move his mercy more than another; ſince they were all Children of Wrath, and equally dawb'd with original Guilt and Filth? Had not all an equal Proportion of it to provoke his Juſtice? What Merit is there in one dry Bone more than another, to be inſpir'd with the Breath of a Spiritual Life? Did not all lye wallowing in their own filthy Blood; and what could the Steam and Noyſomneſs of that deſerve at the Hands of a pure Majeſty, but to be caſt into a Sink furtheſt from his Sight? were they not all conſidered in this deplorable Poſture with an equal Proportion of Poyſon in their Nature, when God firſt took his Pen and ſingled out ſome Names to write in the Book of Life? It could not be Merit in any one Piece of this abominable Maſs, that ſhould ſtir up that Reſolution in God, to ſet apart this Perſon for a Veſſel of Glory, while he permitted another to putrifie in his own Gore. He loved Jacob and hated Eſau, though they were both parts of the common Maſs, the Seed of the ſame Loyns, and lodg'd in the ſame Womb.

2. Nor could it be any Foreſight of Works to be done in time by them, or of Faith, that might determine God to chooſe them. What Good could he foreſee reſulting from extream Corruption, and a Nature alienated from him? What could he foreſee of good to be done by them, but what he reſolved in his own Will, to beſtow an ability upon them to bring forth? His choice of them was to a Holineſs, not for a Holineſs preceding his determination, Eph. 1. 4. He hath choſen us, that we might be holy before him; he ordained us to good works, not for them, Eph. 2. 10. What is a fruit, cannot be a moving Cauſe of that whereof it is a Fruit. Grace is a Stream from the Spring of electing Love; the Branch is not the cauſe of the Root, but the Root of the Branch, nor the Stream the cauſe of the Spring, but the Spring the cauſe of the Stream. Good Works ſuppoſe Grace, and a good and right habit in the perſon; as rational acts ſuppoſe reaſon. Can any man ſay that the rational acts man performs after his Creation, were a cauſe why God created him? This would make Creation, and every thing elſe, not ſo much an act of his Will, as an act of his Underſtanding. God foreſaw no rational act in Man, before the act of his Will to give him Reaſon; nor foreſees Faith in any, before the act of his Will determining to give him Faith, Eph. 2. 8. Faith is the gift of God. In the Salvation which grows up from this firſt purpoſe of God, he regards not the Works we have done, as a principal Motive to ſettle the Top-ſtone of our Happineſs, but his own purpoſe, and the Grace given in Chriſt, 2 Tim. 1. 9. Who hath ſaved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our own works, but according to his own purpoſe, and Grace which was given to us in Chriſt, before the world began. The honour of our Salvation cannot be challeng'd by our Works, much leſs the honour of the Foundation of it. It was a pure gift of Grace, without any reſpect to any Spiritual, much leſs Natural Perfection. Why ſhould the Apoſtle mention that Circumſtance, when he ſpeaks of God's loving Jacob and hating Eſau, when neither of them had done good or evil, Rom. 9. 11. if there were any foreſight of Mens works, as the moving Cauſe of his Love or Hatred? God regarded not the works of either as the firſt cauſe of his Choice, but acted by his own Liberty without reſpect to any of their actions, which were to be done by them in time. If Faith be the Fruit of Election, the preſcience of Faith doth not influence the electing act of God. Tit. 1. 1. 'Tis called, The Faith of God's elect. Paul an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the Faith of God's elect, i.e. Settled in this Office to bring the Elect of God to Faith. If Men be choſen by God upon the foreſight of Faith, or not choſen till they have Faith, they are not ſo much God's Elect, as God their Elect; they chuſe God by Faith, before God chuſeth them by love. It had not been the Faith of God's Elect, i. e. Of thoſe already choſen, but the Faith of thoſe that were to be choſen by God afterwards. * Election is the cauſe of Faith, and not Faith the cauſe of Election. Fire is the cauſe of Heat, and not the Heat of Fire; the Sun is the Cauſe of the Day, and not the Day the cauſe of the riſing of the Sun. Men are not choſen becauſe they believe, but they believe becauſe they are choſen: The Apoſtle did ill elſe to appropriate that to the Elect, which they had no more intereſt in by virtue of their Election, than the verieſt Reprobate in the World. If the foreſight of what works might be done by his Creatures, was the motive of his chuſing them, why did he not chuſe the Devils to Redemption, who could have done him better ſervice by the ſtrength of their Nature, than the whole Maſs of Adam's Poſterity?

* Dalle in loc.

Well then, there is no poſſible way to lay the original Foundation of this act of Election, and preterition in any thing but the abſolute Sovereignty of God.

Juſtice or Injuſtice comes not into Conſideration in this Caſe. There is no debt which Juſtice or Injuſtice always reſpects in its Acting: If he had pleaſed, he might have choſen all, if he had pleaſed, he might have choſen none. It was in his Supream Power, to have reſolved to have left all Adam's Poſterity under the rack of his Juſtice; if he determined to ſnatch out any, it was a part of his Dominion, but without any injury to the Creatures he leaves under their own guilt. Did he not paſs by the Angels, and take Man? And by the ſame right of Dominion may he pick out ſome Men from the common Maſs, and lay aſide others to bear the puniſhment of their Crimes. Are they not all his Subjects? All are his Criminals, and may be dealt with at the pleasure of their undoubted Lord and Sovereign. This is a work of Arbitrary Power: Since he might have chosen none, or chosen all, as he saw good himself. 'Tis at the liberty of the Artificer, to determine his Wood or Stone to such a Figure, that of a Prince or that of a Toad; and his Materials have no right to complain of him, since it lies wholly upon his own liberty. They must have little sence of their own vileness, and God's infinite Excellency above them by right of Creation, that will contend that God hath a lesser right over his Creatures, than an Artificer over his Wood or Stone. If it were at his Liberty whether to redeem Man, or send Christ upon such an undertaking; 'tis as much at his liberty, and the prerogative is to be allow'd him, what persons he will resolve to make capable of enjoying the Fruits of that Redemption. One Man was as fit a subject for Mercy as another; as they all lay in their Original Guilt. Why would not divine Mercy cast its eye upon this Man, as well as upon his Neighbour? There was no cause in the creature, but all in God, it must be resolved into his own Will.

Yet not into a Will without Wisdom. God did not chuse hand over head, and act by meer Will without Reason and Understanding; an infinite Wisdom is far from such a kind of procedure; but the reason of God is inscrutable to us: unless we could understand God, as well as he understands himself; the whole ground lies in God himself, no part of it in the Creature, Rom. 9. 15,16. Not in him that wills, nor in him that runs, but in God that shews mercy. Since God hath revealed no other Cause than his Will, we can resolve it into no other than his Sovereign Empire over all Creatures. 'Tis not without a stop to our Curiosity, that in the same place where God asserts the absolute Sovereignty of his Mercy to Moses, he tells him he could not see his Face, Exod. 33. 19,20. I will be Gracious, to whom I will be Gracious: and he said, Thou canst not see my Face. The Rays of his infinite Wisdom, are too bright and dazling for our weakness. The Apostle acknowledged, not only a Wisdom in this Proceeding, but a riches and treasure of Wisdom, not only that, but a depth and vastness of those riches of Wisdom, but was unable to give us an Inventory and Scheme of it, Rom. 11.33. The secrets of his Counsels are too deep for us to wade into; in attempting to know the reason of those acts, we should find our selves swallowed up into a bottomless Gulf. Though the Understanding be above our capacity, yet the admiration of his Authority and Submission to it, are not. We should cast our selves down at his feet, with a full resignation of our selves to his Sovereign pleasure *. This is a more comely carriage in a Christian, than all the contentious endeavours to measure God by our line.

* This was Dr. Goodwin's Speech when he was in trouble.

2. In bestowing Grace where he pleases. God in Conversion and Pardon, works not as a natural Agent, putting forth strength to the utmost, which God must do, if he did renew Man naturally, as the Sun shines, and the Fire burns, which always act, ad extremum virium, unless a Cloud interpose, to eclipse the one, and Water to extinguish the other. But God acts as a voluntary Agent, which can freely exert his Power when he please, and suspend it when he please. Though God be necessarily good, yet he is not necessitated to manifest all the Treasures of his Goodness to every Subject; he hath power to distil his Dews upon one part and not upon another. If he were necessitated to express his Goodness without a liberty, no thanks were due to him. Who thanks the Sun for shining on him, or the Fire for warming him? None, because they are necessary Agents, and can do no other.

What is the reason he did not reach out his Hand to keep all the Angels from sinking as well as some, or recover them when they were sunk? What is the reason he engrafts one Man into the true Vine, and lets another remain a wild Olive? Why is not the efficacy of the Spirit always link'd with the motions of the Spirit? Why doth he not mould the heart into a Gospel frame, when he fills the ear with a Gospel sound? Why doth he strike off the chains from some, and tear the vail from the heart, while he leaves others under their natural Slavery and Egyptian Darkness? Why do some lie under the bands of Death, while another is rais'd to a Spiritual Life? What reason is there for all this, but his absolute Will? The Apostle resolves the question, if the question be ask'd why he begets one and not another? Not from the Will of the Creature, but his own Will is the determination of one, James 1. 18. Why doth he work in one, to will and to do, and not in another? Because of his good pleasure, is the answer of another, Phil. 2. 13. He could as well new Create every one, as he at first created them, and make Grace as universal as Nature and Reason; but it is not his pleasure so to do.

1. 'Tis not for want of strength in himself. The Power of God is unquestionably able to strike off the chains of unbelief from all; he could surmount the obstinacy of every Child of Wrath, and inspire every Son of Adam with Faith as well as Adam himself. He wants not a Vertue superior to the greatest resistance of his Creature; a victorious beam of light might be shot into their Understandings, and a Flood of Grace might over-spread their Wills with one word of his Mouth, without putting forth the utmost of his Power. What hindrance could there be in any created Spirit, which cannot be easily pierced into, and new moulded by the Father of Spirits? Yet he only breaths this efficacious Vertue into some, and leaves others under that insensibility and hardness which they love, and suffers them to continue in their benighting Ignorance, and consume themselves in the embraces of their dear, though deceitful Dalilah's.

He could have conquered the resistance of the Jews, as well as chased away the darkness and ignorance of the Gentiles. No doubt, but he could over-power the Heart of the most malicious Devil, as well as that of the simplest and weakest Man. But the Breath of the Almighty Spirit is in his own Power, to breath where he lists, John 3. 8. 'Tis at his liberty, whether he will give to any the feeling of the invincible efficacy of his Grace. He did not want strength to have kept Man as firm as a Rock against the Temptation of Satan, and pour'd in such fortifying Grace, as to have made him impregnable against the Powers of Hell, as well as he did secure the standing of the Angels against the Sedition of their Fellows. But it was his Will to permit it to be otherwise.

2. Nor is it from any Prerogative in the Creature. He converts not any for their natural Perfection: Because he seizeth upon the most ignorant. Not for their moral Perfection: Because he converts the most sinful. Nor for their civil Perfection: Because he turns the most despicable.

1. Not for their natural Perfection of knowledge. He opened the minds and hearts of the more ignorant. Were the nature of the Gentiles better manur'd than that of the Jews, or did the Tapers of their Understandings burn clearer? No, the one were skill'd in the Prophesies of the Messiah, and might have compared the Predictions they own'd with the Actions and Sufferings of Christ, which they were spectators of. He let alone those that had expectations of the Messiah, and expectations about the time of Christ's Appearance, both grounded upon the Oracles wherewith he had intrusted them. The Gentiles were unacquainted with the Prophets, and therefore destitute of the Expectations of the Messiah, Eph. 2. 12. They were without Christ. Without any Revelation of Christ, because aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, and strangers to the Covenant of Promise, having no hope, and without God in the World, without any knowledge of God, or promises of Christ. The Jews might sooner in a way of reason have been wrought upon, than the Gentiles who were ignorant of the Prophets, by whoſe Writings they might have examined the Truth of the Apoſtles declarations; thus are they refus'd, that were the kindred of Chriſt according to the Fleſh, and the Gentiles that were at a greater diſtance from him, brought in by God. Thus he catcheth not at the ſubtle and mighty Devils, who had an Original in Spiritual Nature more like to him, but at weak and ſimple Man.

by

2. Not for any Moral Perfection: Becauſe he converts the moſt ſinful. The Gentiles ſteep'd in Idolatry and Superſtition. He ſow'd more Faith among the Romans than in Jeruſalem, more Faith in a City that was the common Sewer of all the Idolatry of the Nations conquered by them, than in that City which had ſo ſignally been own'd by him, and had not practiſed any Idolatry ſince the Babyloniſh Captivity. He planted Saintſhip at Corinth, a place notorious for the infamous Worſhip of Venus, a Superſtition attended with the groſſeſt Uncleanneſs. At Epheſus, that preſented the whole World with a cup of Fornication in their Temple of Diana. Among the Coloſſians, Votaries to Cybele, in a manner of Worſhip attended with beaſtly and laſcivious Ceremonies. And what character had the Cretians from one of their own Poets, mentioned by the Apoſtle to Titus, whom he had plac'd among them, to further the progreſs of the Goſpel, but the vileſt and moſt abominable? Tit. 1. 12. Lyars, not to be credited; evil Beaſts, not to be aſſociated with; ſlow Bellies, fit for no ſervice. What prerogative was there in the nature of ſuch putrefaction? As much as in that of a Toad, to be elevated to the dignity of an Angel. What ſteam from ſuch Dunghills could be welcome to him, and move him to caſt his eye on them, and ſweeten them from Heaven? What treaſures of worth were here, to open the treaſures of his Grace? Were ſuch filthy ſnuffs fit of themſelves to be kindled by, and become a lodging for a Goſpel beam? What invitements could he have from Lying, Beaſtlineſs, Gluttony, but only from his own Sovereignty? By this he plucked Fire-brands out of the Fire, while he left ſtraiter and more comely ſticks to conſume to aſhes.

3. Not for any Civil Perfection. Becauſe he turns the moſt deſpicable. He elevates not Nature to Grace, upon the account of Wealth, Honour, or any Civil ſtation in the World; he diſpenſeth not ordinarily thoſe Treaſures to thoſe that the miſtaken World fooliſhly admire and dote upon, 1 Cor. 1. 26. Not many mighty not many noble. A purple Robe is not uſually deck'd with this Jewel. He takes more of mouldy Clay than refin'd Duſt, to caſt into his Image; and lodges his Treaſures more in the Earthly Veſſels, than in the Worlds Golden ones. He gives out his richeſt Doles to thoſe that are the ſcorn and reproach of the World. Should he impart his Grace moſt to thoſe that abound in Wealth or Honour, it had been ſome Foundation for a Conception, that he had been mov'd by thoſe vulgarly eſteem'd Excellencies, to indulge them more than others. But ſuch a conceit languiſheth, when we behold the ſubjects of his Grace as void originally of any allurements, as they are full of provocations.

Hereby he declares himſelf free from all created engagements, and that he is not led by any external Motives in the Object.

3. 'Tis not from any Obligation which lies upon him. He is indebted to none, diſoblig'd by all. No Man deſerves from him any Act of Grace, but every Man deſerves what the moſt deplorable are left to ſuffer. He is obliged by the Children of Wrath to nothing elſe but ſhowers of Wrath, owes no more a debt to fall'n Man, than to fall'n Devils, to reſtore them to their firſt ſtation by a ſuperlative Grace; how was he more bound to reſtore them, than he was to preſerve them, to catch them after they fell, than to put a bar in the way of their falling? God, as a Sovereign, gave Laws to Men, and a ſtrength ſufficient to keep thoſe Laws. What obligation is there upon God to repair that ſtrength Man wilfully loſt, and extract him out of that condition into which he voluntarily plung'd himſelf? What if man ſinned by temptation, which is a Reaſon alledged by ſome? Might not many of the Devils do ſo too? Though there was a firſt of them that ſinned without a temptation, yet many of them might be ſeduced into Rebellion by the Ring-leader. Upon that account, he is no more bound to give Grace to all Men than to Devils. If he promis'd life upon Obedience, he threatned death upon Tranſgreſſion. By Man's diſobedience God is quit of his Promiſe, and owes nothing but Puniſhment upon the violation of his Law. Indeed Man may pretend to a claim of ſufficient ſtrength from him by Creation, as God is the Author of Nature, and he had it; but ſince he hath extinguiſh'd it by his ſin, he cannot in the leaſt pretend any Obligation on God for a new ſtrength. If it be a peradventure whether he will give repentance, as it is, 2 Tim. 2. 25. There is no tye in the caſe, a tye would put it beyond a peradventure with a God, that never forfeited his Obligation. * No Husbandman thinks himſelf oblig'd to beſtow coſt and pains, manure and tillage upon one Field more than another; though the nature of the Ground may require more, yet he is at his liberty whether he will expend more upon one than another. He may let it lie fallow as long as he pleaſe. God is leſs oblig'd to till and prune his Creatures, than Man is oblig'd to his Field or Trees. If a King proclaim a Pardon to a company of Rebels, upon the condition of each of them paying ſuch a ſum of Money; their Eſtates before were capable of ſatisfying the condition, but their Rebellion hath reduc'd them to an indigent condition; the Proclamation it ſelf is an Act of Grace, the condition requir'd is not impoſſible in it ſelf; the Prince out of a tenderneſs to ſome, ſends them that ſum of Money he hath by his Proclamation oblig'd them to pay, and thereby enabled them to anſwer the Condition he requires: The firſt he doth by a Sovereign Authority; the ſecond he doth by a Sovereign Bounty, he was oblig'd to neither of them; puniſhment was a Debt due to all of them: If he would remit upon Condition, he did relax his Sovereign Right; and if he would by his Largeſs make any of them capable to fulfil the Condition, by ſending them preſently a ſufficient ſum to pay the Fine, he acted as Proprietor of his own Goods, to diſpoſe of them in ſuch a quantity to thoſe to whom he was not oblig'd to beſtow a mite.

* Claude ſur la parabole des Noces, p. 29.

5. It muſt therefore be an Act of his meer Sovereignty. This can only ſit Arbitrator in every gracious Act. Why did he give Grace to Abel and not to Cain, ſince they both lay in the ſame Womb, and equally deriv'd from their Parents a taint in their nature: But that he would ſhew a ſtanding example of his Sovereignty to the future ages of the world in the firſt poſterity of man? Why did he give Grace to Abraham, and ſeparate him from his idolatrous kindred, to dignifie him to be the root of the Meſſiah? Why did he confine his promiſe to Iſaac, and not extend it to Iſhmael the Seed of the ſame Abraham by Hagar, or to the children he had by Keturah after Sarah's death? What reaſon can be alledged for this, but his ſovereign Will? Why did he not give the fallen Angels a moment of repentance after their ſin, but condemned them to irrevocable pains? Is it not as free for him to give grace to whom he pleaſe, as create what worlds he pleaſe; to form this corrupted clay into his own Image, as to take ſuch a parcel of duſt from all the reſt of the creation, whereof to compact Adam's body? Hath he not as much juriſdiction over the ſinful maſs of his creatures in a new creation, as he had over the Chaos in the old? And what reaſon can be render'd, of his advancing this part of Matter to the nobler dignity of a Star, and leaving that other part to make up the dark body of the earth? To compact one part into a glorious Sun, and another part into a hard Rock, but his Royal Prerogative? What is the reason a Prince subjects one Malefactor to punishment, and lifts up another to a place of trust and profit? That Pharaoh honored the Butler with an attendance on his Person, and remitted the Baker to the hands of the Executioner? It was his pleasure. And is not as great a right due to God, as is allow'd to the Worms of the Earth? What is the reason he hardens a Pharaoh, by denying him that Grace, which should mollifie him, and allows it to another? 'Tis because he will. Rom. 9. 18. Whom he will he hardens. Hath not Man the liberty to pull up the Sluce, and let the Water run into what part of the Ground he pleases? What is the reason some have not a Heart to understand the Beauty of his Ways? Because the Lord doth not give it them, Deut. 29. 4. Why doth he not give all his Converts an equal measure of his Sanctifying Grace; some have Mites, and some have Treasures? Why doth he give his Grace to some sooner, to some later; some are inspir'd in their Infancy, others not till a full Age, and after, some not till they have fallen into some gross Sin, as Paul; some betimes, that they may do him service; others later, as the Thief upon the Cross, and presently snatcheth them out of the World? Some are weaker, some stronger in nature, some more beautiful and lovely, others more uncomely and sluggish. 'Tis so in supernaturals. What reason is there for this, but his own will? This is instead of all that can be assign'd on the part of God. He is the free disposer of his own Goods, and as a Father, may give a greater Portion to one Child than to another. And what reason of complaint is there against God; may not a Toad complain that God did not make it a Man, and give it a portion of reason? Or a Fly complain, that God did not make it an Angel, and give it a Garment of Light, had they but any spark of Understanding; as well as Man complain, that God did not give him Grace as well as another; Unless he sincerely desired it, and then was denyed it, he might complain of God, though not as Soveraign, yet as a Promiser of Grace to them that ask it. God doth not render his Soveraignty formidable; he shuts not up his Throne of Grace from any that seek him; he invites Man, his Arms are open, and the Scepter stretched out; and no Man continues under the arrest of his Lusts, but he that is unwilling to be otherwise, and such a one hath no reason to complain of God.

the

3. His Soveraignty is manifest in disposing the means of Grace to some, not to all. He hath caus'd the Sun to shine bright in one place, while he hath left others benighted, and deluded by the Devils Oracles. Why do the Evangelical dews fall in this or that place, and not in another? Why was the Gospel publish'd in Rome so soon, and not in Tartary? Why hath it been extinguish'd in some places, as soon almost as it had been kindled in them? Why hath one place been honoured with the beams of it in one Age, and been covered with darkness the next? One Country hath been made a Sphear for this Star that directs to Christ, to move in, and afterwards it hath been taken away, and placed in another: Sometimes more clearly it hath shone, sometimes more darkly in the same place; what is the reason of this? 'Tis true, something of it may be referr'd to the Justice of God, but much more to the Soveraignty of God. That the Gospel is publish'd later and not sooner, the Apostle tells us, according to the Commandment of the living God, Rom. 16. 26.

1. The means of Grace after, the Families from Adam became distinct, were never granted to all the World. After that fatal breach in Adam's Family, by the death of Abel, and Cain's separation, we read not of the means of Grace continued among Cain's Posterity; it seems to be continued in Adam's sole Family and not publish'd in Societies till the time of Seth, Gen. 4. 26. Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord. It was continued in that Family till the Deluge, which was 1523 years after the Creation, according to some; or 1656 years according to others. After that, when the World degenerated, it was communicated to Abraham, and setled in the Posterity that descended from Jacob: Though he left not the World without a Witness of himself, and some sprinklings of Revelations in other parts, as appears by the Book of Job, and the Discourses of his Friends.

2. The Jews had this priviledge granted them above other Nations, to have a clearer Revelation of God. God separated them from all the World, to honor them with the depositum of his Oracles, Rom. 3. 2. To them were committed the Oracles of God. In which regard all other Nations are said to be without God, as being destitute of so great a priviledge, Eph. 2. 12. The Spirit blew in Canaan, when the Lands about it felt not the saving breath of it. He hath not dealt so with any Nation, and as for his Judgments they have not known them, Psal. 147. 20. The rest had no warnings from the Prophets; no dictates from Heaven but what they had by the light of Nature, the view of the Works of Creation, and the Administration of Providence, and what remain'd among them of some ancient Traditions deriv'd from Noah, which in tract of time were much defaced. We read but of one Jonah sent to Niniveh, but frequent Alarms to the Israelites by a multitude of Prophets commissioned by God. 'Tis true, the Door of the Jewish Church was open to what Proselytes would enter themselves, and embrace their Religion and Worship: but there was no publick Proclamation made in the World; only God by his Miracles in their deliverance from Egypt (which could not but be famous among all the Neighbor Nations) declared them to be a people favor'd by Heaven. But the tradition from Adam and Noah was not publickly reviv'd by God in other parts, and rais'd from that Grave of forgetfulness wherein it had lain so long buried. Was there any reason in them for this Indulgence? God might have been as liberal to any other Nation, yea to all the Nations in the World, if it had been his Soveraign Pleasure. Any other People were as fit to be entrusted with his Oracles, and be Subjects for his Worship as that people; yet all other Nations, till the rejection of the Jews, because of their rejection of Christ, were strangers from the Covenant of Promise. These People were part of the common mass of the World: They had no Prerogative in Nature above Adam's Posterity. Were they the extract of an innocent part of his Loyns, and all the other Nations drain'd out of his Putrefaction? Had the blood of Abraham, from whom they were more immediately descended, any more precious tincture than the rest of Mankind? They as well as other Nations were made of one blood, Acts 17. 16. And that corrupted both in the Spring and in the Rivulets. Were they better then other Nations, when God drew them out of their slavery? We have Joshua's authority for it, that they had complyed with the Egyptian Idolatry, and served other Gods in that place of their servitude, Josh. 24 14. Had they had an abhorrency of the Superstition of Egypt, while they remain'd there, they could not so soon have erected a Golden Calf for Worship, in imitation of the Egyptian Idols. All the rest of Mankind had as inviting reasons to present God with as those people had. God might have granted the same priviledge to all the World as well as to them, or deny it them, and endow'd all the rest of the World with his Statutes: but the enriching such a small company of people with his Divine showers, and leaving the rest of the World as a barren Wilderneſs in Spirituals, can be plac'd upon no other account originally, than that of his unaccountable Soveraignty of his love to them: There was nothing in them to merit ſuch high Titles from God, as his Firſt-born, his peculiar Treaſure, the Apple of his Eye. He diſclaims any righteouſneſs in them, and ſpeaks a word ſufficient to damp ſuch thoughts in them, by charging them with their wickedneſs, while he loaded them with his Benefits, Deut. 9. 4, 6. The Lord gives thee not this Land for thy Righteouſneſs: For thou art a ſtiff-necked People. It was an act of God's free Pleaſure, to chooſe them to be a People to himſelf, Deut. 7. 6.

3. God afterwards rejected the Jews, gave them up to the hardneſs of their Hearts, and ſpread the Goſpel among the Gentiles. He hath caſt off the Children of the Kingdom, thoſe that had been enroll'd for his Subjects for many Ages, who ſeem'd by their deſcent from Abraham, to have a right to the Priviledges of Abraham, and called Men from the Eaſt and from the Weſt, from the darkeſt Corners of the World to ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, in the Kingdom of Heaven, i. e. To partake with them of the Promiſes of the Goſpel, Matth. 8. 11. The People that were accounted Accurſed for the Jews, enjoy the means of Grace, which have been hid from thoſe, that were once dignified, theſe 1600 Years; that they have neither Ephod nor Teraphim, nor Sacrifice, nor any true Worſhip of God among them, Hoſ. 3. 4. Why he ſhould not give them Grace, to acknowledge, and own the Perſon of the Meſſiah, to whom he had made the Promiſes of him for ſo many ſucceſſive Ages, but let their Hearts be Fat, and their Ears heavy, Iſaiah 6. 10. Why the Goſpel at length after the Reſurrection of Chriſt ſhould be preſented to the Gentiles, not by Chance, but purſuant to the Reſolution, and Prediction of God declared by the Prophets, that it ſhould be ſo in Time? Why he ſhould let ſo many hundred of Years paſs over, after the World was peopled, and let the Nations all that while ſoak in their Idolatrous Cuſtoms? Why he ſhould not call the Gentiles without rejecting the Jews, and bind them both up together in the bundle of Life? Why he ſhould acquaint ſome People with it, a little after the publiſhing it in Jeruſalem, by the deſcent of the Spirit, and others not a long time after? Some in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity enjoyed it, others have it not, as thoſe in America, till the laſt Age of the World; can be referred to nothing but his Soveraign Pleaſure.

What merit can be diſcovered in the Gentiles? There is ſomething of Juſtice in the Caſe of the Jews rejection, nothing but Soveraignty in the Gentiles reception into the Church. If the Jews were bad, the Gentiles were in ſome ſort worſe: The Jews own'd the one true God without mixture of Idols, though they own'd not the Meſſiah in his appearance, which they did in a Promiſe; but the Gentiles own'd neither the one, nor the other. Some tell us, it was for the merit of ſome of their Anceſtors. How comes the means of Grace then to be taken from the Jew, who had, (if any People ever had) meritorious Anceſtors for a Plea? If the merit of ſome of their former Progenitors were the Cauſe, what was the Reaſon the Debt due to their merit, was not paid to their immediate Progeny, or to themſelves, but to a Poſterity ſo diſtant from them; and ſo abominably depraved, as the Gentile World was, at the day of the Goſpel-Sun ſtriking into their Horizon? What merit might be in their Anceſtors (if any could be ſuppoſed in the moſt refined rubbiſh,) 'twas ſo little for themſelves, that no Oyl could be ſpared out of their Lamps for others. What merit their Anceſtors might have, might be forfeited by the ſucceeding Generations. 'Tis ordinarily ſeen, that what honour a Father deſerves in a State for publick Service, may be loſt by the Son, forfeited by Treaſon, and himſelf attainted.

Or was it out of a foreſight that the Gentiles would embrace it, and the Jews reject it, that the Gentiles would embrace it in one place and not in another? How did God foreſee it but in his own Grace, which he was reſolved to diſplay in one, not in another? It muſt be then ſtill reſolved into his Soveraign Pleaſure. Or did he foreſee it in their Wills and Nature? What, were they not all one common droſs? Was any part of Adam by Nature better than another? How did God foreſee that which was not, nor could be, without his pleaſure to give ability and Grace to receive?

Well then, what Reaſon but the Soveraign pleaſure of God can be alledged, why Chriſt forbad the Apoſtles at their firſt Commiſſion to Preach to the Gentiles? Matth. 10. 15. But at the ſecond and ſtanding Commiſſion orders them to Preach to every Creature. Why did he put a demurr to the Reſolutions of Paul and Timothy. To impart light to Bithynia, or order them to go into Macedonia? Was that Countrey more worthy upon whom lay a great part of the Blood of the World ſhed in Alexanders time? Acts 16. 6, 7, 9, 10. Why ſhould Corazin and Bethſaida enjoy thoſe means, that were not granted to the Tyrians and Sidonians, who might probably have ſooner reached out their Arms to welcome it? Matth. 11. 21. Why ſhould God ſend the Goſpel into our Iſland, and cauſe it to flouriſh ſo long here, and not ſend it, or continue it in the furtheſt Eaſtern parts of the World? Why ſhould the very Profeſſion of Chriſtianity poſſeſs ſo ſmall a compaſs of ground in the World, but five parts in Thirty, the Mahometans holding ſix parts, and the other Nineteen overgrown with Paganiſm, where either the Goſpel was never planted, or elſe ſince rooted up? To whom will you refer this, but to the ſame Cauſe our Saviour doth the Revelation of the Goſpel to Babes, and not to the wiſe, even to his Father? For ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight. Matth. 11. 25, 26. For ſo was thy good pleaſure before thee (as in the Original.) 'Tis at his Pleaſure whether he will give any clear Revelation of his Goſpel, or leave them only to the Light of Nature. He could have kept up the firſt beam of the Goſpel in the Promiſe in all Nations among the Apoſtaſies of Adam's Poſterity, or renewed it in all Nations, when it began to be darkned, as well as he firſt publiſht it to Adam after his Fall. But it was his Soveraign Pleaſure, to permit it to be obſcur'd in one Place, and to keep it lighted in another.

4. His Soveriagnty is manifeſt in the various influences of the means of Grace. He ſaith to theſe waters of the Sanctuary, as to the Floods of the Sea, Hitherto you ſhall go and no further. Sometimes they waſh away the filth of the Fleſh, and outward Man, but not that of the Spirit. The Goſpel Spiritualizeth ſome, and only moralizeth others; ſome are by the Power of it ſtruck down to Conviction, but not rais'd up to Converſion. Some have only the Gleams of it in their Conſciences, and others more powerful Flaſhes; ſome remain in their thick darkneſs under the beaming of the Goſpel every Day in their Face, and after a long inſenſibleneſs are rouz'd by its light and warmth. Sometimes there is ſuch a powerful Breath in it, that it levels the haughty Imaginations of Men, and lays them at its Feet, that before ſtrutted againſt it in the Pride of their Heart. The Foundation of this is not in the Goſpel it ſelf, which is always the ſame, nor in the Ordinances which are Channels as ſound at one time as at another, but Divine Soveraignty that Spirits them as he pleaſeth, and blows when and where it liſts. It has ſometimes conquered its thouſands, Acts 2. 41. At another time ſcarce its tens; ſometime times the Harveſt hath been great, when the Labourers have been but few; at another time, it hath been ſmall, when the Labourers have been many. Sometimes whole Sheaves, at another time ſcarce Gleanings. The Evangelical Net hath been ſometimes full at a caſt, and at every caſt; at another time many have laboured all Night and Day too, and catched nothing. Acts 2. 47. The Lord added to the Church daily. The Goſpel Chariot doth not always return with Captives chain'd to the ſides of it, but ſometimes blurr'd and reproached, wearing the marks of Hells ſpite, inſtead of imprinting the marks of its own Beauty. In Corinth it triumph'd over many People; Acts 18. 10. In Athens 'tis mockt, and gathers but a few Cluſters, Acts 17. 32, 34. God keeps the Key of the Heart as well as of the Womb. The Apoſtles had a power of publiſhing the Goſpel, and working Miracles, but under the Divine Conduct. It was an inſtrumentality durante bene placito, and as God ſaw it convenient. Miracles were not upon every occaſion allow'd to them to be wrought, nor ſucceſs upon every Adminiſtration granted to them. God ſometimes lent them the Key, but to take out no more Treaſure, than was allotted to them.

There is a variety in the Time of Goſpel Operation; ſome riſe out of their Graves of Sin, and Beds of ſluggiſhneſs at the firſt appearance of this Sun, others lie ſnorting longer. Why doth not God Spirit it at one ſeaſon as well as at another, but ſet his diſtinct periods of Time; but becauſe he will ſhew his abſolute Freedom?

And do we not ſometimes Experiment that after the moſt ſolemn Preparations of the Heart, we are fruſtrated of thoſe incomes we expected: Perhaps it was becauſe we thought Divine returns were due to our Preparations, and God ſtops up the Channel, and we return dryer than we came, that God may confute our falſe Opinion, and preſerve the Honour of his own Soveraignty. Sometimes we leap with John Baptiſt in the Womb at the appearance of Chriſt; ſometimes we lye upon a lazy Bed when he knocks from Heaven. Sometimes the Fleece is dry and ſometimes wet, and God with-holds to drop down his Dew of the Morning upon it. The dews of his Word, as well as the droppings of the Clouds belong to his Royalty. Light will not ſhine into the Heart, though it ſhine round about us, without the Soveraign Order of that God, who commanded Light to ſhine out of the darkneſs of the Chaos, 2 Cor. 4. 6. And it is not ſeen alſo in regard of the refreſhing Influences of the Word? Sometimes the ſtrongeſt Arguments, and cleareſt Promiſes prevail nothing towards the quelling, black and deſpairing Imaginations, when afterwards we have found them frighted away by an unexpected Word, that ſeem'd to have leſs virtue in it ſelf, than any that paſſed in vain before it. The reaſonings of Wiſdom have dropt down like Arrows againſt a brazen Wall, when the Speech of a weaker Perſon hath found an Efficacy. 'Tis God, by his Soveraignty Spirits one word and not another. Sometimes a Secret Word comes in, which was not thought of before, as dropt from Heaven, and gives a refreſhing, when emptineſs was found in all the reſt. One Word from the Lips of a Soveraign Prince is a greater Cordial than all the Harangues of ſubjects without it. What is the Reaſon of this variety, but that God would increaſe the Proofs of his own Soveraignty? That as it was a part of his Dominion to Create the Beauty of a World, ſo it is no leſs, to Create the Peace as well as the Grace of the Heart. Iſaiah 57. 19. I create the Fruit of the Lips Peace.

Let us learn from hence to have adoring thoughts of, not murmuring Fancies againſt the Soveraignty of God. To acknowledge it with thankfulneſs in what we have, to implore it with a Holy Submiſſion, in what we want. To own God as a Soveraign in a way of dependance, is the way to be own'd by him as Subjects in a way of Favour.

5. His Soveraignty is manifeſted in giving a greater meaſure of knowledge to ſome, than to others. What Parts, Gifts, excellency of Nature any have above others, are God's donative. He gives Wiſdom to the Wiſe, and Knowledge to them that know Underſtanding, Dan. 2. 31. Wiſdom the habit, and Knowledge the right uſe of it in diſcerning the right Nature of Objects, and the fitneſs of Means, conducing to the end; all is but a Beam of Divine Light; and the different Degrees of Knowledge in one Man above another, are the Effects of his Soveraign Pleaſure. He enlightens not the Minds of all Men, to know every Part of his Will; one eats with a doubtful Conſcience, another in Faith without any ſtaggering. Romans 14. 2. Peter had a deſire to keep up Circumciſion, not fully underſtanding the Mind of God in the Abolition of the Jewiſh Ceremonies. While Paul was clear in the Truth of that Doctrine. A Thought comes into our Mind, that like a Sun-beam makes a Scripture-Truth viſible in a Moment, which before we were poring upon without any ſucceſs; this is from his Pleaſure. One in the Primitive Times had the Gift of Knowledge, another of Wiſdom, one the Gift of Propheſie, another of Tongues, one the Gift of Healing, another that of diſcerning Spirits; why this Gift to one Man, and not to another? Why ſuch a Diſtribution in ſeveral Subjects? Becauſe it is his Soveraign Pleaſure. The Spirit divides to every Man ſeverally as he will, 1 Cor. 12. 11. Why doth he give Bezaleel and Aholiab the Gift of Engraving, and making Curious Works for the Tabernacle, Exod. 31. 3. and not others? Why doth he beſtow the Treaſures of Evangelical Knowledge upon the meaneſt of Earthen Veſſels, the Poor Galileans, and neglect the Phariſees ſtor'd with the Knowledge both of Naturals and Morals? Why did he give to ſome, and not to others, to know the Myſteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, Mat. 13. 11. The Reaſon is implyed in the Words: Becauſe it was the Myſtery of his Kingdom, and therefore was the Act of his Soveraignty. How would it be a Kingdom and Monarchy, if the Governour of it were bound to do what he did? 'Tis to be reſolv'd only into the Soveraign right of Propriety of his own Goods, that he furniſheth Babes with a ſtock of Knowledge, and leaves the Wiſe and Prudent empty of it. Matth. 11. 26. Even ſo Father, for ſo it ſeem'd good in thy ſight. Why did he not reveal his Mind to Eli a grown Man, and in higheſt Office in the Jewiſh Church, but open it to Samuel a ſtripling; Why did the Lord go from the one to the other? Becauſe his Motion depends upon his own Will. Some are of ſo dull a Conſtitution, that they are uncapable of any Impreſſion, like Rocks too hard for a ſtamp; others like Water, you may ſtamp what you pleaſe, but it vaniſheth as ſoon as the Seal is remov'd. 'Tis God forms Men as he pleaſeth, ſome have Parts to govern a Kingdom, others ſcarce brains to Conduct their own Affairs. One is fit to Rule Men, and another ſcarce fit to keep Swine. Some have capacious Souls in crazy and deform'd Bodies, others contracted Spirits and heavier Minds in a richer and more beautiful Caſe. Why are not all ſtones alike? Some have a more ſparkling Light, as Gems, more Orient then Pebbles. Some are Stars of firſt, and others of leſs Magnitude, others as mean as Glo-worms, a ſlimy Luſtre: 'Tis becauſe he is the Soveraign diſpoſer, of what belongs to him; and gives here, as well as at the Reſurrection, to one a Glory of the Sun, to another that of the Moon, and to a third a leſs, reſembling that of a Star, 1 Cor. 15. 40. And this God may do by the ſame right of Dominion, as he exerciſed, when he endow'd ſome kinds of Creatures with a greater Perfection than others, in their Nature. Why may he not as well garniſh one Man with a greater Proportion of Gifts, as make a Man differ in excellency from the Nature of a Beaſt? Or frame Angels to a more purely ſpiritual Nature than a Man? Or make one Angel a Cherubim, or Seraphim with a greater Meaſure of Light than another? Though the Foundation of this is his Dominion, yet his Wiſdom is not unintereſted in his Soveraign diſpoſal; he garniſheth thoſe with a greater ability, whom he intends for greater ſervice, than thoſe that he intends for leſs, or none at all: As an Artificer beſtows more labour, and carves a more excellent figure upon thoſe Stones, that he deſigns for a more honourable Place in the building. But tho' the intending this or that Man for ſervice, be the motive of laying in a greater Proviſion in him than in others, yet ſtill it is to be referred to his Soveraignty ſince that firſt Act of culling him out for ſuch an end, was the fruit ſolely of his Soveraign Pleaſure. As wen he reſolv'd to make a Creature, actually to glorifie him, in Wiſdom he muſt give him Reaſon; yet the making ſuch a Creature was an Act of his abſolute Dominion.

6. His Soveraignty is manifeſt in the calling ſome to a more ſpecial ſervice in their Generation. God ſettles ſome in immediate Offices of his ſervice, and perpetuates them in thoſe Offices with a neglect of others, who ſeem to have a greater pretence to them. Moſes was a greater ſufferer for Iſrael, the ſollicitor for them in Egypt, and the conductor of them from Egypt to Canaan; yet he was not choſen to the high Prieſthood, but that was an Office ſetled upon Aaron, and his poſterity after him in a lineal deſent; Moſes was only pitched upon for the preſent reſcue of the Captiv'd Iſraelites, and to be the inſtrument of Divine Miracles; but notwithſtanding all the ſucceſs he had in his conduct, his faithfulneſs in his employment, and the tranſcendent familiarity he had with the great Ruler of the World, his poſterity were left in the common level of the Tribe of Levi without any ſpecial mark of dignity upon them above the reſt for all the ſervices of that great Man. Why Moſes for a Temporary Magiſtracy, Aaron for a perpetual Prieſthood above all rhe reſt of the Iſraelites, hath little reaſon but the abſolute pleaſure God who deſtributes his employments, as he pleaſeth; and as a Maſter orders this Servant to do the nobleſt work, and another to labour in baſer Offices according to his pleaſure? Why doth he call out David a Shepherd to ſway the Jewiſh Scepter above the reſt of the Brothers, that had a fairer appearance, and had been bred in Arms, and enur'd to the Toils and Watchings of a Camp? Why ſhould Mary be the Mother of Chriſt, and not ſome other of the ſame Family of David of a more ſplendid birth, and a nobler education? Though ſome other Reaſons may be rendr'd, yet that which affords the greateſt acquieſcence, is the Soveraign Will of God. Why did Chriſt chooſe out of the meaneſt of the People the Twelve Apoſtles, to be Heralds of his Grace in Judæa and other parts of the World? And afterwards ſelect Paul before Gamaliel his Inſtructor, and others of the Jews, as Learned as himſelf, and advance him to be the moſt eminent Apoſtle above the heads of thoſe who had miniſtred to Chriſt in the days of his Fleſh? Why ſhould he preſerve Eleven of thoſe he firſt called, to propagate and enlarge his Kingdom, and leave the other to the employment of ſhedding his Blood? Why in the times of our Reformation he ſhould chooſe a Luther out of a Monaſtery, and leave others in their ſuperſtitious naſtineſs, to periſh in the Traditions of their Fathers? Why ſet up Calvin as a Bulwark of the Goſpel, and let others as Learned as himſelf, wallow in the ſink of Popery? 'Tis his pleaſure to do ſo. The Potter hath power to ſeparate this part of the Clay to form a Veſſel for a more publick uſe, and another part of the Clay to form a Veſſel for a more private one. God takes the meaneſt Clay to form the moſt excellent and honourable Veſſels in his Houſe. As he form'd Man, that was to Govern the Creatures, of the ſame Clay and Earth, whereof the Beaſts were form'd and not of that nobler Element of Water, which gave birth to the Fiſh and Birds. So he forms ſome that are to do him the greateſt ſervice, of the meaneſt materials, to manifeſt the abſolute right of his Dominion.

7. His Soveraignty is manifeſt in the beſtowing much Wealth and Honour upon ſome, and not vouchſafing it to the more induſtrious and Labourious attempts of others. Some are abas'd and others are elevated, ſome are enricht, and others impoveriſht, ſome ſcarce feel any Croſs, and others ſcarce feel any Comfort in their whole Lives. Some Sweat and Toil, and what they labour for, runs out of their reach; others ſit ſtill, and what they wiſh for, falls into their lap. One of the ſame Clay hath a Diadem to beautifie his Head, and another wants a covering to protect him from the weather. One hath a ſtately Palace to Lodge in, and another is ſcarce Maſter of a Cottage where to lay his Head. A Scepter is put into one Mans Hand, and a Spade into anothers. A rich Purple garniſheth one Mans Body, while another wraps himſelf in Dunghil Rags. The Poverty of ſome and the Wealth of others is an Effect of the Divine Soveraignty, whence God is ſaid, to be the Maker of the Poor as well as the Rich, Prov. 22. 2. Not only of their Perſons but of their conditions. The Earth and the fulneſs thereof is his Propriety, and he hath as much a right, as Joſeph had, to beſtow Changes of Rayments, upon what Benjamins he pleaſe. There is an Election of ſome to a greater degree of worldly Felicity, as there is an Election of ſome to a greater degree of ſupernatural Grace and Glory. As he makes it Rain upon one City and not upon another, Amos 4. 7. So he cauſeth Proſperity to diſtil upon the Head of one, and not upon another, Crowning ſome with earthly Bleſſings, while he croſſeth others with continual Afflictions: For he ſpeaks of himſelf as a great Proprietor, of the Corn that nouriſheth us, and the Wine that cheers us, and the Wood that warms us, Hoſea 2. 8, 9. I will take away, not your Corn and Wine, but my Corn, my Wine, my Wooll. his Right, to diſpoſe of the Goods of every particular Perſon, is unqueſtionable. He can take away from one, and paſs over the Propriety to another; thus he devolv'd the right of the Egyptian Jewels to the Iſraelites, and beſtow'd upon the Captives, what before he had vouchſafed to the Oppreſſors. As every Soveraign ſtate demands the Goods of their Subjects for the Publick Advantage in a caſe of Exigency, though none of that Wealth was gain'd by any Publick Office, but by their Private Induſtry, and gain'd in a Countrey, not ſubject to the Dominion of thoſe, that require a Portion of them. By this right he changes ſtrangely the ſcene of the World, ſometimes thoſe that are high, are reduc'd to a mean and ignominious condition, thoſe that are mean, are advanc'd to a ſtate of Plenty and Glory. The Counter which in accounting ſignifies now but a Penny, is preſently rais'd up to ſignify a pound. The proud Ladies of Iſrael inſtead of a Girdle of curious needle-word, are brought to make uſe of a Cord; as the vulgar Tranſlates Rent, a rag or list of Cloth. Isaiah 3. 24. And Sack-cloth for a Stomacher instead of Silk. This is the Soveraign act of God, as he is the Lord of the World. Psal. 71. 6, 7. Promotion comes neither from the East, nor from the West, nor from the South, but God is Judge, he pulls down one, and sets up another. He doth no wrong to any man, if he lets him languish out his days in poverty, and disgrace. If he gives, or takes away, he meddles with nothing, but what is his own more than ours, If he did dispense his benefits equally to all, Men would soon think it their due. The inequality and changes preserve the notion of Gods Soveraignty, and correct our natural unmindfulness of it; if there were no changes, God would not be fear'd as the King of all the Earth, Psal. 55. 19. To this might also be referred his investing some Countries with greater Riches in their Bowels and on the surface. The disposing some in the fruitful and pleasant Regions of Canaan or Italy, while he settles others in the Icy and barren parts of Northern Climates.

8. His Soveraignty is manifest in the times and seasons of dispensing his Goods. He is Lord of the times when, as well as of the Goods which he doth dispose of to any person; these the Father hath put in his own power, Acts 1. 7. As it was his Soveraign pleasure, to restore the Kingdom to Israel, so he would pitch upon the time, when to do it, and would not have his Right invaded, so much as by a question out of curiosity. This disposing of opportunities, in many things can be referred to nothing else but his Soveraign pleasure. Why should Christ come at the twilight and evening of the World, at the fulness. and not at the beginning of time? Why he should be from the infancy of the World, so long wrapt up in a promise, and not appear in the flesh till the last times and gray hairs of the World, when so many persons in all Nations had been hurried out of the World without any notice of such a Redeemer? What was this but his Soveraign Will? Why the Gentiles should be left so long in the Devils chains, wallowing in the sink of their abominable superstitions, since God had declar'd his intention by the Prophets, to call multitudes of them, and reject the Jews? Why he should deferre it so long, can be refered to nothing but the same cause. What is the reason the vail continues so long upon the heart of the Jews, that is promised, one time or other, to be taken off? Why doth God delay the accomplishment of those glorious predictions of the happiness and interest of that people, is it because of the sin of their Ancestors, a reason that cannot bear much weight. If we cast it upon that account, their Conversion can never be expected, can never be effected; if for the sins of their Ancestors, is it not also for their own sins? Do their sins grow less in number, or less venimous, or provoking in quality by this delay? Is not their Blasphemy of Christ as malicious, their hatred of him as strong, and rooted, as ever? Do they not as much approve of the bloody act of their Ancestors, since so many ages are past, as their Ancestors, did applaud it at the time of the Execution? Have they not the same disposition and Will, discovered sufficiently by the scorn of Christ, and of those that profess his Name, to act the same thing over again, were Christ now in the same state in the World, and they invested with the same power of Government? If their Conversion were deferr'd one age after the death of Christ for the sins of their preceeding Ancestors, is it to be expected now, since the present generation of the Jews in all Countreys have the sins of those remote, the succeeding, and their more immediate Ancestors lying upon them. This therefore cannot be the reason, but as it was the Soveraign pleasure of God to foretell his intention, to overcome the stoutness of their hearts, so it is his Soveraign pleasure, that it shall not be perform'd, till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, Rom. 11. 25. As he is Lord of his own Grace, so he is Lord of the Time, when to dispense it. Why did God create the World in Six days, which he could have erected, and beautified in a moment? Because it was his pleasure so to do. Why did he frame the World, when he did, and not many ages before? Because he is Master of his own work, Why did he not resolve to bring Israel to the fruition of Canaan till after four hundred years? Why did he draw out their deliverance to so long time after he began to attempt it? Why such a multitude of Plagues upon Pharaoh to work it, when he could have cut short the work by one mortal blow upon the Tyrant and his accomplices? It was his Soveraign pleasure to act so, though not without other reasons intelligible enough by looking into the story. Why doth he not bring Man to a perfection of stature in a moment after his Birth, but let him continue in a tedious infancy in a semblance to Beasts for want of an exercise of reason? Why doth he not bring this or that Man, whom he intends for service to a fitness in an instant but by long tracts of Study, and through many Meanders and Labyrinths? Why doth he transplant a hopeful person in his youth to the pleasures of another World, and let another of an eminent Holiness, continue in the misery of this, and wade through many Floods of afflictions? What can we chiefly refer all these things to, but his Soveraign pleasure? The times are determined by God, Acts 7. 26.

3. The Dominion of God is manifested as a Governour, as well as a Law-giver and Proprietor

1. In disposing of States and Kingdoms. Psalm 75. 7. God is Judge, he pulls down one, and sets up another; Judge is to be taken not in the same sence, that we commonly use the Word for a judicial Minister in a way of Tryal, but for a Governour; as you know the extraordinary Governours rais'd up among the Jews, were call'd Judges, whence one intire Book in the Old Testament is so denominated, the Book of Judges. God hath a Prerogative, to change Times and Seasons. Dan. 2. 21. i. e. The Revolutions of Government, whereby Times are alter'd *. How many Empires that have spread their wings over a great part of the World, have had their Carkasses torn in Pieces; and unheard of Nations pluckt off the wings of the Roman Eagle, after it had prey'd upon many Nations of the World? And the Macedonian Empire was as the Dew, that is dried up a short Time after it falls. He erected the Chaldæan Monarchy, us'd Nebuchadnezzar to overthrow and punish the ungrateful Jews; and by a Soveraign Act gave a great parcel of Land into his Hands; and what he Thought was his right by Conquest, was God's donative to him. You may read the Charter to Nebuchadnezzar, whom he terms his Servant. Jer. 27. 6. And now I have given all those Lands, the Lands are mentioned, ver. 3. Into the Hands of Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon my Servant. Which Decree he pronounceth after his asserting his right of Soveraignty over the whole Earth, Ver. 5. After that, he puts a Period to the Chaldæan Empire, and by the same Soveraign Authority decrees Babylon to be a spoil to the Nations of the North Country, and delivers her up as a spoil to the Persian, Jer. 50. 9, 10. And this for the Manifestation of his Soveraign Dominion, that he was the Lord, that made Peace, and created Evil, Isaiah 45. 6, 7. God afterwards overthrows that by the Grecian Alexander, propheſied of under the Figure of a Goat, with one horn between his Eyes, Dan. 8. The swift

* Mr. Mede in one of his Letters

ſwift current of his Victories, as ſwift as his Motion ſhew'd it to be from an extraordinary Hand of Heaven, and not either from the Policy or Strength of the Macedonian. His Strength in the Prophet is deſcribed to be leſs, being but one horn running againſt the Perſian, deſcrib'd under the Figure of a Ram with two Horns *. And himſelf acknowledg'd a Divine Motion exciting him to that great attempt, when he ſaw Joddus the High Prieſt, coming out in his Prieſtly Robes, to meet him at his approach to Jeruſalem; whom he was about to worſhip, acknowledging that the Viſion, which put him upon the Perſian War, appear'd to him in ſuch a garb. What was the Reaſon Iſrael was rent from Judah, and both ſplit into two diſtinct Kingdoms? Becauſe Reboboam would not hearken to ſober and ſound Counſels, but follow the advice of Upſtarts. What was the Reaſon he did not hearken to ſound Advice, ſince he had ſo advantageous an Education under his Father Solomon the wiſeſt Prince of the World? The Cauſe was from the Lord, 1 Kings 12. 15. That he might perform, what he had before ſpoke. In this he acted according to his Royal Word, but in the firſt Reſolve he acted as a Soveraign Lord that had the diſpoſal of all Nations in the World. And though Ahab had a numerous Poſterity, Seventy Sons to inherit the Throne after him, yet God by his Soveraign Authority gives them up into the Hands of Jehu, who ſtrips them of their Lives and Hopes together; not a Man of them ſucceeded in the Throne, but the Crown is transferr'd to Jehu by God's diſpoſal.

* Joſephus.

In Wars, whereby flouriſhing Kingdoms are overthrown, God hath the chief Hand; in reference to which it is obſerved, that in the two Prophets Iſaiah and Jeremy, God is called the Lord of Hoſts 130 Times. 'Tis not the Sword of the Captain, but the Sword of the Lord, bears the firſt rank; The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon. Judges 7. 18. The Sword of a Conqueror is the Sword of the Lord, and receives its Charge and Commiſſion from the great Soveraign. Jerem. 47. 6, 7. We are apt to confine our Thoughts to ſecond Cauſes, lay the fault upon the miſcarriages of Perſons, the Ambition of the one, and the Covetouſneſs of another, and regard them not as the Effects of Gods Soveraign Authority, linking ſecond Cauſes together, to ſerve his own Purpoſe. The skill of one Man may lay open the Folly of a Counſellor, an earthly force may break in Pieces the Power of a mighty Prince. But Job in his Conſideration of thoſe things, refers the Matter higher. Job 12. 18. He looſeth the Bond of Kings, and girdeth their Loyns with a Girdle. He looſeth the Bonds of Kings, i. e. takes off the Yokes, they lay upon their Subjects; and gird their Loyns with a girdle; A Cord as the Vulgar; he lays upon them thoſe Fetters they fram'd for others, ſuch a Girdle or Band as is the Mark of Captivity, as the Words, Verſe 19. confirm it. He leads Princes away ſpoil'd, and overthrows the mighty. God lifts up ſome to a great height, and caſts down others to a diſgraceful Ruine. All thoſe changes in the Face of the World, the Revolutions of Empires, the deſolating and Ravaging Wars which are often immediately the birth of the Vice, Ambition, and Fury of Princes, are the Royal Acts of God as Governour of the World. All Government belongs to him, he is the Fountain of all the Great and Petty Dominions in the World: And therefore may place in them what Subſtitutes and Vicegerents he pleaſeth; as a Prince may remove his Officers at Pleaſure, and take their Commiſſions from them. The higheſt are ſetled by God, durante bene placito, and non quamdiu bene ſe geſſerint. Thoſe Princes that have been the Glory of their Countrey, have ſway'd the Scepter but a ſhort Time, when the more Wolviſh ones have remain'd longer in Commiſſion, as God hath ſeen fit for the Ends of his own Soveraign Government. Now by the Revolutions in the World and Changes in Governours and Government, God keeps up the acknowledgement of his Soveraignty, when he doth arreſt grand and publick Offenders, that wear a Crown by his Providence, and employ it by their Pride againſt him, that plac'd it there. When he arraigns ſuch by a ſignal Hand from Heaven, he makes them the publick Examples of the Rights of his Soveraignty, declaring thereby, that the Cedars of Lebanon are as much at his Foot, as the Shrubs of the Valley; that he hath as Soveraign an Authority over the Throne in the Palace, as over the Stool in the Cottage.

2. The Dominion of God is manifeſted, in raiſing up and ordering the Spirits of Men according to his Pleaſure. He doth as the Father of Spirits, communicate an influence to the Spirits of Men as well as an Exiſtence; he puts what Inclinations he pleaſeth into the Will, ſtores it with what habits he pleaſe, whither natural or ſupernatural, whereby it may be render'd more ready to Act according to the Divine Purpoſe. The Will of Man is a finite Principle, and therefore ſubject to him who hath an infinite Soveriagnty over all Things; and God having a Soveraignty over the Will in the Manner of its acting, cauſeth it to Will, what he Wills, as to the outward Act, and the outward Manner of performing it. There are many Examples of this Part of his Soveraignty. God by his Soveraign Conduct, ordered Moſes a Protectoreſs as ſoon as his Parents had form'd an Ark of Bulruſhes, wherein to ſet him floting on the River, Exod. 2. 3, 4, 5, 6. They expoſe him to the Waves, and the Waves expoſe him to the view of Pharaohs Daughter, whom God by his ſecret ordering her motion, had poſted in that Place; and though ſhe was the Daughter of a Prince that inveterately hated the whole Nation, and had by various Arts endeavour'd to extirpate them; yet God inſpires the Royal Lady with Sentiments of Compaſſion to the forlorn Infant, though ſhe knew him to be one of the Hebrews Children, Verſe 6 i. e. one of that Race, whom her Father had devoted to the Hands of an Executioner, yet God that doth by his Soveraignty Rule over the Spirits of all Men, moves her to take that Infant into her Protection, and nouriſh him at her own Charge, give him a liberal Education, Adopt him her Son, who in Time was to be the Ruine of her Race, and the Saviour of his Nation. Thus he appointed Cyrus to be his Shepherd, and gave him a Paſtoral Spirit for the Reformation of the City, and Temple of Jeruſalem, Iſaiah 44. 28. And Iſaiah 45. 5. Tells them in the Propheſie, that he had girded him, though Cyrus had not known him, i. e. God had given him a Military Spirit and Strength for ſo great an attempt, though he did not know, that he was acted by God for thoſe Divine Purpoſes. And when the Time came for the Houſe of the Lord to be re-built, the Spirits of the People were rais'd up, not by themſelves, but by God. Ezra 1. 5. Whoſe Spirit God had rais'd to go up. And not only the Spirit of Zerubbabel the Magiſtrate, and of Joſhua the Prieſt, but the Spirit of all the People, from the higheſt to the meaneſt that attended him, were acted by God, to ſtrengthen their Hands, and promote the Work. Hag. 1. 14. The Spirits of Men, even in thoſe Works which are naturally deſirable to them, as the Reſtauration of the City, and rebuilding of the Temple was to thoſe Jews, are acted by God, as the Soveraign over them, much more when the Wheels of Mens Spirits are lifted up above their ordinary Temper and Motion. It was this Empire of God, good Nehemiah regarded, as that whence he was to hope for Succeſs; he did not aſſure himſelf ſo much of it, from the Favour he had with the King, nor the reaſonableneſs of his intended Petition, but the abſolute Power God had over the Heart of that great Monarch: And therefore he ſupplicates the Heavenly, before he petitioned the Earthly Throne. Nehem. 2. 4. So I pray'd to the God of Heaven. The Heathens had ſome glance of this; 'tis an Expreſſion that Cicero hath ſome where, That the Roman Common-wealth was rather Govern'd by the Aſſiſtance of the Supream Divinity over the Hearts of Men, than by their own Counſels and Management. How often hath the feeble Courage of Men been heightned to ſuch a pitch, as to ſtare Death in the Face, which before were dampt with the leaſt Thought or Glance of it? This is a Fruit of God's Soveraign Dominion.

3. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in reſtraining the furious paſſions of Men, and putting a block in their way. Sometimes God doth it by a remarkable hand, as the Babel-Builders were diverted from their proud deſign by a ſudden confuſion of their Language, and rendring it unintelligible to one another; ſometimes by ordinary, though unexpected means; as when Saul like a Hawk was ready to prey upon David, whom he had hunted as a Patridge upon the Mountains, he had another object preſented for his arms and fury by the Philiſtines ſuddain invaſion of a part of his Territory, 1 Sam. 23. 26, 27, 28. But it is chiefly ſeen by an inward curbing mutinous affections, when there is no viſible cauſe. What reaſon but this can be rendr'd, why the Nations bordering on Canaan, who bore no good Will to the Jews, but rather wiſhed the whole race of them rooted out from the face of the Earth, ſhould not invade their Countrey, pillage their Houſes, and plunder their Cattle, while they were left naked of any Humane defence, the Males being annually employ'd at one time at Jeruſalem in Worſhip; what reaſon can be rendr'd but an inviſible curb God put into their Spirits? What was the reaſon not a Man of all the Buyers and Sellers in the Temple ſhould riſe againſt our Saviour, when with a high hand he began to whip them out; but a Divine Bridle upon them? though it appears by the queſtioning his Authority, that there were Jews enough to have chas'd out him, and his company. John 2. 15, 18. What was the reaſon that at the publiſhing the Goſpel by the Apoſtles at the firſt deſcent of the Spirit, thoſe that had us'd the Maſter ſo barbarouſly a few days before, were not all in a foam againſt the Servants, that by preaching that Doctrine upbraided them with the late Murder? Had they better ſentiments of the Lord, whom they had put to death? Were their Natures grown tamer, and their Malignity expell'd? No, but that Soveraign who loos'd the Reins of their malicious corruption, to execute the Maſter for the purchaſe of Redemption, curb'd it from breaking out againſt the Servants, to further the propagation of the Doctrine of Redemption. He that reſtrains the roaring Lion of Hell, reſtrains alſo his Welps on Earth; he, and they muſt have a Commiſſion, before they can put forth a finger, to hurt, how malicious ſoever their Nature and Will be. His Empire reaches over the Malignity of Devils, as well as the nature of Beaſts. The Lions out of the Den, are bridled by him in favour of his Daniel's. His Dominion is above that of Principalities and Powers, their Decrees are at his Mercy, whither they ſhall ſtand or fall; he hath a vote above their ſtiffeſt Reſolves. His ſingle word, I will, or I forbid, outweighs the reſolute purpoſes of all the Mighty Nimrods of the Earth in their rendezvouſes, and Cabals, in their Aſſociations and Counſels. Iſaiah 8. 9, 10. Aſſociate your ſelves, O ye people, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces, take Counſel together, and it ſhall come to naught. When the Enemy ſhall come in like a floud, with a violent and irreſiſtable force, intending nothing but ravage and deſolation, the Spirit of the Lord ſhall lift up a ſtandard againſt them, Iſaiah 59. 19. Shall give a ſudden check and damp their Spirits, and put them to a ſtand. When Laban furiouſly purſued Jacob with an intent to do him an ill turn, God gave him a Command to do otherwiſe, Gen. 31. 24. Would Laban have reſpected that Command any more, than he did the light of Nature, when he Worſhiped Idols, had not God exerciſed his Authority, in inclining his Will to obſerve it, or laying reſtraints upon his natural inclinations, or denying his concourſe to the acting thoſe ill intentions, he had entertain'd? The ſtilling the principles of commotion in Men, and the noiſe of the Sea, are arguments of the Divine Dominion, neither the one nor the other is in the power of the moſt Soveraign Prince without Divine aſſiſtance. As no Prince can command a calm to a raging Sea, ſo no Prince can order ſtillneſs to a tumultuous People; they are both put together as equally parts of the Divine Prerogative, Pſal. 65. 7. Which ſtills the noiſe of the Sea, and tumults of the People. And David owns Gods Soveraignty more than his own, in ſubduing the People under him, Pſal. 18. 47. In this his Empire is illuſtrious, Pſal. 29. 10. The Lord ſitteth upon the flouds, yea, the Lord ſitteth King for ever; a King impoſſible to be depos'd; not only on the natural floods of the Sea, that would naturally overflow the World; but the metaphorical Floods or tumults of the People, the Sea in every man's heart, more apt to rage morally, than the Sea to foam naturally; if you will take the interpretation of an Angel, Waters and Flouds in the Prophetick ſtile ſignify the inconſtant and mutable People. Revel. 17. 1, 5. The Waters where the whore ſits, are People, and Multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues. So the Angel expounds to John the Viſion. which he ſaw, Verſe. 1. The Heathens acknowledg'd this part of God's Soverignty in the inward reſtraints of Men. Thoſe Apparitions of the Gods, and Goddeſſes, in Homer to ſeveral of the great Men, when they were in a Fury, were nothing elſe in the Judgment of the wiſeſt Philoſophers, than an exerciſe of God's Soveraignty in quelling their paſſions, checking their uncomely intentions, and controuling them in that which their rage prompted them to. And indeed did not God ſet bounds to the ſtorms in Mens hearts, we ſhoul ſoon ſee the Funeral, not only of Religion, but Civility; the one would be blown out, and the other torn up by the Roots.

4. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in defeating the purpoſes and devices of Men. God often makes a mock of humane projects, and doth as well accompliſh that which they never dreamt of, as diſappoint that which they confidently deſign'd. He is preſent at all Cabals, laughs at Mens formal and ſtudied Counſels, bears a hand over every Egg they hatch, thwarts their beſt compacted deſigns, ſupplants their contrivances, breaks the Engines they have been many years rearing, diverts the intentions of Men, as a mighty Wind blows an Arrow from the mark, which the Archer intended. Job 5. 12. He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, ſo that their hands cannot perform their enterprize. He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, and the Council of the froward is carried headlong. Enemies often draw an exact ſcheme of their intended proceedings, Marſhal their Companies, appoint their Rendezvous, think to make but one morſel of thoſe they hate; God by his Soveraign Dominion turns the ſcale, changeth the gloomineſs of the oppreſſed into a Sun-ſhine, and the Enemies Sun-ſhine into darkneſs. When the Nations were gathered together againſt Sion, and ſaid, Let her be defiled, and let our Eye look upon Sion, Micah 4. 11. What doth God do in this caſe? Ver. 12. He ſhall gather them. i. e. Thoſe conſpiring Nations, as ſheaves into the floor; then he ſounds a Trumpet to Sion, Ariſe and threſh O Daughter of Sion, for I will make thy Horn Iron, and thy Hoofs Braſs, and thou ſhalt beat in pieces many People: And I will conſecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their ſubſtance unto the Lord of the whole Earth. I will make them, and their Councels, them, and their ſtrength, the monuments and ſignal marks of my Empire over the whole Earth.

When you ſee the cunningeſt deſigns baffled by ſome ſmall thing intervening, when you ſee Men of profound Wiſdom infatuated, miſtake their way, and grope in the noon day as in the night. Job. 5. 14. bewildred in a plain way. When you ſee the hopes of mighty attempters daſht into deſpair, their Triumphs turn'd into Funerals, and their joyful exactions into ſorrowful diſappointments; when you ſee the weak devoted to deſtruction, victorious; and the moſt preſumptuous defeated in their purpoſes, then read the Divine Dominion in the deſolation of ſuch devices. How often doth God take away the Heart and Spirit of grand Deſigns, and burſt a mighty Wheel, by ſnatching but one Man out of the World? How often doth he cut off the Spirits of Princes, Pſalm 76. 12. either from the World by Death, or from the Execution of their Projects by ſome unforeſeen Interruption, or from favouring thoſe Contrivances, which before they cheriſh'd by a change of their Minds? How often hath Confidence in God, and Religious Prayer, edg'd the weakeſt and ſmalleſt number of Weapons, to make a carnage of the carnally Confident? How often hath Preſumption been diſappointed, and the contemn'd Enemy rejoyc'd in the ſpoils of the proud expectant of Victory. * Phydias made the Image of Nemeſis or revenge at Marathon, of that Marble, which the haughty Perſians deſpiſing the weakneſs of the Athenian Forces, brought with them, to erect a Trophy for an expected, but an ungain'd Victory. Hamans Neck by a ſudden turn was in the Halter, when the Jews Necks were deſign'd to the Block. Julian deſign'd the overthrow of all the Chriſtians, juſt before his Breaſt was pierced by an unexpected Arrow. The Powder-Traytors were all ready to give Fire to the Mine, when the Soveraign Hand of Heaven ſnatcht away the Match. Thus the great Lord of the World cuts off Men on the Pinacle of their Deſigns, when they ſeem to threaten Heaven and Earth. Puts out the Candle of the Wicked, which they thought to uſe to light them to the Execution of their Purpoſes; turns their own Counſels into a curſe to themſelves, and a Bleſſing to their Adverſaries, and makes his greateſt Enemies contribute to the effecting his Purpoſes. How may we take notice of Gods abſolute diſpoſal of Things in Private Affairs, when we ſee one Man with a ſmall meaſure of Prudence, and little Induſtry have great Succeſs, and others with a ſmall meaſure of Wiſdom, and greater Toil and labour, find their enterprizes melt between their Fingers? It was Solomons Obſervation, That the Race was not to the ſwift, nor the Battle to the ſtrong, neither Bread to the Wiſe, nor Riches to Men of Underſtanding, nor yet favour to Men of skill, Eccleſ. 9. 11.

* Cauſin, ſymb. lib. 2. cap. 65.

Many Things might interpoſe to ſtop the ſwift in his Race, and damp the Courage of the moſt Valiant. Things do not happen according to Mens Ability, but according to the over-ruling Authority of God. God never yet granted Man the Dominion of his own way, no more than to be Lord of his own Time: The Way of Man is not in himſelf, it is not in him that walketh to direct his ſteps, Jerem. 10. 23. He hath given Man a Power of acting, but not the Soveraignty to command ſucceſs. He makes even thoſe Things which Men intended for their Security, to turn to their Ruine. Pilate delivered up Chriſt, to be accounted a Friend to Cæſar, and Cæſar ſoon after proves an Enemy to him, removes him from his Government, and ſends him into Baniſhment. The Jews imagined by the Crucifying Chriſt, to keep the Roman Enſigns at a diſtance from them, and this haſted their March by Gods Soveraign diſpoſal, which ended in a total Deſolation. He makes the Judges Fools, Job 12. 17. by taking away his Light from their Underſtanding, and Suffering them to go on in the Vanity of their own Spirits; that his Soveraignty in the Management of Things may be more apparent: For then he is known to be Lord, when he Snares the Wicked in the Work of his own Hands, Pſalm 9. 16. You have ſeen much of this Doctrine in your Experience; and if my Judgment fail me not, you will yet ſee much more.

5. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in ſending his Judgments upon whom he Pleaſes. He kills, and makes alive, he wounds, and heals whom he Pleaſeth. His Thunders are his own, and he may caſt them upon what Subjects he thinks good. He hath a right in a way of Juſtice to Puniſh all Men, he hath his Choice in a way of Soveraignty, to Pick out whom he pleaſe, to make the Examples of it. Might not ſome Nations be as wicked as thoſe of Sodom and Gomorrah, yet have not been ſcorcht with the like dreadful Flames? Zoar was untoucht, while the other Cities her Neighbours were burnt to Aſhes. Were there never any Places and Perſons Succeſſors in Sodoms guilt? Yet thoſe only by his Soveraign Authority are ſeparated by him, to be the Examples of his Eternal Vengeance, Jude 7. Why are not Sinners as Sodom, like as thoſe antient ones, ſcalded to Death by the like fiery Drops; 'tis becauſe it is his Pleaſure; and the ſame Reaſon is to be rendred, Why he would in a way of Juſtice cut off the Jews for their Sins, and leave the Gentiles untoucht in the midſt of their Idolatries. When the Church was conſumed, becauſe of her Iniquities, they acknowledg'd God's Soveraignty in this, Iſa. 64. 7, 8. We are the Clay, and thou art our Potter, and we all the work of thy Hands; thou haſt a Liberty either to break or preſerve us. Judgments move according to Gods Order. When the Sword hath a charge againſt Askelon and the Sea-ſhore, thither it muſt March, and touch not any other Place or Perſon, as it goes, though there may be demerit enough for it to Puniſh. Jer. 47. 6, 7. When the Prophet had ſpake to the Sword, Oh thou Sword of the Lord, how long will it be, ere thou be quiet? Put up thy ſelf into thy Scabbard, reſt and be ſtill. The Prophet anſwered for the Sword, how can it be quiet, ſeeing the Lord hath given it a charge againſt Askelon, there hath he appointed it? If he hath appointed a Judgment againſt London, or Weſtminſter, or any other Place, there it ſhall drop, there it ſhall Pierce, and in no other Place without a like charge. God as a Soveraign, gives Inſtructions to every Judgment, when, and againſt whom it ſhall March, and what Cities, what Perſons it ſhall Arreſt; and he is punctually obeyed by them as a Soveraign Lord. All Creatures ſtand ready for his Call, and are prepared to be Executioners of his Vengeance, when he ſpeaks the word; they are his Hoſts by Creation, and in array for his Service; at the ſound of his Trumpet, or beat of his Drum, they Troop together with their Arms in their Hands, to put his Orders exactly in Execution.

6. The Dominion of God is manifeſt, in appointing to every Man his Calling and Station in the World. If the Hairs of every Mans Head fall under his Soveraign Care, the Calling of every Man, wherein he is to glorifie God, and ſerve his Generation, which is of a greater concern than the Hairs of the Head, falls under his Dominion. He is the Maſter of the great Family; and divides to every one his Work as he pleaſeth. The whole Work of the Meſſiah, the Time of every Action, as well as the Hour of his Paſſion was ordered, and appointed by God. The Separation of Paul to the Preaching of the Goſpel, was by the Soveraign diſpoſal of God, Rom. 1. 1. By the ſame Exerciſe of his Authority, that he ſets every Man the bounds of his Habitation, Acts 17. 26. He preſcribes alſo to him the Nature of his Work. He that ordered Adam, the Father of Mankind his Work, and the Place of it, the dreſſing the Garden, Gen. 2. 15 doth not let any of his Poſterity be their own chooſers, without an influence of his Soveraign Direction on them. Though our Callings are our Work, yet they are by God's Order, wherein we are to be faithful to our great Maſter and Ruler.

his

7. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in the means and occaſions of Mens Converſion. Sometimes one occaſion, ſometimes another, one word lets a Man go, another Arreſts him, and brings him before God, and his own Conſcience; 'tis as God gives out the Order. He lets Paul be a Priſoner at Jeruſalem, that his Cauſe ſhould not be determined there, moves him to appeal to Cæſar, not only to make him a Priſoner but a Preacher in Cæſar's Court, and render his Chains an occaſion to bring in a Harveſt of Converts in Nero's Palace, Phil. 1. 12, 13. His Bonds in or for Chriſt are manifeſt in all the Palace, not the bare Knowledge of his Bonds, but the Soveraign Deſign of God in thoſe Bonds, and the ſucceſs of them; the bare Knowledge of them would not make others more Confident for the Goſpel, as it follows Verſe 14. without a providential Deſign of them. Oneſimus running from his Maſter, is guided by God's Soveraign Order into Pauls Company, and thereby into Chriſt's Arms, and he who came a Fugitive, returns a Chriſtian. Phil. 10. 15. Some by a ſtrong Affliction, have had by the Divine Soveraignty their Underſtandings awakened to conſider, and their Wills ſpirited to Converſion. Monica being call'd Meribibula or Toſs-pot, was brought to conſider her Way, and reform her Life. A Word hath done that at one Time, which hath often before fallen without any Fruit. Many have come to ſuck in the Eloquence of the Miniſter, and have found in the Honey for their Ears a ſting for their Conſciences. Auſtin had no other intent in going to hear Ambroſe, but to have a taſte of his famous Oratory; but while Ambroſe ſpake a Language to his Ear, God ſpake a Heavenly Dialect to his Heart. No Reaſon can be render'd of the order and timeing, and influence of thoſe Things, but the Soveraign Pleaſure of God, who will attend one occaſion and ſeaſon with his Bleſſing and not another.

8. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in diſpoſing of the Lives of Men. He keeps the Key of Death, as well as that of the Womb in his own Hand; he hath given Man a Life, but not Power to diſpoſe of it, or lay it down at his Pleaſure: And therefore he hath order'd Man not to Murder, not another, not himſelf; Man muſt expect his Call and Grant, to diſpoſe of the Life of his Body. Why doth he cut the Thred of this Mans Life, and ſpin anothers out to a longer Term? Why doth one Dye an inglorious Death, and another more honourable? One ſilently drops away in the Multitude, while another is made a Sacrifice for the Honour of God, or the ſafety of his Countrey. This is a Mark of Honour he gives to one and not to another. Phil. 1. 29. To you it is given. The Manner of Peters Death was appointed, John 21. 19. Why doth a ſmall and ſlight Diſeaſe againſt the Rules of Phylick, and the Judgment of the beſt Practitioners, diſlodge one Mans Soul out of his Body, while a greater Diſeaſe is maſter'd in another, and diſcharges the Patient to enjoy himſelf a longer Time in the Land of the Living? Is it the Effect of Means ſo much, as of the Soveraign diſpoſer of all Things? If Means only did it, the ſame Means would alway work the ſame Effect, and ſooner maſter a Dwarfiſh than a Giant-like Diſtemper. Our Times are only in Gods hands, Pſalm 31. 15. Either to cut ſhort, or continue long. As his Soveraignty made the firſt Marriage knot, ſo he reſerves the ſole Authority to himſelf to make the Divorce.

4. The Dominion of God is manifeſt in his being a Redeemer, as well as Law-giver, Proprietor, and Governour. His Soveraignty was manifeſt in the Creation in beſtowing upon this or that Part of Matter a Form more excellent than upon another. He was a Law-giver to Men and Angels, and preſcribed them Rules according to the Council of his own Will. Theſe were his Creatures and perfectly at his diſpoſal; but in Redemption a Soveraignty is exerciſed over the Son, the Second Perſon in the Trinity, one equal with the Father in Eſſence and Works, by whom the Worlds were Created, and by whom they do conſiſt. The whole Goſpel is nothing elſe but a Declaration of his Soveraign Pleaſure concerning Chriſt and concerning us in him; 'tis therefore call'd the Myſtery of his Will, Eph. 1. 9. The Will of God as diſtinct from the Will of Chriſt, a purpoſe in himſelf, not mov'd thereunto by any; the whole Deſign was fram'd in the Deity, and as much the purpoſe of his Soveraign Will, as the contrivance of his immenſe Wiſdom. He decreed in his own Pleaſure, to have the Second Perſon aſſume our Nature for to deliver Mankind from that Miſery, whereinto it was fallen: The whole of the Goſpel and the Priviledges of it are in that Chapter reſolved into the Will and Pleaſure of God.

God is therefore called, The Head of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 11. 3. As Chriſt is Superior to all Men, and the Man Superiour to the Woman, ſo is God Superiour to Chriſt, and of a more eminent Dignity; in regard of the conſtituting him Mediator, Chriſt is Subject to God, as the Body to the Head. Head is a Title of Government and Soveraignty, and Magiſtrates were called the Heads of the People. As Chriſt is the Head of Man, ſo is God the Head of Chriſt, and as Man is ſubject to Chriſt, ſo is Chriſt ſubject to God; not in regard of the Divine Nature, wherein there is an equality, and conſequently no Dominion of Juriſdiction; nor only in his Humane Nature, but in the Oeconomy of a Redeemer, conſidered as one deſign'd, and conſenting to be incarnate, and take our Fleſh, ſo that after this Agreement, God had a Soveraign Right to diſpoſe of him according to the Articles conſented to. In regard of his Undertaking, and the Advantage he was to bring to the Elect of God upon the Earth, he calls God by the ſolemn Title of his Lord, in that Prophetick Pſalm of him, Pſalm 16. 2. Oh my Soul, thou haſt ſaid unto the Lord, thou art my Lord, my Goodneſs extends not unto thee, but unto the Saints that are in the Earth. It ſeems to be the Speech of Chriſt in Heaven, mentioning the Saints on Earth as at a diſtance from him. I can add nothing to the Glory of thy Majeſty, but the whole Fruit of my Mediation and Sufferings will redound to the Saints on Earth; and it may be obſerved, that God is call'd the Lord of Hoſts in the Evangelical Prophets, Iſaiah, Haggai, Zachary, and Malachy, more in reference to this Affair of Redemption, and the Deliverance of the Church, than for any other Works of his Providence in the World.

1. This Soveraignty of God appears, in requiring Satisfaction for the Sin of Man. Had he indulg'd Man after his Fall, and remitted his Offence without a juſt Compenſation for the Injury he had received by his Rebellion, his Authority had been vilified, Man would always have been attempting againſt his Juriſdiction, there would have been a continual Succeſſion of Rebellions on Mans part, and if a continual Succeſſion of Indulgences on Gods part, he had quite diſown'd his Authority over Man, and ſtript himſelf of the flower of his Crown; ſatisfaction muſt have been requir'd ſome time or other, from the Perſon thus rebelling, or ſome other in his ſtead; and to require it after the firſt Act of Sin, was more preſervative to the right of the Divine Soveraignty, than to do it after a Multitude of repeated Revolts. God muſt have laid aſide his Authority, if he had laid aſide wholly the exacting Puniſhment for the Offence of Man.

2. This Soveraignty of God appears, in appointing Chriſt to this Work of Redemption. His Soveraignty was before manifeſt over Angels and Men by the right of Creation, there was nothing wanting to declare the higheſt charge of it, but his ordering his own Son to become a Mortal Creature; the Lord of all things to become lower than thoſe Angels, that had, as well as all other things, receiv'd their Being and Beauty from him, and to be reckon'd in his Death among the Duſt and Refuſe of the World: He by whom God created all things, not only became a Man, but a Crucified Man by the Will of his Father, Gal. 1. 4. Who gave himſelf for our Sins according to the Will of God; to which may referre that Expreſſion. Prov. 8. 22. of his being poſſeſſed by God in the beginning of his Way. Poſſeſſion is the Dominion of a thing inveſted in the Poſſeſſor; he was poſſeſſed indeed as a Son by Eternal Generation. He was poſſeſſed alſo in the beginning of his way or works of Creation as a Mediator by ſpecial Conſtitution; to this the Expreſſion, ſeems to referre, if you read on to the end of Verſe 31. wherein Chriſt ſpeaks of his rejoycing in the habitable part of his Earth, the Earth of the great God, who had deſign'd him to this ſpecial work of Redemption. He was a Son by Nature, but a Mediator by Divine Will; in regard of which Chriſt is often call'd Gods Servant, which is a Relation to God as a Lord. God being the Lord of all things, the Dominion of all Things inferior to him is inſeparable from him, and in this regard, the whole of what Chriſt was to do, and did actually do, was acted by him as the Will of God, and is expreſt ſo by himſelf in the Propheſie, Pſalm 40. 7. Lo I come. Verſe 8. I delight to do thy Will, which are put together, Heb. 10. 7. Lo I come to do thy Will O God. The deſigning Chriſt to this work was an Act of Mercy, but founded on his Soveraignty. His compaſſionate Bowels might have pitied us without his being Soveraign, but without it could not have relieved us. It was the Counſel of his own Will, as well as of his Bowels. None was his Counſellor, or Perſwader to that Mercy he ſhew'd, Rom. 11. 34 Who hath been his Counſellor, for it refers to that Mercy, in ſending the deliverer out of Sion, Verſe 26. as well as to other Things, the Apoſtle had been diſcourſing of. As God was at liberty to Create, or not to Create, ſo he was at liberty to Redeem or not to Redeem, and at his liberty whether to appoint Chriſt to this work, or not to call him out to it. In giving this order to his Son, his Soveraignty was exerciſed in a higher Manner, than in all the Orders and Inſtructions he hath given out to Men or Angels, and all the Employments he ever ſent them upon. Chriſt hath Names which ſignifie an Authority over him. He is called an Angel, and a Meſſenger, Mal. 3. 1. An Apoſtle, Heb. 3. 1. Declaring thereby, that God hath as much Authority over him, as over the Angels, ſent upon his Meſſages, or over the Apoſtles Commiſſion'd by his Authority, as he was conſider'd in the quality of Mediator.

3. This Soveraignty of God appears in transferring our Sins upon Chriſt. The Supream Power in a Nation can only appoint or allow of a Commutation of Puniſhment; 'Tis a part of Sovereignty, to transfer the Penalty due to the Crime of one upon another, and ſubſtitute a Sufferer with the Sufferers own Conſent, in the Place of a Criminal, whom he had a mind to deliver from a deſerv'd Puniſhment. God transferr'd the Sins of Men upon Chriſt, and inflicted on him a Puniſhment for them. He ſumm'd up the Debts of Man, charg'd them upon the ſcore of Chriſt, imputing to him the guilt, and inflicting upon him the Penalty. Iſa. 53. 6. The Lord hath laid upon him the Iniquity of us all; He made them all to meet upon his back. He hath made him to be Sin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. He was made ſo by the Soveraign Pleaſure of God. A Puniſhment for Sin, as moſt underſtand it, which could not be righteouſly inflicted, had not Sin been firſt righteouſly imputed by the Conſent of Chriſt, and the Order of the Judge of the World. This Imputation could be the immediate Act of none but God, becauſe he was the ſole Creditor. A Creditor is not bound to accept of another's Suretyſhip, but it is at his Liberty whether he will or no; and when he doth accept of him, he may challenge the Debt of him, as if he were the principal Debtor himſelf. Chriſt made himſelf Sin for us, by a voluntary Submiſſion, and God made him Sin for us, by a full Imputation, and treated him Penally, as he would have done thoſe Sinners in whoſe ſtead he ſuffer'd. Without this Act of Soveraignty in God, we had for ever periſhed: For if we could ſuppoſe Chriſt laying down his Life for us without the Pleaſure and Order of God, he could not have been ſaid to have born our Puniſhment; What could he have undergone in his Humanity, but a Temporal Death, but more than this was due to us, even the Wrath of God, which far exceeds the Calamity of a meer bodily Death? The Soul being principal in the Crime, was to be principal in the Puniſhment. The Wrath of God could not have dropt upon his Soul, and render it ſo full of Agonies, without the Hand of God. A Creature is not capable to reach the Soul, neither as to Comfort nor Terror; and the Juſtice of God could not have made him a Sufferer, if it had not firſt conſider'd him a Sinner by Imputation, or by inhærency and actual Commiſſion of a Crime in his own Perſon. The latter was far from Chriſt, who was holy, harmleſs and undefiled. He muſt be conſider'd then in the other State of Imputation, which could not be without a Soveraign Appointment, or at leaſt Conceſſion of God: For without it, he could have had no more Authority to lay down his Life for us, than Abraham could have had to have ſacrific'd his Son, or any Man to expoſe himſelf to Death without a Call; nor could any Plea have been entred in the Court of Heaven, either by Chriſt for us, or by us for our ſelves. And though the Death of ſo great a Perſon had been meritorious in it ſelf, it had not been meritorious for us, or accepted for us; Chriſt is deliver'd up by him, Rom. 8. 32. In every part part of that Condition wherein he was, and ſuffer'd, and to that end; that we might become the Righteouſneſs of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. That we might have the Righteouſneſs of him that was God, imputed to us, or that we might have a Righteouſneſs as great, and proportion'd to the Righteouſneſs of God, as God requir'd. It was an Act of Divine Soveraignty, to account him, that was Righteous, a Sinner in our ſtead, and to account us, who were Sinners, Righteous upon the Merit of his Death.

4. This was done by the Command of God, by God as a Law-giver, having the Supream Legiſlative and Præceptive Authority; in which reſpect, the whole work of Chriſt is ſaid to be an Anſwer to a Law, not one given to him, but put into his Heart, as the Law of Nature was in the Heart of Man at firſt, Pſalm 40. 7, 8. Thy Law is within my Heart. This Law was not the Law of Nature, or Moral Law, though that was alſo in the Heart of Chriſt, but the command of doing thoſe Things which were neceſſary for our Salvation, and not a command ſo much of doing, as of Dying. The Moral Law in the Heart of Chriſt would have done us no good without the Mediatory Law; we had been where we were by the ſole obſervance of the Precepts of the Moral Law, without his ſuffering the Penalty of it. The Law in the Heart of Chriſt was the Law of Suffering, or Dying, the doing that for us by his Death, which the Blood of Sacrifices was unable to effect. Legal. Sacrifices thou wouldſt not, thy Law is within my Heart, i. e. thy Law ordered me to be a Sacrifice; it was that Law, his Obedience to which was principally accepted and eſteem'd, and that was principally his Paſſive, his Obedience to Death, Phil. 2. 8. This was the ſpecial Command received from God, that he ſhould Dye, John 10. 18. 'Tis not ſo clearly manifeſted, when this Command was given, whether after the Incarnation of Chriſt, or at the point of his Conſtitution as Mediator, upon the Tranſaction between the Father and the Son, concerning the Affair of Redemption. The Promiſe was given before the World began, Tit. 1. 2. Might not the Precept be given before the World began, to Chriſt, as conſider'd in the quality of Mediator and Redeemer? Precepts and Promiſes uſually attend one another; every Covenant is made up of both. Chriſt conſider'd here as the Son of God in the Divine Nature, was not capable of a Command or Promiſe, but conſider'd in the Relation of Mediator between God and Man, he was capable of both; Promiſes of Aſſiſtance were made before his actual Incarnation, of which the Prophets are full: Why not Precepts for his Obedience, ſince long before his Incarnation this was his Speech in the Prophet, thy Law is within my Heart? However, a Command, a Law it was, which is a fruit of the Divine Soveraignty: That as the Soveraignty of God was impeached, and violated by the diſobedience of Adam, it might be own'd and vindicated by the Obedience of Chriſt; that as we fell by diſloyalty to it, we might riſe by the higheſt Submiſſion to it in another Head, infinitely Superior in his Perſon to Adam, by whom we fell.

5. This Soveraignty of God appears, in exalting Chriſt to ſuch a Soveraign Dignity as our Redeemer. * Some indeed ſay, that this Soveraignty of Chriſts Humane Nature was natural, and the right of it reſulted from its Union with the Divine, as a Lady of mean Condition, when eſpous'd and Married to a Prince, hath by virtue of that a natural right to ſome kind of Juriſdiction over the whole Kingdom: Becauſe ſhe is one with the King. But to wave this, the Scripture placeth wholly the conferring ſuch an Authority upon the Pleaſure and Will of God. As Chriſt was a Gift of God's Soveraign Will to us, ſo this was a Gift of God's Soveraign Will to Chriſt. Mat. 28. 28. All Power is given me. And he gave him to be Head over all Things to the Church, Eph. 1. 22. God gave him a Name above every Name, Phil. 2. 9. And therefore his Throne he ſits upon, is call'd, The Throne of his Father, Rev. 3. 21. And he committed all Judgment to the Son, i. e. All Government and Dominion; An Empire in Heaven and Earth, John 5. 22. and that becauſe he is the Son of Man, ver. 27. which may be underſtood, that the Father hath given him Authority to exerciſe that Judgement and Government, as the Son of Man, which he originally had as the Son of God; or rather becauſe he became a Servant, and humbled himſelf to Death, he gives him this Authority as the Reward of his Obedience and Humility, conformable to Phil. 2. 9. This is an Act of the high Soveraignty of God, to obſcure his own Authority in a Sence, and take into Aſſociation with him, or vicarious ſubordination to him, the Humane Nature of Chriſt as united to the Divine; not only lifting it above the Heads of all the Angels, but giving that Perſon in our Nature an Empire over them, whoſe Nature was more excellent than ours. Yea the Sovereignty of God appears in the whole management of this Kingly Office of Chriſt, for it is managed in every part of it, according to God's order. Ezek. 37. 24, 25. David my ſervant ſhall be King over them, and my ſervant David ſhall be their Prince for ever. He ſhall be a Prince over them, but my Servant in that Principality, in the exerciſe and duration of it. The Soveraignty of God is paramount, in all that Chriſt hath done as a Prieſt, or ſhall do as a King.

The USE.

I. For Inſtruction.

1. How great is the contempt of the Soveraignty of God? Man naturally would be free from Gods Empire, to be a ſlave under the Dominion of his own luſt. The Soveraignty of God as a Law-giver is moſt abhorr'd by Man, Lev. 26. 43. The Iſraelites, the beſt People in the world, were apt by nature not only to deſpiſe, but abhor his Statutes. There is not a Law of God, but the corrupt heart of Man hath an abhorency of. How often do Men wiſh, that God had not enacted this or that Law that goes againſt the grain, and in wiſhing ſo, wiſh that he were no Soveraign, or not ſuch a Soveraign as he is in his own nature, but one according to their corrupt model. This is a great quarrel between God and Man, whether he or they ſhall be the Soveraign Ruler. He ſhould not by the the will of Man rule in any one Village in the World; Gods vote ſhould not be predominant in any one Thing. There is not a Law of his, but is expos'd to contempt by the perverſeneſs of Man, Prov. 1. 21. Ye have ſet at naught all my Counſel, and would have none of my Reproof. Septuag. Ye have made all my Counſels without Authority. The Nature of Man cannot endure one Precept of God, nor one rebuke from him: And for this Cauſe God is at the expence of Judgments in the World, to aſſert his own Empire to the Teeth and Conſciences of Men, Pſalm 59. 13. Lord conſume them in Wrath, and let them know that God Rules in Jacob, to the ends of the Earth. The Dominion of God is not ſlighted by any Creature of this World but Man; all others obſerve it by obſerving his Order, whether in their natural Motions, or preternatural Irruptions; they punctually Act according to their Commiſſion. Man only ſpeaks a Dialect againſt the ſtrain of the whole Creation, and hath none to imitate him among all the Creatures in Heaven and Earth, but only among thoſe in Hell. Man is more impatient of the Yoke of God, than of the yoke of Man. There are not ſo many Rebellions committed by Inferiors againſt their Superiors and Fellow-Creatures, as are committed againſt God. A willing and eaſie ſinning, is an equalling the Authority of God to that of Man. Hoſ. 6. 7. They like Men have tranſgreſſed my Covenant. * They have made no more account of breaking my Covenant, than if they had broken ſome League or Compact made with a meer Man, ſo ſlightly do they eſteem the Authority of God. Such a diſ-eſteem of the Divine Authority is a vertual undeifying of him. To ſlight his Soveraignty, is to ſtab his Deity: Since the one cannot be preſerved without the ſupport of the other, his Life would expire with his Authority. How baſe and bruitiſh is it for vile Duſt and mouldring Clay, to lift up it ſelf againſt the Majeſty of God, whoſe Throne is in the Heavens, who ſways his Scepter over all parts of the World? A Majeſty before whom the Devils ſhake, and the higheſt Cherubims tremble. 'Tis as if the Thiſtle that can preſently be trod down by the Foot of a wild Beaſt, ſhould think it ſelf a match for the Cedar of Lebanon, as the Phraſe is, 2 Kings 14. 9.

Let us conſider this in general, and alſo in the ordinary Practice of Men.

First, In General.

1. All ſin in its nature is a Contempt of the Divine Dominion. As every act of Obedience is a Confirmation of the Law, and conſequently a ſubſcription to the Authority of the Law-giver, Deut. 27. 26. So every breach to it is a Conſpiracy againſt the Soveraignty of the Law-giver; ſetting up our Will againſt the Will of God, is an Articling againſt his Authority, as ſetting up our Reaſon againſt the Methods of God, is an Articling againſt his Wiſdom; the intendment of every act of Sin, is to wreſt the Scepter out of God's Hand. The Authority of God is the firſt Attribute in the Deity, which it directs its edge againſt; 'tis called therefore a tranſgreſſion of the Law, 1 John 3. 4. And therefore a ſlight or neglect of the Majeſty of God, and the not keeping his Commands, is call'd a forgetting God, Deut. 8. 11. i. e. a forgetting him to be our abſolute Lord. As the firſt Notion we have of God as a Creator, is that of his Sovereignty, ſo the firſt perfection that ſin ſtruck at in the violation of the Law, was his Soveraignty as a Law-giver, Breaking the Law is a diſhonouring God, Rom. 2. 23. a Snatching off his Crown; to obey our own Wills before the Will of God, is to prefer our ſelves as our own Soveraigns before him. Sin is a wrong and injury to God, not in his Eſſence, that is above the reach of a Creature, nor in any thing profitable to him, or pertaining to his own intrinſick advantage; not an injury to God in Himſelf, but in his Authority, in thoſe things which pertain to his Glory, a diſowning his due Right, and not uſing his Goods according to his Will. Thus the whole World may be called, as God calls Chaldea, a Land of Rebels, Jer. 50. 21. Go up againſt the Land of Merathaim, or Rebels: Rebels, not againſt the Jews, but againſt God. The mighty oppoſition in the heart of Man to the Supremacy of God, is diſcovered emphatically by the Apoſtle, Rom. 8. 7. in that expreſſion, The carnal mind is enmity againſt God, i. e. againſt the Authority of God: Becauſe it is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be. It refuſeth not Subjection to this or that part, but to the whole; to every mark of Divine Authority in it, it will not lay down its Arms againſt it, nay it cannot but ſtand upon its Terms againſt it; the Law can no more be fulfill'd by a carnal Mind, than it can be diſowned by a Soveraign God. God is ſo Holy, that he cannot alter a righteous Law; and Man is ſo averſe, that he cares not for, nay cannot fulfil one Tittle; ſo much doth the Nature of Man ſwell againſt the Majeſty of God. Now an Enmity to the Law which is in every Sin, implies a Perverſity againſt the Authority of God that enacted it.

2. All Sin in its Nature is the deſpoiling God of his ſole Soveraignty, which was probably the firſt thing the Devil aim'd at. That Pride was the Sin of the Devil, the Scripture gives us ſome account of, when the Apoſtle adviſeth not a novice, or one that hath but lately embraced the Faith, to be choſen a Biſhop, 1 Tim. 3. 6. Leſt being lifted up with Pride, he fall into the Condemnation of the Devil; Leſt he fall into the ſame Sin, for which the Devil was Condemned. But in what particular thing this Pride was manifeſt, is not ſo eaſily diſcernable; the Ancients generally conceived it, to be an affecting the Throne of God, grounding it on Iſa. 14. 12. How art thou fallen, O Lucifer, Son of the Morning! for thou haſt ſaid in thy Heart, I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God. 'Tis certain the Prophet ſpeaks there of the King of Babylon, and taxeth him for his Pride, and gives to him the Title of Lucifer, perhaps likening him in his Pride to the Devil, and then it notes plainly the particular Sin of the Devil, attempting a ſhare in the Soveraignty of God; and ſome ſtrengthen their Conjecture from the Name of the Arch-Angel who contended againſt Satan, Jude 9. which is Michael, which ſignifies, who as God? or, who like God? The Name of the Angel giving the Superiority to God, intimating the contrary Diſpoſition in the Devil, againſt whom he contended. 'Tis likely his Sin was an affecting an equality with God in Empire, or a freedom from the Soveraign Authority of God: Becauſe he imprinted ſuch a kind of Perſwaſion on Man at his firſt Temptation, Ye ſhall be as Gods, Gen. 3. 5. and though it be reſtrained to the matter of Knowledge, yet that being a fitneſs for Government, it may be extended to that alſo. But it is plainly a perſwading them, that they might be in ſome ſort equal with God, and independent on him as their Superior. What he had found ſo fatal to himſelf, he imagined would have the ſame ſucceſs in the Ruine of Man. And ſince the Devil hath in all Ages of the World uſurpt a Worſhip to himſelf, which is only due to God, and would be ſerved by Man, as if he were the God of the World. Since all his endeavour was to be Worſhip'd as the Supream God on Earth, 'tis not unreaſonable to think, that he invaded the Supremacy of God in Heaven, and endeavour'd to be like the moſt High before his Baniſhment, as he hath attempted to be like the moſt High ſince. And ſince the Devil and Anti-Chriſt are reputed by John in the Revelation to be ſo near of kin, and ſo like in Diſpoſition, why might not that which is the Sin of Anti-Chriſt, the Image of him, be alſo the Sin of Satan, To exalt himſelf above all that is called God, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. and ſit as God in his Temple, affecting a Partnerſhip in his Throne and Worſhip? Whether it was this, or attempting an unaccountable Dominion over created Things, or becauſe he was the Prime Angel, and the moſt illuſtrious luſtrious of that magnificent Corporation, he might think himſelf fit to Reign with God, over all Things elſe; or if his Sin were Envy, as ſome think at the Felicity of Man in Paradiſe; it was ſtill a quarrelling with God's Dominion, and right of diſpoſing his own Goods and Favours; He is therefore call'd Belial; 2 Cor. 6. 14, 15. What Concord hath Chriſt with Belial, i. e. with the Devil, one without yoke, as the Word Belial ſignifies.

3. 'Tis more plain, That this was the ſin of Adam. The firſt act of Adam was to exerciſe a Lordſhip over the lower Creatures, in giving Names to them, a token of Dominion, Gen. 2. 19. The next was, to affect a Lordſhip over God, in rebelling againſt him; After he had writ the firſt Mark of his own delegated Dominion in the names he had given the Creatures, and own'd their dependance on him as their Governor, he would not acknowledge his own dependance on God. As ſoon as the Lord of the World had put him into poſſeſſion of the Power he had allotted him, he attempted to ſtrip his Lord of that which he had reſerv'd to himſelf; He was not content to lay a yoke upon the other Creatures, but deſirous to ſhake off the Divine Yoke from himſelf, and be ſubject to none but his own will; Hence Adam's Sin is more particularly call'd Diſobedience, Rom. 5. 19. For in the eating the Apple there was no moral Evil in it ſelf, but a contradiction to the poſitive Command and Order of God; whereby he did diſown God's right of Commanding him, or reſerving any thing from him to his own uſe. The Language all his Poſterity ſpeaks, Let us break his bands, and caſt away his cords from us, Pſal. 2. 3. was learn'd from Adam in that act of his. The next act we read of, was that of Cain's murdering Abel, which was an invading God's Right, in aſſuming an Authority to diſpoſe the Life of his Brother, a Life which God had given him, and reſerved the period of it in his own hands. And he perſiſts in the ſame Uſurpation, when God came to examine him, and ask him where his Brother was, how ſcornful was his Anſwer, Gen. 4. 9. Am I my Brothers keeper? as much as if he had ſaid, What have you to do to examine me? Or, What Obligation is there upon me to render an account of him? Or, as one ſaith, * 'Tis as much as if he had ſaid, Go look him your ſelf. The Sovereignty of God did not remain undiſturb'd, as ſoon as ever it appear'd in Creation, the Devils rebell'd againſt it in Heaven, and Man would have baniſh'd it from the Earth.

4. The Soveraignty of God hath not been leſs invaded by the uſurpation of Men. One ſingle Order of the Roman Epiſcopacy, hath endeavoured to Uſurp the Prerogatives of God: The Pope will prohibit what God hath allow'd; the Marriage of Prieſts; the receiving of the Cup, as well as of the Bread in the Sacrament; the eating of this or that ſort of Meat at ſpecial Times, Meats which God hath Sanctified, and forbid them too, upon pain of Damnation, 'Tis an Invaſion of God's Right, to forbid the uſe of what God hath granted; as though the Earth, and the fulneſs thereof, were no longer the Lords, but the Popes: Much more to forbid what God hath commanded; as if Chriſt over-reach'd his own Authority, when he enjoyn'd all to drink of the Sacramental Wine, as well as eat of the Sacramental Bread. No Lord but will think his Right uſurp'd by that Steward, who ſhall permit to others what his Lord forbids, and forbid that which his Maſter allows, and act the Lord inſtead of the Servant. Add to this the Pardon of many Sins, as if he had the ſole Key to the Treaſures of Divine Mercy, the diſpoſing of Crowns and Dominions at his pleaſure; as if God had deveſted himſelf of the Title of King of Kings, and transferr'd it upon the See of Rome. The allowing Publick Stews, diſpenſing with inceſtuous Marriages, as if God had acted more the part of a Tyrant, than of a righteous Soveraign in forbiding them; Depriving the Jews of the Propriety in their Eſtates, upon their Converſion to Chriſtianity; as if the pilfering Mens goods were the way to teach them Self-denial, the firſt Doctrine of Chriſtian Religion; and God ſhall have no Honour from the Jew without a breach of his Law by Theft from the Chriſtian. Granting many Years Indulgences upon ſlight Performances, the repeating ſo many Ave-Maries and Pater-Noſters in a Day; Canonizing Saints; claiming the Keys of Heaven, and diſpoſing of the Honours and Glory of it: And propoſing Creatures as Objects of Religious Worſhip, wherein he anſwers the Character of the Apoſtle, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. Shewing himſelf that he is God, in challenging that Power which is only the right of Divine Soveraignty; exalting himſelf above God, in indulging thoſe Things which the Law of God never allow'd, but hath ſeverely prohibited.

This controuling the Soveraignty of God, not allowing him the rights of his Crown, is the Soul and Spirit of many Errors. Why are the Decrees of Election and Preterition denied? Becauſe Men will not acknowledge God the Soveraign diſpoſer of his Creature. Why is Effectual Calling and efficacious Grace denied? Becauſe they will not allow God the Proprietor and Diſtributer of his own Goods. Why is the Satisfaction of Chriſt denied? Becauſe they will not allow God a Power to vindicate his own Law, in what way he pleaſeth. Moſt of the Errors of Men may be reſolv'd into a denial of Gods Soveraignty; all have a Tincture of the firſt evil Sentiment of Adam.

2. The Soveraignty of God is contemned in the Practices of Men.

1. As he is a Law-giver.

1. When Laws are made, and urg'd in any State contrary to the Law of God. 'Tis part of Gods Soveraignty to be a Law-giver; not to obey his Law is a breach made upon his right of Government; but it is Treaſon in any againſt the Crown of God, to Mint Laws with a ſtamp contrary to that of Heaven, whereby they renounce their due Subjection, and vie with God for Dominion; ſnatch the Supremacy from him, and account themſelves more Lords than the Soveraign Monarch of the World. When Men will not let God be the Judge of Good and Evil, but put in their own Vote, controuling his to eſtabliſh their own; ſuch are not content to be as Gods, ſubordinate to the Supream God, to ſit at his Feet; nor Co-ordinate with him, to ſit equal upon his Throne; but Paramount to him, to over-top and ſhadow his Crown. A boldneſs that leaves the Serpent in the firſt Temptation, under the Character of a more commendable Modeſty; who adviſed our firſt Parents to attempt to be as Gods, but not above him, and would enervate a Law of God, but not enact a contrary one to be obſerv'd by them. Such was the Uſurpation of Nebuchadnezzar, to ſet up a golden Image to be ador'd, Dan. 3. as if he had Power to Mint Gods, as well as to Conquer Men; to ſet the ſtamp of a Deity upon a Piece of Gold, as well as own Effigies upon his currant Coyn. Much of the ſame Nature was that of Darius by the Motion of his Flatterers, to prohibite any Petition to be made to God for the ſpace of thirty Days, as though God was not to have a Worſhip without a Licenſe from a doting piece of Clay, Dan. 6. 7. * So Henry the Third of

of France, by his Edict ſilenced Maſters of Families from Praying with their Houſholds. And it is a farther Contempt of Gods Authority when good Men are oppreſt by the ſole weight of Power for not obſerving ſuch Laws, * as if they had a real Soveraignty over the Conſciences of Men more than God himſelf. When the Apoſtles were commanded by an Angel from God, to Preach in the Temple the Doctrine of Chriſt, Acts 5. 19, 20. They were fetch'd from thence with a Guard before the Councel, ver. 26. And what is the Language of thoſe States-men to them? As abſolute as God himſelf could ſpeak to any Tranſgreſſors of his Law; Ver. 28. Did not we ſtraitly command you, that you ſhould not teach in this Name? 'Tis ſufficient that we gave you a Command to be ſilent, and publiſh no more this Doctrine of Jeſus; 'Tis not for you to examine our Decrees, but reſt in our Order as Loyal Subjects, and comply with your Rulers; they might have added, though it be with the Damnation of your Souls. How would thoſe over-rule the Apoſtles by no other Reaſon but their abſolute Pleaſure? And though God had eſpous'd their Cauſe, by delivering them out of the Priſon wherein they had lock'd them the Day before; yet not one of all this Councel had the Wit or Honeſty to entitle it a fighting againſt God, but Gamaliel, ver. 39. So fooliſhly fond are Men to put themſelves in the Place of God, and uſurp a Juriſdiction over Mens Conſciences; and to preſume, that Laws made againſt the Intereſt and Command of God, muſt be of more force than the Laws of God's enacting.

* Faucheur vol. 2. p. 663, 664.

2. The Soveraignty of God is contemn'd in making Additions to the Laws of God. The Authority of a Soveraign Law-giver is invaded and villified, when an Inferiour preſumes to make Orders equivalent to his Edicts. 'Tis a Præmunire againſt Heaven, to ſet up an Authority diſtinct from that of God, or to enjoyn any thing as neceſſary in Matter of Worſhip, for which a Divine Commiſſion cannot be ſhewn. God was always ſo tender of this part of his Prerogative, that he would not have any thing wrought in the Tabernacle, not a Veſſel, not an Inſtrument but what himſelf preſcrib'd, Exod. 25. 9. According to all that I ſhew thee, after the Pattern of the Tabernacle, and the Pattern of all the Inſtruments thereof, even ſo ſhall ye make it; which is ſtrictly urg'd again, Ver. 40. Look that thou make them after their Pattern; look to it, beware of doing any thing of thine own Head, and juſtling with my Authority. It was ſo afterwards in the Matter of the Temple which ſucceeded the Tabernacle; God gave the Model of it to David, and made him underſtand in writing by his Hand upon him, even all the Works of this Pattern, 1 Chron. 28. 19. Neither the Royal Authority in Moſes, who was King in Jeſurun; nor in David, who was a Man after Gods own Heart, and called to the Crown by a ſpecial and extraordinary Providence; nor Aaron, and the High Prieſts his Succeſſors, inveſted in the Sacerdotal Office, had any Authority from God to do any Thing in the framing the Tabernacle or Temple of their own Heads. God barr'd them from any thing of that Nature, by giving them an exact Pattern, ſo dear to him was always this Flower of his Crown: And afterwards, the Power of appointing Officers and Ordinances in the Church was delegated to Chriſt, and was among the reſt of thoſe Royalties given to him, which he fully compleated for the Edifying of the Body, Epheſ. 4. 11, 12. And he hath the Elogy by the Spirit of God, to be faithful, as Moſes was, in all his Houſe, to him that appointed him, Heb. 3. 2. Faithfulneſs in a Truſt, implies a punctual obſerving Directions; God was ſtill ſo tender of this, that even Chriſt the Son ſhould no more do any thing in this concern, without appointment and pattern, than Moſes a Servant, ver. 5, 6. It ſeems to be a Vote of Nature, to refer the Original of the modes of all Worſhip to God: And therefore in all thoſe varieties of Ceremonies among the Heathens, there was ſcarce any but were imagin'd by them to be the Dictates and Orders of ſome of their pretended Deities, and not the reſolves of meer Humane Authority. What Intruſion upon Gods right hath the Papacy made in regard of Officers, Cardinals, Patriarchs, &c. not known in any Divine Order? In regard of Ceremonies in Worſhip, preſt as neceſſary to obtain the favour of God, Holy-water, Crucifixes, Altars, Images, Cringings, reviving many of the Jewiſh and Pagan Ceremonies, and adopting them into the Family of Chriſtian Ordinances; as if God had been too Abſolute and Arbitrary in repealing the one, and daſhing in pieces the other. When God had by his Soveraign Order fram'd a Religion for the Heart, Men are ready to uſurp an Authority to frame one for the Sence, to dreſs the Ordinances of God in new and gaudy Habits, to take the Eye by a vain Pomp; thus affecting a Divine Royalty, and acting a ſilly childiſhneſs, and after this, to impoſe the Obſervation of thoſe upon the Conſciences of Men, is a bold aſcent into the Throne of God; to impoſe Laws upon the Conſcience, which Chriſt hath not impoſed, hath deſervedly been thought the very Spirit of Antichriſt; it may be call'd alſo the Spirit of Anti-God. God hath reſerv'd to himſelf the ſole Soveraignty over the Conſcience, and never indulg'd Men any part of it; he hath not given Man a Power over his own Conſcience, much leſs one Man a Power over anothers Conſcience. Men have a Power over outward Things, to do this or that where it is not determined by the Law of God, but not the leaſt Authority to controul any Dictate or Determination of Conſcience: The ſole Empire of that is appropriate to God, as one of the great Marks of his Royalty. What an Uſurpation is it of God's Right, to make Conſcience a ſlave to Man, which God hath ſolely, as the Father of Spirits, ſubjected to himſelf? An Uſurpation, which, though the Apoſtles, thoſe extraordinary Officers might better have claim'd, yet they utterly diſown'd any imperious Dominion over the Faith of others, 2 Cor. 1. 24. Though in this they do not ſeem to climb up above God, yet they ſet themſelves in the Throne of God, envy him an abſolute Monarchy, would be ſharers with him in his Legiſlative Power, and graſp one end of his Scepter in their own Hands. They do not pretend to take the Crown from Gods Head, but diſcover a bold Ambition to ſhuffle their hairy Scalps under it, and wear part of it upon their own, that they may Rule with him, not under him; and would be joint Lords of his Manor with him, who hath by the Apoſtle forbidden any to be Lords of his Heritage, 1 Pet. 5. 3. And therefore they cannot aſſume ſuch an Authority to themſelves, till they can ſhew where God hath reſign'd this part of his Authority to them. If their Expoſition of that Place, Matth. 16. 18. Upon this Rock I will build my Church, be granted to be true, and that the Perſons and Succeſſors of Peter are meant by that Rock, it could be no Apology for their Uſurpations; 'tis not Peter and his Succeſſors ſhall build, but I will Build: Others are Inſtruments in Building, but they are to obſerve the Directions of the Grand Architect.

3. The Soveraignty of God is contemned, when Men prefer Obedience to Mens Laws, before Obedi- ence to God. As God hath an undoubted right as the Law-giver and Ruler of the World, to enact Laws, without conſulting the Pleaſure of Men, or requiring their Conſent to the verifying and eſtabliſhing his Edicts, ſo are Men oblig'd by their Allegiance, as Subjects, to obſerve the Laws of their Creator, without conſulting whether they be agreeable to the Laws of his revolted Creatures. To conſult with Fleſh and Blood whether we ſhould obey, is to Authorize Fleſh and Blood above the pureſt and moſt Soveraign Spirit. When Men will obey their Superiors, without taking in the Condition the Apoſtle preſcribes to Servants, Col. 3. 22. In ſingleneſs of Heart, fearing God; and poſt-pone the fear of God to the fear of Man, 'tis to render God of leſs Power with them than the drop of a Bucket, or duſt of the Ballance. When we out of fear of Puniſhment will obſerve the Laws of Men againſt the Laws of God, 'tis like the Egyptians, to worſhip a ravenous Crocodile inſtead of a Deity; when we ſubmit to humane Laws, and ſtagger at Divine, 'tis to ſet Man upon the Throne of God, and God at the foot-ſtool of Man; to ſet Man above, and God beneath; to make him the Tail, and not the Head, as God ſpeaks in another Caſe of Iſrael, Deut. 28. 13. When we pay an outward Obſervation to Divine Laws, becauſe they are back'd by the Laws of Man, and humane Authority is the motive of our obſervance, we ſubject Gods Soveraignty to Mans Authority; what he hath from us is more owing to the Pleaſure of Men, than any value we have for the Empire of God. When Men ſhall commit Murders, and imbrue their Hands in Blood by the Order of a Grandee; when the worſt Sins ſhall be Committed by the Order of Papal Diſpenſations; When the uſe of his Creatures, which God hath granted and ſanctified, ſhall be abſtain'd from for ſo many days in the Week, and ſo many Weeks in the Year, becauſe of a Roman Edict; the Authority of Man is acknowledg'd not only equal, but Superior to that of God: The Dominion of Duſt and Clay is preferr'd before the undoubted right of the Soveraign of the World: The Commands of God are made leſs than humane, and the Orders of Men more authoritative than Divine, and a grand Rebels Uſurpation of Gods right is countenanced. When Men are more devout in obſervance of uncertain Traditions, or meer humane Inventions, than at the hearing of the unqueſtionable Oracles of God. When Men ſhall ſqueez their Countenances into a more ſerious Figure, and demean themſelves in a more Religious Poſture, at the appearance of ſome mock Ceremony clothed in a Jewiſh or Pagan garb, which hath unhappily made a Rent in the Coat of Chriſt; and pay a more exact Reverence to that, which hath no Divine, but only a humane ſtamp upon it, than to the clear and plain Word of God, which is perhaps neglected with ſleepy Nods, or which is worſe, entertain'd with prophane Scoffs; this is to prefer the Authority of Man employ'd in trifles, before the Authority of the wiſe Law-giver of the World. Beſides, the ridiculouſneſs of it is as great, as to adore a Glo-worm, and laugh at the Sun; or for a Courtier to be more exact in his Cringes and Starcht poſtures before a Puppet, than before his Soveraign Prince. In all this we make not the Will and Authority of God our Rule, but the Will of Man; diſclaim our dependance on God, to hang upon the uncertain breath of a Creature; in all this God is made leſs than Man, and Man more than God. God is depos'd, and Man enthron'd, God made a ſlave, and Man a Soveraign above him. To this we may refer the ſolemn Addreſſes of ſome for the maintenance of the Proteſtant Religion according to Law, the Law of Man; not ſo much minding the Law of God; reſolving to make the Law, the Church, the State, the Rule of their Religion, and change that, if the Laws be chang'd, ſteering their Opinions by the compaſs of the Magiſtrates Judgment and Intereſt.

2. The Dominion of God as a Proprietor, is practically contemned.

1. By Envy. When we are not as flush and gay, as well ſpread and ſparkling as others, this Paſſion gnaws our Souls; and we become the Executioners to wrack our ſelves becauſe God is the Executor of his own Pleaſure. The Foundation of this Paſſion is a quarrel with God; to envy others the Enjoyment of their Propriety, is to envy God his right of diſpoſal, and conſequently the Propriety of his own Goods. 'Tis a mental Theft committed againſt God, we rob him of his right in our Will and Wiſh; 'tis a Robbery to make our ſelves equal with God when it is not our due, which is implied, Phil. 2. 6. when Chriſt is ſaid, to think it no Robbery to be equal with God. We would wreſt the Scepter out of his Hand, wiſh he were not the Conductor of the World, and that he would reſign his Soveraignty, and the right of the Diſtribution of his own Goods to the Capricios of our Humor, and ask our leave to what Subjects he ſhould diſpenſe his Favors. All Envy, is either a tacit Accuſation of God as an Uſurper, and aſſuming a right to diſpoſe of that which doth not belong to him, and ſo it is a denial of his Propriety; or elſe charges him with a blind or unjuſt Diſtribution, and ſo it is a beſpattering his Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs. When God doth puniſh Envy, he vindicates his own Soveraignty, as tho' this Paſſion chiefly endeavoured to blaſt this Perfection, Ezek. 25. 11, 12. As I live, ſaith the Lord, I will do according to thy anger, and according to thy Envy, and thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord. The Sin of Envy in the Devils was immediately againſt the Crown of God, and ſo was the Sin of Envy in the firſt Man, envying God the ſole Prerogative in Knowledge above himſelf. This baſe humour in Cain at the preference of Abels Sacrifice before his, was the Cauſe that he deprived him of his Life. Denying God firſt his right of Choice, and what he ſhould accept, and then invading God's right of Propriety, in uſurping a Power over the Life and Being of his Brother, which ſolely belong'd to God.

2. The Dominion of God as a Proprietor, is practically contemned by a violent or ſurreptitious taking away from any, what God hath given him the Poſſeſſion of. Since God is the Lord of all, and may give the Poſſeſſion and Dominion of things to whom he pleaſeth, all Theft and Purloining, all Cheating and Conſening another of his right, is not only a Crime againſt the true Poſſeſſor, depriving him of what he is intruſted with, but againſt God as the abſolute and univerſal Proprietor, having a right thereby to confer his own goods upon whom he pleaſeth; as well as againſt God as a Law-giver forbidding ſuch a Violence. The ſnatching away what is an others, denies Man the right of Poſſeſſion, and God the right of Donation. The Iſraelites taking the Egyptians Jewels had been Theft, had it not been by a Divine Licenſe and Order; but cannot be ſlandered with ſuch a Term, after the Proprietor of the whole World had alter'd the Title, and alienated them by his poſitive Grant from the Egyptians, to confer them upon the Iſraelites.

3. The

3. The Dominion of God as a Proprietor is practically contemned, by not using what God hath given us, for those ends for which he gave them to us. God passeth things over to us with a Condition, to use that for his Glory which he hath bestowed upon us by his Bounty. He is Lord of the end for which he gives, as well as Lord of what he gives; the Donors right of Propriety is infringed, when the Lands and Legacies he leaves to a particular use, are not employ'd to those Ends to which he bequeathed them. The right of the Lord of a Manor is violated, when the Copy-hold is not us'd according to the Condition of the Conveyance. So it is an Invasion of Gods Soveraignty, not to use the Creatures for those ends, for which we are intrusted with them; when we deny our selves a due and lawful support from them; hence Covetousness is an Invasion of his right; or when we unnecessarily waste them, hence Prodigality disowns his Propriety. Or when we bestow not any Thing upon the relief of others; hence uncharitableness comes under the same Title, appropriating that to our selves, as if we were the Lords, when we are but the usufructuaries for our selves, and Stewards for others; this is to be Rich to our selves, not to God, Luke 12. 21. For so are they who employ not their Wealth for the service and according to the intent of the Donor. Thus the Israelites did not own God the true Proprietor of their Corn, Wine, and Oyl, which God had given them for his Worship, when they prepared Offerings for Baal out of his Stock, Hos. 2. 8. For she did not know that I gave her Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, and multiplied her Gold and Silver, which they prepared for Baal; as if they had been sole Proprietors, and not Factors by Commission, to improve the Goods for the true Owner. 'Tis the same Invasion of Gods right, to use the parts and gifts that God hath given us, either as Fuel for our Pride, or advancing self, or a witty scoffing at God and Religion. When we use not Religion for the Honour of our Soveraign, but a stool to rise by, and observe his Precepts outwardly, not out of regard to his Authority, but as a stale to our Interest, and furnishing self with a little Concern and Trifle. When Men will wrest his Word for the favour of their Lusts, which God intended for the checking of them, and make Interpretations of it according to their Humours, and not according to his Will discovered in the Scripture, this is to pervert the use of the best goods and depositum he hath put into our Hands, even Divine Revelations. Thus Hypocrisie makes the Soveraignty of God a nullity.

3. The Dominion of God as a Governour is practically contemned.

1. In Idolatry. Since Worship is an acknowledgment of Gods Soveraignty, to adore any Creature instead of God, or to pay to any thing that Homage of Trust and Confidence which is due to God, though it be the highest Creature in Heaven or Earth, is to acknowledge that Soveraignty to pertain to a Creature, which is challeng'd by God; as to set up the greatest Lord in a Kingdom in the Government instead of the lawful Prince, is Rebellion and Usurpation. And that Woman incurs the Crime of Adultery, who commits it with a Person of great Port and Honour, as well as with one of a mean Condition. While Men create any thing a God, they own themselves Supream above the true God, yea and above that, which they account a God: For by the right of Creation, they have a Superiority, as it is a Deity blown up by the breath of their own Imagination. The Authority of God is in this Sin, acknowledged to belong to an Idol, 'tis call'd loathing of God as a Husband; Ezek. 16. 45. all the Authority of God as a Husband and Lord over them. So when we make any thing, or any Person in the World, the chief Object and Prop of our Trust and Confidence, we act the same part. Trust in an Idol is the formal part of Idolatry. Psalm 115. 8. So is every one that trusts in them, i. e. in Idols. Whatsoever thing we make the object of our Trust, we rear as an Idol; 'tis not unlawful to have the Image of a Creature, but to bestow Divine Adoration upon it; it was not unlawful for the Egyptians to possess and use Oxen, but to dubb them Gods to be ador'd, it was. 'Tis not unlawful to have Wealth and Honour, nor to have Gifts and Parts, they are the Presents of God; but to love them above God, to fix our Relyance upon them more than upon God, is to rob God of his due, who being our Creator, ought to be our Confidence. What we want, we are to desire of him, and expect from him. When we confide in any thing else, we deny God the Glory of his Creation, we disown him to be Lord of the World, imply that our welfare is in the Hands of, and depends upon that thing wherein we confide; 'tis not only to equal it to God in Soveraign Power, which is his own Phrase, Isaiah 40. 25. but to prefer it before him in a reproach of him. When the Hosts of Heaven shall be serv'd instead of the Lord of those Hosts; when we shall lacquy after the Stars, depend barely upon their Influences, without looking up to the great Director of the Sun, 'tis to pay an Adoration unto a Captain in a Regiment, which is due to the General. When we shall make Gold our Hope, and say to the fine Gold, Thou art my Confidence, 'tis to deny the Supremacy of that God that is above, as well as if we kiss our Hands in a way of Adoration to the Sun in its splendor, or the Moon walking in its brightness; for Job couples them together, Job 31. 25, to 28. 'Tis to prefer the Authority of Earth before that of Heaven, and Honour Clay above the Soveraign of the World; as if a Souldier should confide more in the Rag of an Ensign, or the Fragment of a Drum for his Safety, than in the Orders and Conduct of his General; it were as much as is in his Power to uncommission him, and snatch from him his Commanders Staff. When we advance the Creature in our Love above God, and the Altar of our Soul smoaks with more Thought and Affections to a petty Interest than to God, we lift up that which was given us as a Servant in the place of the Soveraign, and bestow that Throne upon it, which is to be kept undefil'd for the rightful Lord, and subject the Interest of God to the demands of the Creature. So much respect is due to God, that none should be plac'd in the Throne of our Affections equal with him, much less any Thing to perk above him.

2. Impatience is a Contempt of God as a Governour. When we meet with Rubs in the way of any Design, when our Expectations are crossed, we will break through all Obstacles to accomplish our Projects, whether God will or no. When we are too much dejected at some unexpected Providence, and murmur at the Instruments of it, as if God devested himself of his Prerogative of conducting Humane Affairs. When a little cross blows us into a Mutiny, and swells us into a fawciness to implead God, or make us fret against him (as the Expression is, Isa. 8. 21.) wishing him out of his Throne; no Sin is so Devilish as this, there is not any strikes more at all the Attributes of God than this, against his Goodness, Righteousness, Holiness, Holineſs, Wiſdom, and doth as little ſpare his Soveraignty as any of the reſt; what can it be elſe but an impious Invaſion of his Dominion, to quarrel with him for what he doth, and to ſay, what Reaſon haſt thou to deal thus with me? This Language is in the Nature of all Impatience, whereby we queſtion his Soveraignty, and parallel our Dominion with his. When Men have not that confluence of Wealth or Honour they greedily deſir'd, they bark at God, and revile his Government; they are angry God doth not more reſpectfully obſerve them, as though he had nothing to do in their Matters, and were wanting in that becoming Reverence which they think him bound to pay to ſuch great ones as they are. They would have God obedient to their Minds, and Act nothing but what he receives a Commiſſion for from their Wills. When we murmur, 'tis as if we would command his Will and wear his Crown, a wreſting the Scepter out of his Hands to ſway it our ſelves, we deny him the right of Government, diſown his Power over us, and would be our own Soveraigns; you may find the Character of it in the Language of Jehoram (as many underſtand it.) 2 Kings 6. 33. Behold, this evil is of the Lord; what ſhould I wait for the Lord any longer? This is an Evil of ſuch a Nature, that it could come from none but the Hand of God, why ſhould I attend upon him as my Soveraign, that delights to do me ſo much miſchief, that throws Curſes upon me when I expected Bleſſings? I'll no more obſerve his Directions, but follow my own Sentiments, and regard not his Authority in the Lips of his doting Prophet. The ſame you find in the Jews, when they were under Gods laſh, Jer. 18. 12. And they ſaid, there is no hope, but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil Heart; we can expect no good from him, and therefore we will be our own Soveraigns, and prefer the Authority of our own Imaginations before that of his Precepts. Men would be their own Carvers, and not ſuffer God to uſe his right; as if a Stone ſhould order the Maſon in what manner to hew it, and in what part of the Building to place it; we are not ordinarily concern'd ſo much at the Calamities of our Neighbours, but ſwell againſt Heaven at a light drop upon our ſelves. We are Content God ſhould be the Soveraign of others, ſo that he will be a Servant to us; let him deal as he will himſelf with others, ſo he will treat us, and what relates to us, as we will our ſelves. We would have God reſign his Authority to our Humours, and our Humours ſhould be in the place of a God to him, to direct him what was fit to do in our own Cauſe. When things go not according to our vote, our impatience, is a wiſh, that God were depos'd from his Throne, that he would ſurrender his Seat to ſome that would deal more favourably, and be more punctual Obſervers of our Directions. Let us look to our ſelves in regard of this Sin which is too common, and the root of much Miſchief. This ſeems to be the firſt bubbling of Adam's Will, he was not Content with the Condition wherein God had placed him, but affected another, which ended in the Ruine of himſelf, and of Mankind.

3. Limiting God in his way of working to our Methods, is another part of the Contempt of his Dominion. When we will preſcribe him Methods of acting, that he ſhould deliver us in this or that way, we would not ſuffer him to be the Lord of his own Favours, and have the Priviledge to be his own Director. When we will limit him to ſuch a Time wherein to Work our Deliverance, we would rob him of the Power of Times and Seaſons, which are ſolely in his Hand. We would regulate his Conduct according to our Imaginations, and aſſume a Power to give Laws to our Soveraign. Thus the Iſraelites limitted the Holy One of Iſrael, Pſalm 78. 41. They would controul his abſolute Dominion, and of a Soveraign make him their ſlave. Man, that is God's Vaſſal, would ſet bounds to his Lord, and ceaſe to be a Servant and commence Maſter, when he would give, not take Directions from him. When God had given them Manna, and their Fancies were weary of that delicious Food, they would preſcribe Heaven to Rain down ſome other ſort of Food for them. When they wanted no ſufficient Proviſion in the Wilderneſs, they quarrell'd with God for bringing them out of Egypt, and not preſently giving them a place of Seed, of Figs, Vines, and Pomegranates, Numb. 20. 5. which is call'd a ſtriving with the Lord, ver. 13. a contending with him for his Lordſhip. When we tempt God, and require a Sign of him as a Mark of his Favour, we circumſcribe his Dominion; when we will not uſe the Means he hath appointed, but father our lazineſs upon a truſt in his Providence, as if we expected he ſhould work a Miracle for our Relief; when we cenſure him for what he hath done in the Courſe of his Providence; when we capitulate with him, and Promiſe ſuch a Service, if he will do us ſuch a good turn according to our Platform, we would bring down his Soveraign Pleaſure to our Will, we invade his Throne, and expect a ſubmiſſive Obedience from him. Man that hath not wit enough to govern himſelf, would be governing God, and thoſe that cannot be their own Soveraigns, affect a Soveraignty over Heaven.

4. Pride and Preſumption, is another Invaſion of his Dominion. When Men will reſolve to go to Morrow to ſuch a City, to ſuch a Fair and Market, to Traffick and get gain, without thinking of the Neceſſity of a Divine Licenſe, as if our ſelves were the Lords of our Time, and of our Lives, and God were to Lacquy after us, James 4. 13, 15. Ye that ſay, to Day we will go into ſuch a City, and buy and ſell, whereas ye ought to ſay, if the Lord will we ſhall live; as if they had a Free-hold, and were not Tenants at Will to the Lord of the Manor. When we preſume upon our own ſtrength or wit to get the better of our Adverſaries; as the Germans (as Tacitus relates) aſſur'd themſelves by the numerouſneſs of their Army, of a Victory againſt the Romans, and prepar'd Chains to fetter the Captives before the Conqueſt, which were found in their Camp after their defeat; when we are peremptory in Expectations of Succeſs according to our Will; as Pharaoh, Exod. 15. 9. I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil, my Luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them, I will draw my Sword, my Hand ſhall deſtroy them. He ſpeaks more like a God than a Man, as if he were the Soveraign Power, and God only his Vicar and Lieutenant; how he ſtruts, without thinking of a Superiour Power to curb him! When Men aſcribe to themſelves what is the ſole Fruit of Gods Soveraign Pleaſure. As the King of Aſſyria ſpeaks a Language, fit only to be ſpoken by God, Iſa. 10. 13, 14, &c. I have removed the bounds of the People, my Hand hath found as a Neſt, the Riches of the People, I have gathered all the Earth; which God declares to be a wrong to his Soveraignty, by the Title wherewith he Prefaceth his Threatning againſt him, ver. 16. Therefore ſhall the Lord, the Lord of Hoſts, ſend among his Fat ones Leanneſs, &c. 'Tis indeed a rifling, if not of his Crown, yet of the moſt glittering Jewel of it, his Glory. He that mocks the Poor, reproacheth his Maker, Prov. 17. 5.

He never thinks that God made them Poor, and himſelf Rich; he owns not his Riches to be drop'd upon him by the Divine Hand. Self is the great Invader of Gods Soveraignty, doth not only ſpurn at it, but uſurp it, and aſſume Divine Honours, payable only to the Univerſal Soveraign. The Aſſyrian was not ſo modeſt as the Chaldean, who would impute his Power and Victories to his Idol, Hab. 1. 11. whom he thought to be God, though yet robbing the true God of his Authority; and ſo much was ſignified by their Names; Nebuchadnezzar, Evil-Merodach, Belſhazzar, Nebo, Merodach, Bel, being the Chaldean Idols, and the Names ſignifying Lord of Wealth, giver of Riches, and the like. When we behave our ſelves proudly towards others, and imagine our ſelves greater than our Maker ever meant us; when we would give Laws to others, and expect the moſt ſubmiſſive obſervances from them, as if God had reſign'd his Authority to us, and made us in his ſtead the rightful Monarchs of the World. To diſdain that any Creature ſhould be above us, is to diſdain Gods Soveraign Diſpoſition of Men, and conſequently his own Superiority over us. A proud Man would govern all, and would not have God his Soveraign, but his Subject; to over-value our ſelves, is to under-value God.

5. Slight and Careleſs Worſhip of God, is another Contempt of his Soveraignty. A Prince is contemn'd, not only by a neglect of thoſe Reverential Poſtures which are due to him, but in a reproachful and ſcornful way of paying them. To behave our ſelves uncomely or immodeſtly before a Prince, is a diſ-eſteem of Majeſty. Soveraignty requires awe in every Addreſs; where this is wanting, there is a diſ-reſpect of Authority. We contemn Gods Dominion when we give him the Service of the Lip, the Hand, the Knee, and deny him that of the Heart; as they in Ezekiel, Ezek. 33. 31. As though he were the Soveraign only of the Body, and not of the Soul. To have devout Figures of the Face, and uncomely poſtures of the Soul, is to exclude his Dominion from our Spirits, while we own it only over our outward Man; we render him an inſignificant Lord, not worthy of any higher Adorations from us, than a ſenſleſs Statue; we demean not our ſelves according to his Majeſtical Authority over us, when we preſent him not with the Cream and Quinteſſence of our Souls. The greatneſs of God, requir'd a great Houſe, and a coſtly Palace; 1 Chron. 29. 11, 16. David ſpeaks it in order to the Building God a Houſe and Temple; God being a great King, expects a Male, the beſt of our Flock, Mal. 1. 14. a Maſculine and Vigorous Service. When we preſent him with a ſleepy, ſickly, rheumatick Service, we betray our Conceptions of him to be as mean as if he were ſome petty Lord, whoſe Dominion were of no larger extent than a Mole-hill, or ſome inconſiderable Village.

6. Omiſſion of the Service he hath appointed, is another Contempt of his Soveraignty. This is a Contempt of his Dominion, whereby he hath a right to appoint what Means and Conditions he pleaſeth, for the enjoyment of his proffered and promiſed Benefits. 'Tis an Enmity to his Scepter not to accept of his Terms after a long ſeries of Precepts and Invitations, made for the reſtoring us to that Happineſs we had loſt, and providing all means neceſſary thereunto, nothing being wanting but our own Concurrence with it, and acceptance of it, by rendring that eaſie Homage he requires. By with-holding from him the Service he enjoyns, we deny that we hold any thing of him; as he that pays not the Quit-rent, though it be never ſo ſmall, diſowns the Soveraignty of the Lord of the Manor; it implies that he is a miſerable poor Lord, having no right, or deſtitute of any Power, to diſpoſe of any thing in the World to our Advantage. Job 22. 17. They ſay unto God, depart from us, what can the Almighty do for them? They will have no commerce with him in a way of Duty, becauſe they imagine him to have no Soveraign Power to do any thing for them in a way of Benefit, as if his Dominion were an empty Title and as much deſtitute of any Authority to command a favour for them, as any Idol. They think themſelves to have as abſolute a diſpoſal of things, as God himſelf; what can he do for us? What can he confer upon us, that we cannot inveſt our ſelves in? As though they were Soveraigns in an equality with God; thus Men live without God in the World, Eph. 2. 12. as if there were no Supream Being to pay a reſpect to, or none fit to receive any Homage at their Hands; with-holding from God the right of his time, and the right of his Service, which is the juſt claim of his Soveraignty.

7. Cenſuring others is a contempt of his Soveraignty. When we cenſure Mens Perſons or Actions by a raſh Judgment; when we will be Judges of the good and evil of Mens Actions, where the Law of God is utterly ſilent, we uſurp Gods Place, and invade his Right, we claim a ſuperiority over the Law, and judge God defective as the Rector of the World, in his Preſcriptions of good and evil; James 4. 11, 12. He that ſpeaks evil of his Brother, and judges his Brother, ſpeaks evil of the Law, and judgeth the Law; there is one Law-giver who is able to ſave and to deſtroy; who art thou that judgeſt another? Do you know what you do in judging another? You take upon you the garb of a Soveraign, as if he were more your Servant than Gods, and more under your Authority than the Authority of God; 'tis a ſetting thy ſelf in Gods Tribunal, and aſſuming his rightful Power of judging; thy Brother is not to be govern'd by thy fancy, but by Gods Law and his own Conſcience.

2. Information. Hence it follows, that God doth actually govern the World. He hath not only a right to rule, but he rules over all, ſo ſaith the Text. He is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; what, to let them do what they pleaſe, and all that their Luſts prompt them to? Hath God an abſolute Dominion? Is it good, and is it wiſe? Is it then a uſeleſs Prerogative of the Divine Nature? Shall ſo excellent a Power lye idle, as if God were a lifeleſs Image? Shall we fancy God like ſome lazy Monarch, that ſolaceth himſelf in the Gardens of his Palace, or ſteeps himſelf in ſome charming Pleaſures, and leaves his Lieutenants to govern the ſeveral Provinces, which are all Members of his Empire, according to their own Humour? Not to exerciſe this Dominion, is all one as not to have it; to what purpoſe is he inveſted with this Soveraignty, if he were careleſs of what were done in the World, and regarded not the Oppreſſions of Men? God keeps no uſeleſs excellency by him; He actually reigns over the Heathen, Pſalm 47. 8. and thoſe as bad or worſe than Heathens. It had been a Vanity in David to call upon the Heavens to be glad, and the Earth to rejoyce under the Rule of a ſleepy Deity, 1 Chron. 16. 31. No, his Scepter is full of Eyes, as it was painted by the Egyptians; he is always waking, and always more than Ahaſuerus, reading over the Records of Humane Actions. Not to exerciſe his Authority, is all one, as not to regard whether he keeps the Crown upon his Head, or continue the Scepter in his Hand. If his Soveraignty were exempt from Care, it would be deſtitute of Juſtice; ſtice; God is more Righteous, than to reſign the Enſigns of his Authority to blind and oppreſſive Man; to think that God hath a Power, and doth not uſe it for juſt and righteous Ends, is to imagine him an unrighteous, as well as a careleſs Soveraign, ſuch a thing in a Man renders him a baſe Man, and a worſe Governour; 'Tis a Vice that diſturbs the World, and overthrows the ends of Authority, as to have a Power, and uſe it well, is the greateſt virtue of an Earthly Soveraign. What an unworthy Conception is it of God, to acknowledge him to be poſſeſſed of a greater Authority than the greateſt Monarch, and yet to think that he uſeth it leſs than a petty Lord, that his Crown is of no more value with him than a Feather? This repreſents God impotent, that he cannot, or unrighteous and baſe, that he will not adminiſter the Authority he hath for the nobleſt and juſteſt end. But can we ſay, that he neglects the Government of the World? How come things then to remain in their due Order? How comes the Law of Nature yet to be preſerved in every Mans Soul? How comes Conſcience to check, and cite, and judge? If God did not exerciſe his Authority, what Authority could Conſcience have to diſturb Man in unlawful Practices, and to make his Sports and Sweetneſs ſo unpleaſant and ſour to him? Hath he not given frequent notices and memorials, that he holds a curb over corrupt Inclinations, puts rubs in the way of malicious Attempters, and often overſets the Diſturbers of the Peace of the Word?

3. Information. God can do no wrong, ſince he is Abſolute Soveraign. Man may do wrong, Princes may oppreſs and rifle, but it is a Crime in them ſo to do: Becauſe their Power is a Power of Government, and not of Propriety in the Goods or Lives of their Subjects; but God cannot do any wrong, whatſoever the clamours of Creatures are: Becauſe he can do nothing but what he hath a Soveraign Right to do. If he takes away our Goods, he takes not away any thing that is yours more than his own, ſince though he intruſted you with them, he deveſted not himſelf of the Propriety. When he takes away our Lives, he takes what he gave us by a temporary Donation, to be ſurrendred at his Call. We can claim no right in any thing but by his Will. He is no Debtor to us, and ſince he owes us nothing, he can wrong us in nothing that he takes away. His own Soveraignty excuſeth him in all thoſe Acts which are moſt diſtaſtful to the Creature. If we crop a Medicinal Plant for our uſe, or a Flower for our Pleaſure, or kill a Lamb for our Food, we do neither of them any wrong: Becauſe the Original of them was for our uſe, and they had their Life and Nouriſhment, and pleaſing Qualities for our delight and ſupport; and are not we much more made for the pleaſure and uſe of God, than any of thoſe can be for us? Of him, and to him are all things, Rom. 11. 36. Hath not God as much right over any one of us, as over the meaneſt Worm? Tho' there be a vaſt difference in Nature between the Angels in Heaven, and the Worms on Earth, yet they are all one in regard of Subjection to God; he is as much the Lord of the one as the other; as much the Proprietor of the one as the other; as much the Governour of the one as the other. Not a cranny in the World is exempt from his Juriſdiction. Not a mite or grain of a Creature exempt from his Propriety.

He is not our Lord by Election; he was a Lord, before we were in being; he had no Terms put upon him; who capitulated with him, and ſet him in his Throne by Covenant? What Oath did he take to any Subject at his firſt Inveſtiture in his Authority? His right is as natural, as Eternal as himſelf. As natural as his Exiſtence, and as neceſſary as his Deity. Hath he any Law but his own Will? What wrong can he do that breaks no Law, that fulfils his Law in every thing he doth, by fulfilling his own Will, which as it is abſolutely Soveraign, ſo it is infinitely Righteous. In whatſoever he takes from us then, he cannot injure us; 'tis no Crime in any Man to ſeize upon his own Goods, to vindicate his own Honour; and ſhall it be thought a wrong in God to do ſuch Things? Beſides the occaſion he hath from every Man, and that every Day provoking him to do it. He ſeems rather to wrong himſelf by forbearing ſuch a Seizure, than wrong us by executing it

4. If God have a Soveraignty over the whole World, then Merit is totally excluded. His right is ſo abſolute over all Creatures, that he neither is, nor can be a Debtor to any; not to the undefiled Holineſs of the bleſſed Angels, much leſs to poor Earthly Worms; thoſe bleſſed Spirits enjoy their Glory by the Title of his Soveraign Pleaſure, not by vertue of any Obligation devolving from them upon God. Are not the Faculties whereby they and we perform any act of Obedience, his grant to us? Is not the Strength, whereby they and we are enabled to do any Thing pleaſing to him, a gift from him? Can a Vaſſal merit of his Lord, or a Slave of his Maſter by uſing his Tools, and employing his Strength in his Service, though it was a Strength he had Naturally, not by Donation from the Man in whoſe ſervice it is employed? God is Lord of all, all is due to him; how can we oblige him, by giving him what is his own, more his to whom it is preſented, than ours by whom it is offered? * He becomes not a Debtor by receiving any thing from us, but by promiſing ſomething to us. * Auſtin.

5. If God hath a Soveraign Dominion over the World, then hence it follows, That all Magiſtrates are but Soveraigns under God. He is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; all the Potentates in the World are no other than his Lieutenants, moveable at his Pleaſure, and more at his diſpoſal than their Subjects are at theirs. Though they are dignified with the Title of Gods, yet ſtill they are at an infinite diſtance from the Supream Lord. Gods under God, not to be above him, not to be againſt him. The want of the due ſence of their Subordination to God, hath made many in the World act as Soveraigns above him, more than Soveraigns under him. Had they all bore a deep Conviction of this upon their Spirits, ſuch audacious Language had never dropt from the Mouth of Pharaoh: Who is the Lord, that I ſhould obey his voice, to let Iſrael go? Exod. 5. 2. Preſuming that there was no Superiour to controul him, nor any in Heaven able to be a match for him. Darius had never publiſh'd ſuch a doting Edict, as to prohibit any Petition to God. Nero had never fir'd Rome, and ſung at the ſight of the devouring Flames; nor ever had he ript up his Mothers Belly, to ſee the Womb where he firſt lodg'd and receiv'd a Life ſo hateful to his Country. Nor would Abner and Joab, the two Generals, have accounted the Death of Men but a ſport and interlude, 2 Sam. 2. 14. Let the young Men ariſe, and play before us; what play it was, the next Verſe acquaints you with, thruſting their Swords into one anothers ſides. They were no more troubled at the Death of thouſands, than a Man is to kill a fly or a flea. Had a ſence of this but hover'd over their Souls, People in many Countries had not been made their Foot-balls, and uſed worſe than their Dogs?

Dogs? Nor had the Lives of Millions, worth more than a World, been expos'd to Fire and Sword, to Support ſome Sordid Luſt, or Breach of Faith upon an Idle Quarrel, and for the Depredation of their Neighbours Eſtates; the Flames of Cities had not been ſo bright, nor the Streams of Blood ſo deep, nor the Cries of Innocents ſo loud.

In Particular.

1. If God be Sovereign, All Under-Sovereigns are not to rule againſt Him, but to be Obedient to his Orders. If they Rule by his Authority, Prov. 8. 15. they are not to Rule againſt his Intereſt, they are not to imagine themſelves as Abſolute as God, and that their Laws muſt be of as Sovereign Authority againſt his Honour, as the Divine are for it. If they are his Lieutenants on Earth, they ought to Act according to his Orders. No Man but will account a Governour of a Province a Rebel, if he diſobeys the Orders ſent him by the Sovereign Prince that Commiſſion'd him. Rebellion againſt God is a Crime of Princes, as well as Rebellion againſt Princes a Crime of Subjects. Saul is Charg'd with it by Samuel in a high manner, for an Act of ſimple Diſobedience, though intended for the Service of God, and the Inriching his Country with the Spoils of the Amalekites. 1 Sam. 15. 23. Rebellion is as the Sin of Witchcraft, like Witchcraft or Covenanting with the Devil, acting as if he had received his Commiſſion not from God, but from Satan. Magiſtrates, as Commiſſion'd by God, ought to act for Him. Doth Humane Authority ever give a Commiſſion to any to Rebel againſt it ſelf? Did God ever depute any Earthly Sovereignty againſt his Glory, and give them leave to Out-Law his Laws, to introduce their own? No, when he gave the Vicarious Dominion to Chriſt, He calls upon the Kings of the Earth to be Inſtructed, and be wiſe, and kiſs the Son, Pſal. 2. 10, 12. i. e. To obſerve his Orders, and pay him Homage as their Governour. What a ſilly doltiſh thing is it, to reſiſt that Supream Authority, to which the Arch-Angels ſubmit themſelves, and regulate their Employments punctually by their Inſtructions? Thoſe excellent Creatures exactly obey Him in all the Acts of their Subordinate Government in the World; thoſe in whoſe Hand the greateſt Monarch is no more than a ſilly Fly between the Fingers of a Giant. A Contradiction to the Intereſt of God hath been Fatal to Kings. The Four Monarchies have had their Wings clipt, and moſt of them have been buried in their own Aſhes; they have all, like the Imitators of Lucifer's Pride, fallen from the Heaven of their Glory, to the depth of their Shame and Miſery. All Governors are bound to be as much Obedient to God, as their Subjects are bound to be Submiſſive to them. Their Authority over Men is limited, God's Authority over them is Abſolute and Unbounded. Though every Soul ought to be ſubject to the higher Powers, yet there is a Higher Power of all, to which thoſe higher Powers are to Subject themſelves; They are to be Keepers of both the Tables of the Law of God, and are then moſt Sovereigns, when they ſet in their own Practice an Example of Obedience to God, for their Subjects to write after.

2. They ought to imitate God in the Exerciſe of their Sovereignty in ways of Juſtice and Righteouſneſs. Tho God be an Abſolute Soveraign, yet his Government is not Tyrannical, but managed according to the Rules of Righteouſneſs, Wiſdom, and Goodneſs. If God that Created them as well as their Subjects, doth ſo exerciſe his Government, 'tis a Duty incumbent upon them to do the ſame; ſince they are not the Creators of their People, but the conductors. As God's Government tends to the good of the World, ſo ought theirs to the good of their Countries. God committed not the Government of the World to the Mediator in an unlimited way, but for the good of the Church, in order to the Eternal Salvation of his People, Eph. 1. 12. He gave him to be Head over all things to the Church. He had Power over the Devils, to reſtrain them in their Temptation and Malice; Power over the Angels, to order their Miniſtry for the Heirs of Salvation. So Power is given to Magiſtrates for the Civil Preſervation of the World, and of Humane Society: They ought therefore to conſider, for what ends they are placed over the reſt of Mankind, and not exerciſe their Authority in a licentious way, but conformable to that Juſtice and Righteouſneſs wherein God doth adminiſter his Government, and for the Preſervation of thoſe that are committed to them.

3. Magiſtrates muſt then be obey'd, when they Act according to Gods Order, and within the Bounds of the Divine Commiſſion. They are no Friends to the Soveraignty of God, that are Enemies to Magiſtracy, his Ordinance. Saul was a good Governour, though none of the beſt Men, and the Deſpiſers of his Government after God's choice, were the Sons of Belial, 1 Sam. 10. 27. Chriſt was no Enemy to Cæſar. To pull down a Faithful Magiſtrate, ſuch an one as Zerubbabel, is to pluck a Signet from the Hand of God; for in that Capacity he accounts him, Hag. 2. 23. God's Servants ſtand or fall to their own Maſter. How doth He check Aaron and Miriam for ſpeaking againſt Moſes his Servant. Numb. 12. 8. Were you not afraid to ſpeak againſt my ſervant Moſes; againſt Moſes, as related to you in the Capacity of a Governor; againſt Moſes, as related to Me in the Capacity of my Servant. To ſpeak any thing againſt them, as they Act by God's order, is an Invaſion of God's Soveraign Right, who gave them their Commiſſion. To act againſt Juſt Power, or the Juſtice of an Earthly Power, is to act againſt God's Ordinance, who ordained them in the World, but not any abuſe or ill uſe of their power.

2. USE. How dreadful is the conſideration of this Doctrine to all Rebels againſt God. Can any Man that hath Brains in his Head, imagine it an inconſiderable thing to deſpiſe the Soveraign of the World? It was the ſole Crime of Diſobedience to that poſitive Law, whereby God would have a viſible Memorial of his Soveraignty preſerved in the Eye of Man, that ſhowered down that deluge of Miſery, under which the World groans to this Day. God had given Adam a Soul, whereby he might live as a Rational Creature; and then gives him a Law, whereby he might live as a dutiful Subject: For God forbidding him to eat of the Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, declared his own Supremacy over Adam, and his Propriety in the pleaſant World He had given him by his Bounty; He let him know hereby, that Man was not his own Lord, nor was to live after his own Sentiments, but the Directions of a Superiour. * As when a great Lord builds a Magnificent Palace, and brings in another to Inhabit it, he reſerves a ſmall Duty to himſelf, not of an equal Value with the Houſe, but for an acknowledgment of his own Right, that the Tenant may know he is not the Lord of it, but hath his grant by the Liberality of another. God hereby gave Adam matter for a pure Obedience, that had no Foundation in his own Nature, by any Implanted Law; he was only in it, to reſpect the Will of his Soveraign, and to underſtand that he was to live under the

Power

Power of a higher than himself. There was no more Moral Evil in the eating of this Fruit, as considered distinct from the Command, than in eating of any other Fruit in the Garden. Had there been no Prohibition, he might with as much safety have fed upon it as on any other. No Law of Nature was transgress'd in the Act of Eating of it, but the Soveraignty of God over him was denied by him; and for this, the Death threatned was inflicted on him and his Posterity: For though Divines take notice of other Sins in the Fall of Adam, yet God in his Tryal chargeth him with none but this, and doth put upon his Question an Emphasis of his own Authority, Gen. 3. 11. Hast thou eaten of the Tree whereof I commanded ye, that thou shouldst not eat? This I am displeased with, that thou shouldest disown my Dominion over thy self and this Garden. This was the in-let to all other Sins; as the acknowledgement of Gods Soveraignty is the first step to the Practice of all the Duties of a Creature, so the disowning his Soveraignty, is the first Spring of all the extravagancies of a Creature. Every Sin against the Soveraign-Law-giver is worthy of Death. The Transgression of this positive Command deserved Death, and procured it to spread it self over the Face of the World. Gods Dominion cannot be despis'd, without meriting the greatest Punishment.

1. Punishment necessarily follows upon the Doctrine of Soveraignty. 'Tis a faint and feeble Soveraignty that cannot preserve it self, and vindicate its own wrongs against rebellious Subjects; the height of Gods Dominion infers a Vengeance on the Contemners of it. If God be an Eternal King, he is an Eternal Judge. Since Sin unlinks the dependance between God the Soveraign, and Man the Subject, if God did not vindicate the Rights of his Soveraignty, and the Authority of his Law, he would seem to despise his own Dominion, be weary of it, and not act the part of a good Governour. But God is tender of his Prerogative, and doth most bestir himself when Men exalt themselves proudly against him, Exod, 18. 11. In the thing wherein they dealt proudly, he will be above them. When Pharaoh thought himself a Mate for God, and proudly rejected his Commands, as if they had been the Messages of some petty Arabian Lord, God rights his own Authority upon the Life of his Enemy by the ministry of the Red Sea. He turned a great King into a Beast, to make him know, That the most High ruled in the Kingdoms of Men, Dan. 4. 16, 17. The demand is by the Word of the Holy Ones, to the intent that the living may know, that the most High ruleth in the Kingdoms of Men; and that by the Petitions of the Angels, who cannot endure that the Empire of God should be obscur'd and diminish'd by the pride of Man. Besides the tender respect he hath to his own Glory, he is constantly presented with the Sollicitations of the Angels, to punish the proud ones of the Earth, that darken the Glory of his Majesty. 'Tis necessary for the rescue of his Honour, and necessary for the satisfaction of his Illustrious Attendants, who would think it a shame to them, to serve a Lord that were always unconcern'd in the Rebellions of his Creatures, and tamely suffer their spurns at his Throne: And therefore there is a Day wherein the haughtiness of Man shall be bowed down, the Cedars of Lebanon over-thrown, and high Mountains levell'd, that God may be exalted in that Day, Isa. 2. 11, 12, &c. Pride is a Sin that immediately swells against Gods Authority, this shall be brought down that God may be exalted; not that he should have a real Exaltation, as if he were actually depos'd from his Government, but that he shall be manifested to be the Soveraign of the whole World. 'Tis necessary there should be a Day to chase away those Clouds that are upon his Throne, that the Lustre of his Majesty may break forth to the Confusion of all the Children of Pride that vaunt against him. God hath a Dominion over us as a Law-giver, as we are his Creatures, and a Dominion over us in a way of Justice, as we are his Criminals.

2. This Punishment is unavoidable.

1. None can escape him. He hath the sole Authority over Hell and Death, the Keys of both are in his Hand; the greatest Cæsar can no more escape him than the meanest Peasant; Who art thou, O great Mountain, before Zerubbabel? Zac. 4. 7. The height of Angels is no match for him, much less that of the Mortal Grandees of the World; they can no more resist him than the meanest Person; but are rather as the highest Steeples, the fittest Marks for his crushing Thunder. If he speaks the Word, the Principalities of Men come down, and the Crown of their Glory, Jer. 23. 18. He can take the Mighty away in a moment and that without Hands, i. e. without Instruments. Job 34. 20. The strongest are like the Feet of Nebuchadnezzar's Image, Iron and Clay; Iron to Man, but Clay to God, to be crumbled to nothing.

2. What Comfort can be reapt from a Creature, when the Soveraign of the World Arms himself with Terrors, and begins his Visitation? Isa. 10. 3. What will you do in the Day of Visitation, to whom will you fly for help, and where will you leave your Glory? The Torments from a Subject may be relieved by the Prince, but where can there be an Appeal from the Soveraign of the World? Where is there any above him to controul him, if he will overthrow us; who is there to call him to account, and say to him, What dost thou? He works by an uncontroulable Authority, he needs not ask leave of any. Isa. 43. 13. He works, and none can lett it; as when he will relieve, none can afflict; so when he will wound, none can relieve. If a King appoint the Punishment of a Rebel, the greatest Favourite in the Court cannot speak a comfortable Word to him. The most beloved Angel in Heaven cannot sweeten and ease the Spirit of a Man, that the Soveraign Power is set against to make the Butt of his Wrath. The Devils lye under his Sentence, and wear their Chains as Marks of their Condemnation, without hope of ever having them filed off, since they are laid upon them by the Authority of an unaccountable Soveraign.

3. By his Soveraign Authority, God can make any Creature the Instrument of his Vengeance; he hath all the Creatures at his beck, and can Commission any of them to be a dreadful scourge. Strong winds and tempests fulfil his Word, Psalm 148. 8. The Lightnings answer him at his Call, and cry aloud here are we, Job 38. 35. By his Soveraign Authority he can render Locusts as mischievous as Lions, forge the meanest Creatures into Swords and Arrows, and Commission the most despicable to be his Executioners; he can cut off Joy from our Spirits, and make our own Hearts be our Tormentors, our most confident Friends our Persecutors, our neareſt Relations to be his Avengers; they are more his, who is their Soveraign, than ours, who place a vain Confidence in them. Rather than Abraham shall want Children, he can raise up Stones, and adopt them into his Family; and rather than not execute his Vengeance, he can array the Stones in the Streets, and make them his armed

armed Subjects againſt us. If He ſpeak the word, a Hair ſhall drop from our Heads to choak us, or a Vapour congeal'd into Rheum in our Heads, ſhall drop down, and putrifie our Vitals. He can never want Weapons, who is Soveraign over the Thunders of Heaven, and Stones of the Earth, over every Creature, and can by a Soveraign Word turn our greateſt Comforts into Curſes.

4. This Puniſhment muſt be terrible. How doth David, a great King, ſound in his Body, proſperous in his Crown, and ſucceſsful in his Conqueſts, ſettled in all his Royal Conveniencies, groan under the wrathful Touch of a greater King than himſelf, Pſal. 6. Pſal. 38. and his other Penitential Pſalms; Not being able to give himſelf a Writ of Eaſe, by all the Delights of his Palace and Kingdom. If the Wrath of a King be as the roaring of a Lion to a poor Subject, Prov. 19. 10. how great is the wrath of the King of Kings, that cannot be ſet forth by the terror of all the amazing Vollies of Thunder, that have been ſince the Creation, if the noiſe of all were gather'd into one ſingle crack? As there is an unconceivable ground of Joy in the ſpecial Favour of ſo mighty a King, ſo is there of Terror in his ſevere Diſpleaſure. Pſal. 76. 12. He is terrible to the Kings of the Earth, with God is terrible Majeſty. What a folly is it then to rebel againſt ſo mighty a Soveraign?

III. USE of Comfort. The Throne of God drops Honey and Sweetneſs, as well as Dread and Terror; All his other Attributes afford little Relief, without this of his Dominion, and Univerſal Command; when therefore He ſpeaks of his being the God of his People, He doth often Preface it, with the Lord thy God; His Soveraignty as a Lord being the ground of all the Comfort we can take in his Federal Relation as our God; Thy God, but Superiour to thee; thy God, not as thy Cattle and Goods are thine, in a way of ſole Propriety, but a Lord too in a way of Soveraignty, not only over thee, but over all things elſe for thee. As the end of God's ſettling Earthly Governments, was for the good of the Communities over which the Governours preſide; ſo God exerciſeth his Government for the good of the World, and more particularly for the good of the Church, over which He is a peculiar Governour.

1. His Love to his People is as great as his Soveraignty over them. He ſtands not upon his Dominion with his People ſo much, as upon his Affection to them; He would not be call'd Baali, my Lord, i. e. He would not be known only by the Name of Soveraingty, but Iſhi, my Husband, a name of Authority and Sweetneſs together, Hoſ. 2. 16, 19, &c. He ſignifies, that He is not only the Lord of our Spirits and Bodies, but a Husband by a Marriage-knot, admitting us to a nearneſs to Him, and communion of goods with Him. Though He Majeſtically ſits upon a high Throne, yet it is a Throne encircled with a Rainbow, Ezek. 1. 28. To ſhew that his Government of his People, is not only in a way of Abſolute Dominion, but alſo in a way of Federal Relation. He ſeems to own himſelf their Subject, rather than their Soveraign, when He gives them a Charter to Command Him in the Affairs of his Church. Iſaiah 45. 11. Ask of things to come concerning my Sons, and concerning the work of my hands command you me. Some read it by way of queſtion, as a Corrective of a Sawcineſs; Do you ask of me things to come, and ſeem to command Me concerning the works of my hands, as if you were more careful of my Intereſt among my People, than I am, who have form'd them? But if this were the Senſe, it would ſeem to diſcourage an Importunity of Prayer for publick Deliverance; and therefore to take it according to our Tranſlation, 'tis an Exhortation to Prayer, and a mighty encouragement in the management and exerciſe of it. Urge me with my Promiſe, in a way of humble Importunity, and you ſhall find me as willing to perform my Word, and gratifie your Deſires, as if I were rather under your Authority, than you under mine; As much as to ſay, if I be not as good as my Word, to ſatisfie thoſe Deſires that are according to my Promiſe, implead me at my own Throne, and if I be failing in it, I will give Judgment againſt my ſelf. Almoſt like Princes Charters, and gracious Grants, We grant ſuch a thing againſt us, and our Heirs, giving the Subject power to implead them, if they be not punctually obſerv'd by them. How is the love of God ſeen in his Condeſcenſion below the Majeſty of Earthly Governours! He that might command by the abſoluteneſs of his Authority, doth not only do that, but intreats in the quality of a Subject, as if he had not a fulneſs to ſupply us, but needed ſomething from us for a ſupply of Himſelf, 2 Cor. 5. 20. As though God did beſeech you by us. And when he may challenge as a due by the Right of his Propriety, what we beſtow upon his Poor, which are his Subjects as well as ours, He reckons it as a loan to Him, as if what we had were more our own than his, Prov. 19. 17. He ſtands not upon his Dominion ſo much with us, when he finds us Conſcientious in paying the Duty we owe to Him. He rules as a Father by Love, as well as by Authority; He enters into a peculiar Communion with poor Earthly Worms; plants his gracious Tabernacle among the Troops of Sinners, inſtructs us by his Word, invites us by his Benefits, admits us into his Preſence, is more deſirous to beſtow his Smiles, than we to receive them; and acts in ſuch a manner, as if He were willing to reſign his Scepter into the Hands of any that were poſſeſſed with more Love and Kindneſs to us than Himſelf. This is the Comfort of Believers.

2. In his being Soveraign, his Pardons carry in them a full Security. He that hath the Keys of Hell and Death, Pardons the Crime, and wipes off the Guilt. Who can Repeal the Act of the chief Governour? What Tribunal can null the Decrees of an Abſolute Throne? Iſa. 43. 25. I, even I am He, that blots out thy Tranſgreſſions for my names ſake. His Soveraign Dominion renders his Mercy comfortable. The Clemency of a Subject, though never ſo great, cannot Pardon; People may pity a Criminal, while the Executioner Tortures him, and ſtrips him of his Life; but the Clemency of the Supream Prince eſtabliſheth a Pardon. Since we are under the Dominion of God, if He Pardons, who can reverſe it? If He doth not, what will the Pardons of Men profit us in regard of an Eternal State? If God be a King for ever, then he whom God forgives, he in whom God reigns, ſhall live for ever. Elſe He would want Subjects on Earth, and have none of his lower Creatures, which He form'd upon the Earth, to reign after the Diſſolution of the World; if his Pardons did not ſtand ſecure, He would after this Life have no voluntary Subjects that had formerly a Being upon the Earth; He would be a King only over the damned Creatures.

3. Corruptions will certainly be Subdued in his voluntary Subjects. The Covenant, I will be your God, implies Protection, Government, and Relief, which are all grounded upon Soveraignty: That therefore which is our greateſt burden, will be remov'd by his Soveraign Power. Micah 7. 19. He will Subdue our Iniquities. If the outward Enemies mies of the Church ſhall not bear up againſt his Dominion, and perpetuate their Rebellions unpuniſht, thoſe within his People ſhall as little bear up againſt his Throne, without being deſtroy'd by him. The billows of our own Hearts, and the raging Waves within us, are as much at his beck as thoſe without us. And his Soveraignty is more eminent in quelling the Corruptions of the Heart, than the Commotions of the World; in reigning over Mens Spirits, by changing them, or curbing them, more than over Mens Bodies, by pinching and puniſhing them. The remainders of Satans Empire will moulder away before him, ſince he that is in us, is a greater Soveraign, than he that is in the World, 1 John 4. 4. His Enemies will be laid at his Feet, and ſo never ſhall prevail againſt him, when his Kingdom ſhall come. He could not be Lord of any Man as a happy Creature, if he did not by his Power make them Happy; and he could not make them Happy, unleſs by his Grace he made them Holy. He could not be praiſed as a Lord of Glory, if he did not make ſome Creatures glorious, to praiſe him; and an Earthly Creature could not praiſe him perfectly; unleſs he had every grain of Enmity to his Glory taken out of his Heart. Since God is the only Soveraign, he only can ſtill the Commotions in our Spirits, and pull down all the Enſigns of the Devil's Royalty; he can waſt him by the powerful word of his Lips.

4. Hence is a ſtrong Encouragement for Prayer. My King was the ſtrong Compellation David us'd in Prayer, as an Argument of Comfort and Confidence, as well as that of My God. Pſalm 5. 2. Hearken to the voice of my cry, my King, and my God. To be a King, is to have an Office of Government and Protection. He gives us Liberty to approach to him as the Judge of all, Heb. 12. 23. i. e. As the Governour of the World; we pray to one that hath the whole Globe of Heaven and Earth in his Hand, and can do whatſoever he will. Though he be higher than the Cherubims, and tranſcendently above all in Majeſty, yet we may ſoar up to him with the wings of our Soul, Faith, and Love, and lay open our Cauſe, and find him as gracious, as if he were the meaneſt ſubject on Earth, rather than the moſt Soveraign God in Heaven.

He hath as much of tenderneſs, as he hath of Authority, and is pleaſed with Prayer, which is an acknowledgment of his Dominion, an honouring of that which he delights to Honour: For Prayer, in the notion of it, imports thus much, that God is the Rector of the World, that he takes notice of Humane Affairs, that he is a careful, juſt, wiſe Governour, a ſtore-houſe of Bleſſing, a fountain of Goodneſs to the Indigent, and a relief to the Oppreſſed. What have we reaſon to fear, when the Soveraign of the World gives us Liberty to approach to him, and lay open our Caſe? That God who is King of the whole Earth, not only of a few Villages, or Cities in the Earth, but the whole Earth; and not only King of this dreggy place of our droſs, but of Heaven, having prepar'd, or eſtabliſhed his Throne in the moſt glorious place of the Creation.

5. Here is Comfort in Afflictions. As a Soveraign, he is the Author of Afflictions, as a Soveraign he can be the remover of them; he can command the Waters of Affliction to go ſo far and no farther. If he ſpeaks the Word, a Diſeaſe ſhall depart, as ſoon as a Servant ſhall from your preſence, with a Nod. If we are baniſht from one Place, he can command a Shelter for us in another. If he orders Moab, a Nation that had no great Kindneſs for his People, to let his outcaſts dwell with them, they ſhall entertain them, and afford them Sanctuary, Iſaiah 16. 4. Again God chaſteneth as a Soveraign, but teacheth as a Father, Pſalm 99. 12. The exerciſe of his Authority is not without an exerciſe of his Goodneſs. He doth not Correct for his own Pleaſure, or the Creature's Torment, but for the Creature's Inſtruction; though the Rod be in the Hand of a Soveraign, yet it is tinctur'd with the kindneſs of Divine Bowels. He can order them as a Soveraign to mortifie our Fleſh, and try our Faith. In the ſevereſt tempeſt, the Lord that rais'd the wind againſt us, which ſhatter'd the Ship, and tore its Rigging, can change that contrary Wind for a more Happy one, to drive us into the Port.

6. 'Tis a Comfort againſt the Projects of the Churches Adverſaries in Times of publick Commotions. The Conſideration of the Divine Soveraignty may arm us againſt the Threatnings of mighty Ones, and the menaces of Perſecutors. God hath Authority above the Crowns of Men, and a Wiſdom ſuperior to the Cabals of Men. None can move a ſtep without him, he hath a Negative Voice upon their Counſels, a Negative Hand upon their Motions; their Politick Reſolves muſt ſtop at the Point he hath preſcrib'd them. Their formidable ſtrength cannot exceed the Limits he hath ſet them, their over-reaching Wiſdom expires at the breath of God, There is no Wiſdom, nor Underſtanding, nor Counſel againſt the Lord, Prov. 21. 30. Not a Bullet can be diſcharg'd, nor a Sword drawn, a Wall battered, nor a Perſon diſpatcht out of the World without the leave of God, by the mightieſt in the World. The Inſtruments of Satan are no more free from his Soveraign reſtraint than their Inſpirer; they cannot pull the hook out of their Noſtrils, nor caſt the Bridle out of their Mouths. This Soveraign can ſhake the Earth, rend the Heavens, overthrow Mountains, the moſt Mountainous Oppoſer of his Intereſt. Though the Nations ruſh in againſt his People like the ruſhing of many Waters, God ſhall rebuke them, they ſhall be chaſed as the Chaff of the Mountains before the Wind, and like a rolling Thing before the Whirlwind, Iſa. 17. 13. So doth he often burſt in pieces the moſt miſchievous Deſigns, and Conducts the oppreſſed to a Happy Port. He often turns the ſevereſt Tempeſts into a Calm, as well as the moſt peaceful Calm into a horrible Storm. How often hath a well-rigg'd Ship, that ſeemed to ſpurn the Sea under her Feet, and beat the Waves before her to a Foam, been ſwallowed up into the Bowels of that Element, over whoſe back ſhe rode a little before? God never comes to deliver his Church as a Governour, but in a wrathful poſture, Ezek. 20. 33. Surely ſaith the Lord with a mighty Hand, and with an out-ſtretched arm, and with fury pour'd out will I rule over you; not with fury poured out upon the Church, but fury pour'd out upon her Enemies, as the words following Evidence. The Church he would bring out from the Countries where ſhe was ſcattered, and bring the People into the bond of the Covenant. He ſometimes cuts off the Spirits of Princes, Pſalm 76. 12. i. e. cuts off their Deſigns, as Men do the Pipes of a Water-courſe. The Hearts of all are as open to him, as the Riches of Heaven where he reſides. He can ſlip an Inclination into the Heart of the mighty, which they dream'd not of before; and if he doth not change their Projects, he can make them abortive, and waylay them in their attempts. Laban marched with fury, but God put a padlock upon his Paſſion againſt Jacob, Gen. 31. 24, 29. The Devils which ravage Mens Minds, muſt be ſtill, when he gives out his Soveraign Orders. This Soveraign can make his People find favour in the Eyes of the cruel Egyptians, which had ſo long oppreſt them. Exod. 11. 3.

And

And ſpeak a good Word in the Heart of Nebuchadnezzar for the Prophet Jeremy, that he ſhould order his Captain to take him into his ſpecial Protection; when he took Zedekiah away Priſoner in chains, and put out his eyes, Jerem. 39. 11. His People cannot want deliverance from Him, who who hath all the World at his Command, when He is pleaſed to beſtow it: He hath as many Inſtruments of Deliverance, as He hath Creatures at his Beck in Heaven or Earth, from the meaneſt to the higheſt. As He is the Lord of Hoſts, the Church hath not only an Intereſt in the Strength He himſelf is poſſeſſed with, but in the Strength of all the Creatures that are under his Command, in the Elements below, and Angels above; in thoſe Armies of Heaven, and in the Inhabitants of the Earth, He doth what He will, Dan. 4. 35. They are all in order, and array at his Command. There are Angels to employ in a fatal ſtroke, Lice and Frogs to quell the ſtubborn Hearts of his Enemies. He can range his Thunders and Lightnings, the Cannon and Granadoes of Heaven, and the Worms of the Earth in his ſervice. He can muzzle Lions, calm the Fury of the Fire, turn his Enemies Swords into their own Bowels, and their Artillery on their own Breaſts; ſet the Wind in their Teeth, and make their Chariot-wheels languiſh, make the Sea enter a quarrel with them, and wrap them in its Waves, till it hath ſtifled them in its Lap. The Angels have Storms, and Tempeſts, and Wars in their Hands, but at the Diſpoſal of God; when they ſhall caſt them out againſt the Empire of Antichriſt, Rev. 7. 1, 2. Then ſhall Satan be diſcharg'd from his Throne, and no more Seduce the Nations; the Everlaſting Goſpel ſhall be Preached, and God ſhall Reign Gloriouſly in Sion. Let us therefore ſhelter our ſelves in the Divine Soveraignty, regard God as the Moſt High, in our Dangers, and in our Petitions. This was David's Reſolution, Pſal. 57. 1, 2. I will cry unto God moſt high. This Dominion of God is the true Tower of David, wherein there are a thouſand Shields, for defence and encouragement, Cant. 4. 4.

IV. USE. If God hath an extenſive Dominion over the whole World, this ought to be often meditated on, and acknowledged by us. This is the univerſal Duty of Mankind; if He be the Soveraign of all, we ſhould frequently think of our Great Prince, and acknowledge our ſelves his Subjects, and Him our Lord. God will be acknowledg'd the Lord of the whole Earth, the neglect of this is the cauſe of the Judgments which are ſent upon the World. All the Prodigies were to this end, that they might know, or acknowledge, That God was the Lord, Exod. 10. 2. As God was Proprietor, He demanded the Firſt-born of every Jew, and the Firſt-born of every Beaſt; the one was to be Redeemed, and the other Sacrificed; this was the Quit-Rent they were to pay Him for their Fruitful Land. The Firſt Fruits of the Earth were ordered to be Paid to Him, as a Homage due to the Land-Lord, and an Acknowledgement they held all in chief of Him. The Practice of Offering Firſt-Fruits for an acknowledgment of God's Soveraignty, was among many of the Heathens, and very Ancient; hence they Dedicated ſome of the chief of their Spoils, owning thereby the Dominion and Goodneſs of God, whereby they had gained the Victory. Cain own'd this in Offering the Fruits of the Earth, and it was his Sin he own'd no more, viz. His being a Sinner, and meriting the Juſtice of God, as his Brother Abel did in his Bloody Sacrifice. God was a Soveraign Proprietor and Governour, while Man was in a State of Innocence, but when Man proved a Rebel, the Soveraignty of God bore another Relation towards him, that of a Judge, added to the other. The Firſt-Fruits might have been offered to God in a State of Innocence, as a Homage to Him as Lord of the Mannor of the World; the deſign of them was to own God's Propriety in all things, and Mens dependance on Him for the Influences of Heaven, in producing the Fruits of the Earth, which He had ordered for their uſe. The Deſign of Sacrifices, and placing Beaſts inſtead of the Criminal, was to acknowledge their own guilt, and God as a Soveraign Judge; Cain own'd the Firſt, but not the Second, he acknowledged his Dependance on God as a Proprietor, but not his obnoxiouſneſs to God as a Judge, which may be probably gathered from his own Speech, when God came to examine him, and ask him for his Brother, Gen. 4. 9. Am I my Brothers Keeper? 'Why do you ask me? though I own thee as the Lord of my Land and Goods, yet I do not think my ſelf accountable to thee for all my Actions. This Soveraignty of God ought to be acknowledged in all the parts of it, in all the manifeſtations of it to the Creature. We ſhould bear a Senſe of this always upon our Spirits, and be often in the thoughts of it in our Retirements. We ſhould fancy that we ſaw God upon his Throne, in his Royal Garb, and great Attendants about Him, and take a view of it, to imprint an awe upon our Spirits.

The Meditation on this would,

1. Fix us on Him as an Object of Truſt. 'Tis upon his Soveraign Dominion, as much as upon any thing, that ſafe and ſecure Confidence is built; for if He had any Superiour above Him, to controul Him in his Deſigns and Promiſes, his Veracity and Power would be of little Efficacy, to form our Souls to a cloſe adherency to Him. It were not fit to make Him the Object of our Truſt, that can be gain-ſaid by a higher than Himſelf, and had not a full Authority to anſwer our Expectations; if we were poſſeſſed with this Notion fully and believingly, That God were high above all, that his Kingdom rules over all, we ſhould not catch at every broken Reed, and ſtand gaping for Comforts from a Pebble Stone. He that underſtands the Authority of a King, would not wave a Reliance on his Promiſe, to depend upon the Breath of a changeling Favourite. None but an ignorant Man would change the ſecurity he may have upon the height of a Rock, to expect it from the dwarfiſhneſs of a Mole-hill. To put Confidence in any Inferior Lord, more than in the Prince, is a folly in Civil Converſe, but a Rebellion in Divine; God only being above all, can only Rule all, can Command things to help us, and check other things which we depend on, and make them fall ſhort of our Expectations. The due conſideration of this Doctrine would make us pierce through ſecond Cauſes to the firſt, and look further than to the ſmaller ſort of Sailers, that climb the Ropes, and dreſs the Sails, to the Pilot that ſits at the Helm, the Maſter, that by an indiſputable Authority orders all their motions. We ſhould not depend upon ſecond Cauſes for our ſupport, but look beyond them to the Authority of the Deity, and the Dominion He hath over all the works of his hands. Zach. 10. 10. 1. Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain; When the Seaſons of the Year conſpire for the producing ſuch an effect, when the uſual time of Rain is wheel'd about in the Year, ſtop not your thoughts at the point of the Heavens, whence you expect it, but pierce the Heavens, and ſollicite God, God, who must give Order for it, before it comes. The due Meditation of all things depending on the Divine Dominion, would strike off our Hands from all other holds, so that no Creature would engross the dependance and trust which is due to the first Cause; as we do not thank the Heavens when they pour out Rain, so we are not to depend upon them when we want it; God is to be sought to when the Womb of Second Causes is open'd to relieve us, as well as when the Womb of Second Causes is barren, and brings not forth its wonted Progeny.

2. It would make us diligent in Worship. The Consideration of God as the Supream Lord, is the Foundation of all Religion; Our Father which art in Heave, Prefaceth the Lord's Prayer; Father is a Name of Authority; in Heaven, the Place where he hath fixed his Throne, notes his Government; not my Father, but our Father, notes the extent of this Authority. In all Worship we acknowledge the Object of our Worship, our Lord, and our selves his Vassals; if we bear a Sense that he is our Soveraign King, it would draw us to him in every exigence, and keep us with him in a reverential Posture, in every address; when we come we should be careful not to violate his Right, but render him the homage due to his Royalty. We should not appear before him with empty Souls, but fill'd with Holy Thoughts. We should bring him the best of our Flock, and present him with the prime of our Strength; were we sensible we hold all of him, we should not with-hold any thing from him, which is more worthy than another. Our Hearts would be fram'd into an awful regard of him, when we consider that glorious and fearful Name, the Lord our God, Deut. 28. 58. We should look to our Feet, when we enter into his House, if we considered him in Heaven upon his Throne, and our selves on Earth at his Footstool, Eccles. 5. 2. lower before him than a Worm before an Angel; it would hinder garishness and lightness. The Jews, saith Capel, on the 1 Tim. 1. 17. repeat this Expression, מלך העולם King of Worlds, or Eternal King; probable the first Original of it might be, to stake them down from wandring. When we consider the Majesty of God cloathed with a Robe of Light, sitting upon his high Throne, adorn'd with his Royal Ensigns, we should not enter into the presence of so great a Majesty with the Sacrifice of Fools, with light motions and foolish Thoughts, as if he were one of our Companions to be droll'd with. We should not hear his Word, as if it were the Voice of some ordinary Peasant. The Consideration of Majesty, would engender Reverence in our Service; it would also make us speak of God with Honour and Respect, as of a great and glorious King, and not use defaming Expressions of him, as if he were an infamous Being. And were he consider'd as a terrible Majesty, he would not be frequently solicited by some, to pronounce a Damnation upon them, upon every occasion.

3. It would make us charitable to others. Since he is our Lord, the great Proprietor of the World, 'tis fit he should have a part of our Goods, as well as our Time: He being the Lord both of our Goods and Time. The Lord is to be honour'd with our Substance, Prov. 3. 9. Kings were not to be approached to without a Present; Tribute is due to Kings: But because he hath no need of any from us to bear up his State, maintain the charge of his Wars, or pay his Military Officers and Host, 'tis a debt due to him, to acknowledge him in his poor, to sustain those that are a part of his substance; though he stands in no need of it himself, yet the Poor, that we have always with us, do; as a seventh part of our weekly Time, so some part of our weekly gains are due to him. There was to be a weekly laying by in Store somewhat of what God had prosper'd them, for the relief of others, 1 Cor. 16. 1, 2. The quantity is not determin'd, that is left to every Man's Conscience, according as God hath prosper'd him that Week. If we did consider God as the Donor and Proprietor, we should dispose of his Gifts according to the Design of the true owner, and act in our Places as Stewards intrusted by him, and not purse up his part as well as our own in our Coffers. We should not deny him a small quit Rent, as an acknowledgment that we have a greater income from him; we should be ready to give the inconsiderable pittance he doth require of us, as an acknowledgment of his Propriety, as well as Liberality.

4. It would make us watchful, and arm us against all Temptations. Had Eve stuck to her first Argument against the Serpent, she had not been instrumental to that Destruction, which Mankind yet feel the smart of, Gen. 3. 3. God hath said, ye shall not eat of it; the great Governour of the World hath laid his Soveraign Command upon us in this Point. The Temptation gain'd no ground, till her Heart let go the Sense of this for the Pleasure of her Eye and Palate. The Repetition of this, the great Lord of the World hath said, or order'd, had both unargumented and disarm'd the Tempter. A Sense of God's Dominion over us would discourage a Temptation, and put it out of Countenance; it would bring us with a vigorous Strength to beat it back to a retreat; if this were as strongly urg'd as Temptation, it would make the Heart of the Tempted strong, and the motion of the Tempter feeble.

5. It would make us entertain Afflictions, as they ought to be entertain'd, viz. with a respect to God. When Men make light of any Affliction from God, 'tis a Contempt of his Soveraignty, as to contemn the frown, displeasure and check of a Prince, is an affront to Majesty: 'Tis, as if they did not care a straw what God did with them, but dare him to do his worst. There is a despising the chastning of the Almighty, Job 5. 17. To be unhumbled under his Hand, is as much or more affront to him, than to be impatient under it. Afflictions must be entertain'd as a check from Heaven, as a frown from the great Monarch of the World; under the feeling of every stroke, we are to acknowledge his Soveraignty and Bounty; to despise it, is to make light of his Authority over us; as to despise his favours, is to make light of his kindness to us. A Sense of God's Dominion would make us observe every check from him, and not diminish his Authority, by casting off a due Sense of his Correction.

6. This Dominion of God would make us resign up our selves to God in every Thing. He that considers himself a thing made by God, a Vassal under his Authority, would not expostulate with him, and call him to an account why he hath dealt so, or so with him. It would stab the Vitals of all Pleas against him. We should not then contest with him, but humbly lay our Cause at his Feet, and say with Eli, 1 Sam. 3. 18. 'Tis the Lord, let him do what seems good. We should not commence a suit against God, when he doth not answer our Prayers presently, and send the Mercy we want upon the Wings of the Wind; he is the Lord, the Soveraign: The Consideration of this would put an end to our quarrels with God; should I expect that the Monarch of the World should wait upon me, or I a poor Worm wait upon him? Must I take State upon me before the Throne of Heaven, and expect the King of Kings ſhould lay by his Scepter, to gratifie my Humour? Surely Jonah thought God no more than his Fellow, or his Vaſſal at that Time when he told him to his Face, he did well to be angry, as though God might not do what he pleaſed with ſo ſmall a thing as a Gourd; He ſpeaks as if he would have ſealed a Leaſe of Ejectment, to exclude him from any Propriety in any thing in the World.

7. This Dominion of God would ſtop our vain curioſity. When Peter was deſirous to know the fate of John the Beloved Diſciple, Chriſt anſwereth no more than this, John 21. 22. If I will, that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Conſider your Duty, and lay aſide your Curioſity, ſince it is my Pleaſure not to reveal it. The ſenſe of God's abſolute Dominion would ſilence many vain Diſputes in the World; what if God will not reveal this or that? The Manner and Method of his Reſolves ſhould humble the Creature under intruding Enquiries.

V. USE of Exhortation.

1. The Doctrine of the Dominion of God, may teach us Humility. We are never truly abas'd, but by the Conſideration of the Eminence and Excellency of the Deity. Job never thought himſelf ſo pitiful a thing, ſo deſpicable a Creature, as after God's magnificent Declamation upon the Theme of his own Soveraignty, Job 42. 5, 6. When God's Name is regarded as the moſt Excellent and Soveraign Name in all the Earth, then is the Soul in the fitteſt Temper to lye low, and cry out, What is Man, that ſo great a Majeſty ſhould be mindful of him? When Abraham conſiders God as the Supream Judge of all the Earth, he then owns himſelf but Duſt and Aſhes, Gen. 18. 25, 27. Indeed, how can vile and duſty Man vaunt before God when the Angels, far more excellent Creatures, cannot ſtand before him, but with a vail on their Faces? How little a Thing is Man in regard of all the Earth? How mean a thing is the Earth in regard of the vaſter Heavens? How poor a thing is the whole World in Compariſon of God? How pitiful a thing is Man, if compar'd with ſo excellent a Majeſty? There is as great a diſtance between God and Man, as between Being and not Being, and the more Man conſiders the Divine Royalty, the more diſ-eſteem he will have of himſelf, it would make him ſtoop and diſrobe himſelf, and fall low before the Throne of the King of Kings, throwing down before his Throne, any Crown he glories in, Rev, 4. 10.

1. In regard of Authority. How unreaſonable is Pride in the preſence of Majeſty? How fooliſh is it for a Countrey Juſtice of Peace, to think himſelf as great as his Prince that Commiſſion'd him? How unreaſonable is Pride in the preſence of the greateſt Soveraignty? What is Humane Greatneſs before Divine? The Stars diſcover no Light when the Sun appears, but in an humble Poſture withdraw in their leſſer Beams, to give the ſole Glory of enlightning the World to the Sun, who is as it were the Soveraign of thoſe Stars, and imparts a Light unto them. The greateſt Prince is infinitely leſs, if compar'd with God, than the meaneſt Scullion in his Kitchin can be before him. As the Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Holineſs of Man is a meer Mote, compared to the Goodneſs and Holineſs of God, ſo is the Authority of Man a meer Trifle in regard of the Soveraignty of God. And who but a ſimple Child would be proud of a Mote, or Trifle? Let Man be as great as he can, and command others, he is ſtill a ſubject to one greater than himſelf. Pride would then vaniſh like Smoak at the ſerious Conſideration of this Soveraignty.

One of the Kings of this Country did very handſomely ſhame the flattery of his Courtiers that cried him up as Lord of Sea and Land, by ordering his Chair to be ſet on the Sand of the Sea-ſhore, when the Tide was coming in, and commanding the Waters not to touch his Feet, which when they did without any regard to his Authority, he took occaſion thereby to put his Flatterers out of Countenance, and inſtruct himſelf in a leſſon of Humility; See, ſaith he, how I rule all things, when ſo mean a Thing as the Water will not obey me. 'Tis a ridiculous Pride that the Turk and Perſian diſcover in their ſwelling Titles. What poor Soveraigns are they, that cannot command a Cloud, give out an effectual Order for a drop of Rain, in a Time of drought, or cauſe the Bottles of Heaven, to turn their Mouth another way in a time of too much moiſture. Yet their own Prerogatives are ſo much in their Minds, that they juſtle out all Thoughts of the Supream Prerogative of God, and give thereby occaſion to frequent Rebellions againſt him.

2. In regard of Propriety. And this Doctrine is no leſs an abatement of Pride in the higheſt, as well as in the meaneſt, it lowers Pride in Point of Propriety, as well as in Point of Authority. * Is any proud of his Poſſeſſions, how many Lords of thoſe Poſſeſſions have gone before you? How many are to follow you? Your Dominion laſts but for a ſhort time, too ſhort, to be a cauſe of any Pride and Glory in it. God by a Soveraign Power can take you from them, or them from you, when he pleaſeth. The Traveller refreſheth himſelf in the heat of Summer under a ſhady Tree; how many have done ſo before him the ſame Day, he knows not, and how many will have the Benefit after, before Night comes, he is as much ignorant of; he and the other that went before him, and follow after him, uſe it for their Refreſhment, but none of them can ſay, they are the Lords of it. The Property is inveſted in ſome other Perſon, whom perhaps they know not; the Propriety of all you have, is in God, not truly in your ſelves. Doth not that Man deſerve ſcorn from you, who will Play the proud Fool in Gay Cloaths and Attire, which are known to be none of his own, but borrowed. Is it not the ſame Caſe with every proud Man, though he hath a Property in his Goods by the Law of the Land? Is any Thing you have your own truly? Is it not Lent you by the great Lord? Is it not the ſame Vanity in any of you, to be Proud of what you have as Gods Loan to you, as for ſuch a one to be Proud of what he hath borrowed of Man. And do you not make your ſelves as ridiculous to Angels, and good Men, who know, that though it is yours in Oppoſition to Man, yet it is not yours in Oppoſition to God, they are granted you only for your Uſe, as the Collar of Eſſes and Sword, and other Enſigns of the chief Magiſtrate in the City, paſs through many Hands in regard of the uſe of them, but the Propriety remains in the Community and Body of the City. Or as the Silver-plate of a Perſon that invites you to a Feaſt, is for your Uſe during the time of the Invitation. What ground is there, to be proud of thoſe Things, you are not the abſolute Lords and Proprietors of, but only have the uſe of them granted to you, during the Pleaſure of the Soveraign of the World?

* Reynard de Deo, p. 766.

2. Praiſe and Thankfulneſs reſults from this Doctrine of the Soveraignty of God.

1. He is to be praiſed for his Royalty, Pſalm 145. 1. I will extol thee my God, Oh King. The Pſalmiſt calls upon Men five Times, to ſing Praiſe to him as the King of all the Earth. Pſalm 47. 6, 7. Sing Praiſes to God, ſing Praiſes, ſing Praiſes to our King,

King, ſing Praiſes: For God is the King of all the Earth, ſing ye Praiſes with underſtanding. All Creatures even the inanimate ones are called upon to Praiſe him, becauſe of the Excellency of his Name and the Supremacy of his Glory in the 148*th Pſalm* throughout, and ver. 13. That Soveraign Power that gave us Hearts and Tongues, deſerves to have them employ'd in his Praiſes, eſpecially ſince he hath by the ſame Hand, given us ſo great Matter for it. As he is a Soveraign we owe him thankfulneſs, he doth not deal with us in a way of abſolute Dominion, he might then have annihilated us: Since he hath as full a Dominion to reduce us to nothing, as to bring us out of nothing. Conſider the abſoluteneſs of his Soveraignty in it ſelf, and you muſt needs acknowledge, that he might have multiply'd Precepts, enjoyned us the obſervance of more than he hath done, he might have made our tedder much ſhorter, he might exact Obedience, and promiſe no Reward for it; he might daſh us againſt the Walls, as a Potter doth his Veſſel, and no Man have any juſt Reaſon to ſay, What doſt thou? Or why doſt thou uſe me ſo? A greater Right is in him to uſe us in ſuch a Manner, as we do ſenſible, as well as inſenſible Things. And if you conſider his Dominion, as it is capable to be exerciſed in a way of unqueſtionable Juſtice, and ſubmitted to the Reaſon and Judgments of Creatures, he might have dealt with us in a ſmarter way, than he hath hitherto done; inſtead of one Affliction we might have had a thouſand. He might have ſhut his own Hands from pouring out any good upon us, and ordered innumerable ſcourges to be prepared for us; but he deals not with us according to the rights of his Dominion. He doth not oppreſs us by the greatneſs of his Majeſty; he enters into Covenant with us, and allures us by the Cords of a Man, and ſhews himſelf as much a merciful as an abſolute Soveraign.

2. As he is a Proprietor we owe him thankfulneſs. He is at his own Choice, whether he will beſtow upon us any Bleſſings or no, the more value therefore his Benefits deſerve from us, and the Donor the more ſincere returns. If we have any Thing from the Creature to ſerve our turn, 'tis by the Order of the chief Proprietor. He is the Spring of Honour, and the Fountain of Supplies; all Creatures are but as the Conduit-pipes in a great City, which ſerve ſeveral Houſes with Water, but from the great Spring. All Things are conveyed originally from his own Hand, and are diſpenſed from his Exchequer. If this great Soveraign did not order them, you would have no more ſupplies from a Creature, than you could have nouriſhment from a Chip. 'Tis the Divine Will in every thing that doth us good; every favour from Creatures is but a ſmile from God, an evidence of his Royalty to move us to pay a reſpect to him as the great Lord. Some Heathens had ſo much reſpect for God, as to conclude that his Will and not their own Prudence, was the chief Conductor of their Affairs. His Goodneſs to us calls for our thankfulneſs, but his Soveraignty calls for a higher Elevation of it; a ſmile from a Prince is more valued, and thought worthy of more gratitude, than a preſent from a Peaſant. A ſmall gift from a great Perſon is more gratefully to be received, than a larger from an Inferiour Perſon. The Condeſcenſion of Royalty magnifies the Gift. What is Man, that thou ſo great a Majeſty, art mindful of him, to beſtow this or that favour upon him, is but a due Reflection upon every Bleſſing we receive? Upon every freſh Bleſſing we ſhould acknowledge the Donor, and true Proprietor, and give him the Honour of his Dominion. His Property ought to be thankfully own'd in every thing we are capable of Conſecrating to him. As David after the Liberal Collection he had made for the Building of the Temple, owns in his Dedication of it to that uſe the Propriety of God, 1 Chron. 29. 14. Who am I? And what is my People, that we ſhould be able to offer ſo willingly after this ſort? For all Things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee. It was but a return of God's own to him, as the Waters of the River are no other than the return to the Sea, of what was taken from it.

Praiſe and Thankfulneſs is a Rent due from all Mankind, and from every Creature to the great Landlord, ſince all are Tenants, and hold by him at his Will. Every Creature in Heaven and Earth, under the Earth, and in the Sea, were heard by John to aſcribe Bleſſing, Honour, Glory, and Power to him that ſits on the Throne, Rev. 5. 13. We are as much bound to the Soveraignty of God for his Preſervation of us; as for his Creation of us. We are no leſs oblig'd to him, that preſerves our Beings; when expoſed to dangers, than we are for beſtowing a Being upon us, when we were not capable of danger. Thankfulneſs is due to this Soveraign for publick Concerns; hath he not preſerved the Ship of his Church in the midſt of whiſtling Winds, and roaring Waves, in the midſt of the Combats of Men and Devils, and reſcued it often, when it hath been near Ship-wrackt?

3. How ſhould we be induc'd from hence to promote the Honour of this Soveraign? We ſhould advance him as a Supream, and all our Actions ſhould concur in his Honour. We ſhould return to his Glory, what we have receiv'd from his Soveraignty, and enjoy by his Mercy: He that is the Superiour of all, ought to be the end of all. This is the Harmony of the Creation, that which is of an Inferiour Nature, is order'd to the Service of that which is of a more excellent Nature; thus Water and Earth, that have a lower Being, are employ'd for the Honour and Beauty of the Plants of the Earth, who are more excellent in having a Principle of a growing Life; theſe Plants are again ſubſervient to the Beaſts and Birds, which exceed them in a Principle of Senſe, which the others want; thoſe Beaſts and Birds are order'd for the good of Man, who is ſuperiour to them in a Principle of Reaſon, and is inveſted with a Dominion over them; Man having God for his Superiour, ought as much to ſerve the Glory of God, as other things are deſign'd to be uſeful to Man. Other Governments are intended for the good of the Community, the chief End is not the good of the Governours themſelves; but God being every way Soveraign, the Soveraign Being, giving Being to all things, the Soveraign Ruler, giving Order and Preſervation to all Things, is alſo the End of all Things, to whoſe Glory and Honour all Things, all Creatures are to be ſubſervient, Rom. 11. 36. For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things, to whom be Glory for ever. Of him as the efficient Cauſe, through him as the preſerving Cauſe, to him as the final Cauſe; all our Actions and Thoughts ought to be addreſt to his Glory, our whole Beings ought to be conſecrated to his Honour, though we ſhould have no Reward, but the Honour of having been ſubſervient to the end of our Creation; ſo much doth the Excellency and Majeſty of God, infinitely elevated above us, challenge of us. Subjects uſe to value the Safety, Honour, and Satisfaction of a good Prince above their own; David is accounted worth 10000 of the People, and ſome of his Courtiers thought themſelves oblig'd to venture their Lives for his Satisfaction in ſo mean a Thing, as a little Water from the Well of Bethlehem.

Doth not ſo great, ſo good a Soveraign as God, deſerve the ſame Affection from us? Do we ſwear, ſaith a Heathen, * to prefer none before Cæſar, and have we not greater reaſon to prefer none before God? 'Tis a Juſtice due from us to God, to maintain his Glory, as it is a Juſtice to preſerve the Right and Property of another. As God would lay aſide his Deity, if He did deny Himſelf, ſo a Creature acts irregularly, and out of the Rank of a Creature, if it doth not deny it ſelf for God. He that makes himſelf his own end, makes himſelf his own Soveraign. To Napkin up a Gift He hath beſtow'd upon us, or to employ what we poſſeſs, ſolely to our own glory, to uſe any thing barely for our ſelves, without reſpect to God, is to apply it to a wrong uſe, and to injure God in his Propriety, and the end of his Donation. What we have, ought to be us'd for the Honour of God; He retains the Dominion and Lordſhip, though He grants us the uſe; We are but Stewards, not Proprietors, in regard of God who expects an account from us, how we have employ'd his Goods to his Honour. The Kingdom of God is to be advanced by us, we are to pray that his Kingdom may come, we are to endeavour that his Kingdom may come, that is, that God may be known to be the chief Soveraign, that his Dominion, which was obſcur'd by Adam's fall, may be more manifeſted, that his Subjects which are ſuppreſt in the World, may be ſupported, his Laws which are violated by the Rebellions of Men, may be more obeyed, and his Enemies may be fully ſubdued by his Final Judgment, the laſt Evidence of his Dominion in this State of the World, that the Empire of Sin and the Devil may be aboliſh'd, and the Kingdom of God be perfected, that none may Rule but the great and rightful Soveraign. Thus while we endeavour to advance the Honour of his Throne, we ſhall not want an Honour to our ſelves. He is too gracious a Soveraign to neglect them that are mindful of his glory; Thoſe that honour Him, He will honour, 1 Sam. 2. 30.

* Arrian in Epictet.

4. Fear and reverence of God in Himſelf, and in his Actions, is a Duty incumbent on us from this Doctrine. Jer. 10. 7. Who would not fear thee, O King of Nations! The Ingratitude of the World is taxt in not reverencing God as a great King, who had given ſo many Marks of his Royal Government among them. The Prophet wonders there was no fear of ſo great a King in the World; ſince among all the wiſe Men of the Nations, and among all their Kings, there is none like unto this; No more Reverence of Him, ſince none Ruled ſo wiſely, nor any Ruled ſo Graciouſly. The Dominion of God is one of the firſt Sparks that gives fire to Religion and Worſhip, conſider'd with the Goodneſs of this Soveraign. Pſal. 22. 27, 28. All the Nations ſhall worſhip before Thee, for the Kingdom is the Lords, and He is Governour among the Nations. Epicurus, who thought God careleſs of Humane Affairs, leaving them at hap-hazard to the Conduct of Men's Wiſdom, and Mutability of Fortune, yet acknowledged, That God ought to be Worſhipped by Man for the Excellency of his Nature, and Greatneſs of his Majeſty. How ſhould we Reverence that God, that hath a Throne encompaſs'd with ſuch Glorious Creatures as Angels, whoſe Faces we are not able to behold, though ſhadow'd in aſſum'd Bodies! How ſhould we fear the Lord of Hoſts, that hath ſo many Armies at his Command in the Heavens above, and in the Earth below, whom He can diſpoſe to the exact Obedience of his Will! How ſhould Men be afraid to cenſure any of his Actions, to ſit Judge of their Judge, and call Him to an account to their Bar! How ſhould ſuch an Earth-worm, a mean Animal as Man, be afraid to ſpeak Irreverently of ſo great a King among his Pots and Strumpets! Not to Fear Him, not to Reverence Him, is to pull his Throne from under Him, and make Him of a lower Authority than our ſelves, or any Creature that we can Reverence more.

5. Prayer to God, and Truſt in him, is inferr'd from his Soveraignty. If He be the Supream Soveraign, holding Heaven and Earth in his Hand, diſpoſing all things here below, not committing every thing to the Influence of the Stars, or the Humours of Men: we ought then to apply our ſelves to him in every Caſe, implore the Exerciſe of his Authority, we hereby own his peculiar Right over all things and perſons. He only is the Supream Head in all Cauſes, and over all Perſons; Thine is the Kingdom concludes the Lord's Prayer, both as a Motive to Pray, Mat. 6. 13. and a ground to expect what we want. He that Believes not God's Government, will think it needleſs to call upon Him, will expect no Refuge under him in a Strait, but make ſome Creature-Reed his Support. If we do not ſeek to Him, but rely upon the Dominion we have over our own Poſſeſſions, or upon the Authority of any thing elſe, we diſown his Supremacy and Dominion over all things, we have as good an Opinion of our ſelves, or of ſome Creature, as we ought to have of God. We think our ſelves, or ſome natural Cauſe we ſeek to, or depend upon, as much Soveraigns as He, and that all things which concern us, are as much at the diſpoſe of an Inferior, as of the Great Lord. 'Tis indeed to make a God of our ſelves, or of the Creature: When we ſeek to Him upon all occaſions, we own his Divine Eminency, we acknowledge that it is by Him Men's Hearts are order'd, the World govern'd, all things diſpos'd; And God that is jealous of his Glory, is beſt pleaſed with any Duty in the Creature, that doth acknowledge and deſire the Glorification of it, which Prayer and Dependance on him doth in a ſpecial manner; Deſiring the exerciſe of his Authority, and the Preſervation of it in ordering the Affairs of the World.

6. Obedience naturally reſults from this Doctrine. As his Juſtice requires Fear, his Goodneſs Thankfulneſs, his Faithfulneſs Truſt, his Truth Belief, ſo his Soveraignty in the nature of it demands Obedience. As it is moſt fit He ſhould Rule in regard of his Excellency; ſo it is moſt fit we ſhould obey Him in regard of his Authority. He is our Lord, and we his Subjects, He is our Maſter, and we his Servants; 'tis righteous we ſhould obſerve Him, and conform to his Will. He is every thing that ſpeaks an Authority to command us, and that can Challenge an Humility in us to Obey. And that is the trueſt Doctrine, that ſubjects us moſt to God, ſo he is the trueſt Chriſtian, that doth in his practice moſt acknowledge this Subjection. And as Soveraignty is the firſt Notion a Creature can have of God, ſo Obedience is the firſt and chief thing Conſcience reflects upon the Creature. Man holds all of God; and therefore owes all the Operations capable to be produced by thoſe Faculties, to that Soveraign Power that endowed him with them. Man had no Being but from Him, he hath no Motion without Him; he ſhould therefore have no Being but for Him, and no Motion but according to Him. To call him Lord, and not to act in Subjection to Him, is to mock, and put a ſcorn upon Him. Luke 6. 46. Why call you me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I ſay? 'Tis like the Crucifying Chriſt under the Title of a King. 'Tis not by Profeſſions, but by obſervance of the Laws of a Prince, that we manifeſt a due reſpect to Him. By that we reverence that Authority, that enacted them, and the Prudence that fram'd them.

This Doctrine affords us Motives to Obey, and directs us to the Manner of Obedience.

1. Motives to Obey,

1. 'Tis Comely and Orderly. Is it not a more becoming thing to be ruled by the Will of our Soveraign, than by that of our Lusts? To observe a wise and gracious Authority, than to set up inordinate Appetites in the room of his Law? Would not all Men account it a disorder to be abominated, to see a Slave or Vassal controul the just orders of his Lord, and endeavour to subject his Masters Will to his own? Much more to expect, God should serve our Humour, rather than we be regulated by his Will? 'Tis more orderly that Subjects should obey their Governours, than Governours their Subjects; that Passion should obey Reason, than Reason obey Passion. When good Governours are to conform to Subjects, and Reason vail to Passion, 'tis monstrous; the one disturbs the order of a Community, and the other defaceth the beauty of the Soul. Is it a comely thing for God to stoop to our meanness, or for us to stoop to his greatness?

2. In regard of the Divine Soveraignty, 'tis both honourable and advantagious to obey God. 'Tis indeed the glory of a Superiour, to be obey'd by his Inferiour; but where the Soveraign is of transcendent Excellency and Dignity, 'tis an Honour to a mean Person, to be under his immediate Commands, and enroll'ed in his Service. 'Tis more Honour to be God's Subject, than to be the greatest worldly Monarch; his very Service is an Empire, and disobedience to him is a slavery. * 'Tis a part of his Soveraignty to Reward any service done to him. Other Lords may be willing to recompence the Service of their Subjects, but are often rendred unable; but nothing can stand in the way of God to hinder your Reward, if nothing stand in your way to hinder your Obedience, Lev. 18. 5. If you keep my Statutes, you shall live in them, I am the Lord. Is there any thing in the World can recompence you for Rebellion against God, and Obedience to a Lust? Saul cools the Hearts of his Servants from running after David, by David's inability to give them Fields and Vineyards, 1 Sam. 22. 7. Will the Son of Jesse give every one of you Fields, and Vineyards, and make you Captains of thousands, and Captains of hundreds, that you have conspired against me? But God hath a Dominion to requite, as well as an Authority to command your Obedience. He is a great Soveraign, to bear you out in your Observance of his Precepts against all Reproaches and Violences of Men, and at last to Crown you with Eternal Honour. If he should neglect vindicating one time or other your Loyalty to him, he will neglect the maintaining and vindicating his own Soveraignty and Greatness.

* Servire Devegnaveſt.

3. God in all his Dispensation to Man was careful to preserve the rights of his Soveraignty, in exacting Obedience of his Creature. The second thing he manifested his Soveraignty in, was that of a Lawgiver to Adam, after that of a Proprietor in giving him the Possession of the Garden; one follow'd immediately the other. Gen. 2. 15, 16. The Lord God took the Man, and put him into the Garden of Eden, to dress it, and the Lord God Commanded the Man, saying, of every Tree of the Garden thou mayst freely eat, but of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil thou shalt not eat of it, &c. Nothing was to be enjoyed by Man but upon the Condition of Obedience to his Lord; and it is observ'd that in the Description of the Creation, God is not call'd Lord till the finishing of the Creation, and particularly in the forming of Man, Gen. 2. 7. And the Lord God form'd Man. Though he was Lord of all Creatures, yet it was in Man he would have his Soveraignty particularly manifested, and by Man have his Authority specially acknowledged. The Law is prefac'd with this Title, I am the Lord thy God, Exod. 20. 2. Authority in Lord, sweetness in God, the one to enjoyn, the other to allure Obedience; and God enforceth several of the Commands with the same Title. And as he begins many Precepts with it, so he concludes them with the same Title, I am the Lord, Lev. 19. 37. and in other Places.

In all his Communications of his Goodness to Man in ways of Blessing them, he stands upon the Preservation of the Rights of his Soveraignty, and manifests his Graciousness in favour of his Authority. I am the Lord your God, your God in all my Perfections for your Advantage, but yet your Soveraign for your Obedience. In all his Condescensions he will have the Rights of this untoucht and unviolated by us. When Christ would give the most pregnant instance of his condescending, and humble kindness, he urgeth his Authority, to ballast their Spirits from any presumptuous Eruptions because of his Humility. John 13. 13. You call me Master and Lord, and you say well, for so I am. He asserts his Authority, and presseth them to their Duty, when he had seem'd to lay it for the demeanour of a Servant, and had below the Dignity of a Master put on the Humility of a mean underling, to wash the Disciples Feet; all which was to oblige them to perform the command he then gave them. Ver. 14. in Obedience to his Authority, and Imitation of his Example.

4. All Creatures obey him. All Creatures punctually observe the Law he hath imprinted on their Nature, and in their several Capacities acknowledge him their Soveraign, they move according to the Inclinations he imprinted on them. The Sea contains its self in its bounds, and the Sun steps not out of his Sphear, the Stars march in their Order, They continue this Day according to thy Ordinance, for all are thy Servants, Psal. 119. 91. If he orders things contrary to their Primitive Nature, they obey him. When he speaks the Word, the devouring Fire becomes gentle, and toucheth not a Hair of the Children, he will preserve. The hunger-starv'd Lions suspend their ravenous Nature, when so good a Morsel as Daniel is set before them. And the Sun which had been in perpetual motion since its Creation, obeys the Writ of ease God sent it in Joshua's time, and stand still. Shall insensible and sensible Creatures be punctual to his Orders, passively acknowledge his Authority? Shall Lions and Serpents obey God in their Places, and shall not Man, who can by Reason argue out the Soveraignty of God, and understand the Sence and Goodness of his Laws, and actively obey God with that Will he hath enricht him with above other Creatures? Yet the Truth is, every sensitive, yea every sensless Creature obeys God more than his rational, more than his Gracious Creatures in this World. The rational Creatures since the fall have a prevailing Principle of Corruption. Let the Obedience of other Creatures incite us more to imitate them, and shame our remissness in not acknowledging the Dominion of God, in the just way he prescribes us to walk in.

Well then, Let us not pretend to own God as our Lord, and yet act the part of Rebels. Let us give him the Reverence, and pay him that Obedience, ence, which of Right belongs to ſo great a King. Whatſoever Hé ſpeaks as a true God, ought to be Believ'd; whatſoever he orders as a Soveraign God, ought to be obey'd. Let not God have leſs than Man, nor Man have more than God. 'Tis a common Principle writ upon the Reaſon of all Men, that Reſpect and Obſervance is a due to the Majeſty of a Man, much more to the Majeſty of God as a Law-giver.

2. As this Doctrine preſents us motives, ſo it directs us to the manner and kind of our Obedience to God.

1. It muſt be with a reſpect to his Authority. As the Veracity of God is the formal Object of Faith, and the Reaſon why we believe the things he hath reveal'd; ſo the Authority of God is the formal object of our obedience, or the reaſon why we obſerve the things he hath commanded. There muſt be a reſpect to his Will as the Rule, as well as to his Glory as the end. 'Tis not formally obedience that is not done with a regard to the Order of God, though it may be materially obedience, as it anſwers the matter of the Precept. As when Men will abſtain from exceſs and rioting, becauſe it is ruinous to their health, not becauſe it is forbidden by the great Law-giver; This is to pay a reſpect to our own conveniency and intereſt, not a conſcientious obſervance to God; a regard to our health, not to our Soveraign, a kindneſs to our ſelves, not a juſtice due to the Rights of God. There muſt not only be a conſideration of the matter of the Precept as convenient, but a conſideration of the Authority of the Law-giver as Obligatory. Thus ſaith the Lord, Uſhers in every Order of his, directing our eye to the Authority enacting it. Jeroboam did God's Will of Propheſie in taking the Kingdom of Iſrael; and the Devils may be ſubſervient in God's Will of Providence; but neither of them are put upon the account of obedience, becauſe not done intentionally with any Conſcience of the Soveraignty of God. God will have this owned by a regular reſpect to it; So much he inſiſts upon the honour of it, that the Sacrifice of Chriſt, God-man was moſt agreeable to him, not only as it was great and admirable in it ſelf, but alſo for that raviſhing obedience to his Will: which was the Life and Glory of his Sacrifice, whereby the Juſtice of God was not only owned in the Offering, but the Soveraignty of God owned in the Obedience. Phil. 2. 8. He became obedient unto death, wherefore God highly exalted him.

2. It muſt be the beſt and moſt exact Obedience. The moſt Soveraign Authority calls for the exacteſt and loweſt obſervance; the higheſt Lord for the deepeſt Homage: being he is a great King, he muſt have the beſt in our flock, Mal. 1. Obedience is due to God as King, and the choiceſt Obedience is due to him, as he is the moſt excellent King. The more Majeſtick and Noble any Man is, the more careful we are in our manner of Service to him. We are bound to obey God, not only under the Title of a Lord in regard of Juriſdiction and Political Subjection, but under the Title of a true Lord and Maſter in regard of Propriety: ſince we are not only his ſubjects but ſervants, the exacteſt obedience is due to God, Jure ſervitutis, Luke 17. 10. When you have done all, ſay you are unprofitable ſervants, becauſe we can do nothing which we owe not to God.

3. Sincere and inward Obedience. As it is a part of his Soveraignty to preſcribe Laws not only to Man in his outward State, but to his Conſcience; ſo it is a part of our ſubjection to receive his Laws into our Will and Heart. The Authority of his Laws exceeds Human Laws in the extent and riches of them, and our acknowledgment of his Soveraignty cannot be right, but by ſubjecting the faculties of our Soul to the Law-giver of our Souls; We elſe acknowledge his Authority to be as limited as the Empire of Man. When his Will not only ſways the outward action, but the inward motion; 'tis a giving him the honour of his high Throne above the Throne of Mortals. The Right of God ought to be preſerved undamaged in affection, as well as action.

4. It muſt be ſole Obedience. We are order'd to ſerve him only, Mat. 4. 10. Him only ſhalt thou ſerve; as the only Supream Lord, as being the higheſt Soveraign, it is fit he ſhould have the higheſt Obedience before all Earthly Soveraigns, and as being unparallell'd by any among all the Nations, ſo none muſt have an Obedience equal to him. When God commands, if the higheſt Power on Earth countermands it, the Precept of God muſt be preferred before the Countermand of the Creature. Acts 4. 18, 19. Whether it be right in the ſight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. We muſt never give place to the Authority of all the Monarchs in the World, to the prejudice of that Obedience we owe to the Supream Monarch of Heaven and Earth: This would be, to place the Throne of God at the foot-ſtool of Man, and debaſe him below the rank of a Creature. Loyalty to Man can never recompence for the miſchief accruing from diſloyalty to God. All the Obedience we are to give to Man, is to be paid in Obedience to God, and with an Eye to his Precept: Therefore what Servants do for their Maſters, they muſt do as to the Lord, Col. 3. 23. and Children are to obey their Parents in the Lord, Eph. 6. 1. The Authority of God is to be eyed in all the Services payable to Man; proper and true Obedience hath God ſolely for its principal and primary Object; all Obedience to Man that interferes with that, and would juſtle out Obedience to God, is to be refus'd. What Obedience is due to Man, is but render'd as a part of Obedience to God, and a ſtooping of his Authority.

5. It muſt be Univerſal Obedience. The Laws of Man are not to be Univerſally obey'd; ſome may be oppreſſing and unjuſt; no Man hath Authority to make an unjuſt Law, and no ſubject is bound to obey an unrighteous Law; but God being a Righteous Soveraign, there is not one of his Laws but doth neceſſarily oblige us to Obedience. Whatſoever this Supream Power declares to be his Will, it muſt be our Care to obſerve; Man being his Creature, is bound to be ſubject to whatſoever Laws he doth impoſe, to the meaneſt as well as to the greateſt: They having equally a ſtamp of Divine Authority upon them. We are not to pick and chooſe among his Precepts: This is to pare away part of his Authority, and render him a half-Soveraign.

It muſt be Univerſal in all Places. An Engliſhman in Spain is bound to obey the Laws of that Countrey, wherein he reſides; and ſo not reſponſible there for the Breach of the Laws of his Native Country. In the ſame Condition is a Spaniard in England. But the Laws of God are to be obeyed in every Part of the World: Whereſoever Divine Providence doth caſt us, it caſts us not out of the Places where he commands, nor out of the Compaſs of his own Empire. He is Lord of the World, and his Laws oblige in every part of the World, they were order'd for a World, and not for a particular Climate and Territory.

6. It

It must be Indisputable Obedience. All Authority requires readiness in the Subject; the Centurion had it from his Soldiers, they went when he order'd them, and came when he beckned to them, Mat. 8. 9. 'Tis more fit God should have the same promptness from his Subjects. We are to obey his Orders, though our purblind Understanding may not apprehend the reason of every one of them. 'Tis without dispute that He is Soveraign, and therefore 'tis without dispute, that we are bound to Obey Him, without controuling his Conduct. A Master will not bear it from his Slave, why should God from his Creature? Though God admits his Creatures sometimes to treat with Him about the Equality of his Justice, and also about the Reason of some Commands, yet sometimes He gives no other Reason but his own Soveraignty, Thus saith the Lord, to correct the malepertness of Men, and exact from them an entire Obedience to this unlimitted and absolute Authority. When Abraham was commanded to offer Isaac, God acquaints him not with the reason of his demand till after, Gen. 22. 2. 12. nor did Abraham enter any demurr to the order, or expostulate with God, either from his own natural affection to Isaac, the hardness of the Command, it being as it were a ripping up his own Bowels, nor the quickness of it after he had been a Child of the Promise, and a Divine Donation above the course of Nature. Nor did Paul conferr with Flesh and Blood, and study Arguments from Nature and Interest, to oppose the Divine Command, when he was sent upon his Apostolical Employment, Gal. 1. 16. The more indisputable his Right is to Command, the stronger is our obligation to obey, without questioning the reason of his Orders.

7. It must be joyful Obedience. Men are commonly more cheerful in their Obedience to a great Prince, than to a mean Peasant; because the quality of the Master renders the Service more honourable. 'Tis a discredit to a Prince's Government, when his Subjects obey him with discontent and dejectedness, as though he were a hard Master, and his Laws Tyrannical and Unrighteous. When we pay Obedience but with a dull and feeble pace, and a sour and sad Temper, we blemish our great Soveraign, imply his Commands to be grievous, void of that peace and pleasure He proclaims to be in them: That He deserves no respect from us, if we obey Him because we must, and not because we will. Involuntary Obedience deserves not the Title; 'tis rather Submission than Obedience, an act of the Body, not of the Mind; a Mite of Obedience with chearfulness, is better than a Talent without it. In the little Paul did, he comforts himself in this, that with the mind he serv'd the law of God, Rom. 7. 25. The Testimonies of God were David's delight, Psal. 119. 24. Our Understandings must take pleasure in knowing Him, our Wills delightfully embrace Him, and our Actions be chearfully squar'd to Him. This credits the Soveraignty of God in the World, makes others believe Him to be a gracious Lord, and move them to have some Veneration for his Authority.

8. It must be perpetual Obedience. As Man is a Subject as soon as he is a Creature, so he is a Subject as long as he is a Creature. God's Soveraignty is of perpetual Duration, as long as He is God; Man's Obedience must be perpetual, while he is a Man. God cannot part with his Soveraignty, and a Creature cannot be exempted from Subjection; we must not only serve Him, but cleave to Him, Deut. 13. 4. Obedience is continued in Heaven, his Throne is Established in Heaven, it must be bow'd to in Heaven, as well as in Earth. The Angels continually fulfil his pleasure.

9. Exhortation; Patience is a duty flowing from this Doctrine. In all strokes upon our selves, or thick showers upon the Church, The Lord reigns, is a consideration to prevent muttering against Him, and make us quietly wait to see what the Issue of his Divine Pleasure will be. 'Tis too great an Insolence against the Divine Majesty, to censure what He acts, or quarrel with Him for what He inflicts. Proud Clay doth very unbecomingly swell against an Infinite Superior. If God be our Soveraign, we ought to Subscribe to his Afflicting Will without Debates, as well as to his Liberal Will with affectionate Applauses. We should be as full of Patience under his sharper, as of Praise under his more grateful Dispensations, and be without reluctancy against his Penal, as well as his Preceptive Pleasure. 'Tis God's part to inflict, and the Creatures part to submit.

This Doctrine affords us Motives, and shews us the Nature of Patience.

1. Motives to it.

1. God being Soveraign, hath an absolute right to dispose of all things. His Title to our Persons and Possessions is upon this account stronger than our own can be; we have as much reason to be angry with our selves, when we assert our worldly right against others, as to be angry with God for asserting the right of his Dominion over us. Why should we enter a charge against Him, because He hath not temper'd us so strong in our Bodies, drawn us with as fair Colours, embellish'd our Spirits with as rich Gifts as others? Is He not the Soveraign of his own Goods, to impart what, and in what measure He pleaseth? Would you be content your Servant should check your pleasure, in dispensing your own Favours? 'Tis an unreasonable thing, not to leave God to the exercise of his own Dominion. Though Job were a Pattern of Patience, yet he had deep Tinctures of Impatience, he often complains of God's usage of him, as too hard, and stands much upon his own Integrity; but when God comes in the latter Chapters of that Book, to justifie his carriage towards him, He chargeth him not as a Criminal, but considers him only as his Vassal. He might have found flaws enough in Job's carriage, and corruption enough in Job's nature, to clear the equity of his proceeding as a Judge, but He useth no other medium to convince him, but the greatness of his Majesty, the unlimitedness of his Soveraignty, which so appales the good Man, that he puts his finger on his mouth, and stands mute with a self-abhorrency before him as a Soveraign, rather than as a Judge. When He doth pinch us, and deprive us of what we most affect, his right to do it should silence our Lips, and calm our Hearts from any boisterous uproars against Him.

2. The Property of all still remains in God, since He is Soveraign. He did not devest Himself of the Property, when He granted us the Use. The Earth is His, not ours, the fulness of the Earth is His, 'tis not ours, the fulness any of us have, as well as the fulness others have. After He had given the Israelites Corn, Wine and Oil, He calls them all His, and emphatically adds My to every one of them, Hos. 2. 9. His Right is universal over every Mite we have, and perpetual too. He may therefore take from us what He please. He did but deposite in our hands for a while the benefits we enjoy, either Children, Friends, Estate or Lives; He did not make a total conveyance of them, and alienate alienate his own property, when He put them into our Hands; we can ſhew no Patent for them, wherein the full right is paſt over to us, to hold them againſt his will and pleaſure, and implead Him if He offer to reaſſume them. He reſerved a Power to diſpoſſeſs us upon a Forfeiture, as He is the Lord and Governour. Did any of us yet anſwer the condition of his grant? It was his Indulgence to allow them ſo long. There is reaſon to ſubmit to Him, when He reaſſumes what He lent us, and rather to thank Him, that He lent it ſo long, and did not ſeize upon it ſooner.

3. Other things have more reaſon to complain of our Soveraignty over them, than we of God's exerciſe of his Soveraignty over us. Do we not exerciſe an Authority over our Beaſts, as to ſtrike them when we pleaſe, and meerly for our pleaſure; and think we merit no reproof for it, becauſe they are our own, and of a nature inferiour to ours? And ſhall not God, who is Abſolute, do as much with us, who are more below Him, than the meaneſt Creatures are below us? They are Creatures as well as we, and we no more Creatures than they, they were fram'd by Omnipotence as well as we; there is no more difference between them and us in the notion of Creatures.

As there is no difference between the greateſt Monarch on Earth, and the meaneſt Beggar on the Dung-hill in the notion of a Man; the Beggar is a Man as well as the Monarch, and as much a Man; the difference conſiſts in the ſpecial Endowments we have above them, by the Bounty of their and our common Creator. We are leſs, if compared with God, than the worſt, meaneſt, moſt ſordid Creature can be, if compared with us. Hath not a Bird or a Hare (if they had a Capacity) more reaſon to complain of Mens Perſecuting them by their Hawks and their Dogs? but would their complaints appear reaſonable, ſince both were made for the uſe of Man, and Man doth but uſe the nature of the one, to attain a benefit by the other? Have we any reaſon to complain of God, if He lets looſe other Creatures, the devouring Hounds of the World, to bite and afflict us? We muſt not open our Lips againſt Him, nor let our Heart ſwell againſt his Scourge, ſince both they and we were made for his uſe, as well as other Creatures for ours. This is a reaſon to ſtifle all Complaints againſt God, but not to make us careleſs of preventing Afflictions, or emerging out of them by all juſt ways. The Hare hath a nature to ſhift for it ſelf by its winding and turning, and the Bird by its flight, and neither of them could be blam'd, if they were able, ſhould the one ſcratch out the Eyes of the Hounds, and the other ſacrifice the Hawk to its own fury.

4. 'Tis a folly not to ſubmit to Him. Why ſhould we ſtrive againſt Him, ſince He is an unaccountable Soveraign, and gives no account of any of his matters, Job 33. 13. Who can diſanul the Judgment God gives? There is no appeal from the Supream Court; a higher Court can repeal, or null the ſentence of an Inferiour Court, but the Sentence of the Higheſt ſtands irreverſible, but by it ſelf, and its own Authority. 'Tis better to lower our Sails, than to grapple with one that can ſhoot us under Water. To ſubmit to that Soveraign whom we cannot ſubdue.

2. It ſhews us the true nature of Patience in regard of God. 'Tis a Submiſſion to God's Soveraignty. As the formal Object of Obedience is the Authority of God enacting the Law, ſo the formal Object of Patience is the Authority of God inflicting the Puniſhment. As his right of Commanding is to be eyed in the one, ſo his right of Puniſhing is to be conſidered in the other. This was Eli's condition when he had receiv'd a Meſſage that might put Fleſh and Blood into a mutiny, the rending the Prieſt-hood from his Family, and the ruine of his Houſe, yet this conſideration, 'Tis the Lord, calms him into ſubmiſſion, and a willing compliance with the Divine pleaſure, 1 Sam. 3. 18. 'Tis the Lord, let him do what ſeems good in his ſight. Job was of the ſame ſtrain, Job 1. 21. The Lord gives, and the Lord hath taken away, Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord. He conſiders God as a Soveraign, who was not to be reproached, or have any thing uncomely uttered of Him for what He had done. To be Patient, becauſe we cannot avoid it, or reſiſt it, is a violent, not a Loyal Patience, but to ſubmit becauſe it is the Will of God to inflict: To be ſilent, becauſe the Soveraignty of God doth order it, is a Patience of a true Complexion. The other kind of Patience is no other than that of an Enemy, that will free himſelf as ſoon as he can, and by any way, though never ſo violent that offers it ſelf. This ſort of Patience is that of a Subject acknowledging the Supream Authority over him, and that he ought to be ordered by the Will, and to the Glory of God, more than by his own Will, and for his own eaſe. I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, Pſal. 39. 10. Not becauſe I could not help it; but becauſe thou didſt it, Thou who art my Soveraign Lord. The greatneſs of God claims an awful and inviolable reſpect from his Creatures, in what way ſoever He doth diſpoſe of them; this is due to Him, ſince his Kingdom ruleth over all, his Kingdom ſhould be acknowledged by all, and his Royal Authority ſubmitted to in all that He doth.

A DISCOURSE UPON GOD'S Patience.

NAHUM I. Verſe 3.

The Lord is ſlow to Anger, and great in Power, and will not at all acquit the Wicked: The Lord hath his way in the Whirlwind, and in the Storm, and the Clouds are the duſt of his Feet.

THE Subject of this Propheſie, is God's Sentence againſt Nineveh, the Head and Metropolis of the Aſſyrian Empire. A City famous for its ſtrength and thickneſs of its Walls, and the Multitude of its Towers for Defence againſt an Enemy. The Forces of this Empire did God uſe as a ſcourge againſt the Iſraelites, and by their Hands ruin'd Samaria the chief City of the Ten Tribes, and Tranſplanted them as Captives into another Country, 2 Kings 17. 5, 6. about ſix Years after Hezekiah came to the Crown of Judah, 2 Kings 18. compared with the 17 Chap. v. 6. In whoſe Time, or (as ſome think) later, Nahum utter'd this Propheſie. The Name Nahum, ſignifies Comforter, though the Matter of his Propheſie be dreadful to Nineveh, it was comfortable to the People of God: For a Promiſe is made, Ver. 7. The Lord is good, a ſtrong hold in the Day of Trouble; and he knoweth them that truſt in him. And an Encouragement to Judah to keep their ſolemn Feaſts, ver. 15. And alſo in Chap. 2. 3. with a Declaration of the Miſery of Nineveh, and the Deſtruction of it.

Obſerve,

I. In all the Fears of Gods People, God will have a Comforter for them. Judah might well be dejected with the Calamity of their Brethren, not knowing but it might be their own turn ſhortly after. They knew not where the Ambition of the Aſſyrian would ſtop, but God by his Prophets calms their Fears of their furious Neighbour, by predicting to them the Ruine of their fear'd Adverſary.

II. The Deſtruction of the Churches Enemies is the Comfort of the Church. By that God is glorified in his Juſtice, and the Church ſecur'd in its Worſhip.

III. The Victories of Perſecutors, ſecure them not from being the Triumphs of others. The Aſſyrians, that conquered and captiv'd Iſrael, were themſelves to be conquered and captiv'd by the Medes. The whole oppreſſing Empire is threatned with Deſtruction in the Ruine of their chief City; accordingly it was accompliſh'd, and the Empire extinguiſh'd by a greater Power. God burns the Rod when it hath done the Work he appointed it for; and the wiſp of Straw wherewith the Veſſels are ſcour'd is flung into the Fire, or upon the Dunghil.

Nahum begins his Propheſie Majeſtically, with a Deſcription of the Wrath and Fury of God, Ver. 2. God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth, the Lord revengeth, and is furious, the Lord will take Vengeance on his Adverſaries, and reſerveth Wrath for his Enemies: And therefore the whole of it is called, Ver. 1. The burden of Nineveh, as thoſe Propheſies are which are compoſed of Threatnings of Judgments, which lie as a mighty weight upon the Heads and Backs of Sinners.

God is Jealous.] Jealous of his Glory and Worſhip, and Jealous for his People and their Security. He cannot long bear the Oppreſſions of his People, and the Boaſts of his Enemies. He is jealous for himſelf, and is Jealous for you of Judah, who retain his Worſhip. He is not forgetful of thoſe that remember him, nor of the danger of thoſe that are deſirous to maintain his Honour in the World. In this firſt Expreſſion, the Prophet uſes the Covenant Name, God; the Covenant runs, I am your God, or The Lord your God, moſtly God without Lord, never Lord without God: And therefore his Jealouſie here is meant of the Care of his People, and the Relation that his Actions againſt his Enemies have to his Servants. He is a Lover of his own, and a Revenger on his Enemies.

The Lord revengeth, and is furious.] He now deſcribes God by a Name of Soveraignty and Power, when he deſcribes him in his Wrath and Fury, and is Furious. Heb. בַּעַל חֲמָה Lord of hot Anger; God will vindicate his own Glory, and have his right on his Enemies in a way of puniſhment, if they will not give it him in a way of Obedience. * 'Tis three Times repeated, to ſhew the certainty of the Judgment. And the Name of Lord added to every one, to intimate the Power wherewith the Judgment ſhould be executed. 'Tis not a Fatherly Correction of Children in a way of Mercy, but an offended Soveraigns Deſtruction of his Enemies in a way of Vengeance. There is an Anger of God with his own People, which hath more of Mercy than Wrath; in this his Rod is guided by his Bowels.

* Ribera in loc.

There is a Fury of God againſt his Enemies, where there is ſole Wrath without any Tincture of Mercy, when his Sword is all Edge, without any Balſom-drops upon it. Such a fury as David deprecates, Pſalm 6. 1. O Lord rebuke me not in thy Anger, nor chaſten me in thy ſore diſpleaſure; with a fury untempered with Grace, and inſupportable Wrath.

He reſerves Wrath for his Enemies.] He lays it up in his Treaſury, to be brought out, and expended in a due Seaſon. Wrath is ſupplied by our Tranſlators, and is not in the Hebrew. He reſerves, what? that which is too ſharp to be expreſt, too great to be conceiv'd. A Vengeance it is. And וְנוֹטֵר הוּא He reſerves it. He that hath an infinite Wrath, he reſerves it, that hath a Strength and Power to execute it.

VERSE 3.

The Lord is ſlow to Anger.] Heb. אֶרֶךְ אַפַּיִם of broad Noſtrils. The Anger of God is expreſt by this Word, which ſignifies Noſtrils. As Job 9. 13. If God will not with-draw his Anger, Heb. his Noſtril. And the Anger whereby the Wicked are conſum'd, is called the breath of Noſtrils, Job 4. 9. And when he is Angry, Smoak and Fire are ſaid to go out of his Noſtrils, 2 Sam. 2. 9. and in the 74th. Pſalm 1. Why doth thy Anger ſmoak, Heb. Why do thy Noſtrils ſmoak. So the rage of a Horſe when he is provok'd in Battle, is call'd the Glory of his Noſtrils, Job 39. 20. He breaths quick Fumes, and neighs with Fury.

And ſlowneſs to Anger is here expreſt by the Phraſe of long or wide Noſtrils: Becauſe in a vehement Anger the Blood boyling about the Heart, exhales Mens Spirits, which fume up, and break out in dilated Noſtrils. But where the Paſſages are ſtraiter, the Spirits have not ſo quick a vent; and therefore raiſe more Motions within. Or becauſe the wider the Noſtrils are, the more cool Air is drawn in to temper the heat of the Heart, where the angry Spirits are gather'd. And ſo the Paſſion is allay'd and ſooner calm'd. God ſpeaks of himſelf in Scripture often after the rate of Men: Jeremy prays, Jer. 15. 15. That God would not take him away in his long-ſuffering, Heb. in the length of his Noſtrils, i. e. Be not ſlow and backward in thy Anger againſt my Perſecutors, as to give them Time and Opportunity to deſtroy me. The Noſtrils, as well as other Members of a Humane Body, are aſcribed to God. He is ſlow to Anger, he hath Anger in his Nature, but is not always in the Execution of it.

And great in Power.] This may refer to his Patience as the Cauſe of it, or as a Bar to the Abuſe of it.

1. He is ſlow to Anger, and great in Power, i. e. his Power moderates his Anger; he is not ſo impotent, as to be at the Command of his Paſſions, as Men are. He can reſtrain his Anger under juſt Provocations to Exerciſe it. His Power over himſelf is the Cauſe of his ſlowneſs to Wrath. As Numb. 14. 17. Let the Power of my Lord be great, ſaith Moſes, when he pleads for the Iſraelites Pardon. Men that are great in the World, are quick in Paſſions, and are not ſo ready to forgive an Injury, or bear with an Offender as one of a meaner Rank. 'Tis a want of a Power over a Mans ſelf, that makes him do unbecoming things upon a Provocation. A Prince that can bridle his Paſſion, is a King over himſelf, as well as over his Subjects. God is ſlow to Anger, becauſe great in Power. He hath no leſs Power over himſelf, than over his Creatures. He can ſuſtain great Injuries without an immediate and quick Revenge. He hath a Power of Patience, as well as a Power of Juſtice.

2. Or thus, he is ſlow to Anger, and great in Power. He is ſlow to Anger, but not for want of Power to revenge himſelf; his Power is as great to puniſh, as his Patience to ſpare. It ſeems thus, that ſlowneſs to Anger is brought in as an Objection againſt the Revenge proclaimed. What do you tell us of Vengeance, Vengeance, nothing but ſuch Repetitions of Vengeance? As though we were ignorant, that God is ſlow to Anger? 'Tis true, ſaith the Prophet, I acknowledge it as much as you, that God is ſlow to Anger; but withal great in Power. His Anger certainly ſucceeds his abus'd Patience; he will not always bridle in his Wrath, but one Time or other let it March out in Fury againſt his Adverſaries. The Aſſyrians who had Captiv'd the Ten Tribes, and been Victorious a little againſt the Jews, might think that the God of Iſrael had been Conquered by their Gods, as well as the People profeſſing him had been ſubdued by their Arms. That God had loſt all his Power, and the Jews might argue from Gods Patience to his Enemies, againſt the Credit of the Prophets denouncing Revenge. The Prophet anſwers to the Terrour of the one, and the Comfort of the other. That this Indulgence to his Enemies, and not accounting with them for their Crimes, proceeded from the greatneſs of his Patience, and not from any Debility in his Power. As it refers to the Aſſyrian, it may be rendered thus: You Ninevites, upon your Repentance after Jonah's Thundring of Judgments, are Witneſſes of the ſlowneſs of God to Anger, and had your Puniſhments deferr'd. But falling to your old Sins, you ſhall find a real Puniſhment, and that he hath as much Power to execute his ancient Threatnings, as he had then Compaſſion to recal them. His Patience to you then, was not for want of Power to ruine you, but was the effect of his goodneſs toward you. As it refers to the Jews, it may be thus Paraphraſed: Do not deſpiſe this Threatning againſt your Enemies, becauſe of the greatneſs of their Might, the ſeeming ſtability of their Empire, and the Terrour they poſſeſs all the Nations with round about them. It may be long before it comes: But aſſure your ſelves, the Threatning I denounce ſhall certainly be executed, though he hath Patience to endure them a hundred thirty five Years, (for ſo long it was before Nineveh was deſtroy'd after this Threatning, as * Ribera in loc. computes from the Years of the Reign of the Kings of Judah) yet he hath alſo Power to verifie his Word, and accompliſh his Will: Aſſure your ſelves, he will not at all acquit the Wicked.

* Ribera in loc. P. 359. col. 1.

He will not acquit the Wicked.] He will not always account the Criminal an Innocent, as he ſeems to do by a preſent ſparing of them, and dealing with them as if they were deſtitute of any provoking Carriage towards him, and he void of any Reſentment of it. He will not acquit the wicked: How is this, who then can be ſaved? Is there no Place for Remiſſion? He will not acquit the wicked, i. e. He will not acquit obſtinate Sinners. As he hath Patience for the Wicked, ſo he hath Mercy for the Penitent. The Wicked are the ſubject of his long-ſuffering, but not of his acquitting Grace. He doth not preſently Puniſh their Sins, becauſe he is ſlow to Anger; but without their Repentance he will not blot out their Sins, becauſe he is Righteous in Judgement. If God ſhould acquit them without Repentance pentance for their Crimes, he muſt himſelf Repent of his own Law, and Righteous Sanction of it.

He will not acquit, i. e. he will not go back from the Thing he hath ſpoken, and forbear, at long run, the Puniſhment he hath threatned.

The Lord hath his way in the Whirlwind.] The way of God ſignifies ſometimes the Law of God, ſometims the Providential Operations of God, Ezek. 18. 25. Is not my way equal? It ſeems there to take in both.

And in the Storm, and the Clouds are the Duſt of his Feet.] * The Prophet deſcribes here the fight of God with the Aſſyrians, as if he ruſht upon them with a mighty noiſe of an Army, raiſing the Duſt with the Feet of their Horſes, and motion of their Chariots. Symbollically, it ſignifies the Multitude of the Chaldean and Median Forces, invading, beſieging, and ſtorming the City.

* Tirinus in loc.

It ſignifies,

1. The Rule of Providence, The way of God is in every motion of the Creature; he rules all things, Whirl-wind, Storms, Clouds, his way is in all their walks, in the whirlings and bluſtrings of the one, in the raiſing and diſſolving the other. He blows up the Winds, and compacts the Clouds, to make them ſerviceable to his Deſigns.

2. The Management of Wars by God. His way is in the Storm; as he was the Captain of the Aſſyrians againſt Samaria, ſo he will be the Captain of the Medes againſt Nineveh. As Iſrael was not ſo much waſted by the Aſſyrians, as by the Lord, who levied and arm'd their Forces; ſo Nineveh ſhall be ſubverted, rather by God than by the Arms of the Medes. Their Force is deſcrib'd not to be ſo much from Humane Power as Divine; God is Preſident in all the Commotions of the World, his way is in every Whirl-wind.

3. The Eaſineſs of executing the Judgment. He is of ſo great Power, that he can excite Tempeſts in the Air, and overthrow them with the Clouds, which are the Duſt of his Feet. He can blind his Enemies, and avenge himſelf on them: He is Lord of Clouds, and can fill their Womb with Hail, Lightnings and Thunders, to burſt out upon thoſe he kindles his Anger againſt. He is of ſo great force, that he needs not uſe the ſtrength of his Arm, but the duſt of his Feet, to effect his deſtroying Purpoſe.

4. The Suddenneſs of the Judgment. Whirlwinds come ſuddenly without any Harbingers to give notice of their Approach; Clouds are ſwift in their Motion. Iſa. 60. 8. Who are thoſe that fly as a Cloud, i. e. with a mighty nimbleneſs; what God doth, he ſhall do on the ſudden, come upon them before they are aware, be too quick for them in his Motion to over-run and over-reach them. The Winds are deſcrib'd with Wings, in regard of the quickneſs of their Motion.

5. The Terror of Judgments. The Lord hath his Way in the Whirlwind, i. e. in great diſpleaſure. The Anger of the Lord is often compar'd to a Storm; he ſhall bring Clouds of Judgments upon them, many and thick, as terrible as when a Day is turn'd into Night, by the muſtering of the darkeſt Clouds that interpoſe between the Sun and the Earth. Clouds and Darkneſs are round about him, and a Fire goes before him, when he burns up his Enemies, Pſalm 97. 2, 3. The Judgments ſhall have Terrour without Mercy, as Clouds obſcure the Light, and are dark Masks before the Face and Glory of the Sun, and cut off its refreſhing Beams from the Earth. Clouds note Multitude and Obſcurity; God could cruſh them without a Whirlwind, beat them to Powder with one touch, but he will bring his Judgments in the moſt ſurprizing and amazing manner to Fleſh and Blood, ſo that all their Glory ſhall be changed into nothing but Terror, by the noiſe of the bellowing Winds, and the Clouds like Ink blacking the Heavens.

6. The Confuſion of the Offenders upon God's proceeding. A Whirl-wind is not only a boiſterous wind, that hurls and rouls every thing out of his Place, but by its Circular Motion, by its winding to all Points of the Compaſs, it confounds things, and jumbles them together. It keeps not one Point, but by a Circumgyration toucheth upon all. Clouds like Duſt ſhall be blown in their Face, and Gum up their Eyes. They ſhall be in a poſture of Confuſion, not know what Counſels to take, what Motions to reſolve upon; let them look to every Point of Heaven and Earth, they ſhall meet with a Whirl-wind to confound them, and cloudy Duſt to blind them.

7. The Irreſiſtableneſs of the Judgment. Winds have more than a Gyant-like force, a torrent of compacted Air, that with an invincible wilfulneſs bears all before it, diſplaceth the firmeſt Trees, and levels the talleſt Towers, and pulls up Bodies from their natural place. Clouds alſo are over our Heads, and above our reach; when God places them upon his People for defence, they are an invincible Security, Iſa. 4. 5. And when he moves them as his Chariot againſt a People, they end in an irreſiſtible Deſtruction; thus the ruine of the Wicked is deſcrib'd, Prov. 10. 25. As the Whirlwind paſſes, ſo is the wicked no more. It blows them down, ſweeps them away, they irrecoverably fall before the force of it. What Heart can endure, and what Hands can be ſtrong, in the Days wherein God doth deal with them? Ezek. 22. 14. Thus is the Judgment againſt Nineveh deſcrib'd; God hath his Way in the Whirl-wind to Thunder down their ſtrongeſt Walls, which were ſo thick, that Chariots could march a-breaſt upon, and batter down their mighty Towers, which that City had in Multitudes upon their Walls.

They are the firſt Words I intend to inſiſt upon, to treat of the Patience of God, deſcrib'd in thoſe Words; The Lord is ſlow to Anger.

Doct. Slowneſs to Anger, or admirable Patience, is the Property of the Divine Nature. As Patience ſignifies Suffering, ſo it is not in God. The Divine Nature is impaſſible, uncapable of any impair, it cannot be touched by the violences of Men, nor the eſſential Glory of it be diminiſh'd by the injuries of Men; but as it ſignifies a willingneſs to defer, and an unwillingneſs to pour forth his Wrath upon ſinful Creatures; he moderates his provoked Juſtice, and forbears to revenge the injuries he daily meets with in the World. He ſuffers no grief by Mens wronging him, but he reſtrains his Arm from puniſhing them according to their Merits; and thus there is Patience in every Croſs a Man meets with in the World: Becauſe though it be a Puniſhment, 'tis leſs than is merited by the unrighteous Rebel, and leſs than may be inflicted by a righteous and powerful God.

This Patience is ſeen in his providential Works in the World, He ſuffered the Nations to walk in their own Way, and the Witneſs of his Providence to them was his giving them Rain, and fruitful Seaſons, filling their Heart with food and gladneſs, Acts 16. 17. The Heathens took notice of it, and ſignified it, by feigning their God Saturn, to be Bound a whole Year in a ſoft Cord, a Cord of Wool, and expreſt it by this Proverb; The Mills of the Gods grind ſlowly; i. e. God doth not uſe Men with that Severity that they deſerve: The Mills being uſually turn'd by criminals, condemn'd to that Work.

* Rhodigi. l. 6. c. 14. * This in Scripture is frequently expreſt by a ſlowneſs to anger, Pſalm 103. 8. ſometimes by long-ſuffering, which is a Patience with Duration; Pſalm 145. 8. and Joel 2. 13. He is ſlow to Anger, he takes not the firſt occaſions of a Provocation; he is long ſuffering, Rom. 9. 22. and Pſalm 86. 15. he forbears Puniſhment upon many occaſions offer'd him. 'Tis long before he Conſents to give Fire to his Wrath, and ſhoot out his Thunder-bolts; Sin hath a loud cry, but God ſeems to ſtop his Ears, not to hear the clamour it raiſes, and the charge it preſents. He keeps his Sword a long time in the Sheath; one calls the Patience of God, the Sheath of his Sword, upon thoſe Words, Ezek. 21. 3. I will draw forth my Sword out of his Sheath. † This is one remarkable Letter in the Name of God, he himſelf proclaims it; Exod. 34. 6. The Lord, the Lord God, merciful, gracious and long ſuffering. And Moſes pleads it in the behalf of the People, Numb. 14. 18. where he placeth it in the firſt Rank; the Lord is long ſuffering, and of great Mercy: 'Tis the firſt ſpark of Mercy, and uſhers it to its exerciſes in the World. In the Lord's Proclamation, 'tis put in the middle link, Mercy and Truth together; Mercy could have no room to act, if Patience did not prepare the way; and his Truth and Goodneſs in his Promiſe of the Redeemer would not have been manifeſt to the World, if he had ſhot his Arrows as ſoon as Men committed their Sins, and deſerved his Puniſhment. This Perfection is expreſt by other Phraſes, as keeping Silence; Pſal. 50. 21. Theſe Things haſt thou done, and I kept ſilence, אֶלֶה עָשִׂיתָ וְהֶחֱרַשְׁתִּי it ſignifies to behave ones ſelf as a Deaf or Dumb Man. I did not fly in thy Face, as ſome do with a great noiſe, upon a light Provocation, as if their Life, Honour, Eſtates, were at the Stake. I did not preſently call thee to the Bar, and pronounce judicial Sentence upon thee according to the Law, but demean'd my ſelf, as if I had been Ignorant of thy Crimes, and had not been inveſted with the Power of judging thee for them, Chald. I waited for thy Converſion. God's Patience is the ſilence of his Juſtice, and the firſt whiſper of his Mercy.

† Δῆλον δὲ ὅτι ἐγχειλιδιον την μακροθυμιαν παλαι κολεὸν δὲ τιθησι την θήκην τὸ ἐγχειρίδιον μακροθυμίαν ὀνομάζει. Theodoret in loc.

'Tis alſo expreſt by not laying Folly to Men, Job 24. 12. Men groan under the Oppreſſions of others, yet God lays not Folly to them, i. e. to the Oppreſſors, God ſuffers them to go on with Impunity. He doth not deliver his People becauſe he would try them, and takes not Revenge upon the unrighteous, becauſe in Patience he doth bear with them. Patience is the Life of his Providence in this World. He chargeth not Men with their Crimes here, but reſerves them upon Impenitency for another Tryal. This Attribute is ſo great a one, that it is ſignally called by the Name of Perfection, Mat. 5. 45, 48. He had been ſpeaking of Divine Goodneſs, and Patience to evil Men, and he concludes, be you perfect, &c. Implying it to be an amazing Perfection in the Divine Nature, and worthy of Imitation.

In the Proſecution of this,

1. Let us conſider the Nature of this Patience.
2. Wherein 'tis manifeſted.
3. Why God doth exerciſe ſo much Patience.
4. The USE.

1. The Nature of this Patience.

1. 'Tis part of the Divine Goodneſs and Mercy, yet differs from both. God being the greateſt Goodneſs, hath the greateſt Mildneſs; Mildneſs is always the Companion of true Goodneſs, and the greater the Goodneſs, the greater the Mildneſs. Who ſo Holy as Chriſt, and who ſo Meek? God's ſlowneſs to anger is a Branch, or ſlip from his Mercy, Pſalm 145. 8. The Lord is full of Compaſſion, ſlow to anger. It differs from Mercy in the formal Conſideration of the Object; Mercy reſpects the Creature as miſerable, Patience reſpects the Creature as Criminal: Mercy pities him in his Miſery, and Patience bears with the Sin, which engender'd that Miſery, and is giving Birth to more.

Again, Mercy is one end of Patience, his long-ſuffering is partly to glorifie his Graee, ſo it was in Paul, 1 Tim. 1. 16. As ſlowneſs to anger ſprings from Goodneſs, ſo it makes Mercy the Butt, and Mark of its Operations; Iſa. 30. 18. He waits that he may be gracious; Goodneſs ſets God upon the exerciſe of Patience, and Patience ſets many a Sinner on running into the Arms of Mercy. That Mercy which makes God ready to embrace returning Sinners, makes him willing to bear with them in their Sins, and wait their return.

It differs alſo from Goodneſs, in regard of the Object. The Object of Goodneſs is every Creature, Angels, Men, all Inferiour Creatures, to the loweſt Worm that crawls upon the ground. The Object of Patience is primarily Man, and ſecondarily, thoſe Creatures that reſpect Mens ſupport, conveniency and delight: but they are not the Objects of Patience, as conſider'd in themſelves, but in Relation to Man, for whoſe uſe they were Created, and therefore God's Patience to them is properly his Patience with Man. The lower Creatures do not injure God, and therefore are not the Objects of his Patience, but as they are forfeited by Man, and Man deſerves to be depriv'd of them; as Man in this regard falls under the Patience of God, ſo doth thoſe Creatures which are deſign'd for Man's good. That Patience which ſpares Man, ſpares other Creatures for him, which were all forfeited by Man's Sin, as well as his own Life, and are rather the Teſtimonies of God's Patience, than the proper Objects of it. The Object of God's Goodneſs then is the whole Creation; not a Devil in Hell, but as a Creature is a Mark of his Goodneſs, but not of his Patience. There is a kind of ſparing exercis'd to the Devils, in deferring their compleat Puniſhment, and hitherto keeping off the Day, wherein their final Sentence is to be pronounced, yet the Scripture never mentions this by the Name of ſlowneſs to Anger, or Long-ſuffering. It can no more be call'd Patience, than a Princes keeping a Malefactor in Chains, and not pronouncing a condemning Sentence, or not executing a Sentence already pronounced, can be call'd a Patience with him, when it is not out of kindneſs to the Offender, but for ſome Reaſons of State. God's ſparing the Devils from their total Puniſhment, (which they have not yet, but are reſerved in Chains, under darkneſs for it, Jude 6.) is not in order to Repentance, or attended with any Invitations from God, or hopes in them: And therefore cannot come under the ſame Title as God's ſparing Man; where there is no propoſal of Mercy, there is no exerciſe of Patience. The fall'n Angels had no Mercy reſerv'd for them, nor any Sacrifice prepar'd for them, God ſpared not the Angels, 2 Pet. 2. 4. But delivered them into Chains of darkneſs, to be reſerved unto Judgment; i. e. he had no Patience for them: For Patience is properly a temporary ſparing a Perſon, with a waiting for his relenting, and a change of his injurious demeanour; the Object of Goodneſs is more extenſive than that of Patience: Nor do they both conſider the Object under the ſame Relation.

Good-

Goodneſs reſpects things in a capacity, or in a ſtate of Creation, and brings them forth into Creation, and nurſeth, and ſupports them as Creatures. Patience conſiders them already Created, and fall'n ſhort of the Duty of Creatures; It conſiders them as Sinners, or in relation to Sinners. Had not Sin entred, Patience had never been exerciſed; but Goodneſs had been exerciſed, had the Creature ſtood firm in its created State without any Tranſgreſſion; nay, Creation could not have been without Goodneſs; becauſe it was Goodneſs to Create: But Patience had never been known without an Object, which could not have been without an Injury. Where there is no wrong, no ſuffering, nor like to be any, Patience hath no proſpect of any Operation. So then Goodneſs reſpects Perſons as Creatures, Patience as Tranſgreſſors; Mercy eyes Men as miſerable and obnoxious to Puniſhment; Patience conſiders Men as ſinful, and provoking to Puniſhment.

2. Since 'tis a part of Goodneſs and Mercy, tis not an inſenſible Patience. What is the fruit of pure Goodneſs, cannot be from a weakneſs of reſentment; He is ſlow to anger: The Prophet doth not ſay, He is uncapable of anger, or cannot diſcern what is a real object of anger; It implies, that He doth conſider every Provocation, but He is not haſty to diſcharge his Arrows upon the Offenders; He ſees all, while He bears with them: His Omniſcience excludes any Ignorance; He cannot but ſee every wrong; every aggravation in that wrong, every ſtep and motion from the beginning to the compleating it: For He knows all our thoughts; He ſees the Sin, and the Sinner at the ſame time; the Sin with an Eye of Abhorrency, and the Sinner with an Eye of Pity. His Eye is upon their Iniquities, and his Hatred edged againſt them; while He ſtands with Arms open, waiting a Penitent return. When He publiſheth his Patience in his keeping ſilence, He publiſheth alſo his Reſolution, to ſet Sin in order before their Eyes, Pſal. 50. 21. I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thy Eyes. Think me not ſuch a Piece of Flegm, and ſo dull, as not to reſent your Inſolencies; you ſhall ſee in my final charge, when I come to judge, that not a wry look eſcap'd my knowledge, that I had an Eye to behold, and a Heart to loath every one of your Tranſgreſſions. The Church was ready to think, that God's ſlowneſs to deliver her, and his bearing with her Oppreſſors, was not from any Patience in his Nature, but a drowſie careleſsneſs, a ſenſleſs Lethargy, Pſal. 44. 23. Awake, why ſleepeſt thou, Oh Lord? We muſt conclude Him an inapprehenſive God, before we can conclude Him an inſenſible God. As his delaying his Promiſe, is not ſlackneſs to his People, 2 Pet. 3. 9. So his deferring of Puniſhmet, is not from a Stupidity under the Affronts offered Him.

3. Since 'tis a part of his Mercy and Goodneſs, 'tis not a conſtrained or faint-hearted Patience. 'Tis not a ſlowneſs to anger, ariſing from a deſpondency of his own Power to Revenge. He hath as much power to puniſh, as He hath to forbear Puniſhment. He that Created a World in ſix Days, and that by a Word, wants not a Strength to cruſh all Mankind in one Minute; and with as much eaſe as a Word imports, can give ſatisfaction to his Juſtice in the Blood of the Offender. Patience in Man is many times interpreted, and truly too, a Cowardiſe, a feebleneſs of Spirit, and a want of Strength. But it is not from the ſhortneſs of the Divine Arm, that He cannot reach us, nor from the feebleneſs of his Hand, that He cannot ſtrike us. 'Tis not becauſe He cannot level us with the Duſt, daſh us in pieces, like a Potter's Veſſel, or conſume us as a Moth. He can make the mightieſt to fall before Him, and lay the ſtrongeſt at his Feet, the firſt moment of their Crime. He that did not want a powerful Word to Create a World, cannot want a powerful Word to diſſolve the whole Frame of it, and raze it out of Being. 'Tis not therefore out of a diſtruſt of his own Power, that He hath ſupported a ſinful World for ſo many Ages, and patiently born the Blaſphemies of ſome, the neglects of others, and the Ingratitude of all, without inflicting that ſevere Juſtice which righteouſly He might have done; He wants no Thunder to cruſh the whole Generation of Men, nor Waters to drown them, nor Earth to ſwallow them up. How eaſie is it for Him to ſingle out this or that particular Perſon, to be the Object of his Wrath, and not of his Patience? What He hath done to one, He may to another; any ſignal judgment He hath ſent upon one, is an evidence, that He wants not Power to inflict it upon all. Could He not make the Motes in the Air to choak us at every Breath, Rain Thunderbolts inſtead of Drops of Water, fill the Clouds with a Conſuming Lightning, take off the Reverence and Fear of Man, which He hath Imprinted upon the Creature, Spirit our Domeſtick Beaſts to be our Executioners, unlooſe the Tiles from the Houſe-top to brain us, or make the fall of a Houſe to cruſh us? 'Tis but taking out the Pins, and giving a Blaſt, and the work is done. And doth He want a power to do any of thoſe things? 'Tis not then a faint-hearted, or feeble Patience, that He exerciſeth towards Man.

4. Since 'tis not for want of power over the Creature, 'tis from a fulneſs of power over Himſelf. This is in the Text; The Lord is ſlow to Anger, and great in Power; 'tis a part of his Dominion over Himſelf, whereby He can moderate, and rule his own Affections, according to the Holineſs of his own Will. As it is the effect of his Power, ſo it is an argument of his Power; the greatneſs of the Effect demonſtrates the fulneſs and ſufficiency of the Cauſe. The more feeble any Man is in reaſon, the leſs command he hath over his Paſſions; and he is the more heady to revenge. Revenge is a ſign of a childiſh Mind; the ſtronger any Man is in Reaſon, the more command he hath over himſelf, Prov. 16. 32. He that is ſlow to anger, is better than the mighty: and he that rules his own Spirit, than he that takes a city. He that can reſtrain his Anger, is ſtronger than the Cæſars and Alexanders of the World, that have fill'd the Earth with ſlain Carcaſſes, and ruin'd Cities. By the ſame reaſon, God's ſlowneſs to Anger, is a greater argument of his Power than the Creating a World, or the power of diſſolving it by a word. In this He hath a Dominion over Creatures, in the other over Himſelf. This is the reaſon He will not return to deſtroy; becauſe I am God, and not Man, Hoſea 11. 9. I am not ſo weak and impotent as Man, that cannot reſtrain his Anger. This is a Strength poſſeſſed only by a God, wherein a Creature is no more able to parallel Him, than in any other. So that He may be ſaid to be the Lord of Himſelf; as it is in the Verſe before the Text, that He is the Lord of Anger, in the Hebrew inſtead of furious; as we Tranſlate it, ſo He is the Lord of Patience. The end why God is Patient, is to ſhew his Power, Rom. 9. 22. What, if God willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-ſuffering, the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction? To ſhew his Wrath upon Sinners, and his Power over Himſelf, in bearing ſuch Indignities, and forbearing

bearing Punishment so long, when Men were Vessels of Wrath fitted for destruction, of whom there was no hopes of amendment. Had He immediately broken in pieces those Vessels, his power had not so eminently appear'd, as it hath done, in tolerating them so long, that had provoked Him to take them off so often. There is indeed the power of his Anger, and there is the power of his Patience; and his Power is more seen in his Patience than in his Wrath. 'Tis no wonder that He that is above all, is able to crush all. But it is a wonder, that He that is provok'd by all, doth not upon the first provocation, rid his Hands of all. This is the reason, why He did bear such a weight of Provocations from Vessels of Wrath, prepar'd for ruine, that He might γνωρίσαι τὸ δυνατὸν αὐτῦ, shew what He was able to do, the Lordship and Royalty He had over Himself. The Power of God is more manifest in his Patience to a multitude of Sinners, than it could be in Creating Millions of Worlds out of nothing; this was the δυνατὸν αὐτῦ, a Power over Himself.

5. This Patience being a Branch of Mercy, the exercise of it is founded in the death of Christ. Without the consideration of this, we can give no account why Divine Patience should extend it self to us, and not to the Fallen Angels. The Threatning extends it self to us, as well as to the Fallen Angels. The Threatning must necessarily have sunk Man, as well as those Glorious Creatures, had not Christ stept in to our relief. * Had not Christ interposed to satisfie the Justice of God, Man upon his Sin had been actually bound over to punishment, as well as the Fallen Angels were upon theirs, and been Fetter'd in Chains as strong as those Spirits feel. The reason why Man was not hurl'd into the same deplorable condition upon his Sin, as they were, is Christ's Promise of taking our Nature, and not theirs. Had God design'd Christ's taking their Nature, the same Patience had been exercised towards them, and the same offers would have been made to them, as are made to us. In regard of these Fruits of this Patience, Christ is said to buy the wickedst Apostates from Him, 1 Pet. 2. 1. Denying the Lord that bought them; such were bought by Him, as bring upon themselves just destruction, and whose damnation slumbers not, ver. 3. He purchased the continuance of their Lives, and the stay of their Execution, that Offers of Grace might be made to them. This Patience must be either upon the account of the Law, or the Gospel; for there are no other Rules whereby God Governs the World; a Fruit of the Law it was not, that spake nothing but Curses after Disobedience, not a Letter of Mercy was writ upon that; and therefore nothing of Patience.

Testard. de Natur. & Grat. Thes. 119.

Death and Wrath was denounced, no slowness to Anger intimated. It must be therefore upon the account of the Gospel, and a fruit of the Covenant of Grace, whereof Christ was Mediator. Besides, this Perfection being God's waiting that He might be gracious, Isaiah 30. 18. That which made way for God's Grace, made way for his waiting to manifest it. God discovered not his Grace, but in Christ; and therefore discovered not his Patience but in Christ; 'tis in Him He met with the Satisfaction of his Justice, that He might have a ground for the Manifestation of his Patience. And the Sacrifices of the Law, wherein the Life of a Beast was accepted for the Sin of a Man, discovered the ground of his forbearance of them, to be the expectation of the great Sacrifice, whereby Sin was to be compleatly expiated, Gen. 8. 21. The Publication of his Patience to the end of the World is presently after the sweet savour He found in Noah's Sacrifice. The promised and design'd Coming of Christ, was the Cause of that Patience God exercised before in the World. And his gathering the Elect together, is the reason of his Patience since his Death.

6. The naturalness of his Veracity and Holiness, and the strictness of his Justice, are no bars to the exercise of his Patience.

1. His Veracity. In those Threatnings where the Punishment is expresst, but not the time of Inflicting it prefix'd and determin'd in the Threatning, his Veracity suffers no damage by the delaying Execution; so it be once done, though a long time after, the Credit of his Truth stands unshaken. As when God promises a thing without fixing the time, He is at liberty to pitch upon what time He pleases for the performance of it, without staining his Faithfulness to his Word, by not giving the thing Promised presently. Why should the deferring of Justice upon an Offender, be any more against his Veracity, than his delaying an answer to the Petitions of a Suppliant? But the difference will lie in the threatning, Gen. 2. 17. In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death. The time was there settled, In that day thou shalt die; some refer Day to eating, not to dying; and render the Sentence thus, I do not prohibit thee the eating this Fruit for a Day or two, but continually. In whatsoever Day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die; but not understanding his dying that very day he should eat of it. Referring [day] to the extensiveness of the Prohibition, as to time. But to leave this as uncertain, it may be answered; That as in some Threatnings, a condition is implyed, though not expresst; as in that positive denouncing of the Destruction of Nineveh. Jonah 3. 4. Yet fourty days, and Nineveh shall be destroy'd. The Condition is imply'd, Unless they humble themselves, and repent, for upon their Repentance the Sentence was deferred. So here, In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt dye the death, or certainly die, unless there be a way found for the Expiation of thy Crime, and the righting my Honour; This Condition, in regard of the Event, may as well be asserted to be implyed in this Threatning, as that of Repentance was in the other. Or rather, thou shalt die, thou shalt die spiritually, thou shalt lose that Image of mine in thy Nature, that Righteousness which is as much the Life of thy Soul, as thy Soul is the Life of thy Body; that Righteousness whereby thou art enabled to live to Me, and thy own Happiness. What the Soul is to the Body, a quickning Soul, that the Image of God is to the Soul, a quickning Image. Or, thou shalt die the death, or certainly die, thou shalt be liable to Death. * And so it is to be understood, not of an actual Death of the Body, but the merit of Death, and the necessity of Death; thou wilt be obnoxious to Death, which will be avoided, if thou dost forbear to eat of the forbidden Fruit; thou shalt be a guilty Person, and so under a Sentence of Death, that I may when I please inflict it on thee. Death did come upon Adam that Day, because his Nature was vitiated. He was then also under an expectation of Death, he was obnoxious to it, tho that Day it was not poured out upon him in the full bitterness and gall of it. As when the Apostle saith, Rom. 8. 10. The body is dead, because of sin, he speaks to the Living, and yet tells them, The Body was dead because of sin; he means no more than that it was under a Sentence, and so a necessity of dying, though not actually dead. So thou shalt be under the Sentence of Death that Day, as

certainly, as if that Day thou ſhouldſt ſink into the Duſt. And as by his Patience towards Man, not ſending forth Death upon him in all the bitter Ingredients of it, his Juſtice afterwards was more eminent upon Man's ſurety, than it would have been, if it had been then employ'd in all its ſevere Operations upon Man. So was his Veracity eminent alſo in making good this threatning, in inflicting the puniſhment included in it upon our nature aſſum'd by a mighty Perſon, and upon that Perſon in our Nature, who was infinitely higher than our Nature.

2. His Juſtice and Righteouſneſs are not prejudiced by his Patience. There is a hatred of the Sin in his Holineſs, and a Sentence paſt againſt the Sin in his Juſtice, though the execution of that Sentence be ſuſpended, and the Perſon reprieved by Patience, which is implyed, Eccleſ. 8. 11. Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily; therefore the hearts of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil; Sentence is paſt, but a ſpeedy execution is ſtopt.

Some of the Heathens, who would not imagine God unjuſt, and yet ſeeing the Villanies and Oppreſſions of Men in the World remain unpuniſh'd, and frequently beholding proſperous wickedneſs, to free Him from the charge of Injuſtice, denied his Providence, and actual Government of the World: for if He did take notice of Humane Affairs, and concern Himſelf in what was done upon the Earth, they could not think an Infinite Goodneſs and Juſtice could be ſo ſlow to puniſh Oppreſſors, and relieve the Miſerable, and leave the World in that diſorder under the Injuſtice of Men. They judged ſuch a Patience as was exerciſed by Him, if He did Govern the World, was drawn out beyond the Line of fit and juſt. Is it not a Preſumption in Men to preſcribe a Rule of Righteouſneſs and Conveniency to their Creator? It might be demanded of ſuch, whether they never injur'd any in their Lives? and when certainly they have one way or other; would they not think it a very unworthy, if not unjuſt thing, that a Perſon ſo injur'd by them ſhould take a ſpeedy and ſevere Revenge on them? And if every Man ſhould do the like, would there not be a ſpeedy Diſpatch made of Mankind? Would not the World be a Shambles, and Men ruſh forwards to one anothers deſtruction, for the wrongs they have mutually receiv'd? If it be accounted a Virtue in Man, and no unrighteouſneſs, not preſently to be all on fire againſt an Offence; by what right ſhould any queſtion the conſiſtency of God's Patience with his Juſtice? Do we praiſe the Lenity of Parents to Children, and ſhall we diſparage the long-ſuffering of God to Men? We do not cenſure the Righteouſneſs of Phyſicians and Chyrurgeons, becauſe they cut off a corrupt Member this Day, as well as to Morrow? And is it juſt to aſperſe God, becauſe He doth defer his Vengeance, which Man aſſumes to Himſelf a right to do? We never account him a bad Governour that defers the Tryal, and conſequently the Condemnation and Execution of a Notorious Offender, for important Reaſons, and beneficial to the Publick, either to make the Nature of his Crime more evident, or to find out the reſt of his Complices by his diſcovery. A Governour indeed were unjuſt, if he commanded that which were Unrighteous, and forbad that which were Worthy and Commendable; but if he delays the Execution of a Convict Offender, for weighty Reaſons, either for the benefit of the State, whereof he is the Ruler, or for ſome advantage to the Offender himſelf, to make him have a Senſe of, and a regret for his Offence, we account him not unjuſt for this. God doth not by his Patience diſpence with the Holineſs of his Law, nor cut off any thing from its due Authority. If Men do ſtrengthen themſelves by his long-ſuffering againſt his Law, 'tis their fault, not any unrighteouſneſs in Him. He will take a time to vindicate the Righteouſneſs of his own Commands, if Men will wholly neglect the time of his Patience, in forbearing to pay a dutiful obſervance to his Precept. If Juſtice be natural to Him, and He cannot but puniſh Sin, yet He is not neceſſitated to conſume Sinners, as the Fire doth ſtubble put into it, which hath no command over its own Qualities, to reſtrain them from acting; But God is a free Agent, and may chooſe his own time, for the diſtribution of that Puniſhment his Nature leads Him to. Though He be naturally Juſt, yet it is not ſo natural to Him, as to deprive Him of a Dominion over his own Acts, and a freedom in the exerting them what time He judgeth moſt convenient in his Wiſdom. God is neceſſarily Holy, and is neceſſarily angry with Sin, his Nature can never like it, and cannot but be diſpleaſed with it; yet He hath a liberty to reſtrain the effects of this anger for a time, without diſgracing his Holineſs, or being interpreted to act Unrighteouſly; As well as a Prince or State may ſuſpend the Execution of a Law, which they will never break, only for a time, and for a publick benefit.

If God ſhould preſently Execute his Juſtice, this Perfection of Patience, which is a part of his Goodneſs, would never have an opportunity of diſcovery. Part of his Glory, for which He created the World, would lie in obſcurity from the knowledge of his Creature. His Juſtice would be ſignal in the deſtruction of Sinners, but this ſtream of his Goodneſs would be ſtopt up from any motion. One Perfection muſt not cloud another, God hath his Seaſons to diſcover all, one after another. The times and ſeaſons are in his own power, Acts 1. 7. The Seaſons of manifeſting his own Perfections as well as other things; Succeſſion of them in their diſtinct appearance makes no Invaſion upon the Rights of any. If Juſtice ſhould complain of an Injury from Patience, becauſe it is delay'd, Patience hath more reaſon to complain of an Injury from Juſtice, that by ſuch a Plea it would be wholly obſcur'd and unactive. For this Perfection hath the ſhorteſt time to act its part of any, it hath no ſtage but this World to move in; Mercy hath a Heaven, and Juſtice a Hell, to diſplay it ſelf to Eternity, but long-ſuffering hath only a ſhort-liv'd Earth for the compaſs of its operation.

Again, Juſtice is ſo far from being wrong'd by Patience, that it rather is made more Illuſtrious, and hath the fuller ſcope to exerciſe it ſelf; 'Tis the more righted for being deferred, and will have ſtronger grounds than before for its activity. The equity of it will be more apparent to every reaſon, the objections more fully anſwered againſt it, when the way of dealing with Sinners by Patience hath been ſlighted. When this Dam of Long-ſuffering is remov'd, the floods of Fiery Juſtice will ruſh down with more force and violence; Juſtice will be fully recompenc'd for the delay, when after Patience is abuſed, it can ſpread it ſelf over the Offender with a more unqueſtionable Authority, it will have more Arguments to hit the Sinner in the Teeth with, and ſilence him. There will be a ſharper edge for every ſtroke, the Sinner muſt not only pay for the ſcore of his former ſins, but the ſcore of abus'd Patience; ſo that Juſtice hath no reaſon to commence a ſuit againſt God's ſlowneſs to anger. What it ſhall want by the fulneſs of Mercy upon upon the truly Penitent, it will gain by the contempt of Patience on the Impenitent Abuſers. When Men by ſuch a carriage are ripen'd for the ſtroke of Juſtice, Juſtice may ſtrike without any regret in it ſelf, or pull-back from Mercy. The contempt of long-ſuffering will ſilence the Pleas of the one, and Spirit the Severity of the other. To conclude, ſince God hath glorified his Juſtice on Chriſt, as a Surety for Sinners, his Patience is ſo far from interfering with the rights of his Juſtice, that it promotes it; 'tis diſpenſed to this end, that God might Pardon with Honour, both upon the ſcore of purchaſed Mercy, and contented Juſtice; that by a Penitent Sinners return, his Mercy might be acknowledged free, and the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice by Chriſt be glorified in Believing: for He is long-ſuffering from an unwillingneſs, that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to Repentance, 2 Pet. 3. 9. i. e. All to whom the Promiſe is made, for to ſuch the Apoſtle ſpeaks, and calls it long-ſuffering to us-ward; And Repentance being an acknowledgment of the demerit of Sin, and a breaking off unrighteouſneſs, gives a particular Glory to the freeneſs of Mercy, and the equity of Juſtice.

II. The Second thing; How this Patience, or ſlowneſs to anger is manifeſted.

1. To our Firſt Parents. His ſlowneſs to anger was evidenced, in not directing his Artillery againſt them, when they firſt attempted to rebel. He might have ſtruck them dead, when they began to bite at the temptation, and were inclinable to a ſurrender; for it was a degree of ſinning, and a breach of Loyalty, as well, though not ſo much as the conſummating Act. God might have given way to the floods of his wrath at the firſt ſpring of Man's aſpiring thoughts, when the monſtrous motion of being as God began to be curdled in his Heart; but He took no notice of any of their Embryo Sins, till they came to a ripeneſs, and ſtarted out of the womb of their minds, into the open Air; And after He had brought his Sin to Perfection, God did not preſently ſend that Death upon him, which he had merited, but continued his Life to the ſpace of 930 Years, Gen. 5. 5. The Sun and Stars were not arreſted from doing their Office for him. Creatures were continued for his uſe, the Earth did not ſwallow him up, nor a Thunder-bolt from Heaven raze out the Memory of him. Though he had deſerved to be treated with ſuch a Severity for his ungrateful demeanour to his Creator and Benefactor, and affecting an equality with Him, yet God continued him with a Sufficiency for his content, after he turned Rebel, though not with ſuch a Liberality as when he remain'd a Loyal Subject; and though He foreſaw that he would not make an end of Sinning, but with an end of Living, He uſed him not in the ſame manner, as He had uſed the Devils. He added Days and Years to him, after he had deſerved Death, and hath for this 5000 Years continued the Propagation of Mankind, and derived from his Loins an innumerable Poſterity, and hath crown'd Multitudes of them with Hoary Heads; He might have extinguiſh'd Humane Race at the firſt, but ſince He hath preſerved it till this Day, it muſt be interpreted nothing elſe, but the effect of an admirable Patience.

2. His ſlowneſs to Anger is manifeſt to the Gentiles. What they are, we need no other Witneſs than the Apoſtle Paul, who ſums up many of their crimes. Rom. 1. 29, 30, 31, 32. He doth Preface the Catalogue with a comprehenſive Expreſſion, being fill'd with all unrighteouſneſs; and concludes it with a dreadful Aggravation; They not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them. They were ſo ſoak'd and naturaliz'd in wickedneſs, that they had no delight, and found no ſweetneſs in any thing elſe, but what was in it ſelf abominable; all of them were plung'd in Idolatry and Superſtition; none of them but either ſet up their great Men, or Creatures beneficial to the World, and ſome the damned Spirits in his ſtead, and paid an adoration to inſenſible Creatures or Devils, which was due to God. Some were ſo deprav'd in their Lives and Actions, that it ſeem'd to be the Intereſt of the reſt of the World, that they ſhould have been extinguiſh'd for the Inſtruction of their Contemporaries and Poſterity. The beſt of them had turn'd all Religion into a Fable, coin'd a World of Rites, ſome unnatural in themſelves, and moſt of them unbecoming a rational Creature to offer, and a Deity to accept; yet He did not preſently arm Himſelf againſt them with Fire and Sword, nor ſtop the courſe of their Generations, nor tare out all thoſe Relicks of Natural Light which were left in their Minds. He did not do what He might have done, but He wink'd at the times of that Ignorance, Acts 17. 30. their ignorant Idolatry: for that it refers to, ver. 29. They thought the Godhead was like to Gold or Silver, or Stone graven by art, and Mens device, ὑπεριδὼν, over-looking them; He demean'd Himſelf ſo, as if He did not take notice of them. He wink'd as if He did not ſee them, and would not deal ſo ſeverely with them: the Eye of his Juſtice ſeem'd to wink, in not calling them to an account for their ſin.

3. His ſlowneſs to anger is manifeſt to the Iſraelites. You know how often they are call'd a ſtiff-necked People; they are ſaid to do evil from their youth, i. e. from the time wherein they were erected a Nation and Common-wealth; and that the City had been a provocation of his anger, and of his fury, from the day that they built it, even to this day, i. e. the day of Jeremiah's Propheſie, that he ſhould remove it from before his face, Jer. 32. 31. From the Days of Solomon, ſay ſome, which is too much a curtailing of the Text, as though their Provocations had taken date no higher than from the time of Solomon's rearing the Temple, and beautifying the City, whereby it ſeem'd to be a new Building. They began more early, they ſcarce diſcontinued their revolting from God, they were a grief to Him fourty Years together in the Wilderneſs, Pſal. 95. 10. Yet He ſuffer'd their manners, Acts 13. 18. He bore with their ill behaviour, and ſawcineſs towards Him; and no ſooner was Joſhua's Head laid, and the Elders that were their Conductors, gathered to their Fathers, but the next Generation forſook God, and ſmutted themſelves with the Idolatry of the Nations, Judg. 2. 7, 10, 11. And when He puniſhed them by proſpering the Arms of their Enemies againſt them, they were no ſooner delivered upon their Cry and Humiliation, but they began a new Scene of Idolatry. And though He brought upon them the Power of the Babylonian Empire, and laid Chains upon them, to bring them to their right Mind. And at ſeventy Years end He ſtruck off their Chains, by altering the whole Poſture of Affairs in that part of the World for their ſakes; Overturning one Empire, and ſettling another for their Reſtoration to their Ancient City. And though they did not after diſown Him for their God, and ſet up Baal in his Throne, yet they multiplied fooliſh Traditions, whereby they impaired the Authority of the Law; yet He ſuſtained them with a wonderful Patience, and preferred them before all other People in the firſt offers of the Goſpel; And after they had out-rag'd not only his Servants the Prophets, but his Son the Redeemer, yet he did not forſake them, but employed his Apoſtles to ſollicit them, and publiſh among them the Doctrine of Salvation. So that his treating this People, might well be call'd much long ſuffering, it being above one thouſand five hundred Years, wherein he bore with them, or mildly puniſhed them, far leſs than their Deſerts. Their coming out of Egypt being about the Year of the World 2450, and their final Deſtruction as a Commonwealth, not till about Forty Years after the Death of Chriſt; and all this while his Patience did ſometimes wholly reſtrain his Juſtice, and ſometimes let it fall upon them in ſome few drops, but made no total Devaſtation of their Countrey, nor wrote his Revenge in extraordinary bloody Characters, till the Roman Conqueſt, wherein he put a Period to them, both as a Church and State.

In particular this Patience is manifeſt.

1. In his giving warning of Judgments, before he Orders them to go forth. He doth not Puniſh in a Paſſion, and haſtily; He ſpeaks before he ſtrikes, and ſpeaks that he may not ſtrike. Wrath is publiſht, before it is executed, and that a long Time; an hundred and twenty Years Advertiſement was given to a debauch'd World, before the Heavens were open'd, to ſpout down a Deluge upon them. He will not be accuſed of coming unawares upon a People; He inflicts nothing, but what he foretold either immediately to the People that provoke him, or antiently to them that have been their forerunners in the ſame Provocation, Hoſ. 7. 12. I will chaſtiſe them as their Congregation hath heard. Many of the Leaves of the Old Teſtament are full of thoſe Preſages and Warnings of approaching Judgment. Theſe make up a great Part of the Volume of it in various Editions, according to the State of the ſeveral provoking Times. Warnings are given to thoſe People that are moſt abominable in his ſight; Zeph. 2. 1, 2. Gather your ſelves together, yea gather together Oh Nation, not deſired; 'tis a Meioſis, Oh Nation abhorr'd, before the Decree bring forth. He ſends his Heralds before he ſends his Armies; He ſummons them by the Voice of his Prophets, before he confounds them by the Voice of his Thunders. When a Parley is beaten, a White Flag of Peace is hung out, before a black Flag of Fury is ſet up. He ſeldom cuts down Men by his Judgments, before he hath hewed them by his Prophets, Hoſ. 6. 5. Not a remarkable Judgment but was foretold: The Floud to the Old World by Noah: The Famine to Egypt by Joſeph: The Earthquake by Amos, Amos 1. 1. The Storm from Chaldea by Jeremy: The Captivity of the Ten Tribes by Hoſea: The total Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the Temple by Chriſt himſelf: He hath choſen the beſt Perſons in the World to give thoſe Intimations; Noah, the moſt Righteous Perſon on the Earth for the Old World; and his Son the moſt beloved Perſon in Heaven for the Jews in the later Time. And in other parts of the World, and in the later Times where he hath not warned by Prophets, he hath ſupplied it by Prodigies in the Air and Earth; Hiſtories are full of ſuch Items from Heaven. Leſſer Judgments are fore-warners of greater, as Lightnings before Thunder, are Meſſengers to tell us of a ſucceeding Clap.

1. He doth often give warning of Judgments. He comes not to Extremity, till he hath often ſhaken the Rod over Men; He thunders often, before he cruſheth them with his Thunder-bolt; He doth not till after the firſt and ſecond Admonition puniſh a Rebel, as he would have us reject a Heretick. He ſpeaks once, yea twice, Job 33. 14. and Man perceives it not; He ſends one Meſſage after another, and waits the ſucceſs of many Meſſages, before he ſtrikes. Eight Prophets were order'd to acquaint the Old World with approaching Judgment: 2 Pet. 2. 5. He ſaved Noah the eighth Perſon, a Preacher of Righteouſneſs bringing in the Flood upon the World of the ungodly, called the eighth in reſpect of his Preaching, not in regard of his Preſervation; He was the eighth Preacher, in order from the beginning of the World, that endeavoured to reſtore the World to the way of Righteouſneſs. Moſt indeed conſider him here, as the eighth Perſon ſaved, ſo do our Tranſlators: And therefore add Perſon, which is not in the Greek. Some others conſider him here as the eighth Preacher of Righteouſneſs, reckoning Enoch the Son of Seth the firſt: Grounding it upon Gen. 4. 26. Then began Men to call on the Name of the Lord, Heb. Then it was began to call in the Name of the Lord; τὸ ὄνομα τῶ κυρίου θεῶ. Sept. He began to call in the Name of the Lord, which others render he began to Preach, or call upon Men in the Name of the Lord. The word קָרָא ſignifies to Preach, or to call upon Men by Preaching, Prov. 1. 21. Wiſdom cryeth, or Preaches; and if this be ſo, as it is very probable, 'tis eaſie to reckon him the eighth Preacher, by numbring the ſucceſſive Heads of the Generations; Gen. 5. Beginning at Enoſh the firſt Preacher of Righteouſneſs. * So many there were before God choakt the Old World with Water, and ſwept them away; 'tis clear he often did admoniſh by his Prophets, the Jews of their Sin, and the Wrath which ſhould come upon them. One Prophet, Hoſea Propheſied Seventy Years; for he Propheſied in the Days of Four Kings of Judah, and one of Iſrael, Jeroboam the Son of Joaſh, Hoſ. 1. 1.. or Jeroboam the Second of that Name. Uzziah King of Judah, in whoſe Reign Hoſea Propheſied, lived thirty eight Years after the Death of Jeroboam. The Second Jotham, Uzziah's Succeſſor, Reigned ſixteen Years, Ahaz ſixteen, Hezekiah twenty nine Years; now take nothing of Hezekiah's Time, and Date the beginning of his Propheſie from the laſt Year of Jeroboam's Reign, and the Time of Hoſea's Propheſie, will be Seventy Years compleat; wherein God warned thoſe People, and waited the return particularly of Iſrael; † and not leſs than Five of thoſe we call the leſſer Prophets, were ſent to foretel the Deſtruction of the Ten Tribes, and to call them to Repentance: Hoſea, Joel, Amos, Micah, Jonah; and though we have nothing of Jonah's Propheſie in this concern of Iſrael, yet that he lived in the Time of the ſame Jeroboam, and Propheſied things, which are not upon Record in the Book of Jonah, is clear; 2 Kings 14. 15. And beſides thoſe, Iſaiah Propheſied alſo in the Reign of the ſame Kings, as Hoſea did; Iſa. 1. 1. And it is God's uſual Method, to ſend forth his Servants, and when their Admonitions are ſlighted, he Commiſſions others, before he ſends out his deſtroying Armies, Mat. 22. 3, 4, 7.

* Vid. Gells Geographia.

† Sanctius. Prolegom. in Hoſea. Prolog. the 3d.

2. He doth often give warning of Judgments, that he might not pour out his Wrath. He ſummons them to a ſurrender of themſelves, and a return from their Rebellion, that they might not feel the force of his Arms. He offers Peace before he ſhakes off the Duſt of his Feet, that his deſpiſed Peace might not return in Vain to him, to ſollicite a Revenge from his Anger. He hath a right to puniſh upon the firſt Commiſſion of a Crime, but he warns Men of what they have deſerved, of what his Juſtice moves him to inflict, that by having recourſe to his Mercy, he might not exerciſe the right of his Juſtice. God ſought to kill Moſes for not circumciſing cumciſing his Son, Exod. 4. 24. Could God that ſought it, miſs of a way to do it? Could a Creature lurch or fly from him? God put on the garb of an Enemy, that Moſes might be diſcouraged from being an Inſtrument of his own Ruine. God manifeſted an Anger againſt Moſes for his neglect, as if he would then have deſtroyed him, that Moſes might prevent it, by caſting off his careleſsneſs, and doing his Duty. He ſought to kill him by ſome evident Sign, that Moſes might eſcape the Judgment by his Obedience. He threatens Nineveh by the Prophet with Deſtruction, that Nineveh's Repentance might make void the Propheſie. He fights with Men by the Sword of his Mouth, that he might not pierce them by the Sword of his Wrath. He threatens, that Men might prevent the Execution of his Threatning; He terrifies, that he might not deſtroy, but that Men by Humiliation may lye proſtrate before him, and move the Bowels of his Mercy to a louder ſound, than the Voice of his Anger. He takes Time to whet his Sword, that Men may turn themſelves from the Edge of it. He roars like a Lion, that Men, by hearing his Voice, may ſhelter themſelves from being torn by his Wrath. There is Patience in the ſharpeſt threatning, that we may avoid the Scourge. Who can charge God with an eagerneſs to Revenge, that ſends ſo many Heralds, and ſo often before he ſtrikes, that he might be prevented from ſtriking? His Threatnings have not ſo much of a black Flag, as of an Olive Branch. He lifts up his Hand, before he ſtrikes, that Men might See and avert the ſtroke, Iſaiah 26. 11.

2. His Patience is manifeſt, in long delaying his threatned Judgments, though he finds no Repentance in the Rebels. He doth ſometimes delay his lighter Puniſhments, becauſe he doth not delight in torturing his Creatures; but he doth longer delay his deſtroying Puniſhments, ſuch as put an end to Mens Happineſs, and remit them to their final and unchangeable State; becauſe he doth not delight in the Death of a Sinner. While he is preparing his Arrows, he is waiting for an occaſion to lay them aſide, and dull their Points, that he may with Honour march back again, and disband his Armies. He brings lighter Smarts ſooner, that Men might not think him aſleep, but he ſuſpends the more terrible Judgments, that Men might be led to Repentance. He ſcatters not his conſuming Fires at the firſt, but brings on ruining Vengeance with a ſlow pace; Sentence againſt an Evil Work is not ſpeedily executed, Eccleſ. 8. 11. The Jews therefore ſay, that Michael, the Miniſter of Juſtice, flies with one Wing, but Gabriel the Miniſter of Mercy with two. An hundred and twenty Years did God wait upon the old World, and delay their Puniſhment, all the Time the Ark was preparing, 1 Pet. 3. 20. Wherein that Wicked Generation did not enjoy only a bare Patience, but a ſtriving Patience. Gen. 6. 3. My Spirit ſhall not ſtrive with Man, yet his Days ſhall be one hundred and twenty Years, the Days wherein I will ſtrive with him; that his Long-ſuffering might not loſe all its Fruit, and remit the Objects of it into the Hands of conſuming Juſtice. It was the Tenth Generation of the World from Adam, when the Deluge overflow'd it, ſo long did God bear with them. And the Tenth Generation from Noah wherein Sodom was conſumed. God did not come to keep his Aſſize in Sodom, till the cry of their Sins was very ſtrong, that it had been a wrong to his Juſtice to have reſtrain'd it any longer. The cry was ſo loud, that he could not be at quiet, as it were, on his Throne of Glory for the diſturbing noiſe, Gen. 18. 20, 21. Sin tranſgreſſeth the Law, the Law being violated, ſolicites Juſtice, Juſtice being urg'd pleads for Puniſhment; the cry of their Sins did as it were force him from Heaven to come down, and examine what cauſe there was for that Clamour. Sin cries loud and long, before he takes his Sword in Hand. Four hundred Years he kept off deſerved Deſtruction from the Amorites, and deferr'd making good his Promiſe to Abraham, of giving Canaan to his Poſterity out of his Long-ſuffering to the Amorites, Gen. 15. 16. In the Fourth Generation they ſhall come hither again, for the Iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full. Their meaſure was filling then, but not ſo full as to put a ſtop to any further Patience till Four hundred Years after. The uſual Time in ſucceeding Generations from the denouncing of Judgments to the Execution, is Forty Years, this ſome ground upon Ezek. 4. 6. Thou ſhalt bear the Iniquity of the Houſe of Judah Forty Days, taking each Day for a Year. Though Hoſea lived Seventy Years, yet from the beginning of his Prophecying Judgments againſt Iſrael, to the pouring them out upon that Idolatrous People, it was Forty Years. Hoſea as was mentioned before, propheſied againſt them in the Days of Jeroboam the Second, in whoſe Time God did wonderfully deliver Iſrael, 2 Kings 14. 26, 27. From that Time till the total Deſtruction of the Ten Tribes it was Forty Years, as may eaſily be computed from the Story, 2 Kings 15. 16, 17 Chap. by the Reign of the ſucceeding Kings. So Forty Years after the moſt horrid Villany that ever was committed in the Face of the Sun, viz. The Crucifying the Son of God, was Jeruſalem deſtroyed, and the Inhabitants captiv'd; ſo long did God delay a viſible Puniſhment for ſuch an outrage. Sometimes he prolongs ſending a threatned Judgment upon a meer ſhadow of Humiliation; ſo he did that denounced againſt Ahab. He turn'd it over to his Poſterity, and adjourn'd it to another Seaſon, 1 Kings 21. 29. He doth not iſſue out an Arreſt upon one Tranſgreſſion, you often find him not commencing a ſuit againſt Men, till three and four Tranſgreſſions. The firſt of Amos, all along that Chapter, and the Second Chapter; for three and four, i. e. Seven. A certain number for an uncertain. He gives not orders to his Judgments to march, till Men be obſtinate, and refuſe any Commerce with him. He ſtops them, till there be no remedy, 2 Chron. 36. 16. It muſt be a great wickedneſs that gives vent to them, Hoſ. 10. 15. Heb. your wickedneſs of wickedneſs. He is ſo ſlow to Anger, and ſtays the Puniſhment his Enemies deſerve, that he may ſeem to have forgot his kindneſs to his Friends, Pſalm 44. 24. Wherefore hideſt thou thy Face and forgetteſt our Affliction, and Oppreſſion? He lets his People groan under the Yoak of their Enemies, as if he were made up of kindneſs to his Enemies, and anger againſt his Friends. This delaying of Puniſhment to evil Men, is viſible in his ſuſpending the terrifying Acts of Conſcience, and ſupporting it only, in his checking, admoniſhing, and controuling Acts. The Patience of a Governour is ſeen in the patient mildneſs of his Deputy. Davids Conſcience did not terrifie him, till nine Months after his Sin of Murder. Should God ſet open the Mouth of this Power within us, not only the Earth, but our own Bodies, and Spirits, would be a burden to us. 'Tis long before God puts Scorpions into the hands of Mens Conſciences, to ſcourge them. He holds back the Rod, waiting for the hour of our return, as if that would be a recompence for our offences, and his forbearance.

3. His Patience is manifeſt in his unwillingneſs to execute his Judgments, when he can delay no longer. He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the Children of Men.

Men, Lamen. 3. 33. Heb. He doth not afflict from his Heart. He takes no Pleaſure in it, as he is Creator. The height of Mens Provocations, and the neceſſity of the preſerving his Rights, and vindicating his Laws, obligeth him to it, as he is the Governour of the World. As a Judge may willingly condemn a Malefactor to Death out of affection to the Laws, and deſire to preſerve the Order of Government, but unwillingly, out of Compaſſion to the Offender himſelf. When he reſolved upon the Deſtruction of the Old World, he ſpake it, as a God grieved with an occaſion of Puniſhment, Gen. 6. 6, 7. compared together. When he came to reckon with Adam, he walked, he did not run with his Sword in his Hand upon him, as a mighty Man with an eagerneſs to deſtroy him, Gen. 3. 8. And that in the cool of the Day, a Time when Men tired in the Day, are unwilling to engage in a hard Employment. His exerciſing Judgment, is a coming out of his Place, Iſa. 26. 21. Micah 1. 3. He comes out of his Station, to exerciſe Judgment; a Throne is more his Place than a Tribunal. Every Prophecy loaded with Threatnings, is call'd the Burden of the Lord, a burden to him to execute it, as well as to Men to ſuffer it. Though three Angels came to Abraham about the Puniſhment of Sodom, whereof one Abraham ſpeaks to as to God, yet but two appear'd at the Deſtruction of Sodom; as if the Governour of the World were unwilling to be preſent at ſuch dreadful Work, Gen. 19. 1. And when the Man that had the Inkhorn by his ſide, that was appointed, to mark thoſe that were to be preſerved in the common Deſtruction, return'd to give an account of the performing his Commiſſion, Ezek. 9. 10. We read not of the return of thoſe that were to kill, as if God delighted only to hear again of his Works of Mercy, and had no mind to hear again of his ſevere Proceedings.

* Mercer in Gen. 1. 5. * The Jews to ſhew Gods unwillingneſs to Puniſh, imagine that Hell was created the Second Day, becauſe that Days work is not pronounced good by God, as all the other Days works are, Gen. 1. 8.

† Creſſol. Decad. 2. p. 163. 1. When God doth Puniſh he doth it with ſome regret. † When he hurls down his Thunders, he ſeems to do it with a backward Hand: Becauſe with an unwilling Heart. He created, ſaith Chryſoſtom, the World in Six Days, but was Seven Days in deſtroying one City Jericho, which he had before devoted to be razed to the ground. What is the Reaſon, ſaith he, that God is ſo quick to build up, but ſlow to pull down? His Goodneſs excites his Power to the One, but is not earneſt to perſwade him to the Other. When he comes to ſtrike, he doth it with a ſigh or groan, Iſa. 1. 24. Ah I will eaſe me of my Adverſaries, and avenge me on my Enemies. הוי Ah, a note of Grief. So Hoſ. 6. 4. Oh Ephraim what ſhall I do unto thee? Oh Judah, what ſhall I do unto thee? 'Tis an Addubitatio, a Figure in Rhetorick, as if God were troubled, that he muſt deal ſo ſharply with them, and give them up to their Enemies. I have tried all means to reclaim you, I have uſed all ways of Kindneſs, and nothing prevails. What ſhall I do? My Mercy invites me to ſpare them, and their ingratitude provokes me to Ruine them. God had born with that People of Iſrael almoſt three hundred Years, from the ſetting up of the Calves at Dan and Bethel; ſent many a Prophet to warn them, and ſpent many a Rod to reform them. And when he comes to execute his Threatnings, he doth it with a conflict in himſelf, Hoſea 11. 8. How ſhall I give thee up, Oh Ephraim? How ſhall I deliver thee, Iſrael? As if there were a pull-back in his own Bowels, he ſolemnizeth their approaching Funeral with a hearty groan; and takes his Farewel of the dying Malefactor with a Pang in himſelf. How often in former Times when he had ſign'd a warrant for their Execution, did he call it back? Pſalm 78. 38. Many a Time turn'd he his Anger away. Many a Time he recall'd, or order'd his Anger, to return again as the Word ſignifies, as if he were irreſolute what to do. He recall'd it, as a Man doth his Servant ſeveral Times, when he is ſending him upon an unwelcome Meſſage; or as a tender Hearted Prince, wavers, and trembles, when he is to ſign a Writ for the Death of a Rebel, that hath been before his Favourite, as if when he had ſign'd the Writ, he blotted out his Name again, and flung away the Pen. And his Method is remarkable, when he came to puniſh Sodom; though the cry of their Sin had been fierce in his Ears, yet when he comes to make Inquiſition, he declares his Intention to Abraham, as if he were deſirous that Abraham ſhould have helped him to ſome Arguments, to ſtop the out-goings of his Judgment. He gave Liberty to the beſt Perſon in the World, to ſtand in the gap, and enter into a Treaty with him, to ſhew (ſaith one *) how willingly his Mercy would have Compounded with his Juſtice for their Redemption. And Abraham interceded ſo long, till he was aſhamed for pleading the Cauſe of Patience and Mercy, to the wrong of the Rights of Divine Juſtice. Perhaps had Abraham had the Courage to ask, God would have had the Compaſſion to grant a Reprieve juſt at the Time of Execution.

* Pierce ſinner im-plead. pag. 227.

2. His Patience is manifeſt, in that when he begins to ſend out his Judgments, he doth it by Degrees. His Judgments are as the Morning Light, which goes forth by degrees in the Hemiſphere, Hoſ. 6. 5. He doth not ſhoot all his Thunders at once, and bring his ſharpeſt Judgment in array at one Time, but gradually, that a People may have Time to turn to him, Joel 1. 4. Firſt the Palmer-worm, then the Locuſt, then the Canker-worm, then the Caterpillar; what one left, the other was to eat, if there were not a timely return. A Jewiſh Writer, † ſaith, theſe Judgments came not all in one Year, but one Year after another. The Palmer-worm and Locuſt might have eaten all, but Divine Patience ſet bounds to the devouring Creatures. God had been firſt as a Moth to Iſrael; Hoſ. 5. 12. Therefore will I be to the Houſe of Ephraim as a Moth; Rivet tranſlates it, I have been, in the Hebr. 'tis I, without adding, I have been, or I will be, and more probably I have been; I was as a Moth, which makes little Holes in a Garment, and conſumes it not all at once; and as rottenneſs to the Houſe of Judah, or a Worm that eats into Wood by Degrees. Indeed this People had conſum'd inſenſibly, partly by civil Combuſtions, change of Governours, Foreign Invaſions, yet they were as obſtinate in their Idolatry as ever; at laſt God would be no longer to them as a Moth, but as a Lion, tear, and go away; ver. 14. So, Hoſ. 2. God had diſowned Iſrael for his Spouſe, ver. 2. She is not my Wife, neither am I her Husband, yet he had not taken away her Ornaments, which by the right of Divorce he might have done, but ſtill expected her Reformation, for that the Threatning intimates, ver. 3. let her put away her Whoredom, leſt I ſtrip her Naked, and ſet her as in the Day when ſhe was born If ſhe returned, ſhe might recover what ſhe had loſt, if not, ſhe might be ſtript of what remained. Thus God dealt with Judah, Ezek. 9. 3. The Glory of God goes firſt from the Cherub to the Threſh- hold of the Houſe, and ſtays there, as if he had a mind to be invited back again; then it goes from the Threſhold of the Houſe, and ſtands over the Cherubims, as if upon a penitent Call it would drop down again to its ancient Station and Seat, over which it hovered; Ezek. 10. 18. And when he was not ſollicited to return, he departs out of the City, and ſtood upon the Mountain, which is on the Eaſt part of the City, Ezek. 11. 23. looking ſtill towards, and hovering about the Temple, which was on the Eaſt of Jeruſalem, as if loath to depart, and abandon the Place and People. He walks ſo leaſurely with his Rod in his Hand, as if he had a Mind rather to fling it away, than uſe it. His Patience in not pouring out all his Vials, is more remarkable than his Wrath in pouring out one or two. Thus hath God made his ſlowneſs to Anger viſible to us in the gradual Puniſhment of us; Firſt, the Peſtilence on this City, then Firing our Houſes, Conſumption of Trade, theſe have not been anſwer'd with ſuch a Carriage as God expects, therefore a greater is reſerved. I dare Prognoſticate, upon Reaſons you may gather from what hath been ſpoke before, if I be not much miſtaken, the Forty Years of his uſual Patience are very near expired, he hath inflicted ſome, that he might be met with in a way of Repentance, and omit with Honour the inflicting the Remainder.

4. His Patience is manifeſt, in moderating his Judgments, when he ſends them. Doth he empty his Quiver of his Arrows, or exhauſt his Magazines of Thunder? No, he could roul one Thunder-bolt ſucceſſively upon all Mankind; 'tis as eaſie with him to Create a perpetual motion of Lightning and Thunder, as of the Sun and Stars, and make the World, as terrible by the one, as it is delightful by the other. He opens not all his Store, he ſends out a light Party to Skirmiſh with Men, and puts not in array his whole Army, He ſtirs not up all his Wrath, Pſalm 78. 38. He doth but pinch, where he might have torn a ſunder; when he takes away much, he leaves enough to ſupport us. If he had ſtirred up all his Anger, he had taken away all, and our Lives to boot. He takes up but a few ſparks, takes but one Firebrand to fling upon Men, when he might diſcharge the whole Furnace upon them; he ſends but a few drops out of the Cloud, which he might make to break in the groſs, and fall down upon our Heads to overwhelm us; he abates much of what he might do. When he might ſweep away a whole Nation by deluges of Water, corruption of the Air, or convulſions of the Earth, or by other ways that are not wanting at his Order. He picks out only ſome Perſons, ſome Families, ſome Cities, ſends a Plague into one Houſe, and not into another; how is Patience to the ſtock of a Nation, while he inflicts Puniſhment upon ſome of the moſt notorious Sinners in it. Herod is ſuddenly ſnatcht away, being willingly flattered into the Thoughts of his being a God; God ſingl'd out the chief in the Herd, for whoſe ſake he had been affronted by the Rabble. Acts 12. 22, 23. Some find him ſparing them, while others feel him deſtroying them; he arreſts ſome, when he might ſeize all, all being his Debtors; and often in great Deſolations brought upon a People for their Sin, he hath left a ſtump in the Earth, as Daniel ſpeaks, Dan. 4. 15. for a Nation to grow upon it again, and ariſe to a ſtronger Conſtitution. He doth puniſh leſs than our Iniquities deſerve, Ezra 9. 13. and rewards us not according to our Iniquities, Pſal. 103. 10. The greatneſs of any Puniſhment in this Life, anſwers not the greatneſs of the Crime. Though there be an Equity in whatſoever he doth, yet there is not an equality to what we deſerve. Our Iniquities would juſtifie a ſeverer Treating of us; his Juſtice goes not here to the end of its Line, 'tis ſtopped in its Progreſs, and the blows of it weakned by his Patience; he did not curſe the Earth after Adams fall, that it ſhould bring forth no Fruit, but that it ſhould not bring forth Fruit without the wearifom Toil of Man, and ſubjected him to Diſtempers preſently, but inflicted not Death immediately; while he puniſhed him, he ſupported him; and while he expelled him from Paradiſe, he did not order him not to caſt his Eye towards it, and conceive ſome hopes of regaining that happy Place.

5. His Patience is ſeen in giving great Mercies after Provocations. He is ſo ſlow to Anger, that he heaps many kindneſſes upon a Rebel, inſtead of Puniſhment. There is a proſperous wickedneſs, wherein the Provokers ſtrength continues firm; the Troubles which like Clouds drop upon others, are blown away from them, and they are not plagued like other Men, that have a more worthy demeanour towards God, Pſalm 73. 3, 4, 5. He doth not only continue their Lives, but ſends out freſh Beams of his Goodneſs upon them, and calls them by his Bleſſings, that they may acknowledge their own Fault and his Bounty, which he is not obliged to by any gratitude he meets with from them, but by the richneſs of his own patient Nature: For he finds the unthankfulneſs of Men as great as his Benefits to them. He doth not only continue his outward Mercies, while we continue our Sins, but ſometimes gives freſh Benefits after new Provocations: That if poſſible he might excite an ingenuity in Men. When Iſrael at the Red Sea flung dirt in the Face of God, by quarrelling with his Servant Moſes for bringing them out of Egypt, and miſ-judging God in his Deſign of Deliverance, and were ready to ſubmit themſelves to their former Oppreſſors, Exod. 14. 11, 12. which might juſtly have urged God to ſay to them, take your own Courſe; yet he is not only patient under their unjuſt Charge, but makes bare his Arm in a deliverance at the Red Sea, that was to be an amazing Monument to the World in all Ages; and afterwards when they repiningly quarrelled with him in their wants in the Wilderneſs, he did not only not Revenge himſelf upon them, or caſt off the Conduct of them, but bore with them by a miraculous long ſuffering, and ſupplied them with miraculous proviſion, Manna from Heaven, and Water from a Rock. Food is given to ſupport us, and Cloaths to cover us, and Divine Patience makes the Creatures, which we turn to another uſe, than what they were at firſt intended for, ſerve us contrary to their own Genius: For had they Reaſon, no queſtion but they would complain, to be ſubjected to the Service of Man, who hath been ſo ungrateful to their Creator, and groan at the abuſe of God's Patience, in the abuſe they themſelves ſuffer from the Hands of Man.

6. All this is more manifeſt, if we conſider the Provocations he hath. Wherein his ſlowneſs to Anger infinitely tranſcends the Patience of any Creature; nay the Spirits of all the Angels and Glorified Saints in Heaven, would be too narrow to bear the Sins of the World for one Day, nay not ſo much as the Sins of Churches, which is a little ſpot in the whole World: 'Tis becauſe he is the Lord, one of an infinite Power over himſelf, that not only the whole Maſs of the Rebellious World, but of the Sons of Jacob (either conſidered as a Church and Nation ſpringing from the Loyns of Jacob, or conſidered as the Regenerate Part of the World, World, ſometimes called the Seed of Jacob) are not conſumed, Mal. 3. 6. A Jonah was angry with God, for recalling his Anger from a ſinful People; had God committed the Government of the World to the Glorified Saints, who are perfect in Love and Holineſs, the World would have had an End long ago; they would have acted that, which they Sue for at the Hands of God, and is not granted them, Rev. 6. 10. How long Lord holy and true, doſt thou not avenge our Blood, on them that dwell on the Earth? God hath Deſigns of Patience above the World, above the unſinning Angels, and perfectly renewed Spirits in Glory. The greateſt Created long ſuffering is infinitely diſproportion'd to the Divine; Fire from Heaven would have been ſhowred down before the greateſt Part of a Day were ſpent, if a Created Patience had the Conduct of the World, though that Creature were poſſeſſed with the Spirit of Patience, extracted from all the Creatures which are in Heaven, or are, or ever were upon the Earth. Methinks Moſes intimates this; for as ſoon as God had paſſed by proclaiming his Name Gracious, and Long ſuffering; as ſoon as ever Moſes had paid his Adoration, he falls a Praying, that God would go with the Iſraelites; Exod. 34. 8, 9. For it is a ſtiff-necked People: What an Argument is here for God to go along with them? He might rather, ſince he had heard him but juſt before ſay, he would by no means clear the Guilty, deſire God to ſtand further off from them, for fear the Fire of his Wrath ſhould burſt out from him, to burn them as he did the Sodomites. But he conſiders, that as none but God had ſuch Anger to deſtroy them, ſo none but God had ſuch a Patience to bear with them; 'tis as much as if he ſhould have ſaid, Lord! if thou ſhould'ſt ſend the moſt tender-hearted Angel in Heaven to have the guidance of this People, they would be a loſt People; a Period will quickly be ſet to their Lives, no Created Strength can reſtrain its Power from cruſhing ſuch a ſtiff-necked People; Fleſh and Blood cannot bear them, nor any Created Spirit of a greater might.

1. Conſider the greatneſs of the Provocations. No light Matter, but Actions of a great Defiance: What is the practical Language of moſt in the World, but that of Pharaoh? Who is the Lord that I ſhould obey him? How many Queſtion his Being, and more, his Authority? What blaſphemies of him, what reproaches of his Majeſty? Men drinking up Iniquity like Water, and with a haſte and ardency ruſhing into Sin, as the Horſe into the Battle. What is there in the reaſonable Creature, that hath the quickeſt Capacity, and the deepeſt Obligation to ſerve him, but Oppoſition and Enmity, a ſlight of him in every thing, yea the Services moſt ſeriouſly performed, unſuited to the Royalty and Purity of ſo great a Being? Such Provocations as dare him to his Face, that are a burden to ſo Righteous a Judge, and ſo great a Lover of the Authority and Majeſty of his Laws; that were there but a ſpark of Anger in him, 'tis a wonder it doth not ſhew it ſelf; when he is invaded in all his Attributes, 'tis aſtoniſhing that this ſingle one of Patience and Meekneſs, ſhould withſtand the aſſault of all the reſt of his Perfections; his Being which is attack'd by Sin, ſpeaks for Vengeance. His Juſtice cannot be imagin'd to ſtand ſilent, without charging the Sinner. His Holineſs cannot but encourage his Juſtice to urge its Pleas, and be an Advocate for it. His Omniſcience proves the Truth of all the Charge; and his abuſed Mercy hath little Encouragement, to make Oppoſition to the Indictment; nothing but Patience ſtands in the gap to keep off the Arreſt of Judgment from the Sinner.

2. His Patience is manifeſt, if you conſider the Multitudes of theſe Provocations. Every Man hath Sin enough in a Day to make him ſtand amazed at Divine Patience, and to call it as well as the Apoſtle did, all long ſuffering, 1 Tim. 1. 16. How few Duties of a perfectly right ſtamp are performed? What unworthy Conſiderations mix themſelves like droſs, with our pureſt and ſincereſt Gold? How more numerous are the reſpects of the Worſhippers of him to themſelves, than unto him? How many Services are paid him, not out of Love to him, but becauſe he ſhould do us no hurt, and ſome Service; when we do not ſo much Deſign to pleaſe him, as to pleaſe our ſelves by Expectations of a Reward from him? What Maſter would endure a Servant that endeavoured to pleaſe him, only becauſe he ſhould not kill him? Is that former Charge of God upon the Old World yet out of date, that the Imagination of the thoughts of the Heart of Man was only Evil, and that continually? Gen. 6. 5. Was not the New World as chargeable with it as the Old? Certainly it was; Gen. 8. 21. And is of as much force this very minute, as it was then; how many are the Sins againſt Knowledge, as well as thoſe of Ignorance; preſumptuous Sins as well as thoſe of Infirmity? How numerous thoſe of Omiſſion and Commiſſion? * 'Tis above the reach of any Man's Underſtanding to conceive all the Blaſphemies, Oaths, Thefts, Adulteries, Murders, Oppreſſions, Contempt of Religion, the open Idolatries of Turks and Heathens, the more ſpiritual and refin'd Idolatries of others. Add to thoſe the ingratitude of thoſe that profeſs his Name, their Pride, Earthlineſs, Careleſsneſs, Sluggiſhneſs to Divine Duties; and in every one of thoſe a Multitude of Provocations; the whole Man being engag'd in every Sin, the Underſtanding contriving it, the Will embracing it, the Affections complying with it, and all the Members of the Body Inſtruments in the Acting the Unrighteouſneſs of it; every one of theſe Faculties beſtowed upon Men by him, are armed againſt him in every Act: And in every Employment of them there is a diſtinct Provocation, though center'd in one ſinful End and Object. What are the Offences all the Men of the World receive from their fellow Creatures, to the injuries God receives from Men, but as a ſmall Duſt of Earth to the whole Maſs of Earth and Heaven too? What Multitudes of Sins is one prophane Wretch guilty of in the ſpace of 20, 40, 50 Years? Who can compute the vaſt number of his Tranſgreſſions, from the firſt uſe of Reaſon to the Time of the Separation of his Soul from his Body; from his entrance into the World to his Exit? What are thoſe, to thoſe of a whole Village of the like Inhabitants? What are thoſe to thoſe of a great City? Who can number up all the foul-mouth'd Oaths, the beaſtly exceſs, the goatiſh uncleanneſs committed in the ſpace of a Day, Year, Twenty Years in this City, much leſs in the whole Nation, leaſt of all in the whole World? Were it no more than the common Idolatry of former Ages, when the whole World turn'd their backs upon their Creator, and paſſed him by to ſue to a Creature, a Stock, or Stone, or a degraded Spirit. How provoking would it be to a Prince to ſee a whole City under his Dominion deny him a Reſpect; and pay it to his Scullion, or the common Executioner he employs? Add to this the unjuſt Invaſions of Kings, the Oppreſſions exerciſed upon Men, all the Private and Publick Sins that have been committed in the World, ever ſince it began. The Gentiles were deſcrib'd by the Apoſtle, Rom. 1. 29, 30, 31. in a black Character, They were Haters of God; yet how did did the Riches of his Patience preſerve Multitudes of ſuch diſingenuous Perſons, and how many Millions of ſuch haters of Him breath every Day in his Air, and are maintained by his Bounty, have their Tables ſpread, and their Cups fill'd to the brim, and that too in the midſt of reiterated Belchings of their Enmity againſt Him? All are under ſufficient Provocations of Him to the higheſt Indignation. The Preſiding Angels over Nations could not forbear, in Love and Honour to their Governour, to arm themſelves to the Deſtruction of their ſeveral Charges, if Divine Patience did not ſet them a Pattern, and their Obedience incline them to expect his Orders, before they act what their Zeal would prompt them to. The Devils would be glad of a Commiſſion to deſtroy the World, but that his Patience puts a ſtop to their fury, as well as his own Juſtice.

3. Conſider the long time of this Patience. He ſpread out his Hands all the day to a Rebellious World. Iſaiah 65. 2. All Mens Day, all God's Day, which is a thouſand Years, He hath born with the groſs of Mankind, with all the Nations of the World, in a long ſucceſſion of Ages for five thouſand Years, and upwards, already, and will bear with them till the time comes for the World's diſſolution. He hath ſuffered the monſtrous Acts of Men, and endur'd the contradictions of a ſinful World againſt Himſelf, from the firſt Sin of Adam to the laſt committed this Minute. The Line of his Patience hath run along with the duration of the World to this Day; and there is not any one of Adam's Poſterity but hath been expenſive to Him, and partaked of the Riches of it.

4. All theſe He bears when He hath a Senſe of them. He ſees every Day the Roll and Catalogue of Sin increaſing, He hath a diſtinct view of every one from the Sin of Adam to the laſt, fill'd up in his Omniſcience, and yet gives no order for the arreſt of the World. He knows Men fitted for Deſtruction, all the inſtants He exerciſeth long-ſuffering towards them, which makes the Apoſtle call it not ſimply long-ſuffering without the addition of πολλῆ, much long-ſuffering, Rom. 9. 23. There is not a grain in the whole Maſs of Sin, that He hath not a diſtinct knowledge of, and of the quality of it. He perfectly underſtands the Greatneſs of his own Majeſty that is vilified, and the nature of the offence that doth diſparage Him. He is ſollicited by his Juſtice, directed by his Omniſcience, and armed with Judgments to vindicate Himſelf, but his Arm is reſtrained by Patience. To conclude, no indignity is hid from Him, no Iniquity is beloved by Him, the hatred of their ſinfulneſs is infinite, and the knowledge of their malice is exact. The ſubſiſting of the World under ſuch weighty Provocations, ſo numerous, ſo long time, and with his full Senſe of every one of them, is an evidence of ſuch a forbearance and long-ſuffering, that the addition of Riches which the Apoſtle puts to it, Rom. 2. 4. labours with an inſufficiency clearly to diſplay it.

III. Why God doth exerciſe ſo much Patience.

1. To ſhew Himſelf appeaſeable. God did not declare by his Patience to former Ages, or any Age, that he was appeaſed with them, or that they were in his Favour, but that he was appeaſable, that he was not an implacable Enemy, but that they might find him favourable to them, if they did ſeek after him, the continuance of the World by Patience, and the beſtowing many Mercies by Goodneſs, were not a natural Revelation of the manner how He would be appeaſed: that was made known only by the Prophets, and after the coming of Chriſt by the Apoſtles; and had indeed been Intelligible in ſome ſort to the whole World, had there been a Faithfulneſs in Adam's Poſterity, to tranſmit the Tradition of the Firſt Promiſe to ſucceeding Generations. Had not the knowledge of that died by their careleſneſs and neglect, it had been eaſie to tell the reaſon of God's Patience to be in order to the exhibition of the Seed of the Woman, to bruiſe the Serpents Head.

They could not but naturally know themſelves Sinners, and worthy of Death; they might by eaſie reflections upon themſelves, collect that they were not in that comely and harmonious Poſture now, as they were when God firſt wrought them with his own Finger, and placed them as his Lieutenants in the World; they knew they did grievouſly offend Him, this they were taught by the ſprinklings of his Judgments among them ſometimes. And ſince He did not utterly root up Mankind, his ſparing Patience was a Prologue of ſome further Favours, or pardoning Grace to be diſplay'd to the World by ſome Methods of God yet unknown to them. Though the Earth was ſomething impair'd by the Curſe after the Fall, yet the main Pillars of it ſtood; the ſtate of the natural Motions of the Creature was not chang'd, the Heavens remain'd in the ſame poſture, wherein they were Created, the Sun and Moon, and other Heavenly Bodies, continued their uſefulneſs and refreſhing Influences to Man. The Heavens did ſtill declare the Glory of God, day unto day did utter ſpeech, their Line is gone throughout all the Earth, and their words to the end of the World, Pſal. 19. 1, 2, 3, 4. Which declar'd God to be willing to do good to his Creatures, and were as ſo many Legible Letters or Rudiments, whereby they might read his Patience, and that a further deſign of Favour to the World lay hid in that Patience. Paul applies this to the Preaching of the Goſpel, Rom. 10. 18. Have they not heard the word of God? yes verily, their ſound went into all the Earth, and their words unto the end of the World. Redeeming Grace could not be ſpell'd out by them in a clear notion, but yet they did declare that which is the Foundation of Goſpel-Mercy. Were not God Patient, there were no room for a Goſpel-Mercy, ſo that the Heavens declare the Goſpel, not formally, but fundamentally, in declaring the long-ſuffering of God, without which no Goſpel had been fram'd, or could have been expected. They could not but read in thoſe things favourable Inclinations towards them. And though they could not be ignorant, that they deſerved a mark of Juſtice, yet ſeeing themſelves ſupported by God, and beholding the regular Motions of the Heavens from Day to Day, and the Revolutions of the Seaſons of the Year, the natural Concluſion they might draw from thence was, That God was placable; ſince He behav'd Himſelf more as a tender Friend, that had no Mind to be at War with them, than an enraged Enemy. The good things which He gave them, and the Patience whereby He ſpar'd them, were no Arguments of an implacable Diſpoſition; and therefore of a Diſpoſition willing to be appeaſed. This is clearly the deſign of the Apoſtles arguing with the Lyſtrians, when they would have offered Sacrifices to Paul, Acts 14. 17. When God ſuffered all Nations to walk in their own ways, He did dot leave Himſelf without witneſs, giving Rain from Heaven, and fruitful Seaſons. What were thoſe witneſſes of? Not only the Being of a God, which they owned, as appears by their readineſs to Sacrifice to thoſe that were not Gods, only ſuppoſed to be ſo in their falſe Imaginations; but witneſſes to the tenderneſs of God, that He had no mind to be ſevere with his his Creatures; but would allure them by ways of Goodneſs. * Had not God's Patience tended to this end, to bring the World under another Diſpenſation, the Apoſtles arguing from it had not been ſutable to his deſign, which ſeems to be a hindring the Sacrifices they intended for them, and a drawing them to embrace the Goſpel, and therefore preparing the way to it, by ſpeaking of the Patience and Goodneſs of God to them, as an unqueſtionable teſtimony of the Reconcilableneſs of God to them, by ſome Sacrifice which was repreſented under the common Notion of Sacrifices. Theſe things were not Witneſſes of Chriſt, or Syllables whereby they could ſpell out the Redeeming Perſon; but Witneſſes that God was placable in his own Nature. When Man abuſed thoſe noble Faculties God had given him, and diverted them from the Uſe and Service God intended them for, God might have ſtript Man of them, the firſt time that he miſ-imployed them; and it would have ſeemed moſt agreeable to his Wiſdom and Juſtice, not to ſuffer Himſelf to be abuſed, and the World to go contrary to its natural end. But ſince He did not level the World with its firſt nothing, but healed the World ſo favourably, it was evident, that his Patience pointed the World to a further deſign of Mercy and Goodneſs in Him. To imagine that God had no other deſign in his long-ſuffering but that of Vengeance, had been a Notion unſuitable to the Goodneſs and Wiſdom of God. He would never have pretended Himſelf to be a Friend, if He had harboured nothing but Enmity in his heart againſt them.

*Amyrald. Diſſert. P. 191, 192.

It had been far from his Goodneſs, to give them a cauſe to ſuſpect ſuch a deſign in Him, as his Patience certainly did, had He not intended it. Had He preſerv'd Men only for Puniſhment, 'tis more like, He would have treated Men, as Princes do thoſe they reſerve for the Ax or Halter, give them only things neceſſary, to uphold their Lives till the Day of Execution, and not have beſtowed upon them ſo many good things, to make their Lives delightful to them; nor have furniſh'd them with ſo many excellent Means to pleaſe their Senſes, and recreate their Minds; it had been a mocking of them to treat them at that rate, if nothing but puniſhment had been intended towards them. If the end of it to lead Men to Repentance, were eaſily intelligible by them, as the Apoſtle intimates (Rom. 2. 4. which is to be Link'd with the former Chapter, a Diſcourſe of the Gentiles. Not knowing, ſaith he, That the riches of his forbearance and goodneſs, leads thee to Repentance.) It alſo gives them ſome ground to hope for Pardon. For what other argument can more induce to Repentance, than an expectation of Mercy upon a relenting and acknowledging the crime? Without a deſign of Pardoning Grace, his Patience would have been in great meaſure exercis'd in vain: For by meer Patience God is not reconcil'd to a Sinner, no more than a Prince to a Rebel by bearing with him. Nor can a Sinner conclude Himſelf in the favour of God, no more than a Rebel can conclude himſelf in the favour of his Prince; only this he may conclude, that there is ſome hopes He may have the grant of a Pardon, ſince he hath time to Sue it out. And ſo much did the Patience of God naturally ſignifie, that He was of a reconcilable Temper, and was willing Men ſhould Sue out their Pardon upon Repentance; otherwiſe He might have magnified his Juſtice, and condemned Men by the Law of Works.

2. He therefore exerciſed ſo much Patience to wait for Mens Repentance. All the notices and warnings that God gives Men of either publick or perſonal Calamities, is a continual Invitation to Repentance. This was the common Interpretation the Heathens made of extraordinary Preſages and Prodigies, which ſhew'd as well the delays as the approaches of Judgments. What other Notion but this, that thoſe warnings of Judgments witneſs a ſlowneſs to anger, and a willingneſs to turn his Arrows another way, ſhould move them to multiply Sacrifices, go weeping to their Temples, ſound out Prayers to their Gods, and ſhew all thoſe other Teſtimonies of a Repentance, which their blind Underſtandings hit upon. If a * Prince ſhould ſometimes in a light and gentle manner puniſh a Criminal, and then relax it, and ſhew him much kindneſs, and afterwards inflict upon him another kind of Puniſhment as light as the former, and leſs than was due to his Crime, what could the Malefactor ſuſpect by ſuch a way of proceeding, but that the Prince by thoſe gently repeated Chaſtiſements, had a mind to move him to a regret for his Crime? And what other thoughts could Men naturally have of God's conduct, that He ſhould warn them of great Judgments, ſend light Afflictions, which are Teſtimonies rather of a Patience, than of a ſevere wrath, but that it was intended to move them to a relenting, and a breaking off their Sins by working Righteouſneſs? Though Divine Patience doth not in the event, induce Men to Repentance, yet the natural tendency of ſuch a treatment, is to mollifie Mens Hearts, to overcome their obſtinacy, and no Man hath any reaſon to judge otherwiſe of ſuch a proceeding. The long-ſuffering of God is Salvation, ſaith Peter, 2 Pet. 3. 15. i. e. hath a tendency to Salvation, in its being a ſollicitation of Men to the means of it: For the Apoſtle cites Paul for the confirmation of it, Even as our beloved Brother Paul hath written unto you, which muſt refer to Rom. 2. 4. It leads to Repentance, ἄγει, it conducts, which is more than barely to invite; it doth as it were take us by the hand, and point us to the way wherein we ſhould go, and for this end it was exerciſed not only towards the Jews, but towards the Gentiles, not only towards thoſe that are within the Pale of the Church, and under the Dews of the Goſpel, but to thoſe that are in Darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of Death: For this Diſcourſe of the Apoſtle was but an inference from what he had treated of in the firſt Chapter, concerning the Idolatry and Ingratitude of the Gentiles; ſince the Gentiles were to be puniſhed for the abuſe of it as well as the Jews, as he intimates, ver. 9. 'tis plain that his Patience, which is exerciſed towards the Idolatrous Gentiles, was to allure them to Repentance as well as others; and it was a ſufficient Motive in it ſelf to perſuade them to a change of their vile and groſs acts, to ſuch as were morally good. And there was enough in God's dealing with them, and in that Light they had to engage them to a better courſe, than what they uſually walked in. And though Men do abuſe God's long-ſuffering, to incourage their Impenitence, and perſiſting in their Crimes, yet that they cannot reaſonably imagine that to be the end of God, is evident; their own Gripes of Conſcience would acquaint them, that it is otherwiſe. They know that Conſcience is a Principle that God hath given them as well as Underſtanding, and Will and other Faculties. That God doth not approve of that, which the voice of their own Conſciences, and of the Conſciences of all Men, under natural Light, are utterly againſt. And if there were really in this forbearance of God an approbation of Mens Crimes, Conſcience could not frequently and univerſally in all Men check them for them. What Authority could Conſcience have to do it? But this this it doth in all Men. As the Apoſtle, Rom. 1. 22. They know the judgment of God, that thoſe that do ſuch things, which he had mentioned before, are worthy of death. In this thing the Conſciences of all Men cannot cry; they could not therefore conclude from hence God's approbation of their Iniquities, but his deſire that their Hearts ſhould be touched with a Repentance for them.

The Sin of Ephraim is hid, Hoſ. 13. 12, 13. i. e. God doth not preſently take notice of it, to order puniſhment; He lays it in a ſecret place from the Eye of his Juſtice, that Ephraim might not be his unwiſe Son, and ſtay long in the place of breaking forth of Children, i. e. That He ſhould ſpeedily reclaim himſelf, and not continue in the way of Deſtruction. God hath no need to abuſe any, He doth not lie to the Sons of Men, if He would have Men periſh, He could eaſily deſtroy them, and have done it long ago. He did not leave the woman Jezabel in being, nor lengthened out her time, but as a ſpace to Repent. Revelations 2. 21. That ſhe might reflect upon her ways, and devote her ſelf ſeriouſly to his ſervice, and her own happineſs. His Patience ſtands between the offending Creature and Eternal Miſery a long time, that Men might not fooliſhly throw away their Souls, and be damned for their Impenitency; by this He ſhews Himſelf ready to receive Men to Mercy upon their return. To what purpoſe doth He invite Men to Repentance, if He intended to deceive them, and damn them after they Repent?

3. He doth exerciſe Patience for the Propagation of Mankind. If God puniſhed every ſin preſently, there would not only be a Period put to Churches, but to the World; without Patence Adam had ſunk into Eternal Anguiſh the firſt Moment of his Provocation; and the whole World of Mankind in his Loins, had periſhed with him, and never ſeen the Light. If this Perfection had not interpoſed after the firſt Sin, God had loſt his end in the Creation of the World, which He Created not in vain, but formed it to be inhabited, Iſai. 45. 18. It had been inconſiſtent with the Wiſdom of God, to make a World to be inhabited, and deſtroy it upon Sin, when it had but two Principal Inhabitants in it; the reaſon of his making this Earth had been inſignificant; He had not had any upon Earth to Glorifie Him, without erecting another World, which might have proved as ſinful, and as quickly wicked as this; God ſhould have always been pulling down, and rearing up, creating and annihilating, one World would have come after another, as Wave after Wave in the Sea. His Patience ſtept in to ſupport the Honour of God, and the continuance of Men, without which one had been in part impaired, and the other totally loſt.

4. He doth exerciſe Patience for the Continuance of the Church. If he be not patient toward Sinners, what ſtock would there be for Believers to ſpring up from? He bears with the provoking Carriage of Men, Evil Men; becauſe out of their Loins he intends to extract others, which he will form for the Glory of his Grace. He hath ſome unborn, that belong to the Election of Grace, which are to be the Seed of the worſt of Men; Jeroboam the chief incendiary of the Iſraelites to Idolatry, had an Abijah, in whom was found ſome good thing towards the Lord God of Iſrael, 1 Kings 14. 13. Had Ahaz been ſnapt in the firſt Act of his Wickedneſs, the Iſraelites had wanted ſo good a Prince, and ſo good a Man as Hezekiah, a branch of that wicked Predeceſſor. What Gardiner cuts off the Thorns from the Roſe-buſh, till he hath gathered the Roſes? And Men do not uſe to burn all the Crab-tree, but preſerve a Stock, to engraft ſome ſweet Fruit upon. There could not have been a Saint in the Earth, nor conſequently in Heaven, had it not been for this Perfection. He did not deſtroy the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, that he might keep up a Church among them, and not extinguiſh the whole Seed that were Heirs of the Promiſes and Covenant made with Abraham. Had God puniſhed Men for their Sins as ſoon as they had been committed, none would have lived to have been better, none could have continued in the World to Honour him by their Virtues? Manaſſeh had never been a Convert, and many bruti ſh Men had never been changed from Beaſts to Angels, to Praiſe and acknowledge their Creator. Had Peter received his due recompence upon the denial of his Maſter, he had never been a Martyr for him; nor had Paul been a Preacher of the Goſpel, nor any elſe: And ſo the Goſpel had not ſhined in any Part of the World. No Seed would have been brought into Chriſt, Chriſt is beholding immediately to this Attribute, for all the Seed he hath in the World; 'tis for his Name ſake that he doth defer his Anger, and for his Praiſe, that he doth refrain from cutting us off, Iſa. 48. 9. And in the next Chapter follows a Propheſie of Chriſt. To overthrow Mankind for Sin, were to prevent the ſpreading a Church in the World. A Woman that is guilty of a Capital Crime, and lies under a condemning Sentence, is reprieved from Execution, for her being with Child. 'Tis for the Child's ſake the Woman is reſpited, not for her own; 'tis for the Elects ſake in the Loins of Tranſgreſſors, that they are a long Time ſpared, and not for their own. Iſa. 65. 8, 9. As the new Wine is found in the Cluſter, and one ſaith, deſtroy it not for a Bleſſing is in it; ſo will I do for my Servants ſake, that I may not deſtroy them all: As a Husbandman ſpares a Vine for ſome good Cluſters in it. He had ſpoke of Vengeance before, yet he would reſerve ſome, from whom he would bring forth thoſe, that ſhould be Inheritors of his Mountains: That he might make up his Church of Judea, Jeruſalem being a Mountainous Place, and the Type of the Church in all Ages. What is the Reaſon he doth not level his Thunder at the Heads of thoſe, for whoſe Deſtruction he receives ſo many Petitions from the Souls under the Altar, Rev. 6. 9, 10. Becauſe God had others to write a Teſtimony for him in their own Blood, and perhaps out of the Loins of thoſe for whom Vengeance was earneſtly ſupplicated; * and God as the Maſter of a Veſſel, lies Patiently at Anchor, till the laſt Paſſenger he expects, be taken in.

* Smith on Creed, p. 404.

5. For the ſake of his Church he is patient to wicked Men. The Tares are Patiently endured till the Harveſt, for fear in the plucking up the one, there might be ſome Prejudice done to the other. Upon this account he ſpares ſome, who are worſe than others, whom he cruſheth by ſignal Judgments; the Jews had committed Sins worſe than Sodom, for the Confirmation of which we have God's Oath, Ezek. 16. 48. and more by half than Samaria, or the Ten Tribes had done, ver. 51. Yet God ſpared the Jews, though he deſtroyed the Sodomites. What was the Reaſon, but a large Remnant of Righteous Perſons, more Cluſters of good Grapes were found among them, than grew in Sodom, Iſa. 1. 9. A few more Righteous in Sodom had dampt the Fire and Brimſtone deſign'd for that Place; and a Remnant of ſuch in Judea was a Bar to that fierceneſs of Anger, which otherwiſe would have quickly conſumed them. Had there been but Ten Righteous in Sodom, Divine Patience had ſtill bound the Arms of Juſtice, that it ſhould not have prepared its Brimſtone, notwithſtanding the clamour mour of the Sins of the Multitude. Judea was ripe for the Sickle, but God would put a Lock upon the Torrent of his Judgments, that they ſhould not flow down upon that wicked Place, to make them a Deſolation and a Curſe, as long as tender-hearted Joſiah lived, who had humbled himſelf at the Threatning, and wept before the Lord; 1 Kings 22. 19, 20. Sometimes he bears with wicked Men, that they might exerciſe the Patience of the Saints, Rev. 14. 12. The whole Time of the forbearance of Antichriſt in all his Intruſions into the Temple of God, Invaſions of the Rights of God, Uſurpations of the Office of Chriſt, and beſmearing himſelf with the Blood of the Saints, was to give them an opportunity of Patience. God is Patient towards the Wicked, that by their means he might try the Righteous. He burns not the wiſp, till he hath ſcoured his Veſſels; nor lays by the Hammer till he hath formed ſome of his Matter into an excellent Faſhion. He uſeth the worſt Men as Rods to correct his People, before he ſweeps the Twigs out of his Houſe. God ſometimes uſes the Thorns of the World, as a hedge to ſecure his Church, ſometimes as Inſtruments to try, and exerciſe it. Howſoever he uſeth them, whither for Security or Trial, he is Patient to them for his Churches Advantage.

6. When Men are not brought to Repentance by his Patience, he doth longer Exerciſe it to manifeſt the Equity of his Future Juſtice upon them. As Wiſdom is juſtified by her obedient Children, ſo is Juſtice juſtified by the Rebels againſt Patience, the Contempt of the latter is the Juſtification of the former. The Apoſtles were unto God a ſweet ſavour of Chriſt in them that periſh, as well as in them that were ſaved, by the Acceptation of their Meſſage, 2 Cor. 2. 15. Both are fragant to God, his Mercy is Glorified by the ones Acceptance of it, and his Juſtice freed from any charge againſt it by the others Refuſal. The Cauſe of Mens Ruine cannot be laid upon God, who provided means for their Salvation, and ſollicited their complyance with him. What Reaſon can they have to charge the Judge with any wrong to them, who reject the tenders he makes, and who hath forborn them with ſo much Patience, when he might have cenſured them by his Righteous Juſtice, upon the firſt Crime they committed, or the firſt refuſal of his gracious offers? Quanto Dei magis judicium tardum eſt tanto magis juſtum. * After the deſpiſing of Patience, there can be no Suſpition of an irregularity in the Acts of Juſtice. Man hath no Reaſon to fall foul in his Charge upon God, if he were puniſhed for his own Sin, conſidering the Dignity of the injured Perſon, and the meanneſs of himſelf the Offender; but his Wrath is more juſtified, when it is poured out upon thoſe whom he hath endured with much long-ſuffering. There is no Plea againſt the ſhooting of his Arrows into thoſe, for whom this Voice hath been loud, and his Arms open for their return. As Patience while it is exerciſed, is the ſilence of his Juſtice, ſo when it is abuſed, it ſilenceth Mens complaints againſt his Juſtice. The Riches of his forbearance made way for the manifeſting the Treaſures of his Wrath. If God did but a little bear with the Inſolencies of Men, and cut them off after two or three Sins, he would not have opportunity to ſhew either the Power of his Patience, or that of his Wrath; but when he hath a right to puniſh for one Sin, and yet bears with them for many, and they will not be reclaimed, the Sinner is more inexcuſable, Divine Juſtice leſs chargeable, and his Wrath more powerful, Rom. 9. 22. What if God willing to ſhew his Wrath, and to make his Power known, endured with much long-ſuffering, the Veſſels of Wrath fitted for Deſtruction? The proper and immediate End of his long-ſuffering, is to lead Men to Repentance, but after they have by their Obſtinacy, fitted themſelves for Deſtruction, he bears longer with them, to magnifie his Wrath more upon them, and if it is not the finis operantis, 'tis at leaſt the finis operis, where Patience is abuſed. Men are apt to complain of God, that he deals hardly with them; the Iſraelites ſeem to charge God with too much ſeverity, to caſt them off, when ſo many Promiſes were made to the Fathers for their Perpetuity and Preſervation, which is intimated, Hoſ. 2. 2. Plead with your Mother, plead; by the double Repetition of the Word Plead; do not accuſe me of being falſe, or too rigorous, but accuſe your Mother, your Church, your Magiſtracy, your Miniſtry, for their ſpiritual Fornications which have provoked me; for their נַאֲפוּפֶיהָ intimating the greatneſs of their Sins by the Reduplication of the Word; leſt I ſtrip her naked. I have Born with her under many Provocations, and I have not yet taken away all her Ornaments, or ſaid to her according to the Rule of Divorce, res tuas tibi habeto. God anſwers their Impudent Charge, She is not my Wife, nor am I her Husband: He doth not ſay firſt, I am not her Husband, but ſhe is not my Wife; She firſt withdrew from her Duty, by breaking the Marriage-Covenant, and then I ceaſed to be her Husband. No Man ſhall be condemned, but he ſhall be convinced of the due Deſert of his Sin, and the Juſtice of God's proceeding. God will lay open Mens guilt, and repeat the meaſures of his Patience, to juſtifie the Severity of his Wrath, Hoſ. 7. 10. Sins will teſtifie to their Face. What is in its own Nature a Preparation for Glory, Men by their obſtinacy make a Preparation for a more indiſputable Puniſhment. We ſee many evidences of God's forbearance here, in ſparing Men under thoſe Blaſphemies which are audible, and thoſe prophane Carriages which are viſible, which would ſufficiently juſtifie an Act of ſeverity; yet when Mens ſecret Sins both in Heart and Action, and the vaſt Multitude of them, far ſurmounting what can arrive to our Knowledge here, ſhall be diſcovered, how great a Luſtre will it add to God's bearing with them, and make his Juſtice Triumph without any reaſonable demur from the Sinner himſelf! He is long-ſuffering here, that his Juſtice may be more Publick hereafter.

IV. The USE.

I. For Inſtruction.

1. How is this Patience of God abuſed! The Gentiles abuſed thoſe Teſtimonies of it, which were written in Showers, and fruitful Seaſons. No Nation was ever ſtript of it, under the moſt provoking Idolatries till after multiplyed ſpurns at it. Not a Perſon among us but hath been guilty of the abuſe of it. How have we contemned that which demands a Reverence from us? How have we requited God's waitings with Rebellions, while he hath continued urging and expecting our return? Saul relented at David's forbearing to revenge himſelf, when he had his proſecuting and induſtrious Enemy in his Power, 1 Sam. 24. 17. Thou art more Righteous than I, thou haſt rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee Evil. And ſhall we not relent at God's wonderful long-ſuffering, and ſilencing his Anger ſo much? He could puff away our Lives, but he will not, and yet we endeavour to ſtrip him of his Being, though we cannot.

I. Let us conſider the ways, how ſlowneſs to Anger is abuſed.

1. 'Tis abused by mis-interpretations of it, when Men slander his Patience, to be only a carelessness, and neglect of his Providence; as Averroes argued from his slowness to Anger, a total neglect of the Government of the lower World. Or when Men from his long-suffering charge him with Impurity, as if his Patience were a Consent to their Crimes; and because he suffered them, without Calling them to Account, he were one of their Partisans, and as wicked as themselves, Psalm 50. 21. Because I kept silence, thou thoughtest I was altogether such a one as thy self. His silence makes them conclude him to be an Abettor of, and a Consort in their Sins; And think him more pleased with their Iniquity, than their Obedience. Or when they will infer from his forbearance a want of his Omniscience: Because he suffers their Sins, they imagine he forgets them, Psalm 10. 11. He hath said in his Heart God hath forgotten. Thinking his Patience proceeds not from the sweetness of his Nature, but a weakness of his Mind. How base is it instead of admiring him, to disparage him for it; and because he stands in so advantageous a Posture towards us, not to own the choicest Prerogatives of his Deity? This is to make a Perfection so useful to us, to shadow, and extinguish those others, which are the prime flowers of his Crown.

2. His Patience is abused, by continuing in a course of Sin under the Influences of it. How much is it the practical Language of Men, come let us commit this, or that Iniquity, since Divine Patience hath suffered worse than this at our Hands? Nothing is remitted to their sensual Pleasures and Eagerness in them. How often did the Israelites repeat their murmurings against him, as if they would put his Patience to the utmost Proof, and see how far the Line of it could extend? They were no sooner satisfied in one thing, but they quarrelled with him about another, as if he had no other Attribute to put in motion against them. They tempted him, as often as he relieved them, as though the Declaration of his Name to Moses, 34th of Exod. To be a God Gracious and Long-suffering, had been intended for no other Purpose but a Protection of them in their Rebellions. Such a sort of Men the Prophet speaks of, that were setled in their Lees, or Dregs, Zeph. 1. 12. They were congeal'd and frozen in their successful wickedness; such an abuse of Divine Patience is the very Dregs of Sin; God chargeth it highly upon the Jews, Isa. 57. 11. I have held my Peace, even of old, and thou feareſt me not, my Silence made thee Confident, yea Impudent in thy Sin.

3. His Patience is abused, by repeating Sin, after God hath, by an Act of his Patience, taken off some Affliction from Men. As Metals melted in the Fire remain fluid under the Operation of the Flames, yet when removed from the Fire, they quickly return to their former hardness, and sometimes grow harder than they were before. So Men who in their Afflictions seem to be melted, like Ahab, confess their Sins, lye prostrate before God, and seek him early, yet if they be brought from under the Power of their Afflictions, they return to their old Nature, and are as stiff against God, and resist the blows of the Spirit, as much as they did before. They think they have a new stock of Patience, to Sin upon. Pharaoh was somewhat thaw'd under Judgments, and frozen again under forbearance, Exod. 9. 27, 34. Many will howl when God strikes them, and laugh at him when he forbears them. Thus that Patience which should melt us, doth often harden us, which is not an effect natural to his Patience, but natural to our abusing Corruption.

4. His Patience is abus'd, by taking Encouragement from it, to mount to greater Degrees of Sin. Because God is slow to Anger, Men are more fierce in Sin, and not only continue in their old Rebellions, but heap new upon them. If he spare them for three Transgressions they will commit four, as is intimated in the first and second of Amos; Mens Hearts are fully set in them to do Evil, because Sentence against an Evil Work is not speedily executed, Eccles. 8. 11. Their Hearts are more desperately bent; before they had some waverings, and pull-backs, but after a fair Sun-shine of Divine Patience, they entertain more unbridled Resolutions, and pass forward with more Liberty and Licentiousness. They make his long-suffering subservient to turn out all those little relentings, and regrets they had before, and banish all Thoughts of barring out a Temptation. No Encouragement is given to Men by God's Patience, but they force it by their Presumption. They invert Gods Order, and bind themselves stronger to Iniquity by that which should bind them faster to their Duty. A happy escape at Sea makes Men go more confidently into the deeps afterward. Thus we deal with God, as Debtors do with good natur'd Creditors: Because they do not Dunn them for what they owe, they take Encouragement to run more upon the score, till their summ amounts above their ability of Payment.

But let it be considered,

1. That this abuse of Patience is a high Sin. As every Act of forbearance obligeth us to Duty, so every Act of it abused, encreaseth our Guilt. The more frequent its Sollicitations of us have been, the deeper Aggravations our Sin receives by it. Every Sin, after an Act of Divine Patience, contracts a blacker guilt. The sparing us after the last Sin we committed, was a superadded Act of long-suffering, and a laying out more of his Riches upon us: And therefore every new Act committed, is a despite against greater Riches expended, and greater Cost upon us, and against his preserving us from the Hand of Justice for the last Transgression. 'Tis dis-ingenious not to have a due Resentment of so much Goodness, and base to injure him the more, because he doth not Right himself. Shall he receive the more wrongs from us, by how much the sweeter he is to us? No Mans Conscience but will tell him, 'tis vile to prefer the Satisfaction of a sordid Lust, before the Councel of a God of so gracious a Disposition. The sweeter the Nature, the fouler is the Injury that is done unto it.

2. 'Tis dangerous to abuse his Patience. Contempt of kindness is most irksom to an ingenious Spirit, and he is worthy to have the Arrows of Gods Indignation lodg'd in his Heart, who despiseth the Riches of his long-suffering. For,

1. The Time of Patience will have an End. Tho' his Spirit strives with Man, yet it shall not always strive, Gen. 6. 3. Though there be a Time wherein Jerusalem might know the Things that concern her Peace, yet there is another Period wherein they should be hid from her Eyes, Luke 19. 43. Oh that thou hadst known in this thy Day? Nations have their Day, and Persons have their Day, and the Day of most Persons is shorter than the Day of Nations. Jerusalem had her Day of Forty Years, but how many particular Persons were taken off, before the last or middle Hours of that Day were arriv'd? Forty Years was God griev'd with the Generation of the Israelites, Heb. 3. 11. One Carckass dropt after another in that limited Time, and at the end not a Man but fell under the Judicial Stroke, except Caleb leb and Joshua. One hundred and twenty Years was the Term set to the Mass of the Old World, but not to every Man in the old World; some fell while the Ark was preparing, as well as the whole Stock when the Ark was compleated. Though he be patient with most, yet he is not in the same Degree with all; every Sinner hath his Time of sinning, beyond which he shall proceed no further, be his Lusts never so impetuous, and his Affections never so imperious. The Time of his Patience is in Scripture set forth sometimes by Years; three Years he came to find Fruit on the Fig-tree; sometimes by Days, some Men Sins are sooner ripe, and fall. There is a measure of Sin, Jer. 51. 13. Which is set forth by the Ephah, Zach. 5. 8. Which when it is fill'd, is seal'd up, and a weight of Lead cast upon the Mouth of it. When Judgments are preparing, once and twice the Lord is prevail'd with by the Intercession of the Prophet. The prepar'd Grashoppers are not sent to devour, and the kindled Fire is not blown up to consume, Amos 7. from ver. 1. to ver. 8. But at last God takes the plumb-line, to sute and measure Punishment to their Sin, and would not pass by them any more, and when their Sin was ripe, represented by a Basket of Summer-fruit, God would with-hold his Hand no longer, but brought such a Day upon them, wherein the Songs of the Temple should be howlings, and dead Bodies be in every Place, Amos 8. 2, 3. He lays by any further Thoughts of Patience to speed their Ruine. God had born long with the Israelites, and long it was before he gave them up. He would first break the bow in Jezreel, Hos. 1. 5. Take away the Strength of the Nation by the Death of Zachariah, the last of Jehu's Race, which introduc'd Civil Dissentions and Ambitious Murders for the Throne, whereby in weakning one Part, they weakned the whole; or as some think, alluding to Tiglah Pilezar, who carried Captive two Tribes and a half. If this would not reclaim them, then follows Loruhamah, I will not have Mercy, I will sweep them out of the Land, verse 6. If they did not Repent they should be Loammi, verse 9. You are not my People, and I will not be your God. They should be discovenanted, and stript of all federal Relation. Here Patience for ever withdrew from them, and wrathful Anger took its Place. And for particular Persons, the Time of Life, whither shorter or longer, is the only Time of long-suffering. It hath no other Stage, than the present State of Things to Act upon. There is none else to be expected after, but giving account of what hath been done in the Body, not of any thing done after the Soul is fled from the Body. The Time of Patience ends with the first Moment of the Souls Departure from the Body. This Time only is the Day of Salvation, i. e. The Day wherein God offers it, and the Day wherein God waits for our Acceptance of it. 'Tis at his Pleasure to shorten or lengthen our Day, not at ours. 'Tis not our long suffering, but his, he hath the command of it.

2. God hath Wrath to punish, as well as Patience to bear. He hath a fury to Revenge the outrages done to his meekness, when his Messages of Peace sent to reclaim Men are slighted, his Sword shall be whetted, and his Instruments of War prepar'd, Hos. 5. 8. Blow ye the Cornet in Gibeah, and the Trumpet in Ramah. As he deals gently like a Father, so he can punish capitally as a Judge. Though he holds his Peace for a long Time, yet at last he will go forth like a mighty Man, and stir up jealousie as a Man of War, to cut in pieces his Enemies. 'Tis not said, he hath no Anger, but that he is slow to Anger, but sharp in it. He hath a Sword to cut, and a Bow to shoot, and Arrows to pierce, Psalm 12. 13. Though he be long a drawing the one out of its Scabbard, and long a fitting the other to his Bow, yet when they are ready, he strikes home and hits the Mark. Though he hath a Time of Patience, yet he hath also a Day of Rebuke, Hos. 5. 9. Though Patience over-rules Justice by suspending it, yet Justice will at last overrule Patience by an utter silencing it. God is Judge of the whole Earth to right Men, yet he is no less Judge of the Injuries he receives to right himself. Though God a while was pressed with the murmurings of the Israelites, after their comeing out of Egypt, and seemed desirous to give them all Satisfaction upon their unworthy Complaints, yet when they came to open Hostility, in setting a Golden Calf in his Throne, he Commissions the Levites, to kill every Man his Brother and Companion in the Camp, Exod. 32. 27. And how desirous soever he was to content them before, they never murmured afterwards, but they severely smarted for it. When once he hath begun to use his Sword, he sticks it up naked, that it might be ready for use upon every occasion. Though he hath Feet of Lead, yet he hath Hands of Iron. It was long that he supported the pievishness of the Jews, but at last he captiv'd them by the Arms of the Babylonians, and laid them wast by the Power of the Romans. He planted by the Apostles Churches in the East, and when his Goodness and Long-suffering, prevail'd not with them, he tore them up by the roots. What Christians are to be found in those once famous Parts of Asia, but what are overgrown with much Error and Ignorance?

3. The more his Patience is abus'd, the sharper will be the Wrath he inflicts. As his Wrath restrained, makes his Patience long; so his Compassions restrained, will make his Wrath severe. As he doth transcend all Creatures in the measures of the one, so he transcends all Creatures in the sharpness of the other. Christ is describ'd with Feet of Brass, as if they burn'd in a Furnace, Rev. 1. 15. slow to move, but heavy to crush, and hot to burn. His Wrath loseth nothing by delay; it grows the fresher by sleeping, and strikes with greater Strength when it awakes. All the Time Men are abusing his Patience, God is whetting his Sword, and the longer it is whetting, the sharper will be the edge. The longer he is fetching his blow, the sharper it will be. The heavier the Canons are, the more difficultly are they drawn to the besieged Town, but when arriv'd, they recompence the slowness of their March by the fierceness of their Battery. Because I have purged thee, i. e. used means for thy Reformation, and waited for it, and thou wast not purg'd, thou shalt not be purg'd from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my Fury to rest upon thee. I will not go back, neither will I spare, according to thy ways, and according to thy doings shall they judge thee, Ezek. 24. 13, 14. God will spare as little then, as he spar'd much before. His Wrath shall be as raging upon them, as the Sea of their wickedness was within them. When there is a bank to forbid the Irruption of the Streams, the Waters swell, but when the Bank is broke, or the Lock taken away, they rush with the greater Violence, and ravage more than they would have done, had they not met with a stop. The longer a Stone is a falling, the more it bruiseth, and grinds to Powder. There is a greater Treasure of Wrath laid up by the abuses of Patience. Every Sin must have a just recompence of Reward; and therefore every Sin, in regard of its Aggravations must be more punished, than a Sin in the singleness and simplicity of its own Nature. As Treaſures of Mercy are kept by God for us, he keeps Mercy for thouſands, ſo are Treaſures of Wrath kept by him, to be expended; and a Time of Expence there muſt be, Patience will account to Juſtice all the good Offices it hath done the Sinner, and demand to be righted by Juſtice. Juſtice will take the account from the Hands of Patience, and exact a recompence for every diſingenuous Injury offered to it. When Juſtice comes to Arreſt Men for their Debts, Patience, Mercy and Goodneſs will ſtep in as Creditors, and clap their Actions upon them, which will make their Condition ſo much more deplorable.

4. When he puts an end to his abus'd Patience, his Wrath will make quick, and ſure Work. He that is ſlow to Anger, will be ſwift in the Execution of it. The departure of God from Jeruſalem, is deſcribed with Wings and Wheels, Ezek. 11. 23. One ſtroke of his Hand is irreſiſtible, he that hath ſpent ſo much Time in waiting, needs but one Minute to Ruine; though it be long ere he draws his Sword out of his Scabbard, yet when once he doth it, he diſpatcheth Men at a blow. Ephraim, or the Ten Tribes, had a long Time of Patience and Proſperity, but now ſhall a Month devour him with his Portion, Hoſea 5. 7. One fatal Month puts a Period to the many Years Peace and Security of a ſinful Nation. His Arrows wound ſuddenly, Pſalm 64. 7. And while Men are about to fill their Bellies, he caſts the Fruits of his Wrath upon them, Job 20. 23. Like Thunder out of a Cloud, or a Bullet out of a Cannon, that ſtrikes Dead before it is heard. God deals with Sinners, as Enemies do with a Town, who batter it not by planted Guns, but ſecretly undermine and blow up the Walls, whereby they involve the Garriſon in a ſuddain Ruine, and carry the Town. God ſpar'd the Amalekites a long Time after the Injury committed againſt the Iſraelites in their Paſſage out of Egypt to Canaan, but when he came to reckon with them, he would waſte them in a trice, and make an utter Conſumption of them, 1 Sam. 15. 2, 3. He deſcribes himſelf by a travelling Woman, Iſa. 42. 14. That hath born long in her Womb, and at laſt ſends forth her Birth with ſtrong cries. Though he hath held his Peace, been ſtill and refrained himſelf, yet at laſt, he will deſtroy and devour at once. The Ninevites ſpar'd in the Time of Jonah for their Repentance, are in Nahum threatned with a certain and total Ruine; when God ſhould come to bring them to an account for his length and Patience, ſo much abus'd by them. Though God endur'd the murmuring Iſraelites ſo long in the Wilderneſs, yet he paid them off at laſt, and took away the Rebels in his Wrath. He uttered their Sentence with an irreverſible Oath, that none of them ſhould enter into his Reſt, and he did as ſurely execute it, as he had ſolemnly ſworn it.

5. Though he doth defer his viſible Wrath, yet that very delay may be more dreadful than a quick Puniſhment. He may forbear ſtriking, and give the Reins to the hardneſs and corruption of Mens Hearts. He may ſuffer them to walk in their own Counſels, without any more ſtriving with them, whereby they make themſelves fitter fuel for his Vengeance. This was the fate of Iſrael, when they would not hearken to his Voice, he gave them up to their own Hearts Luſts, and they walked in their own Counſels, Pſalm 81. 12. Though his ſparing them had the outward aſpect of Patience, it was a wrathful one, and attended with Spiritual Judgments: Thus many abuſers of Patience may ſtill have their Line lengthened, and the Candle of Proſperity to ſhine upon their Heads, that they may encreaſe their Sins, and be the fitter Mark at laſt for his Arrows. They ſwim down the Stream of their own ſenſuality with a deplorable Security, till they fall into an unavoidable gulf, where at laſt it will be a great Part of their Hell, to reflect on the length of Divine Patience on Earth, and their inexcuſable abuſe of it.

2. It informs us of the Reaſon, why he lets the Enemies of his Church oppreſs it, and defers his Promiſe of the Deliverance of it. If he did puniſh them preſently, his Holineſs and Juſtice would be glorified, but his Power over himſelf in his Patience would be obſcured. Well may the Church be content, to have a Perfection of God glorified, that is not like to receive any Honour in another World by any Exerciſe of it ſelf. If it were not for this Patience, he were uncapable to be the Governour of a ſinful World; he might without it be the Governour of an Innocent World, but not of a criminal one; he would be the deſtroyer of the World, but not the orderer and diſpoſer of the extravagancies and ſinfulneſs of the World. The Intereſt of his Wiſdom in drawing Good out of Evil, would not be ſerved, if he were not clothed with this Perfection as well as with others. If he did preſently deſtroy the Enemies of his Church upon the firſt Oppreſſion, his Wiſdom in contriving, and his Power in accompliſhing Deliverance againſt the united Powers of Hell and Earth, would not be Viſible, no nor that Power in preſerving his People unconſumed in the Furnace of Affliction. He had not got ſo great a Name in the reſcue of his Iſrael from Pharaoh, had he thundred the Tyrant into Deſtruction upon his firſt Edicts againſt the Innocent. If he were not patient to the moſt violent of Men, he might ſeem to be Cruel. But when he offers Peace to them under their Rebellions, waits that they may be Members of his Church, rather than Enemies to it; he frees himſelf from any ſuch Imputation, even in the Judgment of thoſe that ſhall feel moſt of his Wrath; 'tis this renders the Equity of his Juſtice unqueſtionable, and the Deliverance of his People righteous in the Judgment of thoſe from whoſe Fetters they are delivered. Chriſt Reigns in the midſt of his Enemies, to ſhew his Power over himſelf, as well as over the Heads of his Enemies, to ſhew his Power over his Rebels. And though he retards his Promiſe, and ſuffers a great interval of Time between the Publication and Performance, ſometimes Years, ſometimes Ages to paſs away, and little appearance of any Preparation, to ſhew himſelf a God of Truth; 'tis not that he hath forgotten his Word, or repents that ever he paſſed it, or ſleeps in a ſupine neglect of it: But that Men might not periſh, but bethink themſelves, and come as Friends into his Boſom, rather than be cruſh'd as Enemies under his Feet, 2 Pet. 3. 9. The Lord is not ſlack concerning his Promiſe, but is long-ſuffering to us-ward, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to Repentance. Hereby he ſhews, that he would be rather pleaſed with the Converſion, than the Deſtruction of Men.

3. We ſee the Reaſon, why Sin is ſuffered to remain in the Regenerate; to ſhew his Patience towards his own; for ſince this Attribute hath no other Place of Appearance but in this World, God takes Opportunity to manifeſt it: Becauſe at the cloſe of the World, it will remain cloſed up in the Deity, without any further Operation. As God ſuffers a Multitude of Sins in the World, to evidence his Patience to the wicked, ſo he ſuffers great Remainders of Sin in his People, to ſhew his Patience to the Godly. His ſparing Mercy is admirable, before their Converſion, but more admirable in bearing with them after ſo high an Obligation, as the conferring upon them ſpecial Converting Grace.

2. The

2. The Second Use is of Comfort. 'Tis a vaſt Comfort to any, when God is Pacified towards them; but it is ſome Comfort to all, that God is yet Patient towards them, though but very little to a refractory Sinner. His continued Patience to all, ſpeaks a poſſibility of the cure of all, would they not ſtand againſt the way of their recovery. 'Tis a Terror that God hath Anger, but it is a mitigation of that Terror, that God is ſlow to it; while his Sword is in his Sheath, there is ſome hopes to prevent the drawing of it; alas, if He were all fire and ſword upon ſin, what would become of us? we ſhould find nothing elſe but over-flowing Deluges, or ſweeping Peſtilences, or perpetual flaſhes of Sodom's Fire and Brimſtone from Heaven. He dooms us not preſently to Execution, but gives us a long breathing time after the Crime, that by retiring from our Iniquities, and having recourſe to his Mercy, He may be with-held for ever from ſigning a Warrant againſt us, and change his Legal Sentence into an Evangelical Pardon. 'Tis a ſpecial Comfort to his People, that He is a Sanctuary to them, Ezek. 11. 16. A place of Refuge, a place of Spiritual Communications; but it is ſome Refreſhment to all in this Life, that He is a defence to them: for ſo is his Patience call'd, Numb. 14. 9. Their defence is departed from them; ſpeaking to the Iſraelites, that they ſhould not be afraid of the Canaanites, for their Defence is departed from them. God is no longer Patient to them, ſince their ſins be full and ripe. Patience, as long as it laſts, is a temporary Defence to thoſe that are under the wing of it; but to the Believer it is a ſingular Comfort: And God is called the God of Patience and Conſolation in one breath, Rom. 15. 5. The God of Patience and Conſolation grant you to be like-minded: All Interpreters underſtand it effectively. The God that inſpires you with Patience, and chears you with Comfort, grant this to you. Why may it not be underſtood formally, of the Patience belonging to the Nature of God? and though it be expreſt in the way of Petition, yet it might alſo be propoſed as a Pattern for Imitation, and ſo ſuits very well to the Exhortation laid down, ver. 1. which was, to bear with the infirmities of the weak, which He preſſeth them to, ver. 3. by the example of Chriſt; and ver. 5. by the Patience of God to them, and ſo they are very well link'd together. God of Patience and Conſolation may well be joyned, ſince Patience is the firſt ſtep of Comfort to the poor Creature. If it did not adminiſter ſome comfortable hopes to Adam, in the interval between his Fall, and God's coming to examine him, I am ſure it was the firſt diſcovery of any Comfort to the Creature, after the ſweeping the deſtroying Deluge out of the World, Gen. 9. 21. After the ſavour of Noah's ſacrifice, repreſenting the great Sacrifice which was to be in the World, had aſcended up to God, the return from Him is a publication of his forbearing to puniſh any more in ſuch a manner: And though He found Man no better than he was before, and the Imaginations of Mens Hearts as evil as before the Deluge, that He would not again ſmite every Living Thing as He had done. This was the firſt expreſſion of Comfort to Noah, after his exit from the Ark; and declares nothing elſe but the continuance of Patience to the New World, above what He had ſhewn to the Old.

1. 'Tis a comfort in that 'tis an argument of his Grace to his People. If He hath ſo rich a Patience to exerciſe towards his Enemies, He hath a greater Treaſure to beſtow upon his Friends. Patience is the firſt Attribute, which ſteps in for our Salvation, and therefore called Salvation, 2 Pet. 3. 15. Something elſe is therefore built upon it, and intended by it to thoſe that believe. Thoſe two Letters of his Name, a God keeping Mercy for thouſands, and forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſions and ſin, follows the other Letter of his long-ſuffering, in the Proclamation, Exod. 34. 6, 7. He is ſlow to anger, that He may be Merciful, that Men may ſeek and receive their Pardon. If He be long-ſuffering, in order to be a Pardoning God, He will not be wanting in Pardoning thoſe who anſwer the deſign of his Forbearance of them. You would not have had ſparing Mercy to improve, if God would have deny'd you ſaving Mercy upon the Improvement of his ſparing Goodneſs. If He hath ſo much reſpect to his Enemies that provoke Him, as to endure them with much long-ſuffering, He will ſurely be very kind to thoſe that obey Him, and conform to his Will. If He hath much long-ſuffering to thoſe that are fitted for deſtruction, Rom. 9. 22. He will have a muchneſs of Mercy for thoſe that are prepared for Glory by Faith and Repentance. 'Tis but a natural Concluſion a gracious Soul may make, if God had not a mind to be appeaſed towards me, He would not have had a mind to forbear me; but ſince He hath forborn me, and given me a Heart to ſee, and anſwer the true end of that forbearance, I need not queſtion, but that ſparing Mercy will end in ſaving, ſince it finds that Repentance ſpringing up in me, which that Patience conducted me to.

2. His Patience is a ground to truſt in his Promiſe. If his ſlowneſs to anger be ſo great, when his Precept is ſlighted, his readineſs to give what He hath promiſed will be as great, when his Promiſe is believed. If the Provocations of Men meet with ſuch an unwillingneſs to puniſh them, Faith in him will meet with the choiceſt embraces from Him. He was more ready to make the Promiſe of Redemption after Man's Apoſtacy, than to execute the threatning of the Law. He doth ſtill witneſs a greater unwillingneſs to give forth the Fruits of the Promiſe, than to pour out the Vials of his Curſes. His ſlowneſs to anger is an evidence ſtill, that He hath the ſame diſpoſition, which is no ſlight Cordial to Faith in his Word.

3. 'Tis a Comfort in Infirmities. If He were not Patient, He could not bear with ſo many peeviſhneſſes and weakneſſes in the Hearts of his own. If He be Patient to the groſſer Sins of his Enemies, He will be no leſs to the lighter Infirmities of his People. When the Soul is as a bruiſed Reed, that can emit no Sound at all, or one very harſh and ungrateful, He doth not break it in pieces, and fling it away in diſdain, but waits to ſee whether it will fully anſwer his pains, and be brought to a better Frame, and ſweeter Note. He brings them not to account for every ſlip, but as a father ſpares his ſon that ſerves him, Mal. 3. 17. 'Tis a Comfort to us in our diſtracted ſervices; for were it not for this ſlowneſs to anger, He would ſtifle us in the midſt of our Prayers, wherein there are as many fooliſh Thoughts to diſguſt Him, as there are Petitions to implore Him. The patienteſt Angels would hardly be able to bear with the follies of good Men in acts of Worſhip.

3. The third Use is for Exhortation.

1. Meditate often on the Patience of God. The Devil labours for nothing more, than to deface in us the conſideration and memory of this Perfection. He is an envious Creature, and ſince it hath reached out it ſelf to us, and not to him, he envies God the Glory of it, and Man the advantage of it. But God loves to have the Volumes of it ſtudied, and daily turn'd over by us. We cannot without an inexcuſable wilfulneſs miſs the thoughts of it, ſince ſince it is viſible in every bit of Bread, and Breath of Air in our ſelves, and all about us.

1. The frequent conſideration of his Patience would render God highly amiable to us. 'Tis a more endearing Argument than his meer Goodneſs: His Goodneſs to us as Creatures, endowing us with ſuch excellent Faculties, furniſhing us with ſuch a Commodious World, and beſtowing upon us ſo many Attendants for our pleaſure and ſervice, and giving us a Lordſhip over his other Works, deſerves our Affection. But his Patience to us as Sinners, after we have merited the greateſt wrath, ſhews him to be of a ſweeter diſpoſition, than creating Goodneſs to unoffending Creatures; and conſequently ſpeaks a greater Love in Him, and beſpeaks a greater Affection from us. His Creating Goodneſs diſcovered the Majeſty of his Being, and the Greatneſs of his Mind, but this the Sweetneſs and Tenderneſs of his Nature. In this Patience He exceeds the Mildneſs of all Creatures to us; and therefore ſhould be enthroned in our Affections above all other Creatures. The conſideration of this would make us affect Him for his Nature, as well as for his Benefits.

2. The conſideration of his Patience would make us frequent and ſerious in the exerciſe of Repentance. In its nature it leads to it, and the conſideration of it would engage us to it, and melt us in the exerciſe of it. Could we deeply think of it, without being touched with a Senſe of the kindneſs of our for-bearing Creditor and Governour? Could we gaze upon it; nay, could we glance upon it without relenting at our offending One of ſo mild a nature, without being ſenſibly affected, that He hath preſerved us ſo long from being loaded with thoſe Chains of Darkneſs under which the Devils groan? This forbearance hath good reaſon to make Sin and Sinners aſham'd. That you are in being, is not for want of advantages enough in his Hand againſt you, many a forfeiture you have made, and many an engagement you have broke; He hath ſcarce met with any other dealing from us, than what had treachery in it. Whatſoever our Sincerity is, we have no reaſon to boaſt of it, when we conſider what mixtures there are in it, and what ſwarms of baſe motions taint it. Hath He not lain preſſed and groaning under our Sins, as a Cart is preſſed with ſheaves, Amos 2. 13. when one ſhake of Himſelf, as Sampſon, might have rid Him of the burthen, and diſmiſt us in his fury into Hell? If we ſhould often ask our Conſciences, why have we done thus and thus againſt ſo mild a God? Would not the reflection on it, put us to the bluſh? If Men would conſider, that ſuch a time they provoked God to his face, and yet have not felt his Sword; ſuch a time they blaſphemed Him, and made a Reproach of his Name, and his Thunder did not ſtop their motion; ſuch a time they fell into an abominable Brutiſhneſs, yet He kept the puniſhment of Devils, the unclean Spirits from reaching them; ſuch a time He bore an open affront from them, when they ſcoft at his Word, and He did not ſend a deſtruction, and laugh at it. Would not ſuch a Meditation work ſome ſtrange kind of Relentings in Men? What if we ſhould conſider, that we cannot do a ſinful act without the ſupport of his concurring Providence? We cannot ſee, hear, move, without his concourſe. All Creatures we uſe for our neceſſity or pleaſure, are ſupported by Him in the very act of aſſiſting to pleaſure us; and when we abuſe thoſe Creatures againſt Him, which He ſupports for our uſe, how great is his Patience to bear with us, that He doth not annihilate thoſe Creatures, or at leaſt imbitter their uſe? What Iſſue could reaſonably be expected from this conſideration, but, Oh wretched man that I am, to ſerve my ſelf of God's power, to affront Him, and of his long-ſuffering to abuſe him? Oh Infinite Patience, to employ that Power to preſerve me, that might have been uſed to puniſh me! He is my Creator, I could not have a Being without Him, and yet I offend Him. He is my Preſerver, I cannot maintain my Being without Him, and yet I affront Him. Is this a worthy requital of God? Deut. 32. 6. Do you thus requite the Lord? would be the heart-breaking Reflection. How would it give Men a ful'er proſpect of the depravation of their nature, than any thing elſe; that their corruption ſhould be ſo deep and ſtrong, that ſo much Patience could not overcome it? It would certainly make a Man aſham'd of his Nature as well as his Actions.

3. The conſideration of his Patience, would make us reſent more the injuries done by others to God. A Patient Sufferer, though a deſerving Sufferer, attracts the Pity of Men that have a value for any Vertue, though clouded with a heap of Vice. How much more ſhould we have a concern for God, who ſuffers ſo many abuſes from others? and be grieved that ſo admirable a Patience ſhould be ſlighted by Men, who ſolely live by, and under the daily influence of it? The Impreſſion of this would make us take God's part, as it is uſual with Men, to take the part of good Diſpoſitions that lie under Oppreſſion.

4. It would make us Patient under God's hand. His ſlowneſs to anger, and his forbearance is viſible, in the very ſtrokes we feel in this Life. We have no reaſon to murmur againſt Him who gives us ſo little cauſe, and in the greateſt afflictions gives us more occaſion of thankfulneſs than of repining. Did not ſlowneſs to the extreameſt Anger moderate every Affliction, it had been a Scorpion inſtead of a Rod. We have reaſon to bleſs Him, who from his long-ſuffering ſends temporal ſufferings, where Eternal are juſtly due. Ezra 9. 13. Thou haſt puniſhed us leſs than our iniquities do deſerve. His Indulgences towards us have been more than our Corrections, and the length of his Patience hath exceeded the ſharpneſs of his Rod. Upon the account of his long-ſuffering, our Mutinies againſt God have as little to excuſe them, as our ſins againſt Him have to deſerve his forbearance.

The Conſideration of this would ſhew us more reaſon to repine at our own Repinings, than at any of his ſmarter Dealings. And the Conſideration of this, would make us ſubmiſſive under the Judgments we expect. His undeſerved Patience hath been more than our merited Judgments can poſſibly be thought to be. If we fear the removal of the Goſpel for a ſeaſon, as we have reaſon to do, we ſhould rather bleſs Him, that by his waiting Patience He hath continued it ſo long, than murmur, that He threatens to take it away ſo late. He hath born with us many a Year, ſince the light of it was re-kindled, when our Anceſtors had but Six Years of Patience between the riſe of Edward the Sixth, and the Aſcent of Queen Mary to the Crown.

2. Exhortation is, To admire and ſtand aſtoniſh'd at his Patience, and bleſs Him for it. If you ſhould have defil'd your Neighbour's Bed, or ſullied his Reputation, or rifled his Goods, would he have with-held his Vengeance, unleſs he had been too weak to execute it? We have done worſe to God, than we can do to Man, and yet He draws not that Sword of Wrath out of the Scabbard of his Patience, to ſheath it in our Hearts. 'Tis not ſo much a wonder, that any Judgments are ſent, as that there are are no more and ſharper. That the World ſhall be fired at laſt, is not a thing ſo ſtrange, as that fire doth not come down every Day upon ſome part of it. Had the Diſciples, (that ſaw ſuch excellent Patterns of Mildneſs from their Maſter, and were ſo often urg'd to learn of Him that was lowly and meek) the Government of the World, it had been long ſince turn'd into Aſhes, ſince they were too forward to deſire Him to open his Magazine of Judgments, and kindle a Fire to conſume a Samaritan Village, for a ſlight affront, in compariſon of what He received from others, and afterwards from themſelves in their forſaking of Him, Luke 9. 52, 53, 54. We ſhould admire, and praiſe that here, which ſhall be prais'd in Heaven; though Patience ſhall ceaſe, as to its exerciſe, after the Conſummation of the World, it ſhall not ceaſe from receiving the acknowledgments of what it did when it travers'd the Stage of this Earth. If the Name of God be glorified and acknowledged in Heaven, no queſtion but this will alſo; ſince Long-ſuffering is one of his ~~Divine~~ Titles, a Letter in his Name, as well as Merciful and Gracious, abundant in Goodneſs and Truth. And there is good reaſon to think, that the Patience exerciſed towards ſome, before Converting Grace was ordered to ſeize upon them, will bear a great part in the Anthems of Heaven. The greater his long-ſuffering hath been to Men, that lay covered with their own dung, a long time before they were freed by Grace from their filth; the more admiringly and loudly they will cry up his Mercy to them, after they have paſt the Gulf, and ſee a deſerv'd Hell at a diſtance from them, and many in that place of Torments, who never had the Taſt of ſo much forbearance. If Mercy will be prais'd there, that which began the Alphabet of it, cannot be forgot. If Paul ſpeak ſo highly of it in a damping World, and under the pullbacks of a body of death, as he doth, 1 Tim. 1. 16, 17. For this cauſe I obtained mercy, that Chriſt might ſhew forth all long-ſuffering. Now unto the King Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible, the Only Wiſe God, be Honour and Glory, for ever and ever. Amen. No doubt but he will have a higher Note for it, when he is ſurrounded with a Heavenly Flame, and freed from all remains of dullneſs, ſhall it be praiſed above, and have we no Notes for it here below? Admire Chriſt too, who Sued out your Reprieve upon the account of his Merit. As Mercy acts not upon any but in Chriſt, ſo neither had Patience born with any but in Chriſt. The Pronouncing the Arreſt of Judgment, Gen. 8. 21. was when God ſmell'd a ſweet ſavour from Noah's Sacrifice, not from the Beaſts offer'd, but the Anti-typical Sacrifice repreſeuted.

That we may be raiſed to bleſs God for it, let us conſider,

1. The multitude of our Provocations. Though ſome have blacker Guilt than others, and deeper Stains, yet let none wipe his Mouth, and imagine himſelf to have but little reaſon to bleſs it. Are not all our Offences as many, as there have been Minutes in our Lives? All the Moments of our continuance in the World, have been Moments of his Patience and our Ingratitude. Adam was puniſhed for one Sin. Moſes excluded Canaan for a paſſionate unbelieving Word. Ananias and Saphira loſt their lives for one Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. One Sin fullied the beauty of the World, defaced the Works of God, had crack'd Heaven and Earth in pieces, had not Infinite Satisfaction been propoſed to the provoked Juſtice by the Redeemer; And not one Sin committed, but is of the ſame venomous Nature; How many of thoſe contradictions againſt Himſelf hath He born with? Had we been only unprofitable to Him, his forbearance of us had been miraculous; But how much doth it exceed a Miracle, and lift it ſelf above the meanneſs of a Conjunction with ſuch an Epithet, ſince we have been provoking? Had there been no more than our impudent or careleſs ruſhings into His Preſence in Worſhip. Had they been only Sins of Omiſſion, and Sins of Ignorance, it had been enough to have put a ſtand to any further Operations of this Perfection towards us. But add to thoſe, Sins of Commiſſion, Sins againſt Knowledge, Sins againſt ſpiritual Motions, Sins againſt repeated Reſolutions, and preſſing Admonitions, the neglects of all the opportunities of Repentance; put them all together, and we can as little recount them, as the Sands on the Sea-ſhore. But what do I only ſpeak of particular Men? view the whole World, and if our own Iniquities render it an amazing Patience, what a mighty ſupply will be made to it in all the numerous and weighty Provocations under which He hath continued the World for ſo many Revolutions of Years and Ages? Have not all thoſe preſſed into his Preſence with a loud cry, and demanded a Sentence from Juſtice? yet hath not the Judge been overcome by the importunity of our Sins? * Were the Devils puniſhed for one Sin, a proud thought, and that not committed againſt the Blood of Chriſt, as we have done numberleſs times? yet hath not God made us partakers in their puniſhment, though we have exceeded them in the quality of their Sin? Oh admirable Patience! that would bear with me under ſo many, while He would not bear with the ſinning Angels for one. *Pom. par. 1. 24.

2. Conſider how mean things we are, who have provoked Him. What is Man but a vile thing, that a God abounding with all Riches ſhould take care of ſo abject a thing, much more to bear ſo many affronts from ſuch a drop of Matter, ſuch a nothing Creature! That He that hath Anger at his Command, as well as Pity, ſhould endure ſuch a deteſtable, deformed Creature by ſin, to fly in his Face. What is man, that thou art mindful of him, Pſal. 8. אנוש miſerable, incurable Man, derived from a Word that ſignifies to be incurably ſick. Man is Adam, Earth from his Earthly Original, and Enoſh incurable from his corruption. Is it not worthy to be admired, that a God of Infinite Glory ſhould wait on ſuch Adams, Worms of Earth, and be as it were a Servant and Attendant to ſuch Enoſhes, ſickly and peeviſh Creatures?

3. Conſider who it is that is thus Patient. He it is that with one Breath could turn Heaven and Earth, and all the Inhabitants of both into nothing; That could by one Thunder-bolt have razed up the Foundations of a curſed World. He that wants not Inſtruments without to ruine us, that can arm our own Conſciences againſt us, and can drown us in our own Phlegm. And by taking out one Pin from our Bodies, cauſe the whole Frame to fall aſunder. Beſides, 'tis a God, that while He ſuffers the Sinner, hates the Sin, more than all the Holy Men upon Earth, or Angels in Heaven can do; So that his Patience for a Minute, tranſcends the Patience of all Creatures, from the Creation to the Diſſolution of the World: becauſe it is the Patience of a God infinitely more ſenſible of the curſed quality of Sin, and infinitely more deteſting it.

4. Conſider how long He hath forborn his anger. A Reprieve for a Week, or a Month, is accounted a great favour in Civil States; The Civil Law enacts, * That if the Emperor commanded a Man to be *Cod. Lib. 9. Titul. 47. 6. 20.

be condemned, the Execution was to be deferred thirty days: becauſe in that time the Princes anger might be appeaſed. But how great a favour is it to be Reprieved thirty Years for many Offences, every one of which deſerves Death more at the Hands of God, than any Offence can at the Hands of Man? Paul, was according to the common account, but about thirty Years old at his Converſion, and how much doth he elevate Divine Long-ſuffering? Certainly there are many who have more reaſon, as having larger quantities of Patience cut out to them, who have lived to ſee their own grey Hairs in a Rebellious Poſture againſt God, before Grace brought them to a ſurrender. We were all condemn'd in the Womb, our Lives were forfeited the firſt Moment of our Breath, but Patience hath ſtopp'd the Arreſt; The merciful Creditor deſerves to have acknowledgment from us, who hath laid by his Bond ſo many Years, without putting it in Suit againſt us. Many of your Companions in Sin have perhaps been ſurprized long ago, and haled to an Eternal Priſon; nothing remaining of them but their Duſt, and the time is not yet come for your Funeral. Let it be conſidered, That that God, that would not wait upon the Fallen Angels one inſtant after their Sin, nor give them a Moments ſpace of Repentance, hath prolonged the Life of many a Sinner in the World to innumerable Moments, to 420000 Minutes in the ſpace of a Year, to eight Millions and 400000 Minutes in the ſpace of twenty Years. The damned in Hell would think it a great kindneſs to have but a Years, Months, nay Days reſpite, as a ſpace to Repent in.

5. Conſider alſo, how many have been taken away under ſhorter meaſures of Patience. Some have been ſtruck into a Hell of Miſery, while thou remaineſt upon an Earth of forbearance. In a Plague, the deſtroying Angel hath hew'd down others, and paſt by us; the Arrows have flew about our Heads, paſt over us, and ſtuck in the Heart of a Neighbour. How many rich Men, how many of our Friends and Familiars have been ſiez'd by Death, ſince the beginning of the Year, when they leaſt thought of it, and imagin'd it far from them? Have you not known ſome of your Acquaintance ſnatch'd away in the height of a Crime? Was not the ſame Wrath due to you as well as to them? And had it not been as dreadful for you to be ſo ſurpriz'd by Him, as it was for them? Why ſhould He take a leſs ſturdy Sinner out of thy Company, and let thee remain ſtill upon the Earth? If God had dealt ſo with you, how had you been cut off, not only from the enjoyment of this Life, but the hopes of a better? And if God hath made ſuch a Providence beneficial for Reclaiming you, how much reaſon have you to acknowledge Him? He that hath had leaſt Patience, hath cauſe to admire, but thoſe that have more, ought to exceed others in Bleſſing Him for it. If God had put an end to your Natural Life, before you had made Proviſion for Eternal, how deplorable would your condition have been?

Conſider alſo, whoever have been Sinners formerly of a deeper Note, might not God have ſtruck a Man in the embraces of his Harlots, and choaked him in the moment of his exceſſive and intemperate Healths, or on the ſudden have ſpurted Fire and Brimſtone into a Blaſphemers Mouth? What if God had ſnatch'd you away, when you had been ſleeping in ſome great Iniquity, or ſent you, while burning in Luſt, to the Fire it merited? Might He not have crack'd the String that link'd your Souls to your Bodies, in the laſt Sickneſs you had? And what then had become of you? What could have been expected to ſucceed your impenitent ſtate in this World, but howlings in another? But He repriev'd you upon your Petitions, or the Sollicitations of your Friends; and have you not broke your Word with Him? Have your Hearts been ſtedfaſt, hath He not yet waited, expecting when you would put your Vows and Reſolutions into Execution? What need had He to cry out to any ſo loud and ſo long, Oh you Fools, how long will you love fooliſhneſs? Prov. 1. 22. when He might have ceaſed his crying to you, and have by your Death prevented your many neglects of Him? Did He do all this, that any of us might add new Sins to our old, or rather, that we ſhould bleſs Him for his forbearance, comply with the end of it, in reforming our Lives, and having recourſe to his Mercy?

3. Exhortation. Therefore preſume not upon his Patience. The exerciſe of it is not Eternal; you are at preſent under his Patience, yet while you are unconverted, you are alſo under his anger; Pſal. 7. 11. God is angry with the wicked every day. You know not how ſoon his Anger may turn his Patience aſide, and ſtep before it. It may be his Sword is drawn out of his Scabbard, his Arrows may be ſettled in his Bow; and perhaps there is but a little time, before you may feel the edge of the one, or the point of the other; and then there will be no more time for Patience in God to us, or Petition from us to Him. If we repent here, He will pardon us. If we defer Repentance, and Die without it, He will have no longer Mercy to Pardon, nor Patience to bear.

What is there in our power but the preſent? the future Time we cannot command, the paſt time we cannot re-cal, ſquander not then the Preſent away. The time will come, when Time ſhall be no more, and then long-ſuffering ſhall be no more. Will you neglect the time, wherein Patience acts, and vainly hope for a Time beyond the reſolves of Patience. Will you ſpend that in vain, which Goodneſs hath allotted you for other purpoſes? What an eſtimate will you make of a little forbearance to reſpite Death, when you are gaſping under the ſtroke of its Arrows? How much would you value ſome few Days, of thoſe many Years you now trifle away? Can any think God will be always at an expence with them in vain, that He will have ſuch Riches trampled under their Feet, and ſo many Editions of his Patience be made waſte Paper? Do you know how few Sands are yet to run in your Glaſs? Are you ſure that He that waits to Day, will wait as well to Morrow? How can you tell, but that God that is ſlow to anger to Day, may be ſwift to it the next? Jeruſalem had but a Day of Peace, and the moſt careleſs Sinner hath no more. When their Day was done, they were deſtroyed by Famine, Peſtilence, or Sword, or led into a doleful Captivity. Did God make our Lives ſo uncertain, and the duration of his Forbearance unknown to us, that we ſhould live in a lazy neglect of his Glory, and our own Happineſs? If you ſhould have more Patience in regard of your Lives, do you know whether you ſhall have the effectual Offers of Grace? As your Lives depend upon his Will, ſo your Converſion depends ſolely upon his Grace. There have been many Examples of thoſe miſerable Wretches, that have been left to a Reprobate Senſe, after they have a long time abus'd Divine Forbearance. Though He waits, yet He binds up ſin, Hoſ. 13. 12. The ſin of Ephraim is bound up, as bonds are bound up by a Creditor till a fit opportunity; when God comes to put the Bond in Suit, it will be be too late to wiſh for that Patience we have ſo ſcornfully deſpiſed. Conſider therefore the End of Patience. The Patience of God conſidered in it ſelf, without that which it tends to, affords very little Comfort, 'tis but a ſtep to pardoning Mercy, and it may be without it, and often is. Many have been reprieved, that were never forgiven; Hell is full of thoſe, that had Patience as well as we, but not one that accepted pardoning Grace, went within the Gates of it. Patience leaves Men, when their Sins have ripen'd them for Hell; but pardoning Grace never leaves Men, till it hath conducted them to Heaven. His Patience ſpeaks him placable, but doth not aſſure us, that he is actually appeas'd. Men may hope that long-ſuffering tends to a Pardon, but cannot be aſſured of a Pardon, but by ſomething elſe above meer long-ſuffering. Reſt not then upon bare Patience, but conſider the End of it; 'tis not that any ſhould Sin more freely, but Repent more meltingly; 'tis not to Spirit Rebellion, but give a merciful ſtop to it. Why ſhould any be ſo ambitious of their Ruine, as to conſtrain God to Ruine them againſt the Inclinations of his ſweet Diſpoſition?

4. The Fourth Exhortation is, Let us imitate God's Patience in our own to others. He is unlike God, that is hurried with an unruly impetus, to Puniſh others for wronging him. The Conſideration of Divine Patience ſhould make us ſquare our ſelves according to that Pattern. God hath exerciſed a long-ſuffering from the fall of Adam to this Minute on innumerable Subjects, and ſhall we be tranſported with deſire of Revenge upon a ſingle Injury? If God were not ſlow to Wrath, a ſinful World had been long ago torn up from the Foundation. And if Revenge ſhould be exerciſed by all Men againſt their Enemies, what Man ſhould have been alive, ſince there is not a Man without an Enemy? If every Man were like Saul, breathing out Threatnings, the World would not only be an Aceldama, but a Deſert. How diſtant are they from the Nature of God, who are in a Flame upon every ſlight Provocation from a Sence of ſome feeble and imaginary Honour, that muſt bloody their Sword for a trifle, and write their Revenge in Wounds and Death? When God hath his Glory every Day beſpattered, yet he keeps his Sword in his Sheath: What a Wo would it be to the World, if he drew it upon every Affront? This is to be like Brutes, Dogs or Tygers, that ſnarl, bite, and devour upon every ſlight occaſion: But to be Patient, is to be Divine, and to ſhew our ſelves acquainted with the Diſpoſition of God. Be you therefore perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect, Matth. 5. 48. i. e. Be you perfect, and good; for he had been exhorting them, to bleſs them that curs'd them, and to do good to them that hated them, and that from the Example God had ſet them, in cauſing his Sun to riſe upon the Evil as well as the good. Be you therefore perfect. To Conclude, as Patience is God's Perfection, ſo it is the Accompliſhment of the Soul. And as his ſlowneſs to Anger argues the greatneſs of his Power over himſelf, ſo an unwillingneſs to Revenge, is a ſign of a Power over our ſelves, which is more noble than to be a Monarch over others.

TO THE READER.

Reader,

THOU art here Presented with a little Piece, of a Great Man; Great indeed, if great Piety, great Parts, great Learning, and great Wisdom, may be admitted to claim that Title: And we verily believe that none well acquainted with him, will deny him his right: however Malevolent Persons may grudge him the Honour. It hath been expected and desired by many, that some account of his Life might be given to the World; But we are not willing to offer Violence to his Ashes, by making him so Publick now he is dead, who so much affected Privacy while he lived. Thou art therefore desired to rest satisfied with this brief Account of him; That being very Young he went to Cambridge, where in Immanuel Colledge, he was brought up under the Tuition of the present Arch B. of Canterbury: What Gracious Workings and Evidences of the New-Birth appeared in him while there, hath already been spoken of by * one who was at that time his Fellow-Collegiate and Intimate. Some time he afterward spent in a private Family, and a little more in the exercise of his Ministery in Southwark, then removed to New-Colledge in Oxon, where he was Fellow, and spent several Years; being then taken notice of for his singular Gifts, and had in Reputation by the most Learned and Godly in that University, and upon that account the more frequently put upon Publick Work. Being thence (the Year after he had been Proctor) called over into Ireland to a constant publick Employment, he exercised his Ministry for about four or five Years, not with the Approbation only, but to the Admiration of the most Wise and Judicious Christians, and with the concurrent Applause of such as were of very different Sentiments from him in the things of Religion; Nay, even those that never loved his Piety, yet would commend his Learning and Gifts, as being beyond Exception, if not above Compare. About the Year 1660. being discharged from the publick Exercise of his Ministry, he returned back into England, and in and about London spent the greatest part of fifteen Years, without any Call to his old Work in a settled way; but for about these five Years last past hath been more known by his constant Preaching, of which we need not speak, but let them that heard him, speak for him; or, if they should be silent, his Works will do it. He was a Person of excellent Parts, strong Reason, great Judgment, and (which do not often go together) curious Phancy, of high Improvements, and general Learning, as having been all his Days a most Diligent and Methodical Student, and a great Redeemer of Time, rescuing not only his restless Hours in the Night, but his very walking time in the Streets, from those Impertinencies and fruitless Vanities which do so customarily fill up Mens Minds, and steal away their Hearts from those better and more Noble Objects, which do so justly challenge their greatest Regards: This he did by not only carefully watching (as every good Christian should do) but constantly writing down his Thoughts, whereby he both Govern'd them better, and furnished himself with many Materials for his most Elaborate Discourses. His chief Talent was his Preaching-Gift, in which, to speak modestly, he had few Equals. To this therefore, as that for which his Lord and Master had best fitted him (neglecting the Practice of Physick, in which he had arrived at a considerable measure of Knowledge) he did especially addict himself, and direct his Studies, and even when Providence denied him opportunities, yet he was still laying in more Stock, and preparing for work against he might be called to it. When he was in Imployment, none that heard him, could justly blame his Retiredness, he being even when most Private, continually at work for the Publick; and had he been less in his Study, he would have been less liked in the Pulpit. His Library, furnished (though not with a numerous, yet) a Curious Collection of Books, was his Work-house, in which he laboured hard all the Week, and on the Lord's Day made it appear, he had not been Idle; and that though he consulted his Privacy, yet he did not indulge his Sloth. He was somewhat reserved where he was not well acquainted, otherwise very free, affable and communicative, where he understood and liked his Company. He affected not much Acquaintance, because he would escape Visitants, well knowing how much the ordinary sort of Friends were apt to take up of his time, which he could ill spare from his beloved Studies, meeting with few that could give him better Entertainment with their Company, than he could give himself alone: They had need be very good, and very learned, by whose Converse he could gain more than by his own Thoughts and Books. He was a True Son of the Church of England, in that sound Doctrine laid down in the Articles of Religion, and Taught by our most Famous Ancient Divines and Reformers; and a real Follower of their Piety, as well as a strenuous Maintainer of the Truth they professed. His Preaching was mostly Practical, yet Rational and Argumentative, to his Hearers Understandings, as well as Affections; and where Controverſies came in his way, he ſhewed great Acuteneſs and Judgment in diſcuſſing and determining them, and no leſs Skill in applying them to practice: So that he was indeed a Workman that needed not be aſhamed, being able by Sound Doctrine both to exhort and convince Gain-ſayers. Some have thought his Preaching too high for Vulgar Hearers; and it cannot be denied but his Gifts were ſuited to the more intelligent ſort of Chriſtians; yet it muſt withal be ſaid, that if he were ſometimes deep, he was never Abſtruſe; he handled the great Myſteries of the Goſpel with much clearneſs and perſpicuity; ſo that if in his Preaching he were above moſt, it was only becauſe moſt were below him. Several conſiderable Treatiſes on ſome of the moſt Important Points of Religion, he finiſhed in his ordinary Courſe, which he hath left behind him, in the ſame Form he uſually Writ them for the Pulpit. This comes out firſt as a Prodromus to ſeveral others deſigned to be made Publick, as ſoon as they can be with conveniency Tranſcribed, which (if the Lord will, and ſpare Life) ſhall be atteſted with our Hands; and whatever any elſe ſhall Publiſh, can be but imperfect Notes (his own Copies being under our Reviſal at the Requeſt of his Friends) taken from him in the Pulpit; in which, what miſtakes do often happen, every one knows, and we have found by experience in the caſe of this very Author more than once. This was thought fit to be ſaid to ſecure the Reputation of the Dead, and prevent the Abuſe of the Living. Theſe Sermons might have come out with the Solemn Ceremony of large Recommendations, the Author's worth being ſo well known to, and his Preaching ſo highly eſteemed by the moſt eminent Miniſters about this City; but it was judged needleſs, his own Works being ſufficient to Praiſe him.

One thing more is be to added, That ſuch as he is here, ſuch he is in his other Pieces; ſo that thou haſt here, Reader, a Specimen of the Strain and Spirit of this Holy Man, this being his familiar and ordinary way of Preaching, and theſe Sermons coming out firſt, not as if they were the non-ſuch of what he left behind him, but becauſe they could ſooneſt be diſpatched; and to obviate the Injuries might elſe be done by Spurious Treatiſes, both to him and thee; and likewiſe by this little Taſte to gratifie the Appetites of ſuch who having been his Auditors, did long even with greedineſs, to Feaſt themſelves again upon thoſe excellent Truths, which in the Delivery were ſo ſweet to them; Perhaps too it may quicken their Appetites who never heard him, it may be never yet heard of him. If thou like this Cluſter, fear not but the Vintage will be anſwerable: If this little Earneſt be good Metal, the whole Sum will be no leſs Currant. That a Bleſſing from Heaven may be upon this Work, and upon thee in reading and ſtudying the Nature, and Beauty, and Ends of Divine Providence, and that the Lord of the Harveſt (eſpecially when ſo many are daily called home) would ſend forth more and more ſuch Labourers into the Harveſt, is the hearty Prayer of Thine in the Lord,

RICHARD ADAMS.

A DISCOURSE OF Divine Providence.

II CHRON. XVI. ix.

For the Eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, to shew himself strong in the behalf of them whose Heart is perfect towards him.

IN the beginning of the Chapter you find Baasha King of Israel raising Walls about, and Fortifying Ramah, a Place about twelve Miles from Jerusalem, the Metropolis of Judah, intending by that means to block Asa up, because Ramah lay just upon the Road between Jerusalem and Samaria, the Seats of the two Kings, ver. 1.

Baasha was probably afraid of the Revolt of Israel to Judah, upon that Reformation of Relgion wrought by Asa, and therefore would Fortifie that Place to be a hindrance, and to intercept any that should pass upon that account. And to this purpose makes great Preparation, as appears ver. 6. for with the Provision Baasha had made for the Fortification of Ramah; Asa, after the seizing of these Materials, builds two Towns, Gaba and Mispah.

Asa seeing Baasha so busie about this Design, and fearing the consequence of it, hath recourse to carnal Policy rather than to God: And therefore enters into League with Benhadad, a Neighbour, though an Idolatrous Prince, and purchaseth his Assistance with the Sacrilegious Price of the Treasure of the Temple, ver. 2, 3. And hereby engageth him to invade the King of Israels Territories, that he might thereby find Work for Baasha in another Part, and so divert him from that Design upon which he was so bent, ver. 3. Go, break thy League with Baasha, that he may depart from me.

Benhadad is easily perswaded by the quantity of Gold, &c. to break his League, and make an Inroad, and proves Victorious, and takes many Cities where the Magazines and Stores were laid up, ver. 4.

Baasha now to save his Countrey, and make Head against his Enemies, is forced to leave Ramah; whereupon Asa, who watched his Opportunity, seizeth the materials he had left for the fortifying of Ramah, and puts them to another use, ver. 5, 6.

Hanani the Seer is presently sent by God with a threatning of War, because he applies himself to a Heathen Prince, rather than to the Lord of Hosts, ver. 7. his Sin is aggravated by Gods former kindness to him, and experience he had given him of his miraculous Providence in his Success against that vast Army of the Ethiopians and Lubims, or Lybians, and that upon his recourse to, or reliance on God. And that he should afterwards have recourse to the Arm of Flesh, was a disparagement to God's providential Kindness, ver. 8. He further aggravates his Sin by the Consideration of Gods general providential Care of his Creatures, and the particular End of it, and of all his Providences, viz. The good of his Church and People, ver. 9. For the Eyes of the Lord, &c. Eyes of the Lord, in Scripture, signifie,

1. His Knowledge, Job 34. 21. For his Eyes are upon all the ways of Man, and he sees all his goings. Heb. 4. 13. All things are naked and opened unto the Eyes of him with whom we have to do *.

2. His Providence.

1. For good, so it notes his Grace and good Will; so his Eyes and his Heart are joyned together, 1 Kings 6. 3. Mine Eyes and my Heart shall be there perpetually, viz. in his Temple, the Place which he had hallowed to put his Name there for ever, Psalm 32. 8. I will guide him with mine Eye, that is, I will Counsel him, and direct him in a gracious and a favourable way. Therefore to be cut off from the Eye of the Lord, is to be deprived of his Favour, Psalm 31. 22. for none can be cut off from a simple Knowledge of God: So Zach. 3. 9. Seven Eyes upon one Stone, that is, the Providence of God was in an especial Manner with Christ in the midst of his Passion.

2. For Evil, so it notes His anger and vindictive Justice. Isa. 3. 8. Their doings are against the Lord, to provoke the Eyes of his Glory. Kindness and Anger appear first in the Eye, one by its pleasantness, the other by its redness.

(Run) that notes Diligence and Care, an industrious Inspection into all things, Psalm 119. 32. I will run the Ways of thy Commandments; noting Speed and Diligence.

In the Verse, we have

I. A Description of Gods Providence.

II. The End of it.

I. The Description of Gods Providence.

1. The immediateness of it, [his Eyes] his own Eyes, not anothers. Not like Princes, who see by their Servants Eyes more than by their own, what is done in their Kingdoms; his Care is immediate. Though Angels are Ministers of his Providence, the the Guardians and Watchers of the World, yet God is their Captain, and is always himſelf upon the Watch.

2. Quickneſs and Speed of Providence [run] His Eyes do not only walk, but run the Round; they are not ſlumbring Eyes, nor drowzy eye-lids, their Motion is quick and nimble.

3. Extent of Providence [the whole Earth] all Things in the Earth, all the Hairs on the Heads of theſe Men: The meaneſt Worm as well as the mightieſt Prince, the loweſt Shrub as well as the talleſt Cedar, every cranny, corner or Chink of the Earth.

4. Diligence of Providence [to and fro] His Care is repeated, he looks this way, and that way, again and again, his Eyes are not confin'd to one Place, fixed on one Object, but are always rouling about from one Place to another.

5. The Efficacy of his Providence; His Care doth engage his Strength; he doth not only diſcover Dangers, but prevent them; he hath Eyes to ſee, and Power to Order all things according to his Pleaſure; Wiſe to ſee, and ſtrong to ſave.

II. The End of Providence [to ſhew himſelf ſtrong, &c.]

* Clemens ad Corinth, pag. 34.

Before I come particularly to explain the Providence of God, I ſhall lay down ſome Propoſitions as the Fondations of this Doctrine.

1. God hath an indiſputable and peculiar Right to the Government of the World: None ever queſtioned Gods Right, no nor his Act, but thoſe that were ſwelled with an unreaſonable Ambition, ſuch as Nebuchadnezzar, who for this Cauſe underwent the Puniſhment of a ſeven Years Baniſhment from the Society of Men †.

† Dan. 4. 17.

None indeed that acknowledge a God, did or can queſtion Gods Right, though they may queſtion his Will and actual Exerciſe of his Right. He is the Creator, and therefore is the Soveraign Lord and Ruler. The World is his Family, and as a Maſter, he hath an undoubted Right to govern his own Family; He gave all Creatures their beings, and therefore hath a Right to enact their Laws, appoint their Stations, and fix their Ends. 'Tis as much his Property and Prerogative to Rule, as it is to Create. Creation is ſo peculiarly proper to God, that it is not communicable to any Creature, no not to Angels, though of a vaſt Capacity in other things, and that becauſe they are Creatures themſelves. 'Tis as impoſſible for one Creature, or all, to govern the World, and manage all the boyſterous Paſſions of Men to juſt and glorious Ends, as to Create them. 'Tis true, God uſeth Inſtruments in the executive Part of his Providence; but he doth not [illegible]ign the Government of the World only by Inſtruments. He uſeth them not for Neceſſity, but Ornament. He Created the World without them, and therefore can govern the World without them.

Virtus Creativa eſt fundamentum Providentiæ & argumentum ad Providentiam. This Right is founded upon that of Creation as he is the efficient Cauſe of it. This right is alſo founded upon the Excellency of his Being. That which is excellent having a right to Rule in the way of that Excellency, that which is Inferiour; every Man hath a natural right to rule another in his own Art and Skill wherein he excels him: If it be the right of a chief Magiſtrate to manage the concerns of his Kingdom, with what Reaſon can we deny that right to God?

2. God only is qualified for the univerſal Government of the World. All Creatures, as they were unable to Create themſelves, ſo are unable to manage themſelves without the Direction of a Superiour Power, much more unable to manage the vaſt Body of the World. God is only fit in regard of,

1. Power: Conſervation is continuata Creatio; that Power which is fit to Create, is only fit to preſerve. A continued Creation belongs as much to Omnipotency as the firſt Creation.

The Government of it requires no leſs Power, both in regard of the numerouſneſs of the Objects, and the ſtrange Contrariety of Paſſions in rational Creatures, and qualities in irrational; Conſervation is but one continued Act with Creation, following one from an inſtant to Duration, as a Line from its Mathematical Point ||.

|| Tailors exemplar, Preface, 6. 31.

2. Holineſs and Righteouſneſs. If he that hates Right is not fit to govern, Job 34. 17. Then he that is infinitely Righteous, and hath an infinite Love to Righteouſneſs, is the fitteſt to undertake that task; without Righteouſneſs there would be nothing but Confuſion in the whole Creation. Diſorder is the Effect of Unrighteouſneſs, as order is the Effect of Juſtice. The juſteſt Man is fitteſt for ſubordinate Government among Men, and the infinite Juſt God is fitteſt for the univerſal Government of the World.

3. Knowledge. An infinite Knowledge to deſcry all the contrivances and various Labyrinths of the Hearts of Men, their ſecret Intentions and Aims, is neceſſary. The Government of the World conſiſts more in ordering the inward Faculties of Men touching the Hearts, and tuning them to play what Notes he pleaſes, than in external Things. No Creature hath the skill or power to Work immediately upon the Will of Man; neither Angels nor Devils can do it immediately, but by propoſing Objects, and working upon the Fancy, which is not always ſucceſsful. He that Created the Heart, knows all the wards of it, and hath only the skill to turn it, and incline it as he pleases; he must needs know all the Inclinations of the Creatures, and their proper Activities, since He alone conferred all those several Principles and Qualities upon them. * Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world, viz. the particular Natures, Inclinations, inward Motions, which no Creature fully understands; He needs no Deputy to inform Him of what is done, He is every where, and sees all things: Worldly Governors cannot be every where essentially present.

* Acts 15. 8.

God is so perfect in his Knowledge of all things, that He cannot be imposed upon by the evil Suggestions and Flatteries of Men or Angels.

In Nature it is so, the Eye guides the Body, because that is the chief Organ of Sensitive Knowledge; the Mind, which is the Seat of Wisdom, guides the whole.

4. Patience. Infinite Patience is requisite to the Preservation and Government of the World in the Circumstances wherein it hath stood ever since the Fall: What Angel, though the meekest, or can all the Angels in Heaven be Masters of so much Patience as is needful for this Work of Governing the World, though for the space of one Day? Could they bear with all those Evils which are committed in the World in the space of twenty four Hours? Might we not reasonably conceive, that they would be so tired with the obliquities, disorders, deformities which they would see in the Acts of Men, (besides all the Evil which is in the Hearts of Men, which lie without the verge of their Knowledge) that they would rather call for Fire from Heaven to burn the World to Ashes.

* Trap in Exod. 34.

* Averroes thought, That because of God's slowness to anger, He meddled not with sublunary concerns: This rather fits Him for it, because He can bear with the Injuries of wicked Men, otherwise the World would not continue a Moment.

Angels, though powerful, holy, wise and patient Creatures, yet being Creatures, they want the infiniteness of all these Qualifications which are necessary to this Government: Though they are knowing, yet they know not Mens Hearts; though they are wise, yet they may be charged with a Folly uncapable of this; though holy, yet not able in this respect to manage it to the ends and designs of an infinite Holiness; though nimble, yet cannot be in all parts of the World at every turn: but the Providence of God is infallible, because of his infinite Wisdom; indefatigable, because of his Omnipotency; and Righteous, because of his Goodness.

3. There can be no reason rendered why God should not actually govern the World, since He only hath a right and fitness. If God doth not actually govern it, it is either because He cannot, or because He will not.

1. Not because He cannot; this inability must be either for want of Knowledge, or want of Power. The one if asserted, would deny his Omnipotence, the other his Omniscience; the one would make Him a weak God, the other an ignorant God, and consequently no God.

2. Not because He will not; If He can and will not, it is, say some, a testimony of Envy, that He maligns the good of his Creatures: But not to insist upon this; this must be either because of the

1. Difficulty. This cannot be: What difficulty can there be in a single Word, or one Act of his Will, which can be done by God without any Molestation, were there Millions of Worlds as well as this? For still they would be finite, and so governable by an infinite Superior. May we not more reasonably think the forming such a Mass would require more Pains than the Government of it? The right stringing an Instrument is more trouble to a skilful Musician, than the tripping over the Strings afterwards to make an Harmony. What difficulty can it be to Omnipotence? Is it a greater labour to preserve and govern, than it was to Create? Doth not the Soul order every part of the Body, and all its Functions, without any pain to it? And shall not the God that made that Soul so indefatigable, much more manage the Concernments of the World without labour to Himself? Is it not as easie with God to guide all these things by one single Act of his Will, as for me by an Act of my Soul to do many things without a distinct Act of Cogitation or Consideration before? Can it be more laborious to Him, to govern the World, than it is to know all things in the World? He sees all things in an instant by one Act of his Understanding, and He orders all Creatures in a Moment by one Act of his Will. Can one Act of his Will be more painful, than one Act of his Understanding? Can He with a Word make this great Ball, and can He not with as much ease order all to conform to the Law of his own Righteous Will? Can a continual eruption of Goodness be a difficulty to an Infinite Being, which we find natural to the Sun, to the Fountains, to the Sea, to many Works of that Omnipotent Goodness? Or,

2. Disparagement. Denial of God's Providence over the lesser things of the World, did arise from the consideration of the State of Monarchs, who thought it an abridgment of their Felicity and Dignity, to stoop to such low Considerations as the minutula of their Estates might exact from them, but left them to their Vicegerents. But they consider not that the Felicity of God, as it respects the Creature, is to Communicate his Goodness to as many Subjects as he hath made capable of his care. If it were his Glory to create the World, can it be his dishonour to Govern it? The glorifying his Wisdom is as honourable to him as the magnifying his power; though both are eminent in Creation and Providence, yet his Wisdom is more signal in the Governing, as his power was in framing of the World.

Why was it not as much a disparagement to God to Create things contemptible in our Eyes, as since He hath Created them to take care of them, and marshal them for his own glorious ends? The Sun in the Heavens is a shadow of God, which doth not disdain to communicate its natural Goodness, and emit its Beams to the meanest Creatures, and let the little Flies sport themselves in them, as well as the greatest Princes: and transmits its Influences upon things obscure, and at a distance from it, whereby it manifests an universal regard to all. And would it not be a disparagement to an Infinite Goodness to be out-stript by a Creature, which He hath set up for a natural Communication of Goodness to the rest of the World? The very consideration of the Sun, and the nature of it, gives us as much an account of God, as any inanimate Being whatsoever: 'Tis as much the Sun's honour to produce a small Insect, as the growth of the greatest Plant.

* Have not all Creatures a natural Affection in them to preserve and provide for their own? hath not God much more, who endued all Creatures with that disposition? Whatsoever is a natural Perfection in Creatures, is eminently an Infinite Perfection in God. If it be therefore a Praise to you to preſerve your own, can it be a diſgrace to God? You may as well ſay, it is as much a diſhonour to Him to be good, as to have a tender regard to his Creatures. Cenſure Him, as well you may, for Creating them for your Delight, as preſerving and governing them for the ſame end. They are all good, for He pronounced them ſo; and being ſo, a God of Goodneſs will not account them unworthy of his Care. Are they now the Products of his Omnipotent Wiſdom, and ſhall not they be the Objects of his directing Wiſdom? If they are not unworthy of God to Create, how can they be unworthy of God to govern them? It would be as much below Him to make them, as to rule them when they were made.

Fourthly. 4. Therefore, God doth actually preſerve and govern the World; though Angels are in Miniſtry in ſome particular works of his Providence, yet God is the Steers-Man, who gives out his particular orders to them.

Jacob's Ladder had the top in Heaven, where God ſtood to keep it firm: Its foot on Earth, and the Angels going up and down upon ſeveral Errands at their Maſters beck.

As God made all things for Himſelf, ſo he orders the ends of all things made by Him, for his own Glory. For being the moſt excellent and intelligent Agent, He doth reduce all the motions of his Creatures to that end for which He made them.

This actual Government of the World by God, brancheth it ſelf out in three things.

1. Nothing is acted in the World without God's Knowledge. The Viſion of the Wheels in Ezekiel, preſents us with an excellent Portraiture of Providence, there are Eyes round about the Wheels *. The Eye of God is upon the whole Circle of the Creatures motion. In all the Revolutions in the World, there is the Eye of God's Omniſcience to ſee them, and the Arm of his Omnipotence to guide them. Not the moſt retired Corner, or the darkeſt Cell, not the deepeſt Cavern, or moſt inward Project, nor the moſt ſecret Wickedneſs, not the cloſeſt Goodneſs, but the Eye of the Lord beholds it. * Prov. 15. 3. The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. He hears the Words, ſees the Actions, knows the Thoughts, regiſters the gracious Diſcourſes, bottles up the Penitent Tears, and conſiders all the ways of Men; not a whiſpered Oath, not an Atheiſtical Thought, though but only peeping upon the Heart, and ſinking down again in that Maſs of Corruption; not a diſorderly Word, but He knows and marks it. The Soul hath a particular Knowledge of every Act, becauſe it is the Spring of every Act in any Member; and nothing is done in this little World, but the Soul knows it. Surely then there is not an act done in the World, nor the motion of any Creature, but as God doth concur to it, He muſt needs know what He doth concur to. The Knowledge and Ordaining every thing, is far leſs to the Infinite Being of God, than the knowledge and ordaining every motion of the Body is to a Finite Soul.

*Ezek. 18 their wings were full of eyes, &c.

*Prov. 15. 3.

Or, Suppoſe a Soul cloathed with a Body of as big a Proportion as the Matter of the whole Creation, it would actuate this Body, though of a greater Bulk, and know every Motion of it. How much more God, who hath Infinity, and Excellency, and Strength of all Angels and Souls, muſt needs actuate this World, and know every motion of it? There is nothing done in the World, but ſome Creature or other knows it; he that acts it doth at leaſt know it: If God did not know it, the Creatures then in that particular Knowledge would be Superiour to God, and know ſomething more than God knows; can this be poſſible?

2. Nothing is acted in the World without the Will of God. His Will either commands it, or permits it. * Pſal. 135. 6. Whatſoever the Lord pleaſed, that did He in Heaven and in Earth. *Eph. 1. 11 He works all things after the Counſel of his own will.

Even the Sins of the World, his will permits them, his power aſſiſts in the act, and his Wiſdom orders the ſinfulneſs of the act for holy ends. The Four Chariots in Zech. 6. 2, 3, 4, 5. by which ſome underſtand Angels, are ſent upon Commiſſion into the ſeveral parts of the World, and compared to Chariots, both for their Strength, their Swiftneſs, their Employment in a Military way to ſecure the Church. Theſe are ſaid to come * out of the two Mountains of Braſs, which ſignifie the irreverſible Decrees of God, which the Angels are to execute. He alarms up the Winds, when He would have Jonah arreſted in his flight. He ſounds a retreat to them, and locks them up in their Chambers *. Bread hath a natural vertue in it to nouriſh, but it muſt be accompanied with his ſecret Bleſſing, Mat. 4. 4.

* ver. 1.

Reynolds.

Pſal.* 107. 25, 29.

Virtute primi actus, agunt agentia omnia quicquid agunt.

3. Nothing doth ſubſiſt without God's care and power. His eyes running to and fro, implies not only Knowledge, but Care. He doth not careleſly behold what is done in the World, but like a skilful Pilot, He ſits at the Helm, and ſteers the World in what courſe it ſhould ſail. Our Being we owe to his Power, our Well-being to his Care, our motion and exerting of every Faculty, to his merciful Providence and Concurrence; In Him we live and move, and have our being *. He frames our Being, preſerves our Lives, concurs with our Motion. This is an Idea that bears date in the Minds of Men, with the very Notion of a God. Why elſe did the Heathen in all their Straits fly to their Altars, and fill their Temples with Cries and Sacrifices? To what purpoſe was this, if they had not acknowledged God's Superintendency, his taking notice of their Cauſe, hearing their Prayers, conſidering their Cries? Why ſhould they do this, if they thought that God did not regard Humane Affairs, but ſtood untouched with a Senſe of their miſeries?

Acts* 17. 28.

If all things were done by chance, there could be no Predictions of Future Things, which we frequently find in Scripture, and by what ways accompliſhed. Impoſſible it is that any thing can be continued without his care. If God ſhould in the leaſt moment with-hold the Influence of his Providence, we ſhould melt into nothing, as the impreſſion of a Seal upon the Water vaniſhes, as ſoon as the Seal is removed; or as the Reflection of the Face in the Glaſs diſappears upon the firſt inſtant of our removal from it. The Light in the Air is by participation of the Light of the Sun; the Light in the Air with-draws upon the departure of the Sun. The Phyſical and Moral Goodneſs the Creature would vaniſh upon the removal of God from it, who is the Fountain of both.

What an Artificer doth work, may continue, though the Work-man dies, becauſe what he doth is materially, as to the Matter of it, ready to his hands; he creates not the Matter, but only ſets Materials together, and diſpoſeth them into ſuch a Form and Figure: But God gives a being to the Matter and Form of all Things, and therefore the Continuance of that being depends upon his preſerving Influence *. God upholds the World, and Cauſes all thoſe Laws which he hath impreſſed ſed upon every Creature, to be put in Execution; not as a Man that makes a Watch, and winds it up, and then ſuffers it to go of it ſelf; or that turns a River into another Channel, and lets it alone to run in the Graff he hath made for it; but there is continual Concurrence of God to this goodly Frame. For they do not only live, but move in him, or by him; His living and Omnipotent Power runs through every Vein of the Creation, giving it Life and Motion, and ordering the Acts of every Part of this great Body. All the Motions of ſecond Cauſes are ultimately reſolved into the Providence of God, who holds the firſt link of them in his Hands †. More particularly, the Nature of Providence may be explained by Two Propoſitions.

First Propoſition. The Univerſality of it. His Eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth.

Firſt. 1. The higheſt and moſt magnificent Pieces of the Creation.

1. Over Jeſus Chriſt, the firſt-born of every Creature. Gods Providence was in an eſpecial Manner converſant about him, and fixed upon him. It was by the determinate Counſel of God, that he was delivered up ‖. His Providence was diligently exerciſed about him in his whole courſe. Chriſt anſwers his Mothers ſolicitouſneſs with the Care his Father took of him *. Do you not know that I am about thoſe Things my Father takes Care of †? This Expoſition beſt agrees with his Reproof, who blames them for Creating ſo much trouble to themſelves upon their miſſing him in the Town. 'Tis not, why do you interrupt me in my Diſpute with the Jewiſh Doctors? But [how is it that you ſought me? Do you think I am not under the Care of my Father?] It was particularly exerciſed on him in the midſt of his Paſſion ‖. Seven Eyes were upon the Stone; Seven, a number of Perfection, a perfect and peculiar Care of God attended him.

2. Over Angels and Men. The Soul of the leaſt Animal, and the ſmalleſt plant, is formed and preſerved by God, but the breath of Mankind is more particularly in his Hand: Job 12. 10. In whoſe Hand is the Soul of every Living Thing, and the breath of all Mankind.

1. Over good Angels and Men. He charges his Angels with Folly and Weakneſs. They cannot direct themſelves without his Wiſdom, nor preſerve themſelves without his Power. God hath a Book of Providence, wherein he writes down who ſhall be preſerved, and this Book Moſes underſtands, Exod. 32. 33. Whoſoever hath ſinned againſt me, him will I blot out of my Book; not the Book of Election, no Names Written there are blotted out; but out of the Book of Providence As it is underſtood, Iſa. 4. 3. [Every one that is written among the Living in Jeruſalem,] i. e. every one whom God deſigns to Preſervation and Deliverance *. That God, ſurely, that hath a Care of the mean Animals, will not be careleſs of his affectionate Worſhippers. He that feeds the Ravens, will not ſtarve his Doves. He that ſatisfies the Ravening Wolf, will not famiſh his gentle Lambs and harmleſs Sheep. He ſhelters † Jacob from Labans Fury, and † Tutors him how he ſhould carry himſelf towards the good Man. He brought Haman out of Favour, and ſet Mordecai in his Place for the Deliverance of the Jews which were deſign'd for ſlaughter.

* Hortons Sermon. Pſalm 87. p. 56.

† Gen. 2. 9.

2. Over evil Angels and Men. Gods Power preſerves them, his Patience ſuffers them, his Wiſdom Orders them, and their evil Purpoſes and Performances to his own Glory. The Devil cannot arreſt Job, nor touch a Lamb of his Flock, nor a Hair of his Head, without a Commiſſion from God. He cannot enter into one filthy Swine in the Gadarenes herd, without asking our Saviour leave. Whatever he doth, he hath a Grant or Permiſſion from Heaven for it. Gods ſpecial Providence is over his People, but his general Providence over all Kingdoms and Countreys.

He takes Care of Syria, as well as of Judea; and ſends Eliſha to anoint Hazael King of Syria, as well as Jehu King of Iſrael ‖. Though Iſhmael had mocks for Iſaac, yet the God of Iſaac provided for the wants of Iſhmael *. He cauſeth his Sun to ſhine upon the unjuſt, as well as the juſt, to produce Fruits and Plants for their Preſervation.

‖ 1 Kings 19. 13.

* Gen. 25. 16, 17, 18.

II. Over the meaneſt Creatures. As the Suns Light, ſo Gods Providenc diſdains not the meaneſt Worms. 'Tis obſerved, that in the Enumeration of the Works of Creation †, only the Great Whales and ſmall creeping Things are mentioned, and not the intermediate Creatures; to ſhew, that the leaſt as well as the greateſt are under his Care. 'Tis one of his Titles to be the preſerver of Beaſts as well as Men ‖. He is the great Caterer for all Creatures *. The young Lyons ſeek their Meat from God. They attend him for their daily Portion, and what they gather and meet with in their purſuit, is Gods gift to them, Verſe 27, 28. He liſtens to the Cries of the young Ravens, though they are Birds of Prey. He gives to the Beaſt his Food, and to the young Ravens which cry †. In Pſalm 104. David throughout the whole reads a particular Lecture of this Doctrine, wherein you may take a Proſpect of Gods Providence all over the World. He Acts them by a Commandment and imprinted Law upon their Natures, and makes them obſerve exactly thoſe Statutes he enacts for the guidance of them in their proper Operations. Pſalm 147. 15. [He ſendeth forth his Commandment upon Earth, and his Word runs very ſwiftly] viz. his word of Providence. God keeps them in the Obſervation of their firſt Ordinance ‖. They obſerve their Stations, the Law God hath ſet them, as if they had a rational Knowledge of their Duty in their particular Motions, Pſalm 104. 19. The Sun knoweth his going down. Sometimes he makes them Inſtruments of his Miniſtry to us; ſometimes Executioners of his Judgments. Lice and Frogs arm themſelves at his command to puniſh Egypt. He makes a Whale to attend Jonas dropping into the Sea, to be an Inſtrument both to puniſh and preſerve him? Yea, and which is more wonderful, the multitude of the very Cattel is brought among others as a Reaſon of a Peoples Preſervation from Deſtruction, Jonah 4 11. The Multitude of the Cattel are joyned with the Multitude of the Infants, as an Argument to ſpare Nineveh. He remembers Noah's Cattel as well as his Sons, Gen. 8. 1. God remembred Noah and every living thing, and all the Cattel that were with him in * the Ark. He numbers the very Hairs of our Heads, that not one falls without his Will. Not only the immortal Soul, but the decaying Body; not only the vital Parts of that Body, but the inconſiderable Hairs of the Head, are under his Care.

† Pſa. 147 9.

‖ Pſal. 119. 91. They continue this day according to thine Ordinances, for all are thy Servants, i. e. The Earth and what is upon it.

* A particular Act of remembrance is exercis'd by God for the very Baſtel.

I. This is no diſhonour to God, to take care of the meaneſt Creatures. 'Tis as honourable for his Power to preſerve them, and his Wiſdom to Govern them, as for both to Create them. 'Tis one Part of a Mans Righteouſneſs to be merciful to his Beaſts which he never made; and is it not a Part of Gods Righteouſneſs, as the Rector of the World, to take Care of thoſe Creatures which he did not diſdain to give a Being to?

II. It rather conduceth to his Honour.

1. The Honour of his Goodneſs. It ſhews the comprehenſiveneſs of his Goodneſs, which embraceth in the Arms of his Providence, the loweſt Worm, as well as the higheſt Angel. Shall Infinite Goodneſs frame a thing, and make no Proviſion for its Subſiſtence? At the firſt Creation he acknowledged whatever he had Created, good in his kind, good in themſelves, good in order to the End for which he Created them; 'tis therefore an honourable thing for his goodneſs to Conduct them to that End which in their Creation he deſign'd them for; and not leave them wild diſorders, unſuitable to the End of that goodneſs which firſt called them into being. If he grow out of Love with the Operations of his Hands, he would ſeem to grow out of Love with his own Goodneſs that formed them.

2. The Honour of his Power and Wiſdom. The Power of God is as much ſeen in making an Inſect full of Life and Spirit in all the Parts of it, to perform all the Actions ſuitable to its Life and Nature, as in making Creatures of a greater Bulk; and is it not for the Honour of his Power to preſerve them, and the Honour of his Wiſdom to direct theſe little Animals to the End he intended in their Creation; for as little as they ſeem to be, an End they have, and glorious too, for natura nihil facit fruſtra. It ſeems not to conſiſt with his Wiſdom to neglect that which he hath vouchſafed to Create. And though the Apoſtle ſeems to deny Gods Care of Brutes, 1 Cor. 9. Doth God take care for Oxen? 'Tis true, God did not in that Law only take Care of Oxen, i. e. with a legiſlative Care, as making a Law only for them, though with a Providential Care he doth; but the Apoſtle there doth not deny Gods Care for Oxen, but makes an Argument a minori ad majus.

2. Providence extends to all the Actions and Motions of the Creature. Every ſecond Cauſe implies a dependance upon a firſt Cauſe in its Operation. If God did not extend his Providence over the Actions of Creatures, he would not every where, and in all Things and Beings be the firſt Cauſe.

1. To natural Actions. What an orderly Motion is there in the natural Actions of Creatures, which evidenceth a guidance by an higher Reaſon, ſince they have none of their own? How do Fiſh ſerve ſeveral Coaſts at ſeveral Seaſons, as if ſent upon a particular Meſſage by God? This cannot be by any other faculty than the inſtinct their Maker hath put into them. Plants that grow between a barren and fruitful Soil, ſhoot all their Roots towards the moiſt and fruitful Ground; by what other Cauſe than a ſecret Direction of Providential Wiſdom *? There is a Law impreſt upon them and their Motions, that are ſo orderly, as if they were acted according to a Covenant and Agreement between them and their Creator, and therefore called the Covenant of the Day and Night †. What avails the Toyl and Labour of Man in Plowing, Trading, Watching, unleſs God influence, unleſs he bleſs, unleſs he keep the City? The proceed of all Things depends upon his goodneſs in Bleſſing, and his Power in Preſerving. God ſignified this, when he gave the Law from Mount Sinai, promiſing the People, that if they kept his Commandments, he would give them Rain in due Seaſon, and that the Earth ſhould bring forth her Fruit ‖. Evidencing thereby, that thoſe natural Cauſes can produce nothing without his Bleſſing; that though they have natural Principles to produce ſuch Fruits according to their Natures, yet he can put a ſtop to their Operations, and make all their Fruits abortive. He weighs the Waters, how much ſhall be poured out in Showers of Rain upon the parched Earth. He makes a Decree for the Rain, and gives the Clouds Commiſſion to diſſolve themſelves ſo much and no more *. Yea, he doth Order the Conduct of them by Counſel, as imploying his Wiſdom about theſe Things which are of concern to the World. Job 37. 11, 12. He ſcattereth his bright Cloud, and it is turned round about by his Counſels, that they may do whatſoever he Commands them upon the Face of the World in the Earth.

2. To Civil Actions. Counſels of Men are ordered by him to other Ends than what they aim at, and which their Wiſdom cannot diſcover. God ſtirred up Sennacherib to be the Executioner of his Juſtiee upon the Jews, and afterwards upon the Egyptians, when that great King deſigned only the Satisfaction of his Ambition in the enlarging his Kingdom, and ſupporting his greatneſs, Iſa. 10. 6, 7. I will ſend him againſt an Hypocritical Nation, and againſt the People of my Wrath: Howbeit he means not ſo, neither doth his Heart think ſo, [He Deſigns not to be an Inſtrument of my Juſtice] but it is in his Heart to deſtroy and cut off Nations, not a few. His Thoughts and Aims were far different from Gods Thoughts. The Hearts of Kings are in his Hands, as wax in the Hands of a Man, which he can Work into what form and ſhape he pleaſes. He hath the Soveraignty over, and the ordering the Hearts of Magiſtrates, Pſalm 47. 9. The Shields of the Earth belong unto God. Counſels of Men for the good of his People, are his Act. The Princes adviſed Jeremiah and Baruch, Jer. 36. 19. To hide themſelves, which they did, yet ver. 26. it is ſaid the Lord hid them. Though they followed the Advice of their Court-friends, yet they could not have been ſecured, had not God ſtep't in by his Providential Care, and covered them with his Hand. It was the Courtiers Counſel, but God challenges the Honour of the Succeſs.

Military Actions are ordered by him. Marſhal Employments are ordered by his Providence. He is the great General of Armies: 'Tis obſerved that in the two Prophets, Iſaiah and Jeremiah, God is called the Lord of Hoſts no leſs than a Hundred and Thirty Times †.

3. To preternatural Actions. God doth command Creatures to do thoſe things which are no way ſuitable to their Inclinations, and gives them ſometimes for his own Service, a writ of Eaſe from the performance of the natural Law He hath impreſſed upon them. A devouring Raven is made by the Providence of God the Prophet's Caterer in time of Famine *. God inſtructs a Ravenous Bird in a Leſſon of Abſtinence for Elijah's ſafety, and makes it both a Cook and a Serving-man to the Prophet. The Whale that delights to play about the deepeſt part of the Ocean, approaches to the Shore, and attends upon Jonah to tranſport him to the dry Land *. The Fire * was ſlacked by God, that it ſhould not ſinge the leaſt Hair of the three Childrens Heads, but was let looſe to conſume the * Officers of the Court. The Mouths of the Ravenous Lyons which had been kept with an empty Stomach, were muzled by God, that they ſhould not prey upon Daniel in a whole Nights ſpace. God taught them an Heroical Temperance with ſo dainty a Diſh at their Mouths, and yet they tore the Accuſers in a trice.

4. To all ſupernatural and miraculous Actions of the Creatures which are as ſo many new Creations. As when the Sun went back-ward in Hezekiah's Time; when it ſtood ſtill in the Valley of Ajalon, that Joſhua might compleat his Victory on the Canaanites. The boiſterous Waves ſtood on a heap like Walls to ſecure the Iſraelites Paſſage; but returning turning to their natural Motion, were the Ægyptians Sepulchre. When Creatures have ſtept out of their natural Courſe, it could not be the act of the Creature, it being ſo much againſt and above their natures, but it muſt be by the order of ſome Superiour Power.

5. To all fortuitous Actions. What is caſual to us, is ordained by God; as Effects ſtand related to the Second Cauſe, they are many times contingent, but as they ſtand related to the Firſt Cauſe, they are Acts of his Counſel, and directed by his Wiſdom. God never left Second Cauſes to ſtraggle and operate in a vagabond way; though the effect ſeem to us to be a looſe Act of the Creature, yet it is directed by a Superiour Cauſe to a higher end than we can preſently imagine. The whole diſpoſing of the Lot which is caſt into the Lap, is from the Lord *. A Souldier ſhoots an Arrow at random, and God guides it to be the Executioner of Ahab for his Sin *; which Death was fore-told by Micaiah, v. 17, 28. God gives us a certain Rule to judge of ſuch Contingencies, Exod. 21. 13. And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; A Man accidentally kills another, but it is done by a Secret Commiſſion from God. [God delivered him into his hands.] Providence is the great Clock, keeping time and order, not only hourly, but inſtantly, to its own honour *.

*Pro. 16. 33.

* 1 Kings 22. 34.

* Fuller Eccl. Hiſt. Cent. 6. b. 2 p. 1.

6. To all voluntary Actions.

1. To good Actions. Not by compelling, but ſweetly inclining, determining the Will, ſo that it doth that willingly, which by an unknown and unſeen neceſſity cannot be omitted. It conſtrains not a Man to Good againſt his Will, but powerfully moves the Will to do that by conſent, which God hath determined ſhall be done. The way of man is not in himſelf; the Motion is Mans, the Action is Mans, but the direction of his ſteps is from God. Jer. 10. 23. 'Tis not in man that walketh, to direct his ſteps.

2. To evil Actions.

1. In permitting them to be done. Idolatries and Follies of the Heathen were permitted by God. He checked them not in their Courſe, but laid the Reins upon their Necks, and ſuffered them to run what Race they pleaſed, Acts 14. 16. Who in times paſt ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Not the moſt execrable Villany that ever was committed in the World, could have been done without his permiſſion. Sin is not amabile propter ſe, and therefore the permiſſion of it is not deſirable in it ſelf, but the permiſſion of it is only deſirable, and honeſtatur ex fine. God is good and wiſe, and righteous in all his acts: ſo likewiſe in this act of permitting Sin; and therefore He wills it out of ſome good and righteous end, which belongs to the manifeſtation of his glory, which is that He intends in all the acts of his will; of which this is one. Wicked Men are ſaid to be a Staff in God's hand; as a Man manages a Staff which is in his own power, ſo doth God manage wicked Men for his own holy purpoſes, and they can go no further than God gives them Licenſe.

2. In ordering them. God governs them by his own unſearchable Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and directs them to the beſt and holieſt ends. Contrary to the natures of the Sins, and the intentions of the Sinner. Joſeph's Brothers ſold him to gratifie their Revenge, and God ordered it for their Preſervation in a time of Famine. Pharaoh's hardneſs is ordered by God for his own glory, and that King's deſtruction: God decrees the delivering up Chriſt to Death, and Herod, Pilate, the Phariſees, and common rout of People, in ſatisfying their own Paſſion, do but execute what God had before ordained, Acts 4. 28. For to do whatſoever thy hand and thy Counſel determined before to be done. Judas his Covetouſneſs, and the Devils malice, are ordered by God to execute his Decree for the Redemption of the World. Titus the Emperor, his Ambition led him to Jeruſalem, but God's end is the fulfilling of his Threatnings, and the taking revenge upon the Jews, for their murdering of Chriſt. The aim of the Phyſician is the Patient's Health, when the intent of the Leeches is only to ſuck the Blood. God hath holy ends in permitting Sin, while Man hath unworthy ends in committing it. The Rain which makes the Earth fruitful, is exhaled out of the Salt Waters, which would of themſelves ſpoil the ground, and make it unfruitful. The deceiver and the deceived are his, Job 12. 16. Both the Action of the Devil the Seducer, and of wicked Men the Seduced, are reſtrained by God within due bounds, in ſubſerviency to his Righteous Will. [For with him is ſtrength and wiſdom.]

2. As Providence is Univerſal, ſo it is Myſterious. Second Propoſition. Who can trace the motions of God's Eyes in their race? He makes the Clouds his Chariot * in his motions about the Earth, and his Throne is in the dark. He walks upon the wings of the Wind. His providential ſpeed makes it too quick for our Underſtanding. His ways are myſterious, and put the Reaſon and Wiſdom of Men to a ſtand. The cleareſt ſighted Servants of God do not ſee the bottom of his works, the motion of God's Eyes is too quick for ours.

Pſal. 194. 3.

John Baptiſt is ſo aſtoniſh'd at the ſtrange Condeſcenſion of his Saviour to be Baptiſed of him, that he forbids it *; Man is a weak Creature, and cannot trace or ſet out the Wiſdom of God.

*Mat. 3.

But this myſteriouſneſs and darkneſs of Providence adds a luſtre to it. As Stones ſet in Ebony, though the grounds be dark, make the beauty and ſparkling the clearer.

1. His ways are above humane Methods. Dark Providences are often the ground-work of ſome excellent Piece He is about to diſcover to the World. His Methods are like a plaited Picture, which on the one ſide repreſents a Negro, on the other a Beauty. He lets Sarahs Womb be dead, and then brings out the root of a numerous Progeny. He makes Jacob a Cripple, and then a Prince to prevail with God; he gives him a wound, and then a Bleſſing. He ſends not the Goſpel till Reaſon was nonpluſt, and that the World in that higheſt Wiſdom it had at that Time attained unto, was not able to arrive to the Knowledge of God; 1 Cor. 1. 21. After that the World by Wiſdom knew not God, it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of Preaching to ſave them that believe.

2. His Ends are of a higher ſtrain than the aims of Men. Who would have thought that the Forces Cyrus raiſed againſt Babylon to ſatisfie his own Ambition, ſhould be a means to deliver the Iſraelites, and reſtore the Worſhip of God in the Temple? God had this End, which Iſaiah Prophecyed of, and Cyrus never dreamt of, Iſa. 44. 28. That ſaith of Cyrus, thou art my Shepherd, and ſhalt perform all my Pleaſure, even ſaying, that Jeruſalem ſhall be built, &c. * And this a long Time before Cyrus was Born: Pharaoh ſent Iſrael a way in the very Night, at the end of the four hundred and thirty Years, the Time perfixt by God; he could not keep them longer becauſe Gods Promiſe, he could not keep them longer becauſe Gods Promiſe, he would not becauſe of Gods Plagues. God aims at the glorifying his Truth, in keeping touch with his Word. Pharaoh Deſigns not the accompliſhing Gods Will, but his Delverance from Gods Judgment.

There

There is an observable Consideration to this Purpose, How Gods Ends are far different from Mans, Luke 2. 1, 4. In the Taxing the whole World by Augustus. Augustus out of Pride to see what a numerous People he was Prince of, would Tax the whole World: Some tell us he had appointed the enrolling the whole Empire Twenty Seven Years before the Birth of our Saviour, and had proclaimed it at Tarracon in Spain: But soon after this Proclamation, Augustus found a breaking out of some stirs, and thereupon deferred his Resolution to some other fit Time, which was the very Time of the Birth of Christ. See now Gods wise disposal of Things, in changing Augustus's Resolution, and deferring it till the Forty Fourth Year of his Reign, when Christ was ready to come into the World! And by this giving occasion, yea, necessitating Mary to come from Nazareth, where Joseph and Mary dwelt, who perhaps being big with Child, without this necessity laid upon her by the Emperors Edict, would not have ventured upon the Journey to Bethlehem: There she falls in Travel, that so Christ, the Seed of David, being conceived in Nazareth should be born at Bethlehem, where Jesse lived, and David was Born. How wisely doth God order the Ambition and Pride of Men to fulfil his own Predictions, and to publish the Truth of Christs Birth of the Seed of David, for the Names of Joseph and Mary were found in the Records of Rome in Tertullians Time?

3. God hath several Ends in the same Action. Jacob is oppresst with Famine, Pharaoh enricht with Plenty, but Joseph's Imprisonment is in Order to his Fathers Relief, and Pharaohs wealth; his Mistresses Anger flings him into a Prison. Joseph is wronged, and hath Captivity for a Reward of his Chastity. God makes it a step to his Advancement, and by this way brings him from a Captive to be a Favourite. What is Gods End? Not only to preserve the Ægyptian Nation, but old Jacob and his Family. Was this all that God aimed at? No, He hath a further Design, and lays the Foundation of something to be acted in the Future Age. By this means Jacob is brought into Ægypt, leaves his Posterity there, makes way for that Glory in the working of the Future Miracles for their Deliverance, such an Action that the World should continually ring of, and which should be a Type of the spiritual Deliverance by Christ.

4. God has more remote Ends than short sighted Souls are able to espy. God doth not Eye the present Advantage of himself and his Creature, but hath an Eye to his own Glory in all, yea, in the very last Ages of the World. In small things, there are often great Designs laid by God, and Mysteries in the least of his Acts. Isaac was delivered from his Fathers Sword, when he was intentionally Dead, to set forth to the World a Type of Christs Resurrection, and a Ram is conducted thither by God, and entangled in the Thickets, and appointed to sacrifice, whereby God sets forth a Type of Christs Death. † He useth the Captivities of the People, to enlarge the bounds of the Gospel.

† Halls Contempl. P. 796.

The wise Men were guided by a Star to Christ as King of the Jews, and come to pay homage to him in his Infancy; when was the Foundation of this remarkable Event laid? Probably, in Balaams Prophecy, Numb. 24. 17. I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh. There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Scepter shall rise out of Israel, &c. transmitted by Tradition to those wise Men, and perhaps renewed by Sibilla Chaldæa, and confirm'd in their Minds by the Jews, whilst in the Babylonish Captivity they Conversed with them. Thus God many Ages before in this Prophecy had an End in promoting the readier Entertainment of Christ among this People, when he should be Born; what the Wise Mens end was, the Scripture doth not acquaint us; but however, their Gifts were a means to preserve our Saviour, Joseph and Mary, from the Rage of a Tyrant, and affording them where-withal to support them in Ægypt, whither they were ordered by God to fly for Security. So ‖ God threatens by the Prophet the Noble-man for his scoffing unbelief, that though he should see the Plenty, that he should not taste of it. See how God doth order Second Causes, naturally to bring about his own Decree! The King gives this Person charge of the Gate; whilst the People croud for Provision to satisfie their hunger, they accomplish the Threatning which they had no Intentions to do, and trod him to Death. Now I come to shew, That there is a Providence.

‖ 2 Kings 7. 1, 2, 17.

1. The Wisdom of God would not be so perspicuous were there not a Providence in the World. 'Tis eminent in the Creation, but more illustrious in the Government of the Creatures. A Musician discovers more skill in the touching an Instrument, and ordering the Strings, to sound what Notes he pleaseth, than he doth in the first framing and making of it. * All Gods Providences are but his touch of the Strings of this great Instrument of the World. And all his Works are excellent, because they are the Fruit of his wonderful Counsel, and unsearchable Wisdom, which is most seen in his Providence, as in reading the Verses before. His Power is glorified in creating and upholding this Fabrick: How shall his Wisdom be glorified but in his Government of it? Surely God will be no less intent upon the Honour of his Wisdom, than upon that of his Power. For if any Attribute may be said to excel another, it is his Wisdom and Holiness, because those are Perfections which God hath stampt upon the nobler Part of his Creation. Inferiour Creatures have more Power and Strength than Man, but Wisdom is the Perfection of a rational Creature. Now it is Gods Wisdom to direct all Things to their proper End, as well as to appoint them their Ends, which Direction must be by a particular Providence, especially in those Things which know not their End, and have no Reason to guide them; we know in the World it is not a Part of Wisdom to leave Things to chance, but to state our ends, and lay a Plat-form of those means which direct to an attaining of them. And Wisdom is most seen in drawing all things together, and making them subservient to the End he hath fixed to himself; and therefore one of the great Things that shall be admired at last, next to the great Work of Redemption, will be the Harmony and Consent of those Things which seemed contrary, how they did all conspire for the bringing about that End which God aimed at.

* Isa. 28. 29. This also comes from the Lord of Hosts, which is wonderful in Counsel, and excellent in working.

2. The means whereby God acts, discover a Providence. He Acts. Secondly.

I. By small Means. The considerable Actions in the World have usually very small beginnings. As of a few Letters, how many Thousand words are made? Of Ten Figures, how many Thousand Numbers? And a Point is the beginning of all Geometry. A little Stone flung into a Pond, makes a little Circle, then a greater, till it inlargeth it self to both the sides. So from small beginnings, God doth cause an efflux through the whole World.

1. He useth small means in his ordinary Works. The common Works of Nature spring from small begin-beginnings. Great Plants are formed from ſmall Seeds. The Clouds which Water the great Garden of the World, are but a Collection of Vapours. The nobleſt Operations of the Soul are wrought in an Organ, viz. The Brain, compoſed of coagulated Phlegm. Who would imagine that Saul in ſeeking his Fathers Aſſes, ſhould find a Kingdom?

2. In his extraordinary Works he uſeth ſmall means. Eliſha that waited upon Elijah, and poured Water upon his Hands, ſhall do greater Miracles then his Maſter. And the Apoſtles ſhall do greater
* Joh. 14. 12. Works than Chriſt *; that the World may know that God is not tyed to any means that Men count excellent; that all Creatures are his, and Act not of themſelves, but by his Spirit and Power.

In his extraordinary Works of Juſtice. He makes a Rod in the Hand of Moſes to confound the skill of the Ægyptian Magicians: He commiſſioned Frogs and Flyes to countercheck a powerful and mighty People; when Benhadad was ſo proud as to ſay, the Duſt of Samaria ſhould not ſuffice for handfuls for his Army, God ſcattered
† 1 Kings 20. 14. The young Men of the Princes of the Provinces. his Army by the Lacquies of the Princes † about two hundred thirty two, ver. 15. The little ſling in the Hand of David a Youth, guided by Gods Eye and Hand, is a match fit enough for a blaſphemous Gyant, and defeats the Strength of a Weavers beam.

In his extraordinary Works of Mercy.

1. In the Deliverance of a People or Perſon. A Dream was the occaſion of Joſephs greatneſs, and Joſephs Preſervation. He uſed the Cacklings of Geeſe to ſave the Roman Capitol from a ſurprize by the Gauls. He picks out Gideon to be a Gene-
|| Judg. 6. 15. ral, who was leaſt in his Fathers eſteem ||; and what did his Army conſiſt of, but few, and thoſe
* Judg. 7. 6, 7. fearful *; thoſe that took Water with their Hands, (which as Joſephus ſaith, is a natural Sign of fear) did God chooſe out to overthrow the Midianites who had over-ſpread the Land as Graſhoppers, to ſhew that he can make the moſt fearful Men to be ſufficient Inſtruments againſt the greateſt Powers, when the Concernments of his Church and People lye at Stake.

God ſo delights in thus baffling the Pride of Men, that Aſa uſes it as an Argument to move God to deliver him in the ſtrait he was in, when Zerah the Æthiopian came againſt him with a great Multitude, when he was but a ſmall Point and Center in † 2 Chro. 14. 11. Lord, it is nothing with thee to help with many or with few. the midſt of a wide Circumference †. Hereby God ſets off his own Power, and evidenceth his ſuperintendent Care of his People. It was more ſignally the Arm of God for Moſes to confound Pharaoh with his Lice and Frogs, than if he had beaten him in a plain Field with his Six Hundred Thouſand Iſraelites.

2. In the Salvation of the Soul. Our Saviour himſelf, though God, the great Redeemer of the World, was ſo mean in the Eyes of the World,
|| Pſal. 22. 6. that he calls himſelf a Worm, and no Man ||. He picks out many Times the moſt unlikely Perſons to accompliſh the greateſt Purpoſes for Mens Souls. He lodgeth the Treaſures of Wiſdom in Veſſels of Earth; he choſe not the Cedars of Lebanon, but the Shrubs of the Valley; not the learned Phariſees of Jeruſalem, but the poor Men of Galilee; out of the Mouths of Babes and Sucklings, he ordains Praiſe to himſelf.

The Apoſtles breeding was not capable of ennobling their Minds, and fitting them for ſuch great Actions as Chriſt employed them in. But after he had new-moulded and enflamed their Spirits, he made them of Fiſhermen, greater Conquerors of the World, than the moſt magnified Grandees could pretend to.

Thus Salvation is wrought by a crucified Chriſt; and that God who made the World by Wiſdom, would ſave it by the fooliſhneſs of Preaching. And make Paul, the leaſt of the Apoſtles as he Terms himſelf, more ſucceſsful than thoſe who had been inſtructed at the Feet of Chriſt *. * 2 Cor. 15. 9, 10.

2. By contrary Means. God by his Providence makes contrary Things contribute to his Glory, as contrary Colours in a Picture do to the Beauty of the Piece. Nature is Gods Inſtrument to do whatſoever he pleaſes; and therefore nothing ſo contrary, but he may bring to his own Ends. As in ſome Engines you ſhall ſee Wheels have contrary Motions, and yet all in order to one and the ſame End. God cured thoſe by a Brazen Serpent, which were ſtung by the fiery ones; whereas Braſs is naturally hurtful to thoſe that are bit by Serpents †. † Grotius Mat. 20. 16. Æs naturaliter nocet τοῖς ὑπὸ ὀφέων δήκτοις.

1. Afflictions. Joſeph is ſold for a Slave, and God ſends him as a Harbinger; his Brothers ſold him to deſtroy him, and God ſends him to ſave them. Pauls Bonds in the opinion of ſome might have ſtifled the Goſpel; but he tells us, that they had fallen out to the furtherance of the Goſpel, Phil. 1. 12.

2. Sins. || God doth often Effect his juſt Will by our weakneſs; neither thereby juſtifying our Infirmities, nor blemiſhing his own Action: Jacob gets the Bleſſing by unlawful means, telling no leſs than two lies to attain it; [I am Eſau, and this is Veniſon] but hereby God brings about the performance of his Promiſe, which Iſaac's natural Affection to Eſau would have hindred Jacob of. || Hall contempl. Book 3. p. 806, 807.

The Breach of the firſt Covenant was an occaſion of introducing a better. Mans ſinning away his firſt Stock, was an occaſion to God to enrich him with a Surer. The loſs of his Original Righteouſneſs made way for a clearer and more durable. The Folly of Man made way for the Evidence of Gods Wiſdom; and the Sin of Man for the Manifeſtation of his Grace; and by the wiſe diſpoſal of God, open a way for the Honour of thoſe Attributes, which would not elſe have been experimentally known by the Sons of Men.

3. Caſual Means. The Viper which leapt upon Pauls Hand out of the bundle of Sticks, was a caſual Act, but deſigned by the Providence of God for the Propagation of the Goſpel. Pharaoh's Daughter comes caſually to waſh her ſelf in the River, but indeed conducted by the ſecret Influence of God upon her, to reſcue Moſes, expoſed to a forlorn Condition, and breed him up in the Ægyptian Learning, that he might be the fitter to be his kindreds Deliverer. Saul had been hunting David, and at laſt had lodged him in a Place whence he could not well eſcape, and being ready to ſeize upon him in that very inſtant of time, a Poſt comes to Saul, and brings the News that the Philiſtines had invaded the Land, which cut out other Work for him, and David for that Time eſcapes *. * 1 Sam. 23, 26, 27, 28.

3. Reaſon. Such Actions and Events of Things are in the World, which cannot rationally be aſcribed to any other Cauſe than a ſupream Providence. 'Tis ſo in common Things. Men have the ſame Parts, the ſame outward Advantages, the ſame Induſtry, and yet proſper not alike. One labours much, and gets little; another uſes not altogether ſuch endeavours, and hath Riches flowing in upon him. Men lay their Projects deep, and queſtion not the Accompliſhment of them, and are diſappointed by ſome ſtrange and unforeſeen accident. And ſometimes Men attain what they deſire in a different Way, and many Times contrary to the Method they had Projected. This is evidenced, Thirdly.

1. By

1. By the Reſtraints upon the Paſſions of Men. The Waves of the Sea, and the Tumults of the People, are much of the ſame impetuous Natures, and are quelled by the ſame power. * Tumults of the People could no more be ſtilled by the force of a Man, than the Waves of the Sea by a puff of Breath. How ſtrangely did God qualifie the Hearts of the Egyptians willingly to ſubmit to the Sale of their Land, when they might have riſen in a tumult, broke open the Granaries, and ſupplied their wants *. Indeed, if the World were left to the conduct of Chance and Fortune, what work would the Savage Luſts and Paſſions of Men make among us? How is it poſſible that any but an Almighty Power can temper ſo many jarring Principles, and rank ſo many quarrelſom and turbulent Spirits in a due order? If thoſe bruitiſh Paſſions which boil in the Hearts of Men, were let looſe by that Infinite Power that bridles them, how ſoon would the World be run head-long into unconceivable Confuſions, and be rent in pieces by its own diſorders?

* Pſal. 65. 7. which ſtilleth the noiſe of the Sea, and tumult of the People.

* Gen. 47. 19, 21.

2. By the ſudden changes which are made upon the Spirits of Men for the preſervation of others. God takes off the Spirit of ſome, as He did the Wheels from the Egyptian Chariots, in the very act of their rage. Paul was ſtruck down, and changed while he was yet breathing out threatnings, &c. God ſees all the workings of Men's Hearts, all thoſe cruel Intentions in Eſau againſt his Brother Jacob; but God on a ſudden turns away that torrent of Hatred, and diſpoſeth Eſau for a friendly Meeting *. And he who had before an exaſperated malice, by reaſon of the loſs of his Birthright and Bleſſing, was in a moment a changed Man. Thus was Saul's heart changed towards David, and from a Perſecutor, turns a Juſtifier of him, confeſſeth David's Innocence, and his own Guilt, 1 Sam. 24. 17, 18. Thou art more righteous than I, for thou haſt rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil, &c. What reaſon can be rendred for ſo ſudden a change in Saul's revengeful Spirit, which had all the force of Intereſt to ſupport it, and conſidered by him at that very time? For ver. 24. he takes ſpecial notice that his Family ſhould be diſinherited, and David be his Succeſſor in the Throne. How ſuddenly did God turn the Edge of the Sword, and the Heart of an Enemy from Jehoſaphat, 2 Chron. 18. 31. Jehoſaphat cried out, and the Lord helped him, and God moved them to depart from him. The Holy Ghoſt emphatically aſcribes it to God's motion of their wills, by twice expreſſing it: But ſtranger is the preſervation of the Jews from Haman's bloody Deſigns, after the Decree was gone out againſt them. Mordecai the Jew is made Ahaſuerus's Favourite by a ſtrange wheeling of Providence. Firſt, the King's Eyes are held waking, and he is inclined to paſs away the Solitarineſs of the Night with a Book, rather than a Game, or ſome other Court Paſt-time; no Book did he fix on but the Records of that Empire, no place in that voluminous Book, but the Chronicle of Mordecai's Service * in the diſcovery of a Treaſon againſt the King's Life; he doth not careleſly paſs it over, but enquires what Recompence had been beſtowed on Mordecai for ſo conſiderable a Service, and this juſt before Mordecai ſhould have been deſtroyed; had Ahaſuerus ſlept, Mordecai, and all his Country-men had been Sacrificed, notwithſtanding all his Loyalty. Could this be a caſt of blind Chance, which had ſuch a Concatenation of Evidences in it for a Superiour Power?

* Gen. 33. 4.

* Eſther 6. 1, 2.

3. In cauſing Enemies to do things for others which are contrary to all rules of Policy. 'Tis wonderful, that the Jews, a People known to be of a ſtubborn Nature, and tenacious of their Laws, wherein they differed from all the Nations, ſhould in the worſt of their Captivities be ſo often befriended by their Conquerors, not only to Re-build their City, and Re-edifie their Temple, but at the Charge of their Conquerors too. The very Enemies that had captivated the Jews, though they knew them to be a People apt to Rebel: That the People whoſe Temple they helped to build, would keep up a diſtinct Worſhip, and difference in Religion, which is uſually attended with the greateſt Animoſities. And when they knew it to be ſo ſtrong in Situation, as to be a Fort as well as a place of Worſhip. That for this, their Enemies ſhould furniſh them with Materials, when they were not in a condition to procure any for themſelves, and give them Money out of the Publick Exchequer, and Timber out of the King's Foreſt, as we read *. And all this they look'd upon as the Hand of God. Ezra 6. 22. [The Lord had turned the heart of the King of Aſſyria unto them, to ſtrengthen their hands in the work of the houſe of God. And the Heathen Artaxerxes takes notice of it. Cicero tells us, That in his time Gold was carried out of Italy for the Ornament of the Temple. They had their Rites in Religion preſerved intire under the Roman Government, tho' more different from the Roman Cuſtoms than any Nation ſubdued by them. Dion, and Seneca, and others, obſerve, That where-ever they were tranſplanted, they proſper'd and gave Laws to the Victors. And this was ſo generally acknowledged, that Haman's Cabinet-Council (who were ſurely none of the meaneſt States-men) gave him no hopes of ſucceſs, when he appeared againſt Mordecai, becauſe he was of the Race of the Jews *; ſo much did God own them by his Gracious Providence: They were alſo ſo intire in all their Captivities, before their Crucifying of our Lord and Saviour, that they count their Genealogies.

4. In Infatuating the Counſels of Men. God ſets a ſtamp of Folly upon the Wiſdom of Men, Iſa. 44. 25. That turns the wiſe men back-ward, and makes their knowledge fooliſhneſs. And makes their Counſels as chaff and ſtubble. Iſa. 33. 11. [Ye ſhall conceive chaff, and ſhall bring forth ſtubble.] Herod was a crafty Perſon, inſomuch that Chriſt calls him Fox. How fooliſh was he in managing his Project of deſtroying Chriſt, his ſuppoſed Competitor in the Kingdom, when the wiſe Men came to Jeruſalem, and brought the News of the Birth of a King of the Jews? He calls a Synod of the ableſt Men among the Jews. The reſult of it is to manifeſt the Truth of God's Perdiction in the place of our Saviours Birth, and to direct the wiſe Men in their way to him. Herod had no reſolutions, but bloody, concerning Chriſt *. God blinds his mind in the midſt of all his craft, that he ſees not thoſe rational ways, which he might make uſe of for the deſtruction of that which he feared; he ſends thoſe wiſe Men, meer Strangers to him, and intruſts them with ſo great a concern; he goes not himſelf, nor ſends any of his Guard with them, to cut him off immediately upon the diſcovery, but leaves the whole Conduct of the Buſineſs to thoſe he had no acquaintance with, and of whoſe Faithfulneſs he could have no aſſurance. God croſſes the Intentions of Men. Joab ſlew Amaſa, becauſe he thought him his Rival in David's Favour, and then imagined he had rid his hands of all that could ſtand in his way; yet God raiſed up Benajah, who drew Joab from the Horns of the Altar, and cut him in pieces at Solomon's command. God doth ſo order it many times, that when the moſt rational Counſel is given to Men, they have not Hearts

* Mat. 2. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

Hearts to follow it. Achitophel gave as ſuitable Counſel for Abſolom's deſign, as the beſt Stateſman in the World could give *; To ſurprize David while he was amus'd at his Son's Rebellion, and dejected with Grief at ſo unnatural an Action, and whilſt his Forces had not yet made their Rendezvouz, and thoſe that were with him were tired in their march. Speed was beſt in attempts of this nature. David, in all probability, had been cut off, and the Hearts of the People would have melted at the fall of their Soveraign. But Abſolom inclines rather to Huſhai's Counſel, which was not ſo proper for the buſineſs he had engaged in, ver. the 7th. to ver. 14. Now this was from God. For the Lord had appointed to defeat the good Counſel of Achitophel, to the intent that the Lord might bring evil upon Abſolom. So fooliſh were the Egyptians againſt Reaſon, in entring into the Red Sea after the Iſraelites; for could they poſſibly think that that God who had by a ſtrong Hand, and an Army of Prodigies brought Iſrael out of their Captivity, and conducted them thus far, and now by a Miracle opened the Red Sea, and gave them paſſage through the Bowels of it, ſhould give their Enemies the ſame ſecurity in purſuing them, and unravel all that Web he had been ſo long a working?

* 2 Sam. 17. 1, 2.

5. In making the Counſels of Men ſubſervient to the very ends they deſign againſt. God brings a Cloud upon Mens Underſtandings, and makes them the Contrivers of their own Ruine, wherein they intend their own ſafety, and gains Honour to himſelf by out-witting the Creature. The Babel-Projectors fearing to be ſcattered abroad, would erect a Power to prevent, and this proved the occaſion of diſperſing them over the World in ſuch a confuſion, that they could not underſtand one another *. God ordered Pharaoh's Policies to accompliſh the end againſt which they were directed. He is afraid Iſrael ſhould grow too mighty, and ſo wreſt the Kingdom out of his hands, and therefore he would oppreſs them to hinder their increaſe, which made them both ſtronger, and more numerous. [Exerciſe ſtrengthens Men, and Luxury ſoftens the Spirit.] The Jews fear, if they ſuffered Chriſt to make a farther progreſs in his Doctrine and Miracles, they ſhould loſe Cæſar's Favour, and expoſe their Countrey as a Prey to a Roman Army; this cauſed their Deſtruction by thoſe Enemies they thought by this means to prevent; God ordering it ſo, that a Roman Army was poured in upon them, which ſwept them into all corners of the Earth. Prieſts and Phariſees ſit cloſe together in Counſel, how to hinder Mens Believing in Chriſt, and the reſult of their Conſultation was to put Him to death, and no Man then would believe in a dead Perſon, not capable of working any Miracles *, for the amuſing of the People, and by this means there were a greater number of Believers on Him, than in the time of his Life, according to his own Prediction, John 12. 32. And I, if I be lifted up from the Earth, will draw all men unto me.

* Gen. 11. 4. 8.

* Joh. 11. 47, 48, 49.

6. In making the Fancies of Men ſubſervient to their own ruine. God brings about ſtrange Events by the meer Imaginations and Conceits of Men, which are contrary to common and natural Obſervation, and the ordinary courſe of Rational Conſequences *. The Army of the Moabites which had invaded Iſrael, thought the two Kings of Judah and Iſrael had turned their Swords againſt one another, becauſe the riſing Sun had coloured thoſe unexpected Waters, and made them look red, which they took for the Blood of their Enemies, and ſo diſorderly run without Examination of the Truth of their Conceit; but inſtead of dividing the Spoil, they left their Lives upon the Points of the Iſraelites Swords. So the Syrian Army are ſcared with a panick Fear, and ſcatter themſelves upon an empty ſound *. Thus a Dream ſtruck a terror into the Midianites, and the noiſe of the broken Pot-ſheards made them fear ſome Treaſon in their Camp, and cauſed them to turn their Swords into one anothers bowels, Judg. 7. 19, 22. The Lord ſet every Man's Sword againſt his fellow.

* 2 Kings 3, 22, 23.

* 2 Kings 7. 6.

Firſt Queſtion. If God's Providence orders all things in the World, and concurs to every thing, How will you free God from being the Author of Sin? Queſt.

Anſwer in ſeveral Propoſitions.

1. 'Tis certain, God hath a Hand about all the ſinful Actions in the World. The Selling Joſeph to the Iſhmaelites was the act of his Brethren; the ſending him into Egypt was the act of God *, Gen. 45. 8. It was not you that ſent me hither, but God; where Joſeph aſcribes it more to God than to them. Their wicked Intention was to be rid of him, that he might tell no more Tales of them to his Father: God's gracious Intention was to advance him for his Honour, and their Good; and to bring about this gracious purpoſe, He makes uſe of their ſinful practice. God's end was righteous, when theirs was wicked. 'Tis ſaid, God moved David to number the People, 2 Sam. 24. 1. The anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, and He moved David againſt them to ſay, Go number Iſrael and Judah. Yet Satan is ſaid to provoke David to number the People, 1 Chron. 21. 1. And Satan ſtood up againſt Iſrael, and provoked David to number Iſrael. Here are two Agents; but the Text mentions God's hand in it out of Juſtice to puniſh Iſrael; Satan's end, no queſtion, was out of Malice to deſtroy. Satan wills it as a Sin. God as a Puniſhment. God, ſay ſome, Permiſſive, Satan Efficaciter. In the moſt villanous and unrighteous Action that ever was done, God is ſaid to have an Influence on it. God is ſaid to deliver up Chriſt, Acts 2. 23. Him, being delivered by the determinate Counſel and fore Knowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain. Acts 4. 28. For to do whatſoever thy hand and thy counſel determined before to be done. Not barely as an act of his Preſcience, but his Counſel, and that determinate, i. e. ſtable and irreverſible. He makes a diſtinction between thoſe two Acts. In God it was an act of Counſel, in them an act of wickedneſs [by wicked hands;] there was God's Counſel about it, an actual Tradition. Rom. 8. 32. He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. All the Agents had ſeveral ends. God in that act aimed at the Redemption of the World; Satan at the preventing it; Judas to ſatisfie his Covetouſneſs; the Jews to preſerve themſelves from the Roman Invaſion, and out of Malice to Him for ſo ſharply reproving them. God had a gracious Principle of Love to Mankind, and acted for the Salvation of the World in it; the Inſtruments had baſe Principles and Ends, and moved freely in Obedience to them. So in the Affliction of Job, both God and Satan had an hand in it. Job. 1. 12. The Lord ſaid unto Satan, behold, all that he hath is in thy power, ver. 11. Touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face; their ends were different, the one Righteous for Tryal, the other Malicious againſt God, that he might be curſed, againſt Job that he might be damned. God's end was the brightning of his Grace, and the Devil's end was the ruine of his Integrity, aad diſpoiling him of God's Favour.

2. In all God's acts about ſin, there is no ſtain to God's Holineſs *. In Second Cauſes, one and the ſame Action proceeding from divers Cauſes, in reſpect of one Cauſe, may be ſinful; in reſpect of the other, righteous. As when two Judges condemn a guilty Perſon, one condemns him out of Love to Juſtice, becauſe he is guilty; the other condemns him out of a private hatred and ſpleen: One reſpects him as a Malefactor only, the other as a private Enemy chiefly. Here is the ſame action with two concurring Cauſes, one being wicked in it, the other righteous. Much more may we conceive it in the concurrence of the Creator, with the action of the Creature.

* Senguer. Metaph. lib. 2. cap. 15. Sect. 5.

1. God moves every thing in his ordinary Providence according to their particular Natures. God moves every thing ordinarily, according to the nature He finds it in. Had we ſtood in Innocency, we had been moved according to that originally righteous Nature; but ſince our Fall we are moved according to that Nature introduced by us with the expulſion of the other. Our firſt Corruption was our own act, not God's work; we owe our Creation to God, our Corruption to our ſelves. Now, ſince God will govern his Creature, I do not ſee how it can be otherwiſe, than according to the preſent Nature of the Creature, unleſs God be pleaſed to alter that Nature. God forces no Man againſt his Nature; He doth not force the Will in Converſion, but graciouſly and powerfully inclines it. He doth never force nor incline the Will to Sin, but leaves it to the corrupt Habits it hath ſettled in it ſelf. Pſal. 81. 12. So I gave them up to their own hearts luſts, and they walked in their own counſels: Counſels of their own framing, not of God's. He moves the Will, which is ſponte mala, according to its own Nature and Counſels. As a Man flings ſeveral things out of his Hand, which are of ſeveral Figures, ſome Spherical, Tetragons, Cylinders, Conicks, ſome round, and ſome ſquare; though the Motion be from the Agent, yet the variety of their Motions is from their own Figure and Frame; and if any will hold his Hand upon a Ball in its motion, regularly it will move according to his nature and figure; and a Man by caſting a Bowl out of his hand, is the cauſe of the motion, but the bad Biaſs is the cauſe of its irregular motion. The power of Action is from God, but the viciouſneſs of that Action from our own Nature. As when a Clock or Watch hath ſome fault in any of the Wheels, the Man that winds it up, or putting his Hand upon the Wheels, moves them, he is the cauſe of the motion, but it is the flaw in it, or deficiency of ſomething is the cauſe of its erroneous motion; that error was not from the Perſon that made it, or the Perſon that winds it up, and ſets it on going, but from ſome other cauſe; yet till it be mended it will not go otherwiſe, ſo long as it is ſet upon motion. Our Motion is from God. [Acts 17. 28. In Him we move,] but not the diſorder of that Motion. 'Tis the foulneſs of a Man's Stomach at Sea, is the cauſe of his Sickneſs, and not the Pilot's government of the Ship.

2. God doth not infuſe the Luſt, or excite it, though he doth preſent the Object, about which the Luſt is exerciſed. God delivered up Chriſt to the Jews, he preſented him to them: But never commanded them to crucifie him, nor infuſed that Malice into them, nor quickned it; but he ſeeing ſuch a frame, with-drew his reſtraining Grace, and left them to the conduct of their own vitiated Wills. All the Corruption in the World ariſeth from Luſt in us, not from the Object which God in his Providence preſents to us, 2 Pet. 1. 4. the corruption that is in the World through luſt. The Creature is from God, but the abuſe of it from Corruption. God Created the Grape, and filled the Vine with a ſprightlineſs; but He doth never infuſe a drunken frame into a Man, or excite it. Providence preſents us with the Wine, but the Precept is to uſe it ſoberly. Can God be blamed, if that which is good in it ſelf, be turned into Poiſon by others? No more than the Flower can be called a Criminal, becauſe the Spiders nature turns that into Venome, which is ſweet in it ſelf. Man hath ſuch a Nature not from Creation, wherein God is poſitive; but from corruption, wherein God is permiſſive. Providence brings a Man into ſuch a condition of Poverty, but it doth not encourage his ſtubbornneſs and impatience. There is no neceſſity upon thee from God to exerciſe thy Sin under affliction, when others under the ſame exerciſe their Graces. The Rod makes the Child ſmart, but it is its own ſtubbornneſs makes it curſe. In ſhort, though it be by God's permiſſion that we can do evil, yet it is not by his Inſpiration that we will to do evil; that is wholly from our ſelves.

3. God ſupports the Faculties wherewith a Man ſinneth, and ſupports a Man in that act wherein he ſinneth, but concurs not to the ſinfulneſs of that act. No Sin doth properly conſiſt in the act it ſelf, as an act, but in the deficiency of that act from the rule. No action wherein there is ſin, but may be done as an action, though not as an irregular action. Killing a Man is not in it ſelf unlawful, for then no Magiſtrate ſhould Execute a Malefactor for murdering another, and Juſtice would ceaſe in the World; Man alſo muſt diveſt himſelf of all thoughts of preſerving his Life againſt an Invader; but to kill a Man without juſt cauſe, without authority, without rule, contrary to rule, out of revenge, is unlawful. So that it is not the act, as an act, is the Sin, but the ſwerving of that act from the rule, makes it a ſinful act: So ſpeaking, as ſpeaking, is not a ſin, for it is a power and act God hath endued us with; but ſpeaking irreverently and diſhonouarbly of God, or falſly and ſlandrouſly of Man, or any otherwiſe irregularly, therein the Sin lies. So that it is eaſie to conceive that an act and the viciouſneſs of it are ſeparable. That act which is the ſame in kind with another, may be laudable, and the other baſe and vile in reſpect of its circumſtances. The Mind wherewith a Man doth this or that act, and the irregularity of it, makes a Man a Criminal. There is a concurrence of God to the act wherein we ſin, but the ſinfulneſs of that act is purely from the inherent corruption of the Creature. As the power and act of ſeeing is communicated to the Eye by the Soul, but the ſeeing doubly or dimly, is from the viciouſneſs of the Organ, the Eye. God hath no manner of immediate Efficiency in producing Sin; as the Sun is not the efficient cauſe of Darkneſs, though the Darkneſs immediately ſucceeds the ſetting of the Sun, but it is the deficient cauſe. So God with-draws his Grace, and leaves us to that Luſt which is in our wills. Acts 14. 16. Who in times paſt ſuffered all Nations to walk in their own ways. He beſtowed no Grace upon them, but left them to themſelves. As a Man who lets a Glaſs fall out of his hand is not the efficient cauſe that the Glaſs breaks, but its own brittle Nature; yet he is the deficient Cauſe, becauſe he with-draws his ſupport from it. God is not obliged to give us Grace, becauſe we have made a total forfeiture of it. He is not a Debtor to any Man by way of Merit, of any thing but puniſhment. He is indeed in ſome Senſe a Debtor to thoſe that are in Chriſt upon the account of Chriſt's purchaſe, and his own promiſe, but not by any merits of theirs.

4. God's

4. Gods Providence is conversant about Sin, as a Punishment, yet in a very righteous Manner. God did not will the first Sin of Adam as a Punishment, because there was no Punishment due to him before he sinned, but he willed the Continuance of it as a Punishment to the Nature, sub ratione boni. This being a judicial Act of God, is therefore righteously willed by him. Punishment is a moral good. 'Tis also a Righteous Thing to suit the Punishment to the Nature of the Offence, and what can be more righteous than to punish a Man by that wherein he offends? Hence God is said to give up Men to Sin, Rom. 2. 26, 27. For this Cause God gave them up unto vile Affections. And to send strong Delusions, that they may believe a lye. And the Reason is rendred, 2 Thess. 2. 12. That they all might be damned, who believed not the Truth, but had Pleasure in unrighteousness *. What more Righteous than to make those vile Affections, and that unrighteousness their Punishment, which they made their Pleasure, and to leave them to pursue their own sinful Inclinations, and make them (as the Psalmist speaks) Psalm 5. 10. Fall by their own Counsels? A Drunkards Beastliness is his Punishment as well as his Sin. Thus God delivers up some to their own Lusts as a Punishment both to themselves and others. As he hardened Pharaohs Heart for the Destruction both of himself and his People.

* 2 Thess. 2. 11.

5. God by his Providence draws Glory to himself, and good out of Sin. 'Tis the highest Excellency to draw Good out of Evil, and it is Gods right to manifest his Excellency when he pleases, and to direct that to his Honour, which is acted against his Law. The Holiness of God could never intend Sin as Sin. But the Wisdom of God foreseeing it, and decreeing to permit it, intended the making it subservient to his own Honour. He would not permit it but for some Good, because he is infinitely good, and could not by Reason of that goodness, suffer that which is purely Evil, if by his Wisdom he could not raise Good out of it: 'Tis purely Evil as it is contrary to Law; it is good, ratione finis, as God Orders it by his Providence; yet that goodness flows not from the Nature of Sin, but from the wise disposal of God.

As God at the Creation framed a beautiful World out of a Chaos, out of Matter without form, and void. So by his Infinite Wisdom he extracts Honour to himself, out of the Sins of Men. As Sin had dishonoured him at its entrance in defacing his Works, and depraving his Creature: So he would make use of the Sins of Men in repairing his Honour, and restoring the Creature.

'Tis not conceivable by us, what way there could be more congruous to the Wisdom and Holiness of God, as the State of the World then stood, to bring about the Death of Christ, which in his Decree was necessary to the satisfaction of his Justice, without ordering the Evil of some Mens Hearts to serve his gracious Purpose. If we could suppose that Christ could commit some capital Crime for which he should deserve Death, which was impossible by Reason of the Hypostatical Union, the whole Design of God for Redemption had sunk to the ground. Therefore God doth restrain or let out the Fury of Mens Passions, and the corrupt Habits of their Wills to such a Degree as should answer directly to the full Point of his most gracious Will, and no further. He lets out their Malice so far as was conducing to the grand Design of his Death, and restrains it from every thing that might impair the Truth of any Prediction, as in the parting his Garments, or breaking his Bones. If God hath put him to Death by some Thunder or otherwise, and after raised him, how could the voluntariness of Christ appear, which was necessary to make him a perfect Oblation? How would his Innocency have appeared? The strangeness of the Judgment would have made all Men believe him some great and notorious Sinner. How then could the Gospel have been propagated? Who would have entertained the Doctrine of one, whose Innocency could not be cleared? If it be said, God might raise him again, what Evidences would have been had that he had been really Dead? But as the Case was, his Enemies confess him Dead really, and many Witnesses there were of his Resurrection.

1. God orders the Sins of Men to the Glory of his Grace. As a foil serves to make the Lustre of a Diamond more conspicuous; so doth God make use of the Deformities of Men to make his own Grace more illustrious, and convey it with a more pleasing relish to them. Never doth Grace appear more amiable, never is God entertained with so high Admirations, as by those who of the worst of Sinners are made the choicest of Saints; Paul often takes occasion from the greatness of his Sin, to admire the unsearchable Riches of that Grace which pardoned him.

2. God Orders them to bring forth Temporal Mercies. In Providence there are two Things considerable. First, Mans Will. Secondly, Gods Purpose. What Mans will intends as a harm in Sin, God in his secret Purpose Orders to some eminent Advantage. In the Selling of Joseph, his Brothers intend the Execution of their Revenge; and God orders it for the advancement of himself, and the Preservation of his unrighteous Enemies, who might otherwise have starved. His Brothers sent him to frustrate his Dream, and God to fulfil it. Our Reformation and return from under the yoke of Antichrist, was by the wise disposal of God occasioned by the three great Idols of the World, the Lust of the Eye, the Lust of the Flesh, and the Pride of Life; Lust, Covetousness and Ambition, three Vices notoriously eminent in Henry the Eighth, the first Instrument in that Work. What he did for the satisfaction of his Lust is ordered by God for the Glory of his Mercy to us. And though the Papists upon that account reflect upon our Reformation, they may as well reflect upon the glorious Work of Redemption, because it was in the Wisdom of God brought about by Judas his Covetousness, and the Jews Malice.

3. God orders them for the Glory of his Justice upon others. Nathan had threatned David, that one in his House should lye with his Wives in the sight of the Sun †. Achitophel adviseth Absolom to do so, not with any Design to fulfil Gods threatning, but secure his own Stake, by making the quarrel between the Father and the Son irreconcileable, because he might well fear that upon a Peace between David and Absolom he might be offered up as a Sacrifice to Davids Justice. God orders Achitophels Counsel, and Absoloms Sin to the Glory of his Justice in Davids Punishment.

† 2 Sam. 12. 11.

The Ambition of Vespasian and Titus was only to reduce Judea to the Roman Province after the revolt of it: But God orders hereby the Execution of his righteous Will in the Punishment of the Jews for their rejecting Christ, and the Accomplishment of Christs Prediction, Luke 19. 43. For the Days shall come that thy Enemies shall cast a Trench about thee, &c. To conclude, if we deny God the Government of Sin in the course of his Providence, we must necessarily deny him the Government of the World, because there is not an

Luke 19. 43.

Action of any Mans in the World, which is under the Government of God, but is either a sinful Action, or an Action mixt with Sin.

*Vid. Ovid. Amor. lib. 3. Eleg. 3. v. 1. and v. 27.

God therefore in his Government doth advance his Power in the weakness, his Wisdom in the Follies, his Holiness in the Sins, his Mercy in the Unkindness, and his Justice in the Unrighteousness of Men; yet God is not defiled with the impurities of Men, but rather draws forth a Glory to himself, as a Rose doth a greater Beauty and Sweetness from the strong smell of the Garlick set near it.

Boetius de Conso. lib. 1

Quest. 2.

Second Question, If there be a Providence, how comes those unequal Distributions to happen in the World? How is it so bad with good Men as if they were the greatest Enemies to God; and so well with the Wicked, as if they were the most affectionate Friends? Doth not Vertue languish away in obscurity, whiles wickedness struts about the World? What is the Reason that splendid Vertue is oppress by Injustice, and notorious Vices Triumph in Prosperity? It would make Men believe that the World was governed rather by a blind and unrighteous, than by a wise, good and just Governour, when they see things in such disorder as if the Devil had, as he pretends, the whole Power of the World delivered to him*: And God had left all Care of it to his Will.

* Luke 4. 6.

See instances in Jackson. vol. 1. 8. chap. 4. Sect. 5.

Ans. This Consideration has heightned the Minds of many against a Providence. It was the Notion of many Heathens, when they saw many who had acted with much gallantry for their Countreys afflicted, they questioned whether there were a superintendent Power over the World. This hath also been the stumbling-block of many taught in a higher School than that of Nature, the Jews, Mal. 2. 17. Ye say every one that doth Evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, and where is the God of Judgment? Yea, and the Observation of the outward Felicities of Vice, and the Oppressions of goodness, have caused fretting Commotions in the Hearts of Gods People, the 73. Psalm is wholly designed to answer this Case. Jeremy, though fixed in the acknowledgment of Gods Righteousness, would debate the Reason of it with God, Jer. 12. 1. Righteous art thou, oh Lord, yet let me talk with thee of thy Judgment: Wherefore doth the way of the Wicked prosper? Wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously? Thou hast planted them, yea, they have taken Root, they grow, yea, they bring forth Fruit. He perceiving it a universal Case [wherefore are all they Happy, &c.] did not know how to reconcile it with the Righteousness of God. Nor Habakkuk with the Holiness of God. Hab. 1. 14. Thou art of purer Eyes than to behold Iniquity, wherefore holdest thou thy Tongue, when the Wicked devoureth the Man that is more Righteous than he? In Point of Gods goodness too, Job expostulates the Case with God, Job 10. 3. Is it good unto thee that thou shouldest oppress, that thou shouldest despise the Work of thy Hands, and shine upon the Counsel of the Wicked? You see upon the account of Holiness, Righteousness, Goodness, the three great Attributes of God, it hath been questioned by good Men, and upon the account of his Wisdom by the Wicked Jews.

1. Answer in general, Is it not a high Presumption for Ignorance to judge Gods Proceedings? In the course of Providence such things are done that Men could not imagine could be done without Injustice; yet when the whole Connexion of their end is unravelled, they appear highly beautiful, and discover a glorious Wisdom and Righteousness. If it had entred into the Heart of Man to think that God should send his Son in a very low Estate to Dye for Sinners, would it not have been judged an unjust and unreasonable Act, to deliver up his Son for Rebels, the Innocent for the Criminals, to spare the Offender and punish the Observer of his Law? Yet when the Design is revealed and acted, what an admirable Connexion is there of Justice, Wisdom, Mercy, and Holiness? Which Men could not conceive of. It will be known to be so at last in Gods dealing with all his Members. We are incompetent Judges of the Righteousness and Wisdom of God, unless we were infinitely righteous and wise our selves; we must be Gods, or in another State, before we can understand the Reason of all Gods Actions. We judge according to the Law of sense and self, which are Inferiour to the Rules whereby God Works. Judge nothing then before the Time. It is not a Time for us to pass a Judgment upon Things. A false Judgment is easily made, when neither the Counsels of Mens Hearts, nor the particular Laws of Gods Actions are known to us. In general it is certain, God doth righteously order his Providences; he may see some inward Corruptions in good Men to be demolished by Afflictions, and some good moral Affections, some useful Designs, or some services he employs wicked Men in to be Rewarded in this Life.

* 1 Cor. 4. 5.

Secondly,

2. God is Soveraign of the World. He is sui juris, The Earth is his, and the fulness thereof, may he not do what he will with his own? † Who shall take upon them to controul God, and prescribe Laws to him how to deal with his Creatures? Why should a finite Understanding prescribe measures and methods to an infinite Majesty?

† Mat. 15.

Thirdly,

3. God is wise and just, and knows how to distribute. If we question his Providence, we question his Wisdom. Is it fit for us who are but of Yesterday, and know nothing, to say to an infinite Wisdom, what dost thou? And to direct the only wise God to a method of his Actions? His own Wisdom will best direct him to the Time when to punish the insolence of the Wicked, and relieve the Miseries of his People: We see the present Dispensations, but are we able to understand the internal Motives? May there not be some Sins of Righteous Mens Parents that he will visit upon their Children? Some virtues of their Ancestors, that he will Reward even in their wicked Posterity? He may use wicked Men as Instruments in some Service. 'Tis part of his distributive Justice to reward them. They aim at these things in their service, and he gratifies them according to their Desires. Let not then his Righteousness be an Argument against his Providence; 'tis righteous with God not to be in Arrears with them. Sometimes God gives them not to them as Rewards of any Moral Virtue, but puts Power into their Hands, that they may be Instruments of his Justice upon some Offenders against him, Isa. 10. 5. The Staff in the Assyrians Hand was Gods Indignation.

Fourthly.

4. There is a Necessity for some seeming inequality at least in Order to the good Government of the World. Can all in any Community of Men be of an equal height? A House hath not Beams and Rafters of an equal bigness, some are greater, and some less. The World is Gods Family. 'Tis here as in a Family, all cannot have the same Office, but they are divided according to the Capacities of some Persons, and the Necessities of others: Providence would not be so apparent in the Beauty of the World, if all Men were alike in their Stations. Where would the Beauty of the Body be, if all the Members had one Office, and one immediate End? Man would cease to be Man, if every Member ber had not some distinct Work, and a universal Agreement in the common Profit of the Body. All Mankind is but one great Body constituted of several Members, which have distinct Offices, but all ordered to the good of the whole; the Apostle argues this excellently in a parallel Case of the diversities of Gifts in the Church, 1 Cor. 12. 19. If all were one Member, where were the Body? ver. 23. Those Members of the Body which we think to be less honourable, upon those we bestow more abundant honour, ver. 24. God hath tempered the Body together, having given more abundant Honour to that Part which lackt. What harmony could there be, if all the Voices and Sounds were exactly the same in a Consort? Who can be delighted with a Picture that hath no Shadows? The Afflictions of good Men are a foyl to set off the Beauty of Gods Providence in the World.

Fifthly, 5. Unequal Dispensations do not argue carelessness. A Father may give one Child a gayer Coat than he gives another, yet he extends his fatherly Care and Tenderness over all: According to the several imployments he puts his Children upon, he is at greater Expence, and yet Loves one as well as another, and makes Provision for all. As the Soul take Care of the lowest Member, and communicates Spirits to every Part for their Motions: So though God place some in a higher, some in a lower Condition, yet he takes care of all, God divides to every Man as he will *. Every Man hath a several share according to Gods Pleasure, of a goodness in the World, as well as of Gifts in the Church.

* 1 Cor. 12. 11.

Sixthly, 6. Yet upon due Consideration the inequality will not appear so great as the complaint of it. If the wants of one, and the enjoyments of another were weighed in the Ballance, the Scales might not appear so uneven; we see such a Mans wealth, but do you understand his Cares? A running sore may lye under a Purple Robe. Health, the Salt of Blessing, as one calls it, is bestowed upon a Labourer, when many that wallow in abundance, have those torturing Diseases which imbitter their Pleasures. If some want those worldly Ornaments which others have, may they not have more Wisdom than those that injoy them (the noblest Perfection of a rational Creature)? Prov. 3. 13, 14. The Merchandize of it is better than the Merchandize of Silver, and the gain thereof than fine Gold. Prov. 15. 16. Better is a little with the fear of the Lord, than great Treasure, and trouble therewith. As some are stript of Wealth and Power, so they are stript of their Incumbrances they bring with them. One hath that serenity and tranquillity of Mind, which the Cares and Fears of others will not suffer them to injoy, and a grain of Contentment is better than many Pounds of Wealth. 'Tis not a desireable Thing to be a great Prince attended with as many Cares and Fears as he hath Subjects in his Empire. He made a true estimate of his greatness, that said he would not stoop to take up a Crown if it lay at his Feet. But more particularly to the Parts of the Case.

Prov. 15. 16.

I. It is not well with bad Men here.

1. Is it well with them who are tortured by their own Lusts? What Peace can worldly things bestow upon a Soul filled with Impurity? in 2 Cor. 7. 1. Sin is called filthiness, can it be well with them that have nasty Souls? Is it well with them who are rackt by Pride, stung with Cares, gnawn with Envy, distracted by unsatiable Desires, and torn in pieces by their own Fears? Can it be well with such who have a multitude of Vipers in their Breasts, sticking all their stings into them, though the Sun-shine, and the Showers drop upon them? You are Spectators of their Felicity, but do you understand their inward Gripes? Prov. 14. 13. Even in Laughter the Heart is sorrowful. Can silken Curtains or purple Clothes confer a happiness upon those who have a mortal Plague-sore poysoning their Bodies, and are ready to expire? Sin is their Plague, whatever is their Happiness *. Their insolent Lusts are a far greater Misery than the Possession of all the Kingdoms in the World can be a Happiness.

* 1 Kings 8. 38. Sin is called the Plague of the Heart.

II. Is it well with them who have so great an account to make, and know not how to make it? Those that enjoy much, are more in Gods debt, and therefore more accountable. The account of wicked Men is the greater, because of their abundance; and their unfitness to make that account is the greater, because of their abuse. Would any reckon themselves Happy to be called upon to give an account of their Stewardship for Talents, and know not how to give good account of one Farthing? Luke 16. 2. Give an account of thy Stewardship.

III. Is it well with them who are the worse for what they have? Is it a happiness to command others, and be more Slaves to the worst of Creatures, than any can be to them? The wicked Mans well-spread Table sometimes proves his Snare, † and his Destruction is bound up in his very Prosperity: Prov. 1. 32. And the Prosperity of Fools shall destroy them. Prosperity falling upon an unregenerate Heart, like the Sun and Rain upon bad ground, draws forth nothing but Weeds and Vermin. Would you think it your happiness to be Masters of their Concerns, and Slaves to their Pride? Is a stubbornness against God so desirable a Thing, which is strengthened by those Things in the Hands of the Wicked?

† Psalm 69. 22.

IV. Is it well with them who in the midst of their Prosperity are reserved for Justice? Can that Traytor be accounted happy that is fed in Prison by the Prince with better Dishes than many a loyal Subject hath at his Table, but only to keep him alive for his Tryal, and a publick Example of Justice? God raises some for greater falls; Miserwas the Felicity of Pharaoh, to be raised up by God for a Subject to shew in him the Power of his Wrath. || 'Tis but a little Time before they shall be cut down as Grass, and wither as the Green Herb, Psalm 37. 2. None would value the Condition of that Souldier who leaping into a River to save a Kings Crown, and putting it upon his own Head, that he might be enabled to swim out with it, was rewarded for saving it, and executed for wearing it. God Rewards wicked Men for their Service, and punishes them for their Insolence.

|| Exod. 9. 16.

Secondly, 2. Neither is it bad here with good Men, if all be well considered. Other Mens Judgment of a good Man is frivolous, they cannot rightly judge of his State and Concerns, but he can make a Judgment of theirs. 1 Cor. 2. 15. A spiritual Man judgeth all things, but he himself is judged of no Man. No Man can make a sound Judgment and estimate of a righteous Mans State in any Condition, unless he hath had Experience of the like in all the Circumstances, the inward Comforts as well as the outward Crosses. For,

I. Adversity cannot be called absolutely an evil, as Prosperity cannot be called absolutely a good. They are rather indifferent things, because they may be used either for the honour or dishonour of God. As they are used for his honour they are good, and as used for his dishonour they are evil. The only absolutely bad thing in the World is Sin, which cannot be in its own nature, but a dishonour to God. The only absolutely good thing in the

World

World is Holiness, and a likeness to God, which cannot be in its own nature, but for his Glory. As for all other things, I know no true Satisfaction can be in them, but as they are subservient to God's honour, and give us an advantage for imitating some one or other of his Perfections. Crosses in the Scripture are not excluded from those things we have a right to by Christ, when they may conduce to our Good, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Life and Death, things present, and things to come, are yours, and you are Christs. Since the Revelation of the Gospel, I do not remember that any such complaint against the Providence of God fell from any Holy Man in the New Testament; for our Saviour had given them another prospect of those things. The Holy Men in the Old Testament comforted themselves against this Objection by the end of the Wicked which should happen, and the Rod cease *. In the New Testament we are more comforted by the certain Operation of Crosses to our good and spiritual Advantage. Our Saviour did not promise Wealth and Honour to his Followers, nor did he think it worth his pains of coming and dying, to bestow such Gifts upon his Children: He made Heaven their Happiness, and the Earth their Hell; the Cross was their Badge here, and the Crown their Reward hereafter; they seemed not to be a Purchase congruous to so great a Price of Blood. Was God's Providence to Christ the more to be questioned because He was poor? Had He the less love to Him because He was a man of sorrows, even while He was a God of Glory? Such groundless Conceits should never enter into Christians, who can never seriously take up Christ's Yoke without a proviso of Afflictions, who can never be God's Sons, without expecting his Corrections.

* Psal. 73. Rom. 8.

2. God never leaves good men so bare, but He provides for their necessity, Psal. 84. 11. The Lord will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. If any thing be good, an upright Man may expect it from God's Providence; if it be not good, he should not desire it: Howsoever Grace, which is necessary for preparing thee for Happiness and Glory, which is necessary for fixing thee in it, He will be sure to give, we have David's Experience for it * in the whole course of his Life.

* Psal 37. 5

3. The little good Men have, is better than the highest enjoyments of wicked men. Psal. 37. 16. A little that a righteous man hath, is better than the riches of many wicked, not better than many riches of the wicked, but better than the riches of many wicked, better than all the Treasures of the whole Mass of the wicked World; others have them in a providential way, good Men in a gracious way. Prov. 16. 8. Better is a little with righteousness than great revenues without right, without a Covenant Right. Wicked Prosperity is like a shadow that glides away in a Moment; whereas a righteous Man's little is a part of Christ's Purchase, and part of that Inheritance which shall endure for ever, Psal. 37. 18. Their Inheritance shall be for ever, i. e. God regards the state of the Righteous, whether good or evil, all that befals them. God doth all with a respect to his Everlasting Inheritance. No Man hath worldly things without their Wings. And though the Righteous have worldly things with their wings, yet that love whereby they have them, hath no Wings ever to fly away from them; how can those things be good to a Man that can never taste them, nor God in them?

4. No righteous Man would in his sober wits be willing to make an exchange of his smartest afflictions for a wicked Man's prosperity, with all the circumstances attending it. It cannot therefore be bad with the righteous in the worst condition: Would any Man be ambitious of Snares, that knows the deceit of them? Can any but a mad Man exchange Medicines for Poison? Is it not more desirable to be upon a Dunghil with an intimate Converse with God, then upon a Throne without it? They gain a World in prosperity, a righteous Man gains his Soul by afflictions, and possesses it in Patience; is the exchange of a valuable consideration? God strips good Men of the enjoyment of the World, that He may wean them from the love of it; keeps them from Idolatry, by removing the fuel of it; sends Afflictions that He may not lose them, nor they their Souls. Would any Man exchange a great Goodness laid up for him that fears God, for a lesser Goodness laid out upon them that are Enemies to him *? Who would exchange a few outward Comforts with God's Promise, inward Comforts with assurance of Heaven, Godliness with Contentment, a sweet and spiritual Life, Soveraignty over himself and lusts, though attended with sufferings, for the Government of the whole World?

* Psal. 31. 19.

5. It is not ill with the righteous in afflictions, because they have high advantages by them. That cannot be absolutely evil, which conduceth to a greater good.

As, First, Sensible Experiments of the tender Providence of God over them. If the Righteous had not Afflictions in this life, God would lose the Glory of his Providence, and they the sweetness in a gracious deliverance from them in ways which makes the Affliction the sweeter, as well as the Mercy; they would lose the comfort of them in not having such sensible Evidences of God's gracious care.

The Sweetness of the Promises made for times of Trouble would never be wasted. Psal. 37. 19. They shall not be ashamed in the evil time; that is, they shall be mightily encouraged and supported. God's People do best understand God's strength, when they feel the smart of Mens malice. 2 Tim. 4. 17. [the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me.] he had never felt so much of God's strength, if he had not tasted much of Man's wickedness in forsaking him, Psal. 37. 39. [he is their strength,] when in times of trouble they experiment more of his care in preserving them, and his strength in supporting them, than at other times. Abundance of Consolations are manifested in abundance of Sufferings *. A greater Sense of Joy and Glory lights upon them in a Storm of Persecutions. Men see the Sufferings of the Godly, but they do not behold that inward Peace which composeth and delights their Souls, worth the whole Mass of the Worlds Goodness, and pleasures of the Unrighteous.

* 2 Cor. 1. 5. 1 Pet. 4. 13, 14.

2. Inward Improvements. Opportunities to manifest more Love to God, more dependance on him, the Perfection of the Soul. 1 Tim. 5. 5. Now she that is a Widow indeed, and desolate, trusts in God, and continues in Supplications and Prayers night and day; there is a ground of more exercise of trust in God, and Supplication to Him. The Poor and Desolate have an advantage for the actual exercise of those Graces, which a prosperous condition wants: God changeth the Metal by it; what was Lead and Iron, He makes come forth as Gold. Job 23. 10. When He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold. Crosses and Sufferings which fit good Men for special Service here, and Eternal Happiness hereafter, can no more be said to be evil, than the Fire which Refines the Gold, and prepares it for a Prince's use. If there were not such Evils, what ground could you have to exercise Patience? what

Heroick

Heroick Acts of Faith could you put forth without Difficulties? How could you believe againſt Hope, if you had not ſometimes ſomething to contradict your Hopes? And if a good Man ſhould have a confluence of that which the ignorant and pedantical World calls Happineſs, he might undervalue the Pleaſures of a better Life, deface the Beauty of his own Soul, and with-draw his Love from the moſt gratifying, as well as the moſt glorious Object, unto that which is not worth the leaſt Grain of his Affection.

3. Future Glory. The great Enquiry at the Day of Chriſt's Appearing will be, How good Men bear their Sufferings, what Improvements they had; and the greater their Purity by them, the greater will be their Praiſe and Honour. 1 Pet. 1. 7. That the tryal of your faith [viz. by manifold Temptations] may be found to praiſe, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. For a good Improvement by them, they will have a publick Praiſe from God's mouth, and a Crown of Honour ſet upon their Heads. Providence ſends even light Afflictions as ſo many Artificers, to make the Crown more Maſſie and more Bright, 2 Cor. 4. 17. [works for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. They are at work about a good Man's Crown, while they make him ſmart. They prepare him for Heaven, and make it more grateful to him when he comes to poſſeſs it. A Chriſtian carriage in them prepares for greater degrees of Glory. Every ſtroke doth but more beautifie the Crown.

6. Sufferings of good Men for the Truth highly glorifies the Providence of God. This is a matter of Glory and Honour, 1 Pet. 4. 16. If any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed, but let him glorifie God on this behalf. They thereby bear a Teſtimony to the higheſt Act of Providence that God ever exerciſed, even the Redemption of the World by the Blood of his Son. And the Church which is the higheſt Object of his Providence in the World, takes the deeper root, and ſprings up the higher; the Foundation of it was laid in the Blood of Chriſt, and the growth of it is furthered by the Blood of Martyrs. The carriage of the Righteous in them, makes the Truth they profeſs more valued. It enhanceth the Excellency of Religion, and manifeſts it to be more amiable for its Beauty than for its Dowry; ſince they ſee it deſirable by the Sufferers, not only without worldly Enjoyments, but with the ſharpeſt Miſeries. This conſideration hath wrought upon many to embrace the Religion of the Sufferers. If it reaches as far as Death, they are but diſpatched to their Father's Houſe, and the Day of their Death is the Day of their Coronation; and what evil is there in all this?

To conclude, this Argument is ſtronger (upon the Infallible Righteouſneſs of God's Nature) for a Day of Reckoning after this Life, than againſt Providence. 'Tis a more rational concluſion, That God will have a time to juſtifie the Righteouſneſs and Wiſdom of his Providential Government, and repair the Honour of the Righteous, oppreſſed by the Injuſtice of the Wicked. And indeed, unleſs there be a Retribution in another World, the queſtion is unanſwerable, and all the reaſon in the World knows not how to ſalve the Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God in his Providential Diſpenſations in this Life; ſince we ſee here Goodneſs unrewarded, and debaſed to the Dunghil, Vice glorying in impunity, and ranting to the Firmament. We cannot ſee how it can conſiſt with the nature of God's Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs and Holineſs, if there were not another Life wherein God will manifeſt his Righteouſneſs in the puniſhing Sin, and rewarding Goodneſs: For it is impoſſible that a God of Infinite Juſtice ſhould leave Sin unpuniſhed, and Grace unrewarded here or hereafter. The Scripture gives us ſo full an account of a Future State, that may ſatisfie all Chriſtians in this buſineſs.

The wicked Rich Man is in his Purple, and Lazarus in his Rags, yet Abraham's Boſom is prepared for the one, and an endleſs Hell for the other. Jeremy reſolves the Caſe in his Diſpute with God about it, Jer. 12. 3. Pull them out like ſheep to the ſlaughter, and prepare them for the day of ſlaughter. They are but fattening for the Knife of Juſtice, and the Day will come when they ſhall be conſum'd, like the Fat of Lambs in the Sacrifice, which ſhall wholly evaporate into ſmoke; ſo the Pſalmiſt reſolves it in Pſal. 37. 20. a Pſalm written for the preſent Caſe. God laughs at their Security in a way of mockery, Pſal. 37. 13. The Lord ſhall laugh at him, for He ſees that his day is coming. God's Day for the Juſtification of his proceedings in the World, and the wicked Man's Day for his own Deſtruction, wherein they ſhall all be deſtroyed together, Pſal. 37. 38. the whole Maſs of them in one Bundle. Who then will charge God with unequal Diſtributions at that Day, which is appointed for the clearing up of his Righteouſneſs, which is here mask'd in the World? Who can be fond of the State of the wicked? Who would be fond of a dead Man's condition, becauſe he lies in State, whoſe Soul may be condemned, whilſt his Body with a pompous Solemnity is carried to the Grave, and both Body and Soul joyned together at the Reſurrection, adjudged to Eternal Miſery?

Qu. 2. What hath been ſaid in this, will alſo anſwer another Queſtion, Why God doth not immediately puniſh notorious Offenders; ſince the beſt Governments in the World are ſuch as call the violaters of the Law to a ſpeedy account, to keep up the Honour of Juſtice? Thus the Epicures charge God with neglects of Providence, becauſe if He doth puniſh wicked Men, it is later than is fit and juſt; becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil. Eccle. 8. 11. Delay of Juſtice is an encouragement to Sin.

Anſw. 1. This is an argument for God's Patience, none againſt his Providence. Should He make ſuch quick work, what would become of the World? Could it have held out to this Day? If God had inſtantly taken Revenge upon thoſe that thus diſparage his Providence, the frame of ſuch an Objection had not been alive. No Man is ſo perfectly good, but he might fall under the revenging ſtroke of his Sword, if He pleaſed to draw it. Suffer God to evidence his Patience here, ſince after the winding up of the World, He will have no time to manifeſt it. God doth indeed ſometimes ſend the ſharp Arrow of ſome Judgment upon a notorious Offender, to let him underſtand that He hath not forgotten how to govern; but He doth not always do ſo, that his Patience may be glorified in bearing with his rebellious Creature.

2. God is juſt in that wherein the queſtion ſuppoſeth him unjuſt; he ſuffers wicked Men to continue to be the Plagues of the Places where they live, and the Executioners of his Juſtice upon Offenders againſt him, Pſalm 17. 13. The wicked are God's Sword, Jeremiah 47. 6. Thoſe that God would ſtir up againſt the Philiſtines, are called the Sword of the Lord, Iſa. 10. 5. Aſſur is ſaid to be the Rod of his Anger; would it conſiſt with his Wiſdom to drop the Inſtruments out of his Hand, as ſoon as he he begins to uſe them? To caſt his Rods out of his Hand as ſoon as he takes them up? The Rules of Juſtice are as much unknown to us, as the Communications of his goodneſs to his People are unknown to the World.

3. Let me ask ſuch a one, whether he never injur'd another Man, and whether he would not think it very ſevere, if not unjuſt, that the offended Perſon ſhould preſently take Revenge of him? If every Man ſhould do the like, how ſoon would Mankind be diſpatcht, and the World become a ſhambles, Men running furiouſly to one anothers Deſtruction for the Injuries they have mutually received? Do we Praiſe the Lenity of Parents to their Children, and diſpraiſe the Mercy of God, becauſe he doth not preſently uſe his Right? Is then forbearance of Revenge accounted a Virtue in a Man, and ſhall it be an Imperfection in God? With what Reaſon can we thus blame the eminent Patience of God, which we have Reaſon to adore, and which every one of us are Monuments of? The Uſe is.

Uſe 1. Of Information.

1. How unworthy and abſurd a Thing is it to deny Providence? Some of the Heathens fancied, that God walked his Circuit in Heaven, or ſat with folded Arms there, taking no Cognizance of what was done in the World; ſome indeed upon ſome great Emergencies have acknowledged the Mercies and Juſtice of God, which are the two Arms of his Providence. The Barbarians, his Juſtice, when they ſaw a Viper leap upon Paul's Hand, Acts 28. 4. They ſay among themſelves, no doubt this Man is a Murderer, whom though he hath eſcapt the Sea, yet Vengeance ſuffers not to live. The Mariners in Jonah implored his Mercy in their Diſtreſs at Sea, yet they generally attributed Affairs to blind Chance, and worſhipped Fortune as a Deity: For this vain Conceit, the Pſalmiſt calls the Atheiſt Fool, Pſalm 14. 1. The Fool hath ſaid in his Heart, there is no God. Potiphar acknowledged it, he ſaw that the Lord was with Joſeph, and favoured his Deſigns, Gen. 39. 3. And his Maſter ſaw that the Lord was with him, and that the Lord made all all things that he did to proſper in his Hand.

It will not be amiſs to conſider this, for the root of denial of Providence is in the Hearts of the beſt Men, eſpecially under Affliction. Aſa was a Holy Man, Pſalm 73. 13. ſaith he, Verily I have cleanſed my Heart in vain, and waſhed my Hands in Innocency. He had taken much Pains with his Heart, and had been under much Affliction. Ver. 14. All the Day long have I been plagued and chaſtened every Morning. And the Conſideration of this, that he ſhould have ſo much Affliction with ſo much Holineſs, ſo ſtrangely puzled him, that he utters that dreadful Speech, as if he had a mind to caſt off all Cares about the Worſhip of God, and ſanctifying his Heart, and repent of all that he had done in that he had done in that buſineſs, as much as to ſay, had I been as very a Villain as ſuch, or ſuch a Man, I might have proſpered as well as they, but I was a Fool to have any fear of God.

Therefore we will conſider,

1. The evil of denying Providence.

2. The grounds of the denial of it by the Heathen, which we ſhall find in our own Hearts.

3. The various ways wherein Men practically deny Providence.

1. The evil of denying it.

Firſt. 1. It gives a Liberty to all Sin. It gives an occaſion for an unbounded Licentiouſneſs; for what may not be done, where there is no Government? The Jews tell us, that the Diſpute between Cain and Abel was this: Cain ſaid, becauſe his Sacrifice was not accepted, that there was no Judge, no reward of good Works, or Puniſhment of bad, which when Abel oppoſed, Cain ſlew him; they ground it upon the Diſcourſe of God with Cain, ver. 7. which had been about his Providence and Acceptation of Men, if they did well, and Puniſhment of Men if they did ill; whence they gather, the Diſcourſe, ver. 8. Cain had with his Brother, was about the ſame Subject, for Cain talked with Abel, and upon that Diſcourſe roſe up againſt him, and ſlew him. And his Diſcourſe afterwards with God, ver. 9. ſeems to favour it, Am I my Brothers keeper? Thou doſt ſay, thou art the Governour of the World, it is not my concern to look after him. Their Conjectur is not improbable. If it were ſo, we ſee how early this Opinion began in the World, and what was the horrid Effect of it, the firſt Sin, the firſt Murder that we read of after the Sin of Adam. And what Confuſion would grow upon the Entertainment of ſuch a Notion. Gen. 4. 7, 8.

Indeed the Scripture every where Places Sin upon this Root. Pſalm 10. 11. * [God hath forgotten, he hides his Face, he will never ſee it.] He hath turned his back upon the World. This was the ground of the Oppreſſion of the Poor by the wicked which he mentions, ver. 9, 10. So Iſa. 26. 10. The Wicked will not learn Righteouſneſs, he will deal unjuſtly; the Reaſon is, he will not behold the Majeſty of the Lord; he will not regard God's Government of the World, though his Hand be lifted up to ſtrike. There is no Sin, but receives both its Birth and Nouriſhment from this bitter Root. Let the notion of Providence be once thrown out, or the belief of it faint, how will Ambition, Covetouſneſs, neglect of God, diſtruſt, impatience and all other bitter gourds grow up in a night? 'Tis from this Topick all Iniquity will draw Arguments to encourage it ſelf; for nothing doth ſo much diſcountenance thoſe riſing Corruptions, and put them out of Heart, as an actuated belief, that God takes care of Humane Affairs. Upon the want of this actuated Knowledge, God charges all the Sin of Ephraim, Hoſea 7. 2. They conſider † not in their Hearts that I remember all their Wickedneſs. As if God were blind and did not ſee, or ſtupid and did not concern himſelf, or of a very frail Memory ſoon to forget. * Pſalm 10. 11. † Heb. They ſpeak not to their Hearts.

2. It deſtroys all Religion. The firſt Foundation of all Religion is, firſt the Being, ſecondly the Goodneſs of God in the Government of the World, Heb. 11. 6. He that comes to God, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a Rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him. He is the Object of Religion, as he is the Governour of the World. This denial would ſhut up Bibles and Temples, and bring irreligious diſorder into all Societies.

1. All Worſhip. He that hath no deſign to govern, is ſuppoſed to expect no Homage; if he regards not his Creatures, he cares for no Worſhip from them. How is it poſſible to perſuade Men to regard him for God, who takes no Care of them? Who will adore him, who regards no Adoration?

2. Prayer. To what purpoſe ſhould they beg his Directions, implore his Aſſiſtance in their Calamities, if he had no regard at all to his Creatures? What Favour can we expect from him who is regardleſs of diſpenſing any?

3. Praiſe. Who would make acknowledgments to one, from whom they never received any Favour, and hath no mind to receive any acknowledgments from them, becauſe he takes no Care of them? If the Deity have no Relation to us, how can we have Relation to him? To what purpoſe will it be either to call upon him, or praiſe him, which are the prime pieces of Religion, if he concern not himſelf with us?

4. De-

* Targum Hieroſolymit Mercer in Gen. 4. 7.

4. Dependance, Truſt and Hope. What reaſon have we to commit our Concerns to Him, and to depend upon Him for Relief? Hence the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 2. 12. The Gentiles were without hope, and without God in the World. The Reaſon they were without Hope, was becauſe they were without God, they denied a ſettled Providence, and acknowledged a blind Chance, and therefore could have no ſound Hope; ſo ſome underſtand it of Denial of God's Government. It might well give occaſion to People to utter Pharaoh's Speech, Exod. 5. 2. Who is the Lord that I ſhould obey his voice to let Iſrael go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael go. What is God that I ſhould ſerve Him? I have no ſuch Notion of a God that Governs the World. The regardleſneſs of his Creator diſobligeth the Creature from any ſervice to Him.

3. It is a high diſparagement of God. To believe an impotent, ignorant, negligent God, without care of his Works, is as bad or worſe than to believe no God at all. The denial of his Providence is made equal with the denial of God. Pſal. 14. 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God. He denied God, Elohim, which Word notes God's Providence; Not, there is no Jehovah, which notes his Eſſence; he denied not God, quoad Eſſentiam, but quoad Providentiam, whereupon the Pſalmiſt dubs the Atheiſt Fool. It ſtrips God of his Judicial Power. How ſhall He judge his Creatures, if He know not what they think, and regards not what they do? How eaſie will it be for Him to be impoſed upon by the fair pretences and lying excuſes of Men? 'Tis Diabolical. The Devil denies not God's Right to Govern, but he denies God's actual Government, for he ſaith, Luke 4. 6. The power and glory of the world is delivered unto him, and to whomſoever ſaith he, I will, I give it. God had caſt off all care of all things, and made the Devil his Deputy. He that denies Providence, denies moſt of God's Attributes; he denies at leaſt the exerciſe of them; he denies his Omniſcience, which is the Eye of Providence; Mercy and Juſtice, which are the Arms of it; Power, which is the Life and Motion of Providence; Wiſdom, which is the Rudder of Providence, whereby it is ſteered; and Holineſs, which is the Compaſs and Rule of the Motion of Providence.

4. It is clearly againſt natural Light. Socrates, an Heathen, could ſay, Whoſoever denied Providence, did Δαιμονιᾶν, was poſſeſſed with a Devil *. Should God create a Man anew with a ſound Judgment, and bring him into the World, when he ſhould ſee the Harmony, Multitude, Vertues and Operations of all Creatures, the ſtated times and ſeaſons, muſt he not needs confeſs that ſome inviſible, unconceivable Wiſdom did both frame, and doth Govern all the Motions of it? And it is a greater Crime in any of us to deny Providence either in Opinion or Practice, than it was or could have been in Heathens; becauſe we have not only that natural reaſon which they had, ſufficient to convince us; but Supernatural Revelation in the Scripture, wherein God hath declared thoſe Methods of his Providence, which Reaſon could not arrive to. As to deny the Creation of his the World, is a greater Crime in a Man that knows the Scripture, than in a Heathen, becauſe that hath put it out of doubt. And the aſſerting of this being the End of all God's Judgments in the World, Wrath brings the puniſhment of the Sword, that you may know there is a Judgment, i. e. Providence; the denial of it is a Sin againſt all paſt or preſent Judgments, which God hath or doth exerciſe. The Scripture frequently declaring the reaſon of ſuch and ſuch Judgments to be, that Men may know that the Lord is God.

* Montague againſt Selden. p. 525.

Job 19 22.

2. The ſecond thing is, The Grounds of the denial of Providence. This Atheiſm has been founded, Secondly

1. Upon an over-weening conceit of Mens own worths; when Men ſaw themſelves fruſtrated of the rewards they expected, and ſaw others that were Inſtruments of Tyranny and Luſt, graced with the favours they thought due to their own vertue, they ran into a conceit, that God did not mind the Actions of Men below. So that it was Pride, Intereſt, Self-conceit, and Opinion of Merit, rather than any well-grounded Reaſon introduced this part of Atheiſm into the World; for upon any Croſs this opinion of Merit ſwelled up into Blaſphemous Speeches againſt God. When we have any thoughts (as we are apt to have) by our religious acts to merit at God's hand, we act againſt the Abſoluteneſs of his Providence, as though God could be obliged to us by any other than his own Promiſe. Methinks Job hath ſome ſpice of this in ſpeaking ſo often of his own Integrity, as though God dealt injuriouſly with him in afflicting him. God ſeems to charge him with it, Job 40. 8. [Wilt thou alſo diſannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me that Thou mayeſt be righteous? As though in ſpeaking ſo much of his own Integrity, and in complaining Expreſſions, he would accuſe God of Injuſtice, and condemn him as an unrighteous Governour; and in Job's Anſwer you find no Syllable or Word of his Integrity to God, but a Self-abhorrency, Job 42. 26. Wherefore I abhor my ſelf in duſt and aſhes. I doubt that from this ſecret root ariſe thoſe Speeches which we ordinarily have among Men; What have I done that God ſhould ſo afflict me? Though in a ſerious way it is a uſeful Queſtion tending to an enquiry into the Sin that is the cauſe of it. But I doubt ordinarily there is too much of a Reflection upon God, as though they had deſerved other dealing at his hands. Take heed therefore of Pride, and conceits of our own worth, we ſhall elſe be led by it to diſparaging Conceits of God, which indeed are the roots of all actions contradictory to God's Will.

2. It is founded upon pedantical and ſenſual notions of God. As though it might detract from his pleaſures and delight, to look down upon this World; or, as though it were a Moleſtation of an Infinite Power, to buſie Himſelf about the cares of Sublunary Things. They thought it unſuitable to the Felicity of God, that it ſhould interrupt his Pleaſure, and make a breach upon his Bleſſedneſs. As though it were the Felicity of a Prince not to take care of the Government of his Kingdom, nor ſo much as provide for the well-being of his Children. I doubt that from ſuch, or as bad Conceptions of God, may ſpring ordinarily our diſtruſt of God upon any Diſtreſs; take heed therefore of entertaining any Conceptions of God, but what the Scripture doth furniſh you with.

3. Or elſe, this ſort of Atheiſm was uſher'd in by a flattering Conceit of the Majeſty of God. They thought it unbecoming the excellency of the Divine Majeſty to deſcend to a regard of the petty things of the World; this ſeems to be the fancy of them, Pſal. 37. 11. How doth God know? Is there knowledge in the moſt High? They think Him too high to know, too high to conſider. How unreaſonable is it to think God moſt High in place, and not in Perfection; and if in Perfection, not in Knowledge and Diſcerning? They imagined of Him, as of a great Prince, taking his Pleaſure upon the Battlements of his Palace, not beholding the Worms upon the Ground; muffled with Clouds, as Job 22. 13. 14. how doth God know? Can he judge through the dark Clouds? thick Clouds are a covering to him, that he ſees not, and he walks in the circuit of Heaven. We cannot indeed have too high apprehenſions of Gods Majeſty and excellency: But muſt take heed of entertaining ſuperſtitious conceits of God, and ſuch as are diſhonourable to him, or make the grandeur and ambition of men, the meaſures of the greatneſs and Majeſty of God. Upon this root ſprung Superſtition and Idolatry, and the Worſhip of Dæmons, who according to the Heathens fancy, were Mediators betwen God and men. And I doubt ſuch a conceit might be the firſt ſtep to the introducing the Popiſh Saint-worſhip into the Chriſtian World: and this lies at the root of all our omiſſions of duty, or neglects of ſeeking God. Let us therefore have raiſed thoughts of God's Majeſty, and admiring thoughts of his condeſcention, who notwithſtanding his greatneſs, humbles himſelf to behold what is done upon the Earth. The Pſalmiſt ſets a pattern for both, Pſal. 113. 5, 6.

* Pſal. 113. 5. 6.

4. From their wiſhes upon any gripes of Conſcience. They found guilt ſtaring then in the face, and were willing to comfort themſelves with the embraces of this Doctrine, wherein they might find a ſecurity and eaſe to their proſtituted conſciences, and unbounded liberty in the wayes of ſin. Thoſe in Zephaniah, were firſt ſettled upon their lees, and then to drive away all fears of puniſhment, deny Gods Government, Zeph. 1. 12. the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil. A brave liberty for a City to be without a Magiſtrate, a houſe without a Governour, a Ship without a Pilot, expoſed to the mercy of Winds and Waves; A man to be without reaſon, that paſſion and luſt ſhould act their pleaſure; a Liberty that Beaſts themſelves would not have, to be without a Shepherd, and one to take care of them. Such wiſhes certainly there are in men upon a ſence of guilt: they wiſh for their own ſecurity there were no providential eye to inſpect them. Take heed therefore of guilt which will draw you to wiſh God deprived of the government of the World, and all thoſe attributes which qualifie him for it. The readineſs to entertain the motions of Satan; rather than the motions of the Spirit, implies a willingneſs in them that Satan might be the God of the World, who favours them in Sin, rather then the Creator who forbids it. But indeed the fears of conſcience evidence a ſecret belief in men of a juſt providence, whatever means they uſe to ſtifle it; elſe why is man upon the commiſſion of ſome notorious ſinful act, afraid of ſome evil hap to betide him? Why is he reſtleſs in himſelf? There is no ſinner unleſs extreamly hardned, but hath ſome ſecret touch of conſcience upon notorious enormities: While the work of the Law is written in their heart, their conſcience will bare witneſs and accuſe them.

* Rom. 2. 14. * In the moſt flagitious courſes which the Apoſtle reckons up, * they cannot put off the knowledge

* Rom. 1. 29,30,31 32. of the judgment of God, that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death, that is, worthy of death by the Judgment of God, which Judgment is diſcovered in the Law of Nature.

Thirdly. 3. The third things is, The various wayes wherein men practically deny providence, or abuſe it, or contemn it.

1. When we will walk on in a way contrary to checks of providence, when we will run againſt the will of God manifeſted in his providence, we do deny his government, and refuſe ſubjection to him; when we will be peremptory in our reſolves againſt the declaration of God's will by his checks of providence, we contend with him about the government of us and our actions. Such a diſpute had Pharaoh with God, notwithſtanding all the checks by the plagues poured out upon him, he would march againſt Iſrael to take them out of God's hand into his own ſervice again, Exod. 15. 9. The enemy ſaid, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil, my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them, I will draw my ſword, my hand ſhall deſtroy them. Here is the will of man vaunting againſt the Governour of the World, reſolved to diſpute God's Royalty with him in ſpight of all the blaſtings of his deſigns, and the ſmart blows he had had from that powerful arm, which coſt him and his ſubjects their lives; they would not underſtand the taking off their wheels, but would run headlong into the Read Sea: A remarkable example of this is in a good man not ſo peremptory in words, but againſt the revelation of God's mind both by the Prophet, and his Providence; Jehoſephat had made a League with Ahab, * and God had ordered Micajah to acquaint him with the ill ſucceſs of the affair they went about, verſ. 16, 19. which Jehoſaphat found true, for his own life was in danger, he was hardly beſet by the Enemy upon a miſtake, ver. 31, 32. he had an eminent anſwer of prayer, for upon his cry he had a quick return; God ingaged his providence over his Enemies hearts for him, verſ. 13. the Lord helped him, and God moved them to depart from him. And for this conjunction and continuance in it againſt Micajah's propheſie, God ſends a Prophet to reprove him, 2 Chron. 19. 2. ſhould thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from the Lord; he reproves him ſharply for this confederacy, yet Jehoſaphat after had a ſignal providence in delivering him from another army, 2 Chron. 20. 24. Yet after this he goes on in this way, 2 Chron. 20. 35. after this, i. e. after a reproof by a prophet, after ill ſucceſs in his league, after eminent care of God in his deliverance, after a ſignal freeing him from a dangerous invaſion in a miraculous way, he enters into a league with Ahab's Son, as wicked as his Father, verſ. 36. he joyned himſelf with him to make ſhips to go to Tarſhiſh, and after that a third Prophet is ſent to reprove him, and the Ships were broken, verſ. 37. Here is a remarkable oppoſition to checks of providence, and manifeſt declarations of God's will, as if he would be the Commander of the World inſtead of God. Abner's action is much of the ſame kind, who would make the houſe of Saul ſtrong againſt David, though he knew and was ſatisfied that God had promiſed the Kingdom to David.

* 2 Chor. 18. 1,2, 3.

2. In omiſſions of Prayer. One reaſon to prove the fools denying God's government of the world, is, that they call not upon the Lord. Pſal. 14. 1, 4. The Lord looked down from Heaven to ſee if there were any that did underſtand and ſeek God. 'Tis certainly either a denying of God's ſufficiency to help us, when we rather beg of every Creature, than ask of God; or a charging him with a want of Providence, as though he had thrown off all care of worldly matters, 2 Kings 1. 3. Is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael, that you go to inquire of Baalzebub the God of Ekron? Seeking of any thing elſe with a neglect of God, is a denying the care of God over his Creature. Do we not in this caſe make our ſelves our own governours and Lords, as though we could ſubſiſt without him, or manage our own affairs without his aſſiſtance? If we did really believe there was a watchful Providence, and an infinite powerful goodneſs to help us, he would hear from us oftner then he doth. Certainly thoſe who never call upon him, diſown his government of the World, and do not care whether he he regards the Earth or no. They think they can do what they pleaſe without any care of God over them. The reſtraining prayer is a caſting off the fear of God. Job. 15, 4. Thou caſteth off fear, why? and reſtraineſt Prayer before God. The neglect of Prayer ariſeth from a conceit of the unprofitableneſs of it. Job 21,15. What profit ſhould we have if we pray unto him? Which conceit muſt be grounded upon a ſecret notion of God's careleſneſs of the world; ſuch fruit could not ariſe, but from that bitter root. But the Prophet Malachi plainly expreſſes it, Malach. 3. 14. Ye have ſaid it is in vain to ſerve God, and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance? Whence did this ariſe, but from a denial of Providence upon the obſervation of the outward happineſs of the wicked? verſ. 15. And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedneſs are ſet up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. Sometimes it ariſeth from an apprehenſion that God in the way of his Providence dealeth unjuſtly with us. A good Prophet utters ſuch a ſinful ſpeech in his paſſion, 2 King 6. 33. Behold, this evil is of the Lord, what ſhould I wait for the Lord any longer?

3. When men will turn every ſtone to gain the favourable aſſiſtance of men in their deſigns, and never addreſs to God for his direction or bleſſing. When they never deſire God to move the hearts of thoſe whoſe favour they court, as though Providence were an unuſeful and unneceſſary thing in the World. It was the caſe of thoſe Elihu ſpeaks of, Job 35. 9, 10. They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty, but none ſaith, where is God my Maker, who gives ſongs in the night? &c. None in the midſt of their oppreſſions and cryes under them, did conſider either the power of God in the Creation, as he was their Maker, nor his Providence in the government of the World, as he raiſed up men from low eſtates, and gave matter of chearfulneſs even in a time of darkneſs. This was the charge God by his Prophet brought againſt Aſa, 2 Chron. 16. 7, (before the text) Thou haſt relyed on the King of Syria, and not relyed on the Lord thy God, herein thou haſt done fooliſhly, v. 9. where he ſets a reliance on the creature, and a reliance on God, in direct oppoſition. In ſeveral caſes men do thus deny and put a contempt on God as the governour of the World, when we will caſt about to find out ſome Creature-refuge rather than have recourſe to God for any ſupply of our neceſſities. Doth not he ſlight his fathers care that will not ſeek to him in his diſtreſs? This was Aſab's Sin, 2 Chron. 16. 12. in his diſeaſe he ſought not to the Lord, but to the Phyſicians. The Jews think, that one reaſon why Joſeph continued two years in Priſon, was his confiding too much upon the Butler's remembrance of him, and intereſt for his deliverance, which they ground upon the requeſt he makes to him, Gen. 40. 14. but think on me when it ſhall be well with thee, and ſhew kindneſs to me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this houſe. I muſt confeſs the expreſſions are very urgent, being ſo often repeated, and ſeems to carry a greater confidence at preſent in the arm of fleſh, than in God. We do not read that Joſeph prayed ſo earneſtly to God, though no doubt but being a good man he did: Methinks the ſetting down his requeſt with that repetition in the Scripture, ſeems to intimate a probability of the Jews conceit. Or alſo when we do ſeek to him, but it is out of a general belief of his Providence and ſufficiency, out of an actuate conſideration, or when we ſeek to him with colder affections than we ſeek to Creatures, as if we did half diſpair of his ability or will to help us: as when a man thinks to get learning by the ſagacity of his own wit, his indefatigable induſtry, and never deſires with any ardent affection the bleſſing of God upon his endeavours. When we lean to our own Wiſdom, we diſtruſt the Providence of God, Pro. 3. 5. Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not to thine own underſtanding. Truſt in God, and leaning to our own Wiſdom, are oppoſed to one another as inconſiſtent; or when a man hath ſome great concern, ſuppoſe a ſuit at Law, to think to carry his cauſe by the favour of friends, the help of his money, the eloquence of his Advocate, and never intereſt God in his buſineſs: This is not to acknowledge God in thy ways, which is the command, Pro. 6. In all thy ways acknowledge him; as though our works were not in the hand of God, Eccleſ. 9. 1. This is to take them out of God's hand, and put them into the hands of men. To truſt in our wealth, it is to make God a dead and a ſtupid God, and diſown his Providence in the beſtowing it upon us. The Apoſtle ſeems to intimate this in the oppoſition which he makes between uncertain riches, and the *living God. Theſe and many more actions ſuitable to them, are virtual denials of God's ſuperintendency, as though God had left off the Government of the World, to the wits, or rather follies of men. Theſe are to magnifie the things we ſeek to, above God, as the chief Authors of all our good. 'Tis to imagine him leſs careful than man, more inſufficient than man. 'Tis a departure from a full fountain to a ſhallow ſtream; not to deſire God's aſſiſtance, is either from ſome check of conſcience that our buſineſs is ſinful, that we dare not intereſt him in it, or a diſowning God's care, as if we could hide our counſels from him, (Iſa. 29. 15. Wo unto them that ſeek deep to hide their Counſel from the Lord, and they ſay, who ſeeth us, and who knoweth us?) and bring our buſineſs to paſs before he ſhall know of it; At leaſt it is a ſlighting God's government, ſince we will not engage God by prayer in the exerciſe of it on our behalf, and diſdain to acquaint him with our concerns. 'Tis a reflection upon God's wiſdom to do ſo, which the Prophet mentions with a woe, Iſa. 31. 1, 2. Wo unto them that go down to Egypt for help, but they look not to the holy one of Iſrael, yet he alſo is wiſe. It is a diſparagement to God's Providential wiſdom, not to look to him in our concerns, yea, and of his righteouſneſs too, they look not to the holy one of Iſrael. In this they neither regard his holineſs, nor his wiſdom. When we conſult not with him upon emergent occaſions, we truſt more to our own Wiſdom, Counſel and Sufficiency, than to God's; and ſet up our ſelves as our own Lords, and independent upon him, as though we could manage things according to our pleaſure.

* 1 Tim. 6. 17.

4. When upon the receiving any good, they make more grateful acknowledgment to the inſtruments, than to God the principal Author of it. As if God had no hand in beſtowing thoſe bleſſings upon them, as if the inſtruments had diſpoſſeſſed God of his governing-Providence, and engroſt it in their own hands. This men are guilty of when they aſcribe their Wealth to their own wit and fortune, their health to their own care, or the Phiſician's skill; their learning to their own induſtry, their proſperity to their friends or merits. When men thus return their thank-offering to ſecond cauſes, and aſcribe to them what is due to God, they give the glory of his Providence to a miſerable Creature. Thus was the fooliſh boaſting of the Aſſyrian, Iſa. 10. 13, 14. By the ſtrength of my hand I have done this, and by my wiſdom: for I am prudent, for I have removed the bounds of the People, &c. Belſhazzar's offence alſo, Dan. 5. 23. Thou haſt lifted up thy ſelf againſt the Lord of Heaven, and praiſed the gods of ſil- ſilver, as though they were the authors of all thy greatneſs: ſo Hab. 1. 16. they ſacrifice to there net, and burn inſence to their drag, becauſe by them their portion is fat. Alluding to thoſe that then worſhipped their warlike weapons, and the tools whereby they had got their wealth, in the place of God, as the Heathen uſed to do *. How baſe a uſage is this of God to rifle him of all his glory, and beſtow it upon the unworthieſt inſtruments, inanimate Creatures? 'Tis as high Idolatry as that of the Heathens, in as much as it is a ſtripping God of the glory of his Providential care, though the object to which we direct our acknowledgments, is not ſo mean as their's which was a ſtock or ſtone. But is it not the ſame injury to a perſon to rifle him of his goods to beſtow it upon a begger, as to give it to a Prince? 'Tis a depriving a man of his right: Yet, is not this ordinary! Do not men aſcribe more to the Phyſician that ſaves an eye in danger of being loſt by a defluxion, than to God who hath given them both with the enjoyment of the light of the Sun; yea more to the Medicine, than to that God, who hath a witneſs of his Deity in every Drug? 'Tis as if the kindneſs a Prince ſhews to his Subjects ſhould be attributed to a Scullion in his Kitchin rather than to himſelf. This is to be-ly God and ſay it is not he: *'Tis applicable to the caſe of mercies as well as affiictions and judgments, of which it is properly meant. And this contempt is the greater by how much the greater mercy we have received in a way of Providence, Hoſ. 2. 9. ſhe did not know that I gave her Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, and multiplyed her Silver and Gold, which they prepared for Baal. She that had moſt reaſon to know, becauſe ſhe had enjoyed ſo much, ſhe that had experience how by a ſtrong and mighty hand I brought her out of Egypt into the Land now poſſeſſed by her. She would not know that I gave her thoſe good things ſhe prepared for Baal. It would be a natural conſequence from this Scripture, that thoſe that imploy the good things they injoy upon their luſts, do deny the Providential goodneſs of God in their poſſeſſion and injoyment of them becauſe they prepare God's goodneſs for their ſinful pleaſures, as though their own luſts had been the Authors of them; and alſo their inſtruments, that receive too high and flattering thanks of this nature, are much like Herod, that tickled himſelf with the Peoples applauſe, that his voice was the voice of God and not of man.

* Dought. Analect. Sacr. Excurs. 182

* Amiram de les religions.

* Jer. 5. 12.

5. When we uſe indirect courſes, and diſ-honeſt waies to gain wealth or honour. This is to leave God, to ſeek relief at Hells gates, and adore the Devil's Providence above God's: When God doth not anſwer us, like Saul we will go to the witch of Endor, and have our ends by Hell when Heaven refuſeth us. 'Tis a covenanting with the Devil, and ſtriking up a bargain and agreement with Hell, and acknowledging Satan to be the God of the World. No man will doubt but in expreſs Covenants with the Devil, as Witches and Conjurers are reported to make, that the Devil ſhall give them ſuch knowledge, ſuch wealth, orbring them to ſuch honour; 'tis no doubt, I ſay, but ſuch do acknowledge the Devil the God of the world, becauſe they agree by articles to have thoſe things conferred upon them by Satan, which are only in the power of God abſolutely to promiſe or beſtow. So when a man will commit Sin to gain the ends of his ambition or covetouſneſs, does he not implicitely covenant with the Devil who is the head of ſinners, and ſet up his ſin in the place of God, becauſe he hopes to attain thoſe things by ſinful means which are only in the hand of God, and on whom he only can have a dependance; This is the Devil's deſign out of an enmity to Providence. He tempted Chriſt to be his own Carver, thereby to put him upon a diſtruſt of his Father's care of him, Mat. 4. 3. Command that theſe ſtones be made Bread, as though God would not provide for him; which deſign of the Devil is manifeſt by our ſaviour's anſwer. This is to proſtitute Providence to our own luſts, and to pull it down from the Government of the World, to be a Lacky to our ſinful pleaſure; to uſe means which God doth prohibit, is to ſet up Hell to govern us, ſince God will not govern our affairs in anſwer to our greedy deſires. 'Tis to endeavour that by God's curſe which we ſhould only expect by God's bleſſing: For when God hath forbid ſinful waies, ſeverely threatned them, perhaps curſed them in Examples before our eyes, what is it but to ſay, that we will rather believe God's curſe will further us than his bleſſing? 'Tis to diſparage his bleſſing, and prefer his curſe, to ſlight his wiſdom and adore our folly. When we go out of God's way, we go out of God's protection, we have no Charter for the bleſſing of providence without that condition, Pſal. 37. 3. Truſt in the Lord, and do good, ſo ſhall thou dwell in the Land, and verily thou ſhalt be fed, to do evil then is not to truſt in God, or have any regard to his Providential care.

6. When we diſtruſt God when there is no viſible means. A diſtruſt of God renders him impotent, or falſe and mutable, or cruel and regardleſs, and what not? We detract from his power, as if it depended upon Creatures, or that he were like an Artificer that could not act without his Tools: As if God were tyed to means, and were beholding to Creatures for his operating power; as if that God who created the World without inſtruments, could not providentially apply himſelf to our particular exigencies without the help of ſome of his Creatures. If he cannot work without this or that means you did expect your mercy by. It ſuppoſeth that God hath made the Creature greater then himſelf, and more neceſſary to thy well-being, than himſelf is; or elſe we conceit him falſe or fooliſh, as if he had undertaken a task of government too hard for him, as if he were grown weary of his labour, and muſt have ſome time to recruit his ſtrength, or as if he were unfaithful, not walking by rules of unerring goodneſs; or if we acknowledge him wiſe and able and faithful, yet it muſt then be a denyal of his gracious tenderneſs, which is as great as his power and wiſdom, and a perfection equal with any of the reſt. If his caring for us be a principal argument to move us to caſt our care upon him, as it is, 1 Pet, 5. 7. caſting all your care upon him, for he careth for you: Then if we caſt not our care upon him, it is a denial of his gracious care of us, this is to imagine him a tenderer governour of beaſts than men, as though our Saviour had ſpoke a palpable untruth, when he told us, not an hair of our heads doth fall without his leave; as if he regarded Sparrows only, and not his Children; or elſe it implies that God cannot mind us in a crowd of buſineſs in ſuch multitudes in the World, which he hath to take care of. But certainly, as the multitude of things doth not hinder his knowledge of them, ſo neither do they hinder his care. The arms of his goodneſs are as large to embrace all Creatures, as the eyes of his Omniſcience are to behold them. From this root do all our fears of the power of men grow, Iſa, 51. 12, 13. Who art thou that art afraid of a man that ſhall die, &c. and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker, that hath ſtretched forth the Heavens, &c. Our forgetfulneſs, at leaſt, if not a ſecret denial of God's power in the Works of Creation and Providence, uſhers in diſtruſt of him, and that introduceth a fear of Man. If they that know his Name, will put their their truſt in him, Pſal. 9.10. For thou, Lord, haſt not forſaken them that ſeek thee; Then a diſtruſt of him diſcovers an ignorance and inconſideration of his name and his waies of working, implies his forſaking of his Creature. He that truſts in any thing elſe beſides God, denies all the powerful operations of God, and conceives him not a ſtrength ſufficient for him, Pſal. 52. 7. that man doth not make God his ſtrength, who truſts in the abundance of his riches. How groſs is it not to truſt God under the very ſence of his powerful goodneſs, but queſtion whether he can or will do this or that for us? when we will have jealouſies of him when he doth compaſs us round about with mercy, and incircle us with his beams, 'tis to queſtion whether the Summer Sun will warm me, though it ſhine directly upon me, and I feel the vigour of its beams upon my Body: much more baſe is this, then to diſtruſt him when we have no means: What doth this imply, but that he cares not what becomes of his Children, that no advantage can be expected from him, that his intentions towards us are not gracious even whiles we feel him?

7. Stoutneſs under God's afflicting or merciful hand, is a denyal or contempt of providence. This was the aggravation of Belſhazzars Sin, Dan. 5. 23. and the God in whoſe hand thy breath is, and whoſe are all thy waies, haſt thou not glorified; he glorified not God in the way of his providence, but was playing the Epicure, and was ſacrilegiouſly quaffing in the veſſels of the Temple when the City was beſieged; he ſeemed to dare the providence of God upon a preſumption that the City was impregnable by reaſon of Euphrates, and the proviſion they had within their walls, which, Xenophon ſaith, was enough for Twenty years, yet was taken that night when the handwriting was. And by how much God's judgments have been more viſible to us, and upon ſome well known by us, or related to us, ſo much the greater is the contempt of his providential government, as v. 22. And thou his Son Belſhazzar haſt not humbled thy heart, though thou knoweſt all this, &c. He had known God's judgments upon his Grandfather Nebuchadnezzer, a Domeſtick example of God's vindicating his government of the World, and yet went in the ſame ſteps, ſo Jer, 5, 3, 4. Thou haſt conſumed them, but they have refuſed to receive correction, they have made their faces harder then a rock: what is the reaſon? the Prophet renders it, v. 4. They are fooliſh, for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God. Correction calls for ſubmiſſion, but thoſe like a Rock under God's hand, were correction-proof, they would not conſider the ways of God's Providence, and the manner of them; 'tis as if by our peeviſhneſs we would make God weary of afflicting us, which is the worſt caſe can happen. This is God's complaint of the ten Tribes, Hoſ. 7. 9. gray hairs are upon them, and they know it not, ſtrangers have devoured his ſtrength, &c. There was a conſumption of their ſtrength, the Aſſyrians and Egyptians to whom they gave gifts, had drained their treaſure, but they would not conſider God as the Author, or acknowledge whence their miſery came, they would not ſeek God for all this, v. 10. 'Tis like a mans picking a pocket, or cutting a Throat under the Gallows in contempt of Juſtice*; whereas good men are both affected with, and remember God's judgments. Eber called his Son Peleg, diviſion, becauſe in his daies the Earth was divided, that in the dayly ſight of the Sun he might remember that ſharp Providence in ſcattering of the Bable builders. Judgments affects us when they are before our eyes, as the Thunder and Plagues did Pharaoh; but when they are removed, men return to their beloved ways, as tho God had ſhot a way all his arrows, and was departed, to mind them no more. Take heed of this, 'tis a ſin highly provoking: God is ſo tender that his Providence ſhould be minded and improved, that a ſin of this nature he follows with his diſpleaſure in this life at leaſt, Iſa. 22. 12, 13. And in that day did the Lord God of Hoſts call to weeping and mourning, and behold joy, and gladneſs, eating Fleſh, and drinking Wine, let us eat and drink, for to morrow we ſhall die. When God in any judgment ſhews himſelf to be Lord God of Hoſts, and calls us to weeping, and we behave our ſelves jollily in ſpight of his government, it is a ſin he will remember, and bind the guilt upon us, v. 14. and it was revealed in my Ears by the Lord of Hoſts, ſurely this iniquity ſhall not be purged from you till you die.

*Fenkin.

8. Envy alſo is a denial of Providence. To be ſad at the temporal good, or the gifts of another, as counting him unworthy of them, it is a reflection upon the Author of thoſe gifts, accuſing providence of an unjuſt or unwiſe diſtribution*. Since God may do what he will with his own; if our eye be evil, becauſe God is good, we intrench upon his Liberty, and deny him the diſpoſal of his own goods, as if God were but our Steward, and we his Lords. 'Tis a temper we are all Subject to, Pſal. 37. 1. Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of evil doers, neither be thou envious againſt the workers of iniquity. 'Tis peculiarly the product of ſelf-love, which affects the principality in the World, and particularly affects the conduct of God in diſtributing his goods, that he muſt not give but to whom they pleaſe. It ariſeth indeed from a ſence of our wants; but the language of it is, God is unjuſt in his Providence to me, becauſe he beſtows not upon me that good which he gives to another. 'Tis ſuch a ſin that it ſeems to be a companion of our firſt parents pride, which was the cauſe of their fall. They envied God a felicity by himſelf, for they would be like him, they would be as Gods. Hence prehaps, the Jews ſay Cain denied the Providence of God, as invying his Brother, becauſe God accepted Abel's ſacrifice and not his. Jonah's paſſion aroſe from this pride, for fear he ſhould be accounted a falſe Prophet, where-upon he invies God the glory of his mercy, and the poor Ninivites the advantage of it, he would have God conform the way of his Providence to his pleaſure and reputation. Indeed it is to envy God the honour of his Providence in thoſe gifts or good things another poſſeſſes, whereby he is inſtrumental to glorifie God and advantage others. Thus we would direct God what inſtruments he ſhould employ, when no Artificer in his own Art would endure to be directed by any ignorant perſon what tools he ſhould uſe in his work.

* Cajetan Summal P 4. 28.

9. Impatience under croſs providences is a denial and contempt of God's government. Men quarrel with God's revealed will, and therefore no wonder that they quarrel with his providential will; whereby we deny him his right of governing, and ſlight his actual exerciſe of his right. As if God were accountable to us for his diſpenſations, and muſt have only a reſpect to us or our humour in his government, Job. 18. 4. he tears himſelf in his anger, ſhall the Earth be forſaken for thee? and ſhall the rock be removed out of his place? Muſt God alter the ſence of his affairs according to our model and platform? and becauſe he doth not obſerve our rules and methods, muſt we tear our ſelves in anger? This is a ſecret curſing of God, and flying in his face when we ſee providence ſo croſs, that there ſeems to be no help at any time either in Heaven or Earth, Iſa. 8. 21, 22. they ſhall fret themſelves and curſe their King and their God, and look upwards, and they ſhall look unto the Earth, and behold trouble and darkneſs.

Take

Take heed of fretting at God's management of things in the World, or thy own particular concerns; this may lead to a cursing of God, and is indeed an initial secret swelling against him, and cursing of him. Man is ambitious to become a God. Adam's posterity have in one sort or other imitated him. This

1. Is a wrong to the Soveraignty of Providence. 'Twas a good admonition of Luther's to Melancton when he was troubled much about the affairs of the Church, monendus est Philippus ut desinat esse rector mundi. By this temper we usurp God's place, and set our selves in this Throne, we invade his supremacy by desiring every thing to be at our beck, and are displeased with him, because he doth not put the reins of the Worlds government into our hands. As if we would command his will, and become his Soveraigns. 'Tis a striving with our maker for the superintendency, when we will sit Judge upon him, or censure his acts, and presume to direct him. Isa. 45. 9. Wo to him that strives with his Maker, shall the clay say to him that fashions it, what makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands? How do men summon God to the Bar of their interest, and expostulate with him about his works, why he did not order them thus and thus; and if he doth so, to tell him he hath no hand, no hand of Providence in the World? The design of that place is to stop such peevishness and invasions of God's right; I will not have my Soveraign Will disputed, as if I were but the Creatures Servant; I am content you should ask of me things to come, v. 11. and pray to me, but notwithstanding yet to submit to my pleasure without a peevish endeavouring to wrest the Soveraignty out of my hand, and pull the Crown from my head.

2. Tis a wrong to the goodness and righteousness of Providence. 'Tis a charging God with ill management, and an implicit language, that if we were the Commanders of Providence, things should be managed more justly and righteously; as it was Absolom's pretence in wishing to be the King of Israel in David's stead, 2 Sam. 15. 4. If patience be a giving God the honour of his righteousness in his judgments, Psal. 119. 75. I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me. Impatience must be a charge against God for unrighteousness in his judicial proceedings, and a saying the way of the Lord is not equal, Ezek. 18. 25. 'Tis implied in that complaint, Isa. 58. 2, 3. They ask of me the ordinances of Justice, &c. wherefore have we fasted and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our Souls, and thou takest no knowledge? We demand justice of thee, since thou dost not seem to do that which is fit and righteous, in not regarding us in our suits, and not bestowing that which we have fasted for. God governs the World according to his will, our murmuring implies that God's will is not the rule of righteousness. We affront the care of God towards his Creatures, as if the products of our shallow reasons were more beautiful and just than God's contrivances for us, who hath higher and more glorious ends in every thing, both for our selves and the World, of which we are members, and for his own Glory, to which we ought to subject our selves, when perhaps our projects tend immediately to gratifie some sensual or spiritual lust in us. 'Tis the commendation the Holy Ghost gives of Job, Job. 1. 22. in all this Job sinned not, neither charged God foolishly, as a Character peculiar to him, implying that most men in the World do, upon any emergency, charge God with their crosses, as dealing unjustly with them, in inflicting punishment when they think they have deserved rewards: Jeremiah is not innocent in this case, Jerem. 20. 7. O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived, in the ill success of his prophecy, as though an immense goodness would, and a Soveraign power needed to deal in a fraudulent way with his creatures to bring his ends about.

3. 'Tis a wrong to the wisdom of Providence. We would degrade his Omniscience and Wisdom, and sway him by our foolish and purblind dictates; 'tis as if we would instruct him better in the management of the World, and direct him to a reformation of his methods, Job 40. 2. shall he that contends with the Almighty, instruct him? He that reproves God, let him answer it: 'Tis a reproving God, and reproofs imply a greater authority, or righteousness, or wisdom in the person reproving; we reprove God as if God should have consulted with us, and asked our advice; 'tis to take upon us to be God's counsellors, and to conclude the only wise God by our imperfect reason, Rom. 11. 34. Who hath been his Counsellor? 'Tis a secret boasting of some excellency in our selves, as if God did not govern well, or we could govern better: Shall a silly Passenger, that understands not the use of the Compass, be angry that the skilful Pilot will not steer the Vessel according to his pleasure? Must we give out our orders to God, as tho the Counsels of infinite wisdom must roul about according to the conceits of our fancy? Is not the language of our hearts in our fits of impatience, as prodigiously proud against God's Providence as the Speech of that Monster was against the Creation, who said, If he haa been by God at the Creation of the World, he could have directed him to a better Platform: All this, and much more, is vertually in this sin of Impatience.

10. In charging our sins and miscarrages by them, upon Providence, in this we contemn it. Some think Cain doth so, Gen. 4. 9. am I my Brother's keeper? Thou art the keeper and governor of the World, why didst thou not hinder me from killing my Brother? 'Tis certain the first man did so, Gen. 3. 12. the woman thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree? thy gift is the cause of my sin and ruine. 'Tis as certain David laid the Sin of Uriah's murder at the door of Providence, 1 Sam. 11. 25. when he heard that Uriah was dead the sword, saith he, devours one as well as another. Man conjures up trouble to himself, when by his folly he brings himself into sin, and from thence to misery, and then his heart frets against the Lord, and lays the blame both of his sin and following mischiefs upon him, Pro. 19. 3. the foolishness of man perverts his way, and his heart frets against the Lord. There are many otherways wherein we deny or slight Providence.

1. When we do things with a respect to the pleasure of men, more than of God. As though God were careless both of himself and his own honour, and regarded not the principles and ends of our actions.

2. In vain boasting and vaunting of our selves. As Benhadad would have such a multitude of men in his army as that there should not be dust enough in Samaria to afford every man a handful; * wherein he swaggers with God, and vaunts as if he were the Governor of the World; yet this man with his numerous Host was routed by a troop of Lacquies, v. 15. 20. they are called the young men of the Princes; such is the folly of men against the order of God, when they boast in their hearts that their house shall continue for ever *. * 2 Kirg. 20. 10. * Psal. 49. 11.

3. Oppression. They slay the fatherless, and say, the God of Jacob shall not regard it *. Their denial of Providence was the cause of their oppression of the poor, and where this is found in any, it is an argument it ariseth principally from a like cause; this is also made the cause why they eat up God's people as they eat bread *. * Psal. 94. 6, 7. * Psal. 14. 14.

4. Misinterpretations of Providence. Such cursed jealousies had the Jews of God.

Numb.

Numb. 14. 3. and wherefore hath the Lord brought us into this Land to fall by the ſword? were it not better for us to return into Egypt? As though God in that mighty deliverance had cheated them with a deſign to deſtroy them in the wilderneſs, when one of thoſe plagues poured out upon Pharaoh being turned upon their heads, had deſtroyed them in Egypt. So fooliſh are they to think that God would ruine them upon dry Land, who might have drowned them as well as their enemies in the Red Sea: ſo unreaſonable is man in his diſputes againſt God.

5. In limiting providence. In bounding it to time, manner, and other circumſtances, as they did, Pſal. 78. 41. they limited the holy one of Iſrael, for they remembered not his hand. As though God muſt manage every thing according to the will of a ſimple Creature. It was a forgetfulneſs of Providence, at leaſt, that was the cauſe of it.

The Second Uſe is of Comfort. As the juſtice and righteouſneſs of God is the higheſt comfort to a good man, ſince the Evangelical diſpenſation: In that he hath to deal with a righteous God, who can as ſoon deny himſelf as his righteouſneſs. So it is none of the meaneſt comforts, that we acknowledge and worſhip that God, who exerciſeth himſelf in a conſtant government of the World, and leaves not any thing to the capriciouſneſs of that which we call fortune and chance. What ſatisfaction can any man in his ſober wits have to live in a World caſt off from all care of the Creator of it? Wiſdom without Providence would make any man mad, and the greateſt advantage would be to be a ſtupid and ſenſleſs fool: Can there be any worſe News told to men than this, that let them be as religious as they will, there is no eye above takes notice of it? What can be bitterer to a rational man than that God ſhould be careleſs of the World? What a door would be opened by it for all ſin in the wicked, and diſpair in the godly; 'Tis as great a matter of joy to the godly, that God reigns, as it is of terror to the wicked, Pſal. 97. 1. The Lord reigns, let the Earth rejoice, Pſal. 99. 1. The Lord reigns, let the people tremble.

* It was an excellent Speech of a Stoick, οὐκ ἐστὶ ζῆν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ κακῶν ἀπηλλαγμένον πανταχόθεν.

'Tis a comfort, That,

1. Man is a ſpecial object of Providence. God provides for all Creatures, even thoſe that are the works of his hands, much more for man, who is more peculiary the work of his head, in whoſe Creation he took Counſel Gen. 1. 26. let us make man in our Image, after our likeneſs. The work of his heart in being made according to his Image, and intended as a ſubordinate end of his whole Creation next to the principal, that of God's Glory he is the preſerver of man and beaſt: of man principally, of beaſts in ſubſerviency to mans good, and preſervation.

2. Holy men, a more ſpecial object of it. God preſerves and provides for all things, and all perſons: But his eye is more peculiarly fixed upon thoſe that fear him. Pſal. 33. 18. behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy, ſo fixed, as if he had no regard to any thing elſe. If God hath a care of man created after his own Image, tho his Image be depraved, much more of thoſe wherein his Image is reſtored. If God loves himſelf, he loves his Image and his works. A man loves the works which he hath made of ſome external matter, much more doth a Father love his Son, much more doth God love his own, and therefore will work their good, and diſpoſe of them well. God exerciſeth a ſpecial Providence over the actions of a good man as well as his Perſon, Pſal. 37. 23. the ſteps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and he delighteth in his wayes; 'tis a ſpecial, becauſe a delightful Providence, he delights in his way; how highly may it cheer a man to be in covenant with that God, which rules the World, and hath all things at his beck, to be under not onely the care of his wiſdom, but of his goodneſs; The Governor of the World, being ſuch an only friend, will do him no hurt, being ſuch an only Father will order all things to his good out of a Fatherly affection; he is the Worlds Soveraign, but a good mans Father: He rules the Heavens and the Earth, but he loves his holy ones. Other things are the objects of his Providence, and a good man is the end of it. For, his eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for him whoſe heart is perfect toward Him.

3. Hence it will follow, that the Spirits of good men have ſufficient grounds to bear up in their innocent ſufferings and ſtorms in the World; Innocent ſufferings, There is a righteous Governor, who orders all, and will reward them for their pains, as well as their ſervice, Heb. 6. 10. for God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love; there is one that preſides in the World, who ſees all their calamities, and cannot be miſtaken in their cauſe, who hath as much power and wiſdom, as will to help them. It would be an affliction indeed, if there were no ſoveraign power to whom they might make their moan in their diſtreſs, to whom they might eaſe their conſciences, if there were no Governor to whom they might offer up their petitions.

In the ſtorms they meet with in the world. How doth the preſence of a skilful Pilot in a weather-beaten Ship cheer the hearts of the fearful Paſſengers? What a dread would it be to them to have the veſſel wherein their lives and all are concerned, left to the fury of Winds and Waves, without an able hand to manage it? God hath a bridle to check the paſſions of men, to marſhal them according to his pleaſure; they are all but his inſtruments in the government, not the Lords of it: God can lay a Plot with more wiſdom for a good mans ſafety, than the Enemy can for his deſtruction; he can countermine their Plots with more Power than they can execute them; he can out-wit their craft, overpower their Strength, and turn their deſigned Cruelty againſt them, as a knife into their own Breaſts.

4. Hence follows a certain ſecurity againſt a good mans want. If God take care of the hairs, the ornamental ſuperfluities, why ſhould we doubt his care of our neceſſary ſupply? If he be the guardian of our hairs which fall off without our ſence of their departure, ſhall he be careleſs of us when we are at a pinch for our all? Will God reach out his care to Beaſts, and deny it to his Children? What would you judge of that Father, who ſhould feed his Servants and ſtarve his Sons? He ſupplies his Enemies, and hath he no bowels for his Friends? The very unjuſt as well as the juſt are enlightened by his Sun, and refreſht by his rain. aud ſhall he not have a Providence for thoſe that have a ſpecial intereſt in that Mediator, whoſe interpoſition kept up thoſe ſtanding mercies after our forfeiture of them by ſin? If he bleſs with thoſe bleſſings, thoſe who are the objects of his curſe, will he not bleſs thoſe that are in his ſpecial favour with them, ſo far as they may prove bleſſings to them? Pſal. 34. 10. The young lions do lack and ſuffer hunger, but they that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing, v. 9. for there is no want to them that fear him. A good man ſhall have what he needs, not alwaies what he thinks he needs. Providence intends the ſupply of our neceſſities, not of our deſires; he will ſatisfie our wants, but not our wantonneſs. When a thing is not needful, a man cannot properly be ſaid to want it; when it is needful, a good man ſhall not be without it; what is not beſtowed upon us, may not be ſo beautiful at that time wherein we deſire it, for every thing is beautiful in its ſeaſon *. He that did not want want God's kindness to renew him, shall never want God's kindness to supply him; his hand shall not be wanting to give, where his heart hath been so large in working. Others live that have an interest only in common Providence, but good men have Providence cabineted in a promise, and assured to them by a deed of covenant-conveyance; he was a provider before, he hath made himself now your Debtor. You might Pray for his providential care, before, with a common faith, now with a more special expostulation: For in his promise he hath given a good man the key of the Chest of his Providence, because it is the promise of this life and that which is to come *; of this life not to our desires, but necessities; of the life to come to both, wherein they shall have whatsoever they can want, and whatsoever they can desire.

* 1 Tim. 4. 8.

Again consider God doth exercise a more special Providence over men, as cloathed with miserable circumstances, and therefore among his other Titles, this is one, to be a helper of the Fatherless *. 'Tis the argument the Church used to express her return to God, Hos. 14. 3. for in thee the fatherless find mercy. Now what greater comfort is there then this, that there is one presides in the World, who is so wise he cannot be mistaken, so faithful he cannot deceive, so pitiful he cannot neglect his people; and so powerful, that he can make stone even to be turned into bread, if he please?

* Psal. 10. 14.

Further, take this for a comfortable consideration, God doth not govern the World only by his will as an absolute Monarch, but by his wisdom and goodness as a tender Father. 'Tis not his greatest pleasure to shew his Soveraign power, or his unconceivable wisdom, but his immense goodness, to which he makes the other attributes subservient, What was God's end in creating, is his end in governing, which was the communication and diffusion of his goodness; we may be sure from hence, that God will do nothing but for the best, his wisdom appointing it with the highest reason, and his goodness ordering it to the most gracious end; and because he is the highest good, he doth not only will good, but the best good in every thing he acts.

What greater comfort can there be, than that we are under the care of an infallible unwearied and righteous Governor? infallible because of his infinite wisdom, unwearied because of his incomprehensible omnipotency, and righteous because of his unbounded goodness and holiness.

3. Use of Exhortation.

The duties arising from hence, will run as a thread through the web of our whole lives, and all the motions of them. This doctrine hath an influence upon our whole course, there is nothing we meet with, but is an act of Providence; and there is no act of Providence, but calls for some particular duty. Is there any good we want, we must seek it at his hands, we must depend upon him for it, we must prescribe no methods to him, but leave the conduct of it to his own wisdom. Is it a cross Providence, and contrary to our desires and expectations? Murmur not at it. Is it afflictive and troublesom? Submit to it: Is it either good or bad, and present, we must study to understand it: Is it a good, and present? give God the Glory of it.

1. Seek every thing you need at the hands of God. 'Tis not only the skilfulness of the Pilot, but a favourable gale from Heaven, which must conduct the Ship to the intended port. As his Providence is the foundation, so it is the encouragement of all prayer. The end of the Lords prayer is, for thine is the Kingdom the power and the Glory: the providential Kingdom belongs to God, Power he hath to manage it, and his Glory is the end of all; seek to him therefore for the exercise of his power in thy concerns, and for his directing them to his glory in his providential administrations. Every one of our daies, and both the mirey and the misery of them depend upon him, Pro. 27. 1. thou knowest not what a day may bring forth, but God foresees all events have recourse therefore to his care for every dayes success; what are our contrivances without the leave and blessing of Providence? Like the bubbles blown up from a nut-shell, easily broken by the next puff Our labour will be as fruitless as Peter's with all his toyl, and catch nothing, till God speaks the word, and sends the fish into our net *. The way of man is not in himself *. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in in himself, it is not in man that walk's to direct his steps. Dangers are not within the reach of our eye to foresee, not within the compass of our power to prevent. Humane prudence may lay the Platform, and God's power blast the execution, when it seems to be grown up neerest to maturity. Hezekiah was happy in his affairs, because he was assisted by God; Ahaz unhappy, because he is deserted by God. If we would have a Clock go well, we must look chiefly to the motion of the chief Weel; a failure in that makes an error in all the rest: nothing can terminate its motion to our benefit without Providence. Coloured glass can reflect no beams without the Sun's light, nor fruits be ripened without its influence. Our dependance on God is greater than theirs on the Sun. God lets men play with their own wit and strength, and come to the brink of execution of their designs, and then blows upon them that, that they may know there is a God in the Earth. Pythagoras could say, it was γλοιον a ridiculous thing, to seek that which is brave and vertuous any where else then of God *. Cyrus is a brave pattern, who is mentioned in Scripture, and represented by Xenophon calling upon God when he was first chosen General; and in his Speech to his Captaines to encourage them to hope for a good success of the expedition, tells them they might expect it, because I have begun with God, which you know, saith he, is my custom, not only when I attempt great matters, but also the τα μικρα things of lesser concernment. The seeking of God should be the prologue to all our affairs? we are enjoyned first to pray, and then determine, Job 22. 27. Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him, thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee. The entereſſing Providence in our concerns, is the high way to success. The reason we miscarry, is because we consult not God, but determine without him; and then we have no reason to complain of him for not prospering our way, when we never commended our affairs to his conduct. It hath been the practice of holy men. Nehemiah first petitioned God before he would use his interest in the Kings favour, Nehem. 2. 4. then the King said unto me, for what dost thou make request? So I prayed to the God of Heaven, and I said unto the King, &c. So Abraham's Steward puts up his request to God, before he would put the business he came upon, in execution, Gen. 24. 12. David frequently in particular cases. 1 Sam. 23. 9. 2 Sam. 19. 23. God only doth what he pleases in Heaven and in Earth; He only can bless us, He only can blast us. Shall we be careless in any undertaking, whether we have his favour or no? 'Tis a ridiculous madness to resolve to do any thing without God, without whose assisting and preserving of us, we had not been able to make that resolution.

2. Trust Providence. To trust God when our Ware-houses and Bags are full, and our Tables spread, is no hard thing; but to trust him when our purses are empty, but a handful of meal and a cruse cruſe of Oil left, and all ways of relief ſtopt, herein lies the wiſdom of a Chriſtians Grace. Yet none are exempted from this duty; all are bound to acknowledge their truſt in him by the dayly prayer for dayly bread; even thoſe that have it in their Cupboards as well as thoſe that want it; The greateſt Prince as well as the meaneſt beggar. Whatever your wants are, want not faith, and you cannot want ſupplies. 'Tis the want of this binds up his hand from doing great works for his Creatures: The more we truſt him, the more he concerns himſelf in our affairs. The more we truſt our ſelves, the more he delights to croſs us; for he hath denounced ſuch an one curſed that maketh Fleſh his arm *, though it be the beſt Fleſh in the World, becauſe it is a departing from the Lord. No wonder then that God departs from us, and carries away his bleſſing with him: while we truſt our ſelves, we do but trouble our ſelves, and know not how to reconcile our various reaſons for hopes and fears; but the committing our way to the Lord renders our minds calm and compoſed, Pro. 16. 3. commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed. Thou ſhalt have no more of thoſe quarrelling diſturbing thoughts, what the ſucceſs ſhall be.

* Jer. 17. 5.

1. Truſt Providence in the greateſt extremities. He brings us unto ſtraits, that he may ſee the exerciſe of our faith. Zeph. 3. 12. I will leave in the midſt of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they ſhall truſt in the name of the Lord. When we are moſt deſolate, we have moſt need of this exerciſe, and have the fitteſt ſeaſon to practiſe it: he is alwaies our refuge and our ſtrength, but in time of trouble a preſent help, Pſal. 46. 1. Daniel's new advancement by Belſhazzar but a day before the City was taken by the Enemy *, the King, ſlain, and (no doubt) many of his Nobility, and thoſe that were neareſt in Authority with him, it being the intereſt of the Enemy to diſpatch them, was a danger; yet God by wayes not expreſſed, preſerved Daniel, and gave him favour with the Conqueror. God ſometimes leads his People into great dangers, that they may ſee and acknowledge his hand in their preſervation. Daniel had not had ſo ſignal an experience of God's care of him, had he been in the lower condition he was in before his new preferment. God's eye is alwaies upon them that fear him; not to keep diſtreſs from them, but to quicken them in it, and give them as it were a new life from the dead, Pſal. 33. 18, 19. To deliver their Soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine. God brings us into ſtreights, that we may have more lively experiments of his tenderneſs in his ſeaſonable relief: If he be angry, he will repent himſelf for his Servants, when he ſees their power is gone; becauſe then the glory of his Providence is appropriated to himſelf, Deut. 32. 36, 39. See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no God with me: I kill, and I make alive. No Creature can have any pretence to ſhare in it; He delights thereby to blow up both our affections to him, and admirations of him, and ſtore up in us a treaſure of experiments to encourage our truſting in him in the like ſtreights. We ſhould therefore repoſe our ſelves in God in a Deſart, as well as in the Cities: with as much faith among Savage beaſts, as in the beſt company of the moſt ſociable men *. And anſwer the greateſt ſtreight with Abraham's Speech to Iſaac, God will provide. For we have to do with a God, who only knows what may further our good, and accordingly orders it; what may hinder it, and therefore prevents it. He can ſet all cauſes in ſuch a poſture, as ſhall conſpire together as one link to bring about ſucceſs, and make even contrary motions meet in one gracious end; as the Rivers which run from North and South, the contrary quarters of the World, agree in the ſurges of one Sea. Though Providences may ſeem to croſs one another, they ſhall never croſs his word and promiſe, which he hath magnified above all his name. And his Providence is but a ſervant to his Truth.

* Dur. de Sent. P. 168.

2. Truſt it in the way of means. Tho we are ſure God has decreed the certain event of ſuch a thing, yet we muſt not encourage our idleneſs, but our diligence. Tho Moſes was aſſured of the Victory, when Amalek came armed againſt him, yet he commands Joſhua to draw up the valiant men into a body, himſelf goes to the Mount to pray, and is as diligent in the uſe of all means, as if he had been ignorant of God's purpoſe, and had rather ſuſpected the rout of his own than his Enemies Forces. Neither doth Joſhua afterwards, tho ſecur'd by promiſe in his conqueſt of Canaan, omit any part of the duty of a wiſe and watchful General; he ſends Spies, diſciplines his Forces, beſiegeth Cities, and contrives Stratagems. Providence directs us by means; not to uſe them is to tempt our Guardian; where it intends any great thing for our good, it opens a door, and puts ſuch circumſtances into our hands, as we may uſe without the breach of any Command, or the neglect of our Duty. God could have ſecur'd Chriſt from Herod's fury, by a miraculous ſtroke from Heaven upon his Enemy, but he orders Joſeph and Maries flight into Egypt as a means of his Preſervation. God rebukes Moſes for praying, and not uſing the means in continuing the Peoples march, Ex. 14. 15. Wherefore crieſt thou unto me? ſpeak unto the Children of Iſrael, that they go forwards. To uſe means, without reſpect to God, is proudly to contemn him; to depend upon God without the uſe of means, is irreligiouſly to tempt him; in both we abuſe his Providence. In the one we diſobey him in not uſing the means he hath appointed; in the other, preſumptuouſly impoſe upon him for the encouragement of our lazineſs. Diligence on our part, and the Bleſſing on God's, Solomon joins together, Pro. 10. 4. The hand of the diligent makes rich; but 22. The bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich. So Eccl. 9. 1. Our works are in the hand of God; our works, but God's bleſſing; God's bleſſing, but not without our works. It was the practice of good men. Jacob wraſtles with God to divert his Brother's fury, yet ſends a Preſent to his Brother to appeaſe him *. David truſts in the name of the Lord his God in his Duel with Goliah, but not without his Sling: Our labour ſhould rather be more vigorous than faint, when we are aſſured of the bleſſing of Providence by the infallibility of the Promiſe.

* Gen. 32. 9, 13.

3. Truſt Providence in the way of the precept. Let not any reliance upon an ordinary Providence induce you into any way contrary to the Command. Daniel had many inducements from an appearance of Providence to eat the Kings meat, his neceſſity of compliance in his captivity, probability of preferment by learning the wiſdom of the Countrey, whereby he might both have advanced himſelf, and aſſiſted his Countrey-men, the greatneſs of the conſideration for a Captive to be fed from the Kings Table, the ingratitude he might be accuſed of for deſpiſing ſo kind a treatment; but none of theſe things moved him againſt a command, becauſe the Law of God forbad it, he would not eat of the King's meat. Daniel might have argued, I may wind my ſelf in to the King's favour, do the Church of God a great ſervice by my intereſt in him, which may be daſht in pieces by my refuſal of this kindneſs; but none of theſe things wrought upon him. No Providences wherein we have ſeeming circumſtances of glorifying God, muſt lead us out of the way of duty; this is to rob God one way, to pay him another. God brought Daniel's ends about, he finds favour with the Governour, his requeſt is granted, the ſucceſs is anſwerable, and all thoſe ends attained, which he might in a ſinful way by an ill conſtructi-on of Providence have propoſed to himſelf, all which he might have miſſed of, had he run on in a carnal manner: This, this is the way to ſucceſs, Pſal. 37. 5. Commit thy ways unto the Lord, truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs. Commit thy way tothe guidance of his Providence, with an obedience to his precept, and relyance on his promiſe, and refer all ſucceſs in it to God. If we ſet up our golden Calfs made of our own ear-rings, our wit and ſtrength and carnal prudence, becauſe God ſeems to neglect us, our fate may be the ſame with theirs, and the very duſt of our demoliſht Calf may be a bitter Spice in our drink, as it was in theirs.

Dan. 1. 8, 9, 10. &c. but Daniel purpoſed in his heart that he would not defile himſelf with the portion of the King's meats.

3. Truſt him ſolely without preſcribing any methods to him; Leave him to his wiſe choice, wait upon him becauſe he is a God of judgment *, who goes judiciouſly to work, and can beſt time the executions of his will. The wiſe God obſerves particular periods of time for doing his great works. John. 2. 4. My hour is not yet come, women, what have I to do with thee? Which man is no competent judge of: I will do this Miracle, but the ſeaſon is not yet come wherein I will be moſt beautiful. God hath as much wiſdom to pitch the time of performance of his promiſe, as he hath mercy at firſt to make it. How preſumptuous would it be for the ſhallow world, a thing worſe than nothing, and vanity, to preſcribes rules to the Creator? Much more for a ſingle perſon, a little Atome of duſt, infinitely worſe than nothing, and vanity, to do it. Since we had no hand in Creating the world or our ſelves, let us not preſume to direct God in the government of it, Job. 38. 4. Where waſt thou when I laid the foundation of the Earth, declare if thou haſt underſtanding? Would it not be a diſparagement to God to ſtoop to thy fooliſh deſires? yea, would you not your ſelves have a lower conceit of him, if he ſhould degrade his wiſdom to the wrong biaſs of your blind reaſon?

* Iſa. 30. 18.

Thirdly, Submit to Providence. 'Tis Gods right to govern the World, and diſpoſe of his Creature; 'tis his Glory in Heaven to do what he will *, let us not by our unſubmiſſive carriage deprive him of the ſame glory on earth; he brings to paſs his will by ways the Creature cannot underſtand. 'Tis the wiſeſt ſpeech in the medley of fooleries, the Turkiſh Alcoran *. We muſt walk by the rule of reaſon which God hath placed in us for our guide; yet if Providence brings to paſs any other event contrary to our rational expectations, becauſe it is a clear evidence of his will, we muſt acquieſce. As when a Traveller hath two ways to come to his journeys end, the one ſafe, and the other dangerous, reaſon perſwades him to chuſe the ſafeſt way, wherein he falls among thieves; now having uſed his reaſon, which in that caſe was to be his director, he muſt acquieſce: Gods Providence bringeth forth an event, which he could not without violence to his reaſon avoid. And therefore it is a great vanity, when a man hath reſolved the moſt probable way in a buſineſs, and fails in it, to torment himſelf; becauſe though our conſultations depend upon ourſelves, yet the iſſues of them are ſolely in the hand of God. It concerns us therefore to ſubmit to Gods diſpoſal of us and our affairs, ſince nothing can come to paſs but by the will of God effecting it, or permitting it. If the fall of a Sparrow is not without his Will *, much leſs can the greater events which befall men, the nobler Creatures, be without the ſame concurrence of Gods pleaſure; therefore ſubmit: For,

* Pſal. 115. 3. But our God is in the Heaven: he hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. Deus triumphat in ſua cauſa,* &c.

* Math. 19. 20.

1. Whatſoever God doth, he doth wiſely. His acts are not ſudden and raſh, but acts of Counſel; not taken up upon the preſent poſture of things but the reſolves of Eternity. As he is thehigheſt wiſdom, ſo all his acts reliſh of it, and he guides his will by counſel, Eph. 1. 11. [Who worketh all things after the Counſel of his own will]. If God took Counſel in Creating the World, much more in laying a platform of government, much more in the act of government; for men can frame modes of government, that can never reduce them into practice. Now God being infinitely wiſe, and his will infinitely good, it muſt needs be that goodneſs and wiſdom are the rules whereby he directs himſelf in his actions in the world. And what greater motive can there be to perſwade our ſubmiſſion than Wiſdom and Goodneſs tranſacting all things? Gods counſel being the firmeſt, as well as the wiſeſt, it is a folly both ways to reſiſt it.

2. God diſcovers his mind to us by Providences. Every work of God being the reſult of his Counſel; when we ſee it actually brought forth into the World what elſe doth it diſcover to us, but that Counſel and Will of his? Every ſingle Providence hath a language wherein Gods mind is ſignified, much more a train and contexture of them, Luk. 7. 22. Tell John what things you have ſeen and heard, how that the Blind ſee, the Lame walk, the Lepers are cleanſed, the Deaf hear, the Dead are raiſed to Life, to the Poor the Goſpel is preached. Our Saviour informs John's Diſciples from acts of Providence, he gives him no other anſwer, but turns him over to interpret and conſture his works in the caſe. Providence therefore muſt not be reſiſted, when Gods mind in it is diſcovered: 'Tis diſingenuous to act againſt his pleaſure and manifeſt mind; 'tis the Devils ſin. Aaron when he loſt his two Sons, in ſo judicial a manner by Fire from Heaven, yet held his peace *; becauſe God had declared his mind poſitively, I will be glorified. 'Tis dangerous to reſiſt the mind of God, for the word of his Providence ſhall proſper in ſpight of men and Devils, Iſa. 55. 11. My word that goes forth of my mouth, ſhall not return unto me void; it ſhall proſper in the thing whereto I ſent it; and therefore a reſiſting of it is termed θεομαχία, a fighting againſt God by Gamaliel, no great friend to the Church, Acts. 5. 38, 39.

* Levit. 10. 1. 2, 3.

4. Murmur not at Providence. Though we do not clearly reſiſt it, if there be a repining ſubmiſſion, it is a partial oppoſition to the Will of God. We might as well murmur at God's Creation, as at his Providence; for that is as arbitrary as this; he is under Law but his own righteous will: we ſhould therefore leave the government of the World to God's wiſdom, as we acknowledge the frame of it to be an act of his power. If God ſhould manage his ways according to our preſcriptions, what ſatisfaction would God have? what ſatisfaction would the World have? He might be unjuſt to himſelf, and unjuſt to others, Your own complaints would not be ſtilled, when you ſhould feel the ſmart of your Counſels; yet if they were, what ſatisfaction could there be to the complaints of others, whoſe intereſts and therefore judgments and deſires lye croſs to yours? Man is a croſs Creature. The Iſraelites exclaimed to God againſt Pharaoh, and when the Scence was changed, they did no leſs murmur againſt Moſes in the wilderneſs. They were as troubleſome when they were delivered, as when they were afflicted. In Egypt they would have their liberty, and in the Wilderneſs their ſtomachs turn, and they long for the Onyons and Garlick, though attended with their former ſlavery. Let God govern the World according to his own Wiſdom and Will, till all mankind can agree in one method to offer to him, and that I think will never be, though the World ſhould laſt for ever. Murmur not therefore; whatſoever is done in the World, is the work of a wiſe Agent, who acts for the perfection of the whole univerſe; and why

ſhould

ſhould I murmer at that which promotes the common happineſs and perfection, that being better and more deſirable, than the perfection of any one particular perſon? Muſt a Lutineſt break all his ſtrings becauſe one is out of tune? And muſt God change his courſe becauſe things are out of order with one man, though in regard of divine Providence things are not out of order in themſelves, or without any care, for God is a God of order? This temper will hinder our prayers; with what face can we pray to that God whoſe wiſdom thus repine at? If God doth exerciſe a Providence in the World, why do we murmur? if he doth not take care of thoſe things, why do we pray to him? 'tis a contradiction. It alſo hinders us from giving God the glory, and our ſelves the comfortable ſight of his Providence. God may have taken ſomething from us, which is the matter of our ſorrow, and give another thing to us, which might be the matter of our joy, Jacob loſt
* Gen. 23. 29, 31. a joynt, and got a bleſſing *: What advantage can it be to murmur? Can all your cryes ſtop the motions of the Heavens, when a ſtorm reaches you? Can your clamours make clouds move the faſter, or perſwade the ſhowers from drenching us? Murmuring at any afflictive Providence, is the way to make the Rod ſmarter in it ſelf, and ſharper to us.

5. Study Providence. 'Tis a part of Atheiſm not to think the acts of God in the World worth our ſerious thoughts. And if you would know the meaning of his adminſtrations, grow up in the fear of God. Pſal. 25. 14. The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him. God is highly angry with thoſe that mind him not, Pſal. 28. 5. becauſe they regard not the operation of his hands, he ſhall deſtroy them, and not build them up: He ſhall utterly root them out.

1. Study Providence univerſally. The darkeſt; God brings order out of the Worlds confuſion, even as he framed a beautiful Heaven and Earth out of a rude Maſs. The terribleſt; thoſe offer ſome thing worth our obſervation; the dreadful Providence of God makes Sodom an example to after ages. Jude 7. They are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire, &c. The ſmalleſt; God is a wiſe Agent, and ſo the leaſt of his actions are ſignificant. There is nothing ſuperfluous in thoſe acts we account the meaneſt; for to act vainly and lightly, argues imperfection, which cannot be attributed to God. The wiſdom of God may be much ſeen in thoſe 'Providences the blind World counts ſmall; as a little picture is oft times of more value, and hath more of the workman's skill than a larger which an ignorant perſon might prize at a higher rate; the Lilies, Flowers, Sparrows, our Saviour raiſes excellent obſervations from.

2. Regularly. By the words; compare Providence and the promiſe together; God's manner of adminiſtrations, and the meaning of them is underſtood by the word, Pſal. 77. 13. Thy way, O God, is in the Sanctuary. By faith; we many times correct our ſence by reaſon, when we look through a blew or green glaſs, and ſee all things blew or green; though our ſenſe repreſents them ſo, yet our reaſon diſcovers the miſtake; why ſhould we not correct reaſon by faith? Indeed our purblind reaſon ſtands in as much need of a regulation by faith, as our deceitful ſence doth of a regulation by reaſon. We may often obſerve in the Goſpel, that the holy Ghoſt taking notice of the particular circumſtances in the bringing Chriſt into the World, and in the courſe of his life, often hath thoſe expreſſions, as it was written, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. There is not a Providence happens in the World, but there are ſome general rules in the Word, whereby we may apprehend the meaning of it. From God's former work diſcovered in his word, we may trace his preſent Foot-ſteps: Obſerve the timings of Providence wherein the beauty of it appears, ſince God hath made every thing beautiful in its time.

3. Intirely. View them in their connexion. A harſh touch ſingle would not be pleaſing, but may rarely affected the conſort: The Providences of God bear a juſt proportion to one another, and are beautiful in their intire Scheme; but when regarded apart, we ſhall come far ſhort of a delightful underſtanding of them. As in a piece of Arras folded up, and afterwards particulary opened, we ſee the hand or foot of man, the branch of a tree; or if we look on the outſide, we ſee nothing but knots and threads, and uncouth ſhapes that we know not what to make of; but when it is fully opened, and we have the whole Webb before us, we ſee what Hiſtories and pleaſing characters are interwoven in it. View them in their end; there is no true judgment to be made of a thing in motion, unleſs we have a right proſpect of the end to which it tends. Many things which may ſeem terrible in their motion, may be exellent in their end. Providence is crowned by the end of it. Aſaph was much troubled about the proſperity of the wicked, and affliction of the Godly, but he was well ſatisfied when he underſtood their end, which was the end of Providence too, Pſal. 73. 16, 17. When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me, untill I went into the Sanctuary, then underſtood I their end. Moſes his Rod was a Serpent in its motion upon the ground; but when taken up, it was a Rod again to work miracles. God ſet us a pattern for this in the Creation. He views the Creatures as they came into being, and pronounced them good, he takes a review of them afterward in their whole frame, and the ſubordination of them to one another, and the ends he had deſtined them to, and then pronounceth them very good; The merciful Providences of God if ſingly looked upon, will appear good, but if reviewed in the whole web, and the end of them, will commence very good in our apprehenſions.

4. Calmly. Take heed of paſſion in this ſtudy, that is a miſt before the eye of the mind; ſeveral pleaſures alſo diſturb and ſtifle the nobler operation of the intellective part, and all improving thoughts of Gods Providence, Iſa. 5. 12. And the Harp, and the Viol, and Wine, are in their feaſts, but they regard not the work of the Lord, nor conſider the operations of his hands; All thoughts of them are choaked by the pleaſures of ſenſe. Paſſions and ſenſual pleaſures, are like flying Clouds in the night, interpoſing themſelves between the ſtars and our eyes, that we cannot obſerve the motions of them. Turbulent paſſions, or Swiniſh pleaſures prevailing, obſcure the Providence of God. Our own humour and intereſt we often make the meaſures of our judgment of Providence, Shimei, when Abſalom rebels againſt his Father, looks no further than his own intereſt, and therefore interprets it as a judgment of God in revenging the houſe of Saul, 2 Sam. 16. 7, 8. The Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood of the houſe of Saul, in whoſe ſtead thou haſt reigned. Therefore the Spirit of God takes particular notice that he was of the houſe of Saul, v. 5. when indeed this judgment was quite another thing, for David's ſin in the matter of Uriah was writen in the forehead of it.

5. Seriouſly. 'Tis not an eaſie work; for the cauſes of things are hid as the ſeminal virtues in plants, not viſible till they manifeſt themſelves. Providence is God's Lanthorn in many affairs; if we do not follow it cloſe, we may be left in the dark, and loſe our way. With much Prayer, For we cannot our ſelves find out the reaſon of them; being ſhallow Creatures, we cannot find out thoſe infinite wiſe methods God obſerves in the managing of them; but if we ſeriouſly ſet to work, and ſeek God in it, God may inform us, and make them intelligible to us. Though a man may not be able of himſelf to find out the frame and motions of an Engine, yet when the Artificers hath explained the work, diſcovered the intent of the Fabrick, it may be eaſily underſtood; If it be dark, whilſt you ſeriouſly muſe on it, God may ſend forth a light into you, and give you an underſtanding of it, Mat. 1. 20. Joſeph thought of thoſe things, and whilſt he thought on them, The Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream; God made them known to him. The Iſraelites ſaw God's acts in the bulk of them, but Moſes ſaw his way and the manner how he wrought them, Pſal. 103. 7. He made known his wayes unto Moſes, his acts unto the Children of Iſrael. Moſes had more converſe with God than they, and therefore was admitted into his ſecrets.

6. Holily. With a deſign to conform to that duty Providence calls for. Our motions ſhould be according to the Providence of God, when we underſtand the intent of them. There is a call of Providence, Iſa. 22. 12. In that day the Lord called to weeping and mourning; Sometimes to ſorrow, ſometimes to joy. If it be a Providence to diſcover our ſin, let us comply with it by humiliation; if it be to further our grace, ſuit it by lively and freſh actings. As the ſap in plants deſcends with the Sun's declination, and aſcends at the return of the Sun from the Tropick; there are ſeveral graces to be exerciſed upon ſeveral acts of Providence; either publick to the Church and Nation, or particular to our own perſons. Sometimes faith, ſometimes joy, ſometimes patience, ſometimes ſorrow for ſin There are ſpiritual leſſons in every Providence, for it doth not only offer ſomething to be underſtood, but ſome things to be practiſed, Mark. 10. 15, A Child is brought to Chriſt, and Chriſt from thence teaches them a leſſon of humility. Luk. 13. 1, 2, 3. When Chriſt diſcourſes of that ſad Providence of the blood of the Galileans, and the Tower of Siloa, he puts them upon the exerciſe of repentance. The Ruler enquired the time when his Son began to recover, that his faith in Chriſt might be confirmed, for upon that circumſtance it did much hang; and in doubtful caſes after a ſerious ſtudy of it, and thou knoweſt not which way to determine, conſider what makes moſt for God's glory and thy ſpiritual good, for that is the end of all: Let us therefore ſtudy Providence; not as Children do Hiſtories, to know what men were in the World, or to pleaſe their fancy only; but as wiſe men, to underſtand the motions of States, and the intrigues of Councels; to enrich them with a knowledge whereby they might be ſerviceable to their Countrey. So let us enquire into the Providence of God, to underſtand the mind of God, the intereſt of the Church, the wiſdom and kindneſs of God, and our own duty in comformity thereunto.

6. Aſcribe the Glory of every Providence to God Abraham's Steward petitioned God at the beginning of his buſineſs, Gen. 24. 12. and he bleſſes God at the ſucceſs of it, ver. 26, 27. We muſt not thank the tools which are uſed in the making an engine, and aſcribe unto them what we owe to the Workmans skill: Man is but the inſtrument, God's Wiſdom is the Artiſt. Let us therefore return the Glory of all where it is rightly placed: We may ſee the difference between Rachel and Leah in this reſpect, when Rachel had a Son by her maid Bilhah, ſhe aſcribes it to God's care, and calls his name Dan, which ſignifies judging, Gen. 30. 6. God hath judged me, and heard my voice. That the very Name might put her in remembrance of the kindneſs of God in anſwering her prayer. And the next Naphali, ſhe eſteems as the fruit of prayer, verſ. 8. Whereas Leah takes no notice of God, but vants of the multitude of her Children, ver. 11. behold a troop comes. She impoſed the name of Gad upon them, which alſo ſignifies fortune or good luck. And the next Aſher, verſ. 13. which is fortunate or bleſſed. And we find Leah of the ſame mind afterward, verſ. 17. It is ſaid God hearkned unto her, ſo that her Son Iſſachar was an anſwer of Prayer; but ſhe aſcribes it to a lower cauſe which had moved God; becauſe ſhe had given her maid to her Husband, verſ. 18. Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but to thy name be the Glory.

Doct. 2. All the motions of Providence in the World are ultimately for the good of the Church; of thoſe whoſe heart is perfect towards him. Providence follows the rule of Scripture. Whatſoever was written, was written for the Churches comfort *. Whatſoever is acted in order to any thing written, is acted for the Churches good. All the Providences of God in the World are conformable to his declarations in his word. All former Providences were ultimately in order to the bringing a Mediator into the World, and for the glory of him; then ſurely all the Providences of God ſhall be in order to the perfecting the Glory of Chriſt in that miſtical body, whereof Chriſt is head, and wherein his affection and his Glory are ſo much concerned. See the Proof of this by a Sripture or two. Pſal. 25. 10. All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto ſuch as keep his Covenant and his Teſtimonies. Not one path, but [all] the works and motions; not one particular act or paſſage of providence, but the whole tract of his proceedings; not only thoſe which are more ſmooth and pleaſant; but thoſe which are more rugged and bitter. All [mercy and truth] ſutable to that affection he bears in his heart to them, and ſutable to the declaration of that affection he hath in his promiſe. There is a contexture and a friendly connexion of kindneſs and faithfulneſs in every one of them. They both kiſs and embrace each other in every motion of God towards them. As mercy made the Covenant, ſo truth ſhall perform it. And there ſhall be as much mercy as truth in all Gods actings towards thoſe that keep it, Rom. 8. 28. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe; [we know] we do not conjecture or gueſs ſo, but we have an infallible aſſurance of it. [All things] even the moſt frightful, and ſo thoſe that have in reſpect of ſenſe, nothing but Gall and Wormwood in them; [work together] they all conſpire with an admiable harmony and unanimous conſent for a Chriſtians good. One particular act may ſeem to work to the harm of the Church, as one particular act may work to the good of wicked men: but the whole ſeries and frame of things combine together for the good of thoſe that are affectionate to him. Both the Lance that makes us bleed, and the plaiſter which refreſheth the Wounds. Both the griping purges, and the warming Cordials combine together for the Patients cure [to them who are called according to his purpoſe.] Here the Apoſtle renders a reaſon to this poſition; becauſe they are called not only in the general amongſt the reſt of the world, to whom the Goſpel comes; but they are ſuch that were in Gods purpoſe and counſel from Eternity to ſave, and therefore reſolved to encline their will to Faith in Chriſt. Therefore all his other Counſels about the affairs of the world ſhall be for their good. Another reaſon of this, the Apoſtle intimates. verſ. 27. The Spirit makes interceſſion for the Saints according to the will of God. The interceſſions of the Spirit, which are alſo according to Gods will and purpoſe, purpoſe, will not be fruitleſs in the main end, which both the interceſſions of the Spirit and purpoſe of God, and the will and deſire of the Saints, do aim at, which is their good. Indeed where any is the object of this grand purpoſe of God, he is the object of God's infinite and innumerable thoughts Pſal. 40. 5. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou haſt done, and thy thoughts which are to us ward, they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee; If I would declare and ſpeak of them, they are more than can be numbred. The Pſalmiſt ſeems to intimate, that in all the wonderful works which God hath done, his thoughts are toward his people. He thinks of them in all his actions; and thoſe thoughts are infinite, and cannot be numbered, and reckoned up by any Creature. He ſeems to reſtrain the thoughts of God towards his people in all thoſe works of wonder which he doth in the World, and which others are the Subjects of: But his thoughts, or purpoſes, and intentions in all (for the word ſignifies purpoſes too) are chiefly, next to his own glory, directed toward his people, thoſe that truſt in him, which verſ. 4. he had pronounced bleſſed. They run in his mind as if his heart was ſet upon them, and none but them.

* Rom. 15. 4.

Here I ſhall premiſe two things as the groundwork of what follows.

1. God certainly in all his actions has ſome end, that is without queſtion, becauſe he is a wiſe Agent; to act vainly and lightly, is an evidence of imperfection, which cannot be aſcribed to the only wiſe God.

* Ezek. 1. 18. The Wheels of Providence are full of Eyes *. There is motion, and a knowledge of the end of that motion. And Jeſus Chriſt, who is God's Deputy in the providential government, hath Seven Eyes, as well

* Revel. 5. 6. as Seven Horns *. A perfect ſtrength, and a perfect knowledge how to uſe that ſtrength, and to what end to uſe it. Seven being the number of perfection in Scripture.

2. That certainly is Gods end which his heart is moſt ſet upon, and that which is laſt in execution. What doth God do at the folding up of the World, but perfect his people, and welcome them into Glory? Therefore God principally next to himſelf loves his Church. The whole Earth is his, but the Church is his treaſure, Exod. 19. 5. If you will keep my Covenant, then ſhall you be a peculiar treaſure unto me above all people, for all the Earth is mine; Segullah ſuch a treaſure, that a Man, a King will intruſt in no hands but his own; all the Earth is mine, is not a reaſon why the Church was his treaſure, but an incentive of thankfulneſs, that when the whole Earth was his, and lay before him, and there were many people that he might have choſen and loved before them yet he pitched upon them to make them his choiceſt treaſure. And when the bleſſed God hath pitched upon a people, and made them his treaſure, what he doth for them is with his whole heart, and with his whole Soul, Jer. 32. 41, 42. ſpeaking of making an everlaſting Covenant, he adds; yea I will rejoyce over them to do them good, &c. aſſuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole Soul. As though God minded nothing elſe but thoſe people he had made an everlaſting Covenant with; which is the higheſt ſecurity, and moſt pregnant expreſſion of his affection that can be given to any; not to give them a parcel or moiety of his heart, but the whole infinite intire piece, and to engage it all with the greateſt delight in dooing good to them. That infinite heart of God, and all the contrivances and workings of it, center in the Churches welfare The World is a Wilderneſs, but the Church is a Garden. If he water the Wilderneſs, will he not much more dreſs his Garden? If the flights of Birds be obſerved by him, ſhall not alſo the particular concernments of the Church? He hath a repoſitory for them, and all that belong to them; He hath a Book of Life for their Names *, a book of Record for their members *, a Note-book for their Speeches, Mal. 3. 16. A book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord; And a book of Providence for their preſervation, Exod. 32. 32. In the proſecution of this, I ſhall ſhew, Firſt, All good things. 2dly. All bad things are for their good. Firſt All good things. I. The World.

II. Gifts and common graces of men in the World

III. Angels.

I. The World. The whole World was made and ordained for the good of the Church, next to the glory of God. This will appear in three things. First.

1. The continuance of the World is for their ſakes. God would have deſtroyed the World becauſe of the ignorance and wickedneſs of it, before this time, but he overlooked it all, and had reſpect to the times of Chriſt, and the publiſhing faith in him, and repentance, Act. 17. 30 And the times of this ignorance God winked at, God overlooked *, he looked not ſo upon them, as to be provoked to deſtroy the World; but his eyes were fixed on the times of Chriſtianity; therefore would not take notice in the extremity of his juſtice of the wickedneſs of thoſe foregoing ages. Believers are the Salt of the Earth *. which makes the world ſavoury to God and keeps it from corrupting. 'Tis meant not only for the Apoſtles, but of Chriſts Diſciples, of all Chriſtians, for to them was that Sermon made, v. 1. If the Salt have loſt his ſavour, if the Salt be corrupted, and Chriſtianity overthrown in the World, wherewith ſhall the World be ſalted? how can it be kept from corruption; If they that perſecuted the Prophets before you in Judea, (which is ſometimes called the Earth in Scripture) cannot reliſh you and find nothing grateful to their Palates in your Doctrine and Converſation, wherewith ſhall they be ſalted? How ſhall they be preſerved from corruption? The Land will be good for nothing but to be given as a prey to the Romans to be trod under their feet, as being caſt out of Gods protection. They are the foundation of the World, Pro. 10. 25. the righteous are an everlaſting foundation. Maimonides underſtands it thus, that the World ſtands for the righteous ſakes. When God had Noah and his Family lodged in the Ark, he cares not what deluge and deſtruction he brings upon the reſt of the World. When we had conducted Lot out of Sodom, he brings down that dreadful ſtorm of fire. He cares for no place, no nor for the whole World, any longer than whileſt his People are there, or he hath ſome to bring in, in time. For the meaneſt believer is of more worth than a World; therefore when God hath gathered all together, he will ſet fire upon this frame of the Creation: For what was the end of Chriſts coming and dying, but to gather all things together in one? Eph. 1. 10. That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of time he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt. When Chriſt hath ſummed up all together, he hath attained his end. And to what purpoſe then can we imagine God ſhould continue the World any longer? for his delight is not ſimply in the World, but in the Saints there. Pſal. 16. 3. But to the Saints that are in the Earth, in whom is all my delight; not in the Earth, but in the Saints there,

* Mat. 5. 13.

Grotius on the place.

which are the only excellent things in it, which Chriſt ſpeaks (of whom that Pſalm is meant) who knew well what was the object of his Fathers pleaſure. The ſweet ſavour God ſmelt in Noah's Sacrifice, was the occaſion of God's Declaration for the Worlds ſtanding, Gen. 8. 21. And the Lord ſaid in his heart, I will not curſe the ground any more for mans ſake. That he would no more ſmite it with a totally deſtroying judgment. It was his reſpect to Chriſt repreſented in that ſacrifice, and to the faith and grace of Noah the ſacrificer. What ſavour could an infinitely pure Spirit ſmell in the blood and flames of beaſts?

2. The courſe of natural things is for the good of the Church, or particular members of it. God makes articles of agreement with the Beaſts and Fowls, whoſe nature is raging and ravenous, and binds them in ſure bonds for the performance of thoſe articles, Hoſea 2. 18. And in that day will I make a Covenant for them with the Beaſts of the field, and with the fowls Heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground, and will make them to lye down ſafely. As upon our ſin God can arm them againſt us; ſo upon our obedience he can make them ſerviceable even againſt their Natures; as if he had made a Covenant with them, and they had both the reaſon and vertue to obſerve it. I do not remember any inſtance in Scripture, that God went out of the uſual tract of his Providence, and acted in an extraordinary manner, but where his people were one way or other concerned. It was for Joſhua's and the Iſraelites ſake that the Sun was arreſted to ſtand ſtill in the Valley of Ajalon, that they might have light enough to defeat their Enemies, and purſue their victory *. The Sea ſhall, againſt its natural courſe, ſtand in heaps like walls of Braſs to aſſiſt the Iſraelits eſcape *. The fire is reſtrained in the operation of its nature, even whilſt it retains its burning quality, when the lives of the three valient believing Children are in danger. The mouths of Lyons are muxled, when the ſafety of his beloved Daniel is concerned *. And the ſhadow goes back upon the Dyal for Hezekiah's ſake *. When God would at any time deliver his people, He can muſter up Lightnings and Thunders for their aſſiſtance *; He can draw all the Regiments of Heaven into Battel-array, and arm the Stars to fight againſt Siſera, when Iſraels condition needs it; and make even the loweſt Creatures to liſt themſelves as Auxiliaries in the ſervice. God hath not a diſpleaſure with ſenſleſs Creatures, neither is tranſported with ſtrains of fury againſt ſuch objects, when he alters their natural courſe. Hab. 3. 8. Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the Rivers? was thy wrath againſt the Sea, that thou didſt ride upon thy horſes and chariots of ſalvation? No, but he made thoſe Creatures the Horſes and Chariots to ſpeed aſſiſtance and ſalvation to his people, which the Pſalmiſt elegantly diſcribes, Pſal. 114. All Creatures are his Hoſt; and that God that created them, hath ſtill the Soveraign command over them, and can imbodie them in an Army to ſerve his purpoſe for the deliverance of his people, as he did againſt Pharoah.

3. The intereſt of Nations is ordered as is moſt for the Churches good. He orders both the courſe of natural things, and of civil affairs, for their intereſt. He alters the ſtate of things, and changeth Gover. nours and Governments for the ſake of his people. For theſe cauſes God ſent Eliſha to Crown Jehu King, 2 King. 9. 6, 7. I have anointed thee King over the people, the Lord, &c. that I may avenge the blood of my Servants the Prophets, and the blood of all the Servants of the Lord at the hand of Jezabel. For the ſakes of the Godly in that Nation, and the revenging the blood of the Prophets which had been ſhed, was he raiſed up by the Lord. He hath ſent ſuch judgments upon Egypt, that it was as much the intereſt of that Nation to let Iſrael go, as it was before to keep them their vaſſals. God orders the intereſt and affairs of Nations for thoſe ends? and according to this diſpoſition of affairs, Chriſt times his interceſſions for his Church. The Angels had been ſent out to view the ſtate of the World, and found it in peace, Zach. 1. 11. behold, all the earth ſits ſtill, and is at reſt; there had been Wars in Artaxerxes and Xerxes his time, but in the time of Darius, that part of the World had an univerſal peace, which was the fitteſt time for the reſtoration of the Jews, and building the Temple; becauſe it could not be built, but by the Kings coſt. whoſe treaſure in the time War was expended another way; nor would it conſiſt with their policy to reſtore the Jews to their Government at ſuch a time when they had Wars with the Neighbour-parts of Egypt. See how God orders the ſtate of the World in ſubſerviency to his gracious intentions towards his Church. The time of the Jewiſh captivity was now out, according to the promiſe of God, and God gives that part of the World a general peace, that the reſtauration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of the Temple might be facilitated, and the truth of his promiſe in their deliverance accompliſhed. Upon the news of this general peace in that part of the World, Chriſt expoſtulates with God for the reſtauration of Jeruſalem, verſ 12. How long, O Lord. wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem, and on the Cities of Judah, againſt which thou haſt had indignation theſe threeſcore and ten years? The time of the Captivity determined by God, was now expired. The firſt reformation in Germany was back'd by Reaſons of State as it was then altered; it being the intereſt of many Princes of that Countrey to countenance Luther's Doctrine, for the putting a ſtop to the growing greatneſs of Charles the fifth, who had evident deſigns to enſlave them. I might mention many more, only by the way let me adviſe thoſe that have an inclination to read hiſtories of former tranſactions, to which men naturally are addicted, to make this your end, to obſerve the ſtrange Providences of God in the World, and how admirably he hath made them ſubſervient to the intereſt of the Church; which will be the moſt profitable way of reading them, whereby they will not only ſatisfie your curioſity, but eſtabliſh your Chriſtianity, Calvin underſtands that place, Deut. 32. 8. He ſets the bounds of the people according to the number of the Children of Iſrael, that in the whole ordering of the ſtate of the World, God propoſed this as his end, to conſult for the good of his people, and his his care extends to the reſt only in order to them; and though they are but a ſmall number, yet he orders his whole Government of the Worlds affairs as may beſt tend to their Salvation. Therefore God ſets the people bounds, or enlarged them according as they may be ſerviceable one way or other to this end, And the reaſon is rendred, v. 9. For the Lords portion is his people, and Jacob is the Lot of his inheritance. Therefore God orders all the reſt of the World in ſubſerviency to the maintaining and improving his portion and inheritance.

Secondly. 2. As the World, ſo the gifts and common graces of men in the World are for the good of the Church, which is a great argument for providence in general; ſince there is nothing ſo conſiderable in goverment as the diſpoſing of places to men according to their particular endowments and abilities for them. And the beſtowing ſuch gifts upon men, is none of the meaneſt arguments for Gods providential Government of the World. As,

1. The gifts of good men. The gifts conferred upon on Paul were depoſited in him, not only to be poſſeſſed by him, but uſed and laid out for the good of the Church. Col. 1. 25. Whereof I am made a Miniſter according to the diſpenſation of God which is given to me for you: The manifeſtation of the Spirit to any man is given to profit withal. 1 Cor. 21. 7. And this is the great end for which men ſhould ſeek to excel, viz. for the edifying of the Church, 1 Cor. 14. 12. For as much as you are zealous of Spiritual gifts, ſeek that you may excel to the edifying of the Church.

2. The gifts and common graces of bad men. There is ſomething that is amiable in men, though they have not grace. As in Stones, Plants and Flowers, though they have not ſenſe, there is ſomething grateful in them, as colour and ſmell, &c. And all thoſe things that are lovely in men, are for the Churches good, the beſt life, and the worſt death, things preſent, let who will be the poſſeſſor, all things between Life and Death are for the good of Believers, becauſe they are Chriſts, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the World, i. e. [Whether the gifts of the prime lights in the Church, or the common gifts of the world] are all yours, and ye are Chriſts, and Chriſt is Gods. God is the diſpenſer of them, Chriſt is the Governour of them, and all for your ſakes. As the medicinal qualities of waters are not for the good of themſelves, but the accommodation of the indigencies of men. By the common works of the Spirit God doth keep men from the evil of the World. For it cannot be ſuppoſed, that the Spirit, whoſe Miſſion is principally for the Church, ſhould give ſuch gifts out of love to men which hate him, and are not the objects of his eternal purpoſe; but he hath ſome other ends in doing it, which is the advantage of his Church and People: And this God cauſes by the preaching of the Goſpel, which when it works gracious works in ſome, produceth common works in others for the good of thoſe gracious ones. As a ſeed of corn hath ſtraw husks and Chaff come up with it, which are ſhelters to that little ſeed which lies in the midſt; ſo in the preaching of the Goſpel there are ſome husks and Chaff come up among natural men, which God makes to be ſhelters to the Church, as thoſe common works, and reſtraining men through the knowledg of Chriſt. God gives gifts to them, not out of love to them, but love to his Church. As Nurſes of great mens Children are fed with better meat than the other Servants, not out of any particular perſonal reſpect to them, but to their office, that the milk whereby the Child is nouriſhed, may be the ſweeter and wholſomer; were it not for that Relation, ſhe muſt be content with the Diet allowed to the reſt of the Servants. Some ſtinking plants may have medicinal virtues, which the Phyſician extracts the cure of a diſeaſe, and flings the reſt upon the Dunghil. God beſtows ſuch qualities upon men otherwiſe unſavoury to him, which he draws forth upon ſeveral occaſions for the good of thoſe that are more peculiarly under his care, and then caſts them away. Theſe gifts are indeed the ruine of bad men, becauſe of their pride; but the Churches advantage in regard of their excellency, and are often as profitable to others, as dangerous to themſelves. As all that good which is in plants and animals, is for the good of man; ſo all the gifts of natural men are for the Churches good, for they are for that end as the principal, next the glory of God; becauſe every inferior thing is ordained to ſomething ſuperior as its end. Plants are ordained for the nouriſhment of Beaſts, for Men. The inferior men for the ſervice of higher, and all for the community; yet ſtill there is a higher end beyond thoſe, viz. the Glory of God, to which they are ultimately ordained, which is ſo connected with the Churches good, that what ſerves one, ſerves the other.

3. Angels, the top Creatures in the Creation, are ordered for the good of the Church. If the Stars are not Cyphers in the World only to be gaz'd upon, but have their influences both upon Plants and Animals; As the Sun in impregnating the Earth. and enlivening the Plants, and aſſiſting the growth of fruits for the good of mankind: If the Stars have thoſe natural influences upon the ſenſible world, the Angels which are the morning Stars, have no leſs intereſt as inſtruments in the government of it. The Heathens had ſuch a notion of Dæmons working thoſe things which were done in the World, but according to the will and order of the ſupream God. The Angels are called watchers, Dan. 4. 13. a Watcher, and an holy one, verſ. 17. this is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: they watch for Gods orders, and watch for Gods honour, and the Churches good. There are orders of ſtate among them, for we read of their decree; 'tis called their decree miniſterially, as they execute it; approbativè as they ſubſcribe to the equity and goodneſs of it. As the Saints are ſaid to judge the World, not authoritativè as in commiſſion with Chriſt, but as they approve of Chriſt's ſentence. They ſeem to requeſt thoſe things of God which may make for his glory; and they decree among themſelves what is fit to be preſented to God in order to his glory. They cannot endure that men ſhould trample upon Gods authority, diſpoil him of his right, and tread down his inheritance; and therefore they ſend ſuch requeſts to God to act ſo as men may acknowledg him and his government, to the intent that the living may know that the moſt high rules in the Kingdoms of men. Their care therefore muſt be for the Church, ſince God rules all things in order to that, and ſince that is Gods portion and inheritance; ſo that as they have a care of Gods glory, they muſt alſo have a care of Gods portion, and his peculiar treaſure. The inward part of the Temple was to be adorned with Cherubims, to note the ſpecial attendance of the Holy Angels in the aſſemblies of the Saints: As evil Angels plot againſt the Church, ſo good Angels project for it. Though in the Scripture we find Angels ſometimes employed in affairs of common Providence, and doing good to them that are not of the Church; as one is ſent to comfort Hagar, and relieve Iſhmael upon his cry, though he had ſcoffed at Iſaac the heir of the covenant, when he was in Abraham's Family *; yet for the moſt part they were employed in the concerns of ſome of his ſpecial Servants, Angels thruſt Lot out of *Sodom. An Angel ſtopt the Lyons mouths when Daniel was in the Den, Dan. 6. 18. My God hath ſent his Angel, and hath ſhut the Lyons mouths. God imploies Angels in the preſerving and ruining of Empires, which is clear in the prophecy of Daniel, and ſome underſtand Iſa. 10. 34. And Lebanon ſhall fall by a mighty one, of an Angel. As the Soul ſends forth a multitude of Spirits ſwiftly into the nerves for the ſupply of the loweſt member, which runs thither upon the leaſt motion: So do the Angels which are Gods Miniſters, run at the appointment of God, and are employed in all the wheels of Providence. The Spirit of the living Creatures was in the wheels of Providence *.

1. The higheſt orders among them are not exempted from being officers for the Church. Though they are called Gods Angels in reſpect of their immediate attendance on God; yet they are called mens Angels in reſpect of the ſervice they do for them, Mat. 18. 10. Their Angels do alwaies behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven. They are not the ordinary ſorts of Angels only which attend upon thoſe little little ones, upon young Converts humble Souls, thoſe little ones in the Kingdom of Heaven; but they are the higheſt Courtiers there, ſuch as ſee the face of God, and ſtand before him. A King hath many Servants, but not every Servant, only the chief of the Nobility, ſtand before him; ſo they are not Angels of the meaneſt order and rank in Heaven, that are ordered to attend the loweſt Chriſtian. The Apoſtle makes no doubt of this, Heb. 1. 14. are they not all miniſtring Spirits [there is no queſtion but they are] ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of Salvation? He aſſerts confidently that not one of them is blotted out of the Liſt for this employment. Are they not all? none are exempted from the ſervice of God, ſo none are exempted from the end of that ſervice, which is the good of Believers. They are Gods ſervants, but for the Churches good, for them which ſhall be heirs, [are they not all?] it is irrational to deny it. And they are ſent forth, every one of them hath his commiſſion ſign'd by God for this purpoſe, and not only for the Church in general, but for every member in particular [for the heirs of Salvation.] And not only for them which are already called and enrolled, but for them who ſhall be called, whoſe names are written in the Book of Gods election [who ſhall be heirs.] And they are not only faintly ſent, as if they might go if they will, but they have a ſtrict charge to look after them well, not in one or two of their works, or ways, but in all, Pſal. 91. 11. He ſhall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways, to bear thee up in their hands, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone; they are to uſe all their ſtrength to this purpoſe, to bear them up in their hands. As the elder Children are appointed by Parents to have a care of the younger in their works and motions, and to uſe both their wiſdom and ſtrength for them. The Angels are a guard to ſecure them here, and laſt to convey them to their Fathers houſe, Luk. 16. 22. when a man is in favour with a Prince, all the Courtiers will be obſervant of him.

2. Armies of them are employed upon this occaſion. There are great multitudes of them, as Bildad ſpeaks, Job 25. 3. Is there any number of his armies? that is, of his Angels: when Joel ſpeaks of the heathens gathering together? thither, ſaith he, Lord, cauſe thy mighty ones to come down *. A whole ſquadron of them ſhall attend upon a gracious man according to the circumſtances he is involved in. Gen. 32. 1, 2. And Jacob went on his way, and the Angels of God met him; and when Jacob ſaw them, he ſaid this is Gods hoſt. Regiments of Angels, enough to make up an Army (for ſo Jacob terms them) met him upon the way to ſecure his Brother Eſau, and to encourage him in his journey. So ſome interpret, 2 Sam. 5. 24. the ſound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees. The ſign of the marching of a Brigade of Angels, with the Lord, in the head of them, for the diſcomfiture of David's Enemies; then ſhall the Lord go out before thee to ſmite the hoſt of the Philiſtines: And this they do not of their own heads, but by the pleaſure of God, not only by a bare will, but a delight, Pſal. 103. 21. Bleſs the Lord all ye his hoſts, ye Miniſters of his that do his pleaſure. רצונו his choiceſt pleaſure, he delights to ſee this his Militia upon action.

* Joel 3. 11.

3. Chriſt hath the government of them to this end for his Church. Angels are all put in ſubjection to him, Heb. 2. 7, 8. In that he put all in ſubjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. He is exalted above all principality and power, God hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church, Eph. 1. 21, 22. all things, even principalities and powers are put under his feet, to be commiſſioned and influenced by him for the good of his Church *; they are ordered by the Spirit of Chriſt to this purpoſe, Zach. 1. 10. Thoſe are they whom the Lord hath ſent to walk to and fro through the Earth. They are his faithful meſſengers diſpatcht into the World by him, as ſcouts and ſpies to take notice of the ſtate of the World, and to give him intelligence, and an exact account of affairs, and v. 11. they give an account to Chriſt. Chriſt is the Head and General of them, Col. 2. 10, They are his Hoſt, alwaies in a warlike poſture, with Chriſt in the Head of them, Zac. 1. 8. upon their Horſes, which notes readineſs to move and ſpeed in motion: And as an Hoſt they are ſaid to pitch their tents round about them that fear him; and are in a continual conflict with the evil Angels to prevent their deſigns in the behalf of Chriſt, whom they acknowledge as their head by their worſhip of him *. Chriſt orders them to take care to ſeal his Servants in the foreheads, that they may be preſerved in the ſtorms which ſhall happen in the World at the time of the ruine of the Romiſh Papacy, Revel. 7. 2, 3. An Angel comes that had the ſeal of the living God (commiſſion of God) ſaying, hurt not the Earth, nor the Sea, nor the Trees, till we have ſealed the Servants of our God in the foreheads.

* Ezek. 1. 12. Whither the Spirit was to go, they went.

* Heb. 1. 6.

4. The great actions which have been done in the World, or ſhall be done for the Church, are performed by them. Angels were ſent as expreſſes by God with his great decrees concerning the revolutions of times *. An Angel was ſent to Daniel with the meſſage of a Redeemer, and the cleareſt prophecy of Chriſt, which the Jews are not able to anſwer to this day, which they moſt ſtartle at. Part of the diſcovery of the Revelation to John, which is as a ſtanding Almanack to the Church, was made us by an Angel *. And when by the courſe of time thoſe turnings are to happen in the World, the Angels muſt have their ſhare of ſervice in them. The Trumpets are ſounded by Angels, and the Vials which are filled with the cauſes of ſuch alterations, are poured out by the hands of Angels, Some indeed by the Angels there mentioned, underſtand the viſible inſtruments of reformation, not excluding the Angels who are inviſible Miniſters in the affairs of the World *.

* Dan. 7. 16. Dan. 8. 16. And I heard a mans voice which called and ſaid Gabriel, make this man to underſtand the viſion * Dan. 9. 21. Rev. 10 8, 9. & 22. 8, 9. * Lightf. Temple. Chap. 38. p. 253, 256

5. They engage in this work for the Church with delight, They act as Gods Miniſters in his Providence with a unanimous conſent † So that they perform their office with the ſame ſwiftneſs, and with the affection, without emulation, to go one before another, which makes many actions ſucceed ill among men; but they go hand in hand. They do it with affection; both in reſpect of the kind diſpoſition of their natures, and as they are fellow-members of the ſame body, for they are parts of the Church, and of the Heavenly Jeruſalem, Heb. 12. 22. Ye are come to the Heavenly Jeruſalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general aſſembly and Church of the firſt born, and therefore act out of affection to that which is a part of their body, as well as out of obedience to their head. They do it in reſpect of their own improvement too, and increaſe of their knowledge (which is the deſire of all intellectual Creatures.) For they compleat their underſtandings by the ſight of the methods of infinite wiſdom in the perfecting his gracious deſigns. And it is Gods intent that they ſhould grow in the knowledge of his great myſterys by their employment, Eph. 3. 10. To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in Heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wiſdom of God; i. e. By the gracious works of God towards the Church, and in the behalf of it, for the ſecurity and growth of the Church, and in the executions of thoſe decrees crees which as inſtruments they are imployed in. For I do not underſtand, how it can be meant of the knowledge of Chriſt, for that they know more than the Church below can acquaint them with; for without queſtion they have a clear inſight into the offices of Chriſt who is the Head, and whom they are ordered to worſhip. They underſtand the aim of his death, and reſurrection, and can better explain the dark predictions of Scripture, than purblind man can. But by obſerving the Methods which God uſes in the accompliſhment of them, they become more intelligent, and commence Maſters of knowledg in a higher degree, which it is probable is one reaſon of their joy, when they ſee Gods infinite Wiſdom and Grace in the converſion of a ſinner; without affection to them, and their employment about them, they could not rejoyce ſo much: And their rejoicing in their firſt bringing in to God, argues their joy in all their employments, which concerns their welfare.

Secondly. 2. As all good things, ſo all bad things are ordered by Providence for the good of the Church. That which in its own nature is an Injury, by Gods ordering puts on the nature of a Mercy; and what is Poyſon in it ſelf, by the Almighty Art becomes a Soveraign Medicine. Are Gods Diſpenſations in their own nature deſtructive? That wiſe Phyſician knows how to make Poyſons work the effect of Purges: Are they ſharp? It is to humble and purge the Church? As ſhadows ſerve to ſet out the pictures, ſo the darkeſt paſſages of Providence are made by God to commend the beauty of thoſe glorious things he works for his Church. We may ſee this

1. In Bad perſons. As,

1. The Devil. God manageth him for his own glory, and the ſtrengthning of Believers *. The Devils deſiring to enter into the herd of ſwine, with an intent, probably, not only to deſtroy the ſwine, but to incenſe the Gadarens againſt him, out of whom they had been caſt, to do him ſome conſiderable miſchief. But what is the iſſue? As they diſcover their malice, ſo they inhance the value of Chriſts kindneſs to the diſtreſſed man, whom he had freed from this tyranny: Hereby alſo was the Law of God juſtified, in commanding the Jews to abſtain from Swines Fleſh, which the Gardarens, being Apoſtate Jews, had broken; he magnified his own power in the routing ſuch a number of unclean Spirits, which had not been ſo conſpicuous in the turning them out of one man, had not this regiment diſcovered themſelves among the Swine, and brought ſuch a loſs upon the Gadarens; whereby as they ſhewed their own ſtrength and malice, ſo they diſcovered occaſionally the greatneſs of Chriſts charity, and his power over them; ſo that in granting the malicious petition of this exaſperated Legion, the Law of God is juſtified, our Saviours love glorified, his power manifeſted. And a foundation laid for the gaining Proſelytes in that Country (to which purpoſe he left the man he had cured *.) and to ſtrengthen the faith of thoſe poor Believers, which then followed him. God makes uſe of the Devils by the Soveraignty of Providence, to bring about ends unknown to themſelves for all their wiſdom. The malice of the Devil againſt Job hath rendered him a ſtanding miracle of patience for ever. They are the rulers of the darkneſs of this World *. Not of the light of the World; they are the rulers of the wicked, and the ſcullions of the Saints, to ſcour and cleanſe them. They are the rulers of the World, but ſubordinate to ſerve the Providence of God? wherein God declares his wiſdom by ſerving himſelf of the worſt of his Enemies. The Devil thought he had brought a total deſtruction upon mankind, when he perſwaded our firſt Parents to eat of the forbidden fruit; but the only wiſe God ordered it to bring about a greater glory to himſelf, and a more firm ſtability to his people, in introducing an everlaſting covenant which could not be broken, and eſtabliſhing their happineſs upon ſurer terms than it was ſetled in Paradiſe. And afterwards in filling the heart of Judas to betray Chriſt, and the hearts of the Jews to crucifie him. Even by that way whereby he thought to hinder the good of mankind, he occaſionally promotes their perpetual redemption: And I do not much queſtion but thoſe very principles which the Devil had diſtill'd into the Gentile World, of ſhedding human blood in Sacrifices, for expiation of guilt, and the Gods converſing with Men in human ways, and the imagination of the interceſſion of Dæmons for them; the firſt out of rage againſt mankind, and both that and the other to induce them to Idolatry, might facilitate the entertainment of Chriſt as the expiatory Sacrifice and the belief of his interceſſion. God over-reaches the Devil, and makes him inſtrumental for good, where he deſigns hurt and miſchief.

2. Wicked men. All the wicked in the midſt of the Church are for the good of it, either for the exerciſe of their grace, or ſecurity of their perſons, or intereſt, Pro. 16. 7. When a mans ways pleaſe the Lord, He will make his enemies to be at peace with him. Sometimes he will incline their hearts intentionally to favour, or order even their actions againſt them to procure their peace, contrary to their intentions. Sometimes God makes them his Sword to cut his People, ſometimes Phyſick to purge them, ſometimes Fire to melt and refine them, ſometimes Hedges to preſerve them, ſometimes a ranſom to redeem them *. A Traveller makes uſe of the mettle of a head-ſtrong Horſe to carry him to his journies end. That wind which would overturn a little Boat, the ſkilful Pilot makes uſe of to drive his Ship into the Harbour, and the Husbandman to cleanſe his Corn from the Chaff. Though the ends of the workers, viz. God and wicked men, are different; yet the end of the work is but one, which is ordered by Gods Soveraign pleaſure. It was promiſed in the promiſe of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, Gen. 9. 27. God ſhall inlarge Japhet, and he ſhall dwell in the tents of Shem, and Canaan ſhall be his ſervant. God ſhall allure Japhet, the Gentiles of Europe, to dwell in the tents of Shem, and Canaan the head of the curſed Poſterity, ſhall be Servants to the Church beſide their will, and ſometimes againſt it, by an overruling hand. And Chriſt hath bought them to be his Servants, 2 Pet. 2. 1. denying the Lord that bought them, and therefore hath the diſpoſing of them, whether they voluntarily give up themſelves to him or no. He is a Lord by purchaſe over them, who own him not as a Saviour. The hatred of the Churches enemies ſometimes conduceth more to her good, than the affections of all her worldly Friends. Now this appears,

1. In furthering the Goſpel. The Jews, who ſpeak not of Chriſt among themſelves, but with approbrious terms, have been the exact preſervers of the Old Teſtament, even to the very number of the letters; wherein Chriſtians have ſufficient to confirm them in the belief of Chriſts being the Meſſiah and unanſwerable arguments againſt their adverſaries; Whereupon St. Auſtin terms them capſarios Eccleſiæ, ſuch that carry the Books of the Children of great men after them to School. When the Authority of the Revelation was anciently queſtioned, the Church of Rome was inſtrumental to keep it in the number of the Canonical books, not thinking they ſhould find their own Church ſo plainly Deciphered in it, to be the Mother of abominations. To this we may refer the action of Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, in cauſing the Scripture to be tranſlated about three hundred years before the coming of Chriſt; through which the Nations * might better diſcern (as it were through a proſpective glaſs) the new Star of Jacob which was ſhortly to ariſe: No doubt but many of the Gentiles by comparing the old Scripture Prophecies. which they now could read in the Greek language, might be more eaſily induced to an embracing the Goſpel, and acknowledging Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, when it came to be divulged among them. Herod is the cauſe of the conſulation about the place of Chriſts birth; not for any good-will he had to him, whom he intended to murther, but God makes uſe of this to clear up the truth of the Prophecy concerning Bethlehem, the place of his Birth, Mat. 5. 6. Out of thee ſhall come a Governour that ſhall rule my people Iſrael. And they certainly were not very good, who preached Chriſt out of envy, and propagated the Goſpel, wherein Paul rejoyced not in their ſin, bnt in the providential fruit of it, Phil. 1. 15, 18. Some indeed preach Chriſt even of envy and ſtrife; what then! Notwithſtanding every way, whether in pretence or truth, Chriſt is preached, and I therein do rejoyce, yea, and will rejoyce.

Mat. 8. 31, 32.

* Jakſon Vol. 1. *p.*62

2. In furthering the temporal good of the Church;

1. In its preſervation. Wicked men are often ſerviceable to the Church, as the filthy Raven was to holy Elijah, or as the Lion which would have devoured Sampſon, is a ſtore-houſe to provide him food; for in his hunger he finds a table ſpread in the belly of his Enemy. Pharoah's deſign was to deſtory Iſrael, and the Daughter of that irreconciable Enemy, is directed by God to preſerve Moſes, who was to be rhe ruine of her family, the deſtruction of the Egyptian glory and the Deliverer of the Church. She ſaves him out of charity, and God out of a wiſe deſign; She by his Education in the Egyptian learning, fits him for the Court, and God for the deliverance of his Church. Egypt had corn to relieve firſt Abraham *, afterward Jacob in a time of famine; the family wherein the Church of God was only then bound up. Herod lies in wait for Chriſts deſtruction, and Egypt, the moſt Idolatrous Country in the World, and an ancient Enemy to Gods Church, affords him ſhelter. God makes Moab to hide his out-caſts, and be their covert from the face of the ſpoiler *. Some think, Gods deſign in ſending Jonah to Nineveth, to work ſo remarkable a change by repentance, was to ſoften ſome of their hearts, and the hearts of their poſterity, to deal more tenderly with thoſe gracious Iſraelites, who in the captivity of the ten Tribes, ſome years after, ſhould be their gueſts. God making thereby proviſion for his own people in that common judgment which ſhould come upon the Nation. This God doth ſometimes by reviving the law of nature, and the common ſentiments of Religion in the hearts of natural men; whereby their own conſciences bearing witneſs to the innocency and excellency of the Church of God, put them upon thoughts for its ſecurity. Sometimes it is above their own Sphere, and beſides their own intentions. The Whale which ſwallowed Jonah, intended him as a morſel to quell his hunger, but proves his ſecurity, and diſgorgeth him upon the ſhoar: They underſtand their own aim, but not the deſign of God. The Leech that ſucks the Patients blood, knows not the Chyrurgeons deſign, who uſeth it for the cure of a diſeaſe Sometimes their rage proves their own ruine, and the Churches ſafety; as the Leech burſts it ſelf ſometimes, and ſaves the Patient. The very Earth, whereby is meant the carnal World, is ſaid to help the Woman, the Church, by ſwallowing up the flood which the Dragon caſts out of his mouth againſt her *. Juſt as the old rags were the inſtruments whereby Jeremiah was drawn out of the Dungeon.

* Gen. 10. 12.

* Iſa. 16. 3, 4.

* Rev. 12. 16.

2. In the advancement of the Church, or perſons eminent. Abner had a Plot for bringing Iſrael to David's Scepter, which concurred both with Gods purpoſe and promiſes, but ſprung from an ill cauſe, a diſdain to be checked by be Iſhboſheth, though his King, for an unjuſtifiable act, for having too much familiarity with one of Sauls Concubines *. And from this animoſity he contrives the depoſing of Iſhboſheth, and the exaltation of David; v. 18. For the Lord hath ſpoken of David, by the hand of my ſervant David I will ſave my people Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines. He is the firſt Engine that moves in this buſineſs, and by him and his correſpendents after his death, v. 17. the buſineſs is brought about by Gods over-ruling hand, wherein Gods promiſe is accompliſhed, David a type of Chriſt, and the great Champion for the Church againſt its enemies round about, is advanced. Very remarkable is the advancement of Mordecai, in order to the advancing the Jews as well as preſerving 'em, when the necks of all the viſible Church God had in the World were on the block. Haman ignorantly is the cauſe of this preferment of Mordecai, and at that time too, when he came to petition for his death, Eſther 6. 4. He was come to ſpeak to the King to hang Mordecai upon the Gallows which he had prepared for him: The King asks him, what ſhould be done to the man whom the King delights to honour, v. 16. He imagaineth that the Kings queſtion did reſpect himſelf, lays out a Schem of what honour he was ambitious of, v. 8. 9. which was by the King deſigned for Mordecai, and Haman made the Herald to proclaim him: Here Haman, not only a wicked man in himſelf, but the greateſt Enemy Mordecai and the whole Church of God had, is made unwittingly an inſtrument to exalt Mordecai, and in him the whole Church of God.

* 2 Sam. 3: 6, 7, 8, 9, 10

3. In enriching the Church, or ſome perſons in it, whereby it may become more ſerviceable to God. How wonderful was it, that when the Iſraelites were abominated by the Egyptians, God ſhould ſo order their hearts, that the Egyptians ſhould lend them Gold and Jewels *, and diſmiſs them with wealth as well as ſafety; and not ſo much as one perſon moleſt them, till they arrived at the Red Sea? The very gain and honour of the Enemies is ſometimes conſecrated to the Lord of the whole Earth, Micah 4. 13. Ariſe and threſh, oh Daughters of Sion, I will make thy horn Iron, and thou ſhalt beat in pieces many people, and I will conſecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their ſubſtance to the Lord of the whole Earth: This was when many Nations were gathered againſt Sion, v. 11. the wealth of the Sinner is laid up for the Juſt, Pro. 13. 22. And God ſometimes makes the wicked unwittingly to themſelves, in their carking, be the factors for good men, into whoſe lap Providence pours the fruit of their labour. God gave Cyrus the ſpoils of Babylon, and the treaſures of Crœſus, to enable him to furniſh the Jews with materials for building the Temple, Iſa. 55. 3, 4. and I will give thee the treaſure of darkneſs, and hidden riches of ſecret places, (ſpeaking of Cyrus) that thou mayeſt know, that I the Lord which call thee by thy Name, am the God of Iſrael, for Jacob my Servants ſake, &c. That he might acknowledge him the God of Iſrael, and lay his wealth out in the ſervice of God, and the ſervice of Jacob his ſervant.

* Exod. 12. 35, 36.

Iſa. 45. 3, 4

2. As bad perſons. ſo bad things are ordered to the good of the Church, whether they be ſinful evils, or afflictive.

1. Sin.

1. A mans own ſin. Oneſimus runs from his Maſter, and finds a ſpiritual Father; his being a Runagate, is the occaſion of his being a Convert. By flying from his Maſter, he becomes a Brother in the Lord *. What Joſeph's brethren ſinfully intended for revenge againſt against their brother, and security from their Fathers checks, (who acquainted Jacob with their miscarriages) God ordered for the preservation of them who were the only visible Church in the World. Their sin against their Brother, contrary both to their intentions and expectations, became the means of their safety. God makes the remainders of sin in a good man, an occasion to exercise his grace, discover his strength, and shew his loyalty to God.

* Phil. 10. 12, 16.

2. Other mens sins. That might be in Sarah but a heady passion, for hearing her Son mocked by Ishmael, that made her so desirous to have the bondwoman and her first son thrust out*; but God makes use of it to make a separation between Isaac the heir of the Covenant, and Ishmael, that he might not be corrupted by any evil example from him: God orders Abraham to hearken to her voice, because in Isaac his seed should be called*: And the revengeful threatening of Esau was the occasion of Jacob's flight, whereby he wat hindred from marrying with any of the people of the Land, by whom he might have been induced to Idolatry*. Why should we mistrust that God that can make use of the Lusts of men to bring about his own gracious purposes?

* Gen. 21. 10.
* ver. 12.
* Gen. 27. 43, 49.

2. Commotions in the World. There is the eye of God, that eye which runs to and fro throughout the whole Earth in the Wheels of worldly Motions, even in the most dreadful Providences in the World, that stare upon men with a grim countenance*. All the overturnings in the World are subservient to the Churches interest, though they are not visibly so, unless diligently attended*. God orders the confusions of the World, and is in the midst of the tumults of the people, Psal. 29. 10, 11. The Lord sits upon the floud, yea, the Lord sits King for ever, the Lord will give strength to his people, the Lord will bless his people with peace. He sits upon the floud as a Charioteer in his Chariot, guiding it with holy and merciful intentions to his people, to give them both strength and peace in the midst of them, and as the issue of them. By Water and Floods is frequently meant tumults and confusions in the World. If it were not so; why should our Saviour encourage his Disciples and all their Successors in the same profession, to lift up their heads when they hear of wars, if their redemption* were not designed by God in them? they are all testimonies of the nearer approaches of Christ in power and glory to judge the Earth, and glorifie his people. Gods great end in the shaking of Nations, is the performing those gracious promises to his Church which yet remain unaccomplisht: These earthquakes in the World, will bring Heaven to the Church. The great revolutions in the Eastern part of the World, the ruine of the Babilonian Empire, the erecting the Persian, and all the means whereby it was brought about, God ordered, God foretold, God directed for Jacobs service. Cyrus led by ambition, levies an army against Babylon; yet though he was a ravenous Bird, he was to execute the Counsel of God, Isa. 46. 11. calling a ravenous bird from the east, the man that executeth my Counsel, to be an instrument for the delivery of the captiv'd Jews, and the restorer of the ruin'd Temple. He had called him out by name to make a great revolution of the World. He foretold by his Prophet Isaiah many years before, the means he should use in the siege of Babylon to attain the victory, the very dividing Euphrates, which was the great confidence of the Babylonian, Isa. 44. 27. that say to the deep be dry, and I will dry up the rivers; whereby it was as it were dried up for them to pass over; the very opening of the gates, Isa. 45. 1. and the gates shall not be shut; the Babylonians in a presumptuous security had left them open, thinking it impossible the City could be taken, because of the River Euphrates, I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight; and what was the end of that great revolution and motion in that part of the World? See Isa. 45. 4. For Jacob my Servants sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: This Prophecy was, when Jerusalem and the Temple were standing. God casts about long before his People needs, for their welfare in the great revolutions and changes of the World. In Isa. 44. 29. that saith of Cyrus, he is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure, even saying to Jerusalem, thou shalt be built; and to the Temple, thy foundation shall be laid. Cyrus had no knowledge of this end of God, though thou hast not known me, Isa. 45, 4, 5. twice repeated. Cyrus did not know God, neither did he know Gods ends; he acts his own purposes, and is acted by God to higher purposes than he understood, In all the siftings of Nations, and sifting the Church among the Nations, as Corn is sifted in a Sieve, God designs not the destruction of his people, but the cleansing them, the separating the Flower from the Bran.

† Ezek. 1. 18. Their wings were dreadful, and their wings were full of eyes.
† Broughton on Revel. 13. Sect. 177.
* Luk. 21. 25, 26, 27, 28.

3. Destroying Judgments, yea, and the very Curses sometimes are turned into Blessings.

Destroying judgments. The desolation of the Jews was not only in order to the fulfilling Gods truth in his threatnings, but useful for the great Gopel design; the fall of the Jews was the calling of the Gentiles, Rom. 11. 11, 12. Through their fall Salvation is come unto the Gentiles: And also their fall and dispersion among the Gentiles, was prophesied of as the occasion of their return to God, Ezek. 20. 36, 37. like as I pleaded with your Fathers in the Wilderness, so will I plead with you, and cause you to pass under the rod, and bring you into the bond of the covenant; when they are in the Wilderness of Captivity, then God shall plead with them, and make them to pass under the rod of Propriety, and bring them into Covenant. The like also is prophesied of that Captivity of the Ten Tribes to this day not known where they are, Hos. 2. 14. The time of Gods speaking kindly to her, should be in the Wilderness, and then I will give her the valley of Achor for a door of hope. No question but God hath performed his promise, and brought many of the posterity of the ten Tribes into the Church among the Mass of the Gentiles, among whom they were dispersed.

* Gen. 49. 7. Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce: and their wrath, for it was cruel. I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel.

Curses sometimes, as God orders them, prove Blessings. The curse of inspir'd Jacob upon *Levi, was the advantage both of Levi and the Israelites; that they were dispersed among the several Tribes without any universal cohabitation as the rest, was a Curse: But that they should be the instructors of the People in the matters of the Law, was an Honour God put upon the head of that Tribe, and a publick Blessing to the People.

4. Divisions in the Church. One would think this of all other things should shake the foundation of it; yet God orders even these to the good of the Church. Paul and Barnabas, two great Apostles, fell out*. The contention comes to be very sharp, a thing naturally of very ill consequence, in two of the prime guides of Christianity, and at the laying the first foundation of it; but the Gospel gains ground: One sails to Cyprus, and the other travels into Syria Perhaps had not this quarrel been between them, and they thus disjoynted from one another, some of those poor Souls had never, or at least not so soon, have heard of the Gospel-mercy.

† Act 15. 36, 37. 38, 39, &c.

5. Persecutions. These naturally tend to the dissolution and utter extirpation of it, but God orders them otherwise. God doth often lay the Scene of his amazing Providences in very dismal afflictions: As the Limner first puts on the dusky colours, on which he intends to draw the portraiture of ſome illuſtrious beauty. The Oppreſſion of Iſrael immediately before their Deliverance, was the dusky colour whereupon God drew thoſe gracious lines of their Salvation of Egypt, the pattern of all the after Deliverances of the Church in all Ages, and a Type of our Spiritual Redemption by Chriſt. The Humiliation, Perſecution and Death of the Son of God, was the dusky colour upon which God drew that amazing piece of Divine Love and Wiſdome in Mans Salvation, which the eyes of Saints and Angels will be fix'd on with raviſhing admirations to all Eternity. All Afflictions in the World, which God doth exerciſe the Church with, are parts of his Providence, and like mournful Notes in Muſick, which make the melody of the Tune more pleaſant, and ſet off thoſe ſweeter Aires which follow upon them. Afflictions here, cauſe the joys of Heaven to appear more glorious in the eyes of glorified Saints. The Perſecutions of the Martyrs did but heighten their Graces, ſend them to the place of Reſt, and enlarge their Robes of Glory. God many times ſaves his People by ſufferings, and brings them to the ſhore upon the planks of a broken ſhip, and makes that which was the occaſion of their loſs, to be a means of their ſafety: they ſometimes evidence that which they would deſtroy, Herods Murdering the Children to deſtroy him that was born King of the Jews, made his Birth more Conſpicuous in the World: ſnuffing the Candle makes it burn the clearer.

They ſometimes make,

1. To the improvement of the Church. One of the ſoreſt Judgments God brought upon the Jewiſh, Church, is expreſly aſſerted by God to be for their good; Jer. 24. 5. ſpeaking of the Captiv'd Jews, Whom I have ſent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good. The Chaldeans had overrun their Land, carried them Captives, made them Slaves, deſtroyed the Temple; yet God tells them this was for their good, when there was no preſent appearance of any good in it. It ſhould be good in reſpect of Gods Favour towards them, which retired to turn with the greater force; ver. 6. I will ſet mine eyes upon them for good, I will build them, and not pull them down: God will give them a more durable ſettlement. In reſpect alſo of that frame of heart they ſhould have toward God; their knowledge of him, and cleaving to him, ver. 7. I will give them a heart to know me, and they ſhall return to me with their whole heart: God had but a moyety of their hearts before, but then he ſhould have the whole. And indeed it was remarkably for their good; for they who before were addicted to Idolatry, were never guilty of the ſame ſin after: And God kept them from being drawn away to it by the example and ſolicitation of thoſe among whom they were. The Church grows by tears, and withers by ſmiles. Gods Vine thrives the better for pruning. God makes our Perſecutions fit us for that for which we are perſecuted. As Saul by his perſecution of David for the Title God had given him to the Kingdom, made him fitter to ſucceed him in the Throne, and manage the Government. God uſes perſecutors as lances, which whiles they wound us, let out the purulent and oppreſſive matter; and makes them inſtruments of his Providence to work out his Peoples Happineſs, and thus makes the very wrath of man to be an occaſion of his Peoples Praiſe; Pſal. 76. 10. The wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee. God doth in this as a Father deals with his Son, ſends him to a ſharp School, that he may be Trained up in Learning.

2. In the increaſe of the Church. The Jews Crucified our Saviour to diminiſh the multitude of his followers, and by this means the number is increaſed. The whole World runs after him, by that means they uſed to ſtop their Courſe; which Chriſt foretold, that when he was lifted up he ſhould draw all men after him; And that a grain of Corn brings not forth more ſeed, unleſs it be caſt into the ground, and dye.

1. In the increaſe of it within its own bounds. When the Iſraelites were moſt oppreſt in Egypt, the more they multiplied *. When the Dragons fury did moſt ſwell againſt the Woman, ſhe brought forth a Man-child *. When the Roman Empire was at the higheſt, and was moſt enflam'd with Anger againſt the Chriſtians: When the Learning of the Philoſophers, the Witchcrafts of Hereticks, the Power of the Emperors, and the Strength of the whole World was ſet againſt them, the Chriſtians grew more flouriſhing and numerous by thoſe very means which were uſed to deſtroy them. Not only a new ſucceſſion of Saints ſprung up from the Martyrs Aſhes, but their Flames were the occaſion of warming ſome ſo much with a Heavenly fire, that ſome Perſecutors have become Preachers. Their very bonds for the Truth have ſometimes ſeminal Vertue in them to beget men to Faith in Chriſt. Phil. 1. 12. The things which have happened unto me, have fallen out rather to the furtherance of the Goſpel.

* Exod. 1. 20.

* Rev. 12. 1, 3, 4.

2. In the increaſe of it in other parts. Pauls Priſon made his Preaching Famous in Rome, and was an occaſion of bringing Chriſtianity into Nero's Court; that Monſter of Mankind *; one might have looked for Saints in Hell as ſoon; his bonds were as great a confirmation of the Truth of his Doctrine, as his Eloquence. When Saul made havock of the Church, and by that ſtorm diſperſed the Chriſtians, they like ſo many grains of Corn ſcattered in ſeveral parts of a greater Field, produced the greater Harveſt. Acts 8. 3, 4. Therefore they that were ſcattered abroad, went every where preaching the Word. As Clouds ſcattered by the Winds, they Rain'd down the Goſpel in ſeveral Quarters. The Jews when ſcattered in their ſeveral flights, did ſcatter among the Heathen the Notions of the true Religion. When they ſhall go down to Egypt to ſecure themſelves from Senacheribs Invaſion, they ſhall be a means to make many Converts among that Idolatrous Nation, Iſa. 19. 18. In that day (the day of the Jews Trouble) ſhall five Cities in the land of Egypt ſpeak the Language of Canaan, and ſwear to the Lord of Hoſts: ſo one expounds it, but I rather think it meant of the times of the Goſpel. The ſight of the Iſraelites ſhall be the occaſion of ſome Egyptians Converſion. A poor Slave in Naamans Family was an occaſion both of the cure of his Body, and of that of his Soul; 2 Kings 5. 2, 3, 17. So much for the firſt Reaſon, drawn from an enumeration of things.

* Phil. 1. 13. Phil. 4. 22.

2. Reaſon; to prove that all Providence is for the good of the Church; is, Becauſe God hath ſometimes preferred Mercy to the Church, and Care of it above his own concernment of Juſtice. He values his Mercy to them, above his Juſtice upon his Enemies. He conſults their Safety before he brings Ruine upon the Wicked whoſe Sins are full. He firſt prepared the Ark for Noah, and ſees him lodged in it, before he begins to ſhower down deſtruction upon the World. He hath ſometimes puniſhed a Nation more for their Offences againſt his People, than their Sins againſt himſelf. Amalek was guilty of many Idolatries and other ſins againſt God; but God chargeth none of them upon them, but their malicious hindring the Iſraelites in their March to Canaan, 1 Sam. 15. 2. Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael, how he laid wait for him in the way when he came up from Egypt. He ſhews his love to them, and how much he values them, that when he is acting Juſtice, and and pouring out his Wrath, when he is (as it were) cutting and flashing on all sides, and is in fury with wicked Men, he hath nothing but sweetness and tenderness towards his own, Amos 9. 9, 10. in the sifting of Israel and the Nations, Not the least grain shall fall upon the Earth. All the sinners of my people shall die by the Sword. While he thunders out his Fury upon wicked Men, he hath his Eyes upon the least grain of the true Israel. What would it be for God, when he is raising the Glory of his Justice upon the People that have provoked him, not to regard the Concernments of this, or that, or many sincere Souls, but put no stop to his Fury? Yet he doth, not a Grain shall perish. He is more desirous to hear of the Preservation and Welfare of a few Righteous, than of the just Punishment of the Wicked, wherein his Justice is gloriously interessed. The Man clothed in Linnen, that was to mark the Mourners, return'd to God, and gave an account that he had done according to his Command *; the other five, which were to kill, returned not to give any account of their severe and sharp proceedings. The Angels that held the four Winds of the Earth, Rev. 7. 1. which some understand of Wars and Commotions in the World for the overthrow of the Romish power, were ordered not to let the Winds go, till the servants of God were sealed in their Foreheads.

* Ezek. 9. 11.

3. Reason; God takes particular notice of the meanest of his people, and mightily condescends to them, much more of the church. 'Tis strange to consider that the Scripture mentions none of those great Potentates among the Heathen, but either as they were instruments of his Peoples good, or executioners of his Justice upon them, or subjects of his Peoples Triumph. Cyrus and Darius are mentioned as their friends; Nebuchadnezzar, and Senacherib, and others, as Gods instruments in scourging them.* Chedorlaomer and the other Kings with him, as they were the subjects of Abrahams Valour and Triumph. He takes no notice of the Names of any in his Word, but upon such Accounts: Cyrus and Nebuchadnezzer had done, no doubt, many actions before, but none taken notice of but those: But he takes notice of the meanest wherein was Grace and the meanest of their concerns and actions *. He mentions in his Word Jacob's Flocks, &c. things of no great moment; the actions, speeches, gestures of his People, to shew how his Providence wrought for them, and how much he is concern'd in the least of their Affairs. But the great Empires of the World, their Original and Progress, and the magnified founders of them, he spake not of, but as they have some relation or other to his People. As we love to use the names of our Friends, so doth God love the relish of the names of his servants. The name of Noah is repeated several times, as the Jews observe *. The Spirit of God loves the very mention of their names: he delights to dwell upon the Catalogue of their names. The Scripture uses to reckon the Genealogies of wicked Men in short characters. Cains Generation is numbred in haste, as if God had no care at all of them *, he puts them with a kind of &c. But he insists much upon the Generation of the Godly. Seths Posterity are written in a large scroul, and more legible hand *, with the number of the years which they lived; which in Cains Posterity there is no notice taken of. His whole Respect, his Heart, his Eye, his All is fixed upon them. And Christ himself stands more astonished, and wondring at the Faith of the Centurian, the importunity of the Canaanitish Woman; condescends to them to grant them what they would have. You never find him taking notice of the Learning of the Rabbies, the Magnificence of Herod, or the glorious Building of the Temple. See how condescending God is, to work a Miracle for the support and strengthning of a weak Faith, and the peevish distrust of his People. Gideons Faith was weak, yet how compassionate is God towards him *, in ordering his Providence as Gideon would have it, without upbraiding him; just as a tender Mother cherishes a weak Child? And this Miracle was in order to the Churches Deliverance from a present oppressive Enemy. Certainly when we find God taking care and ordering even the very Pins, Snuffers and Basins of the Temple, the place of his Worship, as well as the more stately Ornaments of it; we may say, doth his Care extend to the meanest Utensils in his Temple, and not much more to the Worshippers in it? Doth he give order for the Candlesticks, and will not have much more care of the lights in them? His care to the least, implies his care of the greatest too. In a building, the little stones must be well laid, as well as the greatest. Every Believer is a stone in the Spiritual building.

4. Reason, God reveals often to his people what he will do in the World, as if he seemed to ask their advice, and therefore surely all his Providences shall work for their good. God would not surely acquaint them, and advise with them what he should do, did he intend to do any thing to their hurt. There is not any thing in the heart of Christ wherein the Church is concerned, but he doth reveal it to them, John. 15. 5. I have called you friends; for all things I have heard of my Father, I have made known to you; he discovered all to them, the ends of his coming, his Fathers love, his death and resurrection, what he would do after his ascension, the progress of his affairs, and the glory of Heaven, and the end of all. John must be the Pen-man of the Revelation, which concerned the future state of the Church in all ages. Joseph must know the interpretation of dreams in order to the Churches preservation. Moses must be acquainted with Gods methods in the Israelites deliverance, with the Egyptians ruine. Daniel must know the future state of the Eastern parts of the World; he must know the turnings of the times, and the end of the World. 'Tis to Noah, and none else, that he immediately discovers his intended destruction of the World. And all those revelations ended in his peoples advantage; nay, he doth not only reveal, but, as it were, consult with him in his affairs. God doth as it were unbosom himself to Abraham, as one friend to another, as it were, advised with him concerning his intention on Sodom, Gen. 18. 17. And the Lord said, shall I hide from Abraham the thing which I do? i. e. I will by no means do it, it will not consist with my Love and Friendship to him, to hide any thing from him. And see the reason of it, v. 18. Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty Nation, and all the Nations of the Earth shall be blessed in him. It was first his great affection to him, because he had advanced him, and promised that a mighty Nation should spring out of his Loyns. And he had not withheld from him the secret of giving the Messias, which was a universal blessing, and so many ages were to run out, before it was to be accomplisht; he had discovered to him his acts of mercy, and therefore would not hide from him his acts of justice; he would know his mind in it, what he thought of it. And you know the story, how God regulated himself by Abraham's Prayer, and denyed him nothing; till Abraham left off suing any more. It would make one conjecture, that if Abraham had proceeded farther, he had quite diverted the judgment from Sodom. And when the Israelites had provoked God by a Golden Calf, he would not do any thing against them, till he had consulted Moses, and therefore lays the whole caſe before him, and ſeeks to take him off from pleading with the Lord, and promiſing to make of him a great Nation †, and in ſuch Terms that one would wonder at. Now therefore let me alone; As if God did fear Moſes's Interpoſition would prevent him, and diſſwade him from it. Do not you ſtand in the way, my Wrath will cool if you interpoſe your ſelf; as much as to ſay, God could not do it, unleſs Moſes gave his conſent: Moſes would not be quiet, but pleads the Providences of God which had been all for him, the Promiſe of God made to Abraham concerning them. And he would not leave, till God repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his People, v. 14. If Angels, as Calvin ſaith, are God's Counſellors in Heaven, Believers are (as it were) his Counſellors on Earth.

and

* Exod. 32. 9. 10. and the Lord ſaid to Moſes, I have ſeen this people, and behold it is a ſtiffnecked people, now therefore let me alone that my wrath may wax hot againſt them.

5. God hath given the choiceſt things he hath to his People; He hath given his Law. The Church is the Sphere wherein the Light of the Goſpel is fixed, and wherein it ſhines, from whence its Beams do dart out to others, Iſa. 2. 3. Out of Sion ſhall go forth the Law. The Oracles of God, the great things of the Law, as it is phraſed, Hoſ. 8. 12. his Covenant, and the Counſel of his Will, are intruſted with the Church. Now this being a Mercy which exceeds all other things in the World, is therefore comprehenſive of all other as the greater comprehends the leſſer. And the Pſalmiſt conſiders it as the Top-Stone of all Bleſſings; for after ſumming up the Providences of God, he ſhews how God had diſtinguiſhed Jacob by more eminent Marks of his Favour, Pſalm 147. 19, 20. He ſhews his Word to Jacob, his Statutes and his Judgments unto Iſrael, he hath not dealt ſo with any Nation; he hath not left ſo rich a Legacy to any, or given any ſo much of his Heart. Others are ordered by the Word of his Power, (for that is meant by Word in the foregoing Verſe); but Jacob hath the Word of his Grace too. And this being the choiceſt piece of Affection which God hath ſhewed to the Church, implies the making all leſſer Providences ſubſervient to it. The Church, wherein God hath laid up his Goſpel, and thoſe Souls which are as the Ark, wherein God hath depoſited his Law, ſhall be ſhadowed with the Wings of his merciful Providence, in a perpetual Succeſſion of all true Bleſſings. All the Providences of God are to preſerve his Law in the World; his ſevereſt Judgments are to quicken up the Law of Nature in Men that know no other, and the Law of his Goſpel in Men that ſit under it. And he hath given Chriſt to his Church, and thereby hath given an Earneſt, that ſtill their good ſhall be promoted: 'Tis not to be thought, that God will ſpare any thing elſe, when he hath given them his Son.

Secondly. The Second thing. It muſt needs be that all Providences is for the good of the Church.

Firſt. 1. All the Providence of God is for the glorifying his grace in Chriſt. The whole Oeconomy or diſpenſation of the fulneſs of time, to the latter ages of the World, is for the gathering all things together in him, Eph. 1. 10. that in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of time he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt, both which are in Heaven, and which are on Earth, even in him. In him as their head. This was the deſign in all his diſpenſations, both before his coming, and ſince, ever ſince the promiſe made to Adam, though it be more manifeſt in the latter Age. This the Apoſtle repreſents as the main purpoſe of God, v. 9. This was the myſtery of his will, which according to his good pleaſure he had purpoſed in himſelf, that is, purpoſed in himſelf as a thing he was mightily pleaſed with; and ver. 11. ſaith he, he works all things after, or κατὰ according to the counſel of his own will, or of that purpoſe which he had purpoſed in himſelf, to gather all things in one, in Chriſt. All the things that God acts, are referred to this as their end, and ordered by this Counſel as their rule. As it was the deſign of Gods Providence to make way for Chriſts entrance into the World, and all the Prophecies in the Old Teſtament tended to the diſcovery of it; ſo ſince the coming of Chriſt, the end of all is to advance him in reſpect of his head-ſhip, Eph. 1. 22, 23. and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulneſs of him that fills all in all. God would advance Chriſt to the higheſt pitch, v. 21. far above all principality and power, both in this World, and in the World to come; and there is ſtill a fulneſs wanting to Chriſt to compleat him, not any perſonal fulneſs, but a fulneſs belonging to him as Head, which is the advancement God deſigns him. He is already advanced above all principality and power. He is already given as a Head to the Church; but the compleatneſs of it is not till all his Members be perfected, to which all his Providences in the World doth ultimately tend: Therefore if the deſign of God be to honour Chriſt, and if the ſpiritual happineſs of the Church be part of that Glory and Fulneſs of Chriſt, it muſt needs be carried on by God, elſe he will want part of his compleatneſs as a Head: But this ſhall not be wanting, ſince, as all things are ſquared according to that Counſel of glorifying Chriſt as Head, ſo all things are acted for Believers by that power whereby he raiſed Chriſt from the grave to be their Head, which power is the Copy according to which all acts which reſpect the Church, are framed, v. 19. and what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us ward, who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Chriſt when he raiſed him up from the dead. God intended the good of the Church, in this very act of glorifying Chriſt, for he is made the head over all things to the Church. As if God then had preſcribed him that order, that the glory he gave him ſhould be alſo managed for the Churches intereſt: Chriſt is Lord of the reſt of the World, but Head of the Church: All things are under his feet, but are not his members; He is Head over all things to the Church, and therefore to every member of the Church, the leaſt as well as the greateſt; and to the whole Church, even that part of it which is on Earth, as well as that part which is in Heaven, who are compleated. The Church is the fulneſs of Chriſt; he would be Bodyleſs without it: therefore ſince Chriſt will be a Head without a Body, if the Church be not preſerved; in order to the Preſervation of it, all things muſt neceſſarily concur by the wiſe diſpoſal of Affairs. Therefore ſince they are travelling to be where their Head is, he having the Government of the World, will make all things contribute Aſſiſtance to him in their Journey; that Chriſt may have that compleatneſs of Glory, which God intends him, he expreſly tells his Father, John 17. 10, That he is glorifyed in his People *. And at the ſound of the ſeventh Trumpet, The Kingdoms of this World are to become the Kingdoms of the Lord and of his Chriſt, and he ſhall Reign for ever and ever *. Now ſince all the Motions in the World, are, that the Kingdoms of the World may become the Kingdoms of his Chriſt, peculiarly his, as being Anointed King by him: It muſt needs be, that all things muſt be ſubſervient one Time or other to the end, wherein the good of his People doth conſiſt; otherwiſe they would not bleſs God ſo highly for it as they do *. We give thee Thanks, O Lord God Almighty, becauſe thou haſt taken to thee thy thy great Power, and haſt Reigned. And where there is a reſiſtance of this glory of Chriſt, it is a natural effect of that decree whereby Chriſt is conſtituted King, that the reſiſters ſhould be broken in pieces, and daſht like a Potters Veſſel, Pſal. 2. 6, 9. And the Iſſue of all is the Bleſſedneſs of thoſe that put their truſt in him, v. 12. The care that God hath of Chriſt and the Church in the types of them, ſeems to be equal. The Ark, which was a type of Chriſt, and the Table of Shew-bread a Figure of the Church, had three Coverings; whereas all the reſt of the Veſſels, &c. belonging to the Ceremonial Part, had but two *, On the Ark there was the Vail and Covering of Badgers-skins, and a covering of Blew: On the Table of Shew-bread there was a cloath of Scarlet, and a covering of Badgers-skins. God orders as much for the Security of the Church, as for the Security of Chriſt; therefore the ſame things that tend to the glorifying of Chriſt, ſhall tend to the Advantage of the Church.

*Num. 4, 5 6, 7, 8.

2. God hath given the Power of the Providential Adminiſtration of things to Chriſt to this very end, for the good of the Church. If God hath conſtituted him Head over all things to the Church, can there be any doubt but that he will manage the Government for that which is the Principal End of his Government, which he hath ſhed his Blood for, and which is chiefly intended by God who appointed him?

1. All Power of Government is given to Chriſt, Math 11. 27. All things are delivered to me of my Father. And the Father Judges no man, but hath committed all Judgment to the Son, Joh. 5. 22. that is, the whole Government and Adminiſtration of Affairs. 'Tis not to be underſtood of the laſt Judgment, for then it would be a limitation of that Word all; not that the Father lays aſide all care of things, but as the Father diſcovers himſelf only in him, ſo he governs things only by him. All this Power was commited him upon his Interpoſition after the Fall of Man. He was made Lord and Chriſt, that is, anointed by God to the Government of the World. For upon the Fall, God as a Rector, had overturned all. Man could not with any Comfort have treated with the Father, had not Chriſt ſtept in and pleaded for the Creation, where-upon God commits all Judgment to the Son, that he might temper it. It was by Chriſt as a covenanting Mediator, that the Earth was eſtabliſhed *. He had this Government Anciently, and it was confirmed to him upon his death; Heb. 1. 3. Who being the brightneſs of his Glory, and the expreſs Image of his Perſon, and upholding all things by the Word of his Power. Calvin underſtands the firſt word not only of the Deity of Chriſt, but of the diſcovery the Father made of himſelf in and through him as Mediator. The latter words ſome underſtand both of his Providential and Mediatory Kingdom: By the Word of his Power; this, ſay ſome, is referred to the Father, whoſe Image Chriſt is, as acting by a delegated Authority and Commiſſion from his Father: others, to Chriſt; as, that Chriſt upholds or bears up all things by his own powerful Word. Calvin thinks both may be taken, but embraceth the ſecond as being more generally received.

Iſa. 49. 8.

I may Offer, whether it may not be meant alſo, of the powerful Interpoſition of Chriſt as Mediator; whoſe intereſt in God was ſo great, that he kept up the World by his powerful Interceſſion, when all was forfeited; and God put it, upon that Interpoſition, into his Hands, as Heir of all things; (who having a Hand with him in Creation, underſtood both the Rights of God, and the Duty of the Creature) upon the Condition of purging Sin by his Death, which he did, and thereupon went to Heaven to take Poſſeſſion of the Government, at the Right Hand of the Majeſty on High, as due to him by Covenant and Articles agreed on between them. I know nothing at preſent againſt ſuch an Interpretation of the Words; but I will not contend about it. All this Honour was confirm'd unto him upon his Death. For having perform'd the Condition requiſite on his part, God Deputes him and Intruſts him with the Government of things, that he might order all things ſo, as to ſee the full Travel of his Soul.

2. All this Power was intended by God for this End, the good of the Church. As God appointed Chriſt a Prieſt for his Church to Sacrifice for them, a Prophet to teach them; ſo the other Office of King is conferred upon him for the ſame End, the advantage of the Church. God acquaints us of this End, aimed at by him, in the Promiſe of the Government to him, Jer. 33. 15, 19. In thoſe dayes, and at that time, will I cauſe the branch of Righteouſneſs to grow up to David, and he ſhall execute Judgment and Righteouſneſs in the Land; what is the end? In thoſe Days ſhall Judah be ſaved, and Jeruſalem ſhall dwell ſafely. He ſhould execute Judgment, that is, Adminiſter the Government for the Salvation of Judah, and ſecurity of Jeruſalem. It was his Office both to build the Temple, and to bear the Glory, and to Rule upon his Throne; to be a Prieſt upon his Throne, to Rule as King and Prieſt, Zach. 6. 12, 13. He ſhall build the temple of the Lord, even he ſhall build the Temple of the Lord. The erecting a Church is the ſole Work of Chriſt by Gods aopointment. And he was to bear up the Glory of it. He ſhould rule to this End, for the Counſel of Peace ſhall be between them both. If by [both] be meant, the Lord, and the Man whoſe name is the Branch; it then Chiefly Aims at our Reconciliation, as wrought by Covenant between them. If by [both] be meant the two Offices of King and Prieſt, and that the counſel of Peace be between them; it will extend to all the Bleſſings of the Church, to the good and glory of the Church, which is the fruit of his Kingly, as well as the firſt Reconciliation was the fruit of his Prieſtly Office. By Peace, in Scripture, is meant the confluence of all Bleſſings; ſo that the intent of God in beſtowing thoſe Offices upon Chriſt, and ſo great a Rule, was for the good and advantage of that Church or Temple, which he appointed him only to build. And in Iſaiah 11. 9. where the Prophecy of the Government of Chriſt is, the End is expreſt to be, that none ſhould hurt or deſtroy in all his holy mountain. And certainly, ſince God ſet him at his right hand, and confirm'd this Power unto him, after he had purged our ſins; it was certainly out of the high value God had for him, and therefore muſt be the intent of God, that he ſhould govern all things in reference to the deſign of that Death, and for the good of thoſe whoſe ſins he had by himſelf purged. For the poſſeſſing this Government, was the very End why Chriſt Died and Roſe again; Rom. 14. 9. For to this End Chriſt both Died, and Roſe, and Revived, that he might be Lord both of Dead and Living. If this were Chriſts End in Dying and Riſing, it was his Fathers End too, who appointed him to Death, and Raiſed him by his mighty Power. And ſince he was delivered for our Offences, and roſe again for our Juſtification, Rom. 4. 25. The Government he is inveſted with, being Lord of the Dead and of Living, muſt be for the ſakes of thoſe for whom he was delivered, and for whom he roſe. His Regal Power, which was one End of his Death, cannot Croſs the other main End, the conſtituting a Church, and carrying on the good of them that believe. The Government, being in the hands not of God as Creator, but in and through the hands of a Mediator, and that Mediator which both Died and Roſe again peculiarly for them; therefore it cannot in the leaſt be for their hurt, but advantage. The whole management of Chriſts Kingly Office in Relation to the Church, is preſcrib'd unto Chriſt by God. God reveals to him what ſhall be done in the World, what acts he ſhall perform for the Church, and gives him a Hiſtory of all that was to be done upon the ſtage, together with an order to communicate it unto his Servants, Rev. 1.1. The Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which God gave unto him, to ſhew unto his Servants [to be communicated to the whole Church] things that muſt ſhortly come to paſs. Whether this Revelation was made to the humane Nature of Chriſt at his Incarnation, as Tirinus thinks, or rather upon his Aſcenſion, is not material; The whole Scheme of what was to be done in the world is revealed here by God to Chriſt: And you find all the Motions in the World relating to the Church, and the End of all is the good of the Heavenly Jeruſalem.

3. All Power thus given, and intended for this End, is adminiſtred by Chriſt for this End. Chriſt as the Head of the Church, doth like a natural Head; It never ſees, nor hears, nor exerciſeth any act of ſence only for it ſelf, but for the good of the whole Body: The Eye watches for the Body, the Tongue ſpeaks for it, the Underſtanding contrives for it; every part of the Head is active for the whole Body. Now Chriſt as Head is more bound to act for the Church Militant, than for the Church Triumphant; becauſe the greateſt part of his work for the Church Triumphant, viz. the bringing them to Heaven, is already performed. And they are above the reach of all things in the World, and all the actions and motions in the World cannot touch or diſorder them. But the command of God concerning the other part behind, is not yet performed; and even they are the members of Chriſt, as well as thoſe in Heaven. The Apoſtle † ſeems to refer both Chriſts Creation, and the Preſervation of things, to this Title of Headſhip. All things were created by him; and for him, and by him all things conſiſt, and he is the head of the body the Church, and therefore the conſervation and government of all things ſhall be ſubſervient to the Church, which is the body of this governing Head. The chief Seat of Chriſts Soveraignty is the Church, Pſal. 2. 6. Yet have I ſet my King upon my Holy-hill of Sion: And he ſtands upon Mount Sion, Rev. 14. 1. The Church is the proper Seat and Metropolis of his Empire, the Royal Chamber of this Great King. All the conqueſts of Princes redound to the advantage of that place, where they fix their Reſidence. He is King of the World, but for the ſake of Sion. Chriſt did manage this Charge anciently for his People; when Joſhuah had paſſed over Jordan, and firſt entred upon the conqueſt of Canaan, he ſees a man over againſt him with a ſword drawn in his hand; Joſ. 5.13,14. And Joſhua ſaid unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adverſaries? And he ſaid, Nay, but as Captain of the hoſts of the Lord am I now come. This was Chriſt, that came armed for his People, according to his charge, as their Captain and General. It was not an Angel, becauſe Joſhua worſhipped him, ver. 14. An Angel did not uſe to receive any Worſhip from Men; and he accepts the Worſhip, and commands him to looſe his ſhoe from his foot, for the place whereon he ſtood was holy; ver. 15. And the ſame Perſon, Joſh. 6. 2. is called Jehovah; and there he gives him orders how he ſhould manage his War. Chriſt came here to direct his People in their concerns; He employs his Wiſdom for his Church, as well as his other excellencies. He is called a Counſellor *; 'tis one of the great Letters in his Name: and this, as the reſt there mentioned, hath a relation to the Church. For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given. And the firſt uſe he makes of his Power, after the confirmation of it to us, upon his Reſurrection, is for the Church; Matth. 28. 18. All Power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; all Authoritative Power over Angels and the Affairs of the World; Go you therefore and teach all Nations, baptizing them, &c. and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the World. He commands the Apoſtles to gather a Church among all Nations; and doth, by Vertue of this Authority committed to him, promiſe his Preſence with them, in all ſuch ſervice they ſhould do to this End, even to the end of the World. He promiſes his Spirit and his Providential Preſence; as his power ſhould endure to the end of the World, ſo the exerciſe of it for this End ſhould run Parallel with the continuance of it; There ſhould be no alteration or change in this great end of his, as long as the World laſts. How can Chriſt be with them, and that to the end of the World, if all the parts of his Providential Government were not ordered to ſerve this end, the good of the Church? for the Church is the fulneſs of him that fills all in all, Eph. 1. 23. That fills all in all places, all in all actions and motions; for the good of his Church, which is his body.

† Col. 1. 16,17,18.

* Iſa. 9. 6.

3. God in the Church diſcovers the glory of his attributes. Thirdly. 'Tis in a mans houſe, where his riches and ſtate is ſeen, 'Tis in the Church God makes himſelf known in his excellency more than in all the World beſides. Pſal. 76. 1. In Judah is God known, his name is great in Iſrael, in Salem alſo is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Sion. 'Tis in his Church he doth manifeſt his power: 'Tis called therefore a glorious high Throne, Jer. 17. 12. a glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our Sanctuary. Kings uſe to diſplay all their Glory and Majeſty upon their Thrones; in this ſenſe Heaven is called Gods Throne, Iſa. 60. 1. becauſe the proſpect of the Heavens affords us diſcoveries of the wiſdom and power of God, more than in any other viſible thing, both in their eſſence, magnitude and motion: So is there a greater diſcovery of Gods attributes in the Church (which is alſo ſtiled Heaven in Scripture) than in the whole World beſides: There it is that the Angels look to learn more of the Wiſdom of God than they underſtood before *. 'Tis there the day of his power dawns Pſal. 110. 3. 'Tis there his Saints ſee his power and glory, Pſal. 63 2. the Sanctuary is called the firmament of his power, Pſal. 150. 1. The glory of Gods Attributes is centered in Chriſt in a higher manner than in the Creation; and in that work did excel themſelves in what they had done in the framing of the World; and the Church being the glory of Chriſt, all thoſe attributes which are glorifyed in Chriſt, do in and through him ſhine forth more clearly upon the Church, than upon any other part of the World. He ſtyles himſelf their Creator, as much as the Creator of the whole frame of Heaven and Earth, Iſa. 43. 15. I am the Lord, your holy one, the Creator of Iſrael, your King. As though all the attributes of God, his power in creation, his holineſs in redemption, were deſigned for none elſe but them. And indeed by vertue of the covenant they are to be ſo; for if God be their God, then all of God is theirs. What wiſdom, power, ſufficiency, grace, and kindneſs he hath, is principally for them. If God be their God, it is in their concerns he will glorify himſelf as a God, in the manifeſtation of his perfections. This cannot be without the ordering all Providences for their advantage.

* Eph. 3. 10.

4. There is a peculiar relation of God and Chriſt to the Church; upon which account this Doctrine muſt needs be true. God is ſet out in all relations to manifeſt his great care of his people. He is a Father to provide for them *. A Mother to ſuckle them 5. Fourthly.

* Iſa. 68.

Isa. 49.15. * Eph. 5. 29. * John 20. 17. them. Christ is a Husband to love and protect them *. A Brother to counsel them *. And when all these Relations meet in one and the same person, the result of it must be very strong. Any one Relation where there is affection, is a great security; but here all the Relations are twisted together with the highest affections of them in God to the Church. A Father will order all for the good of his Child; a Mother for her Infant; a Husband for his Wife? and one kind Brother for another; So doth God for his People; and whatsoever those Relations bind Men to on Earth, in respect of Care, Love and Faithfulness, that is God to his Church. The Church hath the Relation to God, which none in the World have besides. They are his Jewels, therefore he will keep them; they are his Children, † Mal. 3. 17. therefore he will spare them †. They shall have protection from him as they are his Jewels, and Compassion from him as they are his Sons. The Church is Christs Flesh, as dear to him as our Flesh is to us; as much his, as our Flesh is ours. Eph. 5. 29. No man hates his own Flesh, but nourisheth it, as Christ doth his Church. No man can have a higher value for his own Flesh, than Christ hath for his Church. The Church, as Tertullian speaks, * Christ unfolded. is nothing else but Christus explicatus *. and as considered in Union with Christ, is called Christ; 1 Cor. 12.12. 'Tis the Apple of his eye, *Zac.*2.8. A tender and beloved part. The Church is Christs Spouse; the contract is made, the Espousals shall be at the last Day. The Members are pick'd out one by one to be presented to the Lamb at last, as a Glorious Bride for him, Rev. 21. 2.

And all Gods dealings with them in the World, are but preparations of them for that State. Upon the making of the Match, God promises a communion of Goods; Hos. 2. 20. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness, which is a fruit of Marriage; the Wife being invested in her Husbands Estate. When God hath given the blood of his Son for the Church, he will not deny her the service of the creatures, but Joynture her in that as one part of her Dowry. In that day will I hear the Heavens, &c. ver. 21. In what day? in the day of betrothing, in the day of the Evangelical Administration: when the contract shall be made between Me and my Church, Heavens, Earth, Corn, Wine and Oil; the voice and motions of all creatures are for Jezreel, which signifies the seed of God. This great Prince he hath a care of all his subjects, so more peculiarly of his Spouse and Princess, which is his seed too; and all creatures shall be her Servants. This Fatherly Relation and affection is strong and pure, not as the love which acts an ambitious man to Ambition, or a covetous man to Wealth; which respects nothing but the grasping and possessing the Objects they dote upon; and have nothing of love for the Objects themselves; therefore deserves not the name of Love. But it is the love of a Father, whose love is pure towards his children, He seeks their good as his own.

Consider these two things

1. God hath a peculiar love to this very Relation, and often mentions it with delight, as if he loved to hear the sound of it in his own Lips: Cant. 8. 12. My vineyard which is mine, is before me. Me, my, mine. The Church is always under his Eye, seated in his affection; and God is pleased with his propriety in them. God never calls the World, my World, though he created it; sometimes he saith the Earth is mine, but it is either to check the presumptions of Men, who ascribe that to themselves which is due to the first Cause; or to encourage his People in the expectation of Deliverance, because all things in the Earth are at his beck: Or to shew his own sufficiency, without the services of his people; as when he saith, the Earth is mine and the fulness thereof; but it is never mentioned in such a way, as to discover any pleasure he hath in the Relation between him and it, simply considered; but my Vineyard, my People, my Children, my Jewels, my Sactuary, very often. So much doth God esteem his Propriety in them.

2. This Relation is prevalent with God in the highest Emergencies and Distresses of his People. The very consideration that they are his People kindles his affection, and enlivens his Strength for them. Isa. 63. 8. And he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lye; so he was their saviour. God is brought in, as one that had heard the cries of his Church, and had not been moved; but when he recollects himself, and considers that they were his People, and that he was in a special manner related to them, he became their Saviour; He could no longer bear it, but stirs up himself to relieve them. Nay, it hath so strong an influence upon him, that if this Note be often sounded in his Ears, it doth as it were change his Voice; and when he seems to have a mind to cast them off, he cannot. When Israel had offended by erecting and worshipping a golden Calf, he calls them no more his People, but Moses People; Exod. 32. 7. And the Lord said unto Moses, Go, get thee down; for thy people which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt have corrupted themselves. As though God had not been concerned in this Miraculous Conduct out of Egypt; And ver. 9. this people; as if he had no interest in them, but particularizes them with Disdain. God had here discarded them, and turn'd them over upon Moses's hands, as if he would have no longer any thing to do with them; but Moses in Prayer turns them upon God again, and would not own them as his, but pleads that they were God's proper Goods; ver. 11. Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt? And ver. 12, again, thy People; and God at last resumes his former Notes, ver. 14. And the Lord repented him of the evil he thought to do unto his people. Now they are Gods People again; the repetition of this Relation, is a powerful Rhetorique to perswade him to own them again, which he had Cashiered and turned off.

5. The whole interest of God in the World lies in his Church and people. He sees little of himlelf in any part of the corrupted World, but only in them. 'Tis in the Church he hath put his Name; 'Tis there he sees his Image, and therefore places his love there: and shall all this signifie nothing? Shall the Governour of the World let things go contrary to his own interest? They are like to him in that which is one of his greatest perfections, viz. his Holiness? which gives him a greater interest in them. 'Tis his Interest that is opposed, by an opposition to the Church. All the hatred any bear, it grows from the inward root of enmity against God himself; Psal. 44. 22. Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long. God surely will concern himself in the Churches interest, since it is his own. His Interest lies, Fifthly.

1. In the Persons of his People. 'Tis his Inheri- * Isa. 19. tance *. It is his Portion *. Deut. 32. 9. The Lords last portion is his People, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. * Deut. 32. 9. Every part of an inheritance, and a portion, doth as particularly belong to the owner, as the whole. Every part of the ground which belongs to the Inheritance, is the Heirs, as well as the whole Field. He will not suffer the World which is but the work of his hands, to lay waste his Church, which is his proper Inheritance. 'Tis his Treasure, and where a mans Treaſure, there is his Heart; and where Gods Treaſure is, there is Gods Heart.

2. In the ſervices and actions of the Church. If the Church ſhould be deſtroyed, whom hath God to love and imitate him, and to ſhew forth his Glory? If the Candleſtick is broken, that is fit to hold out the light to the World? He hath none in the World beſides, that do intentionally mind his Honour, that take pleaſure in glorifying his Name, and writing after his Copy, and obſerving his Works. And will it ſtand with his intereſt to govern things contrary to theirs, which is really his own?

When God had made the World, and pronounced it good, what would it have ſignified, if he had not brought in man as his Rent-gatherer, and the Collector of his Tribute, to turn it to him? And what would Man ſignifie? ſince the corrupted World embezzles that which is Gods Right, and turns it to its own uſe; if God had not ſome honeſt Stewards, who faithfully act for him, and give him the Glory of his Works? And God will ſpare them as a man ſpares his own Son that ſerves him. God hath no voluntary ſervice in the World but from them; therefore he is more intereſſed in their good, than in the good of the whole World beſides. The ſervices of the Church, are all the delight God hath in the World; Hoſ. 9. 10. I found Iſrael like Grapes in the Wilderneſs, I ſaw your Fathers as the firſt ripe in the fig-tree at her firſt time. They are as the refreſhing Wine and Grapes, as the delicious fruit of the firſt ripe Figs; wherewith a weary Traveller recruits his Spirits after a long and tyring journey. And God hath a greater delight in the fruit he receives from the Church, than in it ſimply as it is his inheritance; for no inheritance is valued but for the fruit and revenue it yields; and therefore God orders all his blackeſt Providences in the world, like dark clouds, to be the watering-pots of this his Garden; that the Fruit and Flowers of it may be brought to maturity, which yield him ſo much pleaſure and honor. God only is acknowledg'd by them and in them, as the Jews were bound to acknowledge God the Author of their mercies, by preſenting the firſt fruits of their increaſe to God. And Believers are called ſo, Rev. 4. 4. Theſe were redeemed from among men, being the firſt fruits to God and the Lamb. 'Tis by and in them that God hath the acknowledgment of all his mercies and bleſſings to the World.

6. It cannot be but all the Providences of God ſhall work to the good of his Church, if we conſider the affections of God.

1. His love. What hath God in the World as an object to beſtow his affections upon, and communicate the rays of his love unto, ſince he created it, but his Church? The men of the World hate him: He can ſee nothing amiable in them; for what was firſt lovely, they have defaced and blotted out; but the Church hath Gods comlineſs put upon her, Ezek. 16. 14. It was perfect through my comlineſs which I had put upon thee, ſaith the Lord God; and he did not lay thoſe glorious colours upon her, to manage his government, or any part of it againſt her, to deface her. Beſides their lovelineſs which is conferred upon them by God, they have a love to God, and no man will act againſt thoſe whom he thinks to be his friends. God being purus actus, there being nothing but purity and activity in God, his love muſt be the pureſt and higheſt love, the moſt vigorous and glowing: As fire, which ſets all other Bodies, ſo this all other powers in the World in motion for them. God cannot love them, but He muſt wiſh all good to them, and do all good for them; for his love is not a lazy love, but hath its raptures and tenderneſs, and his affection is twiſted with his Almighty Power to work that good for them, which in their preſent condition in the World they are capable of. Now it is certain, God loves his Church: For,

1. He carries 'em in his hand, and that not in a looſe manner to be caſt out, but they are engraven upon the palms of his hands, that he cannot open his hand to beſtow a bleſſing upon any perſon, but the picture of his Church doth dart in his eye. God alludes to the Rings wherein men engrave the image of thoſe that are dear to them. And the Jews did in their Captivity engrave the Effigies of their City Jeruſalem upon their Rings, that they might not forget it*. If his eye be alway upon the Church, his thoughts can never be off it in all his works.

* Deut. 33. 3.
* Iſa. 49. 16.
* Sanctius in Iſa. 49. 16.

2. He loves the very gates and outworks. Pſal. 87. 2. the Lord loveth the gates of Sion. He loves a Cottage where a Church is, more than the ſtately Palaces of Princes. The gates were the places where they conſulted together, and gave Judgment upon Affairs. God loved the Aſſemblies of his Saints, becauſe of the Truths reveal'd, the Ordinances adminiſter'd, the Worſhip preſented to him.

3. Nay one Saint is more valu'd by him than the whole World of the wicked. God is the God of all Creatures, but peculiarly the God of Abraham and of his Seed; One Abraham is more deeply rooted in his heart, than all the World; and he doth more entitle himſelf the God of Abraham, than the God of the whole World; for in that Style he ſpeaks to Iſaac, Gen. 26. 24. I am the God of Abraham thy Father, much more the God of Iſrael; the God of the whole Church, of which, Abraham was but a Member, tho the Father of the Faithful, and a Feoffee of the Covenant. God hath a greater value for one ſincere Soul, than for a whole City; he ſaves a Lot, and burns a Sodom; yea, than for a whole World; he drowns a World, and reſerves a Noah; he ſecures his Jewels, whilſt he flings away the Pebbles.

4. He loves them ſo, that he over-looks their crabbed and perverſe miſ-conſtructions of his Providence. When the Iſraelites had jealous thoughts of him, and of Moſes his Inſtrument, when they ſaw that mighty Egyptian Army juſt at their Heels, and themſelves cooped up between Mountains, Forts and Waters, God doth not upon this provoking murmuring, draw up his cloudy Pillar to Heaven, but puts it in the Rear of them, when before it had Marched in the Van *, and wedgeth himſelf in between them and Pharaoh's enraged Hoſt, to ſhew, that they ſhould as ſoon ſheath their Swords in his Heart, as in their Bowels; and if they could ſtrike them, it ſhould be through his own Deity, which was the higheſt expreſſion of his Affection: And tho they often murmur'd againſt his Providence after they were landed on the Shore, yet he left them not to ſhift for themſelves, but bore them all the way in his Arms, as a Father doth his Child ||, and bare them like an Eagle upon his wings *. And God loves them magnificently and royally, Hoſ. 14. 4. I will love them freely †, without any doubting, without any reluctancy. I will love thee without any repugnancy in my heart, to draw me back from thee, for mine anger is turned away, as the ſtreams of a River, quite another way. Now all this conſider'd, can the Governour of the World, the King of Saints, act any thing againſt his own affections? Yea, will he not make all things ſubſervient to them whom he loves?

* Ex. 14. 19
|| Deu. 1. 13
* Deu. 32. 11.
† Hoſ. 14. 5 נדבה Sept. ὁμολόγως

2. His Delight. See what an inundation of ſweetning joy there was in him, for which he had not Terms of Expreſſion to ſuit the narrow apprehenſions of Men; Zeph. 3. 17. The Lord thy God in the midſt of thee is mighty, he will ſave he will rejoyce over thee with joy, he will reſt in his love, he will joy over thee with ſinging. He ſeems in his expreſſion to know no meaſure of his delight in the Church, and no end of it; I will rejoyce over thee with joy. Joy ſparkles up freſh after joy: 'Tis his reſt with his Soul and all that is within him centers it ſelf with infinite contentment. Joy over thee with Singing; A Joy that bloſſoms into Triumph. Never had any ſuch charming tranſports in the Company of any he moſt affected, as God hath in his Church; he doth ſo delight in the Graces of People, that he delights to mention them. He twice mentions Enochs walking with him †. And certainly God cannot but delight in it more than in the World, becauſe it is a fruit of greater pains than the creation of the World. The World was created in the ſpace of ſix daies by a Word; the Erecting a Church hath coſt God more Pains and Time. Before the Church of the Jews could be ſettled, he hath both a conteſt with the Peeviſhneſs of his People, and the Malice of their Enemies. And his own Son muſt bleed and dye, before the Church of the Gentiles could be fixed. Men delight in that which hath coſt them much Pains, and a great Price. God hath been at too much pains, and Chriſt at too great Price, to have ſmall delight in the Church; will he then let wild Beaſts break the Hedges, and tread down the fruit of it? ſhall not all things be ordered to the good of that which is the Object of his greateſt delight in the World?

of

† Gen. 9. 22, 24.

Seventhly. 7. The preſence of God in his Church will make all Providences tend to the good of it.

It would be an idle uſeleſs Preſence, if it were not operative for their good. The Lord is there, is the very name of the Goſpel-Church ‖; what would it ſignifie if it were a uſeleſs Preſence? Chriſt ſtands upon Mount Sion, his Throne is in the Church, when the great things in the World ſhall be acted for the Ruine of Antichriſt *. Gods Preſence in his Church, is the Glory and Defence of it; As the preſence of the King is the Glory of the Court. Zach. 2. 5. For I, ſaith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midſt of her. His preſence is a Covenant-preſence. Iſa. 41. 10. Fear not, I am with thee; be not diſmayed, for I am thy God. Whence follows Strength, Help and Support; I will ſtrengthen thee, yea, I will help thee, yea, I will uphold thee with the Right Hand of my Righteouſneſs: that is, with my righteous Power, with my power engaged to thee in a Righteous Covenant. His Preſence and Providence in the World, is in a way of Abſolute Dominion; but in his Church in a way of Federal Relation. He is the God of Iſrael, and God to Iſrael, or for Iſrael ‖; yea, and a God in the midſt of Iſrael. Every one of them ſufficient engagments to protect Iſrael, and provide for Iſrael, and govern every thing for Iſraels good. God is under an Oath to do good to Iſrael; will he violate his Oath? tear his Seal? break his Covenant, who never broke his League with any of his people yet?

‖ Iſa. 48. 35

* 1 Chr. 17 24.

Eighthly. 8. The prayers of the Church have a mighty force with God to this end. God is entitled a God hearing Prayer, and what prayers ſhould God hear, if not the prayers of his Church, which aim at Gods Glory in their own good? Though the prayers of the Church may in ſome particulars fail, yet in general they do not; becauſe they ſubmit their deſires to the Will of God, which always works what is beſt for them.

When God would do any mighty work in the World, he ſtirs up his people to pray for it; and their prayers by his own appointment have a mighty influence upon the Government of the World: For when they come before him in behalf of the Church in general, he doth indulge them a greater liberty and boldneſs, and as it were a kind of Authority over him, than upon other occaſions of their own: Iſa. 45. 11. Thus ſaith the Lord, the holy one of Iſrael, and his maker, Ask of me things to come, concerning my ſons, and concerning the work of mine hands command you me. God would be more poſitively, confidently and familiarity dealt with, about the concerns of his Sons, though they were things to come to paſs in after Ages. And indeed the prayers of the Church have a powerful and inviſible Efficacy on the great actions and overturnings which are in the World. The Being of the World is maintained by them from ſinking, according to the Jews ſaying, ſine ſtationibus non ſubſiſteret mundus; (ſtanding in prayer was their uſual prayer-geſture) And that they have actually ſuch a force is evident, Rev. 8. 3, 4. An Angel hath a golden Cenſer with Incenſe, to offer it with the prayers of the Saints, upon the Altar which was before the Throne. And ver. 5. the Cenſer wherein their prayers were offered, was filled with the fire of the Altar, and caſt into the Earth; and there were Voices, Thundrings, Lightnings, and Earthquakes. When the prayers of the Saints were offered to God, and aſcended up before him, that is (were very pleaſing to him:) The iſſue is, the Angel fills the Cenſer with fire of the Altar, and thereby cauſes great commotions and alterations in the World; ſignifying that the great changes of the World are an anſwer unto thoſe prayers which are offered unto God; for fire is taken from that altar upon which they were offered, and flung into the World. And it muſt needs be that the prayers of the Church ſhould have an influence on the government of the World.

1. Becauſe God hath a mighty delight in the prayers of his people. The prayer of the upright is his delight, and He loves to hear the Churches voice, Cant. 2. 14. O my dove, let me hear thy voice, for ſweet is thy voice, [Chaldee] thy voice is ſweet in prayer. In the times of the Goſpel God promiſes that the offerings of Judah and Jeruſalem ſhould be pleaſant to him, Mal. 3. 4. When Chriſt ſhall ſit as a refiner, v. 3. what is the iſſue of thoſe prayers? v. 5. I will come near to you to Judgment, and I will be a ſwift witneſs againſt the Sorcerers, &c. Prayer awakes Providence to judge the Enemies of the Church: A Parent delights not in the bare crying, or the voice of his child ſimply conſidered in it ſelf, but in the ſignifications and effects of it. He delights in the matter of their prayers, it being ſo agreable to his own heart and will, and in the ſence they have of the ſufferings of the whole body.

2. Becauſe Prayer is nothing elſe but a pleading of Gods promiſes. Unto this they are directed by that Spirit who knows the mind of God, and marſhals their petitions according to his will. Now as God turns his own decrees and purpoſes concerning his Church into promiſes to them, ſo the Church turns thoſe promiſes into Prayers for them: So that promiſes being for the good of the Church, and their being an exact harmony between thoſe promiſes and the Churches prayers, all thoſe Providences which are the iſſue of thoſe promiſes, and the anſwer of the Churches prayers, muſt needs be for the Churches good.

3. Becauſe there are united ſupplications and pleadings both in Heaven and Earth; all the hands of the whole Family in Heaven and Earth are concerned in their petitions.

1. Chriſt intercedes for the Church, who always deſires mercy and deliverance for them in the appointed time, Zech. 1. 12. How long wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem? and the iſſue is always gracious: For, v. 13. God anſwers him with good and comfortable words; and thereupon Carpenters are raiſed to cut off the horns which had ſcattered Judah, v. 20.

2. Angels in all probability plead for the Church, as we have already heard: 'Tis likely they offer and preſent that to God which makes for his glory, and that is the good of the Church. Angels ſurely

* Zech. 1. 12. deſire that which their Head doth, which is * deſcribed as one of their own Order, and called an Angel. Do they rejoyce at the repentance of a ſinner, and do they not likewiſe triumph at the happineſs of the Church, which, is part of that Family they are of? And we know, that the greatneſs of our joy is ſuited to the mercies of our deſires; where our joy is moſt triumphant, it implies that our deſires before were moſt vehement.

3. Glorifyed Saints are not ſurely behind. The rich man in the Parable deſired his Friend on Earth
† Luk. 16. 28. might not come into that place of torment †. If there be ſo much charity in Hell, can there be leſs in Heaven? If he deſired it, that by the preſence of his companions in ſin, his own torments might not be increaſed; Do not the Saints in Heaven deſire the preſence of the whole Church, that their happineſs in that of the whole body may be compleated? If the Head Chriſt be not compleat without the body, the members of the body cannot be compleat without one another. The Souls of them that were ſlain for the word of God, cry under the Altar for vengeance on them that dwell on the Earth, as Rev. 6. 9, and 10. How long, O Lord holy and true, doſt thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the Earth? Will not their kindneſs to their fellow members, be as ſtrong as their juſtice? And their love for the good of their friends draw out their prayers as well as their deſire of vengeance on their Enemies? Why may they not as well pray for us, as we praiſe God for them? Had they not ſome likeneſs to their great Maſter whilſt they were on Earth, and ſhall they not be more like to him now they are in Heaven, and behold his face, and feel all the ſtirrings of his heart? And if they have no ſence at all of the Churches ſufferings, how ſhall they be like to him who hath? As their bodies ſhall be like the glorious body of Chriſt at the reſurrection, are not their Souls now like his glorious Soul, merciful, and compaſſionate, and ſympathizing in all the afflictions of the Church? and can this be without ſome breathings for a full compleating of the Churches freedom? are ſuch deſires and pleas any hinderance to their preſent happineſs? 'Tis ſo far from that, that it doth rather further their glory, which cannot be compleat, as the glory of Chriſt, as head, is not mounted to the higheſt pitch of glory, till his myſtical body be all gathered in and lodged with him. If it be thus, will God do any thing prejudical to the Church, and contrary to the combin'd deſires of all thoſe that are ſo near him? If God doth ſometimes ſtir up himſelf upon the ſupplication of one man, and grant an order upon his petitions according to his mind; and if the prayers of one faithful Moſes, or Elias, or Samuel have ſuch a kind of Almighty power in them, much more is the joynt force of ſo many prayers twiſted together.

Uſe. Uſe. 1. For Information. Is it ſo that all Providence is for the good of the Church? Then,

1. God will always have a Church in the World, he will have ſome to ſerve him. The whole courſe of his Providence being deſigned for it? As long as the World, which is the object of his Providence doth endure, he will have a Church. God would otherwiſe loſe the end of the motion of his eyes *, the operation of his Providence, ſince it is to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for the Church and every member of it. As long as the candle and light of the Goſpel burns and ſhines, God will have a candleſtick to ſet the candle in †. His great deſign in making a World, was not to have Sun, Moon and Stars, but a Church, a company of men that might bear his mark, and honour him, to whom he might ſpeak, and extend his grace abroad, which he was ſo full of within. As a Limner, who would draw an excellent draught, draws his deſign in the midſt of the cloth, and fills the void places with clouds, and landskips, and other fancies at his pleaſure, which communicate ſome beauty and luſtre to the work: But that was not the principal deſign of the Workman. That Redeemer which bears the Church upon his heart, will create a ſtability for it; 'Tis a part of his Prieſtly Office to have a care of the Lamps: 'Tis one of his Titles; to be he that walks in the midſt of the Seven Golden Candleſticks ‖. Prieſts under the Law were to look to the great Candleſtick in the Temple, ſupply the Lamps with Oyl, and make them clean *. The Church indeed may be eclips'd, but not extinguiſhed; if it be not conſpicuous on the mountain, yet it ſhall be hid in the Wilderneſs. There ſhall be ſprinklings of profeſſors among all people. God will leaven the places where they are, into Chriſtianity, and cauſe them to fructify and grow up in purity and glory *: And the remnant of Jacob ſhall be in the midſt of many people, as a dew from the Lord, as the ſhowers upon the graſs, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the Sons of men. It tarries not for man. It attends not the power of man, the precepts of man, or inventions of man; but whoſe deſcent is from Heaven, and is carried on not by human power, but by the divine Spirit and Providence: It ſhall be firmer than all worldly power, and the ſtrongeſt Kings, Iſa. 2. 2. And the mountain of the Lords houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and ſhall be exalted above the hills. Above Mountains and Hills, to which ſometimes the powers of the World are compared, Zach. 4. 7. That Providence which gave the Church at firſt footing in the World upon a weak foundation to outward appearance, in ſpight of Men and Devils will preſerve it, and not ſuffer it to be blown up, he will ſhadow the Church with his wings in a perpetual ſucceſſion of the choiceſt mercies.

2. God will in the greateſt exigences find out means for the protection of his Church, This will be till his Providence be at an end. When God hath removed one Inſtrument of his Churches Protection, he has his choice of others whom he can raiſe and ſpirit for his Work. When thoſe upon whom the Churches hopes hang, are taken off, he can raiſe things that are unlikely to ſupply the place: As the Luteniſt accidentally had a Graſshopper leapt upon his Inſtrument, to ſupply by its noiſe the place of a ſtring which had newly crackt, whereby his Muſick was continued without interruption. God can Spirit Men againſt their own natural Fears. It was very improbable, that Nicodemus, one of a fearful Diſpoſition, who came to our Saviour by night for fear of the Jews, ſhould have the Courage to aſſert his Cauſe in the face of a whole Council of Phariſees, contriving his Death, and at preſent blunt the edge of their Malice, tho we read of none at that time in the Council to ſecond him †: The Holy Ghoſt takes particular notice that it was he that came to Jeſus by night.

grow near them by the indulgent proviſion of the God of Nature.

As there is the Wiſdom of the Serpent againſt the Church, ſo there is the Wiſdom of God for it. Gods Goodneſs upon his Church in former Ages is not all laid out: He hath his Stores ſtill, neither is his Wiſdom non-pluſt, nor his Power weakned; neither is he, nor can he be weary of his care.

3. The Church ſhall in the end prove Victorious againſt all its adverſaries, or Providence muſt miſs of its Aim. The Church is compared to an Olive Tree, Hoſ. 14, 6. in reſpect of Beauty, his Beauty ſhall be as the Olive Tree. It is ſo alſo in reſpect of Victory. Olive Branches were uſed in Triumph. God is on the Churches ſide, and he is ſtronger than the ſtrongeſt, and wiſer than the wiſeſt, and higher than the higheſt. Jeſus Chriſt is the Churches Head and General. Chriſt the Head watcheth for the good of the Church, the Body. He muſt be deſtroy'd before the Church can. There is a mighty Arm, which tho it may for a time ſeem withered, will in the end be ſtretch'd out, and get it ſelf the Victory. Whilſt Chriſt is in the Ship, it may be toſs'd, but it ſhall not be ſunk; it may be beaten down, but like a Ball to rebound the higher. The young Tree that is ſhaken by the Wind, may loſe ſome Leaves, and ſome Fruit too, but the Root gets greater ſtrength and ſtrikes it ſelf deeper into the Earth, and makes the Branches more capable of a rich return of Fruit the following Year. The Churches Stature is compared to a Palm-Tree †, which cannot be depreſt by the Weights which hang upon it, but riſeth the higher. God uſes the ſame method in the Churches, as in Chriſts advancement. Our Saviour's Death was neceſſary to his Glory †, and the Churches Affliction ſometimes to its Exaltation. A Nation may loſe ſome Battels, and yet be Victorious: The Church may have many a Croſs, but in the end will ſurmount all Difficulties. Tho Judgments and Apoſtacies may be great in a Nation, yet God will have a care of his own Plants ‖. There ſhall be a tenth; it ſhall return, the Holy Seed ſhall be the ſubſtance thereof: As a Tree in Winter, which ſeems dead, but its Juice ſhall revive into rich and generous Bloſſoms. The Ark ſhall float above the Waters. Babylon ſhall fall, the Lamb ſhall ſtand upon Mount Sion. Men may as well ſtop the riſing of the Sun in its mounting to the Meridian, bridle in the Tyde of the Ocean, as hinder the Current of an Almighty Providence.

4. The intereſt of Nations is to bear a reſpect to the Church, and countenance the Worſhip of God in it. This is to concur with God's main end, and imitate him in his Providential Adminiſtrations. God's People (whatever their Enemies ſuggeſt to the contrary) are a Bleſſing in the midſt of a Land †; their Intereſt is greater than the Intereſt of all the World beſides; tho they be but a handful, their fruit ſhall ſhake like Lebanon †. The neglect of Religion is the ruine of Nations. 'Tis obſerv'd that Cyrus was ſlain in the War in Scithia, a little after he neglected the building of the Temple of Jeruſalem which he had begun. Thoſe Perſian Kings Reigned the longeſt, that favoured the Jews in that and their other juſt requeſts. God honoured or diſgraced them as they were kind or cruel to his People. And when any act for the good of his People, they ſhall not be without their Reward. When Cyrus ſhould let the Jewiſh Captives go free without Ranſom, he ſhould be no loſer by it. God would give him the labour of Egypt, the Merchandize of Ethiophia, and the ſtrength of the Sabeans into his hand for the price of his Peoples Delivery *. Thoſe Nations which ſhould ſhould favour them in the times of their Perſecutions and Flights, and give them ſhelter in their Countreys, ſhould thrive and proſper by the bleſſing of God upon them, If Moab give entertainment to the flying Iſraelites in the time of the Invaſion of Salmanaſſer.; God will preſerve their Land that the Spoyler ſhall not enter into the Confines of it, and they ſhall have Kings and Judges under the Protection of the Houſe of David; i. e. under the Kings of Iſrael (as ſome underſtand it *) Saints are the Guardians of the places where they live, their Prayers have a greater influence than the wiſeſt Counſels, or the mightieſt Force †. And Eliſha cried, my Father, my Father, the Chariot of Iſrael, and the Horſmen thereof. The Chaldee paraphraſeth thus. Thou art better to Iſrael by thy Prayers than Chariots and Horſmen. This is the Elogy of one ſingle Prophet, what influence then hath the whole Church of God in a place? The whole World is the better for the Church of God. The Chaldee Paraphraſe hath a notion upon that, Pſal. 22. 3. But thou art holy, oh thou that inhabiteſt the Praiſes of Iſrael: Thou that eſtabliſheſt the World for the Praiſes of Iſrael. God hath nothing to do in the World but the ſaving his People: When that is once done, he will put an end to this Frame of things: When he hath gathered his Wheat into his Garner, he will burn up the Chaff. His People are the Spirit and Quinteſſence of the World: When this is extracted, the reſt are flung upon the Dunghill, as a Caput Mortuum.

5. We may ſee hence the ground of moſt the Judgments in the World. Men by their rage againſt the Church, will not acknowledg God's Government of the World for the Churches good: Therefore the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 59. 13. Conſume them in wrath, conſume them that they may not be, and let them know that God rules in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. The Church is the Seat of his Government, and from thence he extends it to the uttermoſt parts of the Earth. In Jacob he rules, and for the ſake of Jacob he orders his Government to the ends of the Earth: The not acknowledging this brings wrathful Conſumptions upon men: And it is alſo the end of his Judgments, to make men know it. 'Tis likely enough the four Kings * might have gone clear away with all their Booty had not they laid their fingers upon Lot: But when they would pack him up among the reſt, they did but ſollicite their own Ruine, and arm the Almighty God againſt them. God did not think any of the People worth the mention, verſe 11. only Lot, a righteous perſon, verſe 12. he is named as having Gods eye only upon him. And when Abraham returns from the Victory, v. 16. the reſt of the delivered Captives are mentioned in the bulk, Lot only in particular, as though all that had been done, had been done by God only for Lots ſake. They might have preſerved the whole Prey to themſelves, had it not been for this Jewel too precious in Gods account for their Cuſtody. And the fearful Curſe that God pronounced againſt the Ammonite and Moabite, that they ſhould not come into the Congregation for ten Generations, though any of them turned Proſelytes, was becauſe they came not out with ſo much as Bread and Water to meet the Iſraelites, and becauſe they hired Balaam to Curſe them. The utter waſting of Nations and Kingdoms, is becauſe they will not ſerve the intereſt of God in his People. Iſa. 60. 12. For the Nation and Kingdom that will not ſerve thee, ſhall periſh; yea thoſe Nations ſhall be utterly waſted: God will bring an utter Conſumption upon thoſe people that refuſe to love them, much more upon thoſe that hate them.

* Gen. 14. 9.

Deut. 23. 3, 4.

6. What eſteem then ſhould there be of the Godly in the World? The Providence of God, being chiefly for the good of his people, cannot well fall upon them, them, but ſome drops will fall upon thoſe involved with them in a common intereſt, When the Corn and Wine and Oyl here Jezreel (the Seed of God) and the Earth hears the Corn, and the Heavens hear

*Hoſ.2.21 the Earth, and God hears the Heavens *. When
22. their ſupplications come up to the great Superintendent of the World, many of the Wicked will fare the better for that Providence which is given only in anſwer to Jezreels Prayer: God cauſes his Sun to ſhine upon the unjuſt, upon them, not for their ſakes. When Nebuchadnezzar iſſu'd out that unjuſt order for the ſlaying the Chaldeans for not performing an impoſſible command in telling him the Dream he had forgotten, Daniel was ſought out to undergo the ſame fate: Yet by his Wiſdom God bends the heart of Arioch the Executioner of this Decree, to
* Dan. 2. ſtay his hand. * Daniel goes to the King, God ſtays
12. Nebuchadnezzar's Fury, and moves his heart to give them time. The Providence is chiefly intended for the preſervation of Daniel and his Godly Companions, but the reſt of the wiſe men have the benefit of it. As the water with which a man waters his choiceſt Plants and Flowers in his Garden is intended only for them, yet ſome falling from off thoſe Flowers, refreſheth the Weeds that grow under them. If God had not had ſuch flowers as Daniel and his Companions, the Weeds in Chaldea had been plucked up. Yet the ungrateful World takes no notice of the benefits they receive from this Salt of the Earth, which preſerves them, and to whom they are all ſo much beholding. Lot had been the occaſion of reſtoring Zoar from Captivity, as I mentioned before, for the inhabitants of that City were engaged with thoſe of Sodom in the Fight againſt the four Kings; And the King of Bela, the ſame is Zoar. And per-
Gen. 14 haps were carried Captives with the reſt of their 8, Neighbours: And it had been ſaved from the Flames which fell upon Sodom meerly by Lots prayer, *Gen.*19. 24. See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing, that I will not overthrow this City for the which thou haſt ſpoken; yet he found them a ſurly people and was requited with a rude reception notwithſtanding his kindneſs, verſe 13. He went up out of Zoar, for he feared to dwell in Zoar: It was not likely he was ſo diſtruſtful of God, that he ſhould overthrow it, when he had abſolutely promiſed him the contrary: Therefore moſt likely for ſome churliſh threatnings from them. Nay, Sodom it ſelf was beholding to him for a ſmall reſpite of the Judgment intended againſt them. For God tells him he could do no-
* Gen.19. thing till he were come thither *. And it was ſo, for Lot was entred into Zoar before a drop of Brim-
* Ver. 23. ſtone and Fire was rained down upon Sodom *.
24. Then the Lord rained upon Sodom; when? when Lot was entred into Zoar. This good the Wicked World get by Gods People, is ſo evident, that ſometimes wicked men cannot but take notice of it. Laban, a ſelfiſh Idolater, was ſenſible of it, Gen. 30. 27. I have found by experience that the Lord hath bleſſed me for thy ſake. It was a Leſſon ſo legible, that he might have learned it ſooner than in fourteen years. The Church is the chief object of preſervation, wicked men are preſerved for their ſakes; as Dung is preſerved, not for its own ſake, but for the manuring a fruitful field, and Thorns in the Hedge are preſerved for the Gardens ſake.

7. 'Tis then a very fooliſh thing for any to contend againſt the welfare of Gods People. 'Tis to ſtrive againſt an Almighty and unwearied Providence. Men may indeed ſometimes be ſuffered by God for holy ends to have their Wills, in ſome meaſure upon the Church, but not altogether: They muſt firſt depoſe him from his Throne, blind his eyes, or hold his Arm. 'Tis as fooliſh as if a worm ſhould deſign to dig down a Mountain, or Chaff to Marſhal it ſelf in Battle-Array againſt the Wind, or for a poor Flye to ſtop the motion of a Milſtone.

1. 'Tis fooliſh, Becauſe it is exceeding ſinful. What is done againſt the Church is rather done againſt God than againſt it. Since all her Conſtitution, Worſhip, Obſervances, are directed to God as their ultimate end; ſo that to endeavour to deſtroy the Church, is to deny God a Worſhip, deprive him of his Sanctuary, break upon his Houſe, Raviſh his Spouſe, cut off Chriſt's Body, rob him of his Jewels, and will be ſo interpreted by God at the laſt, upon the ſcanning of things. If the Church be Gods houſe, the Enemies ſhall anſwer for every Invaſion, every forcible Entry, for the breaking down the Gates and Bars of it, God will ſue them at laſt for dilapidations.

2. Very unſucceſsful. Shall God be afraid of the multitudes and power of Men? No more than a lyon, or a young lyon roaring after his Prey, when a multitude of Shepherds are called forth againſt them, ſhall he be afraid of their voice, or abaſe himſelf for their noiſe *. * Iſa. 31.
Noiſe and Clamour is all they can do, and that not 4.
long: The fierceneſs of the Lyon quickly ſcatters them. The Aſſociations, and mens girding themſelves againſt the Church, is but a preparation to their own Ruine, Iſa. 8. 9. Aſſociate your ſelves together oh ye people, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces, three times repeated. Your Counſels, ſaith he, ſhall not ſtand againſt that preſence of God that is with us, For God is with us.

3. It is very deſtructive too. God will not alway be ſtill and refrain himſelf: he ſeems to do ſo for a while; but when he doth ariſe, he will deſtroy and devour at once *, he will make but one morſel of * Iſa. 42 them. When God is angry with his people, and 14.
gives them into the hands of men to execute his Juſtice upon them, and puniſh them, he will even puniſh thoſe enemies for their Cruelty, and going beyound their Commiſſion, in ſatisfying their own immoderate Paſſions upon them. Upon this account God threatens Babylon, Iſa. 47. 6. I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine Inheritance, and given them into thy hand, thou didſt ſhew them no mercy; whereupon God threatens them afterwards, &c. ſo *Zach.*1.15. God was ſore diſpleaſed with the Heathen; for when he was but a little dilpleaſed with his people, they helped forward the affliction.

Uſe 2. Is for Comfort.

If all the Providence of God be for the good of the Church: If his eyes run to and fro to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for them it affords matter of great comfort. His Providence is continual for them *, he hath * Zech. 4.
ſeven Pipes to convey kindneſs to them, as well as 2.
ſeven Lamps whereby to diſcern their ſtreights. His Providence is as vaſt as his Omniſcience: The number of Pipes belonging to the Candleſtick of the Church is exact according to the number of Lamps. The Churches miſery cannot be hid from Gods eye, let it be in what part of the Earth ſoever, for his eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, and his ſight excites his ſtrength. Upon the ſight of their diſtreſſed condition, he watches only for the fitteſt opportunity to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for them. And when that opportunity comes, he is ſpeedy in the Deliverance of them, Pſal. 18. 10. He rode upon a Cherub and did flye, yea, he did flye upon the wings of the wind. He doth not only ride upon a Cherub, but flye. His wings are nothing but wind, which hath the quickeſt and ſtrongeſt motion, which moves the greateſt bodies, and turns down all before it. What is for the good of the whole, hath an influence upon every Member of the Body.

1. 'Tis comfort in Duties and ſpecial Services. Nothing ſhall be wanting for encouragement to Duty, Duty, and ſucceſs in it, when God calls any to it, ſince all his Providence, is for the good of the Church. Let there be but ſincerity on our parts, in our attemps of Service upon Gods call, and we need not fear a want of Providence on Gods part: God never calls any to ſerve his Church in any ſtation, but he doth both ſpirit and encourage them. God hath in his common Providence ſuited the nature of every Creature to that place in which he hath ſet it in the World; and will he not much more in his ſpecial Providence ſuit every one to that place he calls them to, for the ſervice of his Church! He did not forſake Chriſt in redeeming his Church, neither will he forſake any in aſſiſting his Church. When Joſeph of Arimathea would boldly demand the body of our Saviour, Providence made the way plain before him, he meets with no check, neither from Pilate nor the Prieſts †.

† Mat. 27. 58.

2. In meanneſs and lowneſs. 'Tis one and the ſame God that rules the affairs of the whole World, of the Church, and of every particular Member of it. As it is the ſame Soul that informs the whole body, the meaneſt Member as well as that which is moſt excellent. Not the meaneſt ſincere Chriſtian but is under Gods eye for good. The Spirit acts and animates every Member in the Church, the weakeſt as well as the moſt towring Chriſtian. Baruch was but the Prophet Jeremy's Amanuenſis or Scribe, and Servant to Jeremy (who was no great man in the World himſelf) yet God takes notice ſo of his Service, that he would particularly provide for him, and commands Jeremy in a way of Prophecy to tell him as much, Jer. 45. 5. I will bring evil upon all fleſh, but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey, whitherſoever thou goeſt.

Ma. 15. 43

3. In the greateſt Judgments upon others. In an Epidemical Judgment upon the whole Nation of the Jews, God would have a ſpecial care of Baruch. If he ſhould caſt his People far off among the Heathen, and ſcatter them among the Countries, yet even there he would be a little Sanctuary unto them. His own Preſence ſhould ſupply the want of a Temple, ſo he is pleaſed to expreſs himſelf *. But how is it poſſible the great God can be but a little Sanctuary? His eye is upon them to ſee their danger, and his hand upon them to ſecure them from it. His promiſe ſhall ſhield them, and his Wings ſhall cover them *. While he hath indignation, he hath a ſecret Chamber for their ſecurity *. An Almighty ſhadow, under which they may abide †. In times of the moſt devouring danger, he hath a Seal to ſet upon their foreheads as a mark of his ſpecial Protection. We never have ſo much experience of Gods care and ſtrength, as in times of Trouble, Pſal. 37. 39. He is their ſtrength in time of Trouble. He is a friend who is as able as willing, and as willing as able to help them, whoſe watchfulneſs over them is as much above their apprehenſion as it is above their merits.

4. In the greateſt extremities wherein his people may be, there are promiſes of comfort *. Both in overflowing waters, and ſcorching fires, he will be with them. His Providence ſhall attend his Promiſe, and his truth ſhall be their Shield and Buckler, Pſal. 91. 4. That ſurely is a ſufficient ſupport; Chriſt thought it ſo, when he only ſaid to his diſciples, 'tis I, be not afraid *. What though there be a Storm, a darkneſs and trouble, 'tis I am he. The darkneſs of the night troubles not the Pilot whilſt he hath his Compaſs to ſteer by. If all his Providences be for the good of them that fear him, he can never want means to bring them out of trouble, becauſe he is always actually exerciſed in governing that which is for their good; and till he ſees it fit to deliver them, he will be with them. Great Mercies ſucceed the ſharpeſt Afflictions *. When there ſhould be a voice of trembling, and men with their hands upon their Loins as Women in Travel, and paleneſs in their Faces from the Exceſs of their Fears: In that Day God would break the Yoak from them, and they ſhould ſerve the Lord their God, and David their King. Though the night be never ſo dark, yet it is certain the Sun will riſe and diſperſe its light next morning, and one time or other ſhew its ſelf in its brightneſs. We have no reaſon to deſpond in great extremities, ſince he can think us into ſafety, Pſal. 40. 17. Lord think on me; much more look us into it; his thoughts and his eyes move together.

* Iſa. 43. 2.

* Joh. 6. 17, 18.

* Jer. 30. 5, 6, 7, &c.

5. In fear of wants. The power of the Governour of the World cannot be doubted. His love, as little as it ſeems, ſince it hath moved him to prepare Heaven to entertain his People at the end of their Journey, it will not be wanting to provide accommodation for them upon the way, ſince all things both good and bad are at his beck, and under the government of his gracious Wiſdom. His eyes run to and fro through the whole Earth, not only to defend them in dangers, but ſupply them in wants: for his ſtrength is ſhewed both ways. Doth he providentially regard them that have no reſpect for him, and will he not employ his Power for, and extend his Care to them that Adore and Love Him, and keep up his Honour in the World? He will not ſurely, be regardleſs of the Afflictions of his Creatures. His People are not only his Creatures, but his New Creatures, their bodies are not only created by him, but redeemed by his Son. The purchaſe of the Redeemer is joyned to the Providence of the Creator. If he took care of you when he might have damned you for your Sins, will he not much more, ſince you are Believers in Chriſt. And he cannot damn you Believing, unleſs he renounce his Sons Mediation and his own Promiſe. A natural man provides for his own, much more a Righteous man, Prov. 19. 22. A good man leaves an Inheritance to his children, much more the God of Righteouſneſs, a God who hath his eye always upon them. His eye will affect his heart, and his heart ſpirit the hand of his Power to relieve. He hath prepared of his goodneſs for the poor. Pſalm. 68. 10.

6. 'Tis comfort in the low eſtate of the Church at any time. Gods eye is upon his Church, even whilſt he ſeems to have forſaken them. If he ſeems to be departed, it is but in ſome other part of the Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong for them; where-ever his eye is fixed in any part of the World, his Church hath his heart, and his Churches relief is his end. Though the Church may ſometimes lye among the Pots, in a dirty condition, yet there is a time of Reſurection when God will reſtore it to its true glory, and make it as white as a Dove with its Silver wings *: The Sun is not always obſcur'd by a thick Cloud, but will be freed from the darkneſs of it. God will judge his people, and repent himſelf concerning his Servants †: 'Tis a comfort to God to deliver his people, and he will do it in ſuch a Seaſon when it ſhall be moſt comfortable, to his Glory, and their Hearts. The very name Hieruſalem, ſome derive from Jireh Salem, God will provide in Salem. The new Jeruſalem is the title given to Gods Church, Rev. 1. and is ſtill the object of his Providence, and he will provide for it at a pinch, Gen. 22. 14. Jehovah Jireh, God will raiſe up the Honour and Beauty of his Church: Great Men ſhall be ſervants to it, and employ their ſtrength for it when GOD ſhall have Mercy on it *: Yea, the Learning and Knowledge of the World ſhall contribute to the building of it, v. 13. The glory of Lebanon ſhall come come unto thee, the firr-tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautifie the place of my sanctuary. It shall be called the city of the Lord, the Sion of the holy one of Israel, that she may know that the Lord is her Saviour, and her Redeemer the mighty one of Jacob. As Christ rose in his Natural, so he will in his Spiritual Body. If Christ when dead could not be kept from Rising, Christ now living shall not be hindered from raising and helping his Church. His own Glory is linked with his Peoples security; and though he may not be moved for any thing in them because of their sinfulness, he will for his own name, because of its Excellency *. Ezek. 36. 22. I do not this, for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for my holy names sake, As sorrows encreased upon the Israelites, the nearer their Deliverance approached.

*Ezek. 36.

Because this Method of God is the greatest startling even to good men, let us consider this a little; that God doth, and why God doth leave his Church to extremities before he doth deliver it.

Take the resolution of this in some propositions.

1. 'Tis indeed Gods usual method to leave the Church to extremity before he doth command help. You never heard of any eminent Deliverance of the Church but was ushered in by some amazing distress. The Israelites were not saved till they were put in between Sea, Hills and Forts, that their Destruction was inevitable unless Heaven relieved them, Pharaoh resolves to have his will, and God resolves to have his; but he lets him come with his whole Force and open mouth at the Israelites backs, and then makes the Waters his Sepulcher. Constantine, the man-child in the Revelation, was preceded by Diocletian the sharpest Persecutor. When his People are at a loss, 'tis, his usual time to do his greatest works for them; God had promised Christ many ages, and yet no appearance of him; still Promise after promise, and no performance, Psal. 40. 8. It was then [lo I come] yet many hundred years rowl'd away, and no sight of him yet. Captivity and Affliction, and no Redeemer; but when the World was over-run with Idolatry, the Jews oppressed by the Romans, the Scepter departed from Judah, Herod an Edomite, and stranger, King, and scarce any Faith left, then, then he comes. The World will be in much the like case at his next coming, Luke. 18. 8. When the Son of man comes, shall he find faith in the earth? there shall be faintings, despondency, unbelief of his promise, as though he had cast off all care of his Churches concerns. 'Tis not meant of a Justifying Faith, but a Faith in that particular promise of his coming. The Faith of the Israelites must needs begin to flag, when they saw their Males murdered by the Egyptians; could they believe the Propagation of the Seed of Abraham, when murder took off the Infants, and Labour and Age would in time, the old ones? Whilst their Children were preserved, the Promise might easily be believed. But consider, this was but just before their deliverance; like a violent Crisis before Recovery. He doth then judge his people, and repent himself for his servants, when he sees their power is gone, and there is none shut up or left †: He doth so for the wicked many times, when the affliction of Idolatrous Israel was bitter, when there was not any shut up, nor any left, nor any helper for Israel, then he saved them by the hand of Jeroboam the Son of *Joash. He doth so with private persons; Peter might have been delivered by God's Power out of Prison, when he was first sent thither, but God thought it fittest for him to lie in Chains, and free him but the night before his intended Execution †. Lot had his goods rifled, and carried away Captive, before God stirred up Abraham to rescue him. When the hand of the wicked lies heaviest upon the heads of the Righteous, and wrings the most mournful sighs from them; when they are needy, and the wicked securely puffing at them, as though they had brought them to so low a condition as to blow them away with a blast, now saith God will I arise, Psal. 12. 5. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise saith the Lord, I will set him at safety from him that puffeth at him. Now, this is the time I watched for, as fittest for my own Glory and their safety. Then God disappoints them, when they seem to have got to the Goal with the Ball at their foot.

Secondly. God hereby doth glorify himself. He then discovers that there is nothing too high for his power to check, nothing too subtil for his Wisdom to disappoint, nothing too low for his love to embrace. That is the season wherein his Mercy will be most prized, his Power most admired, his Wisdom most adored, and his Justice most cleared. God lets the concerns of his Church go backward, that he may bring them on with more Glory to himself, and satisfaction to his Creature. God will divide the benefit and the honour between himself and the Creature: He will have the holy Glory, and his Creature shall have the sensible advantage. They shall enjoy Salvation, there is their benefit; but not by sword or bow, but by the Lord their God †. Saved they should be, but in such a way wherein the honour of God might most appear without any mixture of the Creature.

† Hos. 1. 7.

1. God glorifies his Power. His eyes run to and fro to shew himself strong. He will then pitch upon such a season, when his strength may appear most illustrious, and none else have any pretence to claim an equal strength with him. A time of extremity is the fittest opportunity for this. When his power cannot be clouded by any interpositions of the creature for challenging a share in it. The greater the malice against the Church, the weaker the Churches ability to help it self, the more glorious is the Power of God magnified in deliverance; little dangers are not so suitable for the triumph of an Infinite strength. As God let Christ lye three dayes in the Grave, that his Resurection might be known to be the fruit of a Divine Power; for the same end he lets his mystical Body lye in the same condition. Had God brought Israel out of Egypt in the time of the Kings that were friends to them from a kindly remembrance of Joseph, there had been no character of a Divne Power, tho there had been a Divine truth apparent in the case; but he set apart that time for their deliverance, when he was to contest with the mightiest opposition from the whole Body of the Egyptian Nation, who had forgot Joseph their great Benefactor. Had not the Disciples been in a great Storm, ready to be cast away, and Christ a sleep, till they were in extremity, they had not seen such * visible marks of the extensiveness of their Masters Power. When the hearts of the strong men fainted, when the Assyrians would not hear the Embassadors of Peace, when they had broke their former Covenant, resolved to invade the Land; when their Calamity, and dispair had arrested all their hopes, now, when all things are in such a deplorable state, will I rise, saith the Lord, now will I be exalted; now will I lift up my self. God was not asleep or unconcerned, but he sate still watching for such a season; Now, is three times repeated. The Psalmist gives us a Record of this in his particular case. When the Waters of his affliction were many, the Enemy strong, and too strong for him, their strength edged with an intense hatred, then God appears to be his stay, and prevents them in the day of his Calamity, Psal. 18. 16, 17, 18.

* Isa. 33. 7, 8, &c.

God

God lets his Enemies be too ſtrong for him, that he might appear his only ſtay, without any mixture of Davids ſtrength in the caſe. When the Jews thruſt Chriſt out of Nazareth, led him to the Brow of the Hill, and were ready to caſt him down, then, and not till then, he frees himſelf out of their hands, and diſappoints the effects of their rage. As Chriſt dealt thus for himſelf, ſo he deals for his Church in all Ages.

2. God glorifies his Wiſdom. His eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth to ſhew himſelf ſtrong; 'tis not a bare ſtrength that God would ſhew, or ſuch a Power which we call in man a bruitiſh valour, without wit or skill; but to ſhew his ſtrength with Wiſdom, when all his other Attributes may be glorified with that of his Power. When all worldly helps are departed, we can as little aſcribe our ſecurity to our own wiſdom and induſtry, as to our own ſtrength and Power. The Phyſitians skill is beſt evidenced in maſtering a deſperate Diſeaſe. He will bring the Counſels of the Heathen to nought *. Pſal. 33. 10. He will let them counſel, he will let them deviſe and carry on their Counſels near to Execution, that he may ſhew, that as the ſtrength of Hell is no match for his Power, ſo the craft of Satan is no mate for his Wiſdom. But he raiſes the Trophies of his Wiſdom upon the ſubtil devices of his Enemies.

3. God glorifies his care and compaſſion. When his people are neareſt cruſhing, God is neareſt preſerving. Gods Mercy is greateſt when his Saints Miſery is deepeſt; when Sion is as an outcaſt, it ſhall be taken into Gods protection, Jer. 30. 16, 17. I will heal thee of thy wounds, becauſe they called thee an Outcaſt, ſaying, this is Sion whom no man ſeeks after. When none ſtood up to plead for her, when her Lovers, ſhe depended on, had forgotten and forſaken her, when they thought her caſt out of the care of any creature, the Creator would take her up. When the ruine was inevitable as to man, their preſervation was moſt regarded by God. Had God ſtopped Pharaoh at his firſt March, by raiſing ſome Mutiny in his Army, his mercy to his people, as well as his power againſt his Enemies, had not been ſo conſpicuous. The more deſperate things are, the fitter ſubject for the advancement of God's kindneſs. Had God conducted the Iſraelites through a rich and fruitful Country, it would have obſcured the glory of his care of them, which was more ſignal in directing them through a Barren Deſert, crowded with fiery Serpents, without Bread to nouriſh them, or Water to cool them, wherein he manifeſted himſelf to be both their Caterer and Phyſitian. Moſes was never more peculiarly under Gods protection, no not when he had the whole Guard of Iſrael about him in the Wilderneſs, than when his Mother had expoſed him to the River forlorn, in a pitched Ark, and forſaken by his Siſter, who ſtood aloof off to ſee how providence would conduct him. When Laban was poſſeſſed with Fury againſt Jacob, God countermands it, and iſſues out his own order to him, how he ſhould behave himſelf towards his Son *. * Gen. 31. 24. '29. God times his kindneſs, ſo that it may appear to be nothing elſe but Grace, Grace with a Witneſs; that his people may be able to underſtand the very particularities of it, Iſa. 30. 18. Therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you: He leaves them therefore for a while to the will of their Enemies, verſe 17. At the rebuke of five ſhall you flee, till you be left as a beacon upon the top of a mountain, and as an enſign upon a Hill: Never is Salvation, ſweeter, and Mercy better reliſht, than when it ſnatcheth us out of the teeth of danger. God would have his mercy valued, and 'tis fit it ſhould. And when is a Calm more grateful than after the bittereſt Storm, attended with the higheſt deſpair? God's mercy in ſparing Iſaac, after the knife was at his throat, was more welcome and more delicious both to Father and Son, than if God had revealed his intent to Abraham in the three days Journey to the Mount Moriah. But God ſuſpending his Soul in bitterneſs all that time, prepared his heart for the valuation of that mercy. When humane help forſaketh us, God moſt embraceth us, Pſal. 27. 10. When my father and mother forſake me, then the Lord will take me up.

4. God glorifies his Righteouſneſs and Juſtice. There is a meaſure of wickedneſs God ſtays for, which will be an object of his Juſtice without exception. When the meaſure of a peoples Covetouſneſs is come, then their end is come, and God will fill them with men as with Caterpillers, and they ſhall lift up a ſhout againſt them †. Hereby God clears † Jer. 51. 13, 14. the Juſtice of his proceedings, that he exerciſed Patience ſo long; that things were come to that paſs, that either his People or his Enemies muſt be deſtroyed. As the caſe was with the Iſraelites, had not God marvellouſly appeared, every man of them had been cut off or reduced to Slavery. The Dye was caſt, either the Egyptians or Iſraelites muſt be defeated: either God muſt appear for his Church, or none would be left in the World to profeſs him. In ſuch a caſe the Juſtice of God is more unexceptionable. No man has any ſemblance for complaining of him; For he ſtruck not till the ſafety of his Adverſaries was inconſiſtent with his own Honor and Intereſt of the World. When men come to ſuch a height, as to ſlight and reſolve to break the laws of God, then is the time for Honor of his Righteouſneſs in his own inſtitutions, to vex them in his ſore diſpleaſure, Pſal. 2. 3, 5. Then ſhall he ſpeak to them in his wrath, and vex them, &c. When? When they reſolve to caſt away his bands and cords from them, ver. 2. He is forced to raiſe them, when men make void his Law, and tread down the Honor of it; when they would not have God to have a ſtanding Law in the World, or a People to profeſs him, Pſal. 119. 126. 'Tis time for the Lord to work, for they have made void the Law. When the Grapes of Wickedneſs are thus fully ripe, then is God's time for the honour of his Juſtice to caſt them into the Wine-preſs of his Wrath *. This is God's ſet * Rev. 14. 19, 20. time when he may glorify, without any exception, his Juſtice in puniſhing his enemies ſins, his Wiſdom in defeating his enemies Plots, his Power in deſtroying his enemies ſtrength, and his Mercy in relieving his Peoples wants.

Thirdly, Such extremities, and deliverance in them are moſt advantageous for his people.

1. It being a ſeaſon to improve and know their intereſt. Men do not uſually ſeek to God, or at leaſt ſo earneſtly, as when they are in diſtreſs; the time of the tempeſt was the time of the Diſciples praying to Chriſt: The Iſraelites, you ſcarce find them calling upon God but in times of danger and diſtreſs: hereby God doth incourage and give an argument for Prayer. The Pſalmiſt uſeth the extremity of the Church often as an Argument to move God to pity, Pſal. 123. 3. Have mercy upon us, O Lord, have mercy upon us, for we are exceedingly filled with contempt. We are glutted with contempt, as low as low can be, ſo Pſal. 44. 23, 24. Awake, why ſleepeſt thou, O Lord, ariſe, caſt us not off for ever, our ſoul is bowed to the duſt. That is the moſt ſucceſsful time for Prayer which is the time of the ſtirring of God's Bowels. He hath been a ſtrength to the poor, a ſtrength to the needy in his diſtreſs, a refuge from the ſtorm, a ſhadow from the heat, when the blaſt of the terrible ones is as a ſtorm againſt the wall *. They in ſuch a * Iſa. 25. 1. time find how conſiderable their intereſt is with God, when upon their Prayer they ſhall find relief ſuitable to every kind of danger they are in: The Spirit of Prayer upon the Church is but the Preſage of their Adverſaries ruin. When God ſeeks to deſtroy the Nations that come againſt Hieruſalem, he will pour upon the Inhabitants of it, a Spirit of Grace and of Supplication, Zech. 12.9. And in that day I will ſeek to deſtroy all the Nations that come againſt Jeruſalem, and I will pour upon the houſe of David and the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem the Spirit of Grace and of Supplication. This time of extremity, when all their hands fail ſhould edge the Churches Prayers. Our great Interceſſor ſeems in this caſe to ſet us a Pattern, Zech. 1. 12. O Lord of Hoſts, how long wilt thou not have mercy upon Jeruſalem? [יהוה ſingle by it ſelf, not in an affix.] When all the Earth ſits ſtill and is at reſt, unconcerned in the affairs of thy Church, if thou wilt not have mercy on them in this ſtrait, who ſhall relieve them? none elſe have any mind to it; then iſſue out comfortable words to the Angel from the mouth of God. This is an advantage of extremity, it ſets Chriſt a Pleading, and the Church on Praying.

2. As a ſeaſon for acting Faith at preſent, and an encouragement of relyance upon him in future ſtreights. As a ſeaſon for acting Faith at preſent. Our Saviour lets Lazarus dye and ſtink in the Grave, before he raiſed him, that he might both confirm Faith in his Diſciples hearts, and ſettle it in the hearts of ſome of the Jews *. I am glad for your ſakes that I was not there, to the intent that ye may believe. What, let Lazarus die, one that he loved, one ſo ſtrongly pleaded for by two Siſters that he loved too, and ſolicited upon his friendſhip to relieve him? v. 3. Behold he whom thou loveſt is ſick; and our Saviour glad he was not there to prevent it? yes, not glad of Lazarus his extremity, nor of the Churches; But of the opportunity to give them greater ground of Faith and Encouragement to truſt him. The Churches Faith is Gods Glory: He that hath many things to truſt to, is in ſuſpence which he ſhould take hold of: But when there is but one left, with what greedineſs will he claſp about that! God cuts down worldly props, that we might make him our ſtay. How will the Church in extremity recollect all the deliverances of it in former ages, and put them up in pleas to God, for a renewal of his wonted kindneſs, and new ſucceſſions of deliverance, whereby God gets the glory of his former work, and his Church the preſent comfort in renewing fiducial acts upon him? How doth Jehoſaphat put God in mind of his gracious aſſiſtance acted ſome ages before, when he was in a ſtreight, by the Invaſion of a powerful Army, 2 Chron. 20. 7. Art not thou our God that didſt drive out the Inhabitants of this Land before thy people Iſrael? v. 12. We know not what to do, but our eyes are upon thee: Never are the Churches eyes ſo fixed upon God; never God eyes ſo fixed upon the Church, as in times of their diſtreſs. Then there is a ſweet Communion with, and recounting of all their former friendſhips: The Church then throws it ſelf wholly upon God: Its proſperity is but like a troubled Sea, its diſtreſs is the time of its reſt. So Aſa, when aſſaulted by a Million of men under Zerah the Ethiopian, how doth he throw himſelf and the whole weight of his concerns upon the hands of God, and makes his Cauſe Gods? 2 Chron. 14. 11. Help us, O Lord our God, for we reſt on thee, oh Lord, thou art our God, let not man prevail againſt thee. And there is an encouragement alſo in the deliverance for future Faith. It gives a ground for future Faith from the riches of the preſent experience; in ſuch diſtreſſes there is the higheſt experience of God, and hope is the fruit of experience; How apt are we to believe God in other ſtraits, when we have had aſſiſtance (like they that dream'd) come unexpectedly upon us. God overthrew Pharaoh's Hoſt in the Red Sea, when they were upon the heels of the affrighted Iſraelites, and ready to cruſh them, but God gave them to be meat to the people inhabiting the Wilderneſs †, as a ſtanding excellent diſh to feed their hope; for all future deliverances upon their truſt in God. And indeed that deliverance was an earneſt of their perpetual ſecurity, by ſpecial Providence in any ſucceeding trouble. And God often gives them a particular charge to remember that deliverance, with a practical remembrance, to ſtill their Fear, and ſupport their Faith, Deut. 7. 18. Thou ſhalt not be afraid of them, but ſhalt well remember what the Lord thy God did unto Pharaoh, and to all the Egyptians. He would have them remember it as a Covenant-mercy, what the Lord thy God did, thy God in Covenant; not what the Lord did barely by an arm of Power, but what he did by a vaſtneſs of affection, and as a God of truth and firmneſs in his Covenant.

† Pſal. 74. 14.

3. In fitting them by the extremity for a holy reception of the Mercy intended.

God keeps up the diſtreſs of his Church to expel ſelf-confidence. Truſt in earthly things are the great checks of God's Kindneſs. We hardly forſake this temper till we are forſaken by all thoſe things we confide in. Times of extremity make us more humble; and humility, like the Plow, fits us for the ſeed of mercy. The Gardners digging up the clods is but to prepare the earth for the receiving and nouriſhing ſome excellent Plants he intends to put into its Womb. There is a certain ſet time for Gods great actions. He lets the powers of darkneſs have their hour, and God will take his hour, Pſal. 102. 13. Thou ſhalt ariſe and have mercy upon Sion, for the time to favour her, yea the ſet time is come. He hath a ſet time for the diſcovery of his mercy, and he will not ſtay a jot beyond it. What is this time? v. 9, &c. When they eat aſhes like bread, and mingle their drink with weeping. When they are moſt humble, and when the ſervants of God have more affection to the Church. When their humble and ardent affections are ſtrong, even to the ruine and rubbiſh of it; when they have a mighty deſire and longing for the reparation of it, as the Jews in Captivity had for the very duſt of the Temple, v. 14. For thy ſervants take pleaſure in her ſtones, and favour the duſt thereof. For, there notes it to be a reaſon why the ſet-time was judged by them to be come. This is God's ſet time when the Church is moſt believing, moſt humble, moſt affectionate to God's intereſt in it, and moſt ſincere. Without Faith we are not fit to deſire mercy; without humility we are not fit to receive it, without affection we are not fit to value it, without ſincerity we are not fit to improve it. Times of extremity contribute to the growth and exerciſe of thoſe qualifications.

* John. 11. 15. 45.

4. In ſecuring them againſt future ſtreights. For God's diſappointing Enemies when they think themſelves ſure of all, is the higheſt diſcouragement to them, and thoſe of the like temper, to renew the like attempts; but if they do, it is an evidence they ſhall meet with the like ſucceſs; 'Tis the higheſt vexation to ſee their projects diverted, when they have lighted their match, and are ready to give fire. Men may better take notice how God loves his People, when he apprehends their adverſaries in the very Pinacle of their Pride, and flings them down from the Mount of their hopes. It doth not only daſh the preſent deſigns, but diſhearten future attempts. The Egyptians, after their overthrow at the Red Sea, never attempted to diſturb them in their journey in the Wilderneſs. It was a Bridle to all their enemies, except Amalek, upon whoſe Country they travelled in the Wilderneſs, when it was the the interest of State in all those Nations to rout that swarm of People that must have some Seat to dwell in; and every Nation might justly fear to be dispossessed by them; yet we read of no League among those Nations bordering upon the Wilderness, such a terror did God strike into them by that relief he gave his People in their extremity at the Red Sea; whereby he provided for their future security in their whole Journey. It was this melted the hearts of the Gibeonites, one of the Nations of Canaan, and brought them to a submission to Joshua, as the sentiment of all their Neighbours, Josh. 9. 9. We are come because of the name of the Lord thy God, for we have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. And for this and other reasons it may be, that the times before the Churches last deliverance shall be sharper than any before; which our Saviour intimates, Mat. 24. 21. For then there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the World, no nor ever shall be. In Discoursing his Disciples of the troubles at the destruction of Jerusalem, which was a type of the trouble preceding the end of the World, he adds a discourse of what shall be at the end of the World, in the last attempt of the enemies of the Church; for ver. 29. he saith, immediately after the tribulation of those days, he speaks of his coming in the Clouds of Heaven with great power and glory. And also in the Revelation, Rev. 16. 18. And there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. This perhaps at the pouring out of the seventh Vail, may concern the Christian Church as well as the Antichristian Party. But the reason why it may be sharper just before that last deliverance, than it was in former ages, may be because it is the last effort the enemy shall make; the last demonstration of Gods power and wisdom for, and care of his Church, and of Justice upon his enemies in such cases. The last season for their multiplying their cries, and acting their Faith for such a concern.

3. Use of Exhortation.

If it be so, that the Providence of God is chiefly designed for the good of the Church:

First, Fear not the enemies of the Church. 'Tis a wrong to God. Fear of Man is always attended with a forgetfulness of God, Isa. 51. 12, 13. I, even I am he that comforteth you, who art thou that art afraid of a man that shall dye, and of the son of man that shall be made as grass, and forgettest the Lord thy maker, who hath stretched forth the Heavens, &c? 'Tis to value the power of grass above the power of the Creator, as though that had more ability to hurt, than God to help. As if men were as strong as Mountains, and God as weak as a Bulrush. 'Tis a wrong to his truth; hath he not comforted you in his Promise? What Creature should then deject you? 'Tis a wrong to his Mercy; Is he not the Lord thy maker? Calvin refers this to Regeneration, and not Creation, Hath he not renewed you by his Spirit? and will he not protect you by his strength? and that you may not question his power, look up to the Heavens which he hath stretched out, and the foundations of the Earth which he hath laid: And is that Arm which hath done such mighty works, too weak to defend that work which is choicer in his eye than either the extended Heaven, or the established Earth? We vilifie God, and defile his glory, when our fear of mans power stifles our Faith in God, Isa. 8. 12, 13. Neither fear you their fear, nor be afraid, sanctifie the Lord of Hosts himself, and let him be your fear. Let the wicked fear the Assyrians, and engage in confederacies against them; but let your eyes be lifted up to me and my Providence. God will either turn away the mouth of the Cannon from the Church, or arm it against the shot. Either preserve it from a danger protect it in it, or sanctifie it to the Church, and who need fear a Sword in a Fathers hand?

1. Will you fear man, who have a God to secure you? The Church belongs to God, not to man, as a just Propriety, Isa. 43. 1. Fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by my name; thou art mine, when thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, &c. Thou art mine, not mans. Thou art mine, I am thine. I will be with thee as thine, I will secure thee as mine. Is my creating, is my forming, is my redeeming thee to no purpose? I will not secure you from trouble; but surely my redemption of you, the propriety I have in you, should secure you from fears in those troubles. None shall hurt you whilst I have power to defend you. God with us, if well considered and believed, is sufficient to still those fears which have the greatest outward objects for their encouragement, Psal. 27. 1. The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid. If God be our strength to support us, why should the weakness of dust and ashes scare us? Alliance to great men, and Protection of Princes, prop up mens hearts against the fears of others; and shall alliance to God be of a weaker efficacy? A † Heathen could so argue, that knew nothing of Redemption. Let the Counsels of Enemies be crafty *, yet they consult against Gods hidden ones, hidden by God whilst Plotted against by men: who would fear the stratagems of men, whilst protected in an impregnable Tower? God hides, when men are ready to seize the Prey. How did the Angel protect a sincere trembling Lot against the invasion of a whole City, and secured his person whilst he blinded his enemies eyes that they could not find the door. Instruments cannot design more maliciously, than Christ watches over them affectionately. Christ hath his Eye to see your works and danger where Satan hath his Throne.

† Arram. in Epist. lib. 1. c. 9.
* Psal. 83. 3.
Rev. 2. 13.

2. Will you fear men, who have a God to watch over their motions? What Counsels can prevail where God intends to over-rule their resolves? There is no place so close as to keep private resolutions from his knowledge. This was the thought of those Statesmen against whom the Prophet Isaiah thunders, Isa. 29. 15, 16. Wo unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark; surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potters clay. Their Counsels were as well known to him as the Potters Clay is to the Potter, which he can either frame into a vessel, or fling away into the Mass from whence he took it. God hath not displayed himself of his Government; nor will devolve his right upon any men to dispose of his concerns. When men think to act so secretly, as though they framed themselves, as though Gods eye were not upon them; He will watch and trace all their Motions, and make them insignificant to their purposes. Satan himself, the slyest and subtilest agent, is too open to God to hide his Counsels from him. Never fear man till the whole combined Policies of Hell can controul the resolves of Heaven. Till God wants Omniscence to dive into their secrets, skill to defeat their Counsels, and an arm to abate their power.

3. Will you fear men or devils who have a God to restrain them?

The great Dragon and General of the Serpents Seed is under a binding-power, who can bind him not only a Thousand Years, but a Thousand Ages †. remain at Nob, a City of the Levites, not far from Jeruſalem; where he might have a full proſpect of the City. He ſhall but ſhake his hand, he ſhall not gripe it in his Talons; He ſhall ſhew his teeth, but not bite, ſnarl but not worry, Iſa. 10. 32. God will let out ſo much of the enemies wrath, as may anſwer his gracious ends to the Church in purging of them, but the remainder of Wrath, which remains in their hearts for the Churches Deſtruction, he will reſtrain *. As a Phyſitian weighs out ſo much as may curb the Diſeaſe, not kill the Patient. The Chain of Providence controuls the Power of Satan, when it doth not change his deſires. The Egyptians Will againſt the Iſraelites was ſtrong, but his power was weak. Might and Power is only in the hand of God, who Reigns over all, 1 Chron. 29. 12. And God will exert ſo much of Power to bridle the inclinations of Nature in the wicked for the good of his People. He will give them ſo much line as may ſerve his holy purpoſes, but not ſo much as ſhall prejudice the Churches ſtanding. A Staff is not capable of giving a ſmart blow without the force of the hand that holds it. Wicked men are no more than a ſtaff in Gods hand, Pſal. 10. 5. The Rod of my Anger, the Staff in their hand is my indignation; he can either ſtrike with it, or break it in pieces. The Staff is ſtill in the hand of God, and can do no more than what his merciful Arm moves it to; as he can reſtrain it, ſo he can divert it. What ſhould we fear thoſe whoſe hearts are in Gods hands, whoſe enmity is under Gods reſtraint, who can change their fury into favour, or at leaſt bridle it as he doth the Waves of the Sea? No Enemies ſhot can exceed Gods Commiſſion. God often laughs when men Plot, and diſappoints when they begin to act. Sometimes he makes them act contrary to their intentions. Balaam comes to curſe the People, and God turns his tongue to bleſs them, which if guided by his own heart, would have poured out execrations upon them *. God puts the words into his mouth, but not in his heart verſe. 5. and makes him bleſs that which his heart hates.

4. Will you fear them who have a God to ruin them? Though the Beaſt in the Revelations hath ſeven heads, a reaching Wiſdom; and ten horns, a mighty power *, (both the numbers of ſeven, and ten, being numbers of perfection in Scripture) yet with all his Wiſdom and Strength, he ſhall tumble down to Deſtruction, they can no more reſiſt Gods power, than bluſtring Winds or raging Waves can croſs his Will. When the enemies of the Church are in Combination, like Thorns full of prickles folded together, then ſhall they be conſumed like ſtubble that is dry, Nahum 1. 10. God loves to defeat Pride, Exod. 18. 11. In the thing wherein they dealt proudly, he was above them. God waits but the time of their ſwelling to make them burſt, Abſalom kills his Brother, withdraws the people from their obedience to the King, ſtirs them up to revolt, enters Jeruſalem in his Fathers abſence, pollutes his Concubines, engages in deſigns againſt his life, raiſeth an Army againſt him, who would not ſay, David was in extremity, and Abſalom alone proſpering in his deſigns? but when Abſalom comes to open force, God ariſes, an Oak catches him, his Mule forſakes him, and Joab diſpatches him. Senacherib had proſpered in his Conqueſt of Judea, taken many ſtrong Towns, laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, ſolicites the People to revolt, blaſphemes the God of Heaven, and then an Angel comes and makes a dreadful ſlaughter in a night, and he returning to his own Countrey is killed by his own Sons *. Gods Arrows ſhall never miſs their mark, and he hath more than one to ſtrike into the hearts of his enemies, Pſal. 18. 14. He ſent out his arrows and ſcattered them. What reaſon then to fear even multitudes, who can never be too ſtrong for that God who gave them that little ſtrength they have!

* 2 Kings. 19. 7, 35, 36, 37.

Secondly, The ſecond Duty to which we are exhorted. If all Gods Providences tend to the good of his Church and People,

2. Then cenſure not God in his dark Providences. As we are often too haſty in our deſires for mercy, and are not content to ſtay Gods time; ſo we are too haſty in making conſtructions of Providence, and will not ſtay Gods leiſure of informing us. When God ſeems at the beginning of every Providence to ſpeak the ſame language as Chriſt did to Peter in waſhing his feet, John 13. 7. What I do, thou knoweſt not now, but thou ſhalt know hereafter: The Inſtruments are viſible, the action ſenſible, but the inward meaning ſtill lies obſcured from our view. We are too ſhort-ſighted to apprehend and judge of Gods Works: Man cannot underſtand his own way *; much leſs the ways of an infinite God. Gods Judgments are a great deep †, we may ſooner fathom the deepeſt part in the Sea, underſtand all the turnings of thoſe ſubterranean paſſages, lave out the Ocean with a ſpoon, or ſuck in, into our Bellies, that great maſs of Waters, than underſtand the ways of God with our ſhallow brains. He makes darkneſs his Pavilion: He is ſometimes very obſcure in his ways. Neither the greatneſs of his Means, nor the wiſdom of his workings, can be fully apprehended by men. We have ſence to feel the effects, but not heads to underſtand the reaſons and methods of the Divine Government. Eccleſ. 3. 11. No man can find out the work that God makes from the begining to the end. Though a man may ſee the beginning of Gods works, yet is he able to walk underſtandingly along with Divine Wiſdom in ever ſtep it takes? will he not loſe the Tract often before it comes to an end? 'Tis not the face, but the back-parts of Providence which we behold; why then ſhould we uſurp an authority beyond our ability, and make our ſelves Gods Judges; as if infinite Wiſdom and Power were bounded within the narrow compaſs of our purblind Reaſons? His ways are beyond our tracing, and his Councils too high for our ſhort meaſures. Since therefore God ſatisfies the Righteouſneſs of his own Will, let us ſubmit our curioſity to his Wiſdom, and forbear our Cenſures of that exact Righteouſneſs and ſuperlative wiſdom which we cannot comprehend.

* Prov. 20. 24.

† Pſal. 36. 6.

1. Therefore, Firſt fix this in your minds, that God is Righteous, Wiſe and Good in every thing. Good, therefore nothing can be hurtful to his People: Righteous, therefore nothing Unjuſt. Wiſe, therefore nothing in vain; our injurious thoughts of him make us ſo uncharitable towards him, and greater Cenſurers of his Righteous ways, than we are of mens wicked actions. Clouds and Darkneſs are about him: our eye cannot pierce through his darkneſs, or ſee the frame of his counſels, yet let theſe Principles be kept as the Center, that Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the habitation of his Throne *. He is Righteous in his darkneſs, wiſe in his cloudineſs; though his Judgments are unſearchable to us, and his ways paſt finding out by our moſt induſtrious inquiſitions; and a depth of knowledge and wiſdom there is in them, too deep for us to meaſure †. God was always Righteous, Wiſe, and Good, he is the ſame ſtill: Though the motions of the Planets be contrary, yet the Sphere where they are fixed, the natures wherewith they were created, are the ſame ſtill. Though the Providences of God have various motions, yet the Spring of his Counſel, the Rule of his Goodneſs, the Eye of his Wiſdom, the Arm of his Power are not altered: He acts by the ſame Rule, diſpoſeth by the ſame Wiſdom, orders ac-

* Pſal. 9. 2.

† Rom. 9. 33.

according to the ſame Righteouſneſs; he is unchangeable in the midſt of the changeable effects of Providence. The Sun is the ſame body, which admits of no inward alteration, keeps exactly its own motion, though its appearances are ſometimes ruddy, ſometimes clear, its heat ſometimes more faint, at another time more ſcorching; its diſtance ſometimes nearer, ſometimes farther off. He muſt be very ignorant that thinks the objects upon which we look through a Priſme or Trigonal Glaſs, change their colours as often as they are repreſented ſo, in the various turnings of the Glaſs. You ſee the undulations and wavings of a Chain which hangs prependicularly, one part moves this way, and another that way, but the hand that holds it, or the beam to which it is faſtned, is firm and ſteddy.

2. Diſtinguiſh between preparations to the main work, and the perfection of the work; between the motions of Gods eyes, and the diſcovery of his ſtrength, his eyes move before his Power. The neglect of this was the cauſe of the Iſraelites uncharitable Cenſures of the kindneſs of God: they interpret Gods reducing them into the Straits near the Red Sea, a deſign for their deſtruction, which was but the preparation for their compleat deliverance, in a way moſt glorious to God, and moſt comfortable and advantagious to themſelves.

Morn. de veris Rel. Chriſtian. cap. 12. p. 210. 211.

He that knows not the uſe of the Grape, would fooliſhly cenſure a man who ſhould fling them into a Winepreſs, and ſqueeze them into into maſh, which is but a preparation of them to afford that generous liquor which was the end of their growth. God treads his Grapes in a Winepreſs to draw from thence a delicate Wine, and preſerve the Juyce for his own uſe, which would elſe wither upon the ſtalk, and dry up to nothing. We judge not the Husbandman angry with his ground for tearing it with his Plow; nor cenſure an Artificer for hewing his Stones, or beating his Iron, but expect patiently the iſſue of the deſign. Why ſhould we not pay the ſame reſpect to God which we do to men in their Arts; ſince we are leſs capable of being Judges of his incomprehenſible Wiſdom, than of the skill of our fellow creatures? God in his croſs Providences prepares the Church for fruitfulneſs whilſt he Plows it. He may ſeem to be digging up the Bowels of the Church, while he is only preparing to lay the foundation in Sion for the raiſing a noble ſtructure; and in what ſhape ſoever he appears in his preparations, he will in his perfection of it appear in glory, Pſal. 102. 16. When the Lord ſhall build up Sion, he ſhall appear in glory, and evidence that he was reſtoring, whilſt we thought him deſtroying; and healing, whilſt we thought him wounding. As God hath ſetled a gradual Progreſs in his works of Creation, ſo by degrees he brings his everlaſting Counſels to perfection. The ſeaſons of the year are not jumbled together, but orderly ſucceed one another; and the coldneſs of the Winter is but a preparation for a ſeaſonable Spring, and a Summer Harveſt. We do not unrighteouſly accuſe God of diſorder in his common works, why ſhould we do it in his ſpecial works of Providence? Do we diſparage the Muſicians skill for the jarring and unintelligible touches in the tuning the Inſtrument, but rather wait for the Leſſon he intends to play? If we ſtay for Gods fuller Touches of this great Inſtrument of the World in the way of his Providence, it will, like Davids Harp, chaſe away that evil Spirit from us which is now too apt to cenſure him.

3. Fix not your eye only upon the ſenſible operations of Providence, but the ultimate end. As in a Watch the various Wheels have different motions, yet all ſubſervient to one end, to tell the true hour of the day, and the motion of the Sun; ſo are all the Providences of God. Should any have been preſerved in the Deluge upon ſome high Mountain, who had not known the deſign of the Ark, and had ſeen it floating upon ſuch a Maſs of Waters, he would have judged the People in it in a deplorable condition, and have concluded that it would have broke againſt the Mountain, or been overturned by the Wayes; yet that was Noah's preſervative. Had any of us been with Chriſt, and acknowledged him the Saviour of the World, and yet ſeen him Crucified in ſuch a manner by men, and judged only by that, what wiſe and what juſt conſtructions ſhould we have made of that Providence? much the ſame as ſome of his Diſciples did, Luke 24. 21. We truſted that it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael. But the whole deſign is ſpoiled, we were fools, and he an Impoſtor. Yet this which ſeemed to be the ruine of Redemption, was the neceſſary high-way to it by Gods conſtitution. No other way was it to be procured, ver. 26. Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to have entred into his Glory? His entrance into glory to perfect our Salvation, was the end of the ſenſible ſuffering wherein he laid the foundation; as they charge Chriſt with Impoſture, not conſidering the end, ſo do we God with unrighteouſneſs, when we conſider not his aim. The end both beautifies and crowns the work; The remarks of Gods Glory in the Creation are better drawn from the ends of the Creatures, and their joynt ſubſerviency to them, than from any one ſingle piece of the Creation. We muſt not only conſider the preſent end, but the remote end, becauſe God in his Providence towards his Church hath his end for after times. God acts for ends at a great diſtance from us, which may not be compleated till we are dead and rotten. How can we judge of that which reſpects a thing ſo remote from us, unleſs we view it in that Relation? Gods aims in former Providences were things to come, his aims in preſent Providences are things to come. As the matter of the Churches Prayers, ſo the objects of Gods Providences are things to come, Iſa. 45. 11. Ask me of things to come, concerning my ſons. The matter of their Prayers then were, that God would order all things for the coming of the Meſſiah. The matter of the Churches Prayer now is, that God would order all things for the prefecting the Meſſiah in his myſtical Body. The whole frame of Providence is for one intire deſign. 'Tis one intire Book with ſeven Seals †. The beginning of a Book as well as the middle hath relation to the end. The deſign of Gods Book of Providence is but one in all the ſeven Seals and periods of time.

Rev. 5. 1.

4. Conſider not only one ſingle act of Providence, but the whole Scheme, to make a concluſion. The motions of his eyes are various, but all ends in diſcoveries of his ſtrength. Men do not argue from one ſingle propoſition, but draw the concluſion from ſeveral propoſitions knit together. 'Tis by ſuch a Spiritual Logick we are to make our concluſions from the way of Providence; as in the reading Scripture, if we take not the whole Period, we may make not only non-ſenſe, but Blaſphemy, as in that of the Pſalmiſt, Thou art not a God that hath pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. If a man ſhould read only, thou art not a God, and make a full ſtop there, it would be Blaſphemy; but reading the whole verſe, it it excellent ſence, and an honouable declaration of Gods holineſs. Such Errors will be committed in reading the Books of Providence, if we fix our eyes only in one place, and make a full ſtop where God hath not made any. We judge not of a Picture by the firſt draught, but the laſt lines; not by one ſhadow or colour, but by the whole compoſure. The Wiſdom of God is beſt judg'd of by the view of the harmony harmony of Providence. The ſingle threads of Providence may ſeem very weak, or knotty and uneven, and ſeem to adminiſter juſt occaſion of cenſure; but will it not as much raiſe the admiration to ſee them all woven into a curious piece of branched work? Conſider therefore Gods ways of working, but fully judge nothing, till the concluſion, for that is to judge before the time. Judge not then of Providence at the firſt appearance, God may ſo loſe the glory of his work, and you the comfort.

Thirdly. The third Duty. Inquire into Providence, and interpret all publick Providences by this Rule. We muſt ſearch into it, though we are not able to find out all the reaſons of it. What can be a braver ſtudy than that which is the object of Gods eternal counſel? We are conformed to God in our Wills when we have the ſame ends in our motions; and we are conformed to God in our underſtandings when we have the ſame object of our thoughts; ſome Providences have their interpretation written in their foreheads, we may run and read; ſuch as his ſignal Judgments in the World, which expreſs the very ſin for which they are inflicted; others are wrapt up in a harder ſhell, and more covers, and therefore more labour to reach the kirnel; ſome are too high for our knowledge, nc r our enquiry. 'Tis our duty to ſeek after Gc , though we can never arrive to a perfect knowledg of him. Job. 11. 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? He prohibits not the ſearching, though he aſſerts the impoſſibility of finding him out to perfection. What hath God given us faculties for, but to ſearch after him? and we muſt not do it to ſatisfie our curioſity, but to encreaſe our knowledge, and conſequently our admiration of his wiſe and powerful care. Diligence muſt be uſed too. Our firſt thoughts about things of concernment, are uſually confuſed; ſo are our firſt ſights of Providence. Providence is a great deep, deep things are not ſeen without ſtooping down. We muſt παρακύπτειν, as the Angels do when they ſearch into the things of the Goſpel *, But let this aim of God at the good of his Church be the rule of your interpretation. Without this Compaſs to ſteer our judgments by, we may both loſe and rack our ſelves in the Wilderneſs of Providence, and fortify our natural Atheiſm and Ignorance inſtead of our Faith. I muſt confeſs the ſtudy of Providence is in ſome reſpect more difficult than in the former Ages of the World, becauſe God ſeems to manage things in the Church more by his Wiſdom than Power, which is not ſo intelligible by men as the ſenſible effects of his ſtrength. That Attribute he manifeſted moſt in Miraculous ways, and the viſible Miniſtry of Angels, as we read in Scripture ſtories; now he employs his Wiſdom more in ordering ſecond cauſes in ordinary ways to his own high, merciful, and juſt ends. Yet ſince the diſcovering of Chriſt, God hath given us a rule whereby we may diſcern much of his Wiſdom in the knowledge of his end, as the knowledge of Chriſt removes the Veil from the Scripture in our reading of it *. The ſame Veil remains in the reading of the Old Teſtament, which Veil is done away in Chriſt, (which Veil is ſtill upon the Jews) and makes us underſtand thoſe parts of the Old Teſtament, which otherwiſe would be utterly obſcure; ſo in the reading the Books of Providence, the knowledge of this end of God in them, will help us to underſtand the meaning of that which otherwiſe would non-plus the Reaſon of man. He that knows the end of one that is making a watch, will not wonder at his framing ſmall wheels, and filing little pins; but he that underſtands nothing of the deſign, would count it ridiculous for a man ſo to trifle away his time. Without the knowledge of this end, we ſhall expoſe our ſelves to miſerable miſtakes. As Plutarch miſtook the cauſe of the ceaſing of Oracles, aſcribing it to the change of the nature of the Soil, not affording thoſe exhalations as formerly; or the death of the Demons which gave thoſe Oracles. He had judg'd otherwiſe, had he known or believed the riſing of a Higher Power, the Sun of Righteouſneſs in the World, who impoſed ſilence upon thoſe Angels of darkneſs; the moſt famous Oracle in the World ceaſing about the time of Chriſt. To imagine to interpret the motions of Providence without a knowledge of Chriſt and the deſign of God for his Church, is as vain as to imagine we can paint a ſound, or underſtand a colour by our ſmell; Correct Senſe by Reaſon in this work, and Reaſon by Faith. To what end hath God preſcribed Faith to ſuccour us in the weakneſs of Reaſon, if it had been capable to underſtand his ways without it, and if we make no uſe of it upon ſuch occaſions?

Fourthly, A fourth Duty. Conſider the former Providences God hath wrought for the Church in the paſt ages. Let him not loſe the preſent glory of his paſt works, Pſal. 102. 18. This ſhall be written for the generation to come, and the people which ſhall be created ſhall praiſe the Lord. Even for that work of his which is written to be done in former Ages. God loves to have his former works read and pleaded. 'Tis a keeping a ſtanding praiſe of him in the World. We have had the benefit of them, it is fit God ſhould have the glory of them from us, as well as from thoſe who immediately injoyed them. Our good was bound up in every former preſervation of the Church. If the Candleſtick had been broken, where had the Candle been? Had the Church been deſtroyed, how could the Goſpel have been tranſmitted to us? let the Duty we owe to Gods Glory engage us to a conſideration of them; and the benefit we have had by them alſo incite us; we uſually forget not things that are ſtrange, nor things that are profitable; His works of old have been works of Wonder in themſelves, and profitable to us. To what end are the Praiſes of God diſcovered to the Generations to come, but that they ſhould reflect thoſe Praiſes to Heaven again, and convey them down to the Generations following? Pſal. 78. 4. Shewing to the generation to come the Praiſes of the Lord.

1. This will help us in our inquiries in preſent Providences.

There is a beautiful connexion between former and latter Providences; they are but ſeveral links of one Chain. The Principle and End is the ſame; That God from whence they come, that Chriſt to which they tend, is the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever. What God doth now, is but a Copy of what he pourtray'd in his Word as done in former Ages; There are the ſame goodneſs, the ſame deſign in both. The Births of Providence are all of a like temper and diſpoſition. We cannot miſs of the underſtanding of 'em, if we compare 'em with the ancient Copies: For God is in the Generation of the Righteous, the ſame God ſtill. God is the ſame, his ends are the ſame, the events will be the ſame.

2. It will ſupport our Faith. The reaſon of our diffidence of God in the cauſe of the Church, is the forgetfulneſs of his former appearances for her. O! if we did remember his former goodneſs, we ſhould not be ſo ready to doubt of his future care. This was the Pſalmiſts care in diſpondencies, and in his overwhelming troubles of ſpirit, Pſal. 77. 9. Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger ſhut up his tender mercies; but verſ. 10. He concludes it his infirmity, and reſolves upon a review of the Records of Gods ancient works for his People, and the years of the right hand of the moſt High? theſe times wherein he

* 1 Pet. 1. 12.

* 2 Cor. 3. 14, 15, 16.

he declared his Power and his glory, and ſo proceeds to the top of all their deliverances, viz. that out of Egypt. Doth Gods Wiſdom decay? or his Power grow feeble? Is not his Intereſt the ſame? Is he not a God ſtill like himſelf? Is not his glory as dear to him as before? Hath he caſt off his affection to his own name? Why ſhould not he then do the ſame works, ſince he hath the ſame concern? God himſelf, to encourage us, calls them to our remembrance, Iſa. 50. 2. Is my hand ſhortned that I cannot redeem, or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I do dry up the ſea, I make the Rivers a Wilderneſs, &c. Am not I the ſame God that dried up the Sea, that wrought thoſe ancient wonders which amaz'd the World? What doth your diſtruſt ſignifie but the impair of my power? Rouſe up your ſelves to a conſideration of them! And thence gather freſh ſupplies to ſtrengthen you in your preſent dependence upon me! He puts us in mind of them, becauſe we are apt to forget them. Gen. 15. 6. When it is ſaid Abraham believed in the Lord, and it was accounted to him for Righteouſneſs; God anſwered him, v. 7. I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Caldees, keep up thy Faith and to that end, remember what I did for thee before in calling thee! caſt thy eye upon that place whence I delivered thee! either from the Idolatries of the place, or the perſecution he was in for the true Worſhip of God. And as God puts him in mind of his Mercy he had ſhewn to him before for the encouragement of his Faith; ſo the people of God have made uſe of them to this end. Goliah's Sword was counted by David the fitteſt for his defence in his flight, becauſe it had been a Monument of Gods former deliverance of him, 1 Sam. 21. 9. When he asks for a Sword or Spear, Abimelech ſaid, the Sword of Goliah whom thou ſleweſt, is here; and David ſaid, there is none like that, give it me. How haſty he catches at it! There is none like that Sword that hath ſo ſignal a mercy writ upon it. That very Sword will not only defend me againſt my Enemies, but guard my Faith againſt thoſe Temptations that would invade it. This encouragement of Faith and Hope is the end of God in his tranſmiſſion of the Records of his former Providences to us, Pſal. 78. 6, 7. That the generation to come might know them, and declare them to their children; From one Poſterity to another, that they might ſet their hope in God.

3. It will Enliven our Prayer.

'Tis a mighty Plea in Prayer. How often doth David urge it? Thou haſt been my help, thou haſt delivered my Soul from Death, wilt thou not deliver my feet from falling? but in the Churches concerns too, 1 Chron. 16. 11, 12. Seek the Lord and his ſtrength, ſeek his face continually: remember the marvellous works that he hath done. A reflection upon what God hath done, ſhould be enjoyned with our deſires of what we would have God to do for us. When Moſes was praying upon the top, while Iſrael was fighting with Amalek at the foot of the hill; he had the Rod of God in his hand, Exod. 17. 9. That miraculous Rod which had amazed Pharaoh, whoſe motion ſummoned all the Plagues upon them. That Rod which had ſplit the Sea for their paſſage, broached the Rock for their thirſt, and had been inſtrumental in many Miracles: certainly Moſes ſhewed this Rod to God, and pleaded all thoſe wonderful deliverances God had wrought inſtrumentially by it. No doubt but he carried it with him to ſhew to God for a Plea, as well as to the Iſraelites to ſpirit their Reſolutions againſt their Enemies.

4. It will Prevent much Sin.

A forgetfulneſs of his former works is one cauſe of our preſent Provocations. It was ſo in the caſe of the Iſraelites ſin, Pſal. 106. 7. They remembred not the multitude of thy mercies, but provoked Him at the Sea, even at the Red Sea: they had loſt the memory of ſo many Miracles in Egypt, and which aggravated their Sin, they provoked him at the Sea, at the Red Sea; they provoked him under a preſent indigency, as well as againſt former mercy: they provoked him in that place of ſtreights where all the powers on Earth could not have relieved them, had Heaven neglected them. The Provocation you may ſee, Exod. 14. 11, 12. which ſprang from a forgetfulneſs of his kindneſs ſo lately ſhewed to them. How apt are we to forget old Mercies, when we are ſo naturally apt to blot out of our memories mercies newly received? If this were well conſidered by men, it would prevent their enterprizes againſt the Church, and conſequently their ſhame and ruine. Are their Records of any who have hardened themſelves againſt God and proſpered *. How might in that reflection be ſeen the fruſtrations of Counſels, diſgracing of attempts, ſhowers of Fury and Vengeance from Heaven upon the heads of ſuch? The reaſon why the wonderful works of God were to be made known to poſterity, was, that they might not be as their Fathers, a Stubborn and Rebellious Generation * of men. If they did conſider thoſe tranſactions of God in and for his Church, they could no more think to ſtop the breath of perpetual powerful Providence, than to bridle in a Storm, or ſtop the motion of the Sun. To conclude this: Gods Providential Judgments are to be remembred: though they are for the puniſhment of the age that feel them, they are alſo for the inſtruction of the age which ſucceeds them; tell מרר number, be as exact as in your Accounts, wherein you take notice of every number, minute, and cipher. The works of Providence, as well as the Doctrine of God, are parts of a Childs Catechiſm, they are to keep up the conſideration of them in themſelves, and hand them in inſtruction to their Children.

* Job. 9. 4.

* Pſal. 78. 6, 8.

Fifthly, The fifth Duty. Act faith on God's Providence.

Times of trouble ſhould be times of confidence; fixedneſs of heart on God would prevent fears of heart. Pſal. 112. 7. He ſhall not be afraid of evil tydings, his heart is fixed; how? truſting in the Lord: his heart is eſtabliſhed, they ſhall not be moved. Otherwiſe without it we ſhall be as light as a Cock moved with every blaſt of evil tydings, our hopes will ſwim or ſink according to the news we hear. Providence would ſeem to ſleep, unleſs Faith and Prayer awakened it. The Diſciples had but little Faith in their Maſters account, yet that little Faith awakened him in a Storm, and he relieved them. Unbelief doth only diſcourage God from ſhewing his power in taking our parts. Every one will walk in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever, Micah. 4. 5. Heathens will truſt in their Idols, and ſhall not we in that God that lives for ever? Have we any reaſon to have a leſs eſteem of our confidence in God, than Heathens had of and in their Idols? we ſhould do our duty, which is Faith and Hope, and leave God to do his work, which is mercy and kindneſs. By unbelief we deny his Providence, diſparage his Wiſdom, and ſtrip him of his Power; we have none elſe to truſt, no creature can order any thing for the Churches good without God's commiſſion and direction; what ſhould we truſt him for? for that wherein his glory is concerned, which is more worth to him than all the World beſides. Truſt him moſt when inſtruments fail. God takes them off ſometimes, to ſhew that he needs not any, and to have our confidence rightly place on him, which ſtaggered before between him and the Creature.

1. All the godly formerly did act Faith on a leſs foundation. The godly Patriarchs who lived eight or nine hundred years, depended upon Providence that long time, and ſhall not we for ſeventy years, the uſual term of mans life! They had Promiſe to ſupport them, we have not only the ſame Promiſe, but the Performances of them too. They had Providences, we have the ſame and more, all upon Record in Scripture, all ſince the Canon of Scripture was cloſed; whatſoever God hath remarkably done for his people in all ages. Adam had but one Promiſe, and but little experience of Gods Providence, yet no doubt truſted in him. We have a multitude of Promiſes, not only pronounced, but ſealed, confirmed by many repetitions, which are freſh obligations laid by God upon himſelf. The experience of all the Providences of God towards his Church for above five thouſand years; and ſhall our Faith ſtagger when upon us are come the ends of the World? doth it become us to have our Obligations to Faith ſo ſtrong, and our Exerciſe of it ſo weak? Iſa. 7. 14.* The promiſe of Chriſt * that a Virgin ſhould bring forth a Son, was thought by God a ſufficient ſecurity to ſupport their confidence in him againſt the fury of their enemies; It being a greater wonder that a Virgin without loſs of her Virginity ſhould bring forth a Son, than the routing of an Hoſt of Enemies. Is not then the performance oft his God's actual ſending his Son to us through the Womb of a Virgin, higher ground of confidence for the Churches ſucceſs in every thing elſe, than barely the Promiſe could be? All creatures in danger have a natural confidence in God, He is the confidence of all the ends of the earth; but the Churches confidence may be more firmly placed in him, becauſe he is particularly the God of their Salvation, Pſal. 65. 5. By terrible things, in Righteouſneſs, wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our ſalvation, who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth.

2. 'Tis your only way to have mercy for the Church, and for our ſelves.

If he take pleaſure in them that hope in his mercy, as it is in Pſal. 147. 11. He will take pleaſure to relieve them, He will ſtrengthen the bars of their gates, verſe 13, If he take pleaſure in them that hope in his mercy, then the ſtronger and more lively their hope is, the more intenſe is Gods pleaſure in them. If they do not hope in his Mercy, he hath no pleaſure in them, and no delight to them. He hath goodneſs laid up for them that fear him, and he will lay it out too for them that truſt in him, Pſal. 31. 15. O how great is thy goodneſs which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee before the ſons of men? 'Tis laid up for all that fear him, but it is wrought for them that truſt in him. It is manifeſted upon ſpecial acts of truſt and relyance, and wrought before the ſons of men. Thoſe that own God publickly in a way of relyance, God will own them publickly in a way of kindneſs. Faith is the key that unlocks the Cabinet of ſpecial Providence. Thoſe eyes which move about all the World, are fixed upon thoſe that truſt in him, Pſal. 33. 18. The eye of the Lord is upon them that hope in his mercy.

The ſixth Duty. Wait upon God in the way of his Providence. Wait upon him as he is a faithful Crea-  1 Pet. 4. 19.* tor *, much more ſince the title of being our Redeemer is added to that of our Creator, which ſtrengthens his Relation to us. Not to wait, diſparageth his care, bounds his power, or reflects upon his Wiſdom, as if he had ſtript himſelf of his immenſe goodneſs, and forgot both his Promiſe and his People; as if he had cancelled the Covenant, and given up his whole intereſt to the Luſts of men. Wait in the ſaddeſt appearances; the hour of Chriſts Death was diſmal in the World, and darkneſs upon the Earth; A Miraculous Eclipſe of the Sun taken notice of by the very Heathens; yet were we never nearer to happineſs than in that dreadful time when our Saviour was moſt dyed in his own Blood. The Sanguine Complexion of the Evening sky, is a preſage of a fair ſucceeding Morning; ſo many times is the red Veſture of the Church.

1. Wait upon him obedientially.

Commit your ſouls to God, but in well doing *. * 1 Pet. 4. 19.* Uſe no indirect means; a contempt of the precept cannot conſiſt with Faith in either Promiſe or Providence. The obeying part is ours, the governing part is Gods, Prov. 23. 17. Let not thine heart envy Sinners; but be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long; for ſurely there is an end, and thine expectation ſhall not be cut off. God will govern all the day, but we muſt fear him all the day. When fear on our part attends Government on Gods part, there will be an end of our carnal fears, and a good iſſue of our hopes. The greateſt deliverances of his Church have been when his People has ſtood ſtill. Exod. 14. 13. As that deliverance was a type of all future, and a ground of Faith; ſo the carriage God injoyned was a rule to his People in all future ſtraits. 'Tis againſt the Laws of God's Government for thoſe liſted in his Service to ſtir without order. The Law is our ſtanding-Rule of Duty. Providence cannot be a ſtanding viſible Rule, becauſe of the variety and ſeeming croſſneſs of it ſometimes to our apprehenſions. Do not preſume to lead God, but be led by him: 'Tis our ſafety to follow him, 'tis our ſin and danger to preſume to be his Director. We may loſe our ſelves when we are our own blind guides, and fall into a ditch; but when we follow God, he hath Wiſdom to foreſee the Precipices we may ſtumble into, and goodneſs to divert us from them. By interpoſing carnal devices, men may prehaps have their ends, but with little comfort, perhaps much bitterneſs to themſelves. Jacob by his haſty uſing his own and his Mothers ſinful project for the Bleſſing, got it indeed, but a croſs too, for he was a man of Sorrow all his days. By waiting in God's way, we ſhall have our ends with more ſweetneſs, becauſe purely a fruit of God's care and goodneſs.

2. Wait Patiently. How often are our Spirits troubled about future events, and are afraid of the evil which threatens us, as if we were in pain for God, and in doubt of his wiſe Conduct? Think not God's time too long. He waits as much for a fit opportunity to ſhew his Mercy, as you can wait for the enjoyment of it, Iſa. 13. 18. Therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you; bleſſed are all they that wait for him. 'Tis a part of our bleſſedneſs to wait for God, ſince it is a part of God's kindneſs to wait for a fit ſeaſon to be gracious to us. 'Tis not for us to preſcribe Rules to God, but follow the Rules he preſcribes to us. He hath freely made his Promiſe, let him be Maſter of his own time to make it good. He will ſhew as much Wiſdom in accompliſhing, as he did Mercy in declaring it. God can do things in a moment, but is it his Wiſdom to take time, that his People may have time to exerciſe their truſt, their hope, and their patience. He will take time in the ways of his Providence, as well as he did in the works of Creation.

tion. He allotted six days to that which he could have framed in a minute. He is Judge of what is needful for us, and when it is needful for us. If God should give us that, which is a mercy in its own nature, many times when we desire it, it might not be a mercy. If we will trust the skill of his Wisdom for the best season, it cannot but be a mercy, for he will give it us with his own glory, and grace wrapt up in it, which will make it sweeter to himself when his Wisdom is honoured, and sweeter to us when our good is promoted. God's methods appear in the end both wiser and better than our frames. Infinite goodness aims more at our welfare, than our shallow self-love; and infinite Wisdom can conduct things to our welfare better than our short-sighted skill. He that knows all the moments of time, knows best how to time his actions. As God staid for a fulness of time to bring the great Redemption by Christ into the World, so he stays for a fulness of time to bring all the great consequences and appendices of it unto his Church. Every thing is beautiful in his time. In its own time; In God's time, not in ours*, &c.

* Eccles. 3. 11.

3. Wait constantly. Though the Wheels of Providence seem sometimes to stand still *, and God seems to put a period to the care of his Church, yet let not us neglect our Duty. Wait a while, and the Wheels will be put upon their former rolling. Some particular passages of Providence may trouble us for a while, but in the issue God may answer our desires above our expectation, and thereby confute our fears. His Providences are sometimes like Rivers that run under ground, out of sight, but will rise again with a delightful Stream, with some new Medicinal quality, contracted from the Earth by the way. Joseph, a Prisoner, waits upon God for his Liberty, and God gives him freedom with preferment. God can bring about his Peoples safety by unexpected ways. Who would have imagined before, that his own Dream should make him a Captive, and Pharaoh's Dream make him a Favourite? The chief Butler remembers him not till he was in an exigencie, and the divining skill of the Wise men of Egypt confounded. Joseph lost nothing by waiting upon God, who made so many circumstances concur to promote his Honour. Wait therefore upon him in the sorest afflictions. The Church is only afflicted in Mercy, but the Enemies of it are pulled up by the roots, Jer 30. 11. I am with thee to save thee; though I make a full end of the Nations whether I have scattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee, but I will correct thee in measure. God deals with his People as a Father, who corrects to reform, not to destroy; but with his enemies he deals as a Judge. God's Providence, like Moses his Rod, may seem sometimes a devouring Serpent, but it is to convince the Egyptians, and deliver the Israelites.

* Ezek. 1. 21.

4. Wait in the use of lawful means for preservation; Not to use means, is to slight his Providence; not to trust it. It seems not to consist with the Wisdom of God to order things always so, as to be necessitated to put forth an extraordinery power in things which his creatures by a common Providence can naturally accomplish. God saves by natural means; when they will not serve the turn, he will save by supernatural. God chose an Ark to preserve Noah in. He did not want supernatural means for his preservation. He might have catched him up in a Cloud, and continued him their till the drying of the waters. Noah doth not dispute the business with God, but prepares an Ark according to his order, and he was Righteous in his obedience as well as in his trust. God would not preserve our Saviour by a Miracle, when ordinary means would serve the turn. He commands Joseph by his Angel to flee into Egypt with the Child *: Joseph desires not God to preserve him by an extraordinary power to serve his Pains of Travelling; he submits to God's order, and God quickly clears the way for his return. Indeed sometimes the Wheels of Providence are lifted up from the Earth, and do not go in the ordinary tracts *; but Miracles must be left to God's Pleasure, for us to desire them is to tempt our great Governor.

* Mat. 2. 13.

* Ezek. 1. 19.

The Seventh Duty. Pray for the Church.

'Tis an encouragement that our Suit in this case will not be denied. The desire of welfare is conformable to his Counsel, which shall stand notwithstanding the Devices of men. His Counsel in particular concerns of men shall stand, much more is the stability of his Counsel for the Church. He is a God hearing Prayer in a way of common Providence, and a God hearing Prayer in a way of special attention, Psal. 61. 1. Hear my cry, O God, attend unto my Prayer. David desires that God would hear him, as more particularly concerned in his case. He is so in the concerns of his Church; will he hear an Ishmael crying for himself, and young Lyons roaring for their Prey, and stop his Ears to the voice of his own Spirit in his People, pleading for the Church, dearer to him than the whole mass of Nature? We have greater Arguments to use than in any other case. The Relation the Church hath to God; The affection God hath to the Church. Lazarus whom thou lovest is sick, was Martha's argument to Christ. What greater encouragement to our petitions, than God's affection, than God's Relation? God loves to have our affection comply with his; God loves others the better for soliciting its welfare. Moses had the greatest manifestation of God's Love after he had prayed for the Israelites *, though in a case of sin, and presently after in Exod. 33. 11. God speaks with him face to face as a man speaks to his friend; and in the same chapter, and the beginning of Exod. 34. God shews him his glory as much as he was capable to bear. Daniel was a great Petitioner for the Church *. He was God's great favourite upon that account, and had the clearest and highest Revelations made to him of the course of Providence in the World.

Prov. 19. 21.

* Exod. 32. 32.

* Dan. 9. 3, 21. Dan. 10. 2, 5.

The eighth Duty. When you receive any mercy for the Church in answer of Prayer, give God the glory of it.

The varity of his Providences gives us matter for new songs and compositions. What Volleys of joyful shouts? what Hallelujahs to God do we find upon the Ruine of Antichrist, Rev. 19. 1, 2, 3. God calls for Praise out of the Throne, vers. 5. And the Church returns it, verse 6, 7. 'Tis God rides upon the Cherub, 'Tis God that sits upon the wings of the Wind, 'tis God who is in all Instruments to quicken their motions, and direct them to their scope.

Psal. 149. 1.

Psal. 18. 10.

The ninth Duty. Imitate God in his affections to the Church.

Christ did what he did for the good of his Church: God doth what he doth for the advantage of the Church. Let the same mind be in us that was in Christ; let the same end be ours which is the end of God. Thus we shall be like our Creator, thus we shall be like our Governor, thus we shall be like our Redeemer, Men take it kindly from others that love thoſe they have a reſpect for. God loves all that love his People, and bleſſes them that bleſs them, Gen. 12. 3. I will bleſs them that bleſs thee, and curſe them that curſe thee.

The tenth Duty. Look after ſincerity before God.

'Tis for the ſecurity of ſuch that God ſhews himſelf ſtrong. No man that fully believes and underſtands this Doctrine, but ſhould be glad to be of that happy Society, that Aſſembly of the firſt born, who are under the care of a watchful eye, and the mighty power of the God of the whole Earth. When God choſe Iſrael, the very ſtrangers ſhould for their own Intereſt joyn with them *. And to ſuch as take hold of his covenant he promiſes to give a name in his houſe, that ſhall not be cut off *. Yea even to the ſons of the ſtrangers that ſhould joyn themſelves to the Lord. v. 6. Let this encourage us to Chriſtanity. God never encouraged men to be Chriſtians by Promiſes of Worldly greatneſs, but by Promiſes of a conſtant care of them for their happineſs, by Promiſes of making all things work together for their good. If God will ſhew himſelf ſtrong for thoſe that are perfect in heart towards him, then he hath no ſtrength for thoſe that are unſound and falſe in heart towards him. No man hath an intereſt in his ſpecial Providence without Faith. The Power, Knowledg, Wiſdom of God, are all ſet againſt him. Though the whole World be in commotions, the Earth be removed, and the Mountains caſt into the depths of the Sea, there is no ground of fear to Faith; but what Buckler againſt them hath Unbelief and Hypocriſie? What ſecurity againg Wrath can Riches give you? What defence againſt his power can your Potſherd ſtrength afford you? It was not for Jobs wealth that God made his boaſts of him, but for his ſincerity, Job 1. 8. Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the Earth. A perfect and an upright man? And for the want of this he loaths a World. Labour therefore for ſincerity towards God, beg it of God. Get the evidence of it, and preſerve it.

A SUPPLEMENT To the ſeveral DISCOURSES Upon Various Divine Subjects.

By the Late Learned Divine STEPHEN CHARNOCK, B. D.

A DISCOURSE OF THE Sinfulneſs and Cure of Thoughts.

Gen. 6. 5. And God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.

I Know not a more lively deſcription in the whole Book of God, of the Natural Corruption derived from our firſt Parents, than theſe words; wherein you have the Ground of that grief, which lay ſo cloſe to God's Heart, v. 6. and the Reſolve thereupon to deſtroy Man, and whatſoever was ſerviceable to that ungrateful Creature. That muſt be highly offenſive, which moved God to repent of a Fabrick ſo pleaſing to him at the Creation: Every Stone in the Building being at the firſt laying pronounced good by Him, and upon a review at the finiſhing the whole, He left it the ſame Character with an Emphaſis; † very good. There was not a Pin in the whole Frame but was * very beautiful, and being wrought by infinite ‖ wiſdom, it was a very comely piece of Art. What then ſhould provoke him to repent of ſo excellent a work? The wickedneſs of Man, which was great in the Earth. How came it to paſs, that Man's wickedneſs ſhould ſwell ſo high? Whence did it ſpring? From the Imagination. Tho' theſe might be ſinful Imaginations, might not the ſuperior faculty preſerve it ſelf untainted? Alas! That was defiled; The imagination of the Thoughts was Evil. But tho' running Thoughts might wheel about in his Mind, yet they might leave no ſtamp or impreſſion upon the Will and Affections. Yes, they did, The imagination of the Thoughts of his Heart was evil. Surely all could not be under ſuch a blemiſh: Were there not now and then ſome pure flaſhes of the Mind? No not one; Every Imagination. But granting that they were evil, might there not be ſome fleeting good mixed with them: As a poyſonous Toad hath ſomething uſeful? No, Only evil. Well, but there might be ſome intervals of Thinking, and tho' there was no good Thought, yet evil ones were not always rouling there. Yes, they were Continually; not a moment of Time that Man was free from them. One would ſcarce imagine ſuch an inward neſt of wickedneſs, but God hath affirmed it; and if any Man ſhould deny it, his own Heart would give him the lye.

Let us now conſider the words by themſelves.

יצר Imagination, properly ſignifies figmentum, of יצר to afflict, preſs or form a thing by way of compreſſion. And thus 'tis a metaphor taken from a Potters framing a Veſſel, and extends to whatſoever is fram'd inwardly in the Heart, or outwardly in the work. 'Tis uſually taken by the Jews for that fountain of ſin within us: † Mercer tells us, it is always uſed in an evil ſenſe: But there are two places (if no more) wherein it is taken in a good ſenſe, Iſa. 26. 3. * Whoſe mind is ſtayed; and 1 Chro. 29. 18. where David prays, that a diſpoſition to offer offer willingly to the Lord might be preserved in the Imagination of the Thoughts of the Heart of the People. Indeed, for the most part 'tis taken for the evil Imaginations of the Heart, as Deut. 31. 21. Psal. 103. 14. &c. The Jews make a double figment, a good and bad; and fancy two Angels assign'd to Man, one bad, another good: Which Maimonides interprets to be nothing else but natural Corruption, and Reason. This word Imagination being joyn'd with Thoughts, implies not only the compleat Thoughts, but the first motion or formation of them to be evil.

The word Heart is taken variously in Scripture. It signifies properly that inward Member, which is the seat of the vital Spirits: But sometimes it signifies, 1. The Understanding and Mind, Psal. 12. 2. With a double Heart do they speak; i. e. With a double Mind, Prov. 8. 5. 2. For the Will, 2 Kings 10. 30. All that is in my Heart; i. e. in my Will and Purpose. 3. For the Affections; as, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart; i. e. with all thy Affections. 4. For Conscience, 2 Sam. 24. 5. David's Heart smote him; i. e. his Conscience check'd him. But Heart here is used for the whole Soul, because (according to Pareus his note) the Soul is chiefly seated in the Heart, especially the Will, and the Affections her Attendants; because when any Affection stirs, the chief motion of it is felt in the Heart. So that by the Imaginations of the thoughts of the Heart are here meant all the inward operations of the Soul, which play their part principally in the Heart: whether they be the acts of the Understanding, the resolutions of the Will, or the blu-strings of the Affections.

Only evil.] The Vulgar mentions not the exclusive Particle רק, and so enervates the sense of the place. But our Neighbour Translations either express it as we do, Only; or to that sense that they were Certainly, or no other than Evil.

כל היום Continually.] The Hebrew, All the day or every day. Some Translations express it verbatim as the Hebrew. Not a moment of a Man's Life, wherein our hereditary Corruption doth not belch out its froth, even from his Youth, as God expounds it, Gen. 8. 21. to the end of his Life.

Whether we shall refer the general wickedness of the Heart in the Text to that Age, as some of the Jesuits do, because after the Deluge God doth not seem so severely to censure it: Or rather take the Exposition the learned Rivet gives of it, referring the first part of the Verse [and God saw that the wickedness of Man was great in the Earth] to those Times; and the second part to the universal Corruption of Man's Nature, and the root of all sin in the World. The Jesuits argument will not be very valid, for the extenuation of original Corruption, from Gen. 8. 21. For if Man's Imaginations be evil from his Youth, what is it but in another Phrase to say they were so continually? But suppose it be understood of the Iniquity of that Age, may it not be applied to all Ages of the World? David complains of the wickedness of his own time, Psal. 14. 3. Psal. 5. 9. Yet St. Paul applies it to all Mankind, Rom. 3. 12. Indeed it seems to be a description of Man's natural Pravity, by God's words after the Deluge, Gen. 8. 21. which are the same in sense, to shew that Man's Nature, after that destroying Judgment, was no better than before. Every word is emphatical, exaggerating Man's defilement; Wherein consider, the Universality

1. Of the Subject, Every Man.
2. Of the Act, Every Thought.
3. Of the Qualification of the Act, Only Evil.
4. Of the Time, Continually.

Gen. 8. 21. Rivet. in Gen. exercit. 51.

The words, thus opened, afford us this Proposition:

That the Thoughts and inward operations of the Souls of Men, are naturally universally evil, and highly provoking.

Some by Cogitation mean not only the acts of the Understanding, but those of the Will, yea, and the sense too. But indeed that which we call Cogitation, or Thought, is the work of the Mind; Imagination, of the fancy. 'Tis not properly thought, till it be wrought by the Understanding; because the Fancy was not a Power designed for Thinking, but only to receive the Images impress upon the sense, and concoct them, that they might be fit matter for Thoughts; and so 'tis the Exchequer, wherein all the acquisitions of sense are deposited, and from thence received by the intellective Faculty. So that Thoughts are inchoative in the Fancy, consummative in the Understanding, terminative in all the other Faculties. Thought first engenders Opinion in the Mind; Thought spurs the Will to consent or dissent; 'tis Thought also which Spirits the Affections.

Cartes. Princip. Philos. Part I. Sect. 9.

I will not spend time to acquaint you with the Methods of their Generation. Every Man knows he hath a thinking Faculty, and some inward Conceptions, which he calls Thoughts, he knows that he thinks, and what he thinks; though he be not able to describe the manner of their formation in the Womb, or remember it any more than the species of his own Face in a Glass.

In this Discourse let us first see what kind of Thoughts are Sins.

1. Negatively. A simple apprehension of sin is not sinful. Thoughts receive not a sinfulness barely from the Object: That may be unlawful to be acted, which is not unlawful to be thought of. Though the Will cannot will Sin without Guilt, yet the Understanding may apprehend Sin without Guilt; for that doth no more contract a pollution by the bare apprehension, than the Eye doth by the reception of the species of a loathsome Object. Thoughts are morally Evil, when they have a bad Principle, want a due end, and converse with the Object in a wrong manner. Angels cannot but understand the Offence which displaced the Apostate Stars from Heaven; but they know not sin cognitione practicâ: Glorified Saints may consider their former Sins, to enhance their admirations of pardoning Mercy. Christ himself must needs understand the matter of the Devil's Temptation; yet Satan's Suggestions to his Thoughts were as the Vapours of a Jakes mixed with the Sun-beams, without a defilement of them. Yea, God himself, who is infinite Purity, knows the Object of his own Acts, which are conversant about sin; as his Holiness in forbidding it, Wisdom in permitting, Mercy in pardoning, and Justice in punishing. But thoughts of sin in Christ, Angels, and glorified Saints, are accompanied with an abhorrency of it, without any combustible Matter in them to be kindled by it. As our Thoughts of a divine Object are not gracious, unless we love and delight in it; so a bare apprehension of Sin is not positively criminal, unless we delight in the Object apprehended. As a sinful Object doth not render our Thoughts evil, so a divine Object doth not render them good; because we may think of it with undue circumstances, as unseasonably, coldly, &c. And thus there is an imperfection in the best thought a regenerate Man hath; for though I will suppose he may have a sudden ejaculation, without the mixture of any positive Impurity, and a simple apprehension of sin, with a detestation of it, yet there is a defect in each of them; because 'tis not with with that raiſed Affection to God, or intenſe abhorrency of Sin, as is due from us to ſuch Objects, and whereof we were capable in our primitive ſtate.

2. Poſitively. Our Thoughts may be branched into firſt Motions, or ſuch that are more voluntary.

1. Firſt Motions: Thoſe unfledg'd Thoughts, and ſingle Threads, before a multitude of them come to be twiſted and woven into a Diſcourſe: Such as skip up from our natural Corruption, and ſink down again as Fiſh in a River. Theſe are Sins, though we conſent not to them; becauſe, though they are without our Will, they are not againſt our Nature, but ſpring from an inordinate Frame, of a different hue from what God implanted in us. How can the firſt Sprouts be good if the Root be evil? Not only the Thought formed, but the very formation or firſt imagination is evil. Voluntarineſs is not neceſſary to the eſſence of a Sin, though it be to the aggravation of it. 'Tis not my Will or Knowledge which doth make an Act ſinful, but God's prohibition. Lot's Inceſt was not uſhered by any deliberate conſent of his Will; yet who will deny it to be a ſin, ſince he ſhould have exerciſed a ſeverer Command over himſelf, than to be overtaken with Drunkenneſs, which was the occaſion of it? Original Sin is not effective voluntary in Infants; becauſe no act of the Will is exerted in an Infant about it: Yet it is voluntary ſubjective; becauſe it doth inhære voluntati. Theſe Motions may be ſaid to be voluntary negatively, becauſe the Will doth not ſet bounds to them, and exerciſe that ſovereign dominion over the operations of the Soul, which it ought to do, and wherewith it was at his firſt Creation inveſted. Beſides, though the Will doth not immediately conſent to them, yet it conſents to the Occaſions, which adminiſter ſuch Motions; and therefore, according to the Rule, that cauſa cauſæ eſt cauſa cauſati, they may be juſtly charged upon our ſcore.

Gen. 19. 33, 35.

2. Voluntary Thoughts, which are the bloſſoms of theſe Motions. Such that have no lawful Object, no right end, not governed by Reaſon, eccentrick, diſorderly in their Motions, and like the jarring Strings of an untun'd Inſtrument. The meaneſt of theſe floating Fancies are Sins; becauſe we act not in the production of them as rational Creatures: And what we do without Reaſon, we do againſt the law of our Creation, which appointed Reaſon for our Guide, and the underſtanding to be τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν, the governing power in our Souls.

Theſe may be reduced to three Heads,

1. In regard of God. 2. Of our ſelves. 3. Of others.

I. In regard of God.

1. Cold Thoughts of God; When no Affection is raiſed in us by them. When we delight not in God, the object of thoſe Thoughts, but in the Thought it ſelf, and operation of our Mind about Him, conſiſting of ſome quaint Notion of God, of our own conceiving. This is to delight in the act or manner of thinking, not in the object thought of; and thus theſe Thoughts have a folly and vanity in them. They are alſo ſinful in a regenerate Man, in reſpect of the faintneſs of the Underſtanding, not acting with that vigour, and ſpritelineſs, nor with thoſe raiſed and ſpiritual Affections, which the worth of ſuch an Object doth require.

2. Debaſing Conceptions, unworthy of God. Such are called in the Heathen Vain Imaginations *; who, as they glorified not God, as God, ſo they did not think of God as God, according to the dignity of a Deity. Such a mental Idolatry may be found in us, when we dreſs up a God according to our own Humours, humanize Him, and aſcribe to Him what is grateful to us, though never ſo baſe †. Which is a groſſer degrading of the Deity, than any repreſentation of Him by material Images; becauſe it is directly againſt his Holineſs, which is his Glory, applauded chiefly by the Angels; and an Attribute, which He ſwears by, as having the greateſt regard to the Honour of it. Such an Imagination Adam ſeemed to have, conceiting God to be ſo mean a Being, that he, a Creature not of a Day's ſtanding, could mount to an equality of Knowledge with Him.

† Pſal. 50. 21. Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thy ſelf. Ex. 15. 11. Iſa. 6. 3. Pſa. 89. 35.

3. Accuſing Thoughts of God: Either of his Mercy, as in Deſpair; or of his Juſtice, as too Severe, as in Cain ‖. Of his Providence: Adam conceited, yea and charged God's Providence to be an occaſion of his Crime *: His Poſterity are no juſter to God, when they accuſe him as a negligent Governour of the World, Pſal. 94. 11. The Lord knoweth the Thoughts of Man that they are vanity. What Thoughts? Injurious Thoughts of his Providence, v. 7. as though God were ignorant of Men's Actions; or, at beſt, but an idle Spectator of all the Unrighteouſneſs done in the World, not to regard it, though He did ſee it. And they in the Prophet were of the ſame ſtamp, That ſaid in their Hearts, The Lord will not do good, neither will He do evil. From ſuch kind of Thoughts moſt of the Injuries from Oppreſſors, and Murmurings in the Oppreſſed, do ariſe.

* Ge. 3. 12. The woman whom thou gaveſt to be with me.

Zep. 1. 12.

4. Curious Thoughts about things too high for us. 'Tis the frequent buſineſs of Mens Minds to flutter about things without the bounds of God's Revelation. Not to be content with what God hath publiſhed is to accuſe Him, in the ſame manner as the Serpent did to our firſt Parents, of envying us an intellectual Happineſs. Yet how do all Adam's Poſterity long after this forbidden Fruit!

Gen. 3. 5. God knows that your Eyes ſhall be opened.

II. In regard of our ſelves; Our Thoughts are proud, ſelf-confident, ſelf-applauding, fooliſh, covetous, anxious, unclean; and what not?

1. Ambitious: The aſpiring Thought of the firſt Man runs in the Veins of his Poſterity. God took notice of ſuch ſtrains in the King of Babylon, when he ſaid in his Heart, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God: I will aſcend above the heights of the Clouds; I will be like the moſt High *. No leſs a Charge will they ſtand under, that ſettle themſelves upon their own bottom, eſtabliſh their own Righteouſneſs, and will not ſubmit to the Righteouſneſs of God's appointment †. The moſt forlorn Beggar hath ſometimes Thoughts vaſt enough to graſp an Empire.

* Iſa. 14. 13, 14.

† Ro. 10. 3.

2. Self-confident ‖: Edom's Thoughts ſwelled him into a vain confidence of a perpetual proſperity. And David ſometimes ſaid in the like ſtate, that he ſhould never be moved.

‖ Obad. 3. That ſaith in his heart Who ſhall bring me down to the ground?

3. Self-applauding: Either in the vain remembrances of our former Proſperity, or aſcribing our preſent happineſs to the dexterity of our own wit. Such flaunting Thoughts had Nebuchadnezzar, at the conſideration of his ſetling Babylon the Head, and Metropolis of ſo great an Empire. Nothing more ordinary among Men, than over-weaning Reflections upon their own parts, and * thinking of themſelves above what they ought to think.

Dan 4. 30. Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the houſe of the Kingdom, &c.

* Rom. 12. 3.

4. Ungrounded Imaginations of the events of things, either preſent or future: Such wild Conceits, like Meteors bred of a few Vapours, do often friſk in our Minds. 1. Of things preſent: 'Tis likely Eve fooliſhly imagin'd ſhe had brought forth the Meſſiah, when ſhe brought forth a Murderer, Gen. 4. 1. I have gotten a Man the Lord (as in the Hebrew) believing (as ſome interpret) that ſhe had brought forth the promiſed Seed. And ſuch a briſk conceit Lamech

אִישׁ אֶת־יְהוָה

Ge.5.29. Exth. 6.6. ſeems to have had of Noah †. 2. Of things to come, either in beſpeaking falſe Hopes, or antedating improbable Griefs. Such are the jolly Thoughts we have of a happy Eſtate in Reverſion, which yet we may fall ſhort of. Haman's Heart leap'd at the King's Queſtion, (What ſhall be done to the Man whom the King delighteth to Honour?) fancying himſelf the mark of his Prince's Favour, without thinking that a Haltar ſhould ſoon choak his Ambition. Or perplexing Thoughts at the fear of ſome Trouble, which is not yet fallen upon us, and perhaps never may. How did David torture his Soul by his unbelieving Fears, that he ſhould one day periſh by the hand of Saul? Theſe foreſtalling Thoughts do really affect us: We often feel caprings in our Spirits upon imaginary Hopes, and ſhiverings upon conceited Fears. Theſe pleaſing Impoſtures, and ſelf-afflicting Suppoſitions are ſigns either of an idle or indigent Mind, that hath no will to work, or only rotten materials to work upon.

1 Sa 27. 1. And David ſaid in his Heart, &c.

5. Immoderate Thoughts about lawful things: When we exerciſe our Minds too thick, and with a fierceneſs of Affection above their Merit: Not in ſubſerviency to God, or mixing our Cares with dependencies on Him. Worldly concerns may quarter in our Thoughts; but they muſt not poſſeſs all the room, and thruſt Chriſt into a Manger: Neither muſt they be of that value with us, as the Law was with David, ſweeter than the Honey or the Honey-comb.

III. In regard of others; All Thoughts of our Neighbour againſt the Rule of Charity. Such that imagine evil in their Hearts, God hates *. Theſe principally are, 1. Envious, when we torment our ſelves with others Fortunes. Such a Thought in Cain, upon God's acceptance of his Brother's Sacrifice, was the Prologue to, and foundation of that curſed Murder. 2. Cenſorious, Stigmatizing every Freckle in our Brother's Converſation. 3. Jealous and evil Surmiſes, contrary to Charity, which thinks no evil. 4. Revengeful; ſuch made Haman take little content in his Preferments, as long as Mordecai refuſed to court him. And Eſau thought of the days of Mourning for his Father, that he might be revenged for his Brother's Deceits.

Eſth. 5.13. Ge. 27.41. Eſau ſaid in his heart, &c.

There is no Sin committed in the World, but is hatched in one or other of theſe Thoughts. But beſide theſe, there are a multitude of other volatile Conceits, like ſwarms of Gnats buzzing about us, and preying upon us, and as frequent in their Succeſſions, as the curlings of the Water upon a ſmall breath of Wind, one following another cloſe at the Heels. The Mind is no more ſatisfied with Thoughts, than the firſt Matter is with Forms, continually ſhifting one for another, and many times the nobler for the baſer: As when upon the Putrefaction of a human Body, part of the Matter is endued with the form of Vermin. Such changeable things are our Minds, in leaving that which is good for that which is worſe, when they are enveigled by an active Fancy, and Bedlam Affections. This Madneſs is in the Hearts of Men while they live, and ſtarts a thouſand Frenzies in a Day. At the beſt, our Fancy is like a Carrier's Bag, ſtuffed with a world of Letters, having no dependance upon one another; ſome containing Buſineſs, and others nothing but Froth.

Eccleſ.9.3

In all theſe Thoughts there is a further Guilt in three reſpects, viz. 1. Delight, 2. Contrivance, 3. Re-acting.

1. Delight in them. The very tickling of our Fancy by a ſinful Motion, though without a formal Conſent, is a Sin; becauſe it is a degree of complacency in an unlawful Object. When the Mind is pleaſed with the ſubject of the Thought, as it hath a tendency to ſome ſenſual Pleaſure, and not ſimply in the Thought it ſelf, as it may enrich the Underſtanding with ſome degree of Knowledge. The thought indeed of an evil thing may be without any delight in the evil of it; as Philoſophers delight in making experiments of poyſonous Creatures, without delighting in the Poyſon, as it is a noxious quality. We may delightfully think of Sin without Guilt, not delighting in it as Sin, but as God by his wiſe providential ordering extracts Glory to himſelf, and good to his Creature. In this caſe, though a ſinful act be the material object of this pleaſure, yet 'tis not the formal object; becauſe the delight is not terminated in the ſin, but in God's ordering the event of it to his own Glory. But an Inclination to a ſinful Motion, as it gratifies a corrupt Affection, is ſin: Becauſe every Inclination is a malignant tincture upon the Affections, including in its own nature an averſion from God, and teſtifying Sin to be an agreeable Object. And without queſtion, there can be no inclination to any thing, without ſome degree of pleaſure in it: Becauſe it is impoſſible we can incline to that, which we have a perfect abhorrency of. Hence it follows, that every inclination to a ſinful Motion is Conſenſus inchoatus, or a Conſent in Embryo: Though the Act may prove abortive. If we think of any unlawful thing with pleaſure, and imagine it either in fieri or facto eſſe, it brings a guilt upon us, as if it were really acted. As when upon the conſideration of ſuch a Man's being my Enemy, I fancy Robbers riſling his Goods, and cutting his Throat, and rejoyce in this revengeful Thought, as if it were really done, 'tis a great Sin: Becauſe it teſtifies an approbation of ſuch a Butchery, if any Man had Will and Opportunity to commit it. And though it be a Suppoſition, yet the act of the Mind is really the ſame it would be, if the ſinful act I think of were performed. Or when a Man conditionally thinks with himſelf, I would ſteal ſuch a Man's Goods, or kill ſuch a Perſon, if I could eſcape the Puniſhment attending it, it is as if he did rob and murder him; becauſe there is no impediment in his Will to the commiſſion of it, but only in the outward Circumſtances. Nay, though it be a meer Ens intentionale, or rationis, which is the object of the Thought, yet the act of the Mind is real, and as ſignificant of the inclination of the Soul, as if the Object were real too: As if a Man hath an unclean Motion at the ſight of a Picture, which is only a Compoſition of well-mixed and well-ordered Colours: Or at the appearance of the Idea of a Beauty fram'd in his own Fancy: 'Tis as much Uncleanneſs as if it were terminated in ſome ſuitable Object, the hindrance being not in the Will, but in the inſufficiency of the Object to concur in ſuch an Act. Now, as the more delight there is in any Holy Service, the more precious it is in it ſelf, and more grateful to God: ſo the more pleaſure there is in any ſinful Motion, the more malignity there is in it.

2. Contrivance. When the delight in the thought grows up to the contrivance of the act, (which is ſtill the work of the thinking Faculty:) When the Mind doth brood upon a ſinful Motion, to hatch it up, and invents methods for performance: which the Wiſe Man calls artificial Inventions. So a learned Man interprets διαλογισμοὶ πονηροὶ, *Mat.*15.19. of contrivances of Murder. Adultery, &c. And the Word ſignifies properly reaſonings. When Mens Wits play the Devils in their Souls, in inventing ſophiſtical Reaſons for the commiſſion and juſtification of their Crimes, with a mighty jollity at their own Craft. Such Plots are the Trade of a wicked wicked Man's Heart. A covetous Man will be working in his inward Shop from Morning till Night to ſtudy new Methods for Gain *: and voluptuous and Ambitious Perſons will draw Schemes and Models in their Fancy, of what they wou'd outwardly accompliſh: They conceive miſchief, and bring forth vanity, and their belly prepares deceit, Job 15. 35. Hence the Thoughts are called the counſels † and devices * of the heart: when the Heart ſummons the Head, and all the Thoughts of it, to ſit in debate, as a private Junto, about a ſinful Motion.

*2Pet.2.14 καρδίαν γεγυμνασμένην πλεονεξίας, a heart exercis'd in covetous practices.

†1Cor.4.5

*Iſa. 32. 7, 8.

3. Re-acting Sin after 'tis outwardly committed. Though the individual Action be tranſient, and cannot be committed again: yet the Idea and Image of it remaining in the Memory, may by the help of an apiſh fancy, be repeated a thouſand times over with a rarify'd pleaſure: As both the Features of our Friends, and the agreeable Converſations we have had with them, may with a freſh reliſh be repreſented in our Fancies, tho' the Perſons were rotten many Years ago.

Kimchi in 66.Pſal. as quoted by Grotius in Mat.5.20. Ut jam ſervaris bene corpus adultera meus eſt. Nec cuſtodiri, ni velit, ille poteſt. Nec mentem ſervare potes, licet omnia claudas: Omnibus occluſis intus adulterit, Ovid Amor. l. 3. Eleg. 3. v. 5, &c.

Having thus declar'd the nature of our Thoughts, and the degrees of their Guilt; the next thing is to prove that they are Sins.

The Jews did not acknowledge them to be Sins, unleſs they were blaſphemous, and immediately againſt God himſelf. Some Heathens were more Orthodox, and among the reſt Ovid, whoſe amorous Pleaſures, one would think, ſhou'd have ſmother'd ſuch ſentiments in him. The Lord (whoſe Knowledge is infallible) knows the thoughts of men that they are vanity, Pſal. 94. 11. Yea, and of the wiſeſt Men too, according to the Apoſtle's Interpretation, 1 Cor. 3. 20. And who were they that became vain in their Imaginations, but the wiſeſt Men the carnal World yielded? The Grecians the greateſt Philoſophers, the Ægyptians their Tutors, and the Romans their Apes. The elaborate Operations of an unregenerate Mind are fleſhly, Rom. 8. 5, 7. If the whole Web be ſo, needs muſt every Thread. The thought of fooliſhneſs is ſin, * (i. e. a fooliſh Thought; not objectively a Thought of folly, but one formally ſo) yea, an abomination to God †. As good Thoughts and purpoſes are Acts in God's account, ſo are bad ones. Abraham's intention to offer Iſaac is accounted as an actual Sacrifice ‖: that the ſtroke was not given, was not from any reluctance of Abraham's Will, but the gracious indulgence of God. Sarah had a deriding Thought, and God chargeth it as if it were an outward Laughter, and a ſcornful Word *. Thoughts are the Words of the Mind, and as real in God's account, as if they were expreſſed with the Tongue.

Rom.7.7. I had not known luſt, except the Law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.

There are three Reaſons for the proof of this, that they are Sins.

1. They are contrary to the Law, which doth forbid the firſt foamings and belchings of the Heart; becauſe they ariſe from an habitual corruption, and teſtifie a defect of ſomething which the Law requires to be in us, to correct the Excurſions of our Minds. Doth not the Law oblige Man as a Rational Creature? Shall it then leave that part, which doth conſtitute him Rational, to fleeting and giddy Fancies? No, it binds the Soul as the principal Agent, the Body only as the Inſtrument. For if it were given only for the ſenſitive part, without any reſpect to the rational, it wou'd concern Brutes as well as Men, which are as capable of a rational Command, and a voluntary Obedience, as Man without the conduct of a rational Soul. It exacts a conformity of the whole Man to God, and prohibits a diſformity; and therefore engageth chiefly the inward part, which is moſt the Man. It muſt then extend to all the Acts of the Man, conſequently to his Thoughts, they being more the Acts of the Man than the Motions of the Body. Holineſs is the prime excellency of the Law, a Title aſcribed to it twice in one Verſe, Rom. 7. 12. Wherefore the Law is holy, and the Commandment holy, juſt, and good. Could it be holy, if it indulged looſeneſs in the more noble part of the Creature? Could it be juſt, if it favour'd inward unrighteouſneſs? Could it be good, and uſeful to Man, which did not enjoyn a ſuitable conformity to God, wherein the Creature's Excellency lies? Can that deſerve the Title of a Spiritual Law, that ſhou'd only regulate the bruiſh part, and leave the Spiritual to an unbounded licentiouſneſs? Can Perfection be aſcrib'd to that Law, which doth countenance the unſavoury breathings of the Spirit, and lay no ſtricter an Obligation upon us than the Laws of Men? Muſt not God's Laws be as ſuitable to his Sovereignty, as Mens Laws are to theirs? Muſt they not then be as extenſive as God's Dominion, and reach even to the privateſt Cloſets of the Heart? 'Tis not for the honour of God's holineſs, righteouſneſs, goodneſs, to let the Spirit, which bears more flouriſhing Characters of his Image than the Body, range wildly about without a legal Curb.

Mat.5.28.

2. They are contrary to the order of Nature, and the deſign of our Creation. Whatſoever is a ſwerving from our primitive Nature, is Sin, or at leaſt a conſequent of it. But all Inclinations to ſin are contrary to that Righteouſneſs wherewith Man was firſt endued. Man was created both with a diſpoſition and ability for holy Contemplations of God; the firſt Glances of his Soul were pure; he came every way compleat out of the Mint of his infinitely wiſe and good Creator; and when God pronounc'd all his Creatures good, he pronounc'd Man very good amongſt the reſt. But Man is not now as God created him, he is off from his End, his Underſtanding is filled with Lightneſs and Vanity. This Diſorder never proceeded from the God of order; infinite Goodneſs could never produce ſuch an evil Frame; none of theſe looſe Inventions were of God's planting, but of Man's ſeeking. No, God never created the intellective, no, nor the ſenſitive part, to play Domitian's Game, and ſport it ſelf in the catching of Flies. Man that is in honour, and underſtands not that which he ought to underſtand, and thinks not that which he ought to think, is like the Beaſts that periſh: he plays the Beaſt, becauſe he acts contrary to the Nature of a rational and immortal Soul. And ſuch Brutes we all naturally are, ſince the firſt Woman believ'd her Senſe, her Fancy, her Affection in their directions for the attainment of Wiſdom, without conſulting God's Law, or her own Reaſon. The Fancy was bound by the right of Nature to ſerve the Underſtanding: 'Tis then a ſlighting God's Wiſdom to invert this Order, in making that our Governour which he made our Subject. 'Tis injuſtice to the dignity of our own Souls, to degrade the nobler part to a ſordid Slavery; in making the Brute have Dominion over the Man; as if the Horſe were fitteſt to govern the Rider. 'Tis a falſeneſs to God, and a breach of truſt, to let our Minds be impoſed upon by our Fancy; in giving them only Feathers to dandle, and Chaff to feed on, inſtead of thoſe braver Objects they were made to converſe withal.

Eccleſ. 7. 29. God made man perfect; but they have ſought out many inventions.

Pſ. 49. 20. Gen. 3. 6.

3. We are accountable to God, and puniſhable for Thoughts. Nothing is the meritorious Cauſe of God's Wrath but Sin. The Text tells us, that they were once the Keys, which opened the Floudgates of of Divine Vengeance, and broach'd both the upper and nether Cisterns, to overflow the World.

* Acts 8. 22. If perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee. *Prov. 12. 2. אישׁ מזמות A man of thoughts, i. e. evil thoughts: the word being usually taken in an ill sense. Κεκακὸς.

If they need a pardon *, (as certainly they do) then, if Mercy doth not pardon them, Justice will condemn them. And 'tis absolutely said, that a Man of wicked devices * [or Thoughts] God will condemn. 'Tis God's Prerogative, often mentioned in Scripture, to search the heart. To what purpose if the Acts of it did not fall under His Censure, as well as His Cognizance; He weighs the Spirits, Prov. 16. 2. in the Ballance of His Sanctuary, and by the Weights of His Law, to sentence them, if they be found too light. The Word doth discover, and judge them; Heb. 4. 12, 13. It divides asunder the soul and spirit, the sensitive part the Affections, and the rational the Understanding and Will; both which it doth dissect, and open, and judge the Acts of them, even the Thoughts and Intents, ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν, whatsoever is within the θυμὸς and whatsoever is within the νὸς, the one referring to the Soul, the other to the Spirit: These it passeth a Judgment upon; as a Critick censures the Errata's, even to Syllables and Letters, in an old Manuscript. These we are to render an account of, (as the Syriack renders those Words, v. 13. with whom we have to do.) Of what? Of the first Bubblings of the Heart, the Motions and Intents of it. The least Speck and Atome of Dust in every Chink of this little World is known and censured by God. If our Thoughts be not judged, God wou'd not be a righteous Judge. He wou'd not judge according to the merit of the Cause, if outward Actions were only scann'd, without regarding the Intents, wherein the Principle and End of every Action lies, which either swell or diminish the malignity of it. Actions in kind the same, may have different Circumstances in the Thoughts to heighten the one above the other; and if they were only judged, the most painted Hypocrite might commence a blessed Spirit at last, as well as the exactest Saint. 'Tis necessary also for the Glory of God's Omniscience. 1 Cor 4. 5. 'Tis hereby chiefly that the extensiveness of God's Knowledge is discover'd, and that in order to the praise, or dispraise of Men, viz. To their Justification or Condemnation. Those very Thoughts will accuse thee before God's Tribunal, which accuse thee here before Conscience, His Deputy, Rom. 2. 15, 16. Their Thoughts the mean while (i. e. in this life, while Conscience bears witness) accusing, or excusing one another; in the day when God shall judge the secrets of Men, i. e. and also at the Day of Judgment, when Conscience shall give in its final testimony, upon God's Examination of the secret Counsels. This place is properly meant of those Reasonings concerning good and evil in Men's Consciences, agreeable to the Law of Nature imprinted on them, which shall excuse them, if they practise accordingly, or accuse them, if they behave themselves contrary thereunto. But it will hold in this Case; for if those inward approbations of the Notions of Good and Evil will accuse us for our contrary Practices, they will also accuse us for our contrary Thoughts. Our good Thoughts will be our Accusers for not observing them, and our bad Thoughts will be Indictments against us for complying with them. 'Tis probable the Soul may be bound over to answer chiefly for these at the last Day; for the Apostle charg-eth Simon's Guilt upon his Thought, not his Word, and tells him, pardon must be principally granted for that. The Tongue was only an Instrument to express what his Heart did think, and wou'd have been wholly innocent, had not his Thoughts been first criminal. What therefore is the principal Subject of Pardon, wou'd be so of Punishment: as the first Incendiaries in a Rebellion are most severely dealt with. And if (as some think) the fallen Angels were stript of their primitive Glory, only for a conceiv'd Thought, how heinous must that be, which hath inrolled them in a remediless Misery?

Non solum opus, sed mali operis cogitatio famas luet. Hieron in Hosea 7. Acts 8. 22.

Having proved that there is a sinfulness in our Thoughts, let us now see what provocation there is in them: Which, in some respects, is greater than that of our Actions. But we must take Actions here in sensu diviso, as distinguished from the inward Preparations to them. In the one there is more of scandal; in the other more of odiousness to God. God indeed doth not punish Thoughts so visibly, because, as He is Governour of the World, His Judgments are shot against those sins that disturb Humane Society: But He hath secret and spiritual Judgments for these, suitable to the nature of the sins.

Now Thoughts are greater in respect,

1. Of fruitfulness. The wickedness that God saw great in the Earth was the fruit of Imaginations. They are the immediate Causes of all Sin. No Cockatrice but was first an Egg. It was a Thought to be as God *, that was the first breeder of all that Sin, under which the World groans at this Day; For Eve's Mind was first beguiled in the alteration of her Thought. Since that the Lake of inward Malignity acts all its evil by these smoaking Steams. Evil Thoughts lead the Van in our Saviour's Catalogue, as that which spirits all the black Regiment which march behind. As good Motions cherish'd will spring up in good Actions, so loose Thoughts favour'd will break out in visible Plague-sores, and put fire unto all that Wickedness which lies habitually in the Heart; as a Spark may to a whole stock of Gunpowder. The vain babblings of the Soul, as well as those of the Tongue, will encrease to more ungodliness. Being thus the Cause, they include virtually in them all that is in the effect; as a Seed contains in its little Body the Leaves, Fruit, Colour, Scent, which afterward appear in the Plant. The Seed includes all, but the Colour doth not virtually include the Scent, or the Scent the Colour, or the Leaves the Fruit: So 'tis here, One Act doth not include the formal Obliquity of another: but the Thought which caused it, doth seminally include both the formal and final Obliquity of every Action; both that which is in the Nature of it, and in the End to which it tends. As when a Trades-man cherisheth immoderate Thoughts of Gain, and in the attaining it runs into many foolish and hurtful Lusts, there is cheating, lying, swearing, to put off the Commodity: all these several Acts have a particular sinfulness in the nature of the Acts themselves, besides the tendency they have to the satisfying an inordinate Affection; all which are the Spawn of those first immoderate Thoughts stirring up greedy Desires.

* Gen. 3. 5. 2 Cor. 11. 3. Matt. 15. 19. 2 Tim. 2. 16. 1 Tim. 6. 9

2. In respect of Quantity. Imaginations are said to be continually evil. There is an infinite variety of Conceptions, as the Psalmist speaks of the Sea, wherein are all things creeping innumerable, both small and great, and a constant Generation of whole shoals of them; that you may as well number the Fish in the Sea, or the Atomes in the Sun-beams, as recount them.

There is a greater number in regard of the Acts, and in regard of the Objects.

1. In regard of the Acts of the Mind.

1. Antecedent Acts. How many preparatory Motions of the Mind are there to one wicked external

"Αν ὃ σαυτὸν ἔγκλειον ἀνοίξῃς ᾧ ἄνθρωπε, πύλον καὶ πολυπαθὲς τραμεῖον κακῶν ἐφήσεις καὶ σημεῖα, &c. Plutarch. Moral. p. (mihi) 500

nal Act*? Yea, how many ſinful Thoughts are twiſted together to produce one deliberate ſinful Word? All which have a diſtinct guilt, and, if weigh'd together, wou'd outweigh the Guilt of the Action abſtractedly conſider'd. How many repeated Complacencies in the firſt Motion, degrees of Conſent, reſolved Broodings, ſecret Plottings, Propoſals of various Methods, ſmoothering contrary Checks, vehement Longings, delightful Hopes, and foreſtall'd Pleaſures in the Deſign? All which are but Thoughts aſſenting or diſſenting in order to the Act intended. Upon a diſſection of all theſe ſecret Motions by the critical power of the Word, we ſhould find a more monſtrous Guilt, than would be apparent in the ſingle Action, for whoſe ſake all theſe Spirits were rais'd. There may be no Sin in a material Act, conſider'd in it ſelf, when there is a provoking Guilt in the mental Motion. A Hypocrite's Religious Services are materially good, but poiſoned by the Imagination skulking in the Heart, that gave birth unto them. 'Tis the wicked Mind or Thought makes the Sacrifice (a commanded Duty) much more an abomination to the Lord.

Pro. 21. 27 בזמה with a wicked thought. Eccl. 23. 3, 19. Yet ſhe multiplied her whoredoms in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, &c. v. 21. the lewdneſs of her youth.

2. Conſequent Acts. When a Man's Fancy is pregnant with the delightful Remembrance of the Sin that is paſt, he draws down a freſh Guilt upon himſelf: as they did in the Prophet, in reviving the concurrence of the Will to the Act committed, making the Senſual Pleaſure to commence Spiritual, and (if ever there were an aking Heart for it) revoking his former Grief by a renewed Approbation of his darling Luſt. Thus the Sin of Thoughts is greater in regard of duration. A Man hath neither Strength nor Opportunity always to act, but he may always think; and Imagination can ſupply the place of Action. Or if the Mind be tir'd with ſucking one Object, it can with the Bee preſently faſten upon another. Senſes are weary, till they have a new recruit of Spirits; as the poor Horſe may ſink under his Burden, when the Rider is as violent as ever. Thus old Men may change their outward Profaneneſs into mental Wickedneſs; and as the Pſalmiſt remembred his old Songs, Pſal. 77. 5, 6. ſo they their calcin'd Sins in the Night, with an equal Pleaſure. So that you ſee there may be a thouſand Thoughts as Uſhers and Lacqueys to one Act, as numerous as the Sparks of a new-lighted Fire.

2. In regard of the Objects the Mind is converſant about. Such Thoughts there are, and attended with a heavy Guilt, which cannot probably, no nor poſſibly deſcend into outward Acts. A Man may in a complacent Thought commit Fornication with a Woman in Spain, in a covetous Thought rob another in the Indies, and in a revengeful Thought ſtab a third in America; and that while he is in this Congregation. An unclean Perſon may commit a mental Folly with every Beauty he meets. A covetous Man cannot plunder a whole Kingdom; but in one twinkling of a Thought he may wiſh himſelf the poſſeſſor of all the Eſtates in it. A Timon, a μισάνθρωπος cannot cut the Throats of all the World; but, like Nero, with one Glance of his Heart he may chop off the Heads of all Mankind at a blow. An Ambitious Man's Practices are confin'd to a ſmall Spot of Land, but with a caſt of his Mind he may graſp an Empire as large as the four Monarchies. A Beggar cannot aſcend a Throne; but in his Thoughts he may paſs the Guards, murder his Prince, and uſurp the Government. Nay further, an Atheiſt may think there is no God, Pſal. 14. 1. i. e. (as ſome interpret it) wiſh there were no God, and thus in Thought undeifie God himſelf; though he may ſooner daſh Heaven and Earth in pieces, than accompliſh it. The Body is confin'd to one Object, and that narrow and proportionable to its Nature: But the Mind can wing it ſelf to various Objects in all parts of the Earth. Where it finds none, it can make one; For Fancy can compact ſeveral Objects together, coyn an Image, colour a Picture, and commit Folly with it when it hath done; It can neſtle it ſelf in Cobwebs ſpun out of its own Bowels.

3. In reſpect of Strength. Imaginations of the Heart are only, i. e. purely evil. The nearer any thing is in union with the Root, the more radical Strength it hath. The firſt Ebullitions of Light and Heat from the Sun are more vigorous than the remoter Beams: And the Steams of a Dunghil more noyſom next that putrefy'd Body, than when they are dilated in the Air. Grace is ſtronger in the Heart-operations, than in the outward Streams; and Sin more foul in the Imagination of the thoughts of the Heart, than in the Act. In the Text the outward Wickedneſs of the World is paſs'd over with a ſhort Expreſſion; but the Holy Ghoſt dwells upon the deſcription of the wicked Imagination, becauſe there lay the Maſs. Man's * inward part is very wickedneſſes, a whole Neſt of Vipers. Thoughts are the immediate Spawn of the original Corruption, and therefore partake more of the ſtrength and nature of it. Acts are more diſtant, being the Children of our Thoughts, but the Grandchildren of our natural Pravity. Beſides, they lie neareſt to that Wickedneſs in the inward part, ſucking the Breaſt of that poyſonous Dam that bred them. The ſtrength of our Thoughts is alſo reinforc'd by being kept in, for want of opportunity to act them; as Liquors in cloſe Glaſſes ferment and encreaſe their Spritelineſs. Muſing either Carnal or Spiritual, makes the † Fire burn the hotter; as the fury of Fire is doubl'd by being pent in a Furnace. Outward Acts are but the Sprouts; the Sap and Juice lies in the wicked Imagination or Contrivance, which hath a ſtrength in it to produce a thouſand Fruits as poyſonous as the former. The Members are the Inſtruments or * Weapons of unrighteouſneſs; now the whole Strength which doth manage the Weapon, lies in the Arm that weilds it; the Weapon of it ſelf could do no hurt without a force impreſt. Let me add this too, that Sin in Thoughts is more ſimply Sin. In Acts there may be ſome occaſional good to others, for a good Man will make uſe of the ſight of Sin committed by others to encreaſe his Hatred of it: But in our ſinful Thoughts there is no occaſion of good to others, they lying lock'd up from the view of Man.

* Rom. 6. 13. ὅπλα.

4. In reſpect of Alliance. In theſe we have the neareſt communion with the Devil. The Underſtanding of Man is ſo tainted, that his † Wiſdom, the chiefeſt Flower in it, is not only earthly and ſenſual, (it were well if it were no worſe) but deviliſh too. If the Flower be ſo rank, what are the Weeds? Satan's Devices and our Thoughts are of the ſame nature, and ſometimes in Scripture expreſt by the ſame Word, νοήματα. As he hath his Devices, ſo have we againſt the Authority of God's Law, the power of the Goſpel, and the Kingdom of Chriſt. The Devils are call'd Spiritual Wickedneſſes, becauſe they are not capable of carnal Sins. Prophaneneſs is an Uniformity with the World, and intellectual Sins are an Uniformity with the God of it, Epheſ. 2. 2, 3. There is a double walking, anſwerable to a double pattern in v. 2. Fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh is a walking according to the courſe of this world, or making the World

World our Copy; and fulfilling the Deſires of the Mind is a walking according to the Prince of the Power of the Air, or a making the Devil our Pattern. In carnal Sins Satan is a Tempter, in mental an Actor. Therefore in the one we are conformed to his Will; in the other we are transform'd into his Likeneſs. In outward we evidence more of Obedience to his Laws; in inward more of Affection to his Perſon, as all Imitations of others do. Therefore there is more of Enmity to God, becauſe more of ſimilitude and love to the Devil; a nearer Approach to the Diobolical Nature implying a greater Diſtance from the Divine. Chriſt never gave ſo black a Character as that of the Devil's Children, to the profane World, but to the Phariſees, who had left the Sins of Men to take up thoſe of Devils, and were moſt guilty of thoſe high Imaginations which ought to be brought into captivity to the obedience of Chriſt.

Rom. 8. 7. 5. In reſpect of contrariety and odiouſneſs to God. Imaginations were only evil; and ſo moſt directly contrary to God, who is only good. Our natural enmity againſt God is ſeated in the Mind. The ſenſitive part aims at its own Gratification; and in Mens ſerving their Luſts they ſerve their Pleaſures; but the τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν, the Prince in Man, is poſſeſt with Principles of a more direct contrariety; whence it muſt follow, that all the Thoughts and Counſels of it are tinctur'd with this Hatred. They are indeed a defilement of the higher part of the Soul, and that which belongs more peculiarly to God. And the nearer any part doth approach to God, the more abominable is a Spot upon it; as to caſt Dirt upon a Prince's Houſe is not ſo heinous as to deface his Image. The Underſtanding, the Seat of Thoughts, is more excellent than the Will; both becauſe we know and judge before we will, or ought to will only ſo much as the Underſtanding thinks fit to be willed; and becauſe God hath beſtowed the higheſt Gifts upon it, adorning it with more lively Lineaments of his own Image, Col. 3. 10. Renewed in Knowledge after the Image of Him that created him; implying, that there was more of the Image of God at the firſt Creation beſtow'd upon the Underſtanding, the Seat of Knowledge, than on any other part; yea, than on all the Bodies of Men diſtill'd together.

Titus 3. 3. Serving diverſ Luſts and Pleaſures.

Heb. 12. 9. Father of Spirits is one of God's Titles: To beſpatter His Children then, ſo near a Relation, the Jewel that he is choice of, muſt needs be more heinous. He being the Father of Spirits, this ſpiritual Wickedneſs of nouriſhing evil Thoughts, is a caſhiering all Child-like likeneſs to him. The traiterous Acts of the Mind are moſt offenſive to God: as 'tis a greater deſpite for a Son, to whom the Father hath given the greater Portion, to ſhut him out of his Houſe, only to revel in it with a Company of Rioters and Strumpets, than in a Child who never was ſo much the ſubject of his Father's Favour. And 'tis more heinous and odious, if theſe Thoughts, which poſſeſs our Souls, be at any time converſant about ſome Idea of our own framing. It were not altogether ſo bad, if we lov'd ſomething of God's creating, which had a phyſical goodneſs, and a real uſefulneſs in it to allure us: But to run wildly to embrace an Ens rationis, to prefer a thing of no exiſtence, but what is coloured by our own Imagination, of no vertue, no uſefulneſs, a thing that God never created, nor pronounc'd good, is a greater Enmity, and a higher ſlight of God.

Αὐτόχθονας παιδὰς ἢ κακίας, Plutarch Moral. Τάχιστον μὲν γὰρ, διὰ παντὸς δὲ τρέχει. Thales. Ding. Laert.

6. In reſpect of Connaturalneſs and Voluntarineſs. They are the Imaginations of the Thoughts of the Heart, and they are continually evil. They are as natural as the æſtuations of the Sea, the bubblings of a Fountain, or the twinklings of the Stars. The more natural any Motion is, ordinarily the quicker it is. Time is requiſite to Action, but Thoughts have an inſtantaneous Motion. The Body is a heavy piece of Clay, but the Mind can ſtart out on every occaſion. Actions have their ſtated times and places; but theſe ſollicit us, and are entertain'd by us at all Seaſons. Neither Day nor Night, Street nor Cloſet, Exchange nor Temple, can privilege us from them; We meet them at every Turn, and they ſtrike upon our Souls as often as light upon our Eyes. There is no reſtraint for them; the Laws of Men, the Conſtitution of the Body, the Intereſt of Profit or Credit, are mighty Bars in the way of outward Profaneneſs: but nothing lays the Reins upon Thoughts but the Law of God; and this Man is not ſubject to, neither can be, Rom. 8. 7. Beſides, the natural Atheiſm in Man is a ſpecial Friend and Nurſe of theſe; few firmly believing either the Omniſcience of God, or his Government of the World; which the Scripture ſpeaks of frequently, as the cauſe of moſt Sins among the Sons of Men. † Actions are done with ſome reluctance, and nips of natural Conſcience. Conſcience will ſtart at a groſs Temptation, but it is not frighted at Thoughts. Men may commit ſpeculative Folly, and their Conſcience look on, without ſo much as a Nod againſt it: Men may tear out their Neighbours Bowels in ſecret Wiſhes, and their Conſcience never interpoſe to part the Fray. Conſcience indeed cannot take notice of all of them; they are too ſubtil in their Nature, and too quick for the obſervation of a finite Principle. They are many, † and they are nimble too; like the bubblings of a boyling Pot, or the riſing of a Wave, that preſently ſlides into its Level; and as Florus ſaith of the Ligurians, the difficulty is more to find than conquer them. They are ſecret Sins, and are no more diſcern'd than Motes in the Air, without a ſpiritual Sun-beam; whence David cries out, Pſal. 19. 12. Cleanſe me from ſecret Sins; which ſome explain of Sins of Thoughts that were like ſudden and frequent Flaſhes of Lightning, too quick for his Notice, and unknown to himſelf. There is alſo more delight in them. There is leſs of Temptation in them, and ſo more of Election; and conſequently more of the Heart and Pleaſure in them, when they lodge with us. Acts of Sin are troubleſome, there is Danger as well as Pleaſure in many of them: but there is no outward Danger in Thoughts; therefore the Complacency is more compact, and free from Diſtraction. The Delight is more unmixed too; as intellectual Pleaſures are more refined than ſenſual. All theſe Conſiderations will enhance the Guilt of theſe inward Operations.

The Uſes ſhall be Two, tho' many Inferences might be drawn from the Point.

1. Reproof. What a Maſs of Vanity ſhould we find in our Minds, if we could bring our Thoughts in the ſpace of one Day, yea but one Hour, to an account? How many fooliſh Thoughts with our Wiſdom, ignorant with our Knowledge, worldly with our Heavenlineſs, hypocritical with our Religion, and proud with our Humiliations? Our Hearts wou'd be like a Grott, furniſhed with monſtrous and ridiculous Pictures: Or as the Wall in Ezekiel's Viſion, pourtray'd with every Form of creeping Things, and abominable Beaſts; a greater Abomination than the Image of Jealouſie at the outward Gate of the Altar. Were our Inwards opened, how ſhould we ſtand gazing both with Scorn, and wonder at our being ſuch a Pack of Fools? Well may we cry out with Agur, We have not the Underſtandings of Men; We make not the uſe of them as is requiſite for rational Creatures; becauſe we degrade them to attendances on a brutiſh Fancy. I make no queſtion, but were we able to know the Fancies of ſome irrational Creatures, we ſhould find them more noble, heroick, and generous in ſuo genere, than the Thoughts of moſt Men; more agreeable to their Natures, and ſuited to the Law of their Creation †. How little is God in any of our Thoughts, according to His Excellency? No, our Shops, our Rents, our Backs and Bellies uſurp God's room. If any thoughts of God do ſtart up in us, how many covetous, ambitious, wanton, revengeful Thoughts are jumbled together with them? Is it not a monſtrous Abſurdity to place our Friend with a Crew of Vipers, to lodge a King in a Sty, and entertain him with the Fumes of a Jakes and Dunghil? A wicked Man's Heart is little worth; all the pedling Wares and Works in his inward Shop are not valuable with one Silver Drop from a gracious Man's Lips. It was an invincible Argument of the Primitive Chriſtians for the purity of the Chriſtian Religion above all others in the World, that it did prohibit evil Thoughts: And is it not as unanſwerable an Argument that we are no Chriſtians, if we give liberty to them? What is our moral Converſation outwardly, but only a bare abſtinence from Sin, not a diſaffection? Were we really and altogether Chriſtians, would not that which is the chiefeſt purity of Chriſtianity, be our pleaſure? And wou'd we any more wrong God in our ſecret Hearts, than in the open Streets? Is not Thought a Beam of the Mind, and ſhall it be enamour'd only on a Dunghil? Is not the Underſtanding the Eye of the Soul, and ſhall it behold only gilded Nothings? 'Tis the Flower of the Spirit, ſhall we let every Caterpillar ſuck it? 'Tis the Queen in us, ſhall every Ruffian deflore it? 'Tis as the Sun in our Heaven, and ſhall we beſmear it with miſty Fancies? It was created ſurely for better Purpoſes than to catch a thouſand weight of Spiders, (as Heliogabalus employ'd his Servants.) It was not intended to be made the Common-ſewer of Filthineſs, or ranked among thoſe ζῶα πάμφαγα, which eat not only Fruit and Fleſh, but Flies, Worms, Dung, and all ſorts of loathſom Materials. Let not therefore our Minds wallow in a Sink of fantaſtical Follies, whereby to rob God of his Due, and our Souls of their Happineſs.

not

2. Exhortation. We muſt take care for the ſuppreſſion of them. All Vice doth ariſe from Imagination: Upon what Stock doth Ambition and Revenge grow, but upon a falſe Conceit of the Nature of Honour? What engenders Covetouſneſs, but a miſtaken Fancy of the excellency of Wealth? Thoughts muſt be forſaken as well as our way; we cannot elſe have an evidence of a true Converſion: And if we do not diſcard them, we are not like to have an abundant Pardon; and what will the Iſſue of that be, but an abundant Puniſhment? Mortification muſt extend to theſe: Affections muſt be crucify'd, and all the little Brats of Thoughts, which beget them, or are begotten by them. Shall we nouriſh that which brought down the Wrath of God upon the old World; as though there had not been already ſufficient Experiments of the Miſchief they have done? Is it not our higheſt Excellency to be conform'd to God in Holineſs, in as full a meaſure as our finite Natures are capable? And is not God Holy in his Counſels and inward Operations, as well as in his Works? Hath God any Thoughts but what are righteous and juſt? Therefore the more fooliſh and vain our Imaginations are, the more are we alienated from the Life of God. The Gentiles were ſo, becauſe they walked in the vanity of their Mind; and we ſhall be ſo, if Vanity walk and dwell in ours. As the Tenth Commandment forbids all unlawful Thoughts and Deſires; ſo it obligeth us to all Thoughts and Deſires, that may make us agreeable to the Divine Will, and like to God himſelf. We ſhall find great Advantage by ſuppreſſing them: We can more eaſily reſiſt Temptations without, if we conquer Motions within. Thoughts are the Mutineers in the Soul, which ſet open the Gates for Satan: He hath held a ſecret Intelligence with them (ſo far as he knows them) ever ſince the Fall; and they are his Spies to aſſiſt him in the execution of his Devices. They prepare the Tinder, and the next fiery Dart ſets all on a Flame. Can we cheriſh theſe, if we conſider that Chriſt dy'd for them? He ſhed his Blood for that which put the World out of order? which was accompliſhed by the ſinful Imagination of the firſt Man, and continu'd by thoſe Imaginations mention'd in the Text. He dy'd to reſtore God to his Right, and Man to his Happineſs: neither of which can be perfectly attained, till thoſe be thrown out of the poſſeſſion of the Heart.

Eph. 4. 17, 18.

That we may do this, Let us conſider theſe following Directions, which may be branched into theſe Heads: 1. For the raiſing good Thoughts. 2. Preventing bad. 3. Ordering bad when they do intrude. 4. Ordering good when they appear in us.

1. For raiſing good Thoughts.

1. Get renewed Hearts. The Fountain muſt be cleanſed which breeds the Vermin. Pure Vapours can never aſcend from a filthy Quagmire. What Iſſue can there be of a vain Heart, but vain Imaginations? Thoughts will not become new, till a Man is in Chriſt. We muſt be holy before we can think holily. Sanctification is neceſſary for the diſlodging of vain Thoughts, and the introducing of good. A ſanctified Reaſon would both diſcover, and ſhame our natural Follies. As all animal Operations, ſo all the ſpiritual Motions of our Heads, depend upon the Life of our Hearts * as the principium originis. As there is a Law in our Members to bring us into Captivity to the Law of Sin, Rom. 7. 23. ſo there muſt be a Law in our Minds to bring our Thoughts to the obedience of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 10. 5. We muſt be renewed in the Spirit of our Minds, Epheſ. 4. 23. in our Reaſonings and Thoughts, which are the Spirits whereby the Underſtanding acts; as the animal Spirits are the Inſtruments of corporeal Motion. Till the Underſtanding be born of the Spirit †, it will delight in, and think of, nothing but things ſuitable to its fleſhly original: But when 'tis ſpiritual, it receives new Impreſſions, new Reaſonings and Motions, ſuitable to the Holy Ghoſt, of whom it is born. A Stone, if thrown upwards a thouſand times, will fall backward; becauſe 'tis a forc'd Motion: But if the nature of this Stone were chang'd into that of Fire, it would mount as naturally upward, as before it it ſunk downward. You may force ſome Thoughts toward Heaven ſometimes, but they will not be natural, till Nature be chang'd. Grace only gives ſtability †, and prevents Fluctuation, by fixing the Soul upon God as its chief End: And what is our End will not only be firſt in our Intentions, but moſt frequent in our Conſiderations. Hence a ſanctified Heart is called in Scripture a ſtedfaſt Heart. There muſt be an Enmity againſt Satan put into our our Hearts, according to the firſt Promiſe, before we can have an enmity againſt his Imps, or any thing that is like him.

2. Study Scripture. Original Corruption ſtuffs us with bad Thoughts, and Scripture-knowledge would ſtock us with good ones; for it propoſeth things in ſuch terms, as exceedingly ſuit our imaginative Faculty, as well as ſtrengthen our Underſtanding. Judicious knowledge would make us approve things that are excellent: And where ſuch things are approved, Toys cannot be welcome. Fulneſs is the cauſe of ſtedfaſtneſs. The cauſe of an intent and piercing Eye is the multitude of Animal Spirits. Without this Skill in the Word we ſhall have as fooliſh conceits of Divine things, as ignorant Men, without the Rules of Art have of the Sun and Stars, or things in other Countries which they never ſaw. The Word is call'd, a Lamp to our Feet, i. e. the Affections: A Light to our Eyes, i. e. the Underſtanding. It will direct the glances of our Minds, and the motions of our Affections. It enlightens the Eyes, and makes us have a new proſpect of things: As a Scholar newly entred into Logick, and ſtudied the Predicaments, &c. looks upon every thing with a new Eye, and more rational Thoughts, and is mightily delighted with every thing he ſees; becauſe he eyes them as clothed with thoſe Notions he hath newly ſtudied. The Devil had not his Engines ſo ready to aſſault Chriſt, as Chriſt from his Knowledge had Scripture-Precepts to oppoſe him. As our Saviour by this means ſtifled Thoughts offered, ſo by the ſame we may be able to ſmother Thoughts ariſing in us. Converſe therefore often with the Scripture, tranſcribe it in your Heart, and turn it in ſuccum & ſanguinem; whereby a vigour will be derived into every part of your Soul, as there is by what you eat to every Member of your Body. Thus you will make your Mind Chriſt's Library, as Hierom ſpeaks of Nepotianus.

3. Reflect often upon the frame of your Mind at your firſt Converſion. None have more ſettled, and more pleaſant Thoughts of Divine Things than new Converts, when they firſt claſp about Chriſt; partly becauſe of the novelty of their State, and partly becauſe God puts a full Stock into them; and diligent Trades-men at their firſt ſetting up have their Minds intent upon improving their Stock. Endeavour to put your Mind in the ſame poſture it was then. Or if you cannot tell the time when you did firſt cloſe with Chriſt, recollect thoſe Seaſons wherein you have found your Affections moſt fervent, your Thoughts moſt united, and your Mind moſt elevated; as when you renewed Repentance upon any fall, or had ſome notable chearings from God; and conſider what Matter it was which carried your Heart upward, what employment you were engaged in, when good Thoughts did fill your Soul; and try the ſame Experiment again. Aſaph would oppoſe God's ancient Works to his murmuring Thoughts: He would remember his Song in the Night, i. e. the Matter of his Song, and read over the Records of God's kindneſs. * David too would never forget, i. e. frequently renew the remembrance of thoſe Precepts, whereby God had particularly quicken'd him †. Yea, he would reflect upon the places too, where he had formerly Converſed with God, to reſcue himſelf from dejecting Thoughts; therefore will I remember thee from the Land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the Hill Miſſar ‖. Some Elevations ſurely David had felt in thoſe places, the remembrance whereof would ſweeten the ſharpneſs of his preſent Grief. When our former Sins viſit our Minds, pleading to be ſpeculatively reacted, let us remember the Holy Diſpoſitions we had in our Repentance for them, and the thankful Frames, when God pardoned them. The Diſciples at Chriſt's ſecond appearance reflected upon their own warm Temper, at his firſt diſcourſe with them in a Diſguiſe, to confirm their Faith, and expel their unbelieving Conceits. Strive to recollect Truths, Precepts, Promiſes, with the ſame affection which poſſeſt your Souls, when they firſt appeared in their glory and ſweetneſs to you.

Lu. 24. 32. Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?

4. Ballaſt your Heart with a Love to God. David thought all the Day of God's Law, as other Men do of their Luſts, becauſe he unexpreſſibly loved it *. This was the ſucceſsful means he uſed to ſtifle vain Thoughts, and excite his hatred of them, 'Tis the property of Love to think no Evil, 2 Cor. 13. 5. It thinks good and delightful thoughts of God; friendly and uſeful thoughts of others. It fixeth the Image of our beloved Object in our Minds, that 'tis not in the power of other Fancies to diſplace it. The beauty of an Object will faſten a rolling Eye. 'Tis difficult to divorce our Hearts and Thoughts from that which appears lovely and glorious in our Minds, whether it be God or the World. Love willi by a pleaſing Violence bind down our Thoughts, and hunt away other Affections. If it doth not eſtabliſh our Minds, they will be like a Cork, which with a light Breath, and a ſhort curl of Water, ſhall be toſſed up and down from its Station. Scholars that love Learning, will be continually hammering upon ſome Notion or other, which may further their Progreſs, and as greedily claſp it, as the Iron will its beloved Loadſtone. He that is wing'd with a divine Love to Chriſt, will have frequent glances and flights towards him, and will ſtart out from his worldly buſineſs ſeveral times in a Day, to give him a viſit. Love in the very working is a ſettling Grace; it encreaſeth our delight in God, partly by the ſight of his amiableneſs, which is clear'd to us in the very act of loving, and partly by the recompences he gives to the affectionate carriage of his Creature; both which will ſtake down the Heart from Vagaries, or giving entertainment to ſuch looſe Companions, as evil Thoughts are. Well then, if we had this heavenly Affection ſtrong in us, it would not ſuffer unwholſom Weeds to grow up ſo near it; either our Love would conſume thoſe Weeds, or thoſe Weeds will choak our Love.

5. Exerciſe Faith. As the habit of Faith is attended with habitual Sanctification, ſo the acts of Faith are accompanied with a progreſs in the degrees of it. That Faith which brings Chriſt to dwell in our Souls, will make us often think of our Inmate. Faith doth reallize divine Things, and make abſent Objects as preſent; and ſo furniſheth Fancy with richer Streams to bathe it ſelf in, than any other Principle in the World. As there is a neceſſity of the uſe of Fancy, while the Soul is linked to the Body; ſo there is alſo a neceſſity of a Corrective for it. Reaſon doth in part regulate it, but 'tis too weak to do it perfectly, becauſe Fancy in moſt Men is ſtronger than Reaſon; Man being the higheſt of imaginative Beings, and the loweſt of intelligent; Fancy is in its exaltation more than in Creatures beneath him, and Reaſon in its detriment more than in Creatures above him; and therefore the Imagination needs a more ſkilful guide than Reaſon. Fancy is like Fire, a good Servant but a bad Maſter; if it march under the conduct of Faith, it may be highly ſerviceable, and by putting lively Colours upon divine Truth may ſteal away our Affections to it. Faith is the evidence of things not ſeen, viz. not by a corporeal, but intellectual Eye; and ſo it will ſupply the the office of ſence: 'Tis the ſubſtance of things hoped for; and if Hope be an attendant on Faith, our Thoughts will ſurely follow our Expectations. The remedy David uſed, when he was almoſt ſtifled with diſquieting Thoughts, was to excite his Soul to a hope and confidence in God, Pſal. 42. 5. and when they return'd upon him, he uſeth the ſame diverſion, v. 11. The Peace of God, i. e. the Reconciliation made by a Mediator between God and us believingly apprehended, will keep [or garriſon] our Hearts and Minds [or Thoughts] againſt all anxious Aſſaults both from within and without †. When any vain Conceit creeps up in you, act faith on the interceſſion of Chriſt; and conſider, Is Chriſt thinking of me now in Heaven, and pleading for me, and ſhall I ſquander away my Thoughts on Trifles, which will coſt me both Tears and Bluſhes? Believingly meditate on the Promiſes; they are a means to cleanſe us from the filthineſs of the Spirit, as well as that of the Fleſh *. If the having them be a Motive, the uſing them will be a means to attain this end. Looking at the things that are not ſeen, preſerves us from fainting, and renews the inward Man day by day †. Theſe inviſible things could not well keep our Hearts from fainting, if Faith did not firſt keep the Thoughts from wandring from them.

6. Accuſtom your ſelf to a ſerious Meditation every Morning. Freſh airing our Souls in Heaven will engender in us purer Spirits, and nobler Thoughts. A Morning ſeaſoning would ſecure us for all the Day. Though other neceſſary Thoughts about our Callings will, and muſt come in, yet when we have diſpatch'd them, let us attend our Morning Theme as our chief Companion. As a Man that is going with another about ſome conſiderable buſineſs, ſuppoſe to Weſtminſter, though he meets with ſeveral Friends in the way, and ſalutes ſome, and with others with whom he hath ſome Affairs, he ſpends a little Time, yet he quickly returns to his Companion, and both together go their intended Stage. Do thus in the preſent Caſe. Our Minds are Active, and will be doing ſomething though to little purpoſe; and if they be not fixed upon ſome noble Object, they will like Mad-Men and Fools be mightily pleaſed in playing with Straws. The thoughts of God were the firſt Viſiters David had in the Morning; God and his Heart met together as ſoon as he was awake, and kept Company all the Day after. In this Meditation look both to the Matter and Manner.

Pſal. 139. 17, 18.

1. Look to the Matter of your Meditation. Let it be ſome Truth, which will aſſiſt you in reviving ſome languiſhing Grace, or fortifie you againſt ſome triumphing Corruption; for 'tis our darling ſin which doth moſt envenom our Thoughts †. As if you have a thirſt for Honour, let your Fancy repreſent the Honour of being a Child of God, and Heir of Heaven. If you are inclined to Covetouſneſs, think of the Riches ſtored up in a Saviour, and diſpenſed by him. If to Voluptuouſneſs, fancy the Pleaſures in the ways of Wiſdom here, and at God's right-hand hereafter. This is to deal with our Hearts as Paul with his Hearers, to catch them with guile. Stake your Soul down to ſome ſerious and profitable Myſtery of Religion; as the Majeſty of God, ſome particular Attribute, his condeſcenſion in Chriſt, the love of our Redeemer, the value of his Sufferings, the vertue of his Blood, the end of his Aſcenſion, the work of the Spirit, the excellency of the Soul, beauty of Holineſs, certainty of Death, terror of Judgment, torments of Hell, and joys of Heaven. Why may not that which was the ſubject of God's innumerable Thoughts, be the ſubject of ours? God's Thoughts and Counſels were concerning Chriſt, the end of his Coming, his Death, his Precepts of Holineſs, and promiſes of Life; and that not only ſpeculatively, but with an infinite pleaſure in his own Glory, and the Creatures good to be accompliſhed by him. Would it not be work enough for our Thoughts all the Day, to travel over the length, breadth, height, and depth of the love of Chriſt? Would the greatneſs of the Journey give us leiſure to make any ſtarts out of the way? Having ſettled the Theme for all the Day, we ſhall find occaſional Aſſiſtances, even from worldly Buſineſſes; as Scholars, who have ſome Exerciſe to make, find helps in their own courſe of Reading, tho' the Book hath no deſign'd reſpect to their proper Theme. Thus by imploying our Minds about one thing chiefly, we ſhall not only hinder them from vain excurſions, but make even common Objects to be Oyl to our good Thoughts, which otherwiſe would have been Fuel for our bad. Such generous Liquor would ſcent our Minds and Converſations all the Day; that whatſoever Motion came into our Hearts, would be tinctured with this Spirit, and ſavour of our Morning Thoughts: As Veſſels having been filled with a rich Wine, communicate a reliſh of it to the Liquors afterward put into them. We might alſo more ſteadily go about our worldly Buſineſs, if we carry God in our Minds; as one Foot of the Compaſs will more regularly move about the Circumference, when the other remains firm in the Center.

† Pro. 23. 7. As a Man thinks in his Heart, ſo is he.

The heads of the Catechiſm might be taken in order, which would both encreaſe and actuate our knowledge.

Pſal. 40. 5.

2. Look to the Manner of it.

1. Let it be intent. Tranſitory Thoughts are like the glances of the Eye, ſoon on, and ſoon off; they make no clear diſcovery, and conſequently raiſe no ſprightly Affections. Let it be one principal Subject, and without ſlitting from it; for if our Thoughts be unſteady, we ſhall find but little warmth: A Burning-Glaſs often ſhifted fires nothing. We muſt look at the things that are not ſeen, as wiſtly as Men do at a mark they ſhoot at. Such an intent Meditation would change us into the Image, and caſt us into the Mould of thoſe Truths we think of; it would make our Minds more buſie about them all the Day: As a glaring upon the Sun fills our Eyes for ſome time after with the Image of it. To this purpoſe look upon your ſelves as deeply concern'd in the things you think of. Our Minds dwell upon that whereof we apprehend an abſolute neceſſity. A condemned Perſon would ſcarce think of any thing but procuring a Reprieve, and his earneſtneſs for this would bar the door againſt other Intruders.

2 Co. 4. 18. σκοπούντων 2 Co. 3. 18.

2. Let it be affectionate and practical. Meditation ſhould excite a ſpiritual Delight in God, as it did in the Pſalmiſt †; and a divine Delight would keep up good Thoughts, and keep out Impertinencies. A bare ſpeculation will tire the Soul, and without application, and preſſing upon the Will and Affections, will rather chill, than warm Devotion. 'Tis only by this means, that we ſhall have the efficacy of Truth in our Wills, and the ſweetneſs in our Affections, as well as the notion of it in our Underſtandings. The more operative any Truth is in this manner upon us, the leſs power will other Thoughts have to interrupt, and the more diſdainfully will the Heart look upon them, if they dare be impudent. Never therefore leave thinking of a ſpiritual Subject, till your Heart be affected with it. If you think of the evil of Sin, leave not till your Heart loath it; if of God, ceaſe not till it mount up in admirations of him. If you think of his Mercy, melt for abuſing it; if of his Soveraignty, awe your Heart into obedient Reſolutions; if of his Preſence, double your watch over your ſelf. If you meditate on Chriſt, make no end till your Hearts love him; if of his Death, plead the value of it for the juſtification of your Perſons, and apply the vertue of it for the ſanctification of your Natures. Without this practical ſtamp upon our Affections, we ſhall have light Spirits, while we have opportunity to converſe with the moſt ſerious Objects. We often hear fooliſh Thoughts breathing out themſelves in a Houſe of Mourning, in the midſt of Coffins, and trophies of Death, as if Men were confident they ſhould never die; whereas none are ſo ridiculous as to aſſert they ſhall live for ever. By this inſtance in a Truth ſo certainly aſſented to, we may judge of the neceſſity of this direction in Truths more doubtfully believed.

† Pſa. 104. 34. My meditation of him ſhall be ſweet: I will be glad in the Lord.

7. Draw ſpiritual Inferences from occaſional Objects. Pſa. 8. 3,4. David did but wiſtly conſider the Heavens, and he breaks out in ſelf-abaſement, and humble admirations of God. Glean matter of Inſtruction to your ſelves, and Praiſe to your Maker, from every thing you ſee: It will be a degree of reſtoration to a ſtate of Innocency, ſince this was Adam's Task in Paradiſe. Dwell not on any created Object only as a Virtuoſo, to gratifie your rational Curioſity, but as a Chriſtian call Religion to the Feaſt, and make a ſpiritual Improvement. No Creature can meet our Eyes, but affords us Leſſons worthy our Thoughts, beſides the general notices of the Power and Wiſdom of the Creator. Thus may the Sheep read us a Lecture of Patience, the Dove of Innocence, the Ant and Bee raiſe Bluſhes in us for our ſluggiſhneſs, and the ſtupid Oxe, and dull Aſs correct and ſhame our ungrateful Ignorance. And ſince our Saviour did ſet forth his own Excellency in a ſenſible Dreſs, the conſideration of thoſe Metaphors by an acute Fancy, would garniſh out divine Truths more deliciouſly, and conduct us into a more inward knowledge of the Myſteries of the Goſpel. He whoſe Eyes are open, cannot want an Inſtructer, unleſs he wants a Heart. Thus may a Tradeſman ſpiritualize the Matter he works upon, and make his Commodities ſerve in wholſome Meditations to his Mind, and at once enrich both his Soul and his Coffers; yea, and, in part, reſtore the Creatures to the happineſs of anſwering a great end of their Creation, which Man depriv'd them of when he ſubjected them to Vanity. Such a view of ſpiritual Truths in ſenſible Pictures would clear our Knowledge, purifie our Fancies, animate our Affections, encourage our Graces, diſgrace our Vices, and both argue and ſhame us into Duty; and thus take away all the Cauſes of our wild wandring Thoughts at once. And a frequent exerciſe of this Method would beget and ſupport a habit of thinking well, and weaken, if not expel, a habit of thinking ill.

2. The ſecond ſort of Directions are for the preventing bad Thoughts. And to this purpoſe, Pro. 30. 32. 1. Exercije frequent Humiliations. Pride expoſeth us to impatient and diſquieting Thoughts; whereas Humility clears up a calm and ſerenity in the Soul. 'Tis Agur's Advice to be humbled particularly for evil Thoughts. Frequent Humiliations will deaden the Fire within, and make the ſparks the fewer. The deeper the Plough ſinks, the more the Weeds are killed, and the Ground fitted for good Grain. Men do not eaſily fall into thoſe ſins, for which they have been deeply humbled. Vain Conceits love to reſide moſt in jolly Hearts: But Eccl. 7. 3,4. by the ſadneſs of the Countenance the Heart is made better. There is more of Wiſdom, or wiſe Conſideration in a compoſed and graciouſly mournful Spirit, whereas Carnal Mirth and Sports cauſe the Heart to evaporate into Lightneſs and Folly. The more we are humbled for them, the more our hatred of them will be fomented; and conſequently the more prepared ſhall we be to give them a repulſe upon any bold intruſion.

2. Avoid entangling your ſelves with the World. This Clay will clog our Minds, and a dirty Happineſs will engender but dirty Thoughts. Who were ſo fooliſh to have inward thoughts that their Houſes ſhould continue for ever, but thoſe that truſted in their Riches *? If the World poſſeſs our Souls, it will breed carking Thoughts: Much Buſineſs meets with Croſſes, and then it breeds murmuring Thoughts; and ſometimes it is crown'd with Succeſs, and then it ſtarts proud and ſelf-applauding Thoughts. Thoſe that will be Rich, fall into many fooliſh and hurtful Luſts; ſuch Luſts that make Men Fools; and one part of Folly is to have wild and ſenſleſs Fancies. Miſts and Fogs are in the lower Region near the Earth, but reach not that next the Heavens. Were we free from Earthly Affections, theſe groſs Vapours could not ſo eaſily diſturb our Minds; but if the World once ſettle in our Hearts, we ſhall never want the Fumes of it to fill our Heads. And as covetous Deſires will ſtuff us with fooliſh Imaginations, ſo they will ſmother any good Thought caſt into us; as the Thorns of worldly Cares choak'd the good Seed, and made it unfruitful, Matth. 13. 12. As we are to rejoyce in the World as though we rejoyced not; ſo, by the ſame reaſon, we ſhould think of the World as though we thought not. A conformity with the World in Affection is inconſiſtent with a change of the frame of the Mind.

Rom. 12. 2

3. Avoid Idleneſs. Serious Callings do naturally compoſe Mens Spirits; but too much Recreation makes them blaze out in Vanity. Idle Souls, as well as idle Perſons, will be ranging. As Idleneſs in a State is both the Mother and Nurſe of Faction; and in the natural Body gives birth and encreaſe to many Diſeaſes, by enfeebling the natural Heat: So it both kindles and foments many light and unprofitable Imaginations in the Soul, which would be ſufficiently diverted, if the active Mind were kept intent upon ſome ſtated work. So truly may that which was ſaid of the Servant, be applied to our nobler part, that it will be wicked, if once it degenerates into ſloathfulneſs in its proper Charge. As empty Minds are the fitteſt Subjects for extravagant Fooleries; ſo vacant Times are the fitteſt Seaſons. While we ſleep, the importunate Enemy within, as well as the envious Adverſary without us, will have a ſucceſsful opportunity to ſow the Tares; whereas a conſtant Imployment fruſtrates the Attempt, and diſcourageth the Devil, becauſe he ſees we are not at leiſure. Therefore when any ſinful Motion ſteps in, double thy Vigour about thy preſent buſineſs, and the fooliſh Impertinent will ſneak out of thy Heart at this diſcountenance. So true is that in this Caſe, which Pharaoh falſly imagined in another, that the more we Labour, the leſs we ſhall regard vain words †. As Satan is prevented by diligence in our Callings, ſo ſometimes the Spirit viſits us, and fills us with holy Affections at ſuch Seaſons; as Chriſt appeared to Peter and other Diſciples, when they were a Fiſhing †; and uſually manifeſted his Grace to Men, when they were engaged in their uſeful Buſineſſes, or Religious Services. But theſe Motions (as we may obſerve by the way) which come from the Spirit, are not to put us out of our way, but to aſſiſt us in our walking in it, and further us both in our Attendance on, and ſucceſs in our Duties. To this end look upon the work of your Callings as the work of God, which ought to be done in Obedience to Him; as He had ſent you to be uſeful in the the Community. Thus a holy Exerciſe of our Callings would ſanctifie our Minds, and by prepoſſeſſing them with ſolid Buſineſs, we ſhould leave little room for any Spider to weave its Cobwebs.

4. Awe your Hearts with the thoughts of God's Omniſcience, eſpecially the diſcovery of it at the laſt Judgment. We are very much Atheiſts in the Concern of this Attribute: for though it be notionally believ'd, yet for the moſt part it is practically deny'd. God underſtands all our Thoughts afar off †: As He knew every Creature which lay hid in the Chaos, and undigeſted Lump of Matter. God *is in us all ; as much in us all, as He is above us all; yea in every Creek, and Chink, and Point of our Hearts. Not an Atom in the Spirits of all Men in the World, but is obvious to that All-ſeeing Eye, which knows every one of thoſe things that come into our Minds †. God knows both the Order and Confuſion of them, and can better tell their Natures one by one, than Adam named the Creatures. Fancy then, that you hear the ſound of the laſt Trumpet, that you ſee God's Tribunal ſet, and His Omniſcience calling out ſingly all the Secrets of your Heart. Would not the Conſideration of this allay the heat of all other Imaginations? If a fooliſh Thought break in, conſider, What if God, who knows this, ſhould preſently call me to Judgment for this ſinful Glance? Say with the Church, Shall not God ſearch this out? Is it fit either for God's Glory, or our Intereſt, that when he comes to make inquiſition in us, He ſhould find ſuch a naſty Dunghil, and ſwarms of Ægyptian Lice and Frogs creeping up and down our Chambers? Were our Heads and Hearts poſſeſt by this ſubſtantial Truth, we ſhould be aſhamed to think what we ſhall be aſhamed to own at the laſt Day.

5. Keep a conſtant Watch over your Hearts. David deſires God to ſet a Watch before the Door of his Lips; much more ſhould we deſire that God would keep the Door of our Hearts. We ſhou'd have Grace ſtand Sentinel there eſpecially; for Words have an outward Bridle, they may diſgrace a Man, and impair his Intereſt and Credit; but Thoughts are unknown, if undiſcover'd by Words. If a Man knew what time the Thief would come to rob him, he would watch. We know we have Thieves within us to ſteal away our Hearts; therefore when they are ſo near us, we ſhou'd watch againſt a Surprize, and the more carefully, becauſe they are ſo extraordinary ſudden in their Riſe, and quick in their Motion. Our Minds are like idle School-boys, that will be friſking from one place to another, if the Maſter's Back be turned, and playing inſtead of learning. Let a ſtrict hand be kept over our Affections, thoſe wild Beaſts within us; becauſe they many times force the Underſtanding to paſs a Judgment according to their Pleaſure, not its own Sentiment. Young Men ſhou'd be moſt intent upon their Guard, becauſe their Fancies gather Vigor from their Youthful Heat, which fires a world of Squibs in a Day, (which Mad-men, and thoſe which have hot Diſeaſes are ſubject to, becauſe of the exceſſive Inflammation of their Brains:) and partly becauſe they are not ſprung up to a maturity of Knowledge, which wou'd breed and foſter better Thoughts, and diſcover the plauſible Pretences of vain Affections. There are particular Seaſons wherein we muſt double our Guard; as when Incentives are preſent, that may ſet ſome inward Corruption on a Flame. Timothy's Office was to exhort the younger as well as elder Women: And the Apoſtle wiſheth him to do it with all Purity and Chaſtity, that a Temptation, lying in ambuſh for him, might not take his Thoughts and Affections unguarded. Engage thy Diligence more at ſolitary times, and in the Night, wherein freedom from Buſineſs gives an opportunity to an unſanctified Imagination, to conjure up a thouſand evil Spirits: Whence perhaps it is that the Pſalmiſt tells us, God had try'd him in the Night, and found him Holy. The ſolitary Cave tainted Lot with Inceſt, who had preſerv'd himſelf freſh in the midſt of the Salt Luſts of Sodom. In ill Company, wherein we may be occaſionally caſt, there is need of an exacter Obſervation of our Hearts, leſt corrupt Steams which riſe from them, as Vapours from Lakes and Minerals, being breath'd in by us, may tincture our Spirits; or as thoſe μιάσματα, which (as Phyſicians tell us) exhaling from conſumptive Perſons, do by inſpiration ſteal into our Blood, and convey a Contagion to us. And though above all keepings and watchings we are to keep and watch our Hearts, becauſe out of them are the Iſſues of Life; yet we muſt walk the Rounds about our Senſes, and Members of the Body, as the Wiſe Man there adviſeth, v. 24. the Mouth which utters Wickedneſs; the Eyes, v. 25. which are Brokers to make Bargains for the Heart; and v. 26. the Feet, which are Agents to run on the Errands of Sin. And the rather muſt we watch over our Senſes, becauſe we are naturally more ready to follow the Motions of them, as having had a longer Acquaintance and Familiarity with them before we grew up to the uſe of Reaſon. Beſides, moſt of our Thoughts creep in firſt at the Windows of Senſe. The Eye and the Ear robb'd Eve of Original Righteouſneſs; and the Eye rifled David both of his Juſtice and Chaſtity. If the Eyes behold ſtrange Women, the Heart will utter perverſe things, Prov. 23. 33. Perverſe Thoughts will ſparkle from a rolling Eye. Revel-rout is uſual where there is a negligent Governour. He that hath no rule over his own Spirit, is like a City that is broken down, and without Walls †, where any Thieves may go in and out at pleaſure.

3. The third ſort of Directions are for the ordering of evil Thoughts, when they do intrude; and,

1. Examine them. Look often into your Heart to ſee what it is doing; and what Thoughts you find dabling in it, call to an account: enquire what Buſineſs they have, what their Errand and Deſign is, whence they come, and whither they tend. David askt his Soul the reaſon of its troubled Thoughts; ſo ask thy Heart the reaſon why it entertains ſuch ill Company, and by what Authority they come there, and leave not chiding, till thou haſt put it to the bluſh. Bring every Thought to the teſt of the Word. Aſaph had envious Thoughts at the proſperity of the Wicked, Pſal. 73. 2, 3. which had almoſt tript him up, and laid him on his Back. And theſe had blown up Atheiſtical Thoughts that God did not much regard whether his Commands were kept or no; as though God had untied the Link between Duty and Reward, and the Breach of his Laws were the readieſt Means to a favourable Recompence; v. 13. I have cleanſed my Hands in vain. But when he weighed things in the Ballance of the Sanctuary, by the holy Rules of God's Patience and Juſtice, v. 17. He ſees the brutiſhneſs of his former Conceits; v. 22. So fooliſh was I and ignorant, I was as the Beaſt before thee; and v. 25. he makes an Improvement of them to excite his Deſire for God, and Delight in him. Let us compare our Thoughts with Scripture-rules. Comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, is the way way to understand them; comparing spiritual Sins with spiritual Commands, is the way to know them; and comparing spiritual Vices with spiritual Graces, is the way to loath them. Take not then any thing upon trust from a crazy Fancy; nor, without a Scrutiny, believe that Faculty whereby Dogs dream, and Animals perform their natural Exploits.

2. Check them at the first Appearance. If they bear upon them a palpable mark of Sin, bestow not upon them the honour of an Examination. If the Leprosie appear in their Foreheads, thrust them, as the Priests did Uzziah, out of the Temple; or as David answer'd his wicked Sollicitors, Psal. 119. 115. Depart from me ye evil doers; for I will keep the Commandments of my God. Though we cannot hinder them from haunting us, yet we may from lodging in us. The very sparkling of an abominable Motion in our Hearts is as little to be look'd upon, as the Colour of Wine in a Glass by a Man inclined to Drunkenness. Quench them instantly, as you wou'd do a Spark of Fire in a heap of Straw. We must not treat with them: Paul's Resolve is a good Pattern, not to confer with Flesh and Blood †. We do not debate whether we shou'd shake a Viper off our Hands. If it be plainly a sinful Motion, a Treaty with it is a degree of Disobedience; for a putting it to the question whether we shou'd suckle it, is to question whether God shou'd be obey'd or no. If it savour not of the things of God, hear not its Reasons, and complement it with no less Indignation than our Saviour did his officious Disciple upon his carnal Advice, Get thee behind me Satan, Mat. 16. 22, 23. Excuse it not because 'tis little: Small Vapours may compact themselves into great Clouds, and obstruct our sight of Heaven: A little Poison may spread its Venom through a great quantity of Meat. We know not how big a small Motion, like a Crocodile's Egg, may grow, and how ravenous the Breed may prove: It may, if entertain'd, force our Judgment, drag our Will, and make all our Affections Bedlams. Besides, since the Fancy is that Power in us upon which the Devil can immediately imprint his Suggestions, and that we know not what Army he hath to back any sinful Motion, if once the Gate be set open; let us crush the Brat betimes, and fling the Head over the Wall, to discourage the Party. Well then, let us be ashamed to cherish that in our Thoughts, which we should be ashamed shou'd break out in our Words or Actions: Therefore as soon as you perceive it base, spit it out with detestation; as you do a thing you unexpectedly find ungrateful to your Palate.

Hic Annibal virtute, non morâ frangitur. †Gal. 1.16

Ex hinc nota est infirmitas mea: quia multo facilius irrumpunt abominandæ phantasiæ quàm discedunt. Kemp. de Imit. Chr. Lib. 3. c. 20.

3. Improve them. Poisons may be made medicinable. Let the Thoughts of old Sins stir up a Commotion of Anger and Hatred. We feel Shiverings in our Spirits, and a Motion in our Blood at the very thought of a bitter Potion we have formerly taken; why may we not do that spiritually, which the very Frame and Constitution of our Bodies doth naturally, upon the calling a lothsome thing to mind? The Romans Sins were transient, but the Shame was renewed every time they reflected on them †: They reacted a Detestation instead of the Pleasure: So should the Revivings of old Sins in our Memories be entertain'd with our Sighs rather than our Joy. We should also manage the Opportunity so as to promote some further degrees of our Conversion *. There is not the most hellish Motion, but we may strike some Sparks from it, to kindle our love to God, renew our Repentance, raise our Thankfulness, or quicken our Obedience. Is it a blasphemous Motion against God? It gives you a just occasion thence to awe your Heart into a deeper Reverence of His Majesty. Is it a lustful Thought? Open the Floud-gates of your godly Sorrow, and groan for your Original Sin. Is it a Remembrance of your former Sin? Let it wind up your Heart in the Praises of him, who deliver'd you from it. Is it to tempt you from Duty? Endeavour to be more zealous in the Performance of it. Is it to set you at a distance from God? Resolve to be a Light shining the clearer in that Darkness, and let it excite you to a closer adherence to him. Are they envious Thoughts which steal upon you? Let Thankfulness be the Product, that you enjoy so much as you do, and more than you deserve. Let Satan's fiery Darts enflame your Love rather than your Lust, and like a skilful Pilot, make use of the violence of the Winds, and raging of the Sea to further you in your spiritual Voyage. This is to beat the Devil and our own Hearts with their own Weapons; who will have little Stomach to fight with those Arms wherewith they see themselves wounded. There is not a Remembrance of the worst Objects but may be improved to Humility and Thankfulness; as St. Paul never thought of his old persecuting, but he sank down in Humiliation, and mounted up in Admirations of the Riches of Grace.

† Rom. 6. 21 Whereof you are now ashamed.

Psal. 119. 59. I thought on my ways, and turned my Feet unto thy testimonies.

4. Continue your Resistance, if they still importune thee; and lay not down thy Weapons till they wholly shrink from thee. As the Wise Man speaks of a Fool's Words, so I may not only of our blacker, but our more aerial Fancies, The beginning of them is foolishness, but if suffer'd to gather Strength, they may end in mischievous Madness; therefore if they do continue, or reassume their Arms, we must continue and reassume our Shield *. Resistance makes the Devil and his Imps fly: But Forbearance makes them impudent. In a Battel when one Party faints and retreats, it adds new Spirits to the Enemy that was almost broken before: So will these Motions be the more vigorous, if they perceive we begin to flag. That encouraging Command, Resist the Devil, and he will flie from you †, implies not only the beginning a Fight, but continuance in it, till he doth fly. We must not leave the Field, till they cease their Importunity; nor encrease their Courage by our own Cowardise.

5. Joyn Supplication with your Opposition. Watch and Pray are sometimes linkt together *. The Diligence and Multitude of our Enemies should urge us to watch, that we be not surpriz'd; and our own Weakness, and proneness to Presumption, should make us pray, that we may be powerfully assisted. Be as frequent in solliciting God, as they are in solliciting you: As they knock at your Heart for Entrance, so do you knock at Heaven for Assistance. And take this for your Comfort, as the Devil takes their parts, so Christ will take yours at his Father's Throne: He that pray'd that the Devil might not winnow Peter's Faith, will intercede that your own Heart may not winnow yours. If the Waves come upon you, and you are ready to sink, cry out with Peter, Master I perish; and you shall feel his Hand raising you, and the Winds and Waves rebuked into Obedience by him. The very Motion of your Hearts Heaven-ward at such a time, is a Refusal of the Thought that presseth upon you, and will be so put upon your account. When any of these buzzing Flies discompose you, or more violent Hurricanes shake your Minds, cry out with David, Unite my Heart to fear thy Name; and a powerful Word will soon silence these disturbing Enemies, and settle your Souls in a calm and a praising Posture.

Psal. 86. 11, 12.

4. A Fourth ſort of Directions is concerning good Motions; whether they ſpring naturally from a gracious Principle, or are peculiarly breath'd in by the Spirit. There are ordinary Bubblings of Grace in a renewed Mind, as there are of Sins in an unregenerate Heart; for Grace is as active a Principle as any, becauſe 'tis a participation of the Divine Nature. But there are other Thoughts darted in beyond the ordinary Strain of Thinking; which like the Beams of the Sun, evidence both themſelves and their Original. And as concerning theſe Motions joyn'd together, take theſe Directions in ſhort.

1. Welcome and entertain them. As 'tis our Happineſs, as well as our Duty, to ſtifle evil Motions; ſo 'tis our Miſery, as well as our Sin, to extinguiſh Heavenly. Strange Fire ſhould be preſently quench'd, but that which deſcends from Heaven upon the Altar of a holy Soul, muſt be kept alive by quickning Meditation. When a Holy Thought lights ſuddenly upon you, which hath no connexion with any antecedent Buſineſs in your Mind, (provided it be not unſeaſonable, nor hinder you from any abſolutely neceſſary Duty either of Religion, or your Calling) receive it as a Meſſenger from Heaven; and the rather becauſe 'tis a Stranger. You know not but you may entertain an Angel, yea, ſomething greater than an Angel, even the Holy Ghoſt. Open all the Powers of your Souls, like ſo many Organ-pipes, to receive the breath of this Spirit when he blows upon you. 'Tis a ſign of an agreeableneſs between the Heart and Heaven, when we cloſe with, and preſerve Spiritual Motions. We need not ſtand long to examine them; they are evident by their holineſs, ſweetneſs, and ſpirituality. We may as eaſily diſcern them, as we can exotick Plants from thoſe that grow naturally in our own Soil; or as a Palate at the firſt taſte can diſtinguiſh between a rich and generous Wine, and a rough Water. The Thoughts inſtill'd by the Spirit of Adoption are not violent, tumultuous, full of perturbation; but, like himſelf, gentle and Dove-like Solicitings, warm and holy Impulſes, and (when cheriſhed) leave the Soul in a more humble, heavenly, pure, and believing Temper than they found it. 'Tis a high Aggravation of Sin to reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 7. 51. Yet we may quench his Motions by Neglect as well as by Oppoſition, and by that means loſe both the Profit and Pleaſure, which would have attended the Entertainment. Salvation came both to Zachens his Houſe and Heart, upon embracing the firſt Motion our Saviour was pleaſed to make him: Had he ſlighted that, 'tis uncertain whether another ſhould have been beſtowed upon him. The more ſuch Sprouts are planted and nouriſhed in us, the leſs room will ſtinking Weeds have to root themſelves, and diſperſe their Influence. And for thy own good Thoughts, feed them and keep them alive, that they may not be like a Blaze of Straw which takes birth, and expires the ſame Minute. Brood upon them, and kill them not, as ſome Birds do their young ones, by too often flying from their Neſts. David kept up a Staple of ſound and good Thoughts: he would ſcarce elſe have deſired God to try and know them, had they been only ſome few weak Flaſhes at uncertain times.

Οὐσιωδῶς τῷ Θεῷ. Polycarp. Epiſt. ad Phil. termsholy Perſons.

Gal. 5. 22.

Pſ. 139. 23. Try me and know my Thoughts.

2. Improve them for thoſe Ends to which they naturally tend. 'Tis not enough to give them a bare Reception, and forbear the ſmothering of them; but we muſt conſider what Affections are proper to be rais'd by them, either in the ſearch of ſome Truth, or performance of ſome Duty. Thoſe Gleams, which ſhoot into us on the ſudden, have ſome Leſſon ſeal'd up in them, to be opened, and learned by us. When Peter upon the crowing of the Cock call'd to mind his Maſter's Admonition, he thought thereon and wept †: he did not only receive the Spark, but kindled a ſuitable Affection. A choice Graft, though kept very carefully by us, yet if not preſently ſet, will wither, and diſappoint our Expectation of the deſired Fruit. No Man is without ſome ſecret Whiſpers to diſſwade him from ſome alluring and baſie Sin †; as Cain by an audible Voice, Gen. 4. 7. which had he obſerved to the damping the revengeful Motion againſt his Brother, he had prevented his Brother's Death, his own Deſpair and eternal Ruin. Have you any Motion to ſeek God's Face, as David had? Let your Hearts reply, Thy Face; Lord, will I ſeek *. The Addreſs will be moſt acceptable at ſuch a time, when your Heart is tuned by One that ſearcheth the deep things of God †, and knows his Mind, and what Airs are moſt delightful to him. Let our Motion be quick in any Duty which the Spirit doth ſuggeſt; and while he heaves our Hearts, and oyls our Wheels, we ſhall do more in any religious Service, and that more pleaſantly and ſucceſsfully, than at another time with all our own Art and Induſtry; for his Injections are like Water pour'd into a Pump to raiſe up more; and as Satan's Motions are not without a main Body to ſecond them, ſo neither do the Spirits go unattended, without a ſufficient Strength to aſſiſt the Entertainers of them. Well then, lie not at Anchor when a freſh Gale would fill thy Sails, but lay hold of the preſent Opportunity. Theſe Seaſons are often like thoſe Influences from certain Conjunctions of the Planets, which if not (according to the Aſtrologers Opinion) preſently applied, paſs away, and return not again in many Ages: So the Spirit's Breathings are often determined, that if they be not entertain'd with ſuitable Affections, the time will be unregainable, and the ſame gracious Opportunities of a ſweet Intercourſe may be for ever loſt; for God will not have his Holy Spirit diſhonour'd in always ſtriving with wilful Man. When Judas neglected our Saviour's Advertiſement, John 13. 21. the Devil quickly enters and hurries him to the execution of his traiterous Project, v. 27. and he never meets with any Motion afterwards, but from his new Maſter, and that eternally fatal both to his Body and Soul.

* God ſpeaks once, yea, twice, that he may withdraw Man from his purpoſe. Pſa. 27. 8.

† 1 Cor. 2. 10.

3. Refer them, if poſſible, to aſſiſt your Morning Meditation; that like little Brooks ariſing from ſeveral Springs, they may meet in one Channel, and compoſe a more uſeful Stream. What ſtraggling good Thoughts ariſe, though they may owe their birth to ſeveral Occaſions, and tend divers ways, yet liſt them in the Service of that Truth, to which you have committed the Government of your Mind that Day: As Conſtables in a time of neceſſary Buſineſs for the King, take up Men that are going about their honeſt and lawful Occaſions, and force them to joyn in one Employ for the Publick Service. Many accidental Glances (as was obſerv'd before) will ſerve both to fix and illuſtrate your Morning Propoſition. But if it be an extraordinary Injection, and cannot be referred to your ſtanding Theſis, follow it, and let your Thoughts run whither it will lead you: A Theme of the Spirit's ſetting is better than one of our own chuſing.

4. Record the choicer of them. We may have occaſion to look back upon them another time, either as grounds of Comfort in ſome Hour of Temptation,

Temptation, or directions in ſome ſudden emergency; but conſtantly as perſuaſive Engagements to our neceſſary Duty. Thus they may lye by us for further uſe, as Money in our Purſe. Since Mary kept and ponder'd the ſhort Sayings of our Saviour in her Heart, † committing and fitting them as it were in her common-place Book; why ſhould not we alſo preſerve the whiſpers of that Spirit, who receives from the ſame Mouth and Hand, what he both ſpeaks and ſhews to us? It is pity the Duſt and Filings of choicer Metals, which may one time be melted down into a Maſs, ſhould be loſt in a heap of droſſy Thoughts. If we do not remember them, but like Children, are taken with their Novelty, more than their Subſtance; and like John Baptiſt's Hearers, rejoyce in their light only for a Seaſon †, it will diſcourage the Spirit from ſending any more; and then our Hearts will be empty, and we know who ſtands ready to clap in his helliſh Swarms and Legions. But howſoever we do, God will record our good Thoughts as our Excuſers, if we improve them; as our Accuſers, if we reject them; and as He took notice how often He had appear'd to Solomon †, ſo He will take notice how often His Spirit hath appeared to us, and write down every Motion, whereby we have been ſolicited, that they may be witneſſes of His endeavours for our good, and our own wilfulneſs.

Συμβάλλαπτε. Συυβάλλων, συναρμόζων. Heſych.

†Joh. 5 35.

† 1 Kings 11, 9.

5. Back them with Ejaculations. Let our Hearts be ready to attend every Injection from Heaven with a motion to it: Since 'tis Ingratitude to receive a Preſent, without returning an acknowledgment to the Benefactor. As God turns His Thoughts of us into Promiſes, ſo let us turn our Thoughts of Him into Prayers; and ſince his Regards of us are darted in Beams upon us, let them be reflected back upon Him in thankfulneſs for the Gift, and earneſtneſs both for the continuance and encreaſe of ſuch Impreſſions; as David prayed that God would not take his holy Spirit from him †, which had inſpired him with his Penitential Reſolutions. To what purpoſe doth the Holy Ghoſt deſcend upon us, but to declare to us the things which are freely given us of God †? And is it fit for us to hear ſuch a Declaration, without a quick ſuitable Reflection? Since the Comforter is to bring to our remembrance † what Chriſt both ſpake and did; it muſt be for the ſame end, for which they were both ſpoken and acted by him, which was to bring us to a near Converſe with God. Therefore when the Spirit renews in our Minds a Goſpel-truth, let us turn it into a preſent Plea, and be God's Remembrancers of His own Promiſes, as the Spirit is our remembrancer of Divine Truths. We need not doubt ſome rich Fruit of the application at ſuch a Seaſon; ſince, without queſtion, the impreſſions the Spirit ſtamps upon us, are as much according to God's Will †, as the Interceſſions he makes for us. Therefore when any holy Thought doth advance it ſelf in our Souls, the moſt grateful reception we can beſtow upon it, will be to ſuffer our Hearts to be immediately fired by it, and imitate, with a glowing Devotion the Royal Prophet, in that form he hath drawn up to our hands; O Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and of Iſrael our Fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the Thoughts of the Heart of thy Servant, and prepare my Heart unto thee †. This will be an encouragement to God to ſend more ſuch Gueſts into our Hearts. And by an affectionate entertainment of them, we ſhall gain both a habit of thinking well, and a ſtock too.

A DISCOURSE OF THE Churches Stability.

Pſal. 87. 5. And of Sion it ſhall be ſaid, This and that Man was born in her; and the Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

THE Author of this Pſalm, and the time when it was penn'd, are uncertain. Some think it was compos'd after the return of the Jews from Babylon, upon the Erection of the ſecond Temple, and deſigned to be ſung in their conſtant Publick Aſſemblies. Others think it was compos'd by David, when he brought the Ark to Sion, as the Repoſitory for it, till the building of the Temple, wherein it might honourably reſt. It ſeems, whoever was the Author, to be Ecſtatical. The Penman breaks out into a holy Rapture and Admiration of the firmneſs and ſtability of the Church. 'Tis alſo Prophetical of the Chriſtian Church, of the Glory of it, the largeneſs of its Bounds, and perpetual Duration. The Jews ridiculouſly interpret it of literal Jeruſalem, in regard of the excellency of its Climate, the goodneſs of the Air, being ſeated in the middle or navel of the Earth, and the ſeat and ſpring of all the wiſe Men, accounting all Fools that were to be found in other Parts; 'tis true, others were not wiſe with a wiſdom to Salvation; they were not inſtructed in the high Myſteries of Religion by God, as thoſe People were. But was there not Learning among the Greeks, and Wiſdom among the Chaldæans, and a ripeneſs in Mechanick Arts among the Tyrians, which lived in the ſame Climate with the Jews? It can by no means be underſtood of the material Jeruſalem and Sion; that was ruin'd by the Babylonians, and tho' re-edified, yet afterwards ſubverted by the Romans, and the remainders of it at this Day become a Stable Stable for Mahomet, and the bringing in those Nations mention'd, v. 4. overthrows any such interpretation, which never were inrol'd in the Registers of Sion, nor became Votaries to the true Religion, while the Walls of that place were standing in their Glory. Sion was the place whence the Law was to come, Mich. 4. 2. a Law of another nature, than that which was uttered with Thunders from Mount Sinai. Sion was the place where the Throne of Christ was to be settled, where he was to be crowned King, Psal. 2. 6. and where he was to manage the Scepter, and rule in the midst of his Enemies, Psal. 110. 2. and therefore 'tis here celebrated as the figure of the Christian Church; of that City which Abraham expected, whose builder and maker is God, Heb. 11. 10. And the Christian Church is particularly called by this name of Mount Sion, Heb. 12. 21. And Believers are called the Sons of Sion, Joel 2. 23. The Psalmist speaks,

1. Of the great love the Lord bears to Sion, v. 2.
2. Of the glory of the Promises made to her, v. 3.
3. Of the confluence of new Inhabitants to her, v. 4.
4. Of the Duration and Establishment of her, v. 5.

v. 1. His Foundation. The Foundation of God, i. e. That which God hath founded, that Jerusalem which is of God's Building, is seated in the Holy Mountain; the City was built before Joshuah conquered Canaan: But God is said to be the Founder of it, in regard of that peculiar Glory to which it was designed, to be the rest of his Ark, the place of his Worship, the Throne of the Types of the Messiah, the Seat whence the Evangelick Law was to be publish'd to all Nations, and the Messiah revealed as the Redeemer and Ruler of the World.

In the holy Mountains. Jerusalem was seated upon high Mountains. The Palace of the Kings was built upon Sion, and the Temple, the House of the Most High, was built upon Moriah, and encompass'd with Mountains round about, Psal. 125. 2. an emblem of the strength and stability of the Church. * Holy Mountains; not that there was an inherent Holiness in them more than in the other Mountains of the Earth; or that they were naturally more beautiful and stately than other Mountains; but becaufe they were separated for the Worship and Service of God, and had been ennobled by the performance of a Worship there before the building of the Temple. It was upon Moriah that Isaac was designed for a Sacrifice, and the most signal act of Obedience performed to God by the Father of the Faithful. It was there also that David appeased the Wrath of God, by Sacrifice, after it had issued out upon the People in a Plague, for the numbring of them: And the very name Moriah hath something sacred in it, it signifying either God teaching, or God manifested; which name might be given it by God, with respect to the manifestation of Christ who was to come, during the standing of the second Temple.

* Daillé. Melange, Part 2. Page 354.

v. 2. The Lord loves the Gates of Sion.] By Gates in Scripture is meant the Strength, or Wisdom, or Justice of a Place. Gates were the Magazines of Arms, and the places of Judicature. He had manifested his love to her in chusing that City before all the Cities of Israel and Judah, wherein to place his Name, and have his Worship celebrated; and that place in Jerusalem particularly, where his Law should be given by the Spirit to the Apostles upon the day of Pentecost; and to apply it to the Gospel-Church, it signifies the special respect God bears to her, above all the Rites, Observancies, and Ceremonies of the Judaick Institution. It was in this Gospel-Church, the true Sion, that he desired to dwell, and will remain for ever, Psal. 68. 17. Which is a Prophetick Psalm of the Gospel-times, and the Ascension of Christ.

1. The Stability of the Church is here asserted. * The Church is not built upon the Sand, which may fall with a Storm, nor upon the Waters, that may float with the Waves; nor spread out as a Tent in the Desart, that may be taken up, and carried away to another place; but upon a Mountain not to be removed *, 'tis built upon a Rock, the Rock of Ages; upon a Mountain which is not shatter'd by Waves, or shaken by Storms, upon Christ, who hath the strength of many Mountains in himself.

* Celerus in loc.

* Psl. 125. 1. Mount Sion cannot be removed.

2. The necessity of Holiness in a Church. What though the Church be a Mountain for strength and eminency, have the honour and priviledge of Sacraments, and be the Ark of the Oracles of God, 'tis not established unless it be a Holy Mountain: Holiness is the only becoming thing in the House of God; as it is consecrated to the glory of God, so it must be exercis'd in things pertaining to the glory of God. As the Foundation is Holy, so ought the Superstructure to be. There was no filth in the framing it; there must be no filth in the continuance of it.

v. 3. He speaks with some kind of astonishment of the glorious things spoken of her, or promised to her, and concludes it with a note of attention, or a mark of eminency, Selah *. No place enjoy'd an equal happiness with Jerusalem, while it remained faithful to its Founder. It maintain'd its standing in the midst of its Enemies; no Weapon formed against it was able to prosper; Heaven planted it, and the Dews of Heaven watered it; it had a continual succession of Prophets; the best Kings that ever were in the World, swayed the Scepter in it; it was blessed with more miraculous Deliverances than any part of the Universe; the Nations that loved it not, yet feared its Power, and feared the displeasure of its Guardian. It was here the Son of God delivered the Messages of Heaven by the order of his Father: It was here the Spirit first filled the Heads and Hearts of the Apostles in order to the conversion of a World from Idolatry to the Scepter of God; but more glorious things are spoken of the Spiritual Sion, than of the material Jerusalem; that had Christ in the Flesh, and the Gospel-Church hath Christ in the Spirit, he went from thence to Heaven, but he comes from Heaven to visit them with his Comforts; he hath left the Walls of Jerusalem in its ruines, but he hath not, he will not leave his Spiritual Sion fatherless and comfortless; John 14. 18. his Spirit abides for ever with his Church. Glorious things are spoken of it, when he pronounced it impregnable, and that the Gates of Hell, the Power and Policy of all the Apostate Angels and their Instruments, should not prevail against her, when he assured her he would be present with her, not to the end of an Age or two, but till the period of Time, the consummation of the World; Priviledges that material Jerusalem could never boast of; whatsoever Countries have been applauded for secular Excellencies, or been famous for Wisdom, none can claim such Eulogies as Gospel-Sion, where God hath declared his Will, publish'd himself a God of Salvation, placed the Laws of Heaven, and poured out that Wisdom which comes from above: These are glorious things, above humane Expectations, above humane Desires.

* v. 3. Glorious things are spoken of thee, O City of God.

The glorious things mentioned of the Gospel-Church, are in v. 4. where he speaks of the enlargement of her Bounds, the increase of her Inhabitants, and the numerous Muster-rolls of those that shall list themselves in her service *.

* I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me. Behold Philistia and Tyre, with Æthiopia: This Man was born there.

The time ſhall come when thoſe Nations that are moſt alienated from the profeſſion of Truth, ſhall come under her Wing, and pay Allegiance to her Empire; Strangers ſhall be brought into her Boſom, not only Philiſtia and Tyre, Nations upon her Confines, but Ægypt and Æthiopia, Nations more remote, Nations born and bred at a diſtance ſhall be regiſtred as born from her Womb, and nurſt in her Lap; diſtance of Place ſhall not hinder the relation of her Children. And when God ſhall count the People of Foreign Nations, he ſhall ſet a mark upon every true Believer, and reckon him as one born in Sion, a Denizen of Jeruſalem, though not a Jew in the fleſh.

De Dieu in loc. לידעי

I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me; or rather among them that know me, or for them that know me*, I will remember them as Perſons inlightned by me, and acquainted with me.

The Pſalmiſt reckons up here Nations that were greateſt Enemies to the Church, Rahab or Ægypt * her ancient Enemy; Philiſtia her perpetual Invader: Rahab ſignifies pride or fierceneſs, the fierceſt People ſhall be ſubdued to Sion by the power of the Goſpel: Ægypt the wiſeſt and learnedſt Nation, the moſt Idolatrous and Superſtitious, Men that reſt in their own Parts and Strength ſhall caſt away their Idols; Babylon the ſtrongeſt and moſt powerful Empire, the Subjects of which the Scripture often deſcribes as Luxurious, Cruel, Proud: Tyre the greateſt Mart, whoſe Citizens were the greateſt Merchants; The Æthiopians the Poſterity of curſed Cham, whoſe Souls are blacker than their Bodies: Men buried in ſin, benighted with Ignorance, poyſoned with Pride, the moſt fierce and envenom'd Enemies ſhall be brought in by an infinite Grace, and make up one Body with her, and ſhall be counted as related to her by a new Birth, and be made Members of her by Regeneration; this is properly to be born in Sion *; as without Regeneration we have not God for our Father, ſo neither have we Sion or the Church for our Mother: This is the great priviledge we ſhould inquire after, without which we are not in God's Regiſter; this ſecond birth God only approves of, he enrolls no Man in the number of the Citizens of Sion, nor indows them with the ſpecial Priviledges of it upon the account of their firſt, wherein they lye buried in the Corruption of Adam, and are Citizens of Hell, not of Jeruſalem. Again, this ſecond birth is never without the knowledge of God. * Ignorance is a bar to this enrolment; he is no Man that is not a Rational Creature, and he no Regenerate Man that hath not ſome knowledge in the great Myſteries of God in Chriſt.

* For ſo Ægypt is named, Iſa. 51. 9.

* This Man was born there.

* Among thoſe that know me.

In v. 5. 1. The honour of Sion is deſcribed by her fruitfulneſs.

1. In regard of the eminency of her Births, ſhe is not wholly barren, ſhe hath her Births of Men, and worthy Men; the carnal World hath not exceeded the Church in Men of raiſed Intellectuals; Sion hath not been a City of Fools. Dionyſius the Areopagite hath been her production as well as Damaris a Woman. Kings alſo have been nurſt at her Breaſts, that they might be nurſing Fathers to her by their Power; but the Honour of Sion, conſiſts in the inward change it makes on Men, diſpoſſeſſing them of the nature of Wolves for that of Lambs, rendring them the Loyal Subjects of God inſtead of his active Enemies. 'Tis the glory of Sion, that this or that Man born in her, was changed to ſuch Principles and ſuch Affections, that all the Education and Politeneſs of the moſt accompliſh'd Cities in the World could not furniſh them with.

2. In regard of the multitude of them; this and that Man, of all ſorts and conditions, and multitudes of them, ſo that more are the Children of the deſolate than of the married Wife. The Tents were Propheſied to be inlarged, the Curtains of the Habitations of Sion to be ſtretched out, and her Cords to be lengthned to receive and entertain that multitude of Children that ſhould be brought forth by her, after the Sacrifice of the Son of God, Iſa. 54. 1, 2. For that Exhortation follows upon the deſcription of the Death and Exaltation of Chriſt, Iſa. 53.

2. The happineſs of Sion. The higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

1. Security in her Glory. Eſtabliſh her.

2. The Author of that ſecurity and perpetuity. The Higheſt; and that excluſive of any other. The Higheſt himſelf *, all that are not the moſt High are excluded from having a ſhare in the eſtabliſhment of the Church.

* Coccei. in loc.

'Tis a work peculiar to him. 'Tis not the excellent Learning, ſtrength of the wiſe or mighty Men, that are born in her, that doth preſerve her, but God alone; he ſpirits and acts them; Means God doth uſe in bringing in inward Grace, Means he doth uſe in ſettling the outward form. But ſuch Means that have in reaſon, no ſtrength to effect ſo great a buſineſs, Means different from thoſe which are uſed in the eſtabliſhment of other Kingdoms, whereby the hand that acts them is more viſible and plain, than the Means that are uſed. * 'Tis not the Wit of Man, which is Folly, nor the Strength of Man which is Weakneſs, nor the Holineſs of Man, which is nothing, can claim the Honour of this Work: God himſelf picks Stones out of the Quarry, ſmooths them for the Building, fixeth them in their places, he himſelf is the only Architect, his Wiſdom contrives it, his Grace erects it, his Power preſerves it, and accompliſheth his own Work; 'tis the Higheſt, none higher to over-power him, none ſo high as to check and mate him.

* Folang.

Shall eſtabliſh her.] This cannot be meant of the literal or local Sion (though that indeed was preſerved while the legal Service was to endure, (excepting that interruption by the Babyloniſh Captivity,) but now Mahomet's Horſe tramples upon it, and it retains none of the ancient Inhabitants,) but of the true myſtical Sion, the Goſpel ſtate of the Church, which ſhall continue in being as Chriſt the Head of it hath ſettled it, till Time ſhall be no more. Other Kingdoms may crumble away, the Foundations of them be diſſolved. But that God which laid the Foundation of Sion, and built her Walls, will preſerve her Palaces, that the Gates of Hell, the ſubtilty of Hereticks, the fury of Tyrants, the Apoſtacy of ſome of her pretended Children, all the Locuſts and Spawn of the Bottomleſs-Pit ſhall not be able to root her up.

Shall eſtabliſh her.] The word ſignifies the affording all things neceſſary for defence, increaſe of Victory, preparations of it, the knitting of it. כונן

Doct. The Goſpel-Church is a perpetual Society eſtabliſh'd by the higheſt Power in Heaven or Earth.

It ſhall continue as long as the World, and outlive the Diſſolution of Nature; ſhe ſhall bring forth her Man-child, maugre all the vigilancy of the Dragon, which ſhall be caught up to God and his Throne; and though ſhe be forced to fly into the Wilderneſs, yet a place is prepared for her Habitation, and Food for her ſupport during that State, no leſs than 1260 Days or Years, and this by no weaker, no meaner a Hand than that of God himſelf *; that Hand that catches up Chriſt the Man-child into Heaven; that Hand that ſets him him upon the Throne of God; provides Meat for the Woman in the Wilderneſs. The Head and the Body have the ſame Defender, the ſame Protector, the ſame Hand to ſecure them *. Or by Man-child is meant, the whole number of the Believers which were more numerous before ſhe went into a Wilderneſs-condition; the Scripture uſing often the ſingular for the plural; and the Holy Ghoſt expreſſing himſelf here according to the property of the Woman, which is to bring forth one at the ſame time. The Figure of the Church notes Stability; 'tis four-ſquare, and the length is as large as the breadth, Rev. 21. 16. The length, breadth, and height of it are equal; the moſt perfect Figure, noting Perfection and Duration. So it was deſcribed in the Prophecy, Ezek. 48. 16. exactly 4500 Meaſures on each ſide. All belonging to this City or Church, is reckoned by the number twelve, a ſquare number, equal on all ſides; twelve Gates, twelve Foundations, twelve Tribes of Iſrael, twelve Apoſtles, twelve Stones to garniſh it, Rev. 21. 12, 13, 14, &c. A four-ſquare Figure is an emblem of unchangeable Conſtancy. Things ſo framed remain always in the ſame poſture, caſt them which way you will; and among ſome of the Heathens was reckoned as a divine Figure *, and the character of a Virtuous Man in regard of his Conſtancy was τετράγωνος.

The ſhutting of the Gate of the new Temple, Ezek. 44. 2. after the God of Iſrael had entred in by it, is interpreted by ſome of the everlaſting dwelling of the Lord in the Church of the Goſpel among his People, and never departing from it as he had done from the firſt Temple †. None ſhall enter in to deface it, none ſhall preſcribe new Laws to it, none ſhall trample upon it; when God enters into the Chriſtian Church, he ſhuts the Door after him, his Preſence never departs from it, his Goſpel ſhall never be rooted out of it, the Church hath a ſecurity in its Foundation, as being built upon a Rock, Mat. 18. 16. It hath an aſſurance of preſervation by the preſence of the God of Iſrael, of Chriſt in the midſt of her, Mat. 28. 19, 20. The Tabernacle of Sion ſhall not be taken down, not one of the ſtakes thereof ſhall be remov'd, neither ſhall any of the cords thereof be broken; And that becauſe the glorious Lord ſhall be a place of broad Rivers and ſtreams to it, Iſa. 33. 20, 21.

† Lightfoot Temple, cap. 38. p. 252.

The Enemies of the Church ſhall be conſum'd, that God may have his due praiſe. Hallelujahs are never ſung with the higheſt Note, till the wicked and idolatrous Generation be rooted out of the Earth. Hallelujahs were never uſed, as the Jews obſerve, till the conſummation of all things by the ſetting the Church above the toſſing of the Waves, and the deſtruction of its Troublers, when the Glory of the Lord ſhould endure for ever, and God rejoyce in his Works, Pſal. 104. 31, 35. And therefore when the Blood of his Children is avenged by his Juſtice upon his Enemies, and the ſmoke of Antichriſt riſeth up before him, and the Kingdom of God is for ever ſettled, Hallelujah is pronounced and repeated with a loud voice, Rev. 19. 2, 3, 6. Such a time will be, and God will eſtabliſh and ſecure his Church till he hath perfected his own and her Glory.

This Stability the Church hath had experience of in all Ages of the World, and it will always be ſaid in her, Pſal. 48. 8. As we have heard, ſo have we ſeen in the City of the Lord of Hoſts, in the City of our God; God will eſtabliſh it for ever.

In the handling this Doctrine, theſe four things are to be done.

1. The Explication. 2. The Proof, that it is ſo. 3. Why it muſt needs be ſo. 4. Uſe.

1. Explication.

1. This ſtability muſt not be meant of any particular Church in the World. Particular Churches have their Beginnings, Progreſſes, and Periods; many Churches as well as many Perſons have Apoſtatized from the Faith; many Candleſticks have been broken in pieces, and yet the Candle not blown out, but remov'd and ſet in another Socket; particular Churches have been corrupted by Superſtition and Idolatry, rent by Hereſies, and ſcattered by Perſecutions. What remains are there of thoſe ſeven Churches in Aſia which were the walk of Chriſt, Rev. 2. 1. but deplorable Ruines? There is no abſolute Promiſe given to any particular Church, that it ſhall be free from defection. The Church of Rome ſo flouriſhing in the Apoſtles Time, was warn'd to be humble, leſt it became as much Apoſtate as that of the Jews, Rom. 11. 21, 22. Nay, there are Predictions of almoſt an univerſal Apoſtacy *. And juſt before the Coming of Chriſt it will be difficult to find a grain of Faith among the multitude of Chaff, Luke 18. 8. There is not one place which was in the primitive Times dignified with Truth, but is now deformed by Error. Yea, the univerſal Church hath been forced by the fury of the Dragon, tho' not to ſink, yet to fly into the Wilderneſs and Obſcurity, yet hath been preſerv'd through all Changes in the midſt of thoſe Deſolations and Deſarts. 'Tis not indeed ſo fixed in one place, but thr Cords may be taken up, the Stakes removed, and the Tents pitched in another Ground. 'Tis ſpread through the World, where-ever God will ſet up the light of his Goſpel. Sion hath ſtood, though ſome Synagogues of it have been pulled down; It hath, like the Sun, kept its ſtation in the Firmament, though not without Eclipſes and Clouds to muffle it. The Church is but one, tho' it be in divers Countries, and nam'd according to the places where it reſides, as the Church of Epheſus, the Church of Sardis, &c. which all are as the Beams of the Sun darted from one Body, Branches growing from one Root, Streams flowing from one Fountain; if you obſtruct the light of one Beam, or lop off one Branch, or dam up the Stream, yet the Sun, Root, Fountain remains the ſame: So though the light of particular Churches may be dim and extinguiſh'd, the beauty of them defaced, yet the univerſal Church, that which is properly Sion remains the ſame, it remains upon Chriſt the Rock, and is ſtill upon the baſis of the Covenant, 'tis ſtill God's Church, and God is her God. When a People have forfeited their Church-Priviledges by Barrenneſs and Wantonneſs, and God in juſtice ſtrips them of their Ornaments, he will have another People, which he will form for his Glory, and fit for his Reſidence; the Goſpel ſhall never want an Hoſt to entertain it, nor a Ground to be made fruitful by it *. The Kingdom of God is not deſtroyed when it is removed, but tranſplanted into a more fruitful Soil. While Chriſt hath a Body in the World, he will find a Joſeph of Arimathæa to Embalm it, and preſerve it for a Reſurrection. When the Glory of the Lord goes off from one Cherub, it will find other Cherubims whereon to ſettle, Ezek. 10. 4. 18. That Glory which had dwelt in the material Ark of the Sanctuary, departs from thence to find a Throne in that Chariot which had been deſcribed, Ezek. 1. Nay, the departure of God from one Church, renders his Name more glorious in another †. The rejection of the Carnal Iſrael was the Preamble to the appearance of the ſpiritual Iſrael, and the Kingdom of the Meſſiah was rendred more large and illuſtrious by the diſſolving of that Church that had confidence in the Fleſh, truſted in their external Rites and patcht the Beauty and Purity of Divine Worſhip with their whoriſh Additions; juſt as the Mortification of the Fleſh gives livelineſs to the Spirit, and the pulling up noiſom Weeds from a Garden makes room for the ſetting and flouriſhing growth of good Plants.

2. Though God unſtakes the Church in one place, yet he will not only have a Church, but a profeſſing Church in another. It ſhall be ſaid of Sion, This and that Man was born there. It ſhall be ſaid of Sion by God; It ſhall be ſaid of Sion by Men. If Chriſt confeſſeth none before his Father, but ſuch as confeſs him before Men, Luke 12. 8. ſhall he ever want Imployment? Shall the World ever be at that paſs as to bear none that profeſs him? and ſo none to be owned by him at the Right Hand of his Father? Shall he by whom all things ſubſiſt, have none to acknowledge their Subſiſtance by him? The World may be the Inheritance of Chriſt, but ſcarce counted his Poſſeſſion, if there were not in ſome parts of it a Body of Subjects to juſtifie their Allegiance to him in the face of a perſecuting Generation. Indeed when the Church was confined to the narrow Limits of the carnal Iſrael, the profeſſion of the Truth was contracted to a few, though the Faith of it might be alive in others; only Caleb and Joſhua among the whole Body of the murmuring Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, aſſerted the Honour of God, and maintain'd the Truth of his Promiſe, though the belief of it might ſparkle in the Hearts of others under the Aſhes of their Fears, that hinder'd their Diſcovery of it to others. It was another time reduced to one, and Elijah only had the boldneſs to make a Declaration of the Name of God, though there were 7000 who had retain'd their Purity while they had loſt their Courage to publiſh it, 1 Kings 19. 18. But in the Chriſtian Church, ſince the number of Elect are more, the profeſſion will be greater in the midſt of an univerſal Apoſtacy of Pretenders, Rev. 13. 8. All that dwell upon the Earth ſhall worſhip him, i. e. the Beaſt, whoſe Names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb. If their Election be a Preſervative againſt an Adoration of the Beaſt, it is alſo a Security againſt the Denial of any ſuch Worſhip, and an Encouragement to profeſs the Name of Chriſt, when they ſhall be brought upon the Stage.

This Profeſſion may lie much in the dark, and not be ſo viſible as before; As a Field of Corn over-topt by Weeds looks at a diſtance, as if there were nothing elſe but the blue and red Cockle and Darnel, but when we come near, we ſee the good Grain ſhews its Head as well as the Weeds; but a profeſſing People there will be one where or other. 'Tis a ſtanding Law of Chriſtianity, that a Belief in the Heart ſhould be attended by Confeſſion with the Mouth, Rom. 10. 9. And the Church is a Congregation of People ſounding the Voice of Chriſt, as he was preached and confeſt by the Apoſtles; while there are Believers, there will be Profeſſors in Society together; ſome Ordinances ſettled in being, during the continuance of the World; as the Supper, 1 Cor. 11. 6. implies a Society, as the Seat of the Adminiſtration; Baptiſm is a Ceremony of admiſſion into a Society; the Supper a feaſting of ſeveral upon ſpiritual Viands. Officers appointed imply a Body profeſſing ſome Rules, Matt. 28. 20. To what purpoſe are all theſe ſetled during the continuance of the World, if they were not ſomewhere to be practiſed till that Period of time; and how can they be practiſed without a Confederation and Society? Without ſuch a Body all the Ordinances and Rules of Chriſt would be in vain, and imply as little Wiſdom in enacting them, as a want of Power in not keeping up a Society in ſome part of the World to obſerve them according to his own Preſcriptions. There will therefore be in ſome part or other of the World, a Church openly profeſſing the Doctrine of Truth.

3. This Church or Sion ſhall have a numerous Progeny. The Spiritual Iſrael ſhall be as the Sand of the Sea, which cannot be meaſured or numbred, Hoſ. 1. 10. which was the Promiſe made to Abraham, Gen. 22. 17. and renewed in the ſame Terms to Jacob, Gen. 32. 12. The Church is a little Flock in compariſon of the carnal World, yet it is numerous in it ſelf, though not in every place; for ſometimes there may not be above three found to withſtand the worſhip of a Golden Image; yet in ſome one or other place of the world, and ſucceſſively it ſhall be numerous; he will not loſe the Honour of the Feaſt he hath prepared, though thoſe that are invited prefer their Farms and Oxen before it, but will find Gueſts in the High-ways; he will ſpread his Wings from Eaſt to Weſt, and in every place Incenſe ſhall be offered to his Name, Mal. 1. 11. The Church is compared to the morning, Cant. 6. 10. which from ſmall Beginnings in a ſhort time fills the whole Hemiſphere with Light; and the Promiſes concerning it run all that way. The Hills were to be covered with the Shadow of it; her Boughs are to be ſent out to the Sea, and her Branches to the River, Pſal. 80. 10, 11. It was to ſpread it ſelf like a goodly Cedar, and be a dwelling-place to the Fowl of every Wing, Ezek. 17. 23. Yea, a numberleſs Multitude from all Nations, Kindreds, People, and Tongues, are to ſtand before the Throne, and before the Lamb, Clothed with White Robes, and Palms in their Hands, Rev. 7. 9. adorn'd with Innocency, and crowned with Victory. No Monarchy ever did, ever can ſo far ſtretch her Bounds; nor hath the Sun ſeen any place where it hath not ſeen ſome ſprinkling of a Church. Every Kingdom hath met with unpaſſable Bounds; but the Enſigns of Chriſt hath not been limited. The Church was once crowded up in a narrow Compaſs of Judæa; but ſince that her Territories are enlarged, her Enſigns have flouriſhed over many Countries, Rahab, Tyre, Ethiopia, the vaſt Circuit of Aſia, and the Deſerts of Africa, have been added to her Empire; her Progeny ſhall be hereafter as numerous as it hath been; when the Devices of Antichriſt ſhall be more ſeen and perceived, they will be more nauſeated, and many with Ephraim ſhall ſay, What have I to do any more with Idols?

Second thing; That God has hitherto eſtabliſhed Sion. II.

1. 'Tis teſtified by its preſent ſtanding, when other Empires are ſunk by Age or Violence.

God hath promiſed the ſtability and eminency of the Mountain of the Lord's Houſe above all the Mountains, the ſtrongeſt Power, and moſt compacted Empires of the World, ſometimes ſignify'd to us by that Title, Iſa. 2. 2. And in the midſt of his deſtroying Plagues, and his milder Anger with the Church, ſhe hath a Charter of Security, Jer. 30. 11. Though I make a full end of all Nations, yet will I not make an end of thee. Further, the reaſons why Kingdoms and Nations are pulled up by the Roots, and utterly waſted, is not only becauſe they are inveterate Enemies, but refuſe her eaſie Chains, and decline her Service, Iſa. 60. 12. The Nation and Kingdom that will not ſerve thee, ſhall periſh; yea thoſe Nations ſhall be utterly waſted. The Warrant for the execution of ſuch is as firmly ſealed by Heaven, as the Patent for the Church's preſervation; 'tis repeated with an Emphaſis. The perſecuted Church hath ſtill been lifted up, when the Aſſyrian, Perſian, and Greek Monarchies have fallen in pieces, and left no footſteps of their Grandeur. The proſperity of worldly Kingdoms is no better than a Fire of Straw that blazeth and vaniſheth, it hath but the brittle Foundation of humane Policy, and an eſtabliſhment by a temporary Providence; the everlaſting Covenant, and the Baſis of Divine Truth and Love cannot be claimed by any but the Church; not a Kingdom can be pitch'd upon in all the Records of Hiſtory, that hath maintain'd its ſtanding, triumph'd over its Enemies, and ſubſiſted at ſuch a rate, and by unuſual and unheard-of Methods, as the Church hath done. Thoſe that have been beſt guarded by Laws, hedg'd in with the beſt Methods of Government, and arm'd with a ſtrong Power to protect them, have found ſomething or other riſing from their own Bowels, or their Enemies Power to procure their Diſſolution. But the Church, though daſht againſt ſo many Rocks, has yet floated above the Deluge of thoſe Commotions that have ſunk other Societies. The Kings of the World could never yet boaſt of a full Conqueſt of her, or brag that ſhe hath been ſubjected to the ſame condition with themſelves; ſhe hath born up her Head in the midſt of earthly Revolutions, and met with her Preſervation or Reſurrection, where carnal Intereſts have found their Funeral. Thoſe that have ſet their Feet upon the Church's Breaſts, or ſpilt her Blood, have found their Poyſon where they imagin'd they ſhould find their Safety. The Babyloniſh Empire, which was God's Rod for the correcting his People, ſaw her ſelf in the Chains of her Enemies that Night ſhe had been ſacrilegiouſly carouzing Healths in the ſacred Veſſels of the Temple, Dan. 5. 3, 30. and the Jews enjoyed a Deliverer, where the Babylonians felt the force of a Conqueror. Many ſuch fatal Periods may be reckon'd up both in Sacred and Humane Story, either for not protecting, or perſecuting that which is ſo dear to the Higheſt who hath eſtabliſht her.

2. No Society but the Church ever ſubſiſted in the midſt of a multitude of Enemies. Has ſhe not been like a little Flock in the midſt of many Wolves, which though they ſuckt the Blood of ſome, yet could never reach the Head or Heart of the whole? the Devil hath attackt her, without vanquiſhing her; ſhaken her, without ruining her. The biting of the Serpent, according to the ancient Promiſe, may bruiſe the Heel, but not the Head, and make an incurable Wound in the Myſtical Body. She hath been preſerved in a hating World in ſpight of the Enmity of it, by a Divine Wiſdom that hath not regulated it ſelf by the Methods of Fleſh and Blood. His feeding the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs was a Figure of what he would do to his Church, and he hath accompliſht it to the Goſpel-Church, as really as he did to the ancient Iſrael. While ſhe hath been in a Wilderneſs theſe 1200 Years, and I hope ſomewhat upwards, ſhe hath not wanted her Manna, nor her Rock; ſhe hath been fed in her Straits, and preſerved in her Combates; and as Chriſt reigns, ſo the Church lives, and hath her Table ſpread in the midſt of her Enemies. What is 1100 years continuance of the Venetian Government, to ſo many thouſand Years preſervation of the Church in the midſt of Atheiſm, Paganiſm, Antichriſtianiſm, ever ſince it was firſt born and nurſt in Adam's Family; and this hath been, when her Friends have forſaken her; when her Enemies have been confident of her ruine; when her ſelf hath expected little elſe than Deſtruction; when ſhe hath thought ſometimes in her Straits, her God ignorant of her; when Hell hath poured out a Flood, the carnal Earth hath ſometimes found it their Intereſt to help her, though their Enmity were irreconcileable againſt her, Rev. 12. 16. The ſubtilty and power of her Enemies, that have found ſucceſs in their other Projects, have met with an unforeſeen Baffle, when they have armed againſt her. Men of the greateſt Abilities have proved Fools, when they have exerciſed their Wit againſt her. Achitophel's Wiſdom was great when on David's ſide, and changed to Folly when he ſhifted ſides againſt him. A ſecret Blaſt hath been upon the Projects of Men, when they have turn'd againſt her upon Secular Intereſts. In the greateſt Judgments which have come, and ſhall come upon the World; when Wonders ſhall be ſhewn in the Heavens, and in the Earth, Blood, Fire, and Pillars of Smoke; when the Sun ſhall be turned into Darkneſs, and the Moon into Blood, Joel 2. 30. 31. yet God will have a Mount Sion and Jeruſalem; ſome that call upon his Name, v. 32. Not the Malice of her Enemies ſhall impair her, becauſe of God's Power, nor the common Judgments of the World, under which others ſink, ſhall extinguiſh her, becauſe of God's Truth, v. 32. As the Lord hath ſaid. Whence comes all this, but from God's having been her dwelling-place in all Generations? Pſal. 90. 1. He was ſo to her from the time of Abraham, to the introduction of his Poſterity into Canaan; he hath ſheltred her as an Houſe doth an Inhabitant, or the Ark did Noah in the midſt of many Waters. In all Generations Sion hath been impregnable; for he that is her dwelling-place, hath formed the Mountains, and from everlaſting to everlaſting is only God, v. 2. And though one Generation paſs, and another comes, he is the ſame Dwelling-place, and never out of repair, never will want repair; and therefore 'tis an aſtoniſhment, that the Devil after ſo long an experience, ſhould be ſuch a Fool as to engage in new Attempts, when he hath found ſo little ſucceſs in his former, and hath had ſo many Ages to witneſs the Baffles he hath received, what a Fool is he to think that her Defender ſhould be conquered by a revolted Angel, that lies under an everlaſting Curſe!

3. The Violences againſt her, which have been fatal to other Societies, have been uſeful to her. This Buſh hath burned without conſuming, and preſerved its Verdure in the midſt of Fire; not from the Nature of the Buſh, but the preſence of him that dwelt in it: It hath not only ſubſiſted in the Bowels of her Enemies, but hath been eſtabliſhed by means of the Violence of Men, and grown greater in the midſt of Torments and Death; ſhe hath not only out-grown her Afflictions, but grown greater and better by them. The laſt Monarchy compoſed of Clay and Iron; Clay for its earthly and miry Deſigns, and Iron for its force and violence, is the immediate Uſher of the Kingdom of God, that ſhall never be deſtroyed, but ſtand for ever, Dan. 2. 41, 44.

1. She hath been often encreaſed. Perſecution hath lopt off ſome Branches of the Vine, but have been found more ſprouting up inſtead of them that were cut off. Her Blood hath been Seed, and the Pangs of her Martyrs have been fruitful in bringing forth new Witneſſes. We have ſcarce read of more ſudden Converſions to Chriſtianity, though indeed more numerous, by the preaching of the Word, than by the ſhedding of the Blood of Chriſtians. Eminent Profeſſors have ſprung out of the Martyrs Aſhes. The Storms have been ſo far from deſtroying her, that it hath been the occaſion of ſpreading her Tents in a larger Ground. Saul's winnowing the Church blew away ſome of the Corn to take rooting in other places, Acts 8. 3, 4. Like Seeds of Plants blown away by the Wind, which have riſen and brought forth their kind in another Soil; and it is no more than hath been predicted, Dan. 12. 1, 4. Such a time of trouble that never was ſince there was a Nation, ſhould be the time when many ſhould run to and fro, and Knowledge ſhould be increaſed. While other Societies increaſe by perſecuting their Enemies, this increaſeth by being perſecuted her ſelf. It grows as a Vine, Hoſ. 14. 7. Though it be cut, the cutting hath contributed to its thriving. This Roſe-buſh hath not only ſtood in the Wind, which hath rooted up other Oaks, but the fragrancy of it hath been carried by that Wind to places at a greater diſtance. When Antiochus commanded all the Books of the Scripture in the Hands of any to be burned, they were not only preſerved, but preſently after appeared out of their hidden places, as they were tranſlated into the Greek Tongue, the Language then moſt known in the World, and made publick to other Nations. Truth hath been often rendred by ſuch Proceedings more clear and glorious. The perſecution of Sion's Head, the Captain of our Salvation, to Death, was the occaſion of the diſcovery of the Goſpel to the whole World; he was the great Seed, that being caſt into the Ground became ſo fruitful as to ſpread his Branches in all Corners of the Earth, John 12. 24. And that Perſecution which I ſuppoſe remains yet to be acted, and which will be the ſmarteſt, ſhall be ſucceeded by the cleareſt Eruption of Goſpel-Light, wherein the Goſpel ſhall recover its ancient and primitive Glory. The ſlaying of the Witneſſes ſhall end in an Evangelical Succeſs, Rev. 11. 9, 10, &c. The World ſhall give Glory to the God of Heaven, v. 13. The Kingdoms of the World ſhall become the Kingdoms of Chriſt, v. 15. Chriſt ſhall more illuſtriouſly reign, v. 17. The Temple of God ſhall be opened in Heaven, v. 19. The ſpiritual Iſrael, as well as the national, the Antitype as well as the Type, have multiplied under oppreſſion *; and, like an arched Building, ſtood firmer by all the weights that have been deſigned to cruſh her.

* Decay of Chriſtian Piety, p. 23

(2.) She has often been Refin'd by the moſt violent perſecutions of her Enemies.

She hath not only ſurviv'd the flames that have been kindled againſt her, but as refin'd Gold come out more beautiful from the furnace, left her droſs behind her, and hath been wrought into a more beautiful frame by the hand of her great Artificer; like the Sand upon the Sea-ſhore, ſhe hath not only broke the force of the Waves, but been aſſiſted by them to diſcharge her Filth, and been waſhed more clean by thoſe Waves that ruſh'd in to drown her. She hath been more conformed to the Image of her Head, and made fitter to glorifie God here, and to enter into the Glory of God hereafter. The Church is to caſt forth her Roots like Libanon, Hoſ. 14. 5. The Cedar by its ſhakings grows up more in beauty as well as ſtrength, and the Torch by its knocks burns the clearer. Though the number of her Children might ſometimes decreaſe through Fear, yet her true Off-ſpring that have remained, have increaſed in their Zeal, Courage, and Love to God. Apoſtates themſelves have proved Refiners of them that they have deſerted *. The Corn is the purer by the ſeparation of the Chaff. Thus hath ſhe grown purer by Flames, and ſounder by Batteries.

* Dan. 11. 35. And ſome of them of Underſtanding ſhall fall to try them, and to purge and make them white

4. When ſhe has ſeemed to be forlorn and dead, God has reſtored her. When Iſrael was at the loweſt, a Decree iſſued out in Ægypt to deſtroy her Males, and root out her Seed, Deliverance began to dawn; and when a Knife was at her Throat at the Red-Sea, and ſcarce a valiant Believer found among a Multitude of Deſpairers, God turned the Back of the Knife to his Iſrael, and the Edge to the Throat of the Enemies. When the whole Church as well as the whole World ſeem'd to be at its laſt Gaſp, God preſerv'd a Noah as a Spark to kindle a new World and a new Church by. When Jeruſalem was ſackt, the City deſtroy'd, the People diſpers'd into ſeveral parts of the Babyloniſh Empire, without any humane probability of ever being gather'd again into one Body; yet ſhe was preſerv'd, reſtor'd, recollected, brought out of the Sepulchre, reſettl'd in her ancient Soil, and recover'd her Beauty, which can be ſaid of no other Society in the World but this; whoſe Deliverance and Reſtauration hung not upon the Will and Policy of Man, but upon the Word of God, who had limited their Captivity to Seventy Years, and promis'd a Reſtauration. The Bleſſing of God to Abraham and Sarah is ſet out as a ground of Faith and Comfort for the Churches Reſtauration and Increaſe, Iſa. 51. 1, 2, 3. He will comfort Sion, and comfort all her waſt Places, and make her Wilderneſs like Eden, and her Deſerts like the Garden of God, that Joy and Gladneſs may be found therein; as well as he did enliven the dead Body of Abraham, and the barren Womb of Sarah. When the Church hath been ſo low, that Men have deſpaired of ſeeing any more of her than her Aſhes, God hath produc'd a new Remnant, he hath reſerv'd a Tenth to return, Iſa. 6. 13. and from the hidden Womb of the Earth brought forth a new Succeſſion by the vigorous influence of the Sun of Righteouſneſs. And after the laſt Attempt and ſucceſs of the Antichriſtian State, when they are jolly and merry at the Church's Funeral, Revel. 11. 10. they ſhall ſoon be amaz'd at her Reſurrection, v. 11. as much as the High-Prieſts were at the Reſurrection of Chriſt. For the Church can no more lie in the Grave than her Head, the Myſtical Body no more than the Natural: His Reſurrection was an Earneſt of this, and this the Accompliſhment of that; little difference in the time of their Grave-ſtate; three Days the Natural Body lay, three Days and an half only the Myſtical ſhall lie before a full Revival.

5. God never wanted Inſtruments for his Church in the due ſeaſon. If Abel be butcher'd by Cain, God will raiſe up Seth in his place, to bring Men to a publick form of Worſhip, Gen. 4. 26. If Nebuchadnezzar be the Axe to hew down Jeruſalem, Cyrus ſhall be the Inſtrument to build her up; when his Time is come he will not want an Ezra and Nehemiah to rear her Walls, nor be wanting to them to inſpire them with Courage, and aſſiſt their Labour in ſpite of the Adverſaries that would give check-mate to the work. If Stephen be ſtoned by the Jews, he will cull out Paul an abetter of that Murder to be a Preacher of the Goſpel, and he that was all Fire againſt it, ſhall become as great a flame for the propagation of it; one Phœnix ſhall ariſe out of the Aſhes of another. When Arrianiſm, like a Deluge, overflowed the World, the Church wanted not an Athanaſius to ſtand in the Gap, and be a Champion for the truth of the Deity of Chriſt. When Enemies riſe up againſt the Church from all Quarters to afflict it, God raiſed others from all Quarters to defend it, Zach. 1.

19,

19, 20. Yea, those that have been the Instruments to support the Antichristian State against her, by giving their Power and Strength to the Beast, shall turn their Arms against that which they supported, to make her desolate, eat her Flesh, and burn her with Fire, Rev. 17. 12, 13, 16. 'Tis the same Christ that is King in his Church, and the Spirit is not dispossessed of his Office to furnish Men with Gifts for the defence and encrease of it; he is still a spirit of Government in Magistrates, and the spirit of Fire in Ministers for the Churches Interest. Now since the Church hath maintained its standing longer than any other Empire, and that in the midst of its Enemies, and hath been both encreased and refin'd by the Violences used against her, since she hath been so often restor'd, and never wanted Instruments for the rearing and protecting her, who can doubt whether the Highest hath not, and whether the Highest will not still establish her, and cover her with his mighty Wings?

III. 3. The third thing, Why it must needs be so.

1. 'Tis necessary for the honour of God. Those Societies may moulder away, and those Religions grow feeble which have drawn their Birth from the wisdom of Man, and been settled by the force of Man; but a divine Work must needs have a divine Establishment. 'Tis so,

(1.) If you regard it as his main design in the Creation of the World. Can we think God made the World for the World's sake, that he pitch'd Tabernacles here for a few Creatures, that could spell from all his Works but a few and little Letters of his Name? Could the bare Creation shew to Man so much as his back Parts? The most glorious Perfections of his Nature could never be visible in a handful of Creatures, though never so Glorious, no nor in multitudes of Worlds of a more beautiful Aspect, without the discovery of the Gospel, and the settling a Gospel Church. How should we have known his Patience, been instructed in his Mercy, have had any sense of his Grace, or understood the depths of his Wisdom, or heard the voice of the Bowels of his Love, so as they are link'd together in his Nature? If God created the World for his Glory, he created it for his highest Glory; a bare Creation without a redeemed Company of Creatures, could never have given us a prospect of the great glory of his Nature, nor have answered the end of God, which was the manifestation of his Perfections. His Wisdom broke out in the frame of all Creatures, giving them Life and Motion; but his Eye, when he made the World, was upon the manifestation of a greater Wisdom, which then lay hid in his Bosom, and was not to be discovered but in the publishing the Gospel, Ephes. 3. 9, 10. The Wisdom that broke out in the Creation was but a Scaffold, whereon in time his Wisdom in the Glory of a Church peculiar to himself should appear. All things were created for Christ, as well as by him, for him and his Glory, as Mediator, and as Head of the Church, and therefore for the glory of his Body. And his end in sending Christ was to gather all things together in him; those things which are in Heaven, as well as those which are on Earth, Eph. 1. 10. And in order to that end he works all things *. This Counsel and Will of appointing Christ was the spring and rule of all his Works, and therefore of Creation, as well as the rest succeeding it. He that would upon occasion give the richest parts of the World for the Ransom of Sion, as Ægypt, Æthiopia, Seba, Isa. 23. 43. may well be thought to create those and other Nations to lay a foundation for her. We know that soon after the Creation the Rest of God was disturbed by the entrance of sin, which could not come unexpected, unforeseen, and unpermitted. There had not then been any ground of rejoycing in the habitable Parts of the Earth, Prov. 8. 31. if he had not designed something else. But he provided in his Counsel another Rest, and in order to that suffered this first Rest in the bare Creation to be spoil'd; Sion he chose; and Sion he desired as his Rest for ever wherein he would dwell, Psal. 132. 13, 14. The end of God in Creation was not certainly only to make a Sun or Stars, an Earth bedeck'd with Plants, and Man a rational Creature, only to contemplate these Works, but to render him the acknowledgments of his Power and Wisdom *: As a Limner lays his chief design in the midst of the Cloth, and fills the void places with many other Fancies to beautifie and set off his Work, but those were not in his first Intention, but his main design was the draught in the middle, surrounded with the rest. Now when Man by sin had made himself uncapable of performing the Work he had to do, God orders things so as to have a Rest, to have a People to acknowledge him. Hence perhaps the forming of such a People is called by the term of a new Creation, not only as it is an act of creative Power, but as it was the chief design of the exerting his Power in the creation of the World. And shall the chief of his Counsel be the conquest and triumph of Satan? Shall he at the closing up of the World be defeated of his main Contrivance? Surely, if there were a greater opposition to Sion than ever there was, he would exert a greater strength than ever he did, not to be crost in his principal aim.

(2.) As he hath been the Author and Builder of Sion *. Great Kings have a particular care of the Cities they have founded for the honour and preservation of their Name, and a testimony of their Magnificence; with what choice Priviledges do they use to endow them; with what strong Garrisons do they use to secure them in time of danger? And shall not the Great God perpetuate that which he hath form'd for his Glory, to which he hath given a peculiar denomination of the City of God *? Nebuchadnezzar cannot be more industrious to enrich Babylon, which he had built by the Might of his Power, than God will be to perpetuate Sion, which he hath built for the Honour of his Majesty. God was the Architect of this City, and gave the Model. Christ was the Builder of this City, and rais'd the Structure *. God laid the Platform of all things, much more of that which is dearer to him than all things: He laid the Foundation of it by his Son; whereas the Jewish Synagogue was form'd by the Ministry of Moses; he hath poured upon her greater treasures of Knowledge, a fuller measure of the Spirit than he did before, that the Knowledge of precedent Ages was nothing in comparison of that which he lighted in the Gospel Sion, in the fulness of Time. The Spirit hath form'd the Church in the Womb of the World, as he form'd Christ in the Womb of the Virgin. The natural and the mystical Body of the Son of God have the same Author and Original; not a Stone fitted to be a part in composing this Temple, but was culled out, and polish'd by God, 1 Pet. 3. 5. He that laid the corner Stone, fixeth the lively stones to become a spiritual House. Are built; not built themselves; 'tis his House, because he built it, as well as his House because he dwells in it, and rules it as the Master of the Family. Though the whole Fabrick of Nature is God's work, yet the Church is peculiarly, and by way of distinction, called his Work *; and every Stone in it is called his Jewel †, made so ſo by his Power, in working a real change; for by Nature they were as unfit as the common Pebbles of the Earth. He is therefore peculiarly called the Creator of Iſrael, Iſa. 43. 15. As he hath maintained a Creation revolted from him, notwithſtanding all the provoking ſins of Men; ſo he will maintain a Creation dear to him, notwithſtanding all the bloody Contrivances of Men. Sion's Inheritance is ſecured, becauſe 'tis a branch of God's planting, Iſa. 60. 21. Things are preſerv'd by the ſame means whereby they are firſt ſettled. Is it not then for the honour of God to be the Eſtabliſher of that by the Power of his Might, whereof he hath been the Founder by the ſtrength of his Arm? He made not uſe of the Riches, Power, and Wiſdom of the World, to lay the Foundation of Sion; but as the Jews, he wrought as it were with a Trowel in one hand, and a Sword in the other, and erected her Walls againſt the force and policy of Hell and Earth; and as he founded it without worldly Advantages, and againſt the ſtream of corrupt Nature, he knows how to preſerve it when the Wit and Strength of the World are contrary to it. It would be too low a conceit of the Wiſdom and Power of God, to imagine that he ſhould undertake ſo great a Work, to be baffled in the End he deſigned to himſelf: His Wiſdom is as much concerned in Honour to work Wonders for the preſervation of Sion, as his Power was imployed at firſt miraculouſly, to lay the firſt Corner Stone of her.

(3.) As he hath been the preſerver and inlarger of her to this Day. Men think themſelves concerned in Honour to perfect thoſe which they call their Creatures, and often regard one act of Kindneſs as an engagement upon them to ſucceſſive Acts of the like nature. 'Tis not for the Honour of any Man to ſtand by a Friend a long time, and to enjoy the Glory of aſſiſting him, and deſert him at the laſt pinch. God ſet up the Church after the Fall in Adam's Family, rather than create a new World, to create a new Church; he raiſed up Seth to propagate it, when Abel was taken off by the bloody hands of his Brother; he preſerv'd it in Noah's Family, in the midſt of a corrupted and degenerate World, and ſettled it upon the Foundation of the Goſpel in both; Upon the firſt Promiſe in the Family of Adam, Gen. 3. 15. Upon the ſweet-ſmelling Sacrifice offered by Noah, Gen. 8. 20, 21, 22. Not upon the Symbol or Type, the Blood of the Beaſts, but upon the thing ſignified by it; and the preſervation of the World promiſed after that Sacrifice, was chiefly in order to the preſervation of a Church in it, as the Creation of the World was in order to the erecting it; and therefore the Rain-bow ſettled then as a ſign of the Covenant, for the World's preſervation from a Flood of Waters, is made the ſign of the everlaſting Covenant of Peace, both in Ezekiel, *, and in the Revelation †, as a ſign he would preſerve his Church from the multitude of Waters, from the rage of the People, ſignified by Waters in the Prophetick part of Scripture, and from the Floods that the Devil ſhould caſt out againſt her. And thence it is, that this Covenant of her Eſtabliſhment is compared with that Covenant God ſwore to Noah, and the Faith of the Church ſtrengthned by reflection upon that, Iſa. 54. 9. After this ſettling it in Noah, he fixed it in Abraham, and cleared up the Promiſe of the Meſſiah, with a greater evidence than to the Ages before: He multiplied it in the fleſhly Iſrael, and enlarged the Bounds of it to a whole Nation. After that, he takes away the Partition-wall, and ſpreads her Confines to the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles, that the Sons of Japhet might dwell in the Tents of Shem, according to his Promiſe, Gen. 9. 27. out of the forlorn Gentiles, as ſtupid as Stocks and Stones, he raiſeth up Children, a great Poſterity to Abraham. Thoſe that he employed in the erecting Sion, and eſtabliſhing the Law that went out from her in the rubbiſh of the Gentiles, he ſtruck off from all humane Aſſiſtances, all Strength and Power in themſelves, when he commanded them not to depart from Jeruſalem, but to wait there for a Power from on high, before they ventured to be Witneſſes to him, and publiſh his Name, not only in the uttermoſt parts of the Earth, but in Jeruſalem, the City where they were to abide, or in any part of Judæa, Acts 1. 4, 8. They were not to ſpeak a word of him in their own ſtrength, or in any ſtrength leſs than a Power from Heaven, which was to be given them by the ſending the Spirit: and this he calls the Promiſe of the Father; as ſignifying his purpoſe to enlarge his Church, as well as build it at the firſt, by himſelf and his own Power. 'Tis this the Promiſe of the Father our Saviour there pitches their Faith upon, and 'tis this our Faith ſhould be eſtabliſhed in in all Conditions of the Church.

Now hath God thus rear'd up a Church out of the Aſhes of Man's original Apoſtacy, ſettled it among the murmuring and ungrateful Iſraelites, that induſtriouſly longed for the Garlick and Onions of Ægypt, as weary of the greatneſs of his Mercy to them, and propagated it to the Idolatrous Gentiles, fill'd with all Unrighteouſneſs, as bad as bad could be, as is deſcribed, Rom. 1. 29, 30, 31? To what purpoſe was the enlarging the Churches Patent, if he did intend the footſteps of her ſhould ever be rooted out of the World? He pickt out the weakeſt, pooreſt Perſons as the matter of it, that he might ſhew his own Honour in preſerving it: He hath yet ſupported her all the while ſhe hath carried the croſs of her Lord: He hath ſent his Spirit to frame a Succeſſion of new Materials for her: How fruitleſs would all this be, if he ſhould let Hell waſte the Temple erected for Heaven? What? did he gather and enlarge the Church, only to make it a richer Conqueſt, and a fatter morſel for the Devil? How vain would his former kindneſs appear, if he ſhould let it utterly ſink as long as the World endures: It cannot be imagin'd with any ſemblance of Reaſon, that God hath taken all this Care about the nurſing and growth of the Church from ſmall beginnings, to let his Darling be a Prey to the mouth of Lyons, and be of no other uſe than to fatten his Enemies.

(4.) In regard of the Coſt and Pains he hath been at about Sion. Did the Creation of the World ever coſt him ſo much? Was there one Tear, one Groan, one Sigh, much leſs the Blood of the Son of God expended in laying the Foundation of it? When the Matter of it was without form and void, the beauty of it was not wrought with a waſhing with Blood. When God eſtabliſhed the Clouds above, and ſtrengthen'd the foundations of the Deep, when he gave the Sea his decree, and appointed the foundations of the Earth, the Son of God was by him rejoicing in the habitable parts of the Earth, and his delights were among the Sons of Men, Prov. 8. 28, 29, 31. Not bleeding and dying. But this he muſt do, he muſt take humane Nature, be bruiſed in his Heel by the Serpent, and be a Sacrifice himſelf, make an atonement for ſin, before a Stone for the building of ſpiritual Sion could be fram'd and laid.

What pains have been taken alſo in the effecting it? The birth of the Church was a work of greater Power than the fabrick of the World; a few words went went to the rearing of that; in the revolution of six Days it was set upon its Feet: But many a Year was God in Travail before Sion was brought forth; there was an Enemy as potent as Hell to deal with in setting it in Adam's Family after Man's Apostacy. The corrupt Nature, that had then got the possession of the World to contest with. The World must be drowned to bring it to a second Nativity and establishment in Noah. The forming the Church of the Jews was not without some pangs of Nature; what Signs and Wonders, and great Terrors were wrought in its bringing forth out of Ægypt, and striking off the Chains of her Captivity? Deut. 4. 34. What fire, blackness, darkness, tempest, that made a convulsion in the Souls of those that were to be her Materials? Heb. 12. 18, 19. And the bringing forth the Gentile Church, and enlarging the Cords and Stakes of Sion, was preceded by the darkening the Sun, the trembling of the Earth, the opening of the Graves, the suffering of that which was dearest to God himself.

* Ezek. 1. 28.
† Rev 4. 3.

No Power was ever employed so signally in the Affairs of any worldly Concern, as in the settlement of Sion. The devouring Waves of the Red-Sea have been made her Bulwarks, and the Sand, the Grave of her Enemies, hath been a path for her passage. The Sun hath forgotten his natural Race, to gaze upon her Victories, Josh. 10. 13. Angels have been commissioned to be her Champions, and fight her Battels, 2 Kings 19. 35. The whole Host of Heaven have been arrayed to fight for Sion on Earth. The mercileſs nature of the Fire hath been curb'd, to preserve her Children, when she seemed to be reduced to a small number; and the mouths of hunger-starv'd Lions have been bridled for the same purpose, Dan. 6. 22. The proudest Enemies to her have been vanquish'd by Frogs, and Lice; and Tyrants that would lay their Hands upon her, have been made to their Disgrace a living Banquet for Worms the vilest Creatures, Acts 12. 23.

And indeed, after the Malice of the Devil had usurp'd God's Right in the Creation, and had drawn the chiefest of his sublunary Creatures into an Apostacy with himself, no less than an infinite Power could be engaged against the greatest of Created Powers, if God would not forego his own Honour in suffering himself to be deprived of the Fruit of his Works. No less than Infinite Power could erect a Church in the World, that God might have the fruit of his Creation, he ordered this Power to appear, struck down the Gates of Hell, sent his Son to rescue his Honour, and his Spirit to polish Stones for his Temple. Every one that is fitted for this Building, had Almightiness at work with him before he was form'd, Eph. 1. 19, 20. Every Stone was hewed by the Spirit, and the Image of God was imprinted by a Divine Efficacy. Shall the fruit of so much Power, and the mark of his own Image, want an establishment, God would seem to be careless of the Treasures of his own Nature, wherewith he hath endow'd her. Shall all this Cost and Pains be to no purpose? Were the Gates of Hell taken down to be set up again more strongly? And the Chargeable Counsels of God to be puft away by the breath of Satan? Doth it consist with his Wisdom to let Sion fall out of his Hands into the Power of her old Oppressor? Men are more desirous to preserve the Estate they have gotten by Sweat, than that which is left them by Inheritance; and are most careful in settling that which hath cost them more Treasure, and more Labour. Jacob sets a value upon the Portion he got with his Sword and Bow, Gen. 48. 22. No less will God upon that Sion he hath wrested out of the World by the Might of his Arm.

[1.] In regard of Faithfulness to Christ the Head. The Spirit was promised to Christ, Acts 2. 33. Having received the Promise of the Holy Ghost, i. e. the Holy Ghost promised to him by the Father: He received that which was promised; his receiving it from God implyed the Spirit's being promised to him by God. To what end was this Spirit given him, and sent by him? To convince the World of Righteousness, John 16. 10. an effect necessary to the building Sion. For this end he received it, for this end therefore it was promised to him. The Promise would be vain, the performance of the Promise, in the mission of the Holy Ghost, would be to no purpose, if the end for which he was promised, and for which he was sent, were not perform'd, if there should not be a perpetual number convinced of, and imbracing that Righteousness of Christ, which hath been manifested by his going to the Father.

God also promised him a great Posterity after his making his Soul an offering for sin, Isa. 53. 10, 11. A seed that he should see, therefore stable and perpetual ‖, because always visible to him. God pawn'd his Word upon the condition of his Death; the Condition was perform'd to the full satisfaction of God: His Truth therefore hath no Evasion, no Plea to deny the performance of the Promise in raising up a multitude of Believers in the World, and such a multitude as shall always be seen with pleasure by him, as good and found Children, and the Travel of the Mother's Womb, are by the Parents. The truth of God is oblig'd by Christ's exact performance of the Condition, as well as by the particular respect he hath to the Glory of it; it was for the Church Christ gave himself, Eph. 5. 25. 'Tis necessary therefore that God should preserve and establish a Church for him to the end of the World; that Christ might not by any default of his Father, lose the end and design of his Death, there shall be a Generation of Believers, a little Seed lying in the midst of all the Chaff; so God promised *: His Name shall be propagated in a perpetual Birth of Children, it shall be found while the Sun in the Heaven keeps its Station.

‖ A Posterity was to follow his Sacrifice, his Cross was to give them being, and his Blood was to give them life.

* Ps. 72. 17. His Name shall be continued as long as the World.

(2.) In regard of faithfulness to the Church it self. How doth the Word sparkle with Promises to Sion in all her Concerns? He hath promis'd an indissolvable Marriage, the fixing a Knot that shall never be unty'd *. A Marriage that shall never end in Widdowhood, so that Judgment, Righteousness, Loving-kindness, Mercy, Faithfulness must first fail, before the Church meet with an entire dissolution, i. e. God, and the glorious Perfections of his Nature shall fail, before the Church be forsaken, and left to her Enemies. She is no less assur'd of continual Supplies and Nourishment, and that by no meaner a Hand than that of God himself, Isa. 27. 3. I the Lord do keep it, I will water it every moment, I will keep it night and day. (Nor a meaner Dew than himself, Hos. 14. 5.) Also without the failing her a Minute; he would water her with Doctrine to preserve her Verdure and increase her Growth. He would be her Guardian Night and Day, in the darkness of Adversity, in the sun-shine of Prosperity; so that Satan should not out-wit, nor the Craft and Subtilty of Hereticks waste her; for it refers to v. 1. wherein God promiseth her to punish the piercing Serpent, the crooked Serpent, that by various Windings and Turnings inſinuates himſelf to the deſtruction of Men. And he adds, v. 4. Fury is not in me, he lays by his Anger againſt her, as conſider'd in apoſtate Nature; the Fury of Hell ſhall not prevail where the Anger of God is pacify'd, but her Enemies ſhall be as Briars and Thorns before him. He hath a conſuming Fury for her Enemies, though he hath none for his Vineyard. Protection is in no leſs meaſure promis'd, and that not a temporary one, nor a bare Defence, but with the Ruin of her Enemies, and treading them down, as Straw is trodden down for the Dunghil, Iſa. 25. 10. In this Mountain ſhall the Hand of the Lord reſt. By Hand is meant his Power, and by Reſt is meant the perpetual Motion of it for her, and that againſt the moſt furious, malicious, and powerful of her Enemies, Mat. 16. 18. againſt the Gates of Hell: Againſt the Wiſdom of Hell, Gates being the Seat of Counſel; againſt the Cenſures and Sentences of Hell, Gates being the place of Judicature againſt the Arms of Hell, Gates being the place of Strength and Guards. When Chriſt ſecures againſt Hell, he ſecures againſt all that receive their Commiſſion from Hell; neither Hell it ſelf, nor the Inſtruments edg'd and envenom'd by Hell, ſhall prevail againſt her; ſhe is ſecur'd for her Aſſemblies in one part or other, when they gather together to hear the Law, and to ſacrifice; And I that am the Lord thy God, from the Land of Ægypt, will yet make thee to dwell in Tabernacles, as in the Days of ſolemn Feaſts, Hoſ. 12. 9. 'Tis a Promiſe to the Church, it was never yet, nor appears like to be perform'd to the Ten Tribes as a Nation, but to their Poſterity, as ſwallow'd up in, and embody'd with the Gentiles. The Conqueſt of her Enemies is ſecur'd to her, Pſal. 110. 1. The Promiſe is made to Chriſt of making his enemies his footſtool; But made to him as David's Lord, and conſequently as the Lord of his People, as King in Sion; and therefore made to the whole Body of his loyal Subjects. And all thoſe things are of little comfort without duration and ſtability, which is alſo ſecur'd to her, Hoſ. 6. 3. His going forth, i. e. the going forth of God in the Church, is prepared as the Morning. נכון Stable; His appearance for her, and in her, is as certain as the dawning of the Morning Light at the appointed Hour. All the Clouds which threaten a perpetual Night cannot hinder it, all the Workers of Darkneſs cannot prevent it; the Morning will dawn whether they will or no. Her Duration is compared to the moſt durable things, to that of the Cedar the moſt laſting of all Plants. Three times it is compar'd to Lebanon in the Promiſe, Hoſ. 14. 5, 6, 7. The Cedar never rots, Worms eat it not. 'Tis not only free from Putrifaction it ſelf, but the Juice of it preſerves other things. Numa's Books *, though of Paper, yet dipt in the Juice of Cedar, remain'd without Corruption in the Ground Five hundred Years. How ſhall that God who always remembers every thing, yea the meaneſt of his Creatures, forget his own variety of Expreſſions and multiply'd Promiſes concerning his Sion.

* Hos. 2. 19 I will betroth thee unto me for ever, and that in judgment, righteousness, loving kindness, mercy, faithfulness.

* Sanct. in loc.

(6.) In regard, 'tis the ſeat of his Glory. 'Tis the branch of his planting, the work of his hands, that he might be glorify'd, Iſa. 60. 21. His Glory would have a bruſh, if Sion ſhould ſink to Ruine. He ſows her for himſelf, Hoſ. 2. 23. ſpeaking of the Church in the time of the Goſpel, not to the Devil, to Sin, to the World, but to his own Glory. As Husbandmen ſow their Fields for their own uſe, to reap from them a fruitful Crop; and therefore till the Harveſt be in, they take care to make up the Breaches, and preſerve them from the Incurſions of Beaſts. Though God hath an objective Glory from all Creatures, yet he hath an active Glory only from the Church. 'Tis Iſrael, the Houſe of Aaron, and thoſe that fear the Lord, that the Pſalmiſt calls upon to render God the Praiſe of the eternity of his mercy, Pſal. 118. 2, 3, 4. He forbids the profane and diſobedient World to take his Covenant in their Mouth, Pſal. 50. 16. None do, none can truly honour and acknowledge him, but the Church; therefore the Apoſtle in his Doxology appropriates the Glory that is to be given to God as the Object, to the Church as the Subject, Epheſ. 3. 21. Unto him be Glory in the Church by Jeſus Chriſt throughout all Ages, world without end. So ſolemn a Wiſh from ſo great an Apoſtle, that it ſhould be, amounts to a certainty that it will be. There cannot be a Glory to God in the Church throughout all Ages, without the continuance of the Church in all Ages. God will have a Revenue of Glory paid him during the continuance of the World; there ſhall therefore be a ſtanding Church during the Duration of the World; while he therefore expects a Glory from the midſt of his People, he will be a wall of Fire round about them, and keep Sion one where or other in a poſture to glorifie him. What is the Apoſtle's motive to this Glory? 'Tis not a remote Power, ſuch as can act, but will not; but a Power operative in the Church, in doing thoſe things for her which ſhe could never ask nor think for her ſelf *. God hath a greater Glory from the Church than he can have from the World; he therefore gives her more ſignal experiments of his Power, Wiſdom, and Love, than to the reſt of the World. He had a Glory from Angels, but only as Creator, not as Redeemer, till they were acquainted with his Deſign, and were Speculators of his Actions in gathering a Church in the World. The Church therefore was the original of the new Glory, and Praiſe, the Angels preſented to God. Glory in the Church by Chriſt. Muſculus thinks that is added to diſtinguiſh it from the Jewiſh Church, which was ſettled by the Miniſtry of Moſes; as much as to ſay, God had not ſo much Glory by the Tabernacles of Jacob, as he hath by the Church as ſettl'd by Chriſt. Or, by Chriſt notes the manner of the preſenting our Praiſe, and the ground of the acceptance of our Praiſe. God accepts no Glory but what is offer'd to him by the hand of Chriſt; and Chriſt preſents no Glory but what is paid him by the Church. 'Tis the Church then, and the Goſpel-Church that preſerves the Glory of God in the World. If the Church therefore ceaſeth, the Glory of God in the World ceaſeth. But ſince God hath created all for his own Glory, ſeparated a Church out of the World for his Glory, appointed his Son the Head of it, that he might be glorify'd, his Church therefore is as dear to him as his Glory, and dear to him in order to his Glory; in eſtabliſhing it therefore he eſtabliſhes his own Honour and Name. It ſhall therefore remain in this World to glorifie him, afterwards in another to glorifie him, and be glorify'd by him.

* V. 20. Now to him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that works in us

(7.) In regard that 'tis the Object of his peculiar Affection. Eſtabliſhment of a belov'd Object is inſeparable from a real Affection. By this he ſecures the Spiritual Sion, or Goſpel-Church, both from being forſaken by him, or made deſolate by her Enemies, becauſe ſhe was Hephzibah *, my delight, or, my will is in her, as if he had no Will to any thing but what concern'd her and her ſafety: As Men engrave upon their Rings the Image of thoſe Friends that are deareſt to them, and

and as the Jews in their Captivity engrav'd the Effigies of their City upon their Rings, to keep her in perpetual remembrance, ſo doth God engrave Sion upon the Palms of his Hands, Iſa. 49. 16. to which the Holy Ghoſt ſeems to allude. He ſo loves his Iſrael, that he who will be commanded by none, ſtoops to be commanded by them in things concerning his Sons, Iſa. 45. 11. Not only ask of me what you want, but command me in the things that are to come; the Pleas of my Promiſes of things to come, and your Deſires to bring them forth as the Work of my Hand, ſhall be as powerful a Motive to me, as a Command from a Superiour is to an obedient Inferiour; for it is to things to come, ſuch things that God hath predicted, that he limits their asking, which he calls alſo here a commanding of him. There was a real Love in the firſt Choice; there is an intenſeneſs of Love in the firſt Attraction, Jer. 31. 3. I have loved thee with an everlaſting love, therefore with loving-kindneſs have I drawn thee. His Love, which had a being from Eternity, is expreſt by Words of more tenderneſs, when he comes to frame her; loving-kindneſs; as if his Affection ſeem'd to be increas'd, when he came to the execution of his Counſel. According to the vigour of his immutable Love will be the ſtrength of her immutable Eſtabliſhment. This Promiſe is made, not to the Church in general, but to all the Families of the ſpiritual Iſrael, v. 1. Men are concern'd in Honour for that upon which they have plac'd their Affection. Shall there then be Decays in the Kindneſs of that God, whoſe Glory it is to be immutable? Is it poſſible this Fountain ſhould be frozen in his Breaſt? Was there not a love of good Will to Sion to frame her, to pick out her Materials when they lay like Swine in the confuſed Maſs and dirty Mire of a corrupt World? Is there not alſo a love of delight, ſince he hath refin'd and beautify'd her by imparting to her of his own comlineſs, Ezek. 16. 14. Is it likely this Affection ſhould ſink into careleſneſs? And the fruit of ſo much Love be daſht in pieces? Can ſuch tenderneſs be ſo unconcern'd, as to let the Apple of his Eye be pluckt out? To be a lazy Spectator of the Pillage of his Jewels by the Powers of Hell? to have the Center of his Delight toſt about at the pleaſure of Men and Devils? Shall a Mother be careleſs of her Sucking-child? How then can that God, whoſe tenderneſs to the Church cannot be equall'd by the Bowels of the moſt compaſſionate Mother to her Infants? Surely God is concern'd in Honour, to maintain againſt a feeble Devil, and a decrepit World, that which is the Object of his Almighty Affection.

(8.) In regard of the natural Weakneſs of the Church. No generous Prince but will think himſelf bound in honour to ſupport the weaker Subject: No tender Parent but will acknowledge himſelf oblig'd in Affection to take a greater care of the weaker than the ſtronger Child; The Gardiner adds Props to the feebleſt Plants, that are moſt expos'd to the fury of the Storms, and have leaſt ſtrength to withſtand them. The Powers of the World have always been the Churches Enemies; the Wiſe have ſet their Reaſon, and the mighty their Arms againſt her; the Devil, the God of this World, is ſo far from being her Friend, that Sion hath been the only Object of his ſpite. He contrives only Flouds to drown her, or Mines to demoliſh her. Her own Friends are often ſo darkened, or divided, that they cannot ſometimes for Ignorance, and will not other times for Peeviſhneſs, hit upon, and uſe the right means for her Preſervation. 'Tis an honourable thing then for that God, who entitles himſelf the Father of the Fatherleſs, to ſhew his own Power and Grace in her eſtabliſhment. The fatherleſs condition of the Church is an Argument ſhe hath ſometimes uſed to procure the aſſiſtance ſhe wanted *. And the weakneſs of Jacob urg'd by the Prophet excited Repentance in God, and averted two Judgments which were threatned againſt that People, Amos 7. 2, 3, 5, 6. 'Tis no mean Motive to him to help the helpleſs, this Opportunity he delights to take; when there was no Man to help, no Interceſſor to plead, then his own Arm brought ſalvation. When he ſaw no Defenders but all Ravagers, no Phyſicians but all Wounders, then ſhou'd the ſpirit of the Lord lift up a Standard, Iſa. 59, 16. 19.

* Hoſ. 14. 3. With thee the Fatherleſs finds Mercy.

To conclude, if Sion, the Goſpel-Church, were not of as long a duration as the ſtanding of the World, God wou'd loſe the honour of his Creation, after the Devil by Sin had made the Creatures unuſeful for thoſe Ends to which God had appointed them by his firſt inſtitution. The Wiſdom of God had been blurr'd, the Serpent wou'd have triumph'd, the Kingdom of God had been diſſolv'd, the Enemy wou'd have enjoy'd a remedileſs tyranny, had not God put his Hand to the Work, and erected a new Kingdom to himſelf out of the Ruins of the Fall. And ſince God was pleas'd to take this Courſe rather than create a new World, and hath laid the Foundation of a new Kingdom by drawing ſome out of that common Rebellion the Humane Nature was fallen into, and that he might do it with honour to himſelf, hath ſent his Son upon that Errand, by his Blood to bring back Man to God, and his Spirit to make Men fit for a Communion with him, and hath backt his Affection to the Church with ſo much coſts and pains for her welfare; If after all this God ſhou'd deſert his Church, the diſhonour of God's Wiſdom, the loſs of the Fruit of all his coſts and pains, the weakneſs of his Affection, or of his Power to perform his Promiſe, and the ruine of his Glory intended by thoſe Methods, wou'd be the iſſue which wou'd be attended with the Triumph of his revolted Creature and greateſt Enemy. This wou'd be, if God ſhou'd ceaſe picking out ſome Men for his Praiſe, and keeping up his Name and Royalty in the Earth.

2. 'Tis for the exerciſe of the Offices of Chriſt that Sion ſhould be eſtabliſh'd. He is Prophet, Prieſt, and King, which are all Titles of Relation. Prophet implies ſome to be inſtructed, a Prieſt ſome to offer for, and a King ſome to be ruled; put one Relation, and you muſt neceſſarily put the other. If there were no Church preſerv'd in the World, he would be a nominal Prophet without any Diſciples, a King without Subjects, and a Prieſt without Suppliants to be aton'd by him, upon Earth. Now Chriſt is the wonderful Counſellor, the everlaſting Father, and the Government is laid upon his Shoulders; to what end? to order and eſtabliſh the Kingdom of God, Iſa. 9. 6, 7. All the Strength and Vigour he had, as it was from God, ſo it was intended for God *. And the reaſon is, becauſe, though God hath given up the adminiſtration of things to Chriſt, yet he hath not deveſted himſelf of his Right, nor can; For God is the chief Lord, and the relation of Creatures not ceaſing, the relation of Lord and Creator cannot ceaſe. And therefore ſince the Right of God continues, the Grant of the uttermoſt Ends of the Earth to be the Inheritance and Poſſeſſion of Chriſt, includes not only a Gift, but an Office, to preſerve, protect, eſtabliſh, and improve his Poſſeſſion for thoſe Ends for which he had the

* Thou madeſt the Son of Man ſtrong for thy ſelf, Pſa. 80. 17.

Grant, and to prevent all that may impair it. As he had a right and ſtrength, by the order of God to rear it, ſo he hath an Office and Power to eſtabliſh it, as well as to erect it, and Chriſt is the ſame in all his Offices, yeſterday, to day, and for ever, Heb. 13. 8. The ſame in credit with God, in faithfulneſs to his Office, the vertue of his Blood, the force of his Arm, and compaſſions to bleeding Sion.

(1.) 'Tis his part, as a Prophet, to eſtabliſh it in Doctrine. 'Tis his part externally to raiſe his Truth when it lies gaſping in the Rubbiſh of Error, and refine his Worſhip when it is daub'd with Superſtition and Idolatry. Internally to clear the Underſtanding to know his truth, quicken the Will to embrace it, rivet the Word in the Conſcience, and enflame the Affections to love and delight in it. Certainly the Promiſe of the abiding of his Spirit implies the efficacy of his Operation while he abides. He is to provide againſt the ſubtilty and rapine of Fox-like Hereticks, that they ſpoil not the tender Vine, Cant. 2. 15. And to furniſh the Church with Gifts for the preſerving and increaſing her. The perpetual exerciſe of this prophetical Office he promis'd them, when he gave the Apoſtles a Charter for his preſence to the end of the World, Matt. 28. 20. Which was in relation to their Miniſtry and their Office of teaching. Since he promis'd his preſence with his Miniſtry to the end of the World, he will have a Church to the end of the World, to enjoy the benefit of that Promiſe to be taught by them. It conſiſted not with the Wiſdom or Faithfulneſs of Chriſt to promiſe a perpetuity to that, if he knew it were to be cut ſhort before the end of the World. And this himſelf alſo aſſures the Church of in all its variety of States, Revel. 2. 1. Theſe things ſaith he that holds the ſeven Stars in his Right-hand, who walks in the midſt of the ſeven Golden Candleſticks. Not only Seven Stars at one time, or Seven Golden Candleſticks in being together, but in all the Succeſſions of the Church to the conſummation of the World. And as he deſcribes himſelf by this Title when he ſpeaks of the Church of Epheſus, which was the firſt State of the Church, not only aſſuring her of his holding her Star, and walking by her Candleſtick, but all the reſt that were to follow, ſo he doth renew the ſame Expreſſion in part when he ſpeaks of the Church of Sardis, which is the riſing of the Church from the Apoſtacy wherein it had been cover'd in the Thyatirian ſtate, Revel. 3. 1. Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven Stars. The ſeven Spirits of God ſignifies the Gifts for the building and perfecting the Church ſtill in the hand of Chriſt, which ſhould be in a more plentiful way poured out than for ſome time before, as they were in the firſt Reformation. He is ſtill therefore as a Prophet walking in the Church in all Ages. Not only in the firſt Foundation of it by the Apoſtles, but in the Reformation of it, after it had been bury'd in Superſtition and Idolatry. And at the Reſtauration of the Church in the World, there ſhall be a pure River of Water, as clear as Cryſtal, proceeding from the Throne of God, and the Lamb, Revel. 22. 1. i. e. Pure Doctrine without any Mud and Mixtures.

(2.) 'Tis his part as a Prieſt to eſtabliſh it in the favour of God, and look to the Reparations of his Temple. The Church is his Temple. A Temple is the proper Seat and the proper Care of a Prieſt. He is a Prieſt ſtill upon his Throne, Zach. 6. 13. and that for ever. As he hath therefore ſome thing to offer, ſo he hath always ſome for whom he offers; who are they but his Church? His Prayer on Earth, John 17. was but a Model or Draught of his Interceſſion in Heaven; one part of it is for preſervation of them through the truth of God, John 17. 17. The keeping up the Goſpel in the World in order to a ſanctification of ſome, is the matter of his interceſſion, which is one part of his Prieſtly Office. And we cannot imagine his Plea for his Church to be weaker on his Throne, it being alſo a Throne of Grace, than it was for his Enemies when he was upon a Croſs of Suffering. The Compaſſions annext to his Prieſthood remain ſtill, Heb. 4. 15. If his Office be perpetual, the Qualifications neceſſary to that Office are as durable as the Office it ſelf, as long as there is any Object for their Exerciſe. To what purpoſe are his Compaſſions, if he ſhould not pity her for whom they were deſign'd, and for whoſe Behoof he was furniſht with them? He cannot be faithful to God in his Office, if he be not merciful and tender to Sion in her Diſtreſſes. He certainly pities her as he would himſelf, were it poſſible he ſhould be in an infirm Condition. He muſt loſe his Soul before he can loſe his Pity; and the Church muſt ceaſe to be his Body before ſhe can ceaſe to be the Object of his Compaſſions. He hath the ſame Sentiments now that he had when he called to Paul from Heaven, Acts 9. 4. It was not then, Why perſecuteſt thou mine, but why perſecuteſt thou me? Nor is it ſo now; as the Relation continues the ſame, ſo doth the Compaſſion, ſo do his Sentiments, ſo do his Cares. To what purpoſe doth he as a Prieſt ſit upon a Throne of Grace, if he did not ſhew Grace to his Sion againſt the cruel Deſigns of her Enemies? As God pities us when he remembers our Frame, Pſal. 103. 13,14. So no queſtion doth Chriſt, when he remembers Sion's Oppreſſions, as a diſtreſſed Child is the Object of the Father's Pity. Add to this, That ſince the Death of Chriſt was one part of his Prieſtly performance, and that the virtue of his Sacrifice is as eternal as his Prieſthood, what a diſparagement would it be to him, and the virtue of his Death, if ever the World while it ſtood, ſhou'd be void of the Fruits of it? There can be no moment wherein it is not valid, to expiate the Sins of ſome Men, and therefore not a Moment wherein the World ſhall be without a Sion, whoſe Sins are expiated by it. Shou'd the Standard of Sion be ſnatcht away, and torn by the Powers of Darkneſs, what wou'd become of the Glory, what wou'd become of the virtue of the Redeemer's Death? Wou'd God conſecrate him ſo ſolemnly by an Oath to be a Prieſt, to ſo little purpoſe? How cou'd it be for ever, if the execution of that Office ſhou'd be interrupted by the ceſſation of a Church as long as the World ſtands upon its Pillars? Would it not be an empty Title, if the End of it were not perform'd? We cannot imagine the falling of Sion, but we muſt queſtion the merit of his Death, the truth of his exaltation, the ſtrength of his Interceſſion, the faithfulneſs of his Office, and the ſincerity and candor of his Compaſſions.

(3.) 'Tis his part, as a King, to eſtabliſh Sion in being, and govern her. The Prophets always teſtify'd that of his Government there ſhould be no end. If the Church ſhould ceaſe for one Moment in the World, what Subjects wou'd he have to govern here? Can he be a King without a Kingdom, or a Governour without Subjects, to bear a voluntary and ſincere Witneſs to his Name? If he be King in Sion, he will alſo have a Sion to own him, and a Sion to rule in; not only a conqueſt of the Serpentine Brood and infernal Powers was promis'd, but the total and perpetual Victory,

Gen.

Gen. 3. 15. The ſeed of the Woman was to bruiſe the Serpent's Head. When the Head is bruiſed, there is no more Wiſdom to guide, or Force to ſpirit the Arm and the other Members of the Body. It was a Promiſe made not only of Chriſt to Man, but of a compleat Victory to Chriſt, that he ſhou'd out-wit the Serpent's Wiſdom, and utterly diſcomfit the Serpent's Power. If the Conqueſt were not perfect and perpetual, it cou'd not be call'd a ſpoiling of Principalities and Powers, as it is, Col. 2. 15. but an interruption or temporary Check, whence they might reſcue themſelves. He is therefore ſaid to ſtill the Enemy and Avenger *. i. e. Make them utterly ſilent, not knowing what firm Counſels to take, or what ſucceſsful Orders to give. And it being his end to deſtroy the Works of the Devil, the deſtroying the Works muſt be the Root of the Being and Preſervation of the Church. Did Chriſt then riſe as a Conqueror out of the Grave, and ſit down as King upon his Throne, to let the Devil and the World run away with the Fruits of his Victory? Will he be ſo injurious to himſelf, as to let his Throne be overturn'd by his Enemies? And to let the Adverſary of Sion repoſſeſs himſelf of that which he hath been ſo powerfully and ſucceſsfully ſtript of? Chriſt being King cannot be chaſed out of his Kingdom, nor wants Power to keep it from being utterly waſted. To be the Governour of Sion was as much in his firſt Commiſſion as to be her Redeemer *. Chriſt as King will never leave beating up the Quarters of Hell, till he hath utterly routed their Force, and made the Partizans of it his Footſtool, and thereby eſtabliſh'd Sion beyond the Fears of any tottering. Therefore when he ſpeaks of the Church of Smyrna, which was to have a ſore conflict with the Devil, and feel the ſmart of him for Ten Days, underſtanding thoſe Ten ancient Perſecutions of the Church, he aſſumes a new Title for her Encouragement, Revel. 2. 8. Theſe things ſaith the firſt and the laſt, which was dead and is alive. I was the firſt that liſted you and embody'd you for the War, and I will be the laſt to bring up the Rear; I was firſt in raiſing you, and I will be the laſt in preſerving you. Fear not the Terror of thoſe Perſecutions, though they be to Blood and Death; I was uſed ſo, I was dead, but I am now alive, and I live for my Church, to behold her Battles, to procure her Victory, and to Crown thoſe that ſhall fall in the Fight againſt her Enemies. Chriſt in encouraging them to ſuffer for him, aſſures them of the ſecurity of a Church; the Devil ſhould not waſte the whole, but caſt ſome of them into Priſon, not all, and that for their refining, v. 10. The Devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into Priſon, that you may be tryed. Chriſt lives ſtill, and acts as King for the Security of Sion, and preſerving a Generation to ſerve him, till the time comes that is promiſed, Rev. 22. 3. that there ſhall be no more Curſe, but the Throne of God and of the Lamb ſhall be in it, and then his ſervants ſhall ſerve him with a full ſecurity from all Trouble.

*Pſal. 8. 2. I make no ſcruple to underſtand the whole Pſalm of Chriſt, ſince the Apoſtle hath interpreted part of it of him, Heb. 2.

Iſa.* 49. 10 He was to feed and guide his Flock, which is often in Scripture put for Ruling.

3. The Foundation of Sion is ſure. 'Tis founded upon Chriſt the Corner-ſtone. Chriſt is called the Foundation, 1 Cor. 3. 11. The Apoſtles are the Foundation, Epheſ. 2. 20. Chriſt is the Foundation perſonally, the Apoſtles doctrinally; Chriſt meritoriouſly, the Apoſtles miniſterially; the Apoſtles in regard of the publication of the Doctrine, Chriſt in regard of the efficacy of the Doctrine whereby the Church is eſtabliſhed.

1. The Church is ingrafted in Chriſt, united to him, one with him; the parts of it are reckoned as his ſeed *. As if they had ſprung out of his Loins, as Men naturally did from Adam's; that as Adam was the Foundation of their corruption, ſo ſhall Chriſt be the Foundation of their reſtauration: They ſhall be lookt upon as the Children of Chriſt, and Chriſt as their Father; and as Father and Children, legally counted one.

Pſ.* 22. 30 a ſeed ſhall ſerve him, it ſhall be counted to the Lord as a Generation.

The Church is his own Body, Eph. 5. 29, 30. In loving and eſtabliſhing the Church, he loves and eſtabliſheth himſelf. Whatſoever is implanted in Nature as a Perfection, is eminently in God: Now, ſince he hath twiſted with our Natures a care of our own Bodies, this care muſt be much more in the Nature of Chriſt, becauſe his Church is as nearly united to him, as our Members to the Fleſh and the Bones; and he hath an higher Affection to his Myſtical, than we can have to our Natural Bodies. Chriſt will no leſs ſecure and perfect his own Body, than a Man would improve the Beauty and Strength of his Natural Body, to preſerve it from Wounds, from being mangled or ſcarrified, unleſs it be for the ſecurity of the whole. If he did not do it, it would be a Hatred of his own Fleſh, which never any Man in his right Wits was ever guilty of. The Eternity of Chriſt is made the Foundation of the Church's Eſtabliſhment, Pſal. 102. 27, 28. Thou art the Son, and thy Years ſhall have no end. The Children of thy Servants ſhall continue, and their Seed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee. There could be no Strength in the Argument without union and communion with him: The Church is ſetled upon him as a Foundation, and therefore is of as long a duration as the Foundation upon which it ſtands; the conjunction is ſo ſtrait, that if one fails the other muſt; eſpecially ſince as Chriſt is the Head, the Church is his fulneſs, Eph. 1. 22, 23. Sion cannot be compleat but in him, and Chriſt cannot be compleat without her. A Foundation is of little uſe without a Superſtructure; a Building falls not without a diſcredit to the Foundation upon which it ſtood. Sion's compleatneſs depends upon the Strength of Chriſt, and Chriſt's myſtical compleatneſs depends upon the ſtability of Sion, he will not leave Himſelf an imperfect and empty Head.

2. 'Tis founded upon the Covenant. Upon that which endures for ever, and ſhall ſurvive the Funeral of the whole World. Heaven and Earth ſhall paſs away, but the Church is founded upon that which ſhall not paſs away, 1 Pet. 1. 23. The Word of God, &c. Not ſuch a Word as that whereby he brought forth Light in the World, and formed the Stars at the Creation; a Word that engag'd him not to the perpetuating of it *. This Covenant is more firm than the Pillars of Heaven, and the Foundations of the Earth. The Stars of Heaven ſhall diſſolve, the Sun ſhall be turned into Darkneſs, the Elements ſhall change their order for confuſion: But the Church being founded upon an eternal and immutable Covenant, ſhall ſubſiſt in the midſt of the confuſions and flames of the World, Iſa. 54. 10. The Mountains ſhall depart, and the Hills be removed, but my Covenant of Peace ſhall not be removed. 'Tis more eſtabliſh'd than the World. The Apoſtle clearly intimates it in his commendation of Abraham's Faith, when he tells us, He looked for a City which hath Foundations, by virtue of the promiſe of a numerous Seed, Heb. 11. 9, 10. As if the World had no Foundation in compariſon of the Church. 'Tis beyond the Skill of Hell to raze up the Foundation, and therefore impoſſible for it to beat down the Superſtructure. Adam fell under the ſtrength of the Serpents wit, but he could by no Promiſe lay claim to Stability, as the Church can by an immutable Covenant for her ſupport.

IV. The Uſe. 1. Information.

1. If the Church hath a duration and ſtability, then Ordinances and Miniſtry are perpetual. Miniſters may be thruſt into Corners, clapt up in Priſon, hurried to their Graves; but the Sepulchres of Miniſters are not the Graves of the Miniſtry. A Miniſtry, and a Church, Ordinances and a Church, cannot be ſeparated; they run parallel together to the end of the World; for Sion cannot be ſuppoſed without Divine Officers, and Divine Inſtitutions; the one cannot be eſtabliſhed without the other. Chriſt walks in the midſt of the ſeven golden Candleſticks, Rev. 2. 1. in the ſeven States of the Church, to the end of the World*. As there are ſeven States of the Church, ſo there are ſeven Stars in the hand of Chriſt for all thoſe States; the Miniſtry have the ſame ſupport, the ſame Guardian as the Church her ſelf. What was in the Epheſian and Primitive State, is alſo in the Sardian State, the State of the Church riſing from corruption of Doctrine and Ordinances *. Chriſt hath ſtill Stars to ſhine, and ſeven Spirits to gift them; hath at preſent, not had; hath in the State we are, which ſeems to be the end of that Sardian State. 'Tis true, the Church is in a wilderneſs Condition, and hath been ſo for above 1200 Years; but hath ſhe yet ſeen her Funeral? No, ſhe hath a place for her Reſidence, and Food for her Nouriſhment, and both provided for her by that God that fram'd her, by that God that ſtood by her in the pangs of her Travel, and ſhelter'd her Man-child from the fury of her Enemies *. They ſhould feed her; ſhe is not ſtarved in the Deſart, ſhe hath Manna to comfort her, her Caterer to provide her Food, and ſome to adminiſter the Banquet of the Word and Sacraments to her. For any Member of Sion to deny a Miniſtry, and deny Ordinances, and therefore to neglect them, is to conclude her dead in a Grave, and not living, in a Deſart, utterly famiſh'd, and not fed. Though there be a Smoke in the Temple, a Cloud and Obſcurity, the Truths and Ordinances of God not ſo clear, ſo efficacious, as they have been, as ſome underſtand, Rev. 15. 8. or as they ſhall be; yet there is a Temple ſtill. A Smoke in the Temple ſuppoſeth a Temple ſtanding, and Ordinances in it: The obſcurity of a thing nulls not the Being of it, nor a Cloud upon the Sun the ſtability and motion of it. He that denies a Church, a Miniſtry, and Divine Ordinances in it, muſt firſt charge Chriſt with falſhood, when he promiſed to be with them to the end of the World, Mat. 28. 19, 20. Alway, even to the end of the World. Not to ſuſtain their particular Perſons to the end of the World, but their Doctrine in a Succeſſion of ſome, to teach and baptize by virtue of Authority from him; for to that doth the Promiſe and Command refer, and not unto the contiuance of the Apoſtolical Dignity, or of their extraordinary gifts of Miracles, but the duration of their ſtanding work till the Top-ſtone were laid, with the loud acclamations of Grace, Grace. The Church ſhall no more want a Miniſtry in the Deſart, than ſhe wanted a Prophet in Babylon.

2. The Doctrine of the eſtabliſhment of every Member of Sion is clearly confirmed. He that eſtabliſheth Sion, counts up every Man that was born in her, every Child of Sion is in the ſame ſtate, and under the ſame Promiſe as Sion her ſelf. The promiſe of Stability to Sion is not to be underſtood of the firmneſs of her Palaces, but the duration of her Inhabitants; as when God is ſaid to build a Houſe, 'tis not to be underſtood of rearing the Walls, but increaſing the Family. * Every renew'd Man, every one truly born in Sion ſtands upon the ſame Foundation of the Covenant, hath the ſame Charter with Sion her ſelf, and therefore upon a ſurer Ground than any particular Society of Men in the World, Pſal. 125. 1. They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as Mount Sion, which cannot be remov'd, but abides for ever. He is upon a better Foundation of Security than the Church of Epheſus or Smyrna, Pergamus or Sardis, which have loſt their footing, and their Places know them no more. A Believer enjoys other Priviledges with Sion, but the Patent runs here for his Stability in the favour of God, and runs high by removing all Fears in the Negative, Cannot be removed, and confirming all confidence in the Affirmative, Abides for ever. No Name writ upon God's Hand, no Name preſented on Chriſt's Breaſt ſhall be razed out, no Fruit of his Death ſhall be loſt, no Devil ſhall ſteal from him any part of his Purchaſe. As he hath Blood enough to redeem them, ſo he hath Power enough to preſerve them; the ſame Blood that is the cement of Sion, the ſame Hand that built her, the ſame Head that influenceth her, ſecures every one of her true born Children. They are all in the ſame Poſture, and upon the ſame Foundation with Sion her ſelf.

3. How great is the folly of Sion's Enemies! They judge of her by the weakneſs of her worldly Intereſt, and not by the Almightineſs of her Guardian. They ſtand againſt a God, that in decreeing the Stability of Sion decreed the Ruine of her Oppoſers, and can with as much eaſe effect it as reſolve it. The Stone, which is the Foundation of this Kingdom, ſhall break in pieces the Image of all worldly Glory, the Policy of all worldly Wiſdom, and the force of all worldly Power, Dan. 2. 35, 44, 45. It ſhall make the Mountains of the World as a level, and Duſt underneath it. Chaff may as well ſtop the Wind, and force it to another Quarter; Stubble may as well quench the fury of the Flames, as the Enemies of Sion be Victorious over the God of Sion. As he hath a Fire in Sion to warm her; ſo he hath a Furnace in Jeruſalem to conſume her Enemies, Iſa. 31. 9. a Fire to burn his People's Droſs, but a Furnace to diſſolve his Enemies Force. Pharaoh is an Example to all Generations, to warn Men not to ſtruggle with thoſe whom God reſolves to Patronize; how did he further his own Deſtruction by his Hardneſs, and the deliverance of the Oppreſſed by his Fury? How often is the violence of her Enemies the occaſion of the manifeſtation of God's Glory, and the ſettling Sion's Security? Had not Pharaoh been ſo furious, God had not manifeſted the Glory of his Power, nor his Iſrael enjoyed ſo miraculous a Safety. 'Tis true, the Church is weak, but the Arm that holds her, is the ſtrongeſt in Heaven and Earth. Her outward Intereſt is ſmall, but her Intereſt is twiſted with that of her Lord. An Enemy ſhall find more miſchief from Mud-walls, under the protection of a Valiant Arm, than from Stone-walls, under the guard of an Infant. How fooliſh is it for a Man to think to break a Rock with his Fiſt for hurting his Shins, whereby he bruiſeth his Hands as well as his Leggs? How fooliſh is it for Men to beat the Buſhes about a Lion's Den, whereby they will be ſure to rouſe him? God dwells in Sion, from thence he roars, to the ſhaking of Heaven and Earth, the Powers of the World, when he will manifeſt himſelf to be the hope of his People, and the ſtrength of the Children of Iſrael, Joel 3. 16.

4. What a ground is here for Prayer! This ſets an edge upon Prayer. No Petition can more comfortably, no Petition can more confidently be put up,

* I do not queſtion but that the whole is Prophetical it would not elſe be called Myſtery, as it is, Rev. 1. 20. were it meant of thoſe particular Churches.

*Rev. 3. 1. These things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven Stars.

*Re. 12. 6. And the Woman fled into the Wilderneſs, where ſhe hath a place prepared of God that they ſhould feed her there 1260 Days.

*Exo. 2. 21. God made them houſes, i. e. gave them Children.

up, than for Sion's Eſtabliſhment. Prayers for particular Perſons, or for our ſelves, may want Succeſs, but Supplications for Sion never miſcarry, they have the ſame Foundation for an Anſwer, that Sion hath for her Stability, viz. The Promiſe of God; they are agreeable to that Affection which ſhall never be removed from her: How believingly may we cry out, Be it unto Sion according to thy word? There is no fear of a Repulſe; whatſoever God denies, he will not deny that for which he hath ſo often engaged himſelf. It may be for the good of the Church, that ſo great a Perſon as Paul ſhould lye in Chains, and his Fetters conduce to the furtherance of the Goſpel, Phil. 1. 12. But it can never be for the Intereſt of Sion, or for the Intereſt of Sion's God, that ſhe ſhould be cruſh'd between the Teeth of the Lions, and that which he hath redeemed by the Blood of his Son, be a prey to the Jaws of the Devil. God hath entitled Sion by the name of a City not forſaken, Iſa. 62. 12. And as we have his Promiſe for her Settlement, ſo we have his Command for our Earneſtneſs; ver. 7. And give him no reſt till he doth eſtabliſh Jeruſalem a praiſe in the whole Earth. And he preſcribes us to back that by our Prayers, which he had promis'd, ver. 1. For Jeruſalem*'s ſake I will not reſt till the righteouſneſs thereof go forth as brightneſs.* Our deſires in this caſe are ſuited to his Reſolves, and run in the ſame Line with his immutable Decree; he will have no Reſt in himſelf, nor he would have no Reſt from us, till this be accompliſh'd. We cannot call upon God with a greater confidence for any thing, than for that Church that ſhall outlive the Funeral of the World, and ſurvive the frame of Nature that ſhall lie in Aſhes.

5. What a ſtrong ground is here for Truſt! Look not ſo much upon the condition of Sion's Walls, as upon her Foundation; not upon her preſent Poſture, as upon her Promiſe-Charter; not upon her as a weak Vine, but under the hand of the Higheſt, as the Vine-dreſſer; look not upon the feebleneſs of the Flock, but upon the care of the Shepherd; nor upon the fierceneſs of the Lions, but upon the ſtrength and affection of her Guardian.

(1.) Let not our Faith reſt upon Appearances. Fleſh will then make a wrong Judgment of God. Providences are various, and ſhould our Faith be guided only by them, it would have a livelineſs one Moment, and faint the next. As the Promiſe is the Stability of the Church, ſo it is only the Stability of our Faith. The Authority of the Word is the Life of our Faith, and not the ſenſe of any particular Providence in the World. A Faith built upon protecting Providences in a ſenſitive Faith; a Faith built upon the Promiſe, is a ſpiritual Faith.

(2.) Yet the Experiences God hath given us hitherto of the continuance of the Church, may be called in to bear witneſs to the Truth of the Promiſe. He hath before conducted his Iſrael into Canaan, when Pharaoh meditated their utter Ruine, or their continuance under his Chains; he fed them with Manna, and watered them with a Rock in a Deſart, that afforded no earthly aſſiſtance. The preſerving the Vine could never be aſcribed to the Vine it ſelf, in which there is no ſtrength; nor to the Foxes, in whom there is no pity; but to the Keeper of the Vineyard. We have reaſon therefore to truſt God, but not at all to truſt Man; Is it from Man or from God, that the Church hath ſubſiſted ſo long in the World, a little Flock in the midſt of many Wolves, among Enemies more numerous than her Friends? What a ſmall number hath the Church had in any Age to mate the multitude of her Enemies, what Wiſdom to countermine their Policy, and what Power to repel their Force? The Church is not weaker now than it hath been; the Sons of Sion were always Sheep; Sheep have not the ſtrength of Lions to reſiſt, nor the ſwiftneſs of Eagles to fly away from Danger; the Danger cannot be greater than it hath been, there were always Dragons that ſpat out their Venom, and Lions that opened their Mouths againſt her; the Devil never wanted Diligence, nor the World Enmity to overturn her; could ſhe for one Moment have ſubſiſted in the midſt of ſo many Furies, had not God been her Shield, and Glory? Call to mind how often God hath healed her Diſeaſes, and bound up her Wounds. Let us reſt in that Promiſe, which hath ſo often been made good by his Power, which he hath in many Ages diſplayed upon as great occaſions of Danger as Sion can be in. Let us live believingly under his Wings, and fear not our own Weakneſs, or our Enemies Strength.

3. We have greater ground of Confidence than the Church of Iſrael had. In the day of Iſrael's Trouble by Salmanaſſer, the Prophet comforts the Church in her Anguiſh, by the conſideration of the Meſſiah who was to aſſume the Government, though many Years after, Iſa. 8. 22. Iſa. 9. 1, 6. Shall a Promiſe, that was to ſtay ſo many Ages for performance, be a ground of Truſt and Confidence to a tottering Church then? And ſhall not the ſtaggering Church have more ground to reſt, ſince the Meſſiah is made the Head of the Corner, and hath the Keys of Hell and Death delivered to him? What a baſe thing is diſtruſt then againſt ſo many aſſurances of Stability, and the experience of a multitude of Ages? Graſp the Promiſe, plead it earneſtly, ſhew God his written Word, which he hath ſent from Heaven, he never yet diſowned it, nor ever will. Methinks, the Voice, God is able to deliver Sion, ſounds too much of Diſtruſt. If we know no more than God's Power, we know not ſo much as the Devil doth; he knows his Power, and he knows his Promiſe. Let us therefore firſt eye the Promiſe, which God loves, and the Devil fears, and then call in his Power to back his Word.

4. Regard not Man. Too much Eye upon him implies too little upon God, as if God's Word were not enough to create and ſupport a Confidence without the Buttreſſes of ſecular Strength. All dependance on Man is either upon a broken Reed, that cannot ſupport it ſelf, or a piercing Reed, that Wounds inſtead of Healing, Iſa. 36. 6. 'Tis a diſhonour to God, and provokes him to lengthen a Miſery and retard a Deliverance. The nearer Sion comes to a final Settlement, the more God will act by himſelf, either without Inſtruments, or in a more ſignally ſpiriting Inſtruments, that himſelf ſhall be more viſible in them than themſelves. The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her. If he be the Higheſt he is fit to be truſted by us; if he will do it himſelf, it is fit we ſhould couple none with him. The nearer the Time comes wherein God will appear Himſelf, the more we ſhould depend upon him Himſelf; the exerciſe of Faith ſhould be ſtrongeſt, when the Promiſe, the Object of Faith, is neareſt its Meridian. Let us be more careful to keep our Faith from ſinking, and let God alone to keep his Church from ſinking.

Uſe 2. Of Comfort. The Church's Patent is ſingular, the greateſt worldly Society could never ſhew the fellow of it. The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her. There is not ſuch a Clauſe in the ſettlement of any Nation. Why ſhould we be afraid then of the joynt Conſpiracy of Men or Devils?

He

He that hath laid the Foundation, can, and will preſerve the Superſtructure, not only becauſe he formed it, but becauſe he hath promiſed it. When Chriſt would reveal to John the future Condition, and conflicts of the Church to the end of the World, he appears like a Conquerer with all the Enſigns of Authority and Power about him, Rev. 1. 13, 14, 15, 16. He hath Eyes like a flame, to pierce his Enemies, Feet like braſs to cruſh them, a two edged Sword out of his Mouth, to pierce them; and this, while he is in the midſt of the ſeven Candleſticks; The ſeveral Alterations and Periods of the Church to the end of the World, to preſerve and cleanſe them.

1. Here is Comfort in the Confuſions and Troubles of the World. The ſhaking of Heaven and Earth were the Harbingers of the appearance of Chriſt for Redemption, and laying the Corner Stone of Sion, Hag. 2. 7. The ſame Methods will be uſed when he ſhall come to lay the top-ſtone, and compleat all the fruits of Redemption, Luke 21. 25, 26, 28. The Confuſion of the World is the reſtauration of Sion; a Storm or ruſhing mighty Wind preceded the plentiful effuſion of the Spirit upon the Apoſtles, for the blowing the Goſpel into every Corner, Act. 2. 2. Never were the Diſciples in ſo hopeleſs a Condition as before the Reſurrection of Chriſt, the ground of the Churches Stability; they then expected to ſee his Face no more. What Commotions and Thunders are deſcribed in the Revelation before the New Jeruſalem comes down from Heaven, and God pitch his Tabernacle among Men? But he ſuffers not thoſe Commotions to be raiſed in the World by the miniſtring Angel, till the Servants of God be ſealed in the Forehead, for their preſervation in thoſe Confuſions, which ſhall be the ruine of their Enemies, Rev. 7. 2, 3. The Ark may ſhake with the motion of the Oxen, but it cannot fall. Noah's Ark may be toſt by the Waves that drown the World, but not ſink, and at laſt reſt upon the Mountains of Ararat. * i. e. the curſe of Terrors, the removal of Fears. Chriſt came not to the Diſciples, but in the fourth Watch of the Night, and that when the Ship was toſſed by the Waves, and was tugging againſt a contrary Wind, Mat. 14. 24, 25. 'Tis no hardſhip for Sion to be in a Boat beaten by the Sea, when Chriſt walks upon the Waters, and bids her be of good Chear, ſaying, 'Tis I, be not afraid. An Earthquake preceded the deliverance of Paul and Silas out of Priſon, Acts 16. 26. And Lightnings, and Voices, and Thundrings, Earthquake, and great Hail, ſhall accompany the opening of the Temple of God in Heaven, and the manifeſtation of the Ark of the Teſtament in that Temple, Rev. 11. 19.

* Gen. 8, 4. אל הרי אררט

2. Here is comfort in Perſecutions. Perſecution is yet for a while the Lot of the Church; a Sea and a Wilderneſs are yet the paſſage to Canaan. The firſt Promiſe to Abraham of a numerous Seed, was with the comparing it to the duſt of the Earth, Gen. 3. 16. Duſt that is trampled upon, Duſt that is removed by a puff of Wind. But the next was by comparing it to the Stars in Heaven, Gen. 15. 5. that are bright, and fixed, and have their orderly Motions. Before the Introduction of the Philadelphian State of the Church, or Brotherly State, (which it is likely we are not far from) the Promiſe of Glory to them that Overcome, intimates a Combat, and the Promiſe of Chriſt's confeſſing the Names of ſuch before his Father, implies a Time before the Period of the Sardian State, wherein the Church is to bear a ſignal Teſtimony to the Truths of Chriſt, in the way of a Conflict, Rev. 3. 5. The glorious State of the Church at the Reſurrection of the Witneſſes, ſhall be preceded by ſuch a Calamity as ſhall be the terror of the Godly, and the triumph of an Enemy devoted to a ſudden and unexpected deſtruction, Rev. 11. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Perſecutions make way for Sion's Stability. Never was ſhe firmer and purer than in the Time of the Apoſtles, and thoſe immediately following them, when the Witneſſes for the Truth, to the loſs of their Blood, were as numerous as the Survivors: ſhe was then, when the Flood was caſt out againſt her, clothed with the Sun, and crowned with a Crown of twelve Stars, Rev. 12. 1, 2. Such Troubles now may dim the outward Splendor, but increaſe her inward Spirit, and refine her to that Temper ſhe was in in the Primitive Ages of Chriſtianity. Proſperity was never much the Church's Friend: Poyſon was flung in her Diſh when ſhe gain'd an earthly Felicity, and the fondneſs of great ones. Her Stability conſiſts not in this, but in the Graces and Spirit of Chriſtianity: That which eſtabliſh'd her Head, eſtabliſheth the Body; her Captain aſcended not from Mount Olivet, till he had ſuffered on Mount Calvary. The Church was never deſcribed ſo glorious in her outward Attire, as her greateſt Enemy, that is clothed in Scarlet, and deck'd with Gold, Rev. 17. 4. Sion's Glory is internal, Pſal. 45. 13. The King's Daughter is all glorious within. All thoſe Perſecutions that are yet to come upon her, ſhall not demoliſh her Walls: The rigours of her Enemies, and the Treaſons of her pretended Friends, have not yet expelled her out of the Earth; ſhe hath not yet ſunk, though her Maſts have been ſometimes cut cloſe to the Deck, and her viſible Pilots flung over-board into the Sea; and ſhall ſhe ſink when ſhe is not far from an entrance into the Harbour? She hath been a Brand pluck'd out of that Fire, Zach. 3, 2. She was pluck'd out of the Furnace of Babylon, and ſhall be pluck'd out of the Furnace of Myſtical Babylon. Though ſhe ſhould be mown down as Graſs by the Sythe of her Enemies, yet the Preſence of Chriſt ſhall be as Rain upon her, to make her ſprout and ſpread after all her Afflictions, Pſal. 72. 6. Though ſhe hath been in the midſt of the Fire, ſhe never yet was, nor ever will be conſumed: She hath had Joy in her Diſgraces, and Greatneſs by her Flames: She hath always had a God to inſpire her with Vigour, to ſuſtain her Weakneſs, and prop her by his Arm, and hath often ſwam to a ſafe Harbour in a Tide of her own Blood. Is not that God ſtill a ſufficient Defence, and the Promiſe a ſufficient Charter againſt the Violence of the World: The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her; Himſelf by his own Arm, and Himſelf by his own Methods.

(3.) Here is Comfort in the deepeſt deſigns of her Enemies. The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

If he be the Higheſt, and imploys himſelf as the Higheſt, there is none ſo high as to over-top him, none ſo high as to out-wit him. Though their Union be never ſo cloſe, and their Projects never ſo deep, yet God's being with the Church, is curb enough for them, and comfort enough for Sion, Iſai. 8. 9. Aſſociate your ſelves together, O ye People, &c. Take counſel together, and it ſhall come to naught; ſpeak the word, and it ſhall not ſtand; for God is with us. God's Preſence with Sion blows away all. God was with the Ark in its Captivity, and made it victorious in its Chains. It cripled Dagon the Philiſtines Idol, 1 Sam. 5. 4. and made them return it to their Diſgrace, which they thought they had ſeiz'd upon to their Honour. While God is a ſtrength to the Poor, the branch of the terrible ſhall be brought low, and their blaſt be but as a Storm againſt the Wall, Iſa. 25. 4, 5. He can haſten their ruine by their own ſubtilty, and catch them in their own Net, Pſal. 35. 8. Or, he can turn them to gloriſie the Church, as much as they hindred her, Iſa. 25. 3. They are ſometimes compared to Bees, Pſal. 118. 12. Iſa. 7. 18.

and

and he can make them afford Honey as well as a Sting. They are Bees for their Wrath, and Bees for their Weakneſs, and many times Bees for her Profit. Sometimes he makes the Houſe of Jacob as fire, and the Houſe of Eſau as Stubble before him, Obad. 18. 'Tis not more natural to the Serpent's Seed to ſpite the Church, than it is natural to God to protect her; their Malice cannot engage them ſo much in Attempts againſt her, as God's Promiſe engageth him in the defence of her. What can Weakneſs do againſt Strength? Folly againſt Wiſdom? Hell againſt Heaven? and a fallen Lucifer againſt the higeſt God?

(4.) Here is comfort to expect the glory of the Church. The Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

The Mountain of the Lord's Houſe ſhall be lifted up on the top of the Mountains, Iſa. 2. 2. In the laſt Days it ſhall be more glorious than any Mountain dignified by God: Above Mount Sinai; where the Law was given; the terreſtrial Mount Sion, where the Temple was built; Mount Moriah, where Abraham had a type of the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt; Mount Horeb, where Moſes by Prayer diſcomfited Amalek; and Mount Piſgah, where Moſes had a proſpect of Canaan. Abraham's Conqueſt of the four Kings, Gen. 14. ſeems to be a figure of the Churches Victories, when the captive Lots ſhould be reſcued, and Sodom it ſelf be ſomething better for Sion. Then ſhall Chriſt meet her as King of Salem, King of Peace, with the Bleſſings of the moſt High God. Then ſhall he, as he did at the Feaſt in Cana, turn the Churches Water into Wine. Idols ſhall be utterly aboliſh'd, Iſa. 2. 18. Droſs and Mixtures in Doctrine and Worſhip purged out, Rev. 22. 1. The River of the Water of Life ſhall be as clear as Cryſtal, proceeding from the Throne of God, and of the Lamb. The everlaſting Goſpel preached, Rev. 14. 6. called everlaſting, becauſe it ſhall never more be clouded and obſcured by the fooliſh Inventions of Men; there ſhall be no more Sea, Rev. 21. 1. The Troubles of Sion, ſignified by a ſtormy Sea, ſhall ceaſe, and a new Heaven, and a new Earth be created; there ſhall be multitude of Converſions, Rev. 11. 15. The Kingdoms of the World ſhall become the Kingdoms of Chriſt. The breath of the Lord ſhall come into many, and make them ſtand upon their feet, Ezek. 37. 9, 10. There ſhall be a greater Preſence of God in Ordinances, for the Earth, ſhall ſhine with his Glory, Ezek. 43. 2. Holineſs ſhall ſparkle in her, for the glory of the Lord ſhall be upon her, Rev. 21. 11. His Holineſs to purifie her, and his Power to protect her. Perſecutions without, and Diviſions within, ſhall ceaſe; Satan ſhall be bound, his force reſtrained; he ſhall not wander about with his Cloven-foot, Rev. 20. 3. The Sea of Glaſs, which was mingled with Fire, with the fire of worldly Perſecutions, with the fire of inteſtine Animoſities, ſhall be as clear as Cryſtal, Rev. 15. 2. Rev. 22. 1. He will then have Magiſtrates no longer carrying on the Intereſt of the God of this World, but the Intereſt of the Church, whom he calls his Princes, Ezek. 45. 8. His, becauſe ſet up by a more immediate Providence: His, becauſe acting deſignedly and intentionally for his Glory; no more pinching his People, and making a Prey of his Sion, but laying down their Crowns at the foot of his Throne. And to compleat all, there ſhall be a perpetuity in this ſpiritual Proſperity; only between the beginning and compleating it Satan ſhall be let looſe: But for a little ſeaſon, Rev. 20. 3. and after this, it ſhall not have one blow more from Hell; but the Devil muſt for ever give over nibbling at her Heel. Now the Church never yet found ſuch a ſtate ſuitable to thoſe Promiſes and Predictions; ſome great thing remains to be accompliſh'd, which the World hath not yet ſeen, nor the Church experienced. But that Truth that will not lye, that Truth which cannot lye, has aſſured it. The Myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed, Rev. 10. 7. The Church hath hitherto been gaſping in the Fire, and in the Water; ſhe has liv'd, but as wrapt in a Winding-ſheet; the Saints under the Altar have cryed a long time for the vengeance of the Temple to recompence their Blood. There is a time when this Lazarus, that hath lain begging at the Door of the Rich and Mighty, ſhall be mounted up to a better ſtate. Sion ſhall enjoy a Reſurrection, and fling off all badges of a Funeral. For the Higheſt himſelf ſhall eſtabliſh her.

Third Uſe of Exhortation.

(1.) Take heed of Apoſtatizing from Sion; from the Doctrine and Worſhip of Sion.

If God ſhall eſtabliſh her, Stability is not to be found out of her. To depart from her, is to leave a firm Rock to find ſecurity in a quick-ſand. To leap out of a ſtout Ship in a Storm, to expect a preſervation in the Waves. To turn our backs upon Heaven, to ſeek eaſe in the bowels of Hell. The Altar at Damaſcus is caſt down, and Jeroboam's Altar is demoliſh'd, when that at Jeruſalem ſtood. To ſtay in Sion, is to be expoſed to the Gun-ſhot of Men and Devils; to run from her, is to ſeek to the Devil for Protection, and run into the mouth of all the Artillery of God, that is ſet for the eſtabliſhment of Sion. If we are Chriſtians, no force, nor violence ſhould ſeparate us from her.

2. Let us love Sion. There is nothing the Scripture uſes more as an argument to ſeparate our Affections from the World, than the uncertainty and fading nature of it. The perpetuity then of the Church ſhould be a motive to place our Affections there, where they ſhall never want an Object, and which we cannot love, without loving her Head and her Eſtabliſher. The Jews in Babylon would rather forget themſelves than their City and Temple, Pſal. 137. 5, 6. Our Affections to Goſpel-Sion ſhould be more tender, ſince God hath poured out more of his Spirit upon her, and ſhe is more amiable in his Eye. That which the Jews ſo much affected, is periſhed. But the true Sion is eternal, and ſhall flouriſh for ever. The Higheſt himſelf hath an eſtabliſhing Affection to her. Let our Affections to her equal the Malice of the Enemies againſt her, ſince we have greater Incentives to love her, than they can have to hate her. While others cry, Raze, Raze it even to the ground, let us at leaſt teſtify our Affections, and if we have not her ſtanding Walls to love, let us not eſtrange our tenderneſs from her very duſt, Pſal. 102. 14. There is a pleaſure to be taken in her Stones, becauſe they ſhall be again ſet in their place, a favour to be ſhewn to her Duſt, becauſe it ſhall be again compacted, and enjoy a Reſurrection. For the Higheſt that hath promiſed to eſtabliſh her, will not deſert her in her Ruines, ver. 16. When the Lord ſhall build up Sion he ſhall appear in glory; we have therefore more ground to favour her Duſt, than to admire the proudeſt Palaces.

(3.) Let us deſire the Eſtabliſhment of Sion more than our own private Eſtabliſhment.

'Tis the Sign of a gracious Spirit to look not only on his own things but the things of others, Phil. 2. 4. And what things of others ſhould be regarded, if the things of Chriſt and his Spouſe be over-looked. No private Perſon hath any Promiſe of eſtabliſhment but as he is a Deniſon of Sion, as one born in her. In deſiring therefore the Welfare of Sion, we wiſh and make way for the eſtabliſhing of our ſelves; our Intereſts are common with hers. Her Proſperity therefore ſhall be the firſt and laſt of our our Wishes. When we wish the stability of Sion, we wish the honour of God, the continuance of his Worship, the glorifying his Name which is deposited in that Cabinet; The Glory of God cannot flourish, if the Church perish. How base then are those, that if they can swim in a worldly Prosperity, care not if the Church be drown'd in Tears and Bloud; that clothe themselves and regard not her Nakedness; that provide an Earthly Canaan for themselves, and care not what desolate Desert Sion sits weeping in.

(4.) Let us endeavour the establishment of Sion. 'Tis a grateful thing to a Prince to favour his Favourite. Let us be as forward to enlarge her Territories, as the Devil and his Instruments are to encrease the Suburbs of Hell. The Highest himself will establish her by himself; we must therefore take those Methods which are agreeable to the chief Preserver. A complyance with the Enemies of God was never the way to secure the Interest of Sion. A Divine Work in a Divine Way will meet with Divine Assistance. To contribute to the establishment of Sion is a Work honourable in it self, since 'tis the Work of God himself; 'Tis an imitation of the highest Pattern. In this we are Associates, and Co-workers with God. For the Highest himself shall establish Sion.

A

DISCOURSE

UPON THE

Fifth of November.

Exod. 15. 9, 10.

The Enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the Spoil; my Lust shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my Sword; my Hand shall destroy them; Thou didst blow with thy Wind; the Sea covered them; they sank as Lead in the mighty Waters.

AN Anniversary Commemoration of a memorable Deliverance falling upon this Day, hath caused a Diversion of my Thoughts, to look back, not only upon a Mercy never to be forgotten, but to look forward to that Deliverance which is to come parallel to this in the Text. Israel was a Type of the Church, Pharaoh a Type of the Churches Enemies in all Ages of the World, both of the spiritual Enemy, Satan, and of the temporal, his Instruments.

The Deliverance was a Type of the Deliverance that Christ wrought upon the Cross by his Blood. Also, of that Christ works by his Power upon his Throne, the one from the Reign of Sin, the other from the Empire of Antichrist.

This was the Exemplar of all the Deliverances the Church was to have. As the Assyrian should lift up a Staff against Jerusalem, after the manner of Ægypt, so the Lord should lift his Rod up for them upon the Sea, after the manner of Ægypt, when the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing, Isa. 10. 26, 27. when the power of the Enemies shall be destroyed by the Strength of Christ. The Lord himself makes it his Pattern in those Victories he is to gain for his People; when he calls upon his Arm to awake as in the ancient Days, when he cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon, and made the depths of the Sea a way for the ransom'd to pass over, Isa. 51. 9, 10, 11. then the redeemed of the Lord shall come with singing unto Sion, the Song of Moses, while they stand upon a Sea of Glass, a brittle, frail, and stormy World, Rev. 15. 3. And our Redeemer makes this his Pattern and Rule, when he comes to tread the Wine-press in Wrath, and make them drunk with his Fury, that then he would remember the Days of old, Moses and his People, when he divided the Water before them, to make himself an everlasting Name, Isa. 63. 1, 2, 11. that his Power may be as glorious in the latter as it was in the former, and all Deliverances of the Church from the beginning to the end, be knit together to be an everlasting Matter of Praise to his Name.

This Historical Narration is to have a more universal Accomplishment; the Deliverance from Ægypt is promised to be fulfilled a second time, and God would act the same part over again, as also their Deliverance from Ogg King of Bashan, after the Ascension of Christ, Psal. 6. 22. The Lord said, I will bring again from Bashan, I will bring my People from the depths of the Sea. This is after he had ascended, v. 18. when he came to wound the Head of his Enemies, v. 21. So Isa. 11. 15. The Lord shall utterly destroy the Tongue of the Ægyptian Sea, and with his mighty Wind shall he shake his Hand over the River, and shall smite it in the seven Streams, and make Men go over dry-shod. Nilus with its seven Streams was the glory of Ægypt, and Rome with its seven Hills is the glory of the Papacy, Rev. 17. 9. So Zac. 10. 10. I will bring them again out of the Land of Ægypt, and they shall pass through the Sea with Affliction, and the deeps of the River shall dry up. Pharaoh and his Army cannot revive and stand up in their former Ranks; but there shall be Deliverances with resemblances to that, when the Enemies shall be as arrogant and furious as Pharaoh, and the Church as dejected and ſtraitened as Iſrael.

and

The Text is a part of Moſes his Song. A Carmen ἐπινίκιον, A Song after Victory: A Panegyrick; the Praiſe of God attended with Dancing at the Sight of the Ægyptian Wracks, v. 20.

1. It was then real; The Iſraelites then ſang it.

(2.) 'Tis Typical, The Conquerors of Antichriſt ſhall again Triumph in the ſame manner, Rev. 15. 3.

(3.) It was an earneſt of future Deliverance to the Iſraelites. When God appeared for them in their firſt Exit, he would not fail in that Work which ſhould conduce ſo much to his Glory; it was a Pledge, that his purchaſed People ſhould paſs over, and be planted in the Mountain of his Inheritance, v. 16, 17.

There is in the Words,

1. A Deſcription of the Enemy.

2. His Defeat.

The Enemy is introduced laying his Council, and vaunting his Reſolution. By an elegant Climax, and orderly proceeding, I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the Spoil, my Luſt ſhall be ſatisfy'd, &c. They laid the Foundation deep in Council, built their Reſolves high in Power, and then applaud themſelves in their Inſolence.

I will purſue. Had he no Reflections upon his former ſucceſleſs Attempts to keep the Iſraelites in ſlavery? or could he with any reaſon hope to reduce them with his baffled Strength to that Yoke, which had been broken by a powerful Arm? Had he not reaſon freſhly to remember his own inability to remove one of the Plagues ſent upon them, to promote Iſrael's Reſcue? Was that high Arm which brought them out of Ægypt broken? Gods Weapons blunted, his Magazine of Plaguing Ammunition waſted, and his Strength too feeble to preſerve thoſe he had by a ſtrong hand redeemed? Theſe things be obvious to Pharaoh's Thoughts. Yet, I will ſtill purſue. How heady and raſh are the Churches Enemies! Infatuation is the Uſher to Deſtruction: When you find the Churches Enemies loſe their Wits, you may quickly expect they will loſe their Strength and Lives.

I will divide the Spoil. He promiſeth them this Victory before the Conflict, encourages his Soldiers with hopes of the Prey, which was the Recovery of their Jewels which the Iſraelites had borrowed by God's Order, and the Ægyptians had lent them by a Secret Impreſſion, and the Flocks and Herds of the poor Iſraelites to boot.

How great is the pride of the Churches Enemies! They ſtrut without thinking of a ſuperiour Power to curb them, and promiſe themſelves the Accompliſhment of their Deſigns without fearing the check of Providence. Thus did Siſera's Mother triumph in a preſumptuous Hope before a Victory, Jud. 5. 30. and ſing Te Deum before a Conqueſt. Ventoſa & inſolens natio is the Title Pliny gives the Ægyptian Nation.

תמלא נפשי My Soul ſhall be ſatisfy'd.

My Luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them *. How revengefully do they expreſs themſelves? They apprehend themſelves cheated of their Jewels by the Iſraelites; ſuch an Apprehenſion would encreaſe Rage and Animoſity.

I will draw my ſword, my hand ſhall deſtroy, תורישמו my Hand ſhall diſinherit them. I will reduce them like a company of fearful Fugitives, by brandiſhing a drawn Sword, that they ſhall quickly return to their former Bondage, and become the perpetual Inheritance of the Ægyptians. How ſecure are the Churches Enemies! the ſight of a glittering Sword, and an Edict for a Return, they thought would quell their Spirits; 'Tis true, they had to deal with an unarm'd People, unprovided for defence, whoſe late Slavery had rendered them unfit for military Exerciſes, an unequal Match for a numerous and diſciplin'd Army. But what if they were? had they not the ſame power to protect them in their March, which had brought them out of their Bondage? This the Enemies never reflected on: Pride and Security are always Twins.

In v. 10. You have their Defeat. The Sea quenched the Fire of their Rage, and laid flat the Towers of their proud Confidence. God blows with his Wind, the ſtrong Eaſt Wind, Exod. 14. 21. a Strength added to its natural Fierceneſs, which made the meeting of the Floods more ſwift and fierce; ſome think Thunders and Lightnings burſt out of the Pillar of Fire in the Cloud, when God looked upon them, Exod. 14. 24.

They ſank like Lead, ſuddenly, eaſily, irrecoverably; they were laſht before, now executed. Other Plagues had a mixture of Patience, this is a pure Cup of the Indignation of God.

The Defeat is deſcribed,

1. By the Author: Thou didſt blow.

2. Inſtrument: Thy Wind; the Sea, Wind and the Sea conſpire together againſt the Enemies, when God orders them.

3. Victory, or ſucceſs of this Order; The Sea covered them; they ſank like Lead in the mighty Waters.

General Obſervations.

1. The greateſt Idolaters are the fierceſt Enemies againſt the Church of God. 'Tis the Ægyptian is the Enemy. No Nation had more and more ſordid Idols. The Perſians adored the Sun, the greateſt Benefactor to the World, in the Rank of inanimate Creatures; other Nations ſeveral Stars, but none did ſo much abuſe the Reaſon of Man, as that accurſed Nation. Onions, Garlick, Cats, Oxen, Flies, and Crocodiles; thoſe Dung-hill Creatures, were their adored Deities. And how much better is the Adoration of the Swadling-Clouts of our Saviour, or the Straw which was in the Manger, or the Tail of the Aſs he rode upon, and ſo many Splinters of the Croſs, which if put together would make a Coloſſus? For this among the reſt may the Church profeſſing ſuch Worſhip be called ſpiritual Ægypt. Ægyptii Diisfœcundi. Hieron.

2. The Churches Enemies are not for her Correction, but her Deſtruction: I will purſue; my Hand ſhall deſtroy them. They breath out nothing but Slaughters; My Hand ſhall deſtroy them; down with it, down with it even to the ground, and Men are famous as they can lift up Axes upon the thick Trees, Pſal. 74. 5.

3. How deſperate are ſometimes the Straits of God's Iſrael in the Eye of Man? How low their Spirits before Deliverance? They here behold a deep Sea before them, and a raging Enemy behind them? Hear a confuſed Noiſe of Women and Children in the midſt of them, feel the pantings of their own Hearts, and perhaps ſee a Conſternation in the Faces of their Governours; they ſee themſelves diſarmed of Weapons, lying almoſt at the Mercy of an Oppreſſor, with a well-furniſht Army; they repent of what God had done for them, and are more ambitious of Slavery than Liberty; Quarrel with Moſes, (and as one of their Hiſtorians ſaith, were about to ſtone him) Exod. 14. 10, 11, 12. Without doubt they then thought him a Lyar, and it is likely had no more honourable Thoughts at that time of God; for when they ſaw the happy Succeſs in the miraculous Overthrow of the Ægyptians, then they believed God and his Servant Moſes, Moſes, Exod. 14. 31. as if they gave credit to neither of them before. They had a Pillar of Fire, and a Cloud, the Chariot of God; a greater Argument to eſtabliſh them than the Preparation of their Enemies to terrifie them. But what a faithleſs Creature is Man under the viſible Guard of Heaven, and ſo far naturally from living by Faith, that he will hardly draw Eſtabliſhments from Senſe!

4. God orders the Luſts of Men for his own Praiſe. He had forced Pharaoh to let the People go; he had ſtopt the Streams of his Fury; when he removes his Hand, and pulls up the Dam, Pharaoh returns to his former Temper with more Violence, thereby giving occaſion for God's Glory in his own Deſtruction; he ſerves himſelf of the deſperate Malice of his Enemies, to make his Wiſdom and other Attributes more triumphant.

5. The nearer the Deliverance of the Church is, the fierce are God's Judgments on the enemies of it, and the higher the enemies Rage. The former Plagues were but ſmall Gaſhes in the Ægyptian State: But when the time approached of the Iſraelites perfect Deliverance, then the Firſt-born in every Houſe, the Delight and Strength of the Parents is cut off: And at the compleating of it, the Glory, Flower, and Strength of Ægypt buryed in the Sea; the fuller Beams of Mercy on the one are attended with more ſcorching Darts of Judgments on the other.

6. All Creatures are abſolutely under the Soveraignty of God, and are acted by his Power in all their Services. Thy Wind: All are ſubject to his conduct, and are the Guardians of his People, and the Conquerors of his Enemies. How eaſie is it for the Arm of Omnipotency to demoliſh the ſtrongeſt Preparations againſt his Iſrael, and with a Blaſt reduce their Power to Nothing? The Sea ſuffers Violence to preſerve his People, and the liquid Element ſeems transformed into a Wall of Braſs. God can make the meaneſt Creatures Miniſters of his Judgments, raiſe Troops of Flies to rout the Roman Army, as it was in Trajan's Siege of the Agarens.

7. By the ſame means God ſaves his People whereby he deſtroys his Enemies; the one ſank, the other paſt thorow; That which makes one Balance ſink, makes the other riſe the higher; the Red-Sea was the Guardian of Iſrael, and the Executioner of Ægypt; the Iſraelites Gallery to Canaan, and the Ægyptian's Grave. The Cloud that led the Iſraelites through the Red-Sea, blinded the Ægyptians; the Waters that were fifteen Cubits high above the Mountains, kept the Ark from daſhing againſt them, whereby Noah might be indangered, and drowned the Enemies though never ſo high according to Humane Stature.

8. The ſtrength and glory of a People is more waſted by oppoſing the Intereſt of the Church, than in Conflicts with any other Enemy. Had the Ægyptian Arms been turned againſt any other Enemy, they might have proſpered, or at leaſt retired with a more partial Defeat, or ſaved their Lives though under Chains. But when they would prepare them againſt God's Iſrael, they meet with a total Defeat, where they expected Victory, and find their Graves where Iſrael found their Bulwarks; the choiceſt of their Youth, the flower of their Nobility, the ſtrongeſt of their Chariots and Horſes at one Blow overthrown by God.

9. We may take notice of the Folly of the Churches Enemies. Former Plagues might have warned them of the Power of God; they had but burned their own Fingers by pinching her; yet they would ſet their Force againſt Almighty Power, that ſo often had worſted them; 'tis as if Men ſhould pull down a Steeple with a String.

But the Obſervations I ſhall treat of are,

1. When the Enemies of the Church are in the higheſt Fury and Reſolution, and the Church in the greateſt Extremity and Dejection, then is the fitteſt time for God to work her Diliverance fully and perfectly. When the Enemy ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil, &c. then God blowed with his Wind, then they ſank.

2. God is the Author of all the Deliverances of the Church, whoſoever are the Inſtruments. [Thou didſt blow with thy Wind; who is like unto the Lord among the Gods?

1. For the Firſt, When the Enemies of the Church are in the higheſt Fury, &c. Great Reſolutions againſt God meet with great Diſappointments. The Churches Straits are the Enemies Hopes, but God's Opportunity. When their Fury is higheſt, God's Love is neareſt.

1. There are four Seaſons on the part of the Enemy God takes hold of.

1. Flouriſhing Proſperity. Here is Pharaoh in the Head of a gallant Army, the Iſraelites in a Pound at his Mercy. The Ægyptian Proſperity is a forerunner of their Deſtruction; the Adverſity of the other, of their Salvation. Haman is in the top of his Favour, when the Jews are marked out for Slaughter, and then himſelf is marked out for Ruine. Proſperity, like Rain, makes the Weeds of Pride and Atheiſm to grow up, and then they are fit Matter for God's Sickle to cut down. When the Cluſters of the Vine of the Earth are ripe, full of an outward Glory and Sweetneſs, then the Angel thruſts in his ſharp Sickle, Rev. 14. 18. There is an ἀκμὴ ſet them. When the great City is clothed in fine Linnen, Purple and Scarlet, deckt with Gold and precious Stones, Rev. 18. 16. and come to the higheſt point of its Glory and Proſperity, then ſhall God thicken the Clouds of his Vengeance, and bring their Riches to nought in one Hour.

2. Swelling Pride; I will purſue, &c. Pride is provoking, becauſe it is a Self-deifying, and ſets up the Creature as God's Mate. God ſtands upon his Honour, and loves to attack thoſe that would equal themſelves with him. Pride ſunk the Glory of the fallen Angels into Miſery, and ſo it will that of the Serpent's Seed; this is the immediate forerunner of Deſtruction, Prov. 16. 18. Men have their hairy Scalp, the prime of their Strength, and pride of their Hearts, when God wounds them, Pſal. 68. 21. Ægypt was become Rahab, Pride it ſelf, as the Word ſignifies, and ſo God called it by that Name, Iſa. 51. 9. When Ægypt mounted to Rahab, to the top of Pride, then God cut it. When the Dragon briſtled, and erected his ſtately Head to ſeize upon the Prey, then God wounded him, put an end to Ægypt's Pride, and the Iſraelites Fear: He loves to beat down the Pride of the one, and raiſe up the Lowlineſs of the other. When Herod will aſſume the Title of a God given him by the Acclamations of the People, an Angel ſhall immediately make him a Banquet for Worms, Acts 11. 22, 23. When Sennacherib had proſpered in his Conqueſt of Judæa, had taken many ſtrong Towns, cloſely beleaguered Jeruſalem, thundered out Blaſphemies againſt God, and Threatnings againſt his People, then comes an Angel, makes a horrible Slaughter in a Night, ſends him back to his own Country, where after the loſs of his Army, he loſt his Life by the hands of his own Children. A greater Pride cannot be expreſt, than what the Apoſtle predicts of the Man of Sin, and that hath been extant for some time in the World*: And perhaps it will yet amount to a higher Step than it hath yet done before he be consumed by the brightness of the Lord's coming, since all that yet lets and hinders is not taken out of the way. The higher the Pride, the nearer the Fall. When Goliah shall defie the God of Israel, a Stone from a Sling thrown by the hand of David, our great David, the Antitype, shall lay him vomiting out his Soul, and Blasphemies on the Earth. We are many times more beholding to the Enemies Insolence, than our own Innocence, Deut. 32. 17. Were it not that God feared the Wrath of the Enemy, i. e. in their Pride, lest their Adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and say, Our Hand is high; a sinful Israel should not have so many Preservations*. When they will ascend into Heaven, and exalt their Throne above the Stars of God; when they will ascend above the Heights of the Clouds, and be like the most High, then shall they be brought down to Hell, to the sides of the Pit, Isa. 7. 13,14,15. The highest Towers are the fairest Marks for Thunder, and the readiest Tinder for the Lightning of Heaven. When Tyrus had set her Heart, as the Heart of God, then would God defile her Brightness, and make her die the death of them that are slain in the midst of the Sea, Ezek. 28. 6, 7, 8.

3. Eager Malice. Nothing would satisfie the Ægyptians here, but the Blood of the Israelites. My Hand shall destroy them; they were under a cruel Bondage, attended with Anguish of Spirit before God began their Rescue. The Serpents Seed have the same Principles of Craft and Malice sown in their Nature, that are resident in his; ever since the beginning he endeavoured to shape Men into the same Form and Temper with himself; Their Rage would raze out the very Foundation of Israel, and not suffer the Name to be had any more in remembrance, Psal. 83. 4. They love to be drunk with the Blood of the Saints, and are no more satisfied with Blood than the Grave with Carcases; they repair their Arrows, and watch for an Opportunity to discharge them; and never want Poison, but Opportunity; this is God's Time to deliver. When Pharaoh would pollute the Land with the Blood of the Hebrew Males, and ordain them to be dragg'd from the Womb to the Slaughter, then God raises up himself to attempt the Rescue of Israel; yet he bears with his Insolence, punishes him, but not destroys him. But when he would be still stiff against a Sense of the multitude of Plagues, and a great Mercy of Patience in them; when he would arm for the Field against that God the smart of whose force he had felt, and resolves to destroy or bring back the Israelites upon the Point of his Sword, God would then bear no longer, but make the Water his Sepulchre. When Haman designs the Ruine of the Jews, procures the King's Commission, sends Dispatches to all the Governours of the Provinces, sets up a Gibbet for Mordecai, and wants nothing but an Opportunity to request the Execution, he tumbles down to exchange his Prince's Favours for an exaltation on the Gallows, Est. 6. 4. Est. 7. 10. When the Serpent encreased his malicious Cruelty, and cast out a Flood against the Church, God makes the Earth, the carnal World to give her assistance, and repel the Force that Satan used against her*. When Multitudes shall gather together in the Valley of Decision, then shall the Lord roar out of Sion, and be the hope of his People, and the strength of the Children of Israel, Joel 3. 14, 16. And when Spiritual Ægypt shall make a War against Christ, who sits upon the white Horse, and combine all their force for the Destruction of his People, then shall the Beast and the false Prophet be taken, and brought to their final Ruine, and their Force be broken in a Lake of Fire, as that of Ægypt was in a Sea of Water, Rev. 19. 19, 20. The time of their greatest fierceness shall be the time of Christ's Fury; he will strike them surest when he finds them cruelest; their Rage shall rouze up his Revenge; when the Men of Sodom, to which the Antichristian State is likened, shall be resolutely bent to Wickedness, they shall be struck with blindness, and that blindness succeeded by destruction; then will God set Bounds to the outrageous Waves, and snatch the Prey out of the Teeth of the Lyons.

4. Confident Security. I will divide the Spoil, my lust shall be satisfied upon them. God lets the Enemy come in like a Flood and Torrent, with a confidence to carry all before him, before he lifts up a Standard against him, Isa. 59. 19. Then shall the Spirit of the Lord stir up himself gloriously in the Principles and Actions of his People, and the Redeemer shall come to Sion. God will set his force against their Confidence, and break their Impetuousness by his own Power. When the Enemies of the Church think they have entangled it in such a Snare, reduced it to so low a Condition as to be secure of her Ruine with a Blast and Puff, then God will arise, and set her in safety from them that puff at her, Psa. 12. 5. This will be the Case of Babylon; when she shall say, I sit as a Queen, and am no Widow, and shall see no sorrow, then shall her Plagues come in one Day, Death, and Mourning, and Famine, for then God will stir up his Strength to judge her, Rev. 18. 7. 'Tis in the time of the Antichristian Polity, and mutual Congratulations with the highest security for their happy Success, triumphing over the dead Bodies of the Witnesses, that they shall stand again upon their Feet, (the same Persons if politically dead, others witnessing the same Doctrine, if they were corporeally dead) and damp all their Mirth and Triumph, and turn their Security into Fears; then shall Glory be given to the God of Heaven, and the Ark of his Testament be seen in his Temple, and the Power of the Lord be magnified, Rev. 11. 10, 11. When they shall all be gathered together to the Battle of the great Day of the Lord; the place is called Armageddon, Rev. 16. 14, 16, &c. חרם and גדוד A cursed Troop, an Army under God's Anathema, when they have the greatest confidence. When Jerusalem shall be penn'd up by a Siege, it shall be a Cup of trembling in the Hands of her enemies, Zach. 12. 2. Fear shall seize upon them in the midst of their Confidence. The Sun was risen upon Sodom just before the devouring Shower of Fire and Brimstone. With what Derision would they have entertain'd any Messenger, that should have assur'd them of such a Shower in so clear a Day? No doubt but the Ægyptian Horses went prancing into the Sea, and their Riders confident of catching their Prey; when they saw the Waters congealed, they had not the least Suspicion, but that the Division of the Sea was made in their Favour, till the Chariot-Wheels were taken off, and the Waters ready to roul upon them, Ex. 14. 23,25.

2. As something on the part of the Church's Enemies forwards the Deliverance, so there is some regard God hath to the Churches Straits. Cum duplicantur lateres, venit Moses. 'Tis God's usual Method to let the Church be in great Distress before he commands Deliverance. The Distress of the Church was great in the Concern of this Day, though it was not sensible, the deliverance being known near as soon as the danger.

The

*2 Th. 2. 4. Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, in additions to the Word, clipping the Institutions of God, and adding new, and canonizing new Mediators of Intercession, who sits in the Temple of God in a profession of Christianity, shewing himself that he is God, assuming the Name of God, and the Title of God, in being called most holy.

* Trap on Exod. p. 9.

* Rev. 12. 15, 16. The Earth helped the Woman.

The Church is to be in the depths of the Sea before ſhe be fully delivered, Pſal. 68. 22. The Jews were to paſs through the Sea with Affliction before the Pride of Aſſyria ſhould be brought down, and the Sceptre of Ægypt depart away; after that, he would ſtrengthen them in the Lord, and they ſhould walk up and down in his Name, Zach. 10. 11, 12. The ſharpeſt Pangs precede Deliverance; it was ſo when Chriſt came in the Fleſh, it will be ſo at every new riſing of Chriſt in his Spirit; when things were at a low Ebb, when the Sun ſat in the greateſt darkneſs of Error, Idolatry and Profaneneſs, when the Jews, the only Spot of Ground God had, was as a Wilderneſs almoſt barren of any Grace, when the great Predictions of the Prophets were unminded, and leſs underſtood, when Urim and Thummim had ceaſed, and the Spirit of Propheſie was ſhut up, when Chriſt comes in the fulneſs of time to work an univerſal Relief for Mankind. When the Day of Vengeance is in the Heart of the Redeemer, he ſhall look and find none to help, he ſhall wonder to find none to uphold, therefore his own Arm ſhall bring Salvation, Iſa. 53. 5.

This has always been God's Method. With his Son, the Powers of Darkneſs had their Hour, and triumph'd when they had laid him in the Grave before he was raiſed by the Glory of his Father. The Witneſſes muſt be killed by the hand of their Enemies, before they ſtand upon their Feet, and aſcend up into Heaven, in the ſight of their Adverſaries, Rev. 11. 7. when the Church ſhall walk in darkneſs, grope for the Wall like the blind, mourn like Doves, look for ſalvation, and it ſhall ſeem far off; then will the Lord put on a Helmet of ſalvation on his Head, and the garments of vengeance for clothing, and be clad with zeal as a Cloak, Iſa. 59. 9, 10, 11, 17. The break of Day is uſhered in by a thicker Darkneſs than that which clouded the Night before. The ſharpeſt Perſecution that ever the Church had, was in the time of Diocleſian, a little before Chriſtianity was to rule his Empire in the Exaltation of Conſtantine. Abraham was in Hardſhip out of his Country, when he received the Promiſes of the Meſſiah; and Iſrael in the Wilderneſs, when the Oracles of God were delivered to them. Confuſion of the Church precedes always the Communication of Light.

1. The Reaſons of the Doctrine are theſe.

1. This makes for God's Glory. The Creature cannot in this condition challenge any ſhare in the Honour of the Deliverance, or pare off ſo much as a Splinter of his Glory. Had the Iſraelites been arm'd, and drawn into a ſtrong Battalion, and ſo defeated the Ægyptian Army, the Victory would rather have been challeng'd by them, than aſcribed to God; but neither the Strength of their Multitude, nor the Wiſdom of their Guides, were able to protect them; Counſel fail'd, and Heads were feeble; then did God get himſelf a Name, when they were upon the point of a remedileſs Ruine. It was manifeſt the Name of the Lord got David the Victory, ſince he encountred unarmed with Goliah, who could have cruſh'd him like a Fly had he been in his Fingers.

The time of the Church's Depreſſion is the time of God's Exaltation; he waits for the Extremity to lift up himſelf: When Paleneſs is upon the Face of his People; when the Cedars of Lebanon hang their Heads; when the Church's Beauty ſeems a lamentable Deformity, and Sharon is like a Wilderneſs, then will God ariſe, Iſa. 33. 9, 10. God never builds up Sion, but he ordains all things in a Method for his appearance in the greateſt Glory, Pſal. 102. 16. When the Lord ſhall build up Sion, he ſhall appear in his Glory; that is, when the Church is deſtitute, v. 17.

1. God exalts his Power; his Right-hand then becomes glorious in Power, Exod. 15. 6. He loves to appear in his Dreſs as a Creator, when there is no fitneſs in the Subject to anſwer his End, but what he beſtows upon it. When Jeruſalem becomes a rejoycing, and her People a Joy, 'tis an Act of creating Power, Iſa. 65. 18. For behold I create Jeruſalem a rejoycing. When the Creature can give them not the leaſt aſſiſtance, then will they be ſenſible of God's unbounded Sufficiency, and their own neceſſary Dependance. God never had too little help from his Creature in a Deliverance; he hath ſometimes complain'd of too much, and diſbanded ſome of the Church's Forces, as in the Caſe of Gideon, Judg. 7. As Chriſt rules in the midſt of his Enemies, ſo doth God's Power moſt viſibly in the midſt of Diſtreſſes. A Phyſician's Skill is moſt conſpicuous when the Diſeaſe is moſt dangerous, and moſt complicated, and Nature at the loweſt ebb. 'Tis more Glory to God to quench the Fire in its fulleſt rage, than to extinguiſh it in its firſt Smoke and Sparkles. God loves the faireſt Mark to ſhoot at, and will rather down with Goliah, than with the ordinary Philiſtines; grapple with the great, rather than with a light Danger, that the Lord may appear to be a man of War, Exod. 15. 3. As God ſhews his Mercy in his People's Redemption, he will ſhew his Strength in their Conduct, Exod. 15. 13. He that made this Deliverance a ſtanding Monument of his Power, entitles himſelf by it, Iſa. 43. 16. Thus ſaith the Lord, which makes a Way in the Sea, a Path in the mighty Waters.

2. His Kindneſs to, and Care of his People. When the Straits are remedileſs, and the Counſels whereby the Projects are laid, not to be defeated by Humane Skill; when God ſeems to have forgot, then in a ſeaſonable Deliverance he ſhews himſelf the careful Watchman of Iſrael. When a Ship is in a raging Storm, and Chriſt aſleep, he will leave his own Eaſe to keep his Word, and content his People. When the Church thinks God hath forgotten his Mercies, and they have forgotten their Dependance; when the Miſery is ſo preſſing, that there is no faith of a Deliverance left, then Chriſt comes, when Faith is ſcarcely to be found upon the Earth, Luke 18. 8. to exalt his Mercy in the depths of their Miſery, and work terrible things they looked not for, Iſa. 64. 3. The Iſraelites wou'd not have underſtood God's Care in their Protection, without this or the like Strait. God had a new Opportunity to ſhew his Watchfulneſs over them, to turn the Cloud which went before them as their Guide, behind them for their Defence, Exod. 14. 19. The Scoffs of the Enemy at the Church's Miſery, are God's Motive to help her. I will reſtore Health to thee, becauſe they called thee an Out-caſt, Jer. 30. 17. 'Tis in Straits we ſee God's Salvation, not Man's, Exod. 14. 13. Stand ſtill, and ſee the ſalvation of the Lord.

3. His Juſtice. He lets the Church be encompaſs'd with Miſeries, and the Enemies in a Combination againſt her, that he may overthrow them at once. God makes a quicker Diſpatch with the Ægyptians, when they were united, than when they had aſſaulted Iſrael with a ſmaller Body: His Righteouſneſs gets Glory at one blow, when he makes them to lie down together, Iſa. 43. 17. His Juſtice is unblemiſht in ſtriking when their Wickedneſs is viſibly ripe; the Equity of it muſt needs be ſubſcribed, that when the Enemies Malice is greateſt, greateſt, when they have no mixture of Compaſſion, 'tis the cleareſt Righteouſneſs to cruſh them without any mixture of Mercy. God brings things to that paſs, that he may honour both his Juſtice and Mercy in the higheſt. That the black Horſes, and the white Horſes may march firm together, Zech. 6. 6. the black Horſes that brought Death and Judgment Northward to Babylon, where the Church was captive; the white Horſes that followed them, and brought Deliverance to his People; the one to be Inſtruments of his Judgments, the other of his Mercies. God loves to glorifie thoſe two Attributes together; he did ſo in the redemption of Mankind by the death of his Son, and he doth ſo in the deliverance of his Church; there is a conformity of the Church to Chriſt, in her Diſtreſs, that there may be a conformity of God's Glory in Temporal, to his Glory in Eternal Salvation. God ſingles out a full Crop to be an Harveſt for both. A wicked Man is ſaid to be waited for by the Sword, Job 15. 22. God attends the beſt ſeaſon for Revenge; when Mercy to the one ſhall appear moſt glorious, and Vengeance on his Enemies moſt equitable, and all Diſputes againſt his Proceedings be ſilenc'd.

2. It makes to the Churches Advantage. God had a work to do upon Mount Sion, and on Jeruſalem, before he would puniſh the ſtout Heart of the King of Aſſyria, and the glory of his high looks, Iſa. 10. 12. His end ſhall be attained in the correction of his Church, before his Glory ſhall be exalted in the deſtruction of her Enemies. There are Enemies in the Hearts of his People to be conquered by his Grace, before the Enemies to her Peace and Proſperity ſhall be defeated by his Power; he will let them be in the Fire, till, like Gold, they may have a purer Honour in a brighter luſtre.

1. Humiliation is gain'd hereby. God would not preſently raze out the Canaanites, leſt the wild Beaſts ſhould increaſe upon them, Deut. 7. 22. Too quick Deliverances may be occaſions to multiply the wild Beaſts of Pride, Security, and Wantonneſs in the Heart; Humility would have but little footing. There is need of a ſharp Winter to deſtroy the Vermin, before we can expect a fruitful Spring. Without Humiliation the Church knows not how to receive, nor how to improve any Mercy. The Enemies haſten their own Ruine, by increaſing the meaſure of their ſins; and Iſrael's Deliverance, by being Inſtruments to humble their Hearts. The ſooner the Plaiſter hath drawn out the corrupt Matter, the ſooner it is caſt into the Fire. God hereby prevents the growth of Weeds in that Ground he intends to enrich with new Mercies.

2. A Spirit of Prayer is excited. Slight Troubles make but drooping Prayers. Great Straits make it guſh out, as the more the Bladder is ſqueezed, the higher the Water ſprings. We hear not of the Iſraelites crying to the Lord after their coming out of Ægypt, till they had a ſight of the formidable Army, Exod. 14. 10. They were ſore afraid, and the Children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord. Prayer gains Mercies, but ſcarce ſprings up free without ſenſe of Diſtreſs: We then have recourſe to God's Power, whereby he is able to relieve us, when we are ſenſible of our own Weakneſs, whereby we are unable to Relieve our ſelves; Men will ſcarce ſeek to God, or truſt him, while any Creature, though but a Reed, remains for their ſupport; they are deſtitute before they pray, or believe God regards their Prayers, Pſal. 102. 17. He will regard the Prayer of the Deſtitute, and not deſpiſe their Prayer. Diſtreſs cauſes Importunity, and God will do much for Importunities ſake, Luke 11. 8.

3. Diſcovery of Sincerity. Hereby God diſcovers who are his People, and who are not; who are in the higheſt form of Chriſtianity, and who are not in the School, or at leaſt but in the loweſt form; he ſeparates the good Corn from the uſeleſs Chaff. No queſtion but there were ſome among the Iſraelites, that in this Extremity, acted Faith upon the remembrance of the Wonders God had wrought for them in Ægypt before their departure; certainly they did not all murmur againſt Moſes; Were there no Calebs and Joſhuahs, that followed God fully in a way of Faith and Submiſſion? Their Faith and Courage had not been conſpicuous without this Extremity. Thundrings and Lightnings, and terrible things in Righteouſneſs, are to prove us, whether the Fear of God be before our Faces, that we ſin not, Exod. 20. 18, 20. God ſeparates the Droſs. You never know a new Building, without pulling down, to ſeparate the Rubbiſh, and rotten Rafters, from the ſound Materials. Abraham was put upon hard work, the imbruing his Hands in the Blood of his only Son, to prove his Integrity; when God ſees his Sincerity, he diverts the Blow; not only delivers him from his Grief, his Son from his Danger, but renews the Promiſe of the Meſſiah to him as a Reward. Deliverance then comes when God hath ſeparated the Corn from the Stubble.

4. A ſtanding encouragement for future Faith. When the ſtraits are greateſt from whence God delivers us, there is a ſtronger Foundation for a future Truſt. When the Diſtreſs is inconſiderable, Faith afterwards will be more feeble; large Experience heartens and ſtrengthens Faith in the Promiſe. When gloomy Clouds are blown over, the brighter and thinner will not be much feared. When we ſee the Sun melt the thickeſt over our Heads, we ſhall not doubt its Force to diſſolve the leſſer Vapours which may afterwards aſſemble; when the Ship hath eſcaped a raging Storm, we ſhall not doubt it in a leſs. God often puts them in mind of their deliverance in the Red-Sea, to ſtrengthen their Faith and dependance on him. It muſt needs be an eſtabliſhment to Faith; for Deliverances from great Straits are ſome kind of Obligation on the honour of God. When the Iſraelites had provoked God by Murmuring, and wiſhed they had dyed in Ægypt, and not in the Wilderneſs, Moſes intercedes with this Argument, The Ægyptians ſhall hear of it, from whom God brought up Iſrael with a ſtrong hand, and it would diſparage God's Power, and tax him with an inability to bring his People into the Land he intended; then God grants their Pardon, Numb. 14. 13, 14, 20.

5. Engagement to future Obedience. 'Tis upon this account God prefaceth the Law with his Mercy in delivering them out of Ægypt. The ſtrongeſt Vows are made in the greateſt Straits. Many Obligations there are, when the Extremity forces us to cry. When we are in the Jaws of Death, God may have his Terms of us; when we are at ſome diſtance, we will have our own. The lower a Perſon is, the more readily will he bend to any Condition; hope of Deliverance will make him ſtoop. And when God ſnatches his People as Firebrands out of the Fire, they are more obliged to him from common Ingenuity, and muſt be more aſhamed of breaking their Vows, than if their Mercies were of a great alloy. If common Patience leads to Repentance, a reſcue from an amazing Danger is a ſtronger Cord to draw us to Repentance and Obedience. And it is certain, that when the Church in Sincerity makes Vows to God, it will not be long before God puts her into a Condition to pay them; them; and furniſh her with Incentives of a holy Ingenuity.

6. The greater Thankfulneſs. The more ſtraithed, the greater thankfulneſs for Enlargement. As we hear not of the Iſraelites Prayers, after they came out of Ægypt, till they were in the Pound, ſo we read of none of their Songs, though they had matter enough for them, in their firſt departure, till God had daſh'd in pieces the Enemy, and thrown the Horſe and Rider into the Sea. Then, and not till then, had they a deep ſenſe, how glorious God was in Holineſs, fearful in Praiſes, doing Wonders, Exod. 15. 11. Great Mercies unvail God's Face more to the view of his People. When Iſrael inherits great Salvation, then the Lord ſhall inherit the praiſe of Iſrael. When we have leſs Mercies, we take little notice of the Author; God hears the Language of but one of our Bones; but when he delivers the poor from him, that is too ſtrong for him, and ſpoils him, then all my Bones ſhall ſay, Lord, who is like unto thee?

7. To prevent future miſchief to the Church. The deſtruction of the greateſt Enemies is a diſarming the leſs. God by this Deſtruction ſtruck a Terror into thoſe Nations upon whoſe confines Iſrael was to march into Canaan, who without ſo remarkable a rebuke of Providence, would have been deſirous to finger ſome of their Prey. Then trembling took hold of the mighty Men of Moab. All the Inhabitants of Canaan did melt away; fear and dread fell upon them by the greatneſs of the Arm of God, that they ſhould be as ſtill as a Stone, till they paſſed over the River, Exod. 15. 15, 16. Their preſent Deliverance was a Paſs-port for their future Security in their Journey; and no Enemies troubled them in the way, but thoſe upon whom God had a mind to ſhew his Power.

2. How doth God deliver when the Seaſon is thus?

1. Suddenly. They ſank like Lead in the mighty Waters, which quickly reaches the bottom. Judgment comes like Lightning. Death and Hell are ſaid to ride upon Horſes, Rev. 6. 8. They are too ſwift for God's Enemies, and will eaſily win the Race of them. Deſtruction comes, as Travel upon a Woman with Child, 1 Theſſ. 5. 3. How ſuddenly did God turn the Aſſyrian Camp into an Aceldema, overthrow a powerful Army, and make their Tents their Tombs in the ſpace of a Night? He will daſh them in pieces like a Potters Veſſel, Pſal. 2. 9. all in bits at a ſtroke; He comes ſuddenly; he rides upon a Cherub, Pſal. 18. 10. But becauſe the Motion of an Angel is not ſo intelligible, he adds another Metaphor from the nimbleſt of ſenſible things; he flies upon the wings of the Wind, to aſſiſt his People in Extremity. The Enemy comes like a *Whirlwind, and God goes forth as a Whirlwind of Fury, Jer. 30. 23. The Whirlwind of his Judgments ſhall be as quick as the Whirlwind of their Malice; a continual Whirlwind, when the other is vaniſhing; it ſhall fall with pain upon the Head of the Wicked, when the other ſhall be as fruitleſs as a Snowball againſt a Wall of Braſs. The Enemy beholds him not till he be upon him; for the Clouds are as Duſt under his Feet, Nahum 1. 3. and obſcure his Appearance, as the raiſing the Duſt doth the march of a Troop; he comes unawares upon them in a Cloud. The Execution is ſudden; They ſhall be cut down as Graſs, Pſal. 37. 2. which this Moment faceth the Sun, triumphing in its natural Bravery, and the next Moment is cut off from its Root with one ſhave of a Sythe. He quencheth them as Tow is quench'd in Water, Iſa. 43. 17. as the Snuff of a Candle is quench'd by being bruis'd by the Fingers. He cuts them off as foam, the excrement of the Water, Hoſ. 10. 7. which burſts in pieces like a Bubble, on the ſudden. Vengeance comes upon Tyre and Sidon ſwiftly and ſpeedily, Joel 3. 4. Tyre comes of צור, which ſignifies to afflict, to ſtraiten. Sidon of צרה, the word ſignifies to Purſue. All Perſecutors are threatned in Tyre and Sidon with a ſwift Deſtruction. God delays the time to try the Faith and Patience of his People, to make the expected Deliverance more ſweet and welcome, and Mercy more ſingular. He may have ſome of the Seed of Chriſt in the Loins of ſome of his Enemies. But when he doth draw his Sword, he gives a ſudden Blow before the Enemy fears it, or his People expect it. The Jews in Babylon, when the Chains of their Captivity were unlooſed, were like thoſe that Dream, they could ſcarce believe they were freed, when the Enemy felt himſelf puniſh'd. In all other Plagues God ſent Moſes as an Herauld, with warning to Pharaoh; but in this God ſurpriſed him, and hurried him to Deſtruction, without giving him any Caution; Like Chaff that the Tempeſt carrieth away, and is ſeen no more, Job 21. 18. So ſhall the Plagues of ſpiritual Ægypt come in one day, Rev. 18. 8. yea, in one hour, v. 17. And the Church ſhall be like a Lilly, which by the aſſiſtance of the Dew, flouriſheth in the Morning, when over Night it looked as if it were withered.

2. Magnificently. Sometimes in Deliverance God puts the frame of Nature in Confuſion. He melts the Mountains, cleaves the Vallies: as Wax before the Fire, and as Waters poured down a ſteep place, Mic. 1. 4. i. e. He waſtes the Strength and Riches of his Enemies when he comes to judge. When he appears in the generation of the Righteous, he ſhall appear in ſuch Glory, as to make the Adverſaries in great Fear, and ſtrike a Terror into them, Pſal. 14. 5. God will perform it in a prodigious and unuſual way. God might have taken off the Wheels of the Ægyptian Chariots before they had entred the gap of the Sea, and hindred them from approaching ſo near his beloved People; he might have afflicted their Hands with the Palſie, and rendred them uncapable to manage their Weapons; or might have ſent a Spirit of Emulation among them, and made them ſheath their Swords in one anothers Bowels. But though this had ſecured his People, it would not have rendred his Operation ſo illuſtrious, as the making that which was a means of his Peoples Security, to be his Enemies Deſtruction, and the Waters at once Indulgent to the Iſraelites, and ſevere to the Ægyptians. He magnifies his Judgments and Mercies, by one and the ſame Stroke, and drowns the Enemies in the Sea, whereby he delivers the Iſraelites. So he preſerved Daniel in the midſt of thoſe Lions which devoured his Accuſers. The more contrary things are to an Eye of Reaſon, the fitter Subjects they are for the exaltation of God. As Chriſt the Head, ſo the Church the Body is raiſed out of the Grave by the Glory of God the Father, Rom. 6. 4. His Right-hand ſhall find his Enemies, Pſal. 21. 8. his Right-hand ſhall teach him terrible things, Pſal. 45. 4. Then ſhall he come with a ſhout, as one refreſhed with Wine, recruited with new Spirits, and riſen from Sleep, Pſal. 78. 65. He calls upon all Creatures to be aſſiſtant to Cyrus in the deſign of his Peoples Deliverance, Iſa. 45. 8. He will perfect it by a way of Creation. (I have created Righteouſneſs to Deliverance) with the manifeſtation of a creative Power, and he makes things ſerve againſt their natural order appointed by God. Thus, when God ſhall appear for the final overthrow of ſpiritual Ægypt, he ſhall come with Voices, Thunders, and Lightnings, an Earthquake out of the Temple, and appear as magnificently in the garb of a Judge, as he did on Sinai in that of a Law-giver, Rev. 16. 19. and make the Ten Horns, which were the ſupport of the Beaſt, to be the Inſtruments of her Deſolation, Rev. 17. 16.

* They came out as a whirlwind to ſcatter me, Hab. 3. 14.

3. Severely. They ſank to the bottom like Lead in the mighty Waters. God ſends out the greateſt Judgments againſt thoſe that deal ſharply with his People, greater than againſt any other part of the World, Zac. 6. 6. The black Horſes, the Inſtrument of the execution of his Anger, were ſent towards Babylon, where his People were in Captivity; but the bay Horſes of a mixt Colour, noting a mixture of Mercy and Judgments, are ſent towards other Parts of the World, to walk, not to run, ſignifying the Patience of God to thoſe Parts which had not yet oppreſt his People; God deals not ſo ſmartly with thoſe, as with them that are Enemies to Iſrael. In ſuch Concerns he Anſwers his People by terrible things in Righteouſneſs: When he appears as a God of Salvation to his People, he appears terrible in his Righteouſneſs to his Enemies, Pſal. 65. 5. By terrible things in Righteouſneſs wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our Salvation. His Judgments ſhall be as terrible as they are righteous. The Executioners of his Vengeance ride upon Horſes, to ſhew their readineſs to any warlike Engagement; upon red Horſes, of a bloody Colour, to ſhew the ſeverity of their Commiſſion againſt the Enemies of God, Zac. 1. 8. He will pay all Arrears together, that they ſhall be forced to ſay, God is true to the word of his Threatning, as well as that of his Promiſe: As the Amalekites in Samuel's Time payed the Scores of their Anceſtors in the time of the Iſraelites Travel through the Wilderneſs, 1 Sam. 15. 2. I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael, how he laid wait for him in the way when they came up from Ægypt. So when God reckons with Babylon for all the Blood of the Saints and Prophets, Rev. 18. 20. The Blood of all the Prophets and Saints that were ſlain upon the Earth, ſhall be found upon her ſkirts, and avenged on her; and gives unto her the Cup of the Wine of the fierceneſs of his Wrath, all that ſhe hath done ſhall come into his Remembrance, Rev. 16. 19. And how ſevere it ſhall be is expreſt, Rev. 14. 19, 20. ſhe ſhall be caſt into the great Wine-preſs of the wrath of God, as Grapes bruiſed with the greateſt ſtrength, and cruſhed in pieces both Skin and Stones. And to expreſs it more ſenſibly to our Underſtandings, he ſpeaks of the flowing of the Blood out of the Wine-preſs unto the Horſe-Bridles, by the ſpace of a 1000 and 600 furlongs, two hundred Miles; not that we ſhould underſtand it litterally, but the Spirit of God is ſo particular in deſcribing the height of the Deluge of Blood to the Bridles of the Horſes, the length of the Flood to the ſpace of two hundred Miles, to ſet before our Apprehenſion the ſeverity of the Wrath that ſhall be poured out upon them. And as God never repented of his Judgments upon Ægypt, ſo never will he of thoſe which are to come upon Babylon.

4. Univerſally; and therefore ſeverely. The Horſe and the Rider did God caſt into the Sea; the Chariots, the Hoſt, and the choſen Captains were drowned there, Exod. 15. 1, 4. The Waters covered the Enemy, there was not one of them left, Pſal. 60. 11. Exod. 14. 28. Not a Meſſenger to carry back the news; their floating Bodies and Wracks were the firſt that gave notice of the defeat to their remaining Countrymen. God throws off all tenderneſs, his Bowels are ſilent, he ſtrikes like a wrathful Enemy, lanceth not like a tender Chirurgeon; ſo ſhall it be with their Partners in their Sins, every Man that worſhips the Beaſt and his Image ſhall drink of the Wrath of God, which is poured out without Mixture into the Cup of his Indignation, and whoever receives the mark of his Name, Rev. 14. 9, 10, 11. The Sun, the political Power that defends it, ſhall be darkened; the Rivers, whereby their Traffick and Riches come into them, ſhall be dried up; all that have any dependance on them, recourſe to them, ſtand in the defence of the Power of Ægypt, ſhall fall under the Indignation of God.

5. Totally; Irrecoverably. They ſank as Lead. God will make an utter end, Affliction ſhall not riſe up a ſecond time, Nahum 1. 9, 10. He overtakes them when they are drunk in the height of their Pleaſure, while they are making their Confederacies againſt the Church, while they are folden together like Thorns, they ſhall be devoured like Stubble fully dry. Ποιήσει τὴν ἐκδίκησιν, Luke 18. 7. He will avenge his own, he will avenge them ſpeedily; he will act ſo as if Wrath were his only and proper work, he will do it to purpoſe, and perfectly; The Ægyptian Carcaſſes lay as Trophies of the Victory, Ex. 14. 30. Their former Plagues had ſomething of Patience; Puniſhment was inflicted, but Life preſerved; Judgments ſent, but upon promiſe of Reformation quite removed: Now Patience folds her hands, and ſtands Spectator, while Juſtice opens hers, and becomes a ſole Actor; Mercy runs on the ſide of Iſrael, and Wrath marcheth without any Impediment againſt the Ægyptians. As they like lead, ſo irrecoverably ſhall Babylon fall like a Milſtone, in the depths of the Sea, and ſhall be found no more at all; all her Mirth and Jollity ſhall for ever ceaſe, Rev. 18. 21, 22. 23. When things fall to the bottom of the Sea, they are entombed there for ever, no Skill can reſtore them to their former Station; when Judgment turneth the Key, and locks them in, there is no more opening the Door.

6. And all this juſtly. Pharaoh had commanded that the Hebrew Male-children ſhould be expoſed to the Mercy of the River, to find their Death in the Water as ſoon as they had breathed in the Air, Exod. 1. 22. And God makes them periſh in that Element, to which they had adjudged the harmleſs Infants. Now God pays the Law-maker, and his Counſellors with the ſame Coin, and makes the Malefactors Food for the Inhabitants of the Deep, who had before fed the Crocodiles with the Blood of the Innocent. God ſhall reward Babylon as ſhe hath rewarded his People, and double unto her the Cup ſhe hath filled for others, Rev. 18. 6. Upon this account ſhall Praiſe be given to God, that he hath given them Blood to drink, who have ſhed the Blood of his Saints and Prophets, Rev. 16. 6. Thou art Righteous, O Lord, becauſe thou haſt judged thus. As ſhe hath kindled Fires to conſume the Witneſſes of Chriſt, ſo God ſhall kindle a Fire to conſume her, Rev. 17. 16. She ſhall be utterly burnt with Fire, Rev. 18. 8. Some think Rome will at length be conſumed with Fire from Heaven; ſhe is indeed Spiritual Sodom, Rev. 11. 8. And as ſhe anſwers it in Carnal and Spiritual Sins, ſhe may partake of the ſame viſible and ſpiritual Judgments: Whether the Puniſhment will be the ſame for kind I know not, but certainly it will be ſuch a kind of Puniſhment, whereby the Judgments of God ſhall be read both in proportion, and kind of it, as a Retaliation for her ſins; and the Scripture ſpeaks of Fire coming down from God out of Heaven, upon the laſt Enemies of the Church, that ſhall afflict the beloved City, alluding to the Fire upon Sodom, and that which deſcended upon the Perſecutors of Elijah, Rev. 20. 9.

7. Wiſely. He cuts off the Spirits of Princes, as he took off the Wheels of the Ægyptian Chariots, Pſal. 76. 12. Either by infatuating their Counſels, or turning them as the Rivers of Waters into other Channels. He ſtript the Ægyptians, firſt of their Wealth, and now Spoils them of their Strength; he kept a Bridle upon the Waters, till the Enemies were got into the midſt of them, and then commands the Sea to ſwallow them up in the depths of her Bowels. When Men lay their Counſels deep, ſecond them by an invincible Strength, have almoſt brought them to their imagin'd Period ready to bring forth, God diſappoints their Hopes, baffles their Counſels, renders their Projects frothy, raiſeth a Storm, and blows the Ship from its Harbour, contrary to its intended Courſe, and glorifies his Wiſdom, by overthrowing their Deſigns, when they have brought them to a Birth. He watches upon the Evil to divert it from the innocent Object upon the malicious Actor. As God watches for the fitteſt Seaſon to bring evil upon his People, Dan. 9. 14. he will be as diligent to watch for the fitteſt Opportunity to bring Judgment on his Enemies. God hath promiſed Vengeance, but he hath reſerved the knowledge of the due time to himſelf, when he will make their foot to ſlide, Deut. 32. 35. Every Mercy is then moſt ſeaſonable. Uſually God lets Men bring the Ball almoſt to the Goal, and then kicks it from them, and them from it: And the Wiſdom of God hath been, and will be glorious in the Overthrow of the remaining Enemies of the Church, in making them which were Horns to defend the Beaſt, to be Carpenters to ruine him, Rev. 17. 16.

Uſe 1. Of Comfort. How dear is the Church to God! When God was engag'd in the Deliverance of his People, he ſinks the Strength of Ægypt rather than one Hair of the Iſraelites Heads ſhou'd periſh; they went ſafe over, while no Man or Horſe of the Enemies eſcap'd. God gave Ægypt for Iſrael's Ranſom, Iſa. 43. 3. And the Sea ſhou'd have drown'd the whole Land, rather than the Enemies have hurt his People. So did the Contrivers of the Powder-Plot come to deſtruction, when not one Hair of a Head was loſt, or one ſplinter of the place they intended was ſhav'd off, by the prepar'd Gunpowder. God ſits in Heaven, and laughs at the little petty Deſigns of Men, Pſa. 2. 4. God that is infinite to countermine them, infinitely powerful to defeat them, hath them in deriſion. Chriſt in Glory mocks at the Folly of Earth-Worms. The Decree of God, which ſettles Chriſt a King, aſſures him a Kingdom, and ſecures his People as it did his Perſon, Pſa. 2. 7. God is a Sun and a Shield; Pſa. 84. 11. a Shield to defend them, and a Sun to extinguiſh the Fire of the Enemy's Fury, by ſhining upon it. God values no Nation for the ſecurity of his People. The Babylonians, a warlike Nation, ſhall ſink under the Army of Cyrus, for the Reſtauration of the captive Jews, Iſa. 43. 4. I will give Men for thee, and People for thy Life. He had given Ægypt for their Ranſom before, and Æthiopia and Seba, in the time of Aſa; and ſtill in after-Ages God was of the ſame Mind. God is as gracious to his People, as terrible to his Enemies: He is Light to the one, when he is Fire to the Souls and Bodies of the other, Iſa. 10. 17. Chriſt ſtill ſits the Watchman of Ephraim with God, Hoſ. 9. 8. He inſpects his Church, and waits to bring the Day of Viſitation upon his Enemies. The Covenant is of ſpecial force with God, to move him to deliver his People, Iſa. 63. 8. He ſaid, Surely they are my People, ſo he was their Saviour. It ſeems to refer to the deliverance from Ægypt. Shall I have ſo little regard to the League I have entred into with their Fathers, as to be unconcern'd in their Miſery? There is hope in Iſrael till God forgets his Covenant, and Chriſt ſtrip himſelf of the Name of a Saviour. Chriſt hath his Prieſtly Habit in Heaven for his People, but Eyes as Flames of Fire, quick and piercing, to conſume the very Hearts of his Enemies; and Feet like fine Braſs, to trample upon them, Rev. 1. 13, 14, 15. He is the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, to tear his Enemies, as well as a Lamb ſlain, to expiate the ſins of his People. He hath Meekneſs for his Friends, and terrible Majeſty for his Enemies, Pſa. 45. 4. In thy Majeſty ride proſperouſly, becauſe of Meekneſs. His Kindneſs to his People makes him ride in Majeſty againſt the others. God will not be at reſt till he hath reveng'd the Cauſe of his People. Ægypt will be drown'd, Babylon will fall, Rev. 18. 2. Chriſt can have no ſatisfaction without it. The Executioners of his Judgments in the North-Country, which was Babylon, lying Northward from Jeruſalem, do quiet his Spirit; both as tending to the Glory of his Juſtice, and the Manifeſtation of his Mercy to his People, Zach. 6. 3. Chriſt will ſtain his Garments in the Blood of Edom and Bozra, Iſa. 63. 2, 3. Edom the Poſterity of Eſau, Bozra a City of Moab, Types of the Church's Enemies. The Jewiſh Doctors by Edom in the Prophets underſtand Rome. Chriſt ſits in Heaven, till his Enemies be made his Footſtool. All the time of his ſitting God is acting and preparing things for a final Iſſue. There is a ſtrong cry of Blood, and a File of Prayers; the one will be reveng'd, and the other will be anſwer'd. Their own Pride and Cruelty witneſs againſt them. God hath a Noiſe of Petitions every day for a full end; a combin'd Importunity will prevail. But Clouds now hang over us, a gloomy Storm ſeems to threaten us. God may indeed blow over the Cloud. Our Saviour hath the command of the Storms and Winds in Heaven, as well as he had upon the Earth; the Pillar of the Cloud, which hath hitherto conducted us, may be our Guardian in the Rear to defend us. But yet if he doth ſuffer them to prevail, they ſhall be but as Whisks to bruſh off the Duſt, Wiſps of Straw to cleanſe the filthy Pot. You know what is to be done with them when their Work is done. Their Language indeed is, Let Sion be defiled; but they underſtand not the Counſel of the Lord, who in time will make the Horn of Sion Iron, and her Hoofs Braſs, Micah 4. 11. Though the Beaſts that aſcend out of the Bottomleſs Pit do kill God's People, Rev. 11. 7. yet even in this Victory of theirs Satan himſelf ſhall be overcome. As when Chriſt was taken out from among the Living by Satan's means, it was but for a time; but himſelf was caſt out for ever; ſo after this Victory the Church ſhall overcome, Rev. 11. and God ſhall break the Head of the Leviathan in the Waters; and when he doth by his Wiſdom contrive ways of Salvation, he will by his Power execute them, and ſave in ſuch a way as may moſt glorifie himſelf, and witneſs that the Salvation was the immediate Work of his Arm, Hoſ. 2. 7. I will ſave them by the Lord their God.

2. Remember former Deliverances in time of Straits. In our plenty of Mercies we ſhould not be unmindful how near we were to the Pit, nor let the Impreſſion of God's Power, Wiſdom, and Mercy wear off from our Hearts. The Iſraelites were apt to forget the moſt ſignal Mercies, though they had ſeen them, and had more ſenſibly taſted the Sweetneſs of them, than their Poſterity. God therefore often puts them in mind of them; The Lord that brought them out of the Land of Ægypt, out of the Iron Furnace, Deut. 4. 20. Hoſ. 12. 9. I the Lord your God from the Land of Ægypt, Ezek. 23. 3. It was the more fit to be remembred by them, becauſe many of them were fitter Subjects for God's Wrath with the Ægyptians, than for his Delivering-Kindneſs, ſince ſhe committed Whoredoms in Ægypt in her Youth, i. e. had been guilty of the Ægyptian Idolatry. Unmindfulneſs of former Experiences may make you hopeleſs of future Deliverances: The Remembrance of former Mercies is a ground of Confidence in God for the like Mercies for the future. God recalls to his People's Minds, in their Afflictions, the memorable Defeat of the Moabites, by his ſole Power, in the time of Jehoſaphat's Reign; they ſhould from that Deliverance hope for as great from the hands of God in their Straits. And Zech. 10. 11. God would have them conſider their Deliverance at the Red-Sea, as a ground of Hope in the time of their Diſtreſs.

fitter

3. Thankfully remember former Deliverances. If we have not ſome Praiſe for God, we may ſuſpect our ſelves. * 'Tis obſerv'd of the City Shuſhan, the Royal Seat of the Perſian Monarchy, was pourtray'd upon the Eaſt-Gate of the Temple, not becauſe of the Perſian Command, or becauſe of their Fear of that King, as ſome think; but to have a thankful Remembrance of the wonderful Deliverance of Purim, which was wrought in Shuſhan, Eſt. 9. 26. If it had been only by the Perſians command, it would have been defaced after the Fall of that Monarchy, which held but thirty four Years after the building of the ſecond Temple. The 136. Pſalm is a good Copy, where is a threefold exhortation to thankfulneſs, in the beginning, and one at the end, and in the Record of every Mercy, the Burden of every Verſe is, his Mercy endureth for ever. How ſhould we imitate the Pſalmiſt? He broke the Teeth of the invincible Leviathan in 88, and ſent a ſtrong Wind to diſperſe the Fleet, for his Mercy endureth for ever; God prevented the dreadful blaſt of Gunpowder, for his Mercy endureth for ever; God ſent the Light of the Goſpel into England, and freed it from the Yoke of Antichriſt's Tyranny, for his Mercy endureth for ever; God hath been a Wall of Fire about Ireland in the Protection of it, for his Mercy endureth for ever. Let Mercy receive the Praiſe of what our own Wiſdom and Power could not effect. The way to overcome the ſame Enemies we fear, is to praiſe God for what he hath before acted againſt them. The Strength of a People conſiſts in Praiſes, as well as praying, Pſa. 8. 2. Out of the Mouths of Babes and Sucklings haſt thou ordained Strength. In the Evangeliſt, thou haſt perfected Praiſe, Mat. 21. 16. The more Hallelujahs we put up, the more occaſion God may give us for them. If we have any fears of the overflowing Deluge God formerly deliver'd us from, our non-improvement of thoſe Deliverances, the Fruits whereof we enjoy this day, may ſtrengthen our Fears. When Iſrael was idolatrous in Jeroboam's Reign, yet God deliver'd them from the Syrians, becauſe he ſaw their Affliction was bitter, and there was no Helper; yet when they did not thankfully improve it to a Reformation, God denounc'd Judgments againſt them for their Idolatry, 2 Kings 14. 26, 27. The Lord ſaid not that he would blot out the Name of Iſrael; ſo that he had not yet denounc'd it, for he waited to ſee the improvement of this Mercy. But before the end of Jeroboam's Reign by the Prophet Hoſea, who began to propheſie in his time, he declar'd their final Captivity, from whence they are not reſtor'd to this day. Praiſe for former Mercies is a means to gain future ones; The Muſick of Voices in Jehoſaphat's Camp, praiſing the beauty of Holineſs, was a Prologue of a Deliverance from a formidable Army, 2 Chron. 20. 21, 22. and more ſucceſsful than the warlike Muſick of Drums and Trumpets.

* Lightfoot Temple, cap. 3. p. 9.

4. Exerciſe Faith on the Power of God manifeſted in Deliverances in the time of Straits. 'Tis not for want of Ability in God, but for want of Faith in us, that we at any time go groaning under Miſery; Faith would quiet the Soul: When David rely'd upon God, and found by experience God ſuſtaining him, he would not then be afraid of ten thouſand, Pſa. 3. 5, 6. Let that be our Carriage which is recorded of the Iſraelites after this memorable Defeat, Exod. 14. 31. They believed the Lord, and his Servant Moſes. We muſt never expect to ſee God's Arm bare, without Faith in him. Chriſt can do no great Work where Unbelief is predominant. Unbelief doth not ſtrip God of his Power and Mercy, but it ſtops the Streams and Efluxes of it. Unbelief againſt Experience is a double Sin; 'Tis groſs when againſt a bare Word, worſe when againſt the Word confirm'd by a Witneſs. Iſrael was paſt thoughts of any Relief in this Strait, but expected to periſh by the hand of their Enemies, yet God brought them into Straits in Mercy, to bring them out of Straits with Power; he makes their Diſtreſs a Snare to their Enemies, and a Scaffold for their Faith. That Deliverance ought to be a Foundation for our Truſt in God, though beſtow'd upon another Nation; yet not ſo much upon them as a State, but as a Church, and a Type of thoſe future ones under the Goſpel, which are yet expected. Well then, truſt upon this Foundation. Great Truſt in God is a ſort of Obligation upon God: Men out of Generoſity will do much for them that depend upon them. Dependance on God magnifies his Attributes, this will bring Deliverance, whereby God will magnifie himſelf. Do not diſtruſt him, till you meet with an Enemy too ſtrong for him to quell, a Red-Sea too deep for him to divide, an Affliction too ſturdy for him to rebuke, an Ægyptian too proud for him to maſter; Then part with your Faith, but not till God hath parted with his Power, which he hath formerly evidenc'd.

5. Expect and provide for ſharp Conflicts. God brings into Straits before he delivers; Another Deliverance is yet to come; the Church's Diſtreſſes are not come to a Period, Babylon hath another Game to play. The right of the Devil to tyrannize over the Myſtical Body was taken away at the death of the Head, yet he ſtill bruiſeth Chriſt's Heel, and bites, though he cannot totally overcome. As long as Chriſt's Enemies are not made his Foot-ſtool, as long as there is the Seed of the Serpent in the World, as long as Chriſt's Members want a conformity to the Head, Satan's Pinches muſt be expected; as long as the Beaſt is in being, he will make War with the Followers of the Lamb; his Power is to continue forty two Months, to make War with the Saints, and to overcome them, Revel. 13. 5, 7. Forty two Months or Years. 'Tis like the time is not expir'd: One thouſand ſix hundred and twenty Years, which make forty two Months; no ending ſince he firſt had his Power; when his time draws near to an end, he will bite ſharpeſt. This Deliverance from Ægypt is yet again to be acted over, and that muſt be at the end, when the whole Iſrael of God ſhall be freed from Antichriſt, the Antitype of Pharaoh.

6. Yet let us not be afraid. Apoſtacies may be great; there will be but two Witneſſes; not two in number, but in regard of the fewneſs of thoſe that ſhall bear teſtimony to the Doctrine of Chriſt:

There may be no Advocate for the Church: Sion may be an out-caſt, caſt out of the Affection of many that ſerved or favoured her: But the ſharpeſt Convulſions in the World are preſages of an approaching Redemption, Luke 21. 28. and the Goſpel will ſhine clearer, as the Sun doth, after it hath been muffled with a thick Cloud. The words in the mouths of the Witneſſes, will be moſt killing and convincing. Fear not a natural above a ſupernatural Power. Was not all the Church God had in the World in as low a condition at the Red-Sea? Not a Soul, that we read of, exempt, (or but few, as Job, and ſome few others in other Parts) yet the Church was then delivered for a Pattern, to ſhew forth the Power of God in the Ages to come. What though there may be a want of Inſtruments? Are not all Inſtruments out-liv'd by God? Has God diſmiſt the care of his People? Is he not always the Church's Guardian? He muſt be dethron'd before he can be diſarm'd. While Heaven is too high for human Hands to reach, the Church is too well guarded for them to conquer: Fear not, till Chriſt lets the Scepter fall out of his Hands, and ceaſes to Rule in the midſt of his Enemies, and flings away the Keys of Death and Hell; fear not till God ſtrips himſelf of his ſtrength, wherewith he is clothed; He is clothed with ſtrength, Pſal. 93. 1. Though there be little ſtrength in the Church, there is an Almighty one in their Confederate. 'Tis no matter what the Enemy reſolves againſt what God ordains. Pharaoh intended to Deſtroy, God intended to Deliver. God will have his Will, and Pharaoh's Luſt goes unſatisfied. When the Enemies are moſt numerous, God ſhall darken their Glory and Strength, and then ſhall he be the hope and ſtrength of his People, Joel 3. 14, 15, 16. The Valley of Achor, the Valley of the ſharpeſt Trouble, ſhall be a door of Hope, Hoſ. 2. 15. That God, that can create a World out of nothing, can create Deliverance when there is no viſible means to produce it. What can be too hard for him that can work without Materials, that can make Matter when it is wanting, and call Non-Entities into Being? He created the World with a word, and can deſtroy the ſturdieſt Men in the World with a Look. The ſtrongeſt Devil trembles before him, and the whole Seed of the Serpent is but as the duſt of the Ballance before the breath of his Mouth. He looked the Ægyptian Hoſt into diſorder, and their Chariot-wheels into a falling-ſickneſs, Exod. 14. 24. He created the World by a word: He reſtored Jeruſalem by a word, Iſa. 44. 26, 27. diſpirited Ægypt by a Look. There is no need of an Arm; a Word, and a Look of Omnipotency will be efficacious both for the one and the other; one Royal Edict from him will perform it, Pſal. 44. 4. Thou art my King, command deliverance for Jacob. He hath Authority as a King, Engagement as the Church's King: As he hath right of Dominion, ſo he hath an Office of Protection, which the Church of right may claim; and is it Jacob that wants Deliverance? be not afraid, but ſanctifie the Lord of Hoſts himſelf, Iſai. 8. 12, 13. To truſt in his Power, is to ſanctifie his Name, and regard him as the Sovereign of all Creatures, and the Lord of Hoſts. If we ſanctifie his Name by relying on his Power, he will ſanctifie his Name by engaging his Power.

7. To this end, ſtudy the Promiſes God hath made to his Church, and what Predictions are upon Record. 'Tis a Title of the Faithful, that they are ſuch as keep the Sayings of the Book of the Revelation, Rev. 22. 9. The Angel that came to John, owns himſelf his Fellow-ſervant, and of the Prophets, and thoſe that keep the ſayings of that Book. See God's Bond, and behold his Witneſs; compare the Promiſe, the Prophecy, and Performance: See his Mercy in making them, his Truth in performing them; let theſe be as the Hur and Aaron to ſupport the Glory of God in our Souls. This will be a matter of Praiſe, and furniſh us with Arguments to ſpread before God. Daniel firſt looked into the Book for the ſet time of the Jews return from Babylon, Dan. 9. 2. and took his Riſe for Pleas from thence. You may have need of this Food; a Divine Promiſe is the beſt Cordial at a Stake or Gibbet, or when a Sword is at your Breaſt.

8. When a time of Straits comes, wait patiently upon God: Let not Hope ſink, when Reaſon is non-pluſt by Storms, and ſees nothing but Wracks. Wait upon God in the way of his Judgments, Iſa. 26. 8. in his Storms as well as Calms. God waits to be Gracious, and therefore we ſhould wait to be gratified. Not to wait, is to be Partners in that Sin which brought deſtruction upon the Church's Enemies, viz. Pride. It concerns God more in point of his Glory, to haſten Deliverance in its due time, than us in point of Security; but there is as much danger in coming too ſoon, as too late. By waiting we imitate the higheſt Pattern, who waits with Patience for the Reformation of his Enemies, and Chriſt who waits for the total Victory. The longer God keeps the Church at any time under the Enemies Chains, the ſweeter will be his Mercy to the one, and the ſeverer his Juſtice on the other. The Iſraelites waited, and God followed Pharaoh with Plagues, as he followed them with Burdens, and took his time to cut off their Oppreſſors with moſt Glory to himſelf, and moſt Comfort to them. The Viſion hath its appointed time: Impatience will not make God break the Chains of his Reſolves, but Patience will bring down the Bleſſing with great Succeſs, and big with noble Births. God is not out of the way of his Wiſdom and Grace, and we can never keep in our way but by Patience in waiting: By this we give him the honour of his Wiſdom; by too much haſtineſs we check and controul him, and will not let him be the Maſter and Conductor of his own Bleſſings. We many times get more good by waiting, than we do by enjoying a Mercy: Such a poſture keeps the Soul humble and believing, whereas many times when we receive a Mercy too haſtily with one hand, we let go Faith and Humility with the other. Sincere Souls have the ſtrongeſt and moſt Heavenly Raptures in a time of waiting, Iſa. 40. 31. They mount up with wings like Eagles.

9. In times of ſuch ſtraits, Be found only in a way of Duty. If our Straits ſhould ever prove as hard as the Iſraelites at the Red Sea, i. e. have ſomething of a reſemblance to their caſe, let us follow Moſes his Counſel to them, Exod. 14. 13. Stand ſtill and ſee the ſalvation of the Lord. Let us not anticipate God's gracious Deſigns; if we will have our Finger, where God only will have his Arm, God may withdraw this Arm, and leave us to the weakneſs of our own Fingers. Let them that want a God to relieve them, uſe ſinful and unworthy ſhifts for their deliverance. If any Succeſs be found out of the way of Duty, it may be attended with a Curſe, and want that favour of God which only can ſanctify it; We may purchaſe a preſent Deliverance with a more durable plague at the end of it, becauſe we forfeit that Favour which only can work a real freedom. Sinful ways do not glorifie God, but diſparage him; our Actions at ſuch a time particularly ſhould adorn the Goſpel, not diſcredit it, for it is by the Sword of his Mouth that ſuch Enemies will be deſtroyed, and every Sword cuts beſt when it is ſharpeſt and cleaneſt, not when it is blunt and rusty. Not but that lawful Means may, nay, they must be used. Noah, though he went into the Ark by God's Command, and was not to stir out without his Order, yet he sets open the Windows, and sends forth a Raven and a Dove to bring him notice when the Waters were dried up. 'Tis a foolish thing to offend God who only can help us in our Straits, and by our sin to hold his Sword in his Sheath, which upon our Obedience would be drawn for our Relief. We know not how soon we may need him, and our Distress be such, that none but he can bring Salvation; let no sin be a bar in the way.

not

10. Be much in Prayer. Israel cried unto the Lord before God did relieve. Exod. 14. 10. The persecuted Church cried travelling in Birth, and found a security both for her self and her Offspring, Rev. 12. 2, &c. The distress of the Time is an Argument to be used, Psal. 123. 34. Have Mercy on us Lord, for we are exceedingly filled with Contempt. When Enemies are high, and access to God free, 'tis an high contempt of God not to use the Priviledge he allows us; and 'tis to trust in an Arm of Flesh rather than an Arm of Omnipotence; to think him either inexorable, or unable. And for Encouragement consider, you have Christ arm'd against his Spouses Enemies, and provided with Merit to make her Prayers successful. Our Prayers may at last be turned into Praises: And we may say with David, Psal. 9. 6. Oh thou Enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end.

A DISCOURSE OF Delight in Prayer.

Psal. 37. 4.

Delight thy self also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy Heart.

THis Psalm in the beginning is a heap of Instructions: The great Lesson intended in it is plac'd in ver. 1. Fret not thy self because of evil-doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. 'Tis resum'd, ver. 7, 8. where many Reasons are alledged to enforce it.

Fret not.]

1. Do not Envy them. Be not troubled at their Prosperity.

2. Do not Imitate them. Be not provoked by their Glow-worm Happiness, to practice the same wickedness to arrive to the same Prosperity.

3. Be not sinfully impatient, and quarrel not with God, because he hath not by his Providence allowed thee the same measures of Prosperity in the World. Accuse him not of Injustice and Cruelty, because he afflicts the Good, and is indulgent to the Wicked. Leave him to dispense his Blessings according to his own Mind.

4. Condemn not the way of Piety and Religion wherein thou art. Think not the worse of thy Profession, because it is attended with Affliction.

The reason of this Exhortation is rendred, v. 2. For they shall soon be cut down as the Grass, and wither as the green Herb; amplified by a similitude or resemblance of their Prosperity to Grass: Their happiness hath no Stability; it hath like Grass, more of colour and show, than strength and substance. Grass nods this and that way with every Wind. The Mouth of a Beast may pull it up, or the Foot of a Beast may tread it down; the scorching Sun in Summer, or the fainting Sun in Winter, will deface its Complexion.

The Psalmist then proceeds to positive Duties, ver. 3.

1. Faith. Trust in the Lord. This is a Grace most fit to quell such Impatiencies. The stronger the Faith, the weaker the Passion. Impatient Motions are signs of a flagging Faith. Many times Men are ready to cast off their help in Jehovah, and address to the God of Ekron, multitudes of Friends or Riches. But trust thou in the Lord; in the Promises of God, in the Providence of God.

2. Obedience. Do good. Trust in God's Promises, and observance of his Precepts must be link'd together. 'Tis but a pretended trust in God, where there is a real walking in the paths of Wickedness. Let not the Glister of the World render thee faint and languid in a course of Piety.

3. The keeping our Station. Do good. Because wicked Men flourish, hide not thy self therefore in a Corner, but keep thy Sphere, run thy Race. And verily thou shalt be fed; have every thing needful for thee. And now, because Men delight in that wherein they Trust, the Psalmist diverts us from all other objects of Delight, to God as the the true Object. Delight thy self in the Lord; place all thy Pleasure and Joy in him. And because the Motive expresseth the answer of Prayer, the Duty enjoyned seems to respect the act of Prayer, as well as the object of Prayer; Prayer coming from a delight in God, and a delight in seeking him. Trust is both the spring of Joy and the spring of Supplication. When we trust him for Sustenance and Preservation, we shall receive them; so when we delight in seeking him, we shall be answered by him.

1. The Duty. In the Act, Delight. In the Object, the Lord.

2. The Motive. He shall give thee the desires of thy Heart, heart, the moſt ſubſtantial Deſires, thoſe Deſires which he approves of; The deſire of thy Heart as Gracious, though not the deſire of thy Heart as Carnal: The deſire of thy Heart as a Chriſtian, though not the deſire of thy Heart as a Creature. He ſhall give; God is the Object of our Joy, and the Author of our Comfort.

Doctrine. Delight in God, in ſeeking him only, procures gracious Anſwers; or, without chearful Prayers, we cannot have gracious Anſwers.

There are two Parts. 1. Chearfulneſs on our parts. 2. Grants on God's part.

1. Chearfulneſs and delight on our Parts. Joy is the tuning the Soul. The Command to Rejoyce precedes the Command to Pray, 1 Theſſ. 5. 16, 17. Rejoyce evermore, pray without ceaſing. Delight makes the Melody, Prayer elſe will be but a harſh ſound. God accepts the Heart only, when it is a Gift given, not forc'd. Delight is the Marrow of Religion.

1. Dulneſs is not ſuitable to the great things we are chiefly to beg for. Goſpel-diſcoveries are a Feaſt, Iſa. 25. 6. Dulneſs becomes not ſuch a Solemnity. Manna muſt not be ſought for with a dumpiſh Heart. With Joy we are to draw Water out of the Wells of Salvation, Iſa. 12. 3. Faith is the Bucket, but Joy and Love are the hands that move it. They are the Hur and Aaron that hold up the hands of this Moſes. God doth not value that Man's Service, who accounts not his Service a priviledge and a pleaſure.

2. Dulneſs is not ſuitable to the Duty. Goſpel-duties are to be performed with a Goſpel-temper. God's People ought to be a willing People, Pſal. 110. 3. נדבות, a People of Willingneſs: As tho' in Prayer no other faculty of the Soul had its exerciſe but the Will. This muſt breathe fully in every word; as the Spirit in Ezekiel's Wheels. Delight, like the Angel *, muſt aſcend in the ſmoke and flame of the Soul. Though there be a kind of union by Contemplation, yet the real union is by Affection. A Man cannot be ſaid to be a ſpiritual King, if he doth not preſent his performances with a Royal and Prince-like Spirit. 'Tis for vigorous wreſtling that Jacob is called a Prince, Gen. 32. 28.

* Judg. 30. 20.

This Temper is eſſential to Grace. Natural Men are deſcribed to be of a heavy and weary Temper in the offering of Sacrifices, Mal. 1. 13. It was but a ſickly, lame Lamb they brought for an Offering, and yet weary of it; that which was not fit for their Table, they thought fit for the Altar.

In the handling this Doctrine I ſhall ſhew,

1. What this Delight is.
2. Whence it ſprings.
3. The reaſons of the Doctrine.
4. The Uſe.

1. What this Delight is. Delight properly is an affection of the Mind that ſprings from the poſſeſſion of a Good which hath been ardently deſired. This is the top Stone, the higheſt Step, Delight is but an Embryo till it come to fruition, and that certain and immutable: Otherwiſe, if there be probability or poſſibility of loſing that which we have preſent poſſeſſion of, the fear of it is as a drop of Gall that infects the ſweetneſs of this Paſſion; Delight properly is a ſilencing of Deſire, and the Banquet of the Soul on the preſence of its deſired Object.

But there is a Delight of a lower ſtamp.

1. In Deſires. There is a delight in Deſire, as well as in fruition. A chearfulneſs in Labour, as well as in Attainment. The deſire of Canaan made the good Iſraelites chearful in the Wilderneſs. There is an inchoate delight in Motion, but a conſummate delight in Reſt and Fruition.

2. In hopes. Deſired happineſs affects the Soul; much more expected happineſs, Rom. 5. 2. We rejoyce in the hope of the glory of God. Joy is the natural iſſue of a well-grounded Hope. A tottering Expectation will engender but a tottering Delight: Such a delight will Mad-men have, which is rather to be pitied than deſired. But if an imaginary Hope can affect the Heart with ſome real Joy, much more a Hope ſettled upon a ſure bottom, and raiſed upon a good Foundation, there may be joy in a Title as well as in Poſſeſſion.

3. In Contemplation. The conſideration and ſerious thoughts of Heaven do affect a gracious Heart, and fill it with Pleaſure, tho' it ſelf be as if in a Wilderneſs. The near approach to a deſired Good doth much affect the Heart. Moſes was ſurely more pleaſed with the ſight of Canaan from Piſgah, than with the hopes of it in the Deſert. A Travellers Delight is more raiſed when he is neareſt his Journeys end, and a hungry Stomach hath a greater Joy when he ſees the Meat approaching which muſt ſatisfie the Appetite. As the Union with the Object is nearer, ſo the Delight is ſtronger. Now this Delight the Soul hath in Duty, is not a delight of Fruition, but of Deſire, Hope, or Contemplation; Gaudium viæ, not Patriæ.

1. We may conſider Delight as Active or Paſſive.

1. Active, which is an act of our Souls in our approaches to God. When the Heart, like the Sun, rouzeth up it ſelf as a Gyant to run a ſpiritual Race.

2. Paſſive. Which is God's diſpenſation in approaches to us, and often met with in our chearful addreſſes to God, Iſa. 64. 5. Thou meeteſt him that rejoiceth and works righteouſneſs. When we delightfully claſp about the Throne of Grace, God doth often caſt his Arms about our Necks: Eſpecially when chearful Prayer is accompanied with a chearful Obedience. This Joy is, when Chriſt meets us in Prayer with a be of good cheer, thy ſins are forgiven, thy Requeſt granted. The active delight is the health of the Soul, the paſſive is the good complexion of the Soul. The one is Man's Duty, the other God's peculiar Gift. The one is the inſeparable property of the new Birth, the other a ſeparable priviledge. There may be a joy in God, when there is little joy from God. There may be Gold in the Mine, when no Flowers on the ſurface.

2. We may conſider Delight as ſettled or tranſient: As Spiritual or Senſitive.

1. A ſettled Delight. In ſtrong and grown Chriſtians, when Prayer proceeds out of a thankfulneſs to God, a judicious knowledge and apprehenſion of God. The nearer to God the more Delight: As the motion of a Stone is moſt ſpeedy when neareſt its Center.

2. A Senſitive Delight. As in Perſons troubled in Mind, there may be a kind of delight in Prayer, becauſe there is ſome ſenſe of eaſe in the very venting it ſelf; And in ſome, becauſe of the novelty of a Duty they were not accuſtom'd to before. Many Prayers may be put up by Perſons in neceſſity, without any ſpiritual Delight in them; As crazy Perſons take more Phyſick than thoſe that are healthful, and obſerve the Spring and Fall, yet they delight not in that Phyſick. The Phariſee could pray longer, and perhaps with ſome delight too, but upon a ſenſual Ground, with a proud and a vaunting kind of Chearfulneſs; a delight in himſelf; when the Publican had a more ſpiritual Delight; though a humble Sorrow in the conſideration of his own vileneſs, yet a Delight in the conſideration of God's Mercy. This ſenſitive Delight may be more ſenſible in a young, than in a grown Chriſtian. There is a more ſenſible Affection at the firſt meeting of Friends, though more ſolid after ſome Converſe; as there is a love which is called the love of the Eſpouſals. As it is in ſorrow for ſin, ſo in this Delight: A young Convert hath a greater Torrent, a grown Chriſtian a more conſtant Stream; As at the firſt Converſion of a Sinner there is an overflowing joy among the Angels, which we read not of after, though without queſtion there is a ſettled Joy in them at the growth of a Chriſtian. An elder Son may have a delight in his Father's Preſence more rooted, firm, and rational, than a younger Child that clings more about him with affectionate Expreſſions. As ſincerity is the Soul of all Graces and Duties, ſo this Delight is the luſtre and embroidery of them.

Now this Delight in Prayer,

1. Tis an inward and hearty Delight. As to the Subject of it, it is ſeated in the Heart. A Man in Prayer may have a chearful Countenance and a drowſie Spirit. The Spirit of God dwells in the Heart, and Love and Joy are the firſt-fruits of it, Gal. 5. 22. Love to Duty, and Joy in it; Joy as a Grace, not as a meer Comfort. As God is hearty in offering Mercy, ſo is the Soul in petitioning for it. There is a harmony between God and the Heart. Where there is Delight, there is great pains taken with the Heart; a gracious Heart ſtrikes it ſelf again and again; as Moſes did the Rock twice. Thoſe ends which God hath in giving, are a Chriſtians ends in asking. Now the more of our Hearts in the Requeſts, the more of God's Heart in the Grants. The Emphaſis of Mercy is God's whole Heart and whole Soul in it, Jer. 22. 41. So the Emphaſis of Duty is our whole Heart and whole Soul. As without God's chearful anſwering, a gracious Soul would not reliſh a Mercy, ſo without our hearty asking God doth not reliſh our Prayer.

2. 'Tis a delight in God, who is the Object of Prayer. The glory of God, communion with him, enjoyment of him is the great end of a Believer in his Supplications. That delight which is in Prayer, is chiefly in it as a means conducing to ſuch an end, and is but a ſpark of that Delight which the Soul hath in the object of Prayer. God is the Center wherein the Soul reſts, and the End which the Soul aims at. According to our apprehenſions of God are our deſires for him; when we apprehend him as the chiefeſt Good, we ſhall deſire him, and delight in him, as the chiefeſt Good. There muſt firſt be a delight in God, before there can be a ſpiritual delight, or a permanency in Duty, Job 27. 10. Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? will he always call upon God? Delight is a Grace; and as Faith, Deſire, and Love, have God for their Object, ſo hath this. And according to the ſtrength of our delight in the Object or End, is the ſtrength of our delight in the means of Attainment. When we delight in God as glorious, we ſhall delight to honour him; when we regard him as Good, we ſhall delight to purſue and enjoy him, and delight in that which brings us to an intercourſe with him. He that rejoyces in God, will rejoyce in every approach to him. The joy of the Lord is our ſtrength, Neh. 8. 10. The more Joy in God, the more Strength to come to him. The want of this is the reaſon of our Snail-like motion to him. Men have no ſweet thoughts of God, and therefore no mind to converſe with him. We cannot judge our delight in Prayer to be right, if we have not a delight in God; for natural Men may have a delight in Prayer, when they have corrupt and ſelfiſh Ends; they may have a delight in a Duty, as it is a means, according to their Apprehenſions, to gain ſuch an end: As Balaam and Balak offered their Sacrifice chearfully, hoping to ingratiate themſelves with God, and to have liberty to curſe his People.

3. A delight in the Precepts and Promiſes of God, which are the ground and rules of Prayer. Firſt, David delights in God's Teſtimonies, and then calls upon him with his whole Heart. A gracious Heart muſt firſt delight in Precepts and Promiſes, before it can turn them into Prayers: For Prayer is nothing elſe but a preſenting God with his own Promiſe, deſiring to work that in us and for us, which he hath promiſed to us. None was more chearful in Prayer than David, becauſe none was more rejoycing in the Statutes of God. God's Statutes were his Songs, Pſal. 119. 54. And the divine Word was ſweeter to him than the Honey and Honey-comb. If our Hearts leap not at divine Promiſes, we are like to have but drowſie Souls in deſiring them. If our Eye be not upon the dainties God ſets before us, our Deſires cannot be ſtrong for him. If we have no delight in the great Charters of Heaven, the rich Legacies of God, how can we ſue for them? If we delight not in the Covenant of Grace, we ſhall not delight in Prayers for Grace. It was the hopes of Reward made Moſes ſo valiant in Suffering, and the joy ſet before Chriſt in a Promiſe, made him ſo chearful in enduring the Shame, Heb. 12. 1, 2.

4. A delight in Prayer it ſelf. A Chriſtians Heart is in ſecret raviſh'd into Heaven. There is a delight in coming near God, and warming the Soul by the fire of his Love: The Angels are chearful in the act of Praiſe, their work is their Glory. A holy Soul doth ſo delight in this Duty, that if there were no Command to engage him, no Promiſe to encourage him, he would be ſtepping into God's Courts. He thinks it not a good Day, that paſſeth without ſome intercourſe with God. David would have taken up his Lodgings in the Courts of God, and regards it as the only Bleſſedneſs, Pſalm 65. 4. And ſo great a delight he had in being in God's Preſence, that he envies the Birds the happineſs of building their Neſts near his Tabernacle. A delight there is in the holineſs of Prayer; a natural Man under ſome Troubles may delight in God's comforting and eaſing Preſence, but not in his ſanctifying Preſence. He may delight to pray to God as a Store-houſe to ſupply his Wants, but not as a Refiners Fire to purge away his Droſs. Prayer, as Praiſe, is a melody to God in the Heart, Eph. 5. 19. And the Soul loves to be fingring the Inſtrument and touching the Strings.

5. A delight in the things askt. This heavenly Chearfulneſs is moſt in heavenly things. What delight others have in asking worldly Goods, that a gracious Heart hath in begging the Light of God's Countenance. That Soul cannot be dull in Prayer, that ſeriouſly conſiders he prays for no leſs than Heaven and Happineſs; no leſs than the Glory of the great God. A gracious Man is never weary of ſpiritual things, as Men are never weary of the Sun, but though it is enjoy'd every day, yet long for the riſing of it again. From this delight in the matter of Prayer it is, that the Saints have redoubl'd and repeated their Petitions, and often double the Amen at the end of Prayer, to manifeſt the great Affections to thoſe things they have askt. The Soul loves to think of thoſe things the Heart is ſet upon; and frequent Thoughts expreſs a Delight.

6. A Delight in thoſe Graces and Affections which are exerciſed in Prayer. A gracious Heart is moſt delighted with that Prayer wherein Grace hath been more ſtirring, and gracious Affections have been boiling over. The Soul deſires not only to ſpeak to God, but to make Melody to God; the Heart is the Inſtrument, but Graces are the Strings, and Prayer the touching them, and therefore he is more diſpleaſed with the flagging of his Graces than with miſſing an Anſwer. There may be a delight in Gifts, in a Man's own Gifts, in the Gifts of another, in the Pomp and Varniſh of Devotion; but a delight in exerciſing ſpiritual Graces is an Ingredient in this true Delight. The Phariſees are markt by Chriſt to make long Prayers, vaunting in an outward bravery of Words, as if they were playing the Courtiers with God, and complementing him: But the Publican had a ſhort Prayer, but more Grace, Lord be merciful to me a Sinner; There is Reliance and Humility; A gracious Heart labours to bring flaming Affections; and if he cannot bring flaming Grace, he will bring ſmoking Grace: he deſires the preparation of his Heart as well as the anſwer of his Prayer, Pſal. 10. 17.

2. Whence this Delight ſprings.

1. From the Spirit of God. Not a Spark of Fire upon our own Hearth, that is able to kindle this ſpiritual Delight; 'Tis the Holy Ghoſt that breaths ſuch a heavenly Heat into our Affections. The Spirit is the Fire that kindles the Soul, the Spring that moves the Watch, the Wind that drives the Ship. The ſwifteſt Ship with ſpread Sails will be but ſluggiſh in its Motion, unleſs the Wind fills its Sails; without this Spirit we are but in a weak and ſickly condition, our Breath but ſhort, a heavy and troubleſome Aſthma is upon us, Pſal. 138. 3. When I cry'd unto thee, thou didſt ſtrengthen me with ſtrength in my Soul. As Prayer is the work of the Spirit in the Heart, ſo doth Delight in Prayer owe it ſelf to the ſame Author. God will make them joyful in his Houſe of Prayer, Iſa. 56. 7.

2. From Grace. The Spirit kindles, but gives us the Oil of Grace to make the Lamp burn clear. There muſt not only be Wind to drive, but Sails to catch it; a Prayer without Grace is a Prayer without Wings. There muſt be Grace to begin it. A dead Man cannot rejoyce in his Land, Money, or Food, he cannot act, and therefore cannot be chearful in action: Chearfulneſs ſuppoſeth Life: dead Men cannot perform a Duty, (Pſal. 115. 17. The dead praiſe not the Lord) nor dead Souls a chearful Duty. There muſt not only be Grace infuſed, but Grace actuated. No Man in a Sleep or Swoon can rejoyce. There muſt not only be a living Principle, but a lively Operation. If the Sap lurk only in the Root, the Branches can bring forth no Fruit: Our beſt Prayers without the Sap of Grace diffuſing it ſelf, will be but as withered Branches. Grace actuated puts Heat into performances, without which they are but benumm'd and frozen *. Ruſty Grace, as a ruſty Key, will not unlock, will not enlarge the Heart. There muſt be Grace to maintain it. There is not only need of Fire to kindle the Lamp, but of Oil to preſerve the Flame: Natural Men may have their Affections kindled in a way of common working, but they will preſently faint and die, as the Flame of Cotton will dim and vaniſh if there be no Oil to nouriſh it. There is a temporary Joy in hearing the Word; and if in one Duty, why not in another? why not in Prayer? Mat. 13. 20. Like a Fire of Thorns that makes a great blaze, but a ſhort ſtay.

* Reynolds.

3. From a good Conſcience. A good Heart is a continual Feaſt, Prov. 15. 15. He that hath a good Conſcience muſt needs be chearful in his religious and civil Duties. Guilt will come trembling and with a ſad Countenance into the Preſence of God's Majeſty. A guilty Child cannot with chearfulneſs come into a diſpleaſed Father's Preſence. A Soul ſmoakt with Hell cannot with delight approach to Heaven. Guilty Souls in regard of the injury they have done to God, will be afraid to come; and in regard of the Soot of Sin wherewith they are defiled, and the blackneſs they have contracted, they will be aſham'd to come. They know that by their Sins they ſhould provoke his Anger, not allure his Love. A Soul under conſcience of Sin cannot look up to God, Pſal. 40. 12. Nor will God with favour look down upon it, Pſal. 59. 2. It muſt be a pure Heart that muſt ſee him with pleaſure, Mat. 5. 8. And pure Hands muſt be lifted up to him, 1 Tim. 2. 8. Jonah was aſleep after his Sin, and was out-ſtript in quickneſs to pray, even by Idolaters. The Mariners jogg him, but could not get him, that we read of, to call upon that God whom he had offended, Jon. 1. Where there is Corruption, the Sparks of Sin will kindle that Tinder, and weaken a ſpiritual Delight. A perfect Heart and a willing Mind are put together, 1 Chron. 29. 2. There cannot be willingneſs without ſincerity, nor ſincerity without willingneſs.

4. From a holy and frequent Familiarity with God. Where there is a great Familiarity there is a great Delight; delight in one anothers Company, and delight in one anothers Converſe; Strangeneſs contracts, and Familiarity dilates the Soul. There is more alacrity in going to a God with whom we are acquainted, than to a God to whom we are Strangers. This doth encourage the Soul to go to God; I go to a God whoſe Face I have ſeen, whoſe Goodneſs I have taſted, with whom I have often met in Prayer. Frequent Familiarity makes us more apprehenſive of the Excellency of another; an Excellency apprehended will be belov'd, and being belov'd, will be delighted in.

5. From hopes of ſpeeding. There is an expectative Delight which ariſeth from hopes of enjoying, Rom. 12. 12. Rejoycing in hope. There cannot be a pleaſant Motion where there is a Palſie of Doubts. How full of Delight muſt that Soul be, that can plead a Promiſe, and carry God's Hand and Seal to Heaven, and ſhew him his own Bond; when it can be pleaded not only as a Favour to engage his Mercy, but in ſome ſenſe a Debt to engage his Truth and Righteouſneſs! Chriſt in his Prayer, which was his Swan-like Song, John 17. pleads the Terms of the Covenant between his Father and himſelf; I have glorified thee on Earth, glorifie me with that Glory I had with thee before the World was. This is the Caſe of a delightful Approach, when we carry a Covenant of Grace with us for our ſelves, and a Promiſe of Security and Perpetuity for the Church. Upon this account we have more cauſe of a pleaſant Motion to God, than the ancient Believers had. Fear acted them under the Law, Love us under the Goſpel. He cannot but delight in Prayer that hath Arguments of God's own framing to plead with God, who cannot deny his own Arguments and Reaſonings. Little Comfort can be ſuckt from a perhaps. But when we come to ſeek Covenant-Mercies, God's Faithfulneſs to his Covenant puts the Mercy paſt a Perhaps. We come to a God ſitting upon a Throne of Grace, upon Mount Sion, not on Mount Sinai; to a God that deſires our Preſence, more than we deſire his Aſſiſtance.

Mercy

6. From a ſenſe of former Mercies and Acceptation. If Manna be rained down, it doth not only take off our Thoughts from Ægyptian Garlick, but quickens our Deſires for a ſecond Shower. A ſenſe of God's Majeſty will make us loſe our gariſhneſs; and a ſenſe of God's Love will make us loſe our dumpiſhneſs. We may as well come again with a merry Heart, when God accepts our Prayers, as go away and eat our Bread with Joy when God accepts our Works, Eccleſ. 9. 7. The Doves will readily fly to the Windows, where they have formerly found ſhelter; and the Beggar to the Door where he hath often receiv'd an Alms. Becauſe he hath inclined his Ear to hear me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live, Pſal. 116. 2. I have found Refuge with God before; I have found my Wants ſupplied, my Soul raiſed, my Temptations check'd, my Doubts anſwered, and my Prayers accepted, therefore I will repeat my Addreſſes with chearfulneſs.

I might add alſo other Cauſes; as a love to God, a heavenlineſs of Spirit, a conſideration of Chriſt's Interceſſion, a deep Humiliation. The more unpleaſant Sin is to our Reliſh, the more delightful will God be, and the more chearful our Souls in Addreſſes to him. The more unpleaſant Sin is to us, the more ſpiritual our Souls are; and the more ſpiritual our Souls, the more ſpiritual our Affections: The more ſtony, the more lumpiſh and unapt for Motion; the more contrite, the more agil. From a ſpiritual Taſte; Report of a thing may contribute ſome Pleaſure, but a Taſte greater.

3. Reaſons. Without chearful ſeeking we cannot have a gracious Anſwer.

1. God will not give an Anſwer to thoſe Prayers that diſhonour him. A flat and dumpiſh Temper is not for his Honour. The Heathens themſelves thought their Gods ſhould not be put off with a Sacrifice dragg'd to the Altar. We read of no Lead, that lumpiſh earthly Metal, imploy'd about the Tabernacle or Temple, but the purer and moſt gliſtering ſorts of Metals. God will have the moſt excellent Service, becauſe he is the moſt excellent Being. He will have the moſt delightful Service, becauſe he beſtows the moſt delightful and excellent Gifts. All Sacrifices were to be offered up with Fire, which is the quickeſt and moſt active Element. 'Tis a diſhonour to ſo great, ſo glorious a Majeſty, to put him off with ſuch low and dead-hearted Services. Thoſe Petitions cannot expect an Anſwer, which are offered in a manner injurious to the Perſon we addreſs to. 'Tis not for the Credit of our great Maſter, to have his Servants dejected in his Work: As though his Service were an uncomfortable thing; as though God were a Wilderneſs, and the World a Paradiſe.

2. Dull and lumpiſh Prayer doth not reach him, and therefore cannot expect an Anſwer. Such Deſires are as Arrows that ſink down at our Feet; there is no Force to carry them to Heaven: The Heart is an unbent Bow, that hath no Strength. When God will hear, he makes firſt a prepared Heart, Pſalm 10. 17. He firſt ſtrings the Inſtrument, and then receives the Sound. An enlarged Heart only runs, Pſalm 119. 32. A contracted Heart moves ſlowly, and often faints in the Journey.

3. Lumpiſhneſs ſpeaks an unwillingneſs that God ſhould hear us. It ſpeaks a kind of a Fear that God ſhould grant our Petitions. He that puts up a Petition to a Prince coldly and dully, gives him good reaſon to think that he doth not care for an Anſwer. That Husbandman hath no great mind to Harveſt, that is lazy in tilling his Ground, and ſowing his Seed. How can we think God ſhould delight to read over our Petitions, when we take ſo little delight in preſenting them? God gives not Mercy to an unwilling Perſon. The firſt thing God doth is to make his People willing. Dull Spirits ſeek God as if they did not care for finding him: Such Tempers either account not God real, or their Petitions unneceſſary.

4. Without Delight we are not fit to receive a Mercy. Delight in a Mercy wanted makes room for Deſire; and large Deſires make room for Mercy. If no delight in begging, there will be no delight in enjoying. If there be no chearfulneſs to quicken our Prayers when we need a Bleſſing, there will be little joy to quicken our Praiſe when we receive a Bleſſing. A weak ſickly Stomack is not fit to be ſeated at a plentiful Table. Where there is a dull asking Supply, there is none, or a very dull ſenſe of Wants. Now God will not ſend his Mercies but to a Soul that will welcome them. The deeper the ſenſe of our Wants, the higher the eſtimation of our Supplies. A chearful Soul is fit to receive the leaſt, and fit to receive the greateſt Mercy. He will more prize a little Mercy than a dull Petitioner ſhall prize a greater, becauſe he hath a ſenſe of his Wants. Had not Zacheus had a great Joy at the News of Chriſt's coming by his Door, he had not ſo readily entertained and welcomed him.

Uſe 1. Of Information.

1. There is a great Pleaſure in the ways of God, if rightly underſtood. Prayer, which is a Duty wherein we expreſs our Wants, is delightful. There is more ſweetneſs in a Chriſtian's asking than in a wicked Man's enjoying Bleſſings.

2. What Delight will there be in Heaven! If there be ſuch ſweetneſs in Deſire, what will there be in a full Fruition! There is Joy in ſeeking, what is there then in finding! Duty hath its Sweets, its Thouſands, but Glory its Ten thouſands. If the Pleaſure of the Seed-time be ſo great, what will the Pleaſure of the Harveſt be!

3. The miſerable Condition of thoſe who can delight in any thing but Prayer. 'Tis an aggravation of our Enmity to God, when we can ſin chearfully, and pray dully: When Duty is more loathſome than Iniquity.

Uſe 2. Of Examination. We pray, but how are our Hearts? If it be for what concerns our momentary Being, is not our running like the running of Ahimaaz? But when for ſpiritual things, do not our Hearts ſink within us, like Nabal's? Let us therefore follow our Hearts cloſe, ſuffer them not to give us the ſlip in our examination of them, reſolve not to take the firſt Anſwer, but ſearch to the bottom.

1. Whether we delight at all in Prayer?

1. How do we prize the Opportunities of Duty? There is an Opportunity of an Earthly, and an Opportunity of a Heavenly Gain; Conſider which our Hearts more readily cloſe with. Can we with much Pleaſure follow a vain World, and heartleſly welcome an Opportunity of Duty, delight more with Judas in Bags, than in Chriſt's Company? This is ſad. But are praying Opportunities our feſtival times? Do we go to the Houſe of God with the Voice of Joy and Praiſe?

2. Whether we ſtudy Excuſes to waive a preſent Duty, when Conſcience and Opportunity urge and invite us to it? Are our Souls more skilful in Delays than in Performances? Are there no Excuſes when Sin calls us, and ſtudy'd Put-offs when God invites us? Like the Sluggard, folding our Arms, yet a little while longer? Or do our Hearts riſe and beat quick againſt frivolous Excuſes that ſtep in to hinder us from Prayer?

3. How are our Hearts affected in Prayer? Are we more ready to pray our ſelves aſleep, than into a vigorous Frame? Do we enter into it with ſome Life, and find our Hearts quickly tire and jade us? Are we more awake when we are up, than we were all the time upon our Knees? Are our Hearts in Prayer like withered ſapleſs things, and very quick afterwards if any worldly Buſineſs invite us? Are we like Logs and Blocks in Prayer, and like a Roe upon the Mountains in earthly Concerns? Surely what our Pulſe beats quickeſt to, is the Object moſt delighted in.

4. What time is it we chooſe for Prayer? Is it not our drowzieſt lazieſt time, when our Nods are as many, or more than our Petitions; as though the dulleſt time, and the deadeſt frame were moſt ſuitable to a living God? Do we come with our Hearts full of the World to pray for Heaven? Or do we pick out the moſt lively Seaſons? Luther choſe thoſe Hours for Prayer and Meditation, wherein he found himſelf moſt lively for ſtudy.

5. Do we not often wiſh a Duty over? As thoſe in the Prophet that were glad when the Sabbath was over, that they might run to their buying and ſelling? Or, are we of Peter's Temper, and expreſs Peter's Language, 'Tis good to be here with Chriſt on the Mount?

6. Do we prepare our ſelves by delightful and enlivening Conſiderations? Do we think of the Precept of God, which ſhould ſpur us, and of the Promiſe of God, which ſhould allure us? Do we rub our Souls to heat them? Do we blow them to kindle them into a Flame? Do we ſend up Ejaculations for a quickening Spirit? If Thoughts of God be a Burden, Requeſts to him will not be a Pleaſure. If we have a coldneſs in our Thoughts of God and Duty, we can have no warmth in our Deſire, no delight in our Petitions.

7. Do we content our ſelves with dull Motions, or do we give Check to them? Can we, though our Hearts be never ſo lazy, ſtroke our ſelves at the end, and call our ſelves good and faithful Servants? Do we take our Souls to task afterwards, and examine why they are ſo lazy, why ſo heavy? Do we enquire into the cauſes of our deadneſs? A gracious Soul is more troubled at its dulneſs in Prayer, than a natural Conſcience is at the omiſſion of Prayer. He will complain of his ſluggiſhneſs, and mend his pace.

2. If we find we have a Delight, let us examine whether it be a Delight of the right kind.

1. Do we delight in it, becauſe of the Gifts we have our ſelves, or the Gifts of others we joyn with? A Man may rejoyce in hearing the Word, not becauſe of the holineſs and ſpirituality of the Matter, but becauſe of the goodneſs of the Dreſs, and the elegancy of the Expreſſion, Ezek. 33. 32. The Prophet was unto them as a lovely Song, as one that had a pleaſant Voice. He may upon the ſame ground delight in Prayer. But this is a Temper not kindled by the true Fire of the Sanctuary. Or, do we delight in it, not when our Tongues are moſt quick, but our Hearts moſt warm; not becauſe we have the beſt Words, but the moſt ſpiritualiz'd Affections? We may have Angels Gifts in Prayer, without an Angels Spirit.

2. Is there a Delight in all parts of a Duty? Not only in asking temporal Bleſſings, or ſome ſpiritual, as pardoning Mercy, but in begging for refining Grace? Are we earneſt only when we have boſom Quarrels, and Conſcience-Convulſions, but flag when we come to pray for ſanctifying Mercy? The Riſe of this is a diſplicency with the Trouble and Danger, not with the Sin and Cauſe.

3. Doth our Delight in Prayer, and ſpiritual things, out-do our Delight in outward things? The Pſalmiſt's Joy in God was more than his Delight in the Harveſt or Vintage, Pſal. 4. 4. Are we like Ravens that delight to hover in the Air ſometimes, but our greateſt delight is to feed upon Carrion? Though we have, and may have a ſenſible Delight in worldly things, yet is it as ſolid and rational as that we have in duty?

4. Is our Delight in Prayer an humble Delight? Is it a Rejoycing with Humbling? Pſal. 2. 11. Serve the Lord with gladneſs, and rejoyce before him with trembling. If our Service be right, it will be chearful; and if truly chearful, it will be humble.

5. Is our Delight in Prayer accompany'd with a Delight in Waiting? Do we, like Merchants, not only delight in the firſt lanching of a Ship, or the ſetting it out of the Haven with a full Fraught, but alſo in expectations of a rich Return of ſpiritual Mercies? Do we delight to pray, though God for the preſent doth not delight to give, and wait like David with an owning God's Wiſdom in delaying? Pſal. 30. 6. Or do we ſhoot them only as Arrows at random, and never look after them where they light, or where to find them?

6. Is our Delight in praiſing God when Mercy comes, anſwerable to the Delight in praying, when a wanted Mercy was begged? The ten Lepers deſired Mercy with an equal Chearfulneſs, in hopes of having their Leproſie cured; but his Delight that returned only was genuine. As he prayed with a loud Voice, ſo he praiſed with a loud Voice, Luke 17. 13, 15. And Chriſt tells him, his Faith had made him whole. As he had an Anſwer in a way of Grace, ſo he had before a gracious Delight in his asking; the others had a natural Delight, and ſo a Return in a way of common Providence.

3. Uſe. Of Exhortation. Let us delight in Prayer. God loves a chearful Giver in Alms, and a chearful Petitioner in Prayer. God would have his Children free with him. He takes ſpecial notice of a ſpiritual Frame, Jer. 30. 21. Who hath engaged his Heart? The more Delight we have in God, the more Delight he will have in us. He takes no pleaſure in a lumpiſh Service. 'Tis an uncomely ſight to ſee a joyful Sinner and a dumpiſh Petitioner. Why ſhould we not exerciſe as much Joy in holy Duties, as formerly we did in ſinful Practiſes? How delightfully will Men ſit at their Games, and ſpend their days in Gluttony and Luxury? And ſhall not a Chriſtian find much more Delight in applying himſelf to God? We ſhould delight that we can, and have Hearts to ask ſuch Gifts, that thouſands in the World never dream of begging. To be dull is a Diſcontentedneſs with our own Petitions. Delight in Prayer is the way to gain Aſſurance. To ſeek God, and treat him as our chiefeſt Good, endears the Soul to him. Delighting in Acceſſes to him, will enflame our Love. And there is no greater ſign of an Intereſt in him, than a prevalent Eſtimation of him. God caſts off none that affectionately claſp about his Throne.

will

To this purpoſe,

1. Pray for quickening Grace. How often do we find David upon his Knees for it? God only gives this Grace, and God only ſtirs this Grace.

2. Meditate on the Promiſes you intend to plead. Unbelief is the great Root of all Dumpiſhneſs. It was by the belief of the Word we had Life at firſt, and by an exerciſe of that Belief we gain livelineſs. What maintains our Love will maintain our Delight; the amiableneſs of God, and the excellency of the Promiſes, are the Incentives and Fuel both of the one and of the other. Think that they are eternal things you are to pray for, and that you have as much Invitation to beg them, and as good a Promiſe to attain them as David, Paul, or any other ever had. How would this awaken our drowſie Souls, and elevate our heavy Hearts, and open the lazy Eye-lids to look up! And whatever Meditation we find begin to kindle our Souls, let us follow it on, that the Spark may not go out.

3. Chuſe the time when your Hearts are moſt revived. Obſerve when God ſends an Invitation, and hoiſt up the Sails when the Wind begins to blow. There is no Chriſtian but hath one time or another a greater activeneſs of Spirit. Chuſe none of thoſe Seaſons which may quench the Heat, and dull the ſpritelineſs of your Affections. Reſolve before-hand this, To delight your ſelves in the Lord, and thereby you ſhall gain the deſire of your Hearts.

A

OF Mourning for other Mens Sins.

Ezekiel 9. 4.

And the Lord ſaid unto him, Go thorow the midſt of the City, thorow the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a Mark upon the Foreheads of the Men that ſigh, and that cry for all the Abominations that be done in the midſt thereof.

WHEN God in the former Chapter had charged the Jews with their Idolatry, and the multiplicity of Abominations committed in his Temple; and v. 18. had paſt a Reſolve that he would not ſpare them, but deal in Fury with them, though they ſhould ſolicit him with the ſtrongeſt and moſt importunate Supplications; In this Chapter he calls and commiſſions the Executioners of his juſt Decree. Ver. 1. He cryed alſo in mine Ears with a loud Voice, ſaying, Cauſe them that have charge over the City to draw near, even every Man with his deſtroying Weapon in his Hand. And declares whom, and in what manner he would puniſh, and whom he would pardon. The Executioners of God's Vengeance are the Chaldeans, deſcribed by the ſituation of them from Judea, and the direct Road from that Country to Jeruſalem, v. 2. Six Men came from the way of the higher Gate, which lies towards the North. Babylon lay North-Eaſt from Jeruſalem; and this Gate was the Way of Entrance for Travellers from thoſe Parts; it led alſo into the Court of the Prieſts, which ſhews from whence the Judgment ſhould come, and upon whom it ſhould light.

Six Men] A certain number. Whether the Holy Ghoſt alludes to a particular number of Nations, which the Chaldean Army might be compoſed of under their Prince, who reign'd over ſeveral Countries; or reſpects the other chief Captains or Marſhals of his Army which are nam'd, Jer. 39. 3. or ſpeaks with reference to the other places wherein the City was aſſaulted by that Army, as ſome think, is uncertain.

And every Man a Slaughter-Weapon in his Hand.] A Hammer of Deſtruction, an Inſtrument of Death; the Word ſeems to ſignifie a Weapon much like a Pole-Ax.

And one of them clothed with Linnen, with a Writers Ink-horn by his ſide.] Chriſt, ſay the Ancients, (and ſo they underſtood it before, and in Hierom's time) who appears here in his Prieſtly Habit; a Linnen Garment being the Veſtment of the Prieſts, Levit. 16. 4. White is an Emblem of Peace. Chriſt ſeals his People with his Spirit, the Spirit of Peace. Calvin rejects not this Interpretation, but rather underſtands it of an Angel whom God commiſſioned to ſecure his People in this deſtroying Judgment. And indeed Angels have often appear'd in the form of Men, and clothed with Linnen, as to Daniel, Dan. 10. 5. Dan. 12. 6, 7. Chriſt's Royal Power is founded upon his Prieſtly Office, which is the ground of all the ſpiritual and temporal Salvation Believers have from God.

Ink-horn.] The Word is ſo tranſlated. Though the Word, ſay ſome, ſignifies a Table, ſuch as they then uſed to write upon with a Pen of Iron. Or rather it ſignifies a Caſe to put thoſe Pens in wherewith they wrote.

And they went and ſtood beſides the Brazen Altar.] 'Tis uncertain whether this reſpects the original Cauſe of their Puniſhment, viz. Their offering Sacrifices to their Idols upon that Altar which was conſecrated to the Service of God: Or elſe reſpects the Sacrifices of Vengeance; thoſe were inſtrumentally to offer to God's Juſtice. The Judicial Puniſhment of God's Enemies is called a Sacrifice in Scripture, Iſa. 34. 6. A Sacrifice in Bozrah, Jer. 46. 10. God's Day of Vengeance is called God's Sacrifice in the North Country.

Obſerve, 1. With what a ſmall number if God pleaſe, can he deſtroy a City or Nation? But Six mentioned. Almightineſs needs not great Numbers to effect his Will; no, not a Man, ſince he can do it by his immediate Hand, and command Judgment in a trice.

2. How quick are God's Creatures to obey his Call for the Puniſhment of a rebellious People? He calls thoſe Six Men, and they preſently appear ready to execute God's Pleaſure.

3. God doth not bring Judgments on a People, till their Wickedneſs hath overgrown the Goodneſs of his own Children. Six to deſtroy, But One to preſerve. A Sixfold work of Judgment to one of Preſervation, intimating that there were Six bad to One good in the City.

4. The Security of God's People in this World, as well as that to come, depends upon the Prieſtly Office of Chriſt.

V. 3. And the Glory of the God of Iſrael was gone up from the Cherub whereupon he was, to the Threſhold of the Houſe.] The Glory of God, which was in the Propitiatory above the Cherubims, went from one Cherub to another, till it came to the Threſhold; as Birds that are leaving their Neſts leap from one Branch to another till they fly quite away.

Obſerve, 1. God is not fixed to any one Place. He hath his Temple among his People, diſcovers himſelf in his Ordinances, but upon Provocations departs. The Glory of God, and his Ordinances, are not entayl'd upon any Nation longer than they walk worthy of them,

2. The Glory of God's Ordinances is obſcured among a People, before Judgments come upon them. The Glory of God went up from the Cherub. I will take away the Hedge of my Vineyard, and it ſhall be eaten up, and break down the Wall thereof, and it ſhall be trodden down, Iſa. 5. 5. The Ordinances of God are underſtood by ſome Interpreters to be the Hedge and Wall of a People; when God takes away the Hedge, the Breach is made wide for every wild Beaſt to enter, and tread it down. The Preſence of God in his Ordinances, the Preſence of God in his Providences is the Hedge of a People. The Temple is forſaken by God, and then polluted, in Judgment, by Men, v. 7. God then comes to the Man clothed with Linnen, that had the Writers Inkhorn by his Side, and ſaid unto him, Go thorow the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a Mark upon the Foreheads of the Men that ſigh, and that cry for all the Abominations that be done in the midſt thereof, v. 4. And v. 5. he commands the Executioners of his Wrath to go after him, and ſmite without any pity both ſmall and great, beginning at his Sanctuary. תו. Interpreters trouble themſelves much what this Mark ſhould be, and tells us from Origen, that a believing Jew told him the ancient Samaritan Letter called Tau was written like a Croſs. But that is a Fancy, the ancient Samaritan Letter being the ſame with the Phœnician, was not writ in that form. * Some ſay it was the Law, becauſe the Hebrew Word תורה ſignifying the Law, begins with that Letter, to ſhew that ſuch were to be marked that were devoted to the Obſervance of the Law. Markt they were, ſaith Calvin, with a Tau, becauſe that being the laſt Letter in the Alphabet, ſhews that the People of God are of the loweſt account among Men, and the Off-ſcouring of the World, ת being the firſt Letter of תחיה vives, noted the Preſervation of them. On the Foreheads *.] * Alluding to the Cuſtom of the Eaſtern Countries, to mark their Servants on the Foreheads with the Names of their Maſters. * Not on their viſible Foreheads, but on their inviſible Conſciences; the Conſcience is the Forehead of the Soul; as eminent in the Heart as a Forehead in the Body.

* Vossius de arte Grammat. l. 1. c.

* Grotius.

* Oecolampad.

The Blood of Chriſt upon the Conſcience is the beſt Mark of Diſtinction, as the Blood of the Paſchal Lamb upon the Poſts was the Mark whereby the Iſraelites were diſcerned from the Ægyptians, and the Edge of the Angel's deſtroying Sword diverted from them. It was a Mark of a ſpecial Providence of God. The deſtroying Judgments were to follow the Sealing Angel, and not touch thoſe that were mark'd by him on the Forehead.

Obſerve 1. All Judgments have their Commiſſions from God, whom to touch, whom to overthrow. God doth not ſtrike at random. The Man in the Linnen Garment was to bridle the Chaldeans, and direct their Swords to the right Objects. God overpowers the natural Inclinations of all his Creatures, whom he appoints Executioners. God hath a Hook in the Noſtrils of Leviathan; nothing can be done without the leave of Providence; Man forms the Weapons, God gives the Edge, and directs the Stroak.

2. In the higheſt Fury and Vengeance, God hath Reſerves of Mercy for his own People. Angels are appointed to be Preſervers of his Children in the midſt of the deſtroying of a People. Inviſible Angels are joyned with viſible Enemies, to conduct and govern their Motions according to the Command of their great General. God's Judgments are diſpenſed with greater Kindneſs to his People, than deſires to take Vengeance upon his Enemies. He hath a Heart of Mercy as well as a Hand of Juſtice.

3. God is more careful of his People than revengeful againſt his Enemies. He firſt orders the ſealing of the Mourners, before he orders the deſtruction of the Rebels; he will firſt honour his Mercy in the protection of the one, before he will glorifie his Juſtice in the deſtruction of the other. The Angel hath orders to ſecure Lot before Sodom was fir'd. The Executioners of his Wrath were to march after the ſecuring Angel, not before him, nor equal with him: And were only to cut off thoſe whom the Angel had paſſed by.

4. If you take this Mark for a Mark on the Conſcience, then obſerve, That Serenity of Conſcience is a Gift of God to his People in the time of ſevere Judgments. As when Death is near, the Conſcience of a good Man is moſt ſerene, and ſings ſweetly in his Breaſt the Notes of his own Integrity. In Judgments as well as in Death, God ſets Conſcience upon its pleaſant Notes. But this Mark is not properly meant here; the Conſcience is a Mark to our ſelves, but this is a Mark to the Executioners.

5. The places where God hath manifeſted the Glory of his Ordinances, are the Subjects of his greateſt Judgments upon their Provocations. Go through the City, through Jeruſalem: That Jeruſalem wherein I have manifeſted my Glory, which I have intruſted with my Oracles, which I have protected in the midſt of Enemies, like a Spark in the midſt of many Waters. Go thorow that City into the midſt of it, and let not your Eye ſpare.

6. The

6. The greatest Fury of God in a time of Judgment often lights upon the Sanctuary, v. 6. Begin at the Sanctuary, defile the House. Not a Man of them escaped as Oecolampad notes. v. 7. I was left: He saw not in the Vision what was done in the City, but he was left alone in the Temple. The whole Sanhedrim, the 70 Ancients had revolted to Idolatry, Ezek. 8. 11. and the Stroke first lights upon them, v. 6. Then they began at the Ancient Men which were before the House.

In the v. observe,

1. God's Care in the preserving his People. He commands the Angel to go thorow the midst of the City, and set a Mark, a visible Mark upon their Foreheads.

2. The Qualification of the Persons so preserved. He doth not say, All that have not committed Idolatry, but such as sigh; which signifies,

1. The intenseness of their Grief. [Sigh and cry, נאק, notes an intense groaning and sorrow.

2. The extensiveness of the Object. [All the Abominations.

Doctrine. Lamenting the Sins of the Times and Places wherein we live, is a Duty incumbent on us, acceptable to God, and a great means of Preservation under Publick Judgments.

There are Three Branches.

1. 'Tis a Duty.

2. A Duty acceptable to God. God has his Eye particularly upon them that practice it.

3. 'Tis a means of Preservation under Publick Judgments.

1. 'Tis a Duty. If we are by the Præscript of God to bewail in Confession the Sins of our Forefathers, committed before our being in the World, certainly much more are we to lament the Sins of the Age wherein we live, as well as our own, Levit. 26. 40. If they shall confess their Iniquity, and the Iniquity of their Fathers. If then their uncircumcised Hearts be humbled, then will I remember my Covenant. Posterity are part of the same Body with their Ancestors, and every Member in a Nation is part of the Body of a Nation; every Drop in the Sea is a part of the Ocean. God made a standing Law for an annual Fast, wherein they should afflict their Souls, the tenth day of the seventh month, answering to our September, and backed it with a severe Penalty. He whose Soul was not afflicted in that day, should be cut off from among his People; which the Jews understand of cutting off by the Hand of the Lord, Levit. 23. 27, 29. The particular Sin for which they were thus annually to afflict their Souls, was that National Sin of the Golden Calf, in the judgment of the Jewish Doctors.

It was also the practice of Holy Men in their private Retirements; as Daniel, Dan. 9. 5, 6. He bewails the Sins of his Ancestors; and Nehemiah, Neh. 1. 6. Much more it is our Duty to bewail a present Guilt. The Churches Eyes are compared to the Fish-pools of Heshbon, Cant. 7. 4. in her weeping for her own, and others Sins. To what purpose has God given us Passions, but to honour him withal? And our Affections of Grief and Anger cannot be better employ'd than for the Interest, nor better bestow'd than for the Service of him, who implanted those Passions in us. Our Natural Motions should be ordered for the God of Nature, and Spiritual ordered for the God of Grace.

1. This was the Practice of Believers in all Ages. Before the Deluge Seth called the Name of his Son, which was born at the time of the profaning the Name of God in worship, Enosh, which signifies sorrowful, or miserable; that he might in the sight of his Son have a constant Monitor to excite him to an holy Grief for the Profaneness and Idolatry that entred into the Worship of God, Gen. 4. 26. He called his Name Enos, then began Men to call upon the Name of the Lord, חוחל, profane it by calling upon it. Brought on Lives of the Fathers, p. 7. Grot. in loc.

The rational and most precious part of Lot was vexed with the unlawful Deeds of the Generation of Sodom, among whom he lived, 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. he had a Horrour and Torment in his righteous Soul at the execrable Villanies he saw committed by his Neighbours, καταπονούμενον afflicted under it, as under a grievous Burden. It was a rack to him, as the other Word, v. 8. ἐβασάνιζεν signifies. The meekest Man upon Earth, with Grief and Indignation breaks the Tables of the Law, when he saw the Holiness of it broken by the Israelites, and expresseth more his Regret for that, than his Honour for the material Stones, wherein God had with his own Finger engraven the Orders of his Will. He is more desirous to destroy the Idol, than preserve the Tables: Such an Indignation against their Sin could not well be without Grief for it. David, a Man of the greatest Goodness upon Record, had a Deluge of Tears, because they kept not God's Law, Psal. 119. 136. Rivers of Waters run down mine Eyes, because they keep not thy Law. Besides, his Grief, which was not a small one, Horrour seiz'd him upon the same account, Psal. 119. 53. like a Storm that tost him to and fro. How doth poor Isaiah bewail himself, and the People among whom he liv'd, as Men of polluted Lips? Isa. 6. 5. Perhaps such as could hardly speak a Word without an Oath, or by hypocritical Lip-service, mocked God in the very Temple.

Jeremy is upon the same practice, Jer. 13. 17. when his Soul should weep in secret for the Pride of the People, and, as if he were not satisfy'd with a few Tears, wisheth his Head were a full springing Fountain to weep for the slain of the Daughter of his People; for the Sin the Cause, as well as the Calamity the Effect, Jer. 9. 1. He wishes his Head to be filled with the Vapours from his Heart, and become a Fountain.

What a transport of Sorrow had Ezra when he heard of the Peoples Sins, and the mingling the holy Seed with that of Idolaters! A Horrour run thorow his whole Soul; his Astonishment is twice repeated, Ezra 9. 3, 4. Every Faculty was alarm'd at the Sin of the People.

'Tis probable John Baptist used himself to those Severities which are mentioned, Mat. 3. 4. because of the sinfulness of that Generation among whom he lived.

Paul discovers it to be a Duty, when he reproves the Corinthians for being puft up, instead of mourning for that Fornication which had been committed by one of their Profession, 1 Cor. 5. 2. And when he writes of some that made the glorious Gospel subservient to their own Bellies, he mixes his Tears with his Ink, Phil. 3. 18, 19. I tell you weeping, they are Enemies to the Cross of Christ. The Primitive Christians did much bewail the Lapses of their Fellows. Celerinus, among the Epistles of Cyprian, acquaints Lucian of his great Grief for the Apostacy of a Woman, through fear of Persecution, which afflicted him so, that in the time of Easter, the time of their Joy in that Age, he wept Night and Day, and was resolved solved that no Delight should enter into his Heart, till through the Mercy of Christ she should be recovered to the Church. And we find the Witnesses clothed in Sackcloth, when they prophesied in a sinful time, to shew their Grief for the publick Abominations, Rev. 11. 3. The Kingdom of Satan can be no pleasure to a Christian, and must therefore be a torment.

2. It was our Saviour's Practice. As he had the highest Love to God, so he must needs have the greatest Grief for his Dishonour. He sighed in his Spirit for the Incredulity of that Generation, when they asked a Sign, after so many had been presented to their Eyes, Mark 8. 12. He sighed deeply in his Spirit. And the hardness of their Hearts at another time raised his Grief, as well as his Indignation, Mark 3. 5. He was sensible of the least Dishonour of his Father, Psalm 69. 9. The Reproaches of them that reproached thee, fell upon me. I took them to Heart. Christ pleased not himself when his Father was injured; as the Apostle descants upon it, when he applies it to Christ, Rom. 15. 3. His Soul was more pierced with the Wrongs done to God, than the Reproaches which were directed against his own Person. His Grief was unexpressibly greater than can be in any Creature, because of the unimitable ardency of his Love to God, the nearness of his Relation to him, and the unspotted Purity of his Soul. Christ had a double Relation; to Man, to God. His Compassion to Men afflicted him with Groans and Tears at their bodily Distempers; his Affection to his Father would make him grieve as much to see him dishonour'd, as his Love to Man made him groan to see Man afflicted. This Grief for Sin was one part of Christ's Sacrifice and Suffering; for he came to make a full satisfaction to the Justice of God by enduring his Wrath, to the Holiness of God by offering up an infinite Sorrow for Sin, which it was impossible for a Creature to do. We cannot suppose that Christ should only accept the Punishment, but not bewail the Offence which was the cause of it. A Sacrifice for the Sins of others, without remorse for those Sins, had not been acceptable; it had not been agreeable to the Purity of his Humane Nature. He wept at Jerusalem's Obstinacy, as well as for her Misery, and that in the time of his Triumph. The loud Hosanna's could not silence his Grief, and stop the Expressions of it, Luke 19. 41. It was like a Shower when the Sun shined. If Christ as our Head was filled with inward Sorrow for Men's displeasing the Holiness of God, 'tis surely our Duty as his Members, to imitate the Afflictions of the Head. He is unworthy of the Name of Christ, who is not afflicted as Christ was; nor can call Christ his Master, who doth not imitate his Graces, as well as pretend to believe his Doctrine; he cannot see that God who hath distinguisht him from the World, dishonoured, his Precepts contemned, but he must have his Soul overcast with a gloomy Cloud. 'Tis our glory to value the things he esteem'd, to despise the things he contemn'd, to rejoyce in that wherein he was delighted, and to grieve for that which was the Matter of his Sorrow and Indignation. Thus was he afflicted, though he had a Joy in the Assurance of his Father's Favour, and the Assistance of his Father's Power. The highest Assurance of God's Love in particular to us, ought not to hinder the Impressions of Grief for the Dishonour of his Name. Did Christ ever look upon the swinish World, without melting into Pity? Did he bleed for the Sins of the World, and shall not we mourn for them?

3. Angels, as far as they are capable, have their Grief for the Sins of Men. The Jewish Doctors often bring in the Angels weeping for Sin*. And one tells us, that in an ancient Mahumetan Book, he finds an Answer of God to Moses; Even about this Throne of mine, there stand those, and they are many, that shed Tears for the Sins of Men. But the Scripture tells us, they rejoyce at the Repentance of Men, Luke 15. 10. Their Lord is glorify'd by a Return of a Subject; the Subject advantag'd by casting down his Arms at the Feet of his Lord. They do therefore, as far as they are capable, mourn for the Revolts of Men, suo modo, as Beza upon the place. They can scarce rejoyce at Mens Repentance without having a contrary Affection for Mens Profaneness: If they are glad at Mens Return, because God is thereby glorify'd, it cannot be conceiv'd but they mourn for, and are angry with their Sins, because God is thereby slighted. Unconcernedness at the Dishonour of God cannot consist with their shining Knowledge, and burning Love. They cannot behold a God so Holy, so Glorious, so worthy to be beloved, without having some Regret for the Neglects and Abuses of him by the Sons of Men. How can they be Instruments of God's Justice, if they are without Anger against the Deservers of it?

* Grotius Luc. 15. 7. Ob peccatum Hebræi Angelos flentes induunt.

II. 'Tis an acceptable Duty to God. Since it is an imitating the Copy of our Saviour, it is acceptable to God; nothing can please him more than to see his Creatures tread in the Steps of his Son.

1. 'Tis a fulfilling the whole Law, which consists of Love to God, and Love to our Neighbours: 'Tis set down as a Character of Charity both as it respects God and Man, Not to rejoyce in Iniquity, 1 Cor. 13. 5. i. e. to be mightily troubled at it.

1. 'Tis a high Testimony of Love to God. The nature of true Love is to wish all Good to them we love, to rejoyce when any Good we wish doth arrive unto them, to mourn when any Evil afflicts them, and that with a respect to the belov'd Object. Τὸ φιλεῖν, τὸ βούλεσθαι ἅπερ ἃ αὐτῷ ἀγαθὰ, ἐκεῖνα ἕνεκα, ἀλλὰ μὴ αὐτῷ συναλγεῖν τοῖς λυπουμένοις *. Where there is this Love, there is a Rejoycing at one another's Happiness, a grieving at one another's Misfortunes. If it be a part of Love to rejoyce at that whereby God is glorify'd, 'tis no less a part of Love to mourn for that whereby God is vilify'd. So strait is the Union of Affection between God and a righteous Soul, that their Blessings and Injuries, Joys and Sorrows are twisted together. The increase of God's Glory is the greatest Good that can happen to a Soul enamoured of him; his Dishonour then is the greatest Misery. A gracious Soul is like John Baptist, content to decrease, that Christ might encrease, in the esteem of Men. He is like Jonathan, that would rather have the Crown upon David's Head than his own, as the Words intimate, 1 Sam. 23. 17. Thou shalt be King over Israel, I shall be next unto thee: And grieved more for his Father's Displeasure against David than against himself. So doth a Christian grieve more for the Wrongs of God, than for those in his own Liberty, Estate, or Life.

* Aristot. Rhetor. l. 1. c. 4.

Joshua was more careful of the Name of God, than of the Safety of the People singly consider'd, Josh. 7. 9. What wilt thou do unto thy great Name? The Glory of God is not dear to that Man, that can without any Regret look upon his bespatter'd Name. What Affection hath he to his Friend, who can see him torn in pieces by Dogs, and stand ſtand unconcern'd at his Calamity? God indeed is uncapable of ſuffering; but what rending is to a Creature, that is Sin to the Divine Majeſty. Can that Man be ſaid to love God who hath no Reflection when he ſees others tumbling God from his Throne, and ſetting up the Devil in his ſtead? Who can hear the tremendous Name of God belcht out by polluted Lips upon every vile Occaſion, and made the ſport of Stage and Stews, without any inward Reſentment?

He only eſteems God as his King, who cannot ſee his Laws broken without Remorſe. How loyally did Moſes his Affection to God work, when he heard the Name of God blaſphemed, and ſaw a Calf uſurp the Adoration due to the God of Heaven? And David felt the Stroke of that Sword in his own Bowels, which was directed againſt the Heart of God, Pſal. 139. 20, 21, 22. The dearer God's Name is to any, the more affected they are that God and Chriſt are loved and honoured leſs than they deſire they ſhould be.

'Tis hard ſometimes to diſcern this Love to God, when God's Intereſt and ours are joyned, when we would mask our Diſpleaſure againſt ſome Mens Offences, with a care of God's Honour, which is nothing but a hatred of the Perſon ſinning, or Revenge againſt him for ſome conceiv'd Injury to us. The Apoſtles calling for Fire from Heaven upon the Samaritans when they refuſed Chriſt, Luke 9. 53, 54, 55. might ſeem to be a generous Concern for their Maſter's Honour, but Chriſt knew it proceeded much from that natural Enmity which the Jews bore to the Samaritans. The beſt way to judge is, when the Intereſt is purely Gods, and hath no Fuel of our own Diſcontents to boil up, either Grief or Anger. Such an Affection cannot but be highly acceptable to God, who is affected with the Love of the Creature, and honours them that honour him, as well as deſpiſes thoſe that lightly concern themſelves for him.

2. Love to our Neighbours. Nothing can evidence our Love to Man more, than a ſorrowful Reflection upon that Wickedneſs which is the Ruine of his Soul, the Diſturbance of Humane Society, and unlocks the Treaſures of God's Judgments to fall upon Mankind. Sin is a Reproach to a People, Prov. 14. 34. 'Tis always an Act of Charity to mourn for the Reproaches and Ruine of a People. 'Tis a groſs Enmity to others, to ſee them ſtab themſelves to the Heart, jeſt with Eternal Flames, wiſh their Damnation at every Word, run merrily to the bottomleſs Gulf, and all this without beſtowing a Sigh upon them, and pitying their Madneſs; the greater ſhould be our Grief, by how much the further they are from any for their own Deſtruction. If Cain diſcover'd both his Enmity to God, and alſo to his Brother, in grieving that his Brother's Works were ſo good, Abel muſt needs in the practice of the contrary Duty, manifeſt his Love to Cain in grieving that his Works were ſo bad. Our Saviour's Tears for the Jews diſcover'd no leſs a Concern for their Miſery than for God's Diſhonour. Anger for Sin may have ſomething of Revenge in it: Grief for Sin diſcovers an Affection both to God and the Sinner. A Duty which reſpects at once the Subſtance of both the Tables, cannot but be pleaſing to God.

2. 'Tis an imitating Return for God's Affection. How doth God reſent the Injuries done to his People as much as thoſe done to himſelf? Thoſe Sins that immediately ſtrike at his Glory are not accompany'd with ſuch quick Judgments as thoſe that grate upon his Servants. Sharp Perſecutions that tear the People of God in pieces, have fuller Vials of Judgments here, than Vollies of other Sins which rend the Name of God. When Cain affronted God by his Sacrifice, God comes not to a Reckoning with him, till he had added the Murther of his Brother to his former Crimes againſt his Maker. A ſweeter and more thankful Return, and a more affectionate Imitation of God there cannot be, than to reſent the Injuries done to God more than thoſe done to our ſelves. The pinching of his People doth moſt pierce his Heart; a Stab to his Honour, in gratitude, ſhould moſt pierce theirs. The Four Kings that came againſt Sodom, Gen. 14. 9, &c. ſped well enough in their Invaſion, gained the Victory, and had been in a fair way to have enjoy'd the Spoil, had they not laid their hands upon Lot, which was the occaſion of their diſgorging their Prey. As God ingaged himſelf in the Recovery of Lot, ſo Lot concern'd himſelf in the Honour of God; God's Anger is ſtirr'd at the Captivity of Lot, and Lot's Vexation is awaken'd at the Injuries againſt God. What troubles his Children raiſes ſenſible Compaſſion in him to the Sufferer, and Revenge upon the Perſecutor: Whatſoever doth blaſpheme the Name of God, doth at the ſame time rack a ſincere Heart. A Perſecutor cannot injure a Believer, but Chriſt records it as a Wrong done to Himſelf; and Chriſt cannot be diſhonour'd by Men, but a Righteous Soul doubles his Grief. Here is a mutual Return of Affection and Eſtimation, which is highly pleaſing.

3. This Temper juſtifies God's Law and his Juſtice *. When we diſlike and diſapprove of others Sins as well as our own, we acknowledge the Glory of the Law, that it is juſt, holy, and good, and ſet our Seal of Approbation to it. It juſtifies the holineſs of the Law in prohibiting Sin, the righteouſneſs of the Law in condemning Sin. It owns the Soveraignty of God in commanding, and the Juſtice of God in puniſhing. The Law requires two things; Obedience to it, and Suffering for the Tranſgreſſion of it. This Frame of Heart approves of the Obedience the Law requires of Men as rational Creatures, and juſtifies the Sufferings the Law inflicts upon Men as impenitent Sinners. Unleſs we mourn for the Sins of others, and thereby ſhew our Diſtaſt, we cannot give God the Glory of his Judgments which he ſends upon a People. This Diſowning of Sin is very acceptable to God, becauſe by it Men honour that Law for whoſe Violations they are ſo troubled, and own God's right of impoſing a Law upon his Creatures, and the Creatures vileneſs in diſgracing that Law.

* David's Grief being for Man's forſaking the Law, teſtify'd his choice valuation of it.

4. 'Tis a ſign of ſuch a Temper God hath evidenc'd himſelf in Scripture much affected with. 'Tis a ſign of a Heart of Fleſh, the nobleſt Work of God in the Creature. A ſign of a contrite Heart, the beſt Sacrifice that can ſmoke upon his Altar next to that of his Son. This he will not deſpiſe, becauſe it is a Beam of Glory dropped down from him, and aſcending in a ſweet ſavour to him, Pſal. 51. 17. Without this, we cannot have a ſufficient Evidence that we are truly broken-hearted. We may mourn for our own Sins for ſecret By-ends, becauſe they are againſt our worldly Intereſts, and have Reproaches treading upon the Heels of them; we may mourn for the Sins of our Friends, out of a natural Compaſſion to them, and as they are the Prognoſticks of ſome approaching Miſery to them; but in ſorrowing for the Sins of the World, we have not

ſo

ſo many, and ſo affecting Obligations to divert us from a ſound aim in our Sorrow. To be affected with the Diſhonour of God by the Sins of others, is a diſtinguiſhing Character of a ſpiritual Conſtitution from a natural Tenderneſs. 'Tis both our Duty, and God's Pleaſure. No Grief is ſweeter to God, nor more becoming us.

III. 'Tis a means of preſervation from Publick Judgments. Noah did not preach Righteouſneſs without a ſenſible Reflection on that Unrighteouſneſs he preached againſt; and he of all the World had the ſecurity of an Ark for him and his Family, when all the reſt ſtruggled for Life, and ſunk in the Waters. No meer Man ever wore more Black for the Funeral of God's Honour, than David, nor was any bleſſed with more gracious Deliverances. The more Zeal we have for God, (which is an Affection made up of Grief and Anger) the more protection we have from him *. The more Courage we have for God, the more we may expect both his Conduct and Security. If there be any hope in a time of actual or threatned Judgments, 'tis by laying our Mouths in the Duſt, Lam. 3. 29. If there be any ground of Hope, it will ſhine forth when we are in ſuch a Poſture. There might be others in Jeruſalem who had not complied with the Idolatry of that Age; but none exempted from the Stroke of the Six Deſtroyers, but thoſe whoſe Mouths lay in the Duſt, and whoſe Cries againſt the common Sin aſcended to Heaven; only the Mourners among the good Men are marked by the Angel for Indemnity from the publick Puniſhment.

* The Steps of a Man [good Man, our Tranſlation renders it. But the Word is, גבר a valiant Man] are ordered by the Lord, and he delights in his way, Pſ. 37. 23.

1. Sincerity always eſcapes beſt in common Judgments; and this Temper of Mourning for Publick Sins, is the greateſt Note of it. This is the greateſt Note of Sincerity. We read of an Ahab who put on Sackcloth for his own Sin, and humbled himſelf before the Lord; of a Judas ſorrowing that he betray'd his Maſter: Self-intereſt might broach their Tears, and force out their Sorrow; but never an Ahab, or Judas, or any other ungodly Perſon in Scripture, lamented the Sins of others. Nay, they were all eminent for Holineſs, that were noted for this frame, whom we have mention'd before. Moſes, a Non-ſuch for ſpeaking with God Face to Face. David, who only had that honourable Title of a Man after God's own Heart. Iſay, who had the fulleſt Proſpect of Evangelical Glory, of all the Prophets. Ezra, a Reſtorer of his Country. Daniel, a Man greatly beloved. Chriſt, the Redeemer of the World; and Paul, the only Apoſtle wrapt up in the third Heaven, he was alſo humbled for the Sins of the Corinthians, 2 Corinth. 12. 21. Ezra hath a mighty Character, Ezra 7. 10. He prepared his Heart to ſeek the Law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Iſrael Statutes and Judgments. And he both mourned for, and prayed againſt the common Sin. Lot is not recorded for this without a glorious Epithete: The Spirit of God over-looks thoſe Sins of his mentioned in Scripture, and ſpeaks not of him by his ſingle Name, but juſt Lot, his righteous Soul, 2 Pet. 2. 7, 8. A ſincere Righteouſneſs glitter'd in his Vexation for the wronged Intereſt of God. What a Mark of Honour doth the Holy Ghoſt ſet upon this Temper! 'Tis not drunken Lot, or inceſtuous Lot, with which Sins he is taxed in Scripture. This publickly-religious Spirit covered thoſe temporary Spots in his Scutcheon. When all other Signs of Righteouſneſs may have their Exceptions, this Temper is the utmoſt Term, which we cannot go beyond in our Self-Examination. The utmoſt proſpect David had of his Sincerity, when he was upon a diligent Enquiry after it, was his Anger and Grief for the Sin of others; when he had reached ſo far, he was at a ſtand, and knew not what more to add, Pſal. 139. 21, 22, 23, 24. Am I not grieved with thoſe that riſe up againſt thee? I hate them with perfect hatred; I count them mine Enemies. Search me, O God, and know my Heart; try me, and know my Thoughts, and ſee if there be any wicked way in me. If there be any thing that better can evidence my Sincerity, than this, Lord acquaint me with it; know my Heart; i. e. make me to know it. He whoſe Sorrow is only for Matter confin'd within his own Breaſt, or Streams of it in his Life, has reaſon many times to queſtion the truth of it. But when a Man cannot behold Sin as Sin in another, without ſenſible Regret, 'tis a ſign he hath ſavingly felt the bitterneſs of it in his own Soul. 'Tis a high pitch and growth, and a Conſent between the Spirit of God and the Soul of a Chriſtian, when he can lament thoſe Sins in others whereby the Spirit is grieved, when he can rejoyce with the Spirit rejoycing, and mourn with the Spirit mourning. This is a clear Teſtimony that we have not Self-ends in the Service of God, that we take not up Religion to ſerve a Turn, that God is our Aim, and Chriſt our Beloved. Now Upright Perſons have ſpecial Promiſes for Protection, Pſal. 37. 18, 19. The Lord knows the way of the Upright, they ſhall not be aſhamed in an evil time; they ſhall not be aſhamed in it, though they may be daſht by it; they ſhall have a bleſſed inward Security, though they may not always have an outward, when the Wicked ſhall conſume away as the Fat of Lambs, and exhale in the Smoke. God's Eyes are upon them in the worſt of Straits. If ever he ſhew himſelf ſtrong, 'tis for thoſe that are perfect in Heart before him. This is the end of the rouling and running of his Eyes about the Earth, 2 Chron. 16. 9. To ſuch he is both a Sun, and a Shield; a Sun to comfort them, and a Shield to defend them that walk uprightly, Pſal. 84. 11. There may be an Uprightneſs in the Heart, when there is an unknown, or a negligent Crookedneſs in ſome particular Path; and when Men are negligent in reproving others for ſuch Sins as open the Clouds of Judgments, God may be a Sun to ſuch, to give them ſome Comfort in a common Calamity, but ſcarce a Shield to defend them from it.

2. This frame clears us from the guilt of common ſins. He that is not afflicted with them, contracts a guilt of thoſe Inſolencies againſt God by a tacit approbation, or not hindering the torrent by his Prayers, Tears, Endeavours. Sin is not to be viewed without Horror: We ſhare in the Guilt, if we manifeſt not our deteſtation of the Practice. The Corinthians had not approved themſelves clear in the matter of the inceſtuous Perſon till they had mourned for it, 2 Cor. 7. 11. Jacob was afraid he ſhould be charged by God as a Murtherer and Thief, as well as Simeon and Levi, if he did not profeſs his loathing of it, Gen. 49. 6. Oh my Soul come not thou into their Secrets, unto their aſſembly mine Honour be not thou united; for in their Anger they ſlew a Man, and in their Self-will they digged down a Wall. His Soul ſhould bear a teſtimony againſt their Secrets; he would count it his diſhonour to give their Sin any countenance before God or Man. David intimates, Pſal. 101. 3. that if he did not hate the works of thoſe that turn aſide, the guilt of them would cleave to him. If we can patiently bear the diſhonour of God, without marks of our diſpleaſure, we ſhall be reckoned in the common mon Infection, as one lump with the greateſt Sinners. He that is not with Chriſt, is againſt him; he that is not on the ſide of God by a holy Grief, is on the ſide of Sin by a ſilent Conſent. A thorow diſtaſt of Sins upon the account of their abomination to God, frees us from the guilt of them in the ſight of God. To mourn for them, and pray againſt them, is a ſign we would have prevented them if it had lain in our power; and where we have contributed to them, we by thoſe Acts revoke the Crime. When we cannot be Reformers, all that we can do is to turn Mourners, and in our places Admoniſhers and Reprovers, and God is righteous, not to charge the Guilt where it is not contracted or revoked. But where any are infected with common Sins, they muſt expect to taſte of ſome common Judgments †. The Iſraelites did partake of ſome of the Ægyptian Sins; and though God was upon their Deliverance, yet he inflicted upon them ſome of the Ægyptian Plagues; the Plague of Lice, which was the firſt God brought, without being imitated by the Magicians, was common upon the Iſraelites as well as the Ægyptians; for God did not ſever Goſhen from Ægypt till the Plague of Flies, Exod. 8. 12, 23. In that day will I ſever the Land of Goſhen, I will put a diviſion between my People and thy People. And therefore in Pſal. 78. the Pſalmiſt reckoning thoſe Plagues, never mentions the Lice, becauſe that was inflicted upon Iſrael as well as Ægypt. This is a way to keep the Soul from common Infection. 'Tis difficult for a Soul to defile it ſelf with the Sins of the Times, when Tears are continually running down the Eyes for them. 'Tis an Antidote againſt the Sin, and againſt the Plague which follows at the heels of it. If we look not upon them with Grief, we are in danger to be ſnar'd in the ſame Temptation. Beſides, not ſorrowing for them is an implicit conſent to them, and by conſenting to them, we are little better than Actors in them. By grieving for them, we enter our Diſſent, and paſs our Vote againſt them. When any Sin becomes National, it is imputed to the Body of the Nation; as in ſome Tranſgreſſions of the Law, the whole Body of the Nation of the Jews was involved; and there is no way for any particular Perſon to remove the guilt from him, but by diſowning it before God.

† Lightfoot, Glean. on Exo. 6.13.

3. A grief for common ſins, is an endeavour to repair the Honour God has loſt. 'Tis a paying to God that by Repentance (as much as lies in a Creature) which is due from the worſt Sinner himſelf; 'tis to keep up ſome of God's Glory, when ſo much is trodden down. And when the Grief is accompanied with a more exact Obedience, it repairs the Honour God hath loſt by the miſcarriage of others. 'Tis an endeavour to wipe off the Stains from the Robe of the Glory of God. And thoſe that bear up God's Glory in the World, ſhall find, if need be, the Creative, Omnipotent Power of God ſtretched out for their Defence, in as eminent a manner as the Cloud by Day, which preſerved the Iſraelites from the ſcorching of the Sun, or the flaming Fire by Night, which prevented their wandring into By-ways and Precipices; for upon all the Glory ſhall be a defence, Iſa. 4. 5. i. e. upon thoſe that bear the Mark of his glorious Redemption, and bear up his Honour among the Sons of Men. When we concern our ſelves for God's Honour, God will concern himſelf for our Protection. God never was, nor ever will be behind-hand with his Creature in Affection. Moſes was zealous for God's Glory againſt the golden Calf, and God concern'd himſelf for his Honour againſt Aaron and Miriam, Num. 12. and then againſt the Tumults of the People.

4. The Mourners in Sion are humble, and Humility is preventive of Judgments. To lie flat upon the Ground, is a means to avoid the ſtroke of a Cannon-bullet. When Men are caſt down, he ſhall ſave the humble Perſon, Job. 22. 29. They lie loweſt in the Duſt before God, who concern themſelves not only with the weight of their own ſins, but with that of others. Pride is a preparation for Judgment; the higher the Tower aſpires, the fitter Tinder it is for Lightning; the bigger any thing ſwells, the nearer it is to burſting; the prouder any Man is, the plainer Butt he is for an Arrow of God's Wrath. Pride lifts up it ſelf againſt God's Laws and Sovereignty, as much as this frame of Spirit acknowledges, and ſubmits to him. It was a Temper contrary to this, cauſed God to ſend Worms to banquet upon Herod, Acts 12. 23. He gave not God the Glory. He was not afflicted with the Sin of the People, nor reproved them for aſcribing to him the Honour of God. A Soul-affliction for common Sin is a bar to Judgments. God revives the ſpirit of the humble, Iſa. 57. 15. They that ſhare in the griefs of the Spirit, ſhall not want the comforts of the Spirit. God is concern'd in Honour, by virtue of his Promiſe, not to neglect thoſe whom he hath promiſed to revive. He dwells with the contrite Spirit; who more contrite than he that grieves for publick Sins, and Family Sins, and City Sins, as well as his own private? Men do not uſe to fire their own Houſes, much leſs God the Houſe and Heart, which is dearer to him than either firſt or ſecond Temple, or local Heaven it ſelf. I might add,

5. That ſuch keep Covenant with God. The Contract runs on God's part, to be an Enemy to his Peoples Enemies, Exod. 23. 22. It muſt run on our parts, to love that which God loves, hate that which God hates, grieve for that which grieves and diſhonours him; Who can do this by an unconcernedneſs? Thoſe that keep Covenant with God, ſhall not fail of one tittle of it on God's part. 7. Such alſo fear God's Judgments, as fear is a good means to prevent them. The Old World feared not God's threatning of the Deluge, and that came and ſwallowed them up. The Sodomites feared not God's Judgments, and that haſtened the deſtroying Shower. The Advice of the Angel upon the approach of Judgments, is to fear God, and give glory to him, Rev. 14. 7. And then follows another, v. 8. with the news of Babylon's fall; Babylon is fallen, is fallen. The fall of Babylon is the preſervation of his People.

4. The Uſe. 1. Reproof for us. Where is the Man that hangs his Harp upon the Willows at the time the Temple of God is prophaned? A Head, a Fountain of Tears for common Sins, is a Commodity rare to be found even in Hearts otherwiſe gracious. The Mourners have been for number but a few, like the gleanings of the Vintage; but the Sinners in Sion for multitude, like the Weeds in fallow Ground. What multitudes of thoſe that diſparage God, and trample upon his Sovereign Commands, rend in pieces the very Law of Nature, as well as the Rights of Religion? It were well if there were one to Six, as was intimated in the beginning there might be in Jeruſalem; but we have reaſon to fear, that one Marker for the ſecret Mourners would be too much for an hundred Deſtroyers. I do not queſtion but there are ſome that ſigh for the Abominations they ſee, and hear of, and that becauſe they are diſhonourable to God, as well as injurious to themſelves. But who of us preſent here can ſay, we have been deeply enough, and graciouſly enough affected with them? Certainly both you and I may bring a Charge againſt our our ſelves before the Throne of God for this neglect, that we have not been throughly humbled for, and frequently bewailed publick Iniquities, and ſpread them before God in Secret. If we are unconcern'd in common Sins, can we imagine God will leave us unconcern'd in common Judgments? If we endeavour not to keep up the Glory of God, he will extract Glory to himſelf out of our Aſhes. If this frame be ſo little regarded among Profeſſors, what ſhall we ſay to many others that have as little remorſe for the ſtabs of God's Honour, as they would have for the Tragedy of an Eaſt-India Prince, nay, for the death of ſome inconſiderable Fly? that have reſentments for Wrongs done to themſelves, and Sorrow at Command for any worldly Loſs, but not one ſpark of regret for Affronts offered to God? In this Cauſe their Hearts are as dry as a Heath in a parching Summer. Who laments the tearing the Name of God in pieces by execrable Oaths? Who bewails the impudent uncleanneſs boaſted of by Concubines in the face of the Sun? Who mourns for ſo many thouſand Foreheads bearing the mark of the Beaſt, and ſo many thouſands more preparing to receive it? It reproves then,

1. Thoſe that make a mock and ſport of ſin, ſo far they are from mourning for it. The wiſe Man gives them the title of Fools, Prov. 14. 9. Fools make a mock at ſin. Which though it ſeems too low a Character for ſuch abominable works, yet in Scripture it hath a greater import than in our common Diſcourſe, it ſignifies an Atheiſt, Pſal. 14. 1. Prodigious Madneſs! to make that our Sport which is the diſhonour of God, the murderer of Chriſt, the grief of the Spirit, and the deſtruction of the Soul; that which opens the flood-gates of Wrath, and brings Famines, Plagues, Wars upon a People! If mourning for others Sins be an Affection like that of Angels, delighting in others Sins is an Affection like that of Devils. He is at the greateſt diſtance from Chriſt, that looks pleaſantly upon that which Chriſt could not regard without Grief and Anger. God ſeems to ſeal up ſuch to deſtruction, as well as the Mourners to preſervation, Iſa. 22. 12, 13. And in that day did the Lord God of Hoſts call to weeping and mourning, to baldneſs and girding with Sackcloth, and behold joy and gladneſs, ſlaying Oxen and killing Sheep, eating Fleſh and drinking Wine, let us eat and drink, for to morrow we ſhall dye. And it was revealed in mine Ears by the Lord of Hoſts, ſurely this Iniquity ſhall not be purged from you till you dye; they were Ranters inſtead of Mourners, and God paſſes this Sentence on them, their Iniquity ſhall not be purged from them till they dye. If we carry our ſelves Jollily at the Sins of others, we evidence that the concerns of God are of little concern to us, that we have ſlight thoughts of his Glory, and caſt it at the heels of our own Paſſions.

2. Thoſe that make others Sins the matter of Invectives, rather than of Lamentations, and beſpatter the Man without bewailing the ſin. We ſhould conſider common Sins with affection to God, and pity to the Offenders; with a deſire that they may reſtore, by a true Converſion, the glory they have robb'd God of by an accurſed Rebellion. While we hate the Sin, we ſhould evidence that we love the Man*. We muſt never love the Wickedneſs, nor hate the Perſon. We pity a Sick-man, though we loath his Diſeaſe. Sinners are miſerable enough without our Hatred, and by hating them we make our ſelves more miſerable, by committing a fault againſt Reaſon and Nature, and do them no good. The more wicked any Man is, the more worthy of pity, by how much the more his Crime is our hatred. God, who is infinite Purity, hates Mens Sins, becauſe they are Enemies to this Holineſs; but he hath a common affection to their Perſons, as they are the effects of his Goodneſs and creative Power. Our exclamations againſt common Sins ought not to exceed lamentations for them. There ought to be more Grief in our Hearts, than Fire in our Tongues. They break the whole Law, that lament not the Crime out of love to the Law-maker, and grieve not for the Sinner out of love to their Neighbour.

3. Thoſe who are imitators of common Sins, inſtead of being mourners for them. As though others did not pilfer God's Right faſt enough, and were too ſlow in pulling him from his Throne; as if they grieved that others had got the ſtart of them in Wickedneſs. 'Tis a pious Sadneſs, and a bleſſed Grief to be affected with common Sins, without being fetter'd by them; to mourn for them, without cleaving to them; to be tranſported with Sorrow for them, without being drawn by a love to them.

4. Thoſe that fret againſt God, inſtead of fretting againſt their own fooliſhneſs, Prov. 19. 3. The ſins of good Men, are many times provocations to God to draw up the Sluce from the Hearts of wicked Men, and give liberty to their Luſts for the chaſtening of others; and therefore in grieving for the Sins of others, they implicitly grieve for their own.

5. Thoſe who are more tranſported againſt others ſins, as they are, or may be occaſions of hurt to them, than as they are injuries to God. How warm are we often in our own Cauſe, and how cold in God's? We partly ſatisfie our own Diſcontent by ſuch a Carriage, but not our Duty.

6. Thoſe who are ſo far from Mourning for common Sins, that they never truly mourned for their own. Who have yet the Treaſures of wickedneſs, after the Rod of God hath been upon them, Mich. 6. 9, 10. Are there yet the treaſures of wickedneſs in the houſe of the wicked reflecting upon the Rod they had felt? Common Sins are but a Glaſs wherein we may ſee our common Nature. The beſt Men have the worſt Sins in their Nature, though by Grace they have them not in their Practice. He that grieves not for other Mens Sins, more or leſs, never grieved truly for his own. He that is not concerned for the diſhonours of God by others, is little concerned for the diſhonour of God by himſelf. Let us uſe our Eyes for thoſe ends for which God hath given them; they are inſtruments of Sight, and inſtruments of Sorrow.

It is neceſſary for us to mourn for our own ſins. We can never mourn for others Sins, unleſs we mourn for our own. If we ſorrow not for our own, the Sorrow we may pretend to have for others, proceeds not from a right cauſe. We have that one Sin of Adam in our Nature, which ſubjected the whole World to an Anathema. Let us not ſtay in Generals; every Man will lay the fault upon Sin in the bulk, without reflecting on the Sin in his own Bowels. We can complain particularly of thoſe Sins that are common, and why ſhould we reſt in Generals, when we come to our own? Dolus verſatur in univerſalibus, 'tis a deceitful Sorrow that is for Sin in a heap. Is there not perfidiouſneſs to God, coldneſs in his ways, too much ſlighting the Goſpel, want of Bowels and Compaſſion, incorrigibleneſs under Judgments, Houſes fir'd and Pride not conſum'd; falſeneſs in Reſolutions, like Oxen moving with the touch of the Goad, and preſently ſtanding ſtill; deceitful Bows, letting the String ſlip after they have ſtood fully bent, Hoſ. 10. 4. There may be Sins among us that may cauſe a Storm that we little think of: The Mariners little ſuſpected Jonah to be the cauſe of the Tempeſt till he diſcovered it himſelf. He that never mourned for his own Sins, cannot perform this Duty ſo neceſſary for his Preſervation, and therefore fore cannot expect the mark of God in a time of publick Judgment. He that would rightly mourn for the Corruptions of others, muſt enquire whether he hath not the ſame in his own Bowels, and fling the hardeſt Stone at them. Judah calls for Tamar to the flames for that Crime which himſelf had been a Partner and Actor in; ſo apt are we to be ſevere againſt others Sins, and indulgent to our own. The beſt have need to mourn for their own Sins in relation to the Publick: The only good Man in the Ship was Jonah, and for his Sin was the Storm ſent, and the reſt like to be wrack'd.

* Nonnunquam ſæviturus in culpam ſæviens in hominem. Proſper.

2 Uſe. Of Comfort to ſuch as mourn for common Sins. All the carnal World hath not ſuch a Writ of Protection to ſhew in the whole ſtrength of Nature, as the meaneſt Mourner in Sion hath in his Sighs and Tears. Chriſt's Mark is above all the Shields of the Earth, and thoſe that are ſtamp'd with it, have his Wiſdom to guard them againſt Folly, his Power againſt Weakneſs, the everlaſting Father againſt Man, whoſe Breath is in his Noſtrils. We ſee that God doth not ſtrike at random, but reſerves a ſweetneſs for his Servants in the midſt of his Fury againſt his Enemies; he hath his Meſſengers to mark, as well as his Executioners to ſtrike; the iſſuing the reſolute Orders of his Fury, hinders not thoſe of his Grace and Compaſſion to his own. He will have a care of his Balſom-trees that diſtil this precious Liquor, no leſs than he commanded the Iſraelites in their ſharpeſt Wars to have a care of the fruitful Trees of a Land, Deut. 20. 19. God in the 6. v. following the Text, gives the like Charge to the executioners of his Judgments, as David did to the Army concerning Abſalom, 2 Sam. 18. 5. Deal gently with the young Man, Ezek. 9. 6. Come not near any Man upon whom is the Mark. He makes proviſion firſt for the Security of thoſe, before he unſheaths his Sword againſt his Enemies. The Deluge flows not from Heaven till Noah be caſed in the Ark; nor is Sodom on Fire till Lot be lodged in the Mountain. God will always have a Church in the World, and ſuffer a Generation of his own to inhabit the Earth: God's Attributes ſhall not interfere one with another; his Truth remains firm, notwithſtanding the provocations of Men. When thoſe People were ripe for Judgments, God had his Mourners among the Idolaters, which he marks for Preſervation; when he had threatned great Judgments, Joel 2. 30, 31. the turning the Sun into Darkneſs, and the Moon into Blood, he promiſes a remnant in Jeruſalem and Sion, v. 32. And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord ſhall be delivered; for in Mount Sion, and in Jeruſalem, ſhall be deliverance as the Lord hath ſaid, and in the remnant whom the Lord ſhall call. Neither the fury of Men ſhall, nor the Judgments of God will extinguiſh the Ch[illegible] Malice of Men, becauſe of God's [illegible] himſelf, becauſe of his Truth; [illegible] G[illegible] will either preſerve [illegible] take a[illegible] in them, to a place [illegible] though[illegible] y ſome, that the [illegible] h'd to [illegible]aven in the midſt of his [illegible] the ra[illegible] of living in that Age, wa[illegible] afflicte[illegible] with the ſins of [illegible]e amo[illegible] lived. [illegible]nd indeed he [illegible] ſcarce[illegible] with[illegible] grieving that [illegible] diſdain[illegible] h him[illegible]nd acted contrary to him: [illegible] e hi[illegible]rom that Affli[illegible] as well as fro[illegible]nge[illegible] of being corrupted by the Age. H[illegible]her [illegible]ve his Chambers wherein to hide them[illegible] ll t[illegible] Indignation be over-paſt, Iſa. 26. 20, 21. [illegible]a[illegible]ns to lodge them in for ever with him[illegible] hurt is it to any to be refuſed a hiding [illegible] hat he may be conducted to the poſſeſſion of a glorious Reſidence for ever? That Judgment that takes off the Fetters of a wicked Man for Execution, knocks off the Fetters of the Godly for a Goal Delivery; like Fire it conſumes the Droſs, and refines the Gold. The Day of God's Wrath is a day of gloominеſs to the Wicked, Joel 2. 2. but as the Morning ſpread upon the Mountains to the Godly Mourners, the dawning of Comfort to them. God out of the ſame Pillar of the Cloud diffuſed Light upon the Iſraelites, and ſhot Thunders and Lightnings upon the Ægyptians, to which perhaps the Prophet might here allude.

3 Uſe. Mourn for the Sins of the time and place where you live. 'Tis the leaſt diſlike we can ſhew to them. A flood of Grief becomes us in a flood of Sin. How well would it be, if we were as loud in crying for Mercy, as our Sins at the preſent are in crying for Vengeance? While Judgments march to ſeize our Perſons, our Grief ſhould run to damp the Judgments: Moiſt Walls choak the Bullet. 'Tis far better to mourn for the cauſe of Judgments, than to mourn under them. The jolly Blades were the firſt Prey to the Enemy, Amos 6. 1, 2, 3, to v. 7. They that chaunt to the ſound of the Viol, and drink Wine in Bowls, ſhall go captive with the firſt that go captive. We of this City have moſt reaſon to mourn; the Metropolis of a Nation is the Metropolis uſually of Sin, and the faireſt Mark for the Arrows of God's Indignation. The chief City of a Nation is uſually threatned in Scripture, Rabbah of the Ammonites, Damaſcus of Syria, Tyrus of Phœnicia, Babylon of the Chaldæan Empire, Jeruſalem of Judæa, and ſuitably, why not London of England? And let no Man think, that Mourning is a degenerate and effeminate Diſpoſition: Doth Solomon ever imprint the ſame Character on Mourning as he doth on Laughter? Eccleſ. 2. 2. Doth he ever vilifie that with a term of Madneſs, and call the Mourners Bedlams? How can any, who hath not put off the Title and Nature of Man, behold, without Amazement and Grief, Men ſo bold, as to pull down the Judgments of God upon them, and force his Indignation? This Temper is a pious embalming Chriſt's crucified Honour; ſhall any Man that profeſſeth Chriſt have ſo little love to him, as not to beſtow a Groan upon him, when he ſees him freſhly diſhonoured and abuſed? If we had not committed any Sin in our whole Life, there is cauſe of Mourning for the Abominations of the World. Chriſt had an unſpotted Innocence, and an unexpreſſible Grief for Jeruſalems Sins and Miſery; Oh Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, how often would I have gathered thee, and thou wouldſt not! Never doth Sorrow more appear in love, than when it is more for what diſhonours God, than what pincheth us. Men may pretend a Grief for the Sins of the Times, when it is only for themſelves, that they have not thoſe pleaſing Opportunities of greatning themſelves, and that eſtimation in the World, that Stage for Pride and Covetouſneſs to act upon which they deſire. Our Mourning is then right, when we grieve not ſo much that we, as that God is a ſufferer. It ſhould be proportionable where there are great Breaches of God's Law; our Grief ſhould be as full, as, if poſſible, to fill up the Ditch that is digg'd; the Septuagint in the Text implies it, κατασεισθωσιν. Paul and Barnabas tore their Garments (a ſign of a great Grief and Indignation) when the Heathens would have ſacrificed to them as Gods, Acts 14. 13. they uſed not the ſame Expreſſions in ſmaller Sins; but this was againſt the Nature of God, and a multitude engaged in it. The greater the Sin, the greater the Sorrow. I need not mention the Sins among us; the impudent Atheism, contempt of the Gospel, putrifying Lust, bare-fac'd Pride, rending Divisions, many Sins visible enough to be grieved for, and too many to be spoken of. The Sorrow should be universal. Not for one Sin which may be against any Man's particular Interest, but for all, even those that our carnal Advantage is not concerned in. God is dishonoured by one as well as by another, and Christ is crucify'd by one as well as by another. It must be attended with a more strict Obedience: 'Tis the highest generosity to wear Christ's Livery, when others put it off, and lay it aside as useless. No doubt but Joseph of Arimathea mourned as well as the rest for the Sufferings of our Saviour, but he testify'd also an Heroick Affection to him, in going boldly to Pilate to beg the Body of Jesus, for an honourable Burial, when none of the other Disciples sought after it, but trusted more to the swiftness of their Heels for their own security, than concern'd themselves for the Honour of their Master. While others therefore are defiling the World with their Abominations, let us be washing it with our Tears, and filling Heaven with our Cries, that when God marcheth in his Fury, we may be secure by his acceptance of our Humiliations.

Motives.

1. This is a means to have great Tokens of the Love of God. No question but Christ in his Agony bewailed the Sins of the World, and then was an Angel sent to comfort him, and assure him of an happy Issue. It was just after the testimony of his Displeasure against Peter for disswading him from that Death, whereby he was to honour God, and wash off the stain of Sin, and repair the Violations of the Law, whereby he manifested a Concern for his Father's Honour, that he was transfigured, and had therein the Earnest of an Heavenly Glory, and that transporting Voice: This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear you him, Mat. 16. 23. Mat. 17. 1, 2, &c.

2. It is a means to prevent Judgments. Tears cleansed by the Blood of Christ, are a good means to quench that Justice which is a consuming Fire. Sin puts a stop to the working of God's Bowels, and opens the Magazines of Wrath: Grief for it disarms God's Hand of his Thunders, and may divert his Darts from our Hearts. No other Defence is often left against the strength of Judgments after Sin hath made its Entrance. A holy Seed in Jerusalem, is the guard of it in the time of Senacherib's Invasion, Isa. 6. 13. The holy Seed shall be the substance thereof. Growth in Sin ripens Judgments, turns Blossoms and Buds into Fruit, Rods into Scorpions. Grief for it turns Scorpions into Rods, lessens a Judgment, if not wholly prevents it. The Water of Repentance is the best way to quench the Flames of Sin, and Sparks of Wrath. If good Men fall under a common Judgment, it may be often for a Defect in this Temper. This was Austin's Opinion, * That many good Men are taken away with the wicked in Common Judgments; because, though they do not commit the same Sins, yet they connive at their Iniquities, and so are lasht with their Rods, temporally chastened, but not eternally punished.

* August de Civit Dei. l. 1. c. 9.

3. It will sweeten Judgments. Such may say of Judgment, as Paul of Death, Oh Judgment where is thy Sting! 'Tis a double Burden to lie under the weight of common Judgments, and the weight of common Sins; Grief for them is a means to remove the Guilt, and thereby to ease thee of a Judgment. If we are concerned in mourning for Sin, we shall be more fit to honour God, if he makes us fall under his Stroke. A holy Sorrow will bring us into a submissive Frame. Aaron had been, without question, humbled for his timorous Compliance with the People in the making of the golden Calf; and when God came to strike him near in his own Children, he held his Peace, Levit. 10. 3. No doubt but his former Humiliation fitted him for his present Patience.

4. Our Repentance for our own Sins was never right, unless we are of this Temper. Repentance is a Justice towards God, and therefore is conversant about other Mens Sins in a hatred of them. 'Tis for Sin as Sin, and Sin is Sin in whatsoever Subject it be, and worthy of Hatred according to right Reason, and therefore that Grace whereby a Man hates it in his own Person, will engage him to hate it wheresoever it is; and we always grieve for the encrease of that which is the Object of our Hatred. A truly just Man hates the Injury committed against another as well as that against himself. That Filthiness which displeaseth a Penitent in his own Act, displeaseth him in anothers Act, there being the same adequate Reason, and Sin being of the same Nature against God in another as in himself. 'Tis All Abominations in the Text; This is an Argument of sincerity: To mourn for One may be from Self-interest, to mourn for All must be from a pure Affection.

5. 'Tis an Argument of a true Affection to God. To mourn for Sin when it is rare, though gross, is not so much a sign of sincerity, as to mourn for it when it is Epidemical, when the Foundations of Godliness are out of course, and the Graces contrary to those Sins are generally discountenanc'd: As it is a greater sign of sincerity to love the Word, when it is generally slighted, than to love it when all admire it. What a noble Affection had that Lady in Samuel, 1 Sam. 4. 19, &c. that grieved not so much for the loss of her Father, Husband, Friends, but bewailed the Departure of the Glory of Israel, and implicitly at least, the Sin that occasion'd it? How did her Affection to God drown all carnal Affections? Her sorrow for the Ark stifled the sorrow of her Travel, and the joy at the Birth of her Son. She regarded it not. This is an evident Token of Affection, when we mourn most for those Sins which most dishonour God, and the Sins of those Persons that seem to be nearer to God, and cast most Reproaches upon his Name.

6. Shall we be out-stript by Idolaters? The mourning for others Sins was a Custom kept up in Israel after their Revolt from God unto Jeroboam. When Naboth was put to death [illegible] pretended Crime of Blasphemy, a Fast [illegible] to lament his Sin, 1 King. 21. 12. and though with a wicked Intention, to palliate a further with the Cloak of Religion, yet it evidenceth this Mourning for the gross Sins of others to be a common Sentiment among them, and practised upon the like Occasions.

7. We have just Fears of Judgments. We know not whence they will come, from the North or from the South. God sets up his Warnings in the Heavens: We behold him frowning and preparing his Arrows; and are we careless in what Posture we shall meet him? He hath spit in our Faces, made us a By-word and Reproach? should we not be humbled? Numb. 12. 14. If her Father had spit in her Face, should she not be ashamed? God seems to be departing. He hath as it were kept open Market a long time, he ſeems now to be putting up his Wares, removing his Candleſtick, withdrawing the power of his Ordinances, recalling his Meſſengers, the Light is almoſt in the Socket. The Voice of God is received with a deaf Ear, the Reproofs and Admonitions of God have not a kindly Operation, the ſigns of Judgment amaze us, and the Amazement quite vaniſhes. We ſtart like a Man in a Dream, and fall back upon our Pillow, and ſnort out our Sleep. Can we expect God to ſtay? He ſeems to be upon the Threſhold of the Temple, come down already from the Cherubims; and is it not high time to bewail our own Sins, and the common Abominations, that have ſo polluted the place of his Habitation, that we may ſay we cannot ſee how God can ſtay with Honour to Himſelf? If we bewail the Sins that provoke him to it, God may ſtay; if he will not, let us at leaſt ſhew this affection to him at parting. This is not a thing unbecoming the higheſt Chriſtian. Doth not the Spirit grieve for the Sins of others which play the Wantons with the Grace of God? Eph. 4. 30. Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God. The Holy Spirit hath no Sins of his own to grieve for. Shall we be above that which the Spirit of God thinks himſelf not above? Shall we refuſe mourning for that which goes to the Heart of the Holy Ghoſt? Let us therefore examine what are our own Sins, what are the Abominations of the Times and Places wherein we live; make inquiſition for the one, that we may drag them out before the Lord: And in our places endeavour to ſtop and reform the other. As the true Fire of Love to God will melt us into Tears, ſo it will heat us into Zeal. He is no Friend, that will complain of a Toad's being in anothers Boſom, but not ſtrive to kill it. It will ſhew either Cowardice or Falſeneſs. That Zeal is Wild-fire that is not accompany'd with an holy Sorrow, and that Sorrow is crude which is not accompany'd with a godly Zeal.

A DISCOURSE FOR The Comfort of Child-bearing Women.

1 Tim. 2. 15.

Notwithſtanding ſhe ſhall be ſaved in Child-bearing, if they continue in Faith, and Charity, and Holineſs with Sobriety.

I Shall not take my Riſe any higher than v. 12. where the Apoſtle orders that a Woman ſhould not teach. But I ſuffer not a Woman to teach, i. e. publickly.

Two Reaſons are rendred;

* Hierom. 1. * She was laſt in Creation: Adam was firſt formed, then Eve.

2. Firſt in Defection, v. 14. And Adam was not deceived, but the Woman being deceived, was in the Tranſgreſſion. The Fall of Man was the Fruit of the Woman's firſt Doctrine, and therefore ſhe is not ſuffered to teach any more; the Woman was deceived by the Serpent, and ſo drew her Husband, and whole Poſterity, into ruine. Some of the Papiſts bring this place as an Argument againſt Womens reading the Scripture; but no Reaſon can conclude it from this place. How can the Spirit of God prohibit their reading the Scripture in private, and the Inſtruction of their Families, ſince Women are among thoſe who are commended for reading the Scripture? Acts 17. 11, 12. where the honourable Women are mention'd. And Lois and Eunice are applauded for their Inſtruction of Timothy. Are not Women bound by that Command of Peter, to give a Reaſon of their Faith to any that ſhall ask them, unleſs they would have Women Chriſtians without Reaſon? What was the Office of thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Widdows in the Primitive Times, but to inſtruct the younger Women? But this is not to be charged upon all the Papiſts: Becanus only is the Man that Rivet mentions *. And becauſe upon this Declaration of the Apoſtle ſome might be dejected by the conſideration of the deep Hand the Woman had in the firſt Fall, in the Puniſhment inflicted upon them for it, the Apoſtle in the Text brings in a Notwithſtanding for their Comfort. Notwithſtanding her Guilt in Defection, her Puniſhment in Childbearing, ſhe hath as good a Right to Salvation as the Man: So that the Apoſtle here anſwers by way of anticipation, an Objection which might be made, whether the Guilt contracted by the Woman, and the Puniſhment inflicted, might not hinder her eternal Salvation. The Apoſtle anſwers, No. Tho' ſhe was firſt in the Tranſgreſſion, and the Pain of Child-bearing was the Puniſhment of that firſt Sin, yet the Woman may arrive to everlaſting Salvation notwithſtanding that Pain, if ſhe be adorn'd with thoſe Graces which are neceſſary for all Chriſtians. Though the Puniſhment remain, yet the believing Woman is in the Covenant of Grace, under the Wings of the Mediator of that Covenant, if ſhe have Faith, the Condition of the Covenant, which works by Love and Charity, and is attended with Holineſs, and renewal of the Heart.

* Iſagog. ad Script. c. 13 p. 990, 991

Obſerve; God hath gracious [Cordials] to chear up the Hearts of Believers in their Diſtreſs, and in the midſt of thoſe

thoſe Caſes which are ſufficient of themſelves to caſt them down. The Apoſtle here alludes to that Curſe upon the Woman, Gen. 3. 16. Unto the Woman he ſaid, I will greatly multiply thy Sorrow, and thy Conception; In Sorrow thou ſhalt bring forth Children. The Puniſhment is peculiar to the married Woman, beſides that Puniſhment which was common to her with the Man.

Thy Sorrow and thy Conception. Hendiadys ſay ſome; The Sorrow of thy Conception. The Word הרון ſignifies the whole time of the Woman's bearing in the Womb, and ſo includes not only thoſe Pains in the very time of Labour, but alſo all thoſe precurſory Indiſpoſitions, as the weakneſs of the Stomach, heavineſs of the Head, irregular Longings, and thoſe other Symptoms which accompany Conceptions. Though this Pain ſeems to be natural, from the Conſtitution of the Body, yet ſince ſome other Creatures do bring forth with little or no Pain *; It would not have been ſo with the Woman in Innocency, becauſe all Pain which is a puniſhment of Sin, had not been incident to a ſinleſs and immortal Body.

* Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animall. 7. c. 9

We will conſider the Words apart.

Saved.] It may either note the Salvation of the Soul, or the Preſervation of the Woman in Child-bearing. The firſt I ſuppoſe is principally intended, (for the Apoſtle here would ſignifie ſome ſpecial Comfort to Women under that Curſe. But the Preſervation of Women in Child-bearing was a common thing teſtify'd by daily Experience in the worſt, as well as in the beſt Women, and Chriſtianity did not bring the Profeſſors of it into a worſe Eſtate in thoſe things which immediately depended upon God, or make the Children Vipers, not to come into the World without the Death of their Mothers.) Yet a temporal Preſervation may be included; for when an eternal Salvation is promis'd, temporal Salvation is alſo promis'd, according to the Methods of God's Wiſdom and Goodneſs in the courſe of his Providence, there being in all ſuch Promiſes a tacit Reſerve, viz. if God ſees it good for us; and the manner of their Preſervation alſo, wherein the Preſervation of a Believer differs from that of an unregenerate Perſon. Others are preſerved by God, as a merciful Creator and Governour, in a way of common Providence, for the keeping up of the World; but Believers are preſerved in the way of Promiſe and Covenant, in the exerciſe of Faith, and by the ſpecial Love of God, as a tender Father, and their God in covenant with them through Chriſt.

In Child-bearing.] Διὰ τεκνογονίας through Child-bearing. The Præpoſition διὰ is often taken for ἐν, as Rom. 4. 11. That he might be the Father of all that believe, though they be not circumciſed, πιστευόντων δι' ἀκροβυστίας believing in uncircumciſion, where it notes the ſtate wherein they ſhall be ſaved. So it notes here not the Cauſe of the Salvation of the Woman, but the ſtate wherein ſhe ſhall be ſaved, and amounts to thus much; The Puniſhment inflicted upon the Woman for her firſt Sin, ſhall not be removed in this Life, yet notwithſtanding this, there is a certain way of Salvation by Faith, though ſhe paſs through this Puniſhment. For by τεκνογονία is not meant a ſimple Child-bearing, but a Child-bearing in ſuch a manner as God hath threatned with Sorrow and Grief.

If they continue.] By [They] is not meant the Children, as ſome imagine, becauſe of the change of the ſingular to the plural; the ſenſe then ſhould run thus, ſhe ſhall be ſaved, if the Children remain in Faith, &c. That would be abſurd, to think that the Salvation of the Mother ſhould depend upon the Faith and Grace of the Children. When it is ſometimes ſeen that the Children of a godly Mother may prove as wicked as Hell it ſelf. But by [they] is meant the Woman. The Name Woman is taken collectively for all Women, and therefore the plural number is added. The Apoſtle paſſes from the ſingular number to the plural, as he had done from the plural to the ſingular, v. 9. In like manner let the Women adorn themſelves in modeſty, where he uſes the plural, but v. 11. reaſſumes the other number again in his Diſcourſe. The Graces which are here put as the Conditions, are, Faith, Charity, Sanctification, Sobriety. Where the Apoſtle ſeems to oppoſe thoſe to the firſt Cauſes or Ingredients of the Defection.

1. Faith oppoſed to Unbelief of the Precept of God, and the Threatning annext.

2. Charity oppoſed to Diſaffection to God. As though God were an Enemy to their Happineſs, and commanded a thing which did prejudice their Happineſs, whereupon muſt ariſe ill ſurmiſes of God, and an averſion from him.

3. Sanctification. In oppoſition to this Filthineſs and Pollution brought upon the Soul by that firſt Defection; there muſt therefore be in them an Aim and Endeavour to attain that primitive Integrity and Purity they then loſt.

4. Sobriety, Σωφροσύνη, Temperance. Becauſe the giving the Reins to Senſe, and obeying the Longings thereof, was the Cauſe of the Fall, Gen. 3. 6. She ſaw that it was pleaſant to the Eye. Original Sin is called Concupiſcence, and Luſting, and to this is oppoſed Sobriety.

1. Faith.] This is put firſt, becauſe it is the Fundamental Grace. It is the employer of Charity, for it works by it; the Root of Sanctification, for by Faith the Heart is purify'd. By Faith is chiefly meant the Grace of Faith; (1) Faith in the Habit, (2) Faith in the Exerciſe.

2. Charity.] The firſt Sin was an Enmity againſt God; therefore there is now a neceſſary Love to God. The firſt Sin was virtually an Enmity to all the Poſterity of Man, which were to come out of his Loins; therefore Love to Mankind is neceſſary. And Faith always infers Love to God and Man.

3. Sanctification] is here added, becauſe by that both the truth of Faith and Love appears to our ſelves and others. And Juſtification by Faith is thereby ratify'd, James 2. 24. By Sanctification is not here meant a particular Holineſs or Chaſtity due to the Marriage-bed, as ſome of the Papiſts aſſert, but an univerſal ſanctity of Heart and Life.

4. Sobriety.] This is a natural means for Preſervation. Intemperance makes bodily Diſtempers more dangerous in their Aſſaults. True Faith is accompany'd with Temperance and Sobriety in the uſe of lawful Comforts. The Papiſts, though without any good ground, frame an Argument from hence to prove Marriage to be a Sacrament, aſſerting that thoſe Graces of Faith and Charity, &c. are conferred upon the Woman by vertue of Marriage, and ex vi inſtitutionis. How ſevere a Doctrine is it then to engage any in Vows of a ſingle Life, when they might have a readier way to attain Grace with the Satisfaction of Nature? Are not the Virtues mention'd here, as neceſſary to the ſingle, as to the marry'd Chriſtians? Who ever heard that Marriage was appointed to confer thoſe Chriſtian Graces which are neceſſary for Men and Women in all Conditions? Beſides, is it probable that that was instituted to confer Christian Graces, which was instituted in Paradise before Christianity was in being, and had been valid if Man had stood in Innocency, where there had been no need of a justifying Faith?

Observe 1. The Punishment of the Woman; In Child-bearing.

2. The Comfort of the Woman; She shall be saved.

3. The Condition of the Salvation; If they continue. Wherein is imply'd an Exhortation to continue in Faith, &c.

Doct. Many Observations might be raised.

1. The Pain in Child-bearing is a Punishment inflicted upon the Woman for the first Sin.

2. The Continuance of this Punishment after Redemption by Christ, doth not hinder the Salvation of the Woman, if there be the Gospel-Conditions requisite.

3. The exercise of Faith, with other Christian Graces, is a peculiar means for the Preservation of Believers under God's afflicting Hand.

I shall sum them up into this One.

Doct. The continuance of the Punishment inflicted upon the Woman for the first Sin, doth not prejudice her eternal Salvation, nor her Preservation in Child-bearing, where there are the Conditions of Faith, and other Graces.

Here I shall speak,

1. Concerning the Punishment, and the Cause of it.

2. The Nature of it.

3. Its not prejudicing eternal Salvation.

1. Concerning the Punishment. Child-bearing it self is not the Punishment, but the Pain in it. For the Blessing [Increase and multiply] was given in Innocency. This Punishment is peculiar to the Woman, and superadded to that inflicted upon the Man, wherein the Woman also hath her share, though it lay heaviest upon Adam's Shoulders. And because this Punishment is the greater, it is disputed in the Schools whether Adam's or Eve's Sin were the greater. Various Opinions there are. We may, I think, safely make these Conclusions.

1. In regard of the kind of Sin, it was equal in both. They both had an equal Pride, an equal aspiring to be like God: For in all probability Eve gave not her Husband the Fruit to eat, without acquainting him with the Reasons which moved her to eat it, as also the Advantage she expected from it. And God chargeth this aspiring Humour upon the Man, Gen. 3. 22. The Man כאחד, is become like one of us. Both of them therefore embrac'd the Temptation as it was directed, and swallow'd the Fruit, with an expectation to be like, not the Angels, (as some think, from Gen. 3. 5. You shall be as Gods, Elohim) but like God Himself, as appears by v. 22. in that Ironical Speech, where the Lord God Jehovah saith, The Man is become like one of us. They both believed the Serpent, both broke the Command in eating the Fruit, both were guilty of this aspiring Ambition. Some indeed think Eve ate twice of the Fruit, once before the Serpent, and the other time when she gave her Husband, Gen. 3. 6. She did eat, and gave to her Husband with her, and he did eat *. But this is not so clear in the Text.

* Mariana in loc.

2. In regard to the first motion to Sin, Eve's Sin was the greater. She was the seducer of Adam, which the Apostle expresseth in the Verse before the Text. The Woman being deceived, was in the Transgression. Where the Apostle intimates the Woman's Sin in that respect to be greater than the Man's. Adam was in it too, but the Woman deeper.

3. In regard of the Woman's Condition, the Sin was greater on Adam's part *. * Estius in Sentent.

1. Because he, being the Man, had more power to resist, more strength to argue the Case.

2. Eve had a stronger and craftier Adversary to deal with, the Subtilest of all the Beasts of the Field, Gen. 3. 1. animated and inspired by a craftier Devil. The stronger the Tempter, the more excusable the Sin. Adam was tempted by Eve, but Eve by the Serpent.

3. Eve had the Command of not eating immediately from her Husband; which laid not altogether so strong a Tie upon her as it did upon him, who had it immediately from the Mouth of God, and therefore was more certain of the verity of the Precept.

2. Of what nature is this Punishment?

1. 'Tis not a Punishment in a rigid sense, nor continued as such.

1. Because 'tis not commensurate to the nature of the Sin, neither is it that Penalty which the Law required. Death was due, and Death immediately upon the Offence; but Death was kept off by the Interposition of the Mediator, and this which is less than Death, inflicted at present. The Mediator or Days-man interposed before this Sentence; for the Promise of the Seed which should bruise the Serpent's Head, preceded the pronouncing of this Sentence, Gen. 3. 15, 16. God arms himself against both, but not with those Weapons they had deserv'd. Capital Crimes are usually attended with capital Punishments, which draw a Destruction upon the Offender. Where Death is deserv'd, and a lighter Punishment inflicted, it is rather an Act of Clemency, than strict Justice, and may be called by the Name of a partial Pardon, or Reprieve, as well as a Punishment. 'Tis indeed a Punishment when Conscience racks a Man with further expectation of Torment, when it is but a Prologue to everlasting Burnings, when through those Pains any fall into the place of everlasting Horrour. 'Tis then more properly a Punishment, when it proceeds from an irreconcileable Justice, arm'd with Omnipotency in the Execution, not when it proceeds from an Anger mixt with Mildness, and mitigated by the Intercessions of a Mediator.

2. 'Tis not a Reparation of the Injury done to God. One Reason of the Institution of Punishment is to repair the Damage the Person offended sustains by the Malefactor, as far as he is capable. The Injury done to God cannot be repair'd by any temporary Punishment. No nor indeed actually by an eternal one, though an eternal Suffering is all the reparation a finite Creature is capable to make to the Honour of God. A Man is capable of making some kind of Amends to his Neighbour for an Offence done, but God being infinitely our Superiour, cannot have his Honour repaired by any thing a Creature can do or suffer.

3. 'Tis not continued as a part of Satisfaction to the Justice of God. As though Christ needed the Sufferings of the Creature to make up the Sum which he was to pay for us, and which he hath already paid. 'Tis not on the account of the Death of Christ, purely a vindictive, but a medicinal Act to a Believer. 'Tis rather to awaken us than to satisfie Justice. As we wring a Man by the Nose who is fallen into a Swoon, not to have Satisfaction from him for any Injury he may have done us, but to fetch him out of his Fit. These Punishments are to awaken Men to a sight of their first Sin.

4. The

4. The proper impulſive cauſe of puniſhment is Wrath. Though this was the firſt cauſe of this Sentence, yet it is not inflicted in Wrath upon a Believer. Though at firſt it was an effect of God's Anger, yet in a Believer it is a fruit of God's fatherly Anger, wherein he acts with a Compoſition of Judge and Father. In inflicting it he preſerves the authority of a Judge: In preſerving under it, and pardoning the ſin for which it was inflicted, he evidenceth the affection of a Father. Puniſhment, as ſuch, is only to hurt, and make Men reap the fruit of their Iniquity: But the end of Affliction, in the intention of the Perſon that doth afflict, is oftentimes to benefit.

2. Yet it is in ſome ſort a Puniſhment, and ſomething more than an Affliction.

1. In reſpect of the meritorious Cauſe, Sin. This is not inflicted ratione abſoluti dominii, but ratione meriti. 'Tis not an act of abſolute Sovereignty, but a judicial legal act, upon the demerit of Sin. There are ſome Afflictions which are not Puniſhments, as in the caſe of the Man that was born Blind: Chriſt tells us, that it was neither for his own Sin, nor for the ſins of his Parents, but that God might be glorified, John 9. 2, 3. i. e. God in inflicting that blindneſs, reſpected neither the ſin of the Man, nor the ſin of the Parents, but the making him a paſſive ſubject of his Glory, in our Saviour's miraculous Cure. But in this caſe God reſpected the ſin of the Woman as the cauſe and reaſon of the Puniſhment.

2. Becauſe if Man had ſtood in Innocency, neither this Grief, nor indeed any other had been. The Birth in Innocency, would have been without Sorrow and Grief, as the Hunger and Thirſt which would have been in Adam in that ſtate, would have been without that gnawing in the Stomach, and that Pain which we find in thoſe Defects, becauſe a ſtate of Integrity and perfect Righteouſneſs muſt needs be without Grief. But after the Fall all thoſe Pains incident to Man or Woman, are fruits of the curſe of Sin.

3. This puniſhment doth not hinder Salvation, though it be continued.

I ſhall lay down theſe Propoſitions, to clear up this Matter.

1. God intended not in the acceptance of Chriſt's Mediation to remove in this Life all the Puniſhment, denounced after the Fall. God takes away the Eternal, but not the Temporal. For this very Puniſhment was threatned after his acceptance of Chriſt's Mediation, and after the Compact and Covenant between the Father and the Son, about their Redemption of Mankind, becauſe the Promiſe preceded the Threatning, and the Mediatory Covenant preceded the Promiſe. Some parts of Chriſt's purchaſe are only payable in another Life, and ſome fruits of Redemption God intends for growth only in another Soil; ſuch are freedom from Pain, Diſeaſes, Death, and Sin. And therefore the laſt Day, when Believers ſhall be gather'd together, is called by way of excellency, the Day of Redemption, Eph. 4. 30. as if we had nothing of Redemption properly in this Life, becauſe we have it not compleat. And it is called upon this account, the time of refreſhing and the time of the reſtitution of all things, Act. 3. 19, 21. when all things ſhall be reſtored to their primitive Compleatneſs, and we ſhall have a full refreſhment by a removal of all the Evils which we ſuffer by reaſon of Sin. So that the Satisfaction made by Chriſt extends not to a preſent removal of all the effects of the Curſe, Pains of the Body, Death of Relations, &c. The ground is not reſtored to its original Vigour and Fruitfulneſs, Man muſt ſtill eat his Bread in the ſweat of his Brows, Women muſt ſtill bring forth with Sorrow, our Lives muſt waſte by a continual invaſion of Weakneſſes and Diſeaſes, we muſt drop one after another into the Grave, ſend ſome before us, and leave others to come after us; tho' God in Mercy doth mitigate theſe, in ſome more, in ſome leſs, according to his Sovereign Pleaſure; and tho' thoſe Curſes do materially continue, yet they are attended with a Bleſſing, the fruits of Chriſt's Purchaſe. But the full value of Chriſt's Satisfaction will appear, when there ſhall be a new Heaven, and a new Earth, when the day of Redemption ſhall dawn, and all Tears be wiped from Believers Eyes. But God never promiſed the total removal of them in this Life, to any Saint, no tho' he ſhould have all the Faith and Holineſs of all the Catalogue of Saints in the Book of Life centred in him.

2. Chriſt never intended in the payment of the price of our Redemption, the preſent removal of them. He interpoſed himſelf before this Sentence was pronounced (for the Promiſe preceded the Threatning) and therefore ſhew'd himſelf content, that thoſe Marks ſhould be ſet upon that Sin, though he prevented by his Mediation the dreadful Sentence of eternal Death. Chriſt never expected it; for the Compact between the Father and the Son did not run in this Strain. Chriſt's Enemies were not preſently upon his aſcenſion to be made his Foot-ſtool, whereof Death is not the leaſt; but he was to ſit at the right-hand of God expecting it; neither can we expect to be rid of our Burdens, till Chriſt's Victory over his Enemies be fully compleat. He ſent after his Aſcenſion the Spirit to be our Comforter, which ſuppoſeth a ſtate wherein we ſhould need Comfort; and when are we under a greater neceſſity of Comfort, than when the puniſhment of Sin is actually inflicted on us? The Spirit was to comfort us in the abſence of our Saviour, and conſequently in the abſence and want of thoſe fruits of Redemption which are not yet compleated.

3. Chriſt intended, and did actually take away the Curſe of thoſe Puniſhments from every Believer. As Chriſt came to take away the guilt of Sin, ſo by conſequence he took away the curſe of Puniſhment; for as he was not a Miniſter of Sin, ſo he was not a Miniſter of the Curſe, Gal. 2. 17. for he himſelf, by taking the Curſe upon himſelf, took it off from us; ſo that tho' the Curſe remains materially, yet it doth not formally. As when Man felt his Underſtanding and Will were not deſtroyed, but the purity and healthfulneſs of thoſe Faculties which made up his well-being were loſt: So in Redemption, the temporal Puniſhment is not remov'd, but the Curſe, which is the ſting in that Puniſhment, and is indeed the eſſential part of it, is remov'd, ſince the Anger of God is pacified by the death of Chriſt. Death was a Curſe upon Man for Sin, yet the death of a Believer falls not under that title; becauſe Chriſt hath taken away the ſting, 1 Cor. 15. 55, 56. Oh death! where is thy ſting, &c. And the Victory over it, he ſaith, is given us through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Whence the Apoſtle puts even Death it ſelf, and things preſent, into the Catalogue of Priviledges, upon the account of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 3. 22. Life or Death, or things preſent, or things to come, all are yours, and you are Chriſts, and Chriſt is Gods. Not that death ſimply in it ſelf is a Priviledge, but death as conquered, and as attended with conſequent Bleſſings, is ſo to a Believer. Now the ſame reaſon is for all the other parts of the Curſe, which were either Prologues to, or Attendants upon Death. And as Chriſt deſtroyed Death by raiſing his own Body from from the Grave, thereby taking from Death the power of perpetually retaining Man: So in the ſame manner he hath took away thoſe Puniſhments that they ſhall not perpetually remain, tho' they do for a time. But when Death is ſwallowed up in Victory, all the Attendants on it ſhall undergo the ſame Fate. Though the Curſe was not immediately the work of the Devil, yet that which procur'd it was; and Chriſt's Intention being to take away Sin, it was alſo to take away the Curſe, which was intentionally the Devil's work, his chief aim being to bring Men under the Curſe, by enticing them to ſin. The end of his Manifeſtation was, to deſtroy the works of the Devil, 1 John 3.8. Chriſt therefore bore our Infirmities, our natural penal Infirmities, though not our natural ſinful ones, unleſs Morally, i. e. by ſuffering for them; he bore the infirmity of our Nature, though not our perſonal Infirmities. He endur'd Pain, and Grief, and Death, and greater than we can endure; but he did not bear every particular Pain and Diſeaſe which ariſeth from Sin, and a particular Cauſe; yet by ſatisfying the Juſtice of God, which required Death, he ſatisfied for all other Pains, which were parts of the Curſe, though he did not formally feel them; ſo that no longer they remain as a Curſe, no more than death it ſelf is a Curſe to a Believer. Now, as Chriſt by his death upon the Croſs did remove the ſting of Death from every Believer, and ſanctifie it, though he did not die every kind of Death which a Man may die; ſo by enduring Pain and Grief, and being a Man of Sorrows, he took away the ſting of all thoſe Pains, which are fruits of the Curſe, though they were of a different kind from thoſe he hath himſelf endured. This I have added, to prevent an Objection that may be made, that Chriſt endured not this particular Pain, and therefore the Curſe is not taken away.

4. Hence it will follow, that to a Believer the very nature of theſe Puniſhments is alter'd. Whence ariſeth a mighty difference between the ſame Puniſhments when ſuffered by a Believer, and by an unregenerate Man. Though they are materially the ſame, yet not formally nor eventually. In the one the ſting remains, in the other it is pull'd out. The one is an earneſt of eternal Torture, and a ſprinkling of Hell; the other is in order to Salvation, and ſanctified by the Blood of Chriſt. Chriſt by his Croſs hath made our Judgments to become Phyſick, and turn'd a Believers Puniſhments into Purges. The intention of the Agent makes a vaſt difference. There is a great difference between a Puniſhment edg'd with a Princes Wrath, and thoſe which are ſweetened with a Father's Affection; much difference between a Chirurgeon's Launce, and a Tyrant's Wound. The Cord that binds a Malefactor and a Patient, may be made of the ſame Hemp, and a Knife only go between; but it binds the Malefactor to Execution, the other to a Cure. In a Believer they bring forth the peaceable fruits of Righteouſneſs, Heb. 12. 11. ſuch fruits of Righteouſneſs which engender Peace and Joy in the Soul. That which brings ſuch excellent Effects is rather an Argument of Love in the Inflicter, and ſo cannot come under the full notion of a Puniſhment. God comforts the Iſraelites that were to go into Captivity, by a Goſpel Promiſe, Hoſ. 14. 4. I will heal their back-ſlidings, I will love them freely, for mine Anger is turned away from them. The Puniſhment was continued, for they never returned into their Country in the form of a Common-wealth; but the Anger was removed, ſo that the Captivity of the Believers among them, was not the effect of God's Wrath as a Judge, ſince they were under his magnificent Love as a Father. The change of our relation to God makes a change in the nature of the Puniſhment; though the Puniſhment threatned may be inflicted and continued, yet the Anger in that Puniſhment may be turned away.

5. Therefore all temporal Puniſhments of Original Sin, though they remain, do not prejudice a Believer's preſent Intereſt.

1. They cut not off his relation to God. A Son is as much a Son under the Rod, as in the Boſom; neither the Father's ſtroke, nor the Child's Grief, diſſolve that dear Relation: Nay, a Father may ſhew more of a true paternal Affection in his Chaſtiſements than in his Careſſes. The Branches which are batter'd with Sticks, may be nearer the Root than thoſe that flouriſh at their eaſe. Chriſt while a Man of Sorrows was pronounced by God, his well beloved Son, and bore our Puniſhment, not only without forfeiting his Father's Affection, but with a high Gratification of him: Neither doth God's viſiting the Seed of Chriſt with Stripes, cut off their Relation to him, Pſal. 89. 32. Then will I viſit their Tranſgreſſions with Rods. Whoſe Tranſgreſſions? ver. 30. His Children. Whoſe Children? Even the Children of him whom he would make the firſt born higher than the King's of the Earth, v. 27. Which cannot be underſtood literally of David, or his Lineal Poſterity in the Jewiſh Kingdom, who were never higher than the King's of the Earth.

2. They debar not from the Preſence of God. God may be, and is as near to us in ſupporting, as he is in Puniſhing. 'Tis not the Cloud that interpoſeth between the Sun and us, that alters the Sun's courſe, or obſtructs its Influences. Chriſt took not off the badges of Original Guilt from thoſe Diſciples which had the greateſt intereſt in his Affections; he left them in a ſinful World to endure the fruits of Sin; he ſent them not to Eaſe, Pleaſure, and a Quiet and Painleſs Life, but to Labour, Toil, and Sweat; yet promiſed that he would abide with them, that he and his Father would manifeſt themſelves to them. And he turned that Sweat and Pain which was the fruit of Sin, by his Preſence with them, to be inſtrumental for the Glory of God, and the good of themſelves in the World.

3. They break not the Covenant: His Rod and his Stripes, tho' they ſeem to break our Backs, make no breaches in his Covenant, Pſalm 89. 32, 33, 34. he will viſit Tranſgreſſion with Rods, but he will not ſuffer his faithfulneſs to fail, nor break his Covenant. No, they are rather Covenant Mercies, when they break our Hearts, and are means by his Grace to make our Stony Hearts more Fleſhy. He makes even thoſe diſpenſations which were pronounced for Puniſhment, to bring forth Covenant Mercies, and the rich fruits of his Grace to grow upon the ſowre Crab-ſtock of his Judgments. Jacob in Gen. 49. is ſaid to bleſs his Children, tho' he predicts ſmart Afflictions to come upon them; they are rank'd among the Bleſſings, becauſe the Covenant ſhould remain firm. The Laſh removes not the Inheritance. Auſtin ſaith well, Noli attendere quam pœnam habes in flagello, ſed quem locum in Teſtamento.

6. Add to all this, That the firſt Promiſe ſecures a Believer under the ſufferings of thoſe Puniſhments. God's Affection in the Promiſe of bruiſing the Serpent's Head, was more illuſtrious than his Wrath in the Threatning. There are the Bowels of a Father in the Promiſe, before there was the voice of a Judge in the Sentence. God brought Sugar with his Potion, and adminiſtred his Cordial before he ſtruck with his Launce. And therefore that Threatning which commenc'd after the Promiſe, can no more prejudice the Fruits of the Promiſe to a Believer, than the Law, which was given 430 Years after the Promiſe to Abraham, could diſannul that, and make it of no effect, as the Apoſtle argues in another Caſe, Gal. 3. 17. Much leſs can the Threatning denounced immediately after the Promiſe, change the Veracity of God, in that which was freſh in his Mind at the very time of his Threatning.

Ob. But it may be askt, What is the Reaſon theſe Puniſhments are continued ſince the Redemption wrought by Chriſt?

Anſ. 'Tis frequent with God to inflict a temporal Puniſhment after Pardon. Not as the Papiſts aſſert, in order to Satisfaction. Moſes his Unbelief hindred him from coming unto Canaan, ſo that when he deſired to go over Jordan, God was wrath with him, cut him off ſhort, and commands him ſilence, Deut. 3. 25, 26. Speak to me no more of this matter.

There are Reaſons,

1. On God's part. 2. On our part.

1. On God's part.

1. 'Tis congruous to the Wiſdom of God to leave them upon us while we are in the World. Since God created Man to gain Glory by his Actions, but was preſently after his Creation diſgrac'd and diſparag'd by him; it ſeems agreeable to the Wiſdom of God, not immediately to bring him to his former State, but to leave ſome Marks of his Diſpleaſure upon Man, to mind him of the State whence he was fallen, the Miſery he contracted, and the neceſſity of flying to his Mercy for Succour.

2. 'Tis congruous to the Holineſs of God. God keeps up thoſe Puniſhments as the Rector and Governour of the World, to ſhew his deteſtation of that Sin which brought a Diſorder and Deformity upon the Creation, and was the firſt Act of Diſhonour to God, and the firſt pollution of the Creature. 'Tis an high Vindication of the Holineſs and Authority of God, and the Majeſty and Purity of his Law, to puniſh Sin in them that are dear to him upon another's Righteouſneſs, whereby he evidenceth, that he hates Sin in all, and will not wink at it, or approve of it. So he pardoned David, but for the Honour of his Name, which had been blaſphemed by occaſion of David's Sin, he would leave the Smart of it upon his Family, 2 Sam. 12. 10, 14.

3. 'Tis a Declaration of his Juſtice. 'Tis not congruous to the Juſtice of God not to leave ſome Marks of his Anger againſt that Sin, which cauſed him to be at the expence of his Son's Blood, and is the Source of all thoſe Evils whereby God is injur'd, for which the Redeemer bled, and by which the Spirit is grieved. Since Pardon doth not, neither can alter the demerit of Sin, but that will continue; and what is once meritoriouſly a capital Crime in its own Nature, can never be otherwiſe: God may for the demonſtration of his Juſtice, inflict and continue ſomething upon the Creature, though he free him from actual condemnation. We ſhould not be ſo ſenſible of the Juſtice of God in the Death of Chriſt, did we not feel ſome Strokes of it upon our ſelves, nor what the Purchaſe of our Redemption did coſt our Saviour: What we hear doth not ſo much affect as what we feel. That which brought Diſorder into God's Government of the World, and made him change the Scene of his Providence, may very juſtly have ſome ſignal Remark upon it, notwithſtanding the Redemption, eſpecially when the Fruits of it are not fully compleat. For ſince Man was the immediate End of the Creation of this lower World, and ſince all Creatures were made for the ſervice of Man, that he might be fit for the ſervice of his righteous Creator, he did by his Fall violate the Order of the Creation, and ſubjected it to the ſervice of the Devil, a corrupt Creature, and an Enemy to God the chief Lord of the World, and ſo did deprave the Order of the Univerſe, and endeavour to fruſtrate the End of God, and the End of all the Creatures. 'Tis very rational to think, that tho' God out of his infinite Compaſſion would not loſe his Creature, yet that he ſhould ſet ſuch a Badge upon him, that ſhould make him ſenſible of a Depravation he had wrought in the World.

4. 'Tis uſeful to magnify his Love. We ſhould not be ſenſible of what our Saviour ſuffered, nor how tranſcendently he lov'd us, if the Puniſhment of Sin had been preſently removed upon the firſt Promiſe. Nay how then could he have died in the fulneſs of Time, which was neceſſary to the demonſtration of God's Love, ſatisfaction of his Juſtice, and the ſecurity of the Creature's Happineſs? God adds the Threatning to the Promiſe, as a dark Colour to ſet off and beautifie the brighter. As Chriſt ſuffer'd that he might have compaſſion on us; ſo are we puniſhed that we might have an Eſtimation of him. When Paul cries out of the Body of Death, ſo when we cry out of the Puniſhment of Sin, it ſhould raiſe our Thankfulneſs for redeeming Love, I thank God through Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 7. 24, 25. We never know the worth of Mercy, till we feel the weight of Miſery. The ſharper the Pains of Sin, the higher are our Valuations of redeeming Mercy. In Iſa. 4. 2, In that Day ſhall the Branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious. In what Day? After great Puniſhments, v. 1. and in the foregoing Chapter. He appears moſt beautiful to us when we are under the laſh for Sin. As Sin continues in us, that the juſtifying Grace of Chriſt's Righteouſneſs might more appear to us, ſo Puniſhment continues on us, that redeeming Love might be more prized by us.

2. On our parts. 'Tis uſeful to us,

1. To make us abhor our firſt Defection and Sin. 'Twas great, and is not duly conſidered by us. This Sin of Adam is the worſt that ever was committed in the World; Extenſively, though not Intenſively, worſe than the Sin of Judas, or the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. In reſpect that thoſe are but the Effects of it, and Branches of that corrupt Root. Alſo becauſe thoſe Sins hurt only the Perſons ſinning, but this drew down Deſtruction upon the whole World, and drove Thouſands into everlaſting Fire and Brimſtone. 'Tis not fit that this which was the murder of all Mankind, the diſorder of the Creation, the diſturbing of God's Reſt in the Works of his Hands, ſhould be paſt over without a Scar left upon us to make us ſenſible of the greatneſs of the Evil. Though the Wounds be great upon our Souls, yet they do not ſo much affect us as thoſe ſtrokes upon our Bodies. This certainly was one main end of God in this; to what purpoſe elſe did he (after the Promiſe of Reſtauration, and giving our firſt Parents the comfort of hearing the Head of their great Seducer threatned to be bruiſed by the Seed of the Woman) order this Puniſhment, but to put them in mind of the cauſe of it, and ſtir up a ſtanding Abhorrency of it in all Ages of the World? Had not this been his intent, he would never have uſher'd it in by a Promiſe,

* Kellet. Miſcel.

but ipso facto, have showered down a destroying Judgment upon the World, as he did upon Sodom, without any comfortable Word preceding. God inflicts those Punishments both to shew his own, and excite our detestation of this Sin: He binds us in those Fetters to shew us our Work and our Transgression, wherein we have exceeded, Job 36. 8, 9.

2. To make us fear to sin, and to purge it out. Sin hath riveted it self so deep, that ealie Medicines will not displace it. It hath so much of our Affections, that gentle means will not divorce us from it: We shall hate it most, when we reap the Punishment of it. Punishment is inflicted as a guard to the Law, and the security of Righteousness from the corrupt Inclinations of the Creature. So it is ἰατρεία ψυχῆς, as Plato calls Punishment. As Death is continu'd for the destruction of Sin in the Body, so are the lesser Punishments continu'd for the restraint of Sin in our Lives. We need further Conversions, closer Applications of our selves to God, more quick Walks to him, and Fixedness with him. God's Smitings are to quicken our Turnings. As it was the fruit of Jacob's trouble to take away Sin, Isa. 27. 9. so it is a great End of God in those common Punishments of Mankind to weaken Corruption in a Believer by them. Therefore when we have any more remarkable Sense of those Punishments, let us see what Wounds our Sin gets thereby: How our Hatred of it is encreased. If we find such gracious Effects, we shall have more reason to bless God for it, than complain of it. Oh happy Troubles, when they repair, not ruine us; when they pinch us and cure us, like Thunder, which, though it trouble the Air, disperses the infectious Vapours mixed with it, or the Tide, which, though turning the Stream of the River against its natural Course, carries away much of the Filth with it at its Departure.

3. To exercise Grace. Punishments of themselves have no power to set any Grace on work, but rather excite our Corruptions; but the Grace of God accompanying them makes them beneficial for such an End. God hath to a Believer altered the Commission of such Punishments, they are to exercise our Faith, improve our Patience, draw us nearer in Acts of recumbency; but he hath given them no order to impair our Grace, waste our Faith, or deaden our Hopes.

1. Faith and Trust, 1 Tim. 5. 5. She that is desolate trusts in God. The lower the State, the greater necessity, and greater obligation to trust; such Exercises manifest, that the Condition we are in is sanctified to us. As Sin is suffered to dwell in a regenerate Man to occasion the Exercise of Faith, so is the Punishment of Sin continued for the same End. The continuance of it is a mighty ground of our confidence in God. We experiment the Righteousness of God in his Threatning; and it is an evidence he will be the same in his Promise. When we bear the Marks of his punitive Justice, it is an evidence that he will keep up the credit of his Mercy in the Promise, as well as of his Justice in the Punishment, both being pronounced at the same time; the Good of the one is as sure by God's Grace to our Faith, as the Smart of the other is by our Desert to that Sin. The continuance therefore of those Punishments may be used by a Believer, as a means to fix a stronger confidence in God; for if he were not true to the one, we might suspect his truth in the other; If God should be careless of maintaining the Honour of his Truth in his Threatnings, we should have reason to think that he would be careless of maintaining the Honour of it in his Promises, and thereupon be filled with Despondencies. What comfort could we have in an Unrighteous God? The Righteousness of God in inflicting Punishment is but a Branch of that essential Righteousness of his Nature, which obligeth him to be righteous in the performing his Promise too. 'Tis a mighty support to Faith, that the Righteous God loveth Righteousness.

2. Obedience in a Believer hath a greater Lustre by them. It was the Glory of Job that he preserv'd his Integrity under the smartest Troubles. To obey a God always smiling is not so great an Act of Loyalty, as to obey a God frowning and striking. 'Tis the Crown of our Obedience to follow our God, though he visits us with Stripes. 'Tis a noble Temper to love that Hand which strikes us, and chearfully serve that Father which lasheth us: Our Obedience is too low when it must be excited by a succession of Favours, and cannot run to God unless he allures it by Smiles. 'Tis then a generous and sincere Obedience, when we can embrace him with a Sword in his Hand, trust him though he kill us, love him though he stone us, and as the Persians did by the Sun, adore him when he scorcheth, as well as when he refresheth us. Were these Punishments wholly absent, we should not have a Rise for so heroick Faith and Love; and our Holiness in this State would want much of its Lustre.

3. Humility. These Punishments are left upon us to allay our Pride, and be our Remembrancers of our deplorable Miscarriage. It had been an occasion of Pride in us to be freed from Punishment at the first appearance of a Mediator. 'Tis reasonable the Soul should have occasions to exercise it self in a Grace contrary to that first Sin Pride, which was the cause of the Fall. We affected to be Gods, and Punishment is left that we may know we are but Men, which is the end of Judgments, Psal. 9. 20. Put them in fear, O Lord, that the Nations may know they are but Men; we should otherwise think our selves Gods. We are so inclined to Sin, that we need strong Restraints, and so swell'd with a natural Pride against God, that we need Thorns in the Flesh to let out the corrupt Matter. The constant hanging the Rod over us makes us lick the Dust, and acknowledge our selves to be altogether at the Lord's Mercy. Though God hath pardon'd us, he will make us wear the Halter about our Necks to humble us.

4. Patience. Were there no Punishments, there would be but little occasion for Patience. This Grace would not have had its extensive Exercise, its full Formation without such Strokes left upon the Creature. Resignation to God, which is the beauty of Grace, would not come to its due Maturity and Stature without such Trials. So that in these Reasons of the continuance, we see they are rather Advantages to Salvation, than Hindrances, by promoting through the influence of God's Grace, those Graces in us which are necessary to a happy State.

Use.

1. See the infinite Mercy of God, who, when upon the Defection of our first Parents he might have burnt up the whole World as he did Sodom, would upon the Redeemers account, who stept in, impose so light a Punishment upon that Sin; 'tis but light in comparison of what the nature of Sin deserves, deſerves, every Sin being a Contempt of the Majeſty of God, and a Slight of his Authority; and that Sin having greater Aggravations attending it. 'Tis a merciful Puniſhment, it might have been an everlaſting Damnation: God might have left us to the firſt Sentence of the Law, and made no exchange of eternal Death for temporal Pains: He might have been deaf to the Voice of a Mediator, and put his Mercy to Silence as he did Moſes, Speak no more of this matter; but his Bowels pull his Juſtice by the Arm, and hinder that fatal Stroke; and a Mediator by his interpoſition, breaks off the full Blow from us, by taking it upon himſelf, and ſuffers only ſome few ſmart Drops to light upon us. Oh wonderful Mercy! that our Puniſhment ſhould not hinder, but rather further our everlaſting Happineſs by incomprehenſible Grace. Let not then our Puniſhments for Sin hinder our Thankfulneſs. Let our Mouths ſwell with Praiſe, while our Bodies crumble away by Diſeaſes, and Relations drop from us by Death. Let us love God's Glory, admire his Mercy, while we feel his Arrows: Whatever our Puniſhments are, there is more matter for Praiſe than Murmuring.

2. How ſhould we bewail Original Sin, the firſt Fall of Man? 'Tis a great ſlighting of God not to take notice either of his judicial or fatherly Proceedings. As we are to lament any particular Sin more eſpecially when the Judgments of God, which bear the Marks of that Sin in their Foreheads, are upon a Nation or Perſon; ſo, though we are to bewail the Sin of our Nature at all times, yet more ſignally when the Strokes of God, the Remembrancers of it, are moſt ſignally upon us. A Child doth more particularly think of his Fault when he is under the correcting Rod for it. We ſhould ſcarce think of Original Sin, if we did not feel Original Puniſhment. All the Pains of Sin ſhould be conſidered as God's Sermon to us, and we ſhould under them be afflicted with that Sin, as we may ſuppoſe Adam and Eve were, when they firſt heard the Puniſhment denounc'd in Paradice, when they had a Senſe of the flouriſhing Condition they had loſt for a ſlight Temptation. To turn Sorrow for Pain into Sorrow for our firſt Sin, is to ſpiritualize our Grief, and ſanctifie our Paſſion.

3. What an Argument for Patience under Puniſhments is here? The continuance of them doth not hinder our Salvation. Shall a living Man complain, a Man for the Puniſhment of his Sin? For ſuch a Puniſhment that doth not hinder his eternal Welfare, but by the Grace of God, and the exerciſe of Faith, rather promote it? God promiſed as well as threatned: Both his Mercy and Righteouſneſs directs him to that which is moſt for his Honour, and our Good. Let us not by any Impatience charge infinite Wiſdom with Blindneſs or Unrighteouſneſs. They were Puniſhments at firſt, but by Faith in Chriſt, the Deportment of a Judge is changed into that of a Father. Druſius hath an Obſervation, Pſal. 56. 10. In God will I praiſe his Word, in the Lord will I praiſe his Word. The firſt Word Elohim, is a Name belonging to God as a Judge, the ſecond Word Jehovah is a Name of Mercy; I will praiſe God, whether he deal with me in a way of Juſtice or in a way of Mercy, when he hath Thunder in his Voice as well as when he hath Honey under his Tongue. Oh how ſhould we praiſe God, and pleaſure our ſelves by ſuch a Frame! When our Diſtreſſes lie hard upon us, we ſhould juſtifie God's Holineſs. So the Pſalmiſt, or rather Chriſt in the bearing our Puniſhment, Pſalm 22. 1. But thou art Holy, when he expoſtulates with God why he had forſaken him, juſtifies God's Holineſs. Howſoever thou dealeſt with me, thou art Holy in all thy ways. Thou doſt me no Wrong; why ſhould I complain when Holineſs and hatred of Sin guides thee, in all thoſe Actings with me?

4. How earneſt ſhould we be to get rid of Sin? By Pardon, by Sanctification. Guilt is the Sting of Puniſhment. Sin only embitters Trouble. The Remiſſion and Mortification of Sin is the Health of the Soul. If the Arrow's Head be out of a Wound, the Cure will be more eaſie. Look upon my Affliction, and my Pain, and forgive all my Sin, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 25. 8. Forgiveneſs of Sin would mitigate the ſharpneſs of his Pain.

5. How ſhould we act Faith on God in Chriſt before, and under ſuch a condition of Puniſhment? As we can never love God too much, becauſe he is the higheſt Good, ſo we can never truſt God too much, becauſe he is one of immutable Truth; when we are in Straits, it is not for want of Faithfulneſs in God, but for want of Faith in us, that we are many times not preſerved. We diſtruſt God, and this is the cauſe we fall into many Diſtreſſes, which otherwiſe would not come upon us, or be quickly removed from us. Did we graſp the Promiſes cloſely, and plead them earneſtly, we ſhould often find the Deliverance we deſire. We pray, but we pray not in Faith, we cry for Deliverance but not with Confidence, we plead God's Power but forget his Promiſe. Many temporal Promiſes are not perform'd to us, not for want of Truth in God, but for want of Faith in us. Particular fiduciary Acts will draw out the Riches of a Promiſe, for want of which we remain poor in the midſt of Abundance. Some think that the Promiſe made to Joſiah of his dying in Peace, which Phraſe is uſually meant in Scripture of a peaceable Death upon the Bed, was not performed, becauſe Joſiah was out of the way againſt the Precept of God, and therefore could not act Faith requiſite to the fulfilling of that Promiſe, for Faith is much dampt in its Actings under preſent contracted Guilt. * This Faith in Promiſes for outward Preſervation, is not an abſolute, infallible Aſſurance that God will beſtow ſuch outward things (becauſe the Promiſes themſelves are not abſolute) but it is rather an indefinite act of recumbency, and ſubmiſſion, referring it to his good Pleaſure towards us. But it is certain we are very much defective in acting Faith upon Promiſes for temporal Mercies, becauſe it is an Epidemical Diſtemper in us to truſt God with our Souls rather than with our Bodies and outward Concerns. * Tho. Good-win.

1. Exerciſe Faith before ſuch a time. Furniſh your ſelves with the Comforts of the Covenant, and the efficacy of the death of Chriſt. In bodily Diſtempers our Minds are diſcompoſed and we cannot have that freedom of Thoughts and ſpiritual Reflections. This is the way to engage God, who is the beſt Aſſiſtant, a very preſent help in time of Trouble.

2. Exerciſe it in the uſe of ſpiritual means. God never commanded us to truſt him but in his own Methods. That is not truſt in God which is attended with any wilful Omiſſions. If we be careful in doing our Duty, God will be careful in doing what belongs to him. Prayer is the beſt means for Faith to exerciſe it ſelf in. A ſpirit of Prayer before-hand, is a ſign of good Succeſs. When the Heart is drawn out to cry, it is a ſign God ſtands ready with the Mercy in his Hand. Times of

Diſtreſs

Diſtreſs are times of calling upon God, Pſal. 18. 6. In my diſtreſs I called upon the Lord, and he heard my cry. God is to be acknowledged in all our ways, Prov. 3. 6. In the beginning by Prayer for his Direction, in the end by Praiſes for the Succeſs. We are uſually more earneſt in Trouble. We have not at all times an equal Fervency. Chriſt himſelf (ſome ſay) had not, for when he was in his Agony he prayed more earneſtly than before, Luke 22. 44.

3. Act Faith upon the Relation God bears to you. He is our Father. We truſt earthly Fathers, and are confident they will not abuſe us. How much more ought we to truſt our heavenly Father, and not doubt of his Sincerity towards us? The greater the Trouble, the more we ſhould plead God's relation to us. Our Saviour in the Garden, Mat. 26. 39, 42. at his entrance into his Paſſion for us, prays to God by the title of my Father, whereas at other times he calls God Father without that appropriation; But now he would excite his Confidence, and truſt in God, and thoſe Promiſes he had made him to aſſiſt him in that hour.

4. Act Faith upon the Attributes of God. There is nothing in God can affright a Believer. There is not an Attribute but ſeems fixed in God to encourage our dependance on him in any Strait, Wiſdom, Mercy, Truth, Omniſcience, Power, Juſtice too (for what comfort could we have to truſt in an unjuſt God?) All which Attributes are promiſed to be aſſiſtant to a Believer in any caſe of Need, in the Covenant of Grace, where God makes himſelf over to us as our God, and therefore all that God hath, and is, is promiſed there for our good. Upon the Power of God. God's Omnipotence was the ground of our Saviour's Prayer to him in his Diſtreſs, and that which the Apoſtle ſeems to intimate his eying of, Heb. 5. 7. He offered up Prayers unto him that was able to ſave him from death. And, Pſal. 16. 1. The Pſalmiſt, or rather Chriſt, pleads the power of God. Preſerve me, O Lord, for in thee do I put my truſt, מכתם Aquila renders it ſtrong. Plead the truth of God in his Promiſe. The Promiſe that preceded the Threatning, viz. The bruiſing the Serpent's head, the defeating all his Plots and Deſigns, whereof this was one, to bring Man into a ſtate of Puniſhment. There is a Promiſe which hath been eſpecially tryed and made good, though all in the Book of God have been found true, Pſal. 18. 30. The Word of the Lord is tryed. Not one word but the truth of it hath been tryed; but eſpecially this word, That God is a Buckler to them that truſt in him, i. e. That he will preſerve and defend depending Believers.

5. Act Faith upon Chriſt. Hath God delivered Chriſt to Death? It muſt be for ſome glorious end; not for deſtruction of the Creature, that might have been done without the death of his Son; but for remiſſion; if ſo, there is ſufficient ground to truſt him for every thing elſe. We have a merciful High Prieſt, which encourageth us to make our Addreſſes to him. He cannot but be touched with the feeling of our Infirmities, our penal Infirmities which he ſuffered, our ſinful Infirmities for which he ſuffered. Where can he ſhew his Mercy but in our Miſery? Are we under God's Strokes? Chriſt himſelf felt them, that he might the better pity us. Are we in ſuch caſes tempted to deſpond and diſtruſt? He felt ſuch fiery Darts of the Devil that he might the better commiſerate us. Run to him and cry out, Bleſſed Redeemer, Compaſſionate High Prieſt, let thy pity break out to allay my Grief, and ſupport my Weakneſs.

Take a few Encouragements to fiduciary Acts.

1. Nothing is more pleaſing to God. The continuance in Faith is the neceſſary condition of our Salvation. Nothing more honours him. We honour his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, when we acknowledge that he hath a ſingular care of his Creatures, and truſt him in his own Methods; we own his Skill in governing, and his Goodneſs in bringing every thing about to the beſt end. Chriſt hath given us the higheſt example of Truſt, and highly pleaſed God in it, in coming into the World to dye upon God's bare Word and Oath. 'Tis all we can do to glorifie God. Other Graces glorifie ſome particular Atribute, but confidence in God glorifies all in the lump, his Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs, Faithfulneſs, Mercy, Truth, Omniſcience, and Power. There is no Attribute but gives a particular encouragement to Faith, and there is no Attribute but Faith returns a Revenue of Glory to. Deſpondency diſparageth the Father's Affection and the Redeemer's Love; if we do not truſt him, we imply that he hath not either Wiſdom, or Love, or Power, or Faithfulneſs enough to be truſted by us, and that his Word is of no value.

2. Nothing is more ſucceſsful. 'Tis the Argument the Pſalmiſt, or rather Chriſt uſeth, Pſal. 16. 1. Preſerve me. Why? Becauſe I truſt in thee. Truſt in God is a ſtrong Argument to prevail with God for Preſervation. All the ancient Fathers were delivered by God upon their truſt, Pſal. 22. 4, 5. Our Fathers truſted in thee, they truſted and thou didſt deliver them, they cryed unto thee, and were delivered, they truſted in thee, and were not confounded. Faith in Goſpel-promiſes is not a Grace of a new date. 'Tis as old as Adam's fall, as old as the Patriarchs, and ſucceſsful in all Ages of the World. They were under New-Covenant Promiſes, and had New-Covenant Deliverances before the Promiſes were actually ſealed by the Blood of Chriſt. How much ſtronger Ground have we of Truſt now? Faith draws out the treaſures of God, and ſets God on work to diſplay both his Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Power, Pſal. 31. 19. How great is thy Goodneſs which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee! Much more when Faith is vigorouſly acted. Unbelief binds God's hands, Faith then draws forth that Power which unbelief locks up. God is firſt the hope of Iſrael, and then the Saviour thereof in times of Trouble, Jer. 14. 8. of every one of Iſrael. Where God inſpires with a humble Confidence in himſelf, there is hope of Succeſs, for God will not fruſtrate the Expectation of that which he hath been the Author of in his Creature. David had found ſuch good evidence of this, that he tells God he would make bold with him upon every occaſion of Fear, Pſal. 57. 3. What time I am afraid I will truſt in thee.

3. Nothing more calms the Spirit. A fiduciary Reliance on God is the way to live free from Fears and Anxieties. Faith is an eſtabliſhing Grace. By Faith we ſtand. What Storms would be in the Minds of poor Paſſengers in a Ship, as great as thoſe in the Sea, if they had no Pilot to direct them? How ſoon would the arrival of a skilful Steers-man, in whom they could confide, and that knew their Shelves and Rocks upon the Coaſt, calm their Diſquiets?

Well then, to ſumm up all, This very Scripture is a Letter of Comfort, writ only to Women in the ſtate of Child-bearing; claim it as your right by Faith. What Comfort is here to appeal from the Threatning to the Promiſe, from God as a Judge, to God as a Father, from God Angry to God

God pacified in Christ? How comfortable is this, that when God seems to fight against you with his Punishments, you can take off the edge of his Weapons by the Pleas of his Promise? Oh blessed God, who arms a Believer against himself, before he arms himself against a Believer! You can never be under the Curse if you have Faith, as long as God is sensible of his own Credit in the Promise. In the material part of the Punishment there is no difference between a Believer and an Unbeliever; Jacob is pinch'd with Famine as well as the Canaanite; but Jacob is in Covenant, and hath a God in Heaven, and a Joseph in Ægypt to preserve him. God directs every Pain in all by his Providence, in Believers by a particular Love; every gripe in all the Physick he gives us. He orders even his Contendings with his Creature in such a measure as the Spirit may not fail before him; Isa. 57. 16.

A DISCOURSE OF THE Sins of the Regenerate.

1 John 3. 9.

Whosoever is born of God doth not commit Sin, for his Seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

THE Apostle having exhorted the Saints to whom he writes in the former Chapter, to abide in Christ, and to do righteousness, v. 28, 29. follows on this Exhortation, with several Arguments and Demonstrations, that a true Christian is not only bound to do so, but that he indeed doth so.

1. From that hope which hath eternal happiness for its Object, v. 2. 3. Where this hope is truly founded, it will inflame us with a desire and endeavour after Holiness, which is a necessary means to attain it. There will be an endeavour to be like that Head here, which they hope to be perfectly like hereafter.

2. From the contrariety of Sin to the Law of God. 'Tis not reasonable, neither can there be such a disingenuous disposition in any, to transgress the Laws of that Person from whom only he expects his highest Felicity; and the Law of God being pure and perfect, Sin being contrary unto it, must be filthy and unreasonable. A Christian who is guided by this Law, will not transgress it.

3. From the End of Christ's coming, which was to take away Sin, v. 5. And a Christian ought not to endeavour to frustrate the Ends of Christ's coming, by the nourishment of that which he came to destroy.

4. From the Communion they have with Christ; abiding in him, they sin not; if any Man sin, it is an evident sign he hath not the knowledge of Christ, v. 6. nor ever was conform'd to that Pattern. Where there is a Communion with Christ, it is necessary such an one should be righteous, because Christ was so.

5. From the first Author of Sin, the Devil; he that sins, hath a communion with the Devil, v. 8. as he that doth righteousness, hath a communion with Christ. And to maintain the design and works of the Devil, is to walk contrary to the end and design of Christ, which was to destroy the works of the Devil; those therefore that indulge themselves in Sin, are the Seed of the Devil.

6. From the New Nature of a Christian, which hinders him from Sin, v. 9. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit Sin, &c. Various Expositions there are of this. The greatest difficulty lies in those words; [Doth not commit sin, and cannot sin.]

1. He ought not to sin. Cannot indeed is sometimes taken for ought not; as Acts 4. 20. For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. They had a Physical ability to hold their peace, but morally they could not, because of Christ's Precept to them to publish those things. What we cannot lawfully do, we cannot do; Non possumus quod non jure possumus; what we cannot honourably do, we are said not to be able to do, Mark 6. 5. He could there do no mighty work. Christ had natural Ability to do mighty Works there, but morally he could not, honourably he could not, because of their unbelief, which was a moral hindrance; and according to God's Methods, there was no hope of doing any good among them; their unbelief was so strong, they gave him no opportunity to do any mighty work. But this is not the meaning of cannot here, ought not. For an unrenewed Man ought not to sin any more than a regenerate Man. But the Apostle attributes here something peculiar to the Regenerate, adding the reason [because he is born of God.] Though it carry in it something of an Obligation in a higher manner than upon a meer natural Man: He ought not to sin, not only upon the general Obligation which which lies upon all Men not to sin, but upon the more special one of his State, being a Son of God, which ought to be counted a moral impossibility by a righteous Man. Regeneration gives a Man no advantage to sin, no external licence, no internal liberty or ability to sin; for the Apostle useth this as an Argument to them, as well as an establishment, not to sin, because they are born of God, which was a more special Obligation upon them not to sin, than what they had by nature.

2. He cannot sin so easily. 'Tis not impossible, but difficult for him to sin, because by receiving Grace, he receives a Principle contrary to Sin, and so hath a Principle of Resistance against it: Or, because by that Grace he is inclined not to sin, and so there is inchoativè, an impossibility of sinning, which shall hereafter be perfected; Not a simple impossibility, but secundum quid: He endeavours to work as one born of God, and follows the motions of the Spirit against the Sin to which he is tempted.

He cannot sin, i. e. 'tis a hard matter for him to sin; for considering the efficacy of Grace, and the assistances attending it, it is a difficult thing for a righteous Man to be brought under the power of Sin; he may sin easily in respect of the frailty of the Flesh, but not so easily in regard of the abiding of the Seed in him, which helps him to beware of Sin. Grace being a divine Habit, hath the nature of a Habit, which is to incline the Person to Acts proper to that Habit, and facilitate those Acts, as a Man that hath the Habit of an Art or Trade, can with more ease work in it than any other.

3. He cannot sin, in sensu formali, as he is Regenerate, or ex vi talis nativitatis. Grace cannot sin, because it can do nothing but what pertains to the nature of it; as the Heat cannot cool, Unrighteousness cannot do good. Fire doth not moisten, per se, nor Water naturally heat. But it is not said, The Seed of God cannot sin; but in the Concrete, He that is born of God; and he that hath the Seed remaining in him cannot sin. A gracious Man, as a gracious Man cannot sin, for Grace being a good Habit, is not capable of producing Acts contrary to its nature. Sin in a regenerate Man proceeds not from his Grace, but from his Corruption. Grace cannot be the Principle of Evil. But because his Grace is imperfect, dwelling among remainers of Sin, therefore a Man's Sins, though this Principle in him keeps Sin from attaining a full dominion and superiority. Yet though he doth sin, his Sin is not the proper fruit of the form whereby he is regenerate.

4. He cannot sin, in sensu composito; as long as he is Regenerate, as long as the Seed remains in him, as long as he follows the motions of the Spirit, and Grace, which are able to overcome the motions of Concupiscence; but he may give up the Grace. As an impregnable Tower cannot be taken as long as it is defended by those within; but they may fling away their Arms, and deliver it up. Grace quantum est ex parte sua, renders a Man impeccable, as long as it continues in him; as Innocency did render Adam Immortal, as long as he persisted in it. But we may, ex culpâ nostrâ, lose it by mortal sin, and so perish, as Adam by his own Will lost the integrity of his Nature, and was thereby made subject to Death. This is founded upon a false Hypothesis, viz. That Grace may be lost: And the Text renders the being born of God, and the Seed remaining in us, to be the reason why we cannot sin, not the condition of our not sinning; for if it remains, and we cannot sin therefore, how can any sin come in to expel that which preserves us from it? A Man must cease, according to what the Apostle here writes, to be born of God, before he can sin in that sense the Apostle means.

5. He doth not commit sin, and cannot sin, i. e. Grave peccatum, the mortal Sin, and persist in it. The Sin of unbelief, which is called in Scripture by way of eminency [Sin, and the Sin] 'tis the chief Sin the Spirit convinceth of; 'tis the Sin that easily besets us, Heb. 12. 1. Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, i. e. especially Unbelief. Though this be true, yet it is not the full meaning and sense of it.

6. He doth not commit sin, and cannot sin, as the Devil doth, or as one that is of a diabolical Nature, as one that is acted by the Devil; which is clear by the Antithesis, v. 8. He that commits sin, is of the Devil, for the Devil sins from the beginning. He cannot set himself against Christ, as the Devil doth, as the Pharisees did, in which respect our Saviour calls them the Children of the Devil, for their remarkable and constant opposition to him. He cannot make a practice of Sin, and persist in it, as the Devil doth, who began to sin presently after the Creation, and continueth in it ever since. He sins, the present tense noting the continued act of the Devil. Sin may be consider'd two ways; viz. As to

1. The Act of sin. Thus a Believer sins.

2. The Habit of sin, or custom in it. When a Man runs to sin freely, willingly, and is not displeased with it. Thus a Believer doth not commit sin, nor cannot sin. He commits it not. Potiùs patitur quam facit; he gives not a full consent to it; he hates it while he cannot escape it. He is not such a committer of it, as to be the servant of sin, John 8. 34. He that commits sin, is the servant of sin; because he serves with his mind the Law of God: He bestows not all his Thoughts and Labour upon Sin, in making provision for the flesh, Rom. 13. 14. in being a Caterer for sin: He yields not up his Members as Instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; he doth not let sin reign in his mortal body, nor yield a voluntary obedience to it in the Lusts thereof, Rom. 6. 12, 13. for, being God's Son, he cannot be sins Servant; he cannot sin in such a manner, and so absolutely, as one of the Devil's Children, one born of the Devil.

His Seed remains in him.] His, refers to God, or the Person born of God. God's Seed efficiently, Man's Seed subjectively.

Born of God.] Twice repeated: In the first is chiefly intended the declaration of the State, in the second, the disposition or likeness to God.

Observe 1. The Description of a Christian. [Born of God.

2. The Priviledge of this Birth, or Effects of it.

1. Inactivity to sin; [He doth not commit it.

2. Inability to sin; [He cannot.

3. The ground and reasons of those Priviledges.

1. The inward Form or Principle whereby he is regenerate, which makes him unactive.

2. The efficient Cause, which makes him unable; [Born of God; or likeness to God makes him unable.

4. The latitude of them in regard of the Subject; [Whosoever; every regenerate Man. I intend not to run thorow all the parts of this Text, having only chose it as a bar to presumption, which may be occasioned by the former Doctrine, upon Mens false Suppositions of their having Grace. There needs not any Doctrine from the Text; but if you please take this:

Doct.

Doctrine. There is a mighty difference between the ſinning of a Regenerate and a Natural Man: A Regenerate Man doth not, neither can commit Sin in the ſame manner as an Unregenerate Man doth.

That I may not be miſtaken, obſerve, when I uſe the Word May Sin, I underſtand it of a May of poſſibility, not a May of lawfulneſs: And when I ſay a Regenerate Man cannot ſin ſo or ſo, underſtand it of a ſetled habitual Frame; diſtinguiſh between Paſſion, and Surprize, a ſudden Effort of Nature, and an habitual and deliberate Determination. The Senſe of this cannot I ſhall lay down in ſeveral Propoſitions.

1. It is not meant exclusively of leſſer Sins, or Sins of infirmity. There are Sins of daily incurſion and lighter Skirmiſhes; there are ſome open, ſome ſecret Aſſaults, a multitude of ſecret Faults, Pſal. 19. 12. undiſcernable and unknown. Every good Man is like Jacob, though he hath one Thigh ſound, he hath another halting. I do not find that ever God intended to free any in this Life from the Remainders of Sin: What he hath not evidenc'd to have done in any, we may ſuppoſe he intended not to do. 'Tis a total Apoſtacy, not a partial Fall, that the Covenant provides againſt. Chriſt in his laſt Prayer, prays for Believers Preſervation, and gradual Sanctification, not for their preſent Perfection. The very Office of Advocacy erected in Heaven, ſuppoſeth Sins after Regeneration, and during our Continuance in the World, 1 John 2. 1. My little Children, I write unto you that you ſin not; and if any Man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father. In many things we offend all, James 3. 2. Not only you that are the inferiour ſort of Chriſtians, but we Apoſtles. We is extenſive; All offend in many things. 'Tis implyed in the Lord's Prayer, the daily ſtanding Pattern. As we are to pray for our daily Bread, ſo for a daily Pardon, and againſt daily Temptations, which ſuppoſeth our being ſubject to the one, and our commiſſion of the other. The brighteſt Sun hath its Spots; the cleareſt Moon her dark Parts. The Church in her higheſt Comlineſs in this World hath her blackneſs of Sin as well as of Affliction; becauſe, though Sin be diſmounted from its Throne by Grace, it is not expelled out of its Reſidence: It dwells in us, tho' it doth not rule over us, Rom. 7. 20.. And it cannot but manifeſt it ſelf by its Fruits while it remains. Yet thoſe Sins do not deſtroy our Adoption. Chriſt in his Sermon on the Mount to his Diſciples, ſuppoſeth the inherency of Sin, with the continuance of the relation of Children, Matth. 7. 11. If then you being evil know how to give good Gifts to your Children, how much more ſhall your Father which is in Heaven give good things to them that ask him? He doth acknowledge them Evil while he calls God their Father, and gives them the Title of Children. To ſin is to decline from that Rectitude in an Act, which the Agent ought to obſerve. In this reſpect we ſin, according to the tenour of the Law, in every thing we do, though not according to the tenour of the Goſpel.

2. A Regenerate Man cannot live in the cuſtomary Practice of any known Sin, either of omiſſion or commiſſion.

1. Not in a conſtant omiſſion of known Duties. If a good Man falls into a groſs Sin, he doth not totally omit the performance of common Duties to God: Not that this Attendance on God in his Ordinances doth of it ſelf argue a Man to be a good Man; for many that walk in a conſtant Courſe of Sin, may from natural Conſcience and Education be as conſtant in the performing external Services as he is. 'Tis a proper Note of an Hypocrite, that he will not always delight himſelf in the Almighty, nor always call upon God, Job 27. 10. i. e. not cuſtomarily: Whence it follows, that a Delight in God in Duties of Worſhip, is a Property of a Regenerate Man. An Act of Sin may impair his livelineſs in them, but not cauſe him wholly to omit them. We need not queſtion but David, in the time of his Impenitency, did go to the Tabernacle, attend upon the Worſhip of God: 'Tis not likely that for Ten Months together he ſhould wholly omit it, though no doubt but he was dead-hearted in it, which is intimated when he deſires a free Spirit, Pſal. 51. and prays for quickening, Pſal. 143. 11. one of his Penitential Pſalms. A total neglect of Ordinances and Duties, is a ſhrewd ſign of a total Apoſtacy, and that Grace was never in ſuch a Man's Heart; eſpecially a total omiſſion of Prayer; this is an high Contempt of God, denying him to be the Author of our Mercies, depriving him of the Prerogative of governing the World, diſowning any need of him, any ſufficiency in him, declaring we can be our own Gods, and ſubſiſt of our ſelves without him, and that there is no need of his Bleſſing. Grace, though ſunk under a Sin, will more or leſs deſire its proper Nouriſhment, the Milk of the Word, and other Inſtitutions of God. Nature, though oppreſt by a Diſeaſe, will require Food to keep it alive. A good Man in this Caſe is like the Planets, which tho' they be turned about daily from Eaſt to Weſt, by the motion of the primum mobile, yet they ſtill keep up their proper motion from Weſt to Eaſt, either ſlower or quicker.

2. Not in a cuſtomary commiſſion of any known Sin. To work Iniquity is the proper Character of Natural Men, hence called Workers of Iniquity, Pſal. 5. 5. Thou hateſt all workers of Iniquity. And by the ſame Title are they called by Chriſt at the Day of Judgment; Depart from me all you workers of Iniquity, that contrive, lay the Plat-form of it, and work at it as at a Trade, or as a curious piece of Art. 'Tis one thing to ſin, another to commit or do a Sin, Pſal. 119. 3. They do not Iniquity, they walk in his ways; their uſual, conſtant Courſe is in the way of God; they do not Iniquity, they ſettle not to it, take not pleaſure in it as their Work and way of Livelihood. So it is the Character of an ungodly Man to walk in the ways of Sin. Walking according to the courſe of the World, and fulfilling the Deſires of the Fleſh, are one and the ſame thing, Eph. 2. 2, 3. A good Man may ſtep into a way of Sin, but he walks not in it, to make it either his Buſineſs or Recreation. So walking in Sin, and living in Sin, are put together: What is called walking after the Fleſh, Rom. 8. 1. is called living after the Fleſh, v. 13. which is the ſame with committing Sin in the Text: So ways and doings are joyned together, Zach. 1. 6. To make Sin our Way or Walk, is when a Man chuſes it as a particular Trade and way of living. A good Man in Sin is out of his Way; a wicked Man in Sin is in his Way; a good Man will not have ſo much as one way of Sin, a wicked hath many ways, for he ſeeks out many Inventions. Not one Example of the groſs Fall of a good Man in Scripture, will countenance any Pretence for a Courſe in Sin; for either they were not in a Courſe of Sin, or it was not a Courſe of known Sins.

Noah was drunk but once, yet that was not a Sin of the ſame Hue with that among us. He firſt found out the Fruits of the Vine, Gen. 9. 20.

knew nothing of the ſtrength of the Grape, and therefore might eaſily be overcome by an unuſual Liquor.

Lot's Inceſt was but twice, and that unwillingly: He knew not his Daughters lying down or riſing neither time, Gen. 19. 33, 35. And for his Daughters, ſome think that they thought there was no Man left upon the Earth but their Father, but that is not clear; for Lot had been in Zoar, and departed thence to the Mountain where their Fact was committed. His Drunkenneſs admits of ſome Aggravations; it was no fit Seaſon for him to ſwill after ſo ſharp a Judgment upon Sodom, ſo ſevere a Remark of God upon his Wife, and ſo great a Deliverance to himſelf: Yet this was not a Courſe of Sin; you read no more of it. There is difference between a Man's being drunk, and being a Drunkard, the one notes the Act, the other the Habit and Love of it.

Peter deny'd Chriſt, yet but three times together; not three times with conſiderable Intervals for a full Deliberation. 'Tis probable Peter's Faith was ſo ſtupefy'd (as well as the Faith of thoſe Diſciples that were going to Emmaus, Luke 24. 21. We truſted that it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael; who (and indeed all the Diſciples in ſeveral Paſſages) ſeem'd to expect a temporal Kingdom to be erected by him) as therefore not to judge it fit to hazard himſelf for a Perſon he thought himſelf ſo much miſtaken in. Howſoever it was, it was not a Courſe of Sin, and his Repentance over-rules the Plea for any cuſtomary Tranſgreſſion.

And though the Corinthians were charged with Fornication, and eating things ſacrificed to Idols, yet it ſeems to be out of a corrupt Judgment, as appears by the Apoſtle's diſputing againſt the one, 1 Cor. 6. 13, 14, 15. and againſt the other, 1 Cor. 8. And that neither of thoſe were generally judged to be Sins by the converted Gentiles, as appears by the Decree of the Apoſtles, Acts 15. 28, 29. where they determine againſt both theſe; tho' this was a Courſe of Sin, yet not a Courſe of known Sins; and after they were informed by the Apoſtle of the ſinfulneſs of them, they abſtained: Therefore in the Second Epiſtle *, writ the Year after to them, he charges them not with thoſe former Crimes, but comforts them for their being ſo much caſt down with Sorrow.

* The firſt Epiſtle was writ the 25th Year after the Death of Chriſt, and ſecond Epiſtle the 26th Year according to Baronius.

David's Sin, though lying upon him for about ten or twelve Months, yet it was not a Courſe of Sin; and we find a ſignal Repentance afterwards; but of that after. To walk in a Road of known Sins is the next ſtep to committing Sin as Sin, and manifeſts the Habit of Sin to have a ſtrong and fixed Dominion in the Will.

I ſhall confirm this by ſome Reaſons, becauſe upon this Propoſition depend all the following.

1. Regeneration gives not a Man a Diſpenſation from the Law of God. As Chriſt came not to deſtroy the Law, but to eſtabliſh it, ſo Grace doth not diſpenſe with the Law, but confirms the Authority of it. Habitual Grace is not given us to aſſiſt us in the Breaches of it, but to enable us to the Performance of it. As the Grace of God which hath appeared to all Men, teaches the Doctrine of Holineſs, ſo the Grace of God in us enables us to walk in the way of Holineſs. Grace in a Believer embraceth what the Grace of God teaches. The Moral Laws of God are indiſpenſable in themſelves, and of eternal Verity. Therefore as no Rational Creature, much leſs can a Regenerate Perſon be exempted from that Obedience to the Law, which as a Rational Creature he is bound to obſerve. The Grace of God juſtifying is never conferred without Grace ſanctifying: 'Tis certain, where Chriſt is made Righteouſneſs, he is made Sanctification. 'Tis not congruous to the Divine Holineſs, to look upon a Perſon as Righteous, who hath not a renewed Principle in him, no more than it is congruous to the Divine Juſtice and Holineſs, to look upon him as Righteous, meerly for this Principle ſo imperfect.

2. 'Tis not for the Honour of God to ſuffer a Cuſtom and Courſe of Sin in a renewed Man. 'Tis true, a renewed Man ſhould not voluntarily, nor doth commit willingly even Sins of lighter Infirmities; but God ſuffers thoſe, becauſe they do not wound the Honour of Chriſtianity, though they diſcover a remoteneſs from a State of Perfection. But they do not cuſtomarily fall into great Sins, for it ſeems not congruous to permit ſuch Courſes commonly in any one which would diſgrace Religion, and make that deſpicable in the Eyes of the World, which God hath deſigned in all Ages to honour. Since he hath delivered his Son to Death, to preſerve the Honour of his Law; it ſeems not to conſiſt with his Wiſdom, to let thoſe who enjoy the Fruits of his Death, walk in a cuſtomary Contempt of his Law. Neither can we think that God would permit that in a Believer, which is againſt the very Eſſence of Grace, though he may permit that which is againſt the Beauty and accidental Perfection of it.

3. 'Tis againſt the Nature of the Covenant. In the Covenant we are to take God for our God, i. e. for our chief Good, and laſt End. But a Courſe of Sin is an Adoration of the ſinful Object as the chief Good, and laſt End, becauſe a Man prefers the Creature before God, and loves it ſupremely, contrary to the Will of God. 'Tis eſſential for one in Covenant with God, to have an high valuation of God and his Will. But a Cuſtom of known Sins evidenceth that there is not a worthy and practical Eſteem of God. How can any Condition of the Covenant conſiſt with a conſtant practice of Sin? How can there be Faith where the Precept is not believed? How can there be Love if the Pleaſure of God be not regarded? How can there be Fear if his Authority be wilfully contemned? How can there be a new Heart when there is nothing but an old Frame, and a diabolical Nature? 'Tis a renouncing thoſe Conditions upon which a Right to Heaven is founded. For a Worker of Iniquity walks in thoſe Ways which are prohibited upon pain of not entring into that place of Glory, and ſo doth wilfully refuſe the Acceptance of the Conditions on God's part, and the Performance of the Conditions on his own part, which are neceſſary to God's Glory, and his own Intereſt. 'Tis an Invaſion of God's Right whereby he refuſeth God for his God and Lord, and ſets up himſelf as his own Governour, an affecting vertually an equality with God, and independency on him, which in the common Nature of Sin, is vertually the ſame with that of the Devil, who ſinned from the Beginning; and therefore a Courſe in Sin, one that is born of God doth not continue in. Perhaps the Apoſtle in the Text might have ſome ſuch reſpect upon his oppoſing the Believers not committing Sin to the Sin of the Devil from the Beginning, viz. ſuch a Courſe of Sin whereby a Man declares as the Devil did, that he will be his own Governour, as indeed in every Courſe of Sin a Man doth practically declare.

4. 'Tis againſt the Nature of our firſt Repentance and Converſion to God. True Repentance is a breaking off Iniquity by Righteouſneſs, Dan. 4. 27. a turning from Sin to Holineſs, from our ſelves to God, from our own Wills to the Will of God; from every thing elſe as the chief Good, and laſt End, to God as both theſe. Now though a particular Act of Sin be againſt the Watchfulneſs which attends Repentance, yet a Courſe of Sin is againſt the Nature of it; * the one is againſt the Livelineſs of Repentance, the other againſt the Life of it. A delightful walking in any known Sin, though never ſo little, is a Defiance to God, and therefore contrary to the Nature of Converſion, and is a vertual Embracing of all Sin whatſoever; becauſe he that in his ordinary Walk in Sin hath no reſpect to the Will and Pleaſure of God, though he knows it, and will not be reſtrain'd from his Delight by any ſuch Regard of God, would be reſtrain'd from no other Sin whatſoever, if he did conceive them as pleaſant, advantageous, and ſuitable to him as he doth that which is his Darling. As he that breaks one point of the Law is guilty of all, James 2. 10. becauſe he ſhews thereby a Will and Diſpoſition to break all, if the ſame Occaſions were offer'd. So he that commits one known Sin wilfully, much more he that walks in a Courſe of Sin, is guilty of all Sins virtually. For he would boggle at no Temptations upon a reſpect to God, becauſe if a regard to God doth not prevail upon him againſt a Courſe in one kind, it will not detain him from a Courſe in all other kinds of Sin, if he come under the ſame Circumſtances for it. Let me add this too, If he that offends in one Point of the Law be guilty of all, i. e. as much Delight and Eagerneſs, as he hath in the Breach of that one, it is to be ſuppoſed that he would have in the Breach of all the reſt upon the former Reaſon, can then ſuch a Diſpoſition which is in every Courſe of known Sin, be conſiſtent with the Nature of Repentance and Converſion?

* Taylor of Repentance, p. 188.

5. 'Tis againſt the Nature of habitual Grace, which is the Principle and Form of our Regeneration. If he doth not commit Sin becauſe the Seed of God remains in him, then ſuch a Courſe of Sin is againſt the Nature of this Seed; inconſiſtent with the Birth of God; a crooked and perverſe Spirit in Sin is a ſign of a putrify'd Soul, a Spot of a different Nature from that of God's Children, Deut. 32. 5. They have corrupted themſelves, their Spot is not the Spot of his Children, they are a perverſe and crooked Generation; 'tis a Stain peculiar to the Children of the Devil, not the Sons of God. A Trade in Sin is an evidence of a Diabolical Nature, 1 John 3. 8. He that commits Sin is of the Devil. 'Tis not therefore conſiſtent with Grace, which is a Divine Nature. The Reign of Sin is inconſiſtent with the Reign of Grace, though the Rebellion of Sin be not. 'Tis againſt the Nature of Regeneration for Sin to guide our Wills, though it be not againſt the Nature of it for Sin to reſide in our Fleſh. To walk after the Fleſh, Rom. 8. 1. is an inſeparable Character of a Natural Man. The Apoſtle, Rom. 7. ult. had been complaining of the Law of his Members, the ſerving Sin with his Fleſh, he comforts himſelf with this, that he obeyed it not; and that they were in Chriſt, whoſe ordinary Walk was as the Spirit led, not as the Fleſh allured *. And indeed every Tree brings forth Fruit ſuitable to its Nature. A Vine brings not forth Thorns; and he that hath the Seed of God, is under an impoſſibility of bringing forth the Fruits of Sin with Delight, ſince he hath a Root of Righteouſneſs planted in him.

* Amyraut. in Joh. 8. 9.

1. 'Tis againſt the Nature of a renewed Underſtanding. A Regenerate Man hath a new Light in his Mind, whereby he hath a fairer Proſpect of God, and a fouler of Sin. He was an Enemy to God in his Mind before, Col. 1. 21. He had diſhonourable Opinions and Conceits of God and Goodneſs, and honourable Thoughts of Sin above its merit; he thought ill of the one and well of the other. But now he is renewed in the Spirit of his Mind, Eph. 4. 23. and he hath the Spirit of a ſound Mind, 2 Tim. 1. 7. His Judgment is regulated by the Law of God, he judges of Sin as it is in its Nature a Tranſgreſſion of the Law. Can we imagine, that a Man reſtored to a ſound Mind, and that hath his natural Madneſs and Folly cured, ſhould act after this Cure as much out of his Wits as before. If he hath his conſtant Frenzies and Madneſs as much as before, where is his Cure? Can any Man in the World act always againſt his Judgment? though he may be overpower'd by the Importunity of others, or over-rul'd by a Fit of Paſſion to do ſomething againſt his Judgment; can you expect always to find him in the Road of croſſing the Dictates of his Underſtanding? An unregenerate Man hath a Natural Light in his Mind and Conſcience, and ſo a Judgment of Sin; but he hath not a Judgment of Sin adequate to the Object, he doth not judge of Sin in the whole Latitude of it; he hath not a ſetled Judgment of the contrariety of his beloved Sin to God. He looks not upon it in the extent of it, as, malum injucundum, inhoneſtum, inutile; if he looks upon Sin as diſhoneſt, he regards it as profitable; if neither as honeſt nor profitable, yet as pleaſant; ſo that the Natural Light, which is in the Underſtanding when it dictates right, is mated and over-rul'd by ſome other Principle, the Pleaſure or Profit of it, and ſway'd by the inherent Habits of Sin in the Will. The Devil that works in them hath ſome Principle to ſtir up, or dim this Natural Light, and caſt a Miſt before the Eye; and ſo they direct their Courſe according to that particular Judgment which is befriended in its Vote by Senſe.

2. 'Tis againſt the Nature of a renewed Will. Grace is the Law of God in the Heart, and is put in to enable us to walk in the Ways of God; and ſhall it endure ſuch wilful Pollutions in the Creature, when it is the end of its being there to preſerve from them? The Spirit is given in the Heart, 2 Cor. 1. 22. ſent into the Heart, Gal. 4. 6. the Law put into the Heart, Heb. 10. 16. Since therefore there is an Habit of Grace in the Will, a Man cannot frequently and eaſily lanch into Sin, becauſe he cannot do it habitually, the Remainders of Sin being mated with a powerful Habit, which watches their Motions to reſiſt them. Doth God put ſuch a Habit there, ſuch a Seed, an abiding Seed to no purpoſe but to let the Soul be wounded by every Temptation, to be deſerted in every time of need? Grace is an Habit ſuperadded to that Natural and Moral Strength which is in the Will. Man by Nature's ſtrength meerly, or with the aſſiſtance of common Grace, hath power to avoid the Acts of groſs Sins, for he is Maſter of his own Actions, though he is not of the Motions tending to them; the Devil cannot force a Man's Will. And when Grace, a greater Strength, comes in, ſhall there be no Effects of this Strength, but the

Reins

Reins be as ſtiff in the Hands of old Luſt, and the Will as much captive to the ſinful Habit in it as before? Grace being a new Nature, it is as abſurd to think that a gracious Man ſhould wallow in a Courſe of Sin, as it is to think that any Creature ſhould conſtantly and willingly do that which is againſt its Nature. A gracious Man delights in the Law of God, Pſal. 1. 2. His delight is in the Law of the Lord, and in his Law doth he meditate Day and Night; if he delights in it, can he delight to break it? Do Men fling that which they delight in, every Day in the Dirt, and trample upon it, or rather do they not keep it choicely in their Cabinets? If it bealſo the Character of a good Man to meditate in the Law of God, he muſt have frequent Exerciſes of Faith, Reflections upon himſelf, Motions to God which cannot conſiſt with a Courſe of Sin. Grace doth eſſentially include a contrariety to Sin, and a Love to God in the Will. 'Tis a Principle of doing Good and eſchewing Evil, and theſe being eſſential Properties of Grace, are eſſential to every Regenerate Man, and in every one. As a Drop of Water, or one Spark of Fire hath the eſſential Properties of a great Maſs of Water, or a great quantity of Fire, ſo every renewed Man hath the ſame love to God, and the ſame hatred of Sin eſſentially, as the moſt eminent Saint, though not in degree, yea, which thoſe in Heaven have, though not in the ſame degree. As a ſpark of Fire will burn, a drop of Water will moiſten, though not in ſo eminent a meaſure. Now, upon the whole, conſider whether is it poſſible to bare Reaſon, that a Regenerate Man ſhould cuſtomarily do thoſe things which are againſt the eſſential Properties of that which is in him, in his Will, and doth denominate him a new Creature?

3. Propoſition. A regenerate Man cannot have a fixt reſolution to walk in ſuch a way of ſin, were the impediments to it removed. Though unregenerate Men may actually as to the outward exerciſe abſtain from ſome Sins, yet it is uſually upon low and mean Conditions. If it were not for ſuch or ſuch an obſtacle in the way, I would do ſuch and ſuch an Act. This Temper is not in a good Man, he cannot have a fixed and determinate Reſolution to commit ſuch an Act, if ſuch bars were taken away. Such Reſolutions are common in unregenerate Men, Jer. 44. 25. We will ſurely perform our Vows, which we have vow'd to burn incenſe to the Queen of Heaven, and Iſa. 56. 12. We will fill our ſelves with ſtrong drink, and to morrow ſhall be as this day, and much more abundant; we will have as merry a meeting as we had to day. The ſame Character is aſcribed to ſuch an one, Pſal. 36. 4. He deviſeth miſchief upon his bed. He ſets himſelf in a way that is not good. He abhorreth not Evil. He models out his ſinful Deſigns with Head and Heart, he ſettles himſelf as an Army ſettles in their Ground when they reſolve to fight, לא מאס He abhors not evil. He ſtarts not at ſuch Motions, but by a Meioſis, he huggs and careſſeth them with a wonderful delight. Regenerate Men fear to ſin, wicked Men contrive to ſin. One would ſtarve it, the other makes proviſion for it. This Temper cannot be in a Regenerate Man.

1. 'Tis Diabolical. And ſo falls under that in the Text, He cannot commit ſin as the Devil doth. 'Tis a ſtain of the Devil, who is reſolved in his way of malice to God, and miſchief to Man, but for the ſtrait Chains God holds him in; his Reſolution is fixed, though the Execution reſtrained. He goes about ſeeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet. 5. 8. καταπιν to drink at one draught: Seeking both for an Opportunity and Permiſſion. Unwearied Searches manifeſt fixed Reſolutions. His Throat is ready to ſwallow, if he had a morſel for it.

2. 'Tis a ſign of habitual ſin, a ſtate of ſin. This Temper manifeſts that the Will is habituated in ſin, though the Hand doth not outwardly act it. The inherent power of Sin muſt be great, when a Man is greedy to commit that, to which he hath no outward Allurements, or when thoſe Allurements are ballanced with contrary Conſiderations; when he hath either no outward temptation to it, or the croſs Impediments are as ſtrong, or ſtronger than the Temptation. When Men in the midſt of ſuch bars long for a Temptation, it is ſuch a kind of deſire in one way, as the Creature hath in another, for the manifeſtation of the Sons of God, Rom. 8. 19. For the earneſt expectation of the Creature waits for the manifeſtation, 'tis ἀποκαραδοκία a putting out the Head to ſee if he can find any coming to knock off the Fetters, not of his Sin, but of his forced Morality. In this caſe take two Men, one commits a great Sin upon a Temptation, even as it were over-power'd by it, and had no Thoughts, no Inclinations before that Temptation appear'd, which began firſt to ſpirit him. Another commits a lighter Sin, or would fain commit it upon a weak Temptation, and many bars lying in the way, and his Heart was hankering and thirſting for ſome opportunity to commit it: Which do you think really is the greater Offence in point of Heart and Affection? The firſt appears blacker, but it is an Invaſion; the other is really blacker becauſe it is an Affection, and ſhews Sin to be rooted in the Heart as its proper Soil, wherein Sin delights to grow, and the Soil delights to nouriſh it. The one ſhews Sin to be a Stranger and a Thief, which hath way-laid him, the other evidenceth Sin to be an Inmate and intimate Friend. Such a Man is not oblig'd to his Will for his abſtinence from Sin, but to the outward Hindrances; and the reſolving act of the Will to commit it, were thoſe Impediments remov'd, is as real an act of Sin in the ſight of God, as any outward act can be in the ſight of Man, becauſe God meaſures the greatneſs of Sin by the proportion of the Will allowed to it; therefore many Sins which may be little in our account may be greater in God's account, than the ſeemingly blacker Sins of others, becauſe there may be a greater ingrediency of the Heart and Affection in them than in the other.

3. 'Tis againſt the nature of our Repentance and firſt cloſing with God. Repentance is a change of the purpoſe of the Heart, not to commit the ſame Iniquity again, nor any other, Job 34. 32. If I have done Iniquity, I will do no more. 'Tis the property of converting Grace to make the Soul cleave to the Lord with full purpoſe of Heart, Acts 11. 23. This is eſſential to it, though there may be ſome ſtartings out by Paſſion and Temptation. A Pilot's Intention ſtands right for the Port, though by the violence of the Wind he may be forced another way. It alters not his Purpoſe, though it defer his Performance. This Purpoſe is a perpetual Intent, Pſal. 119. 112. I have inclined my Heart to keep thy Statues alway even to the end. It was an Heart-purpoſe and Inclination; It regarded all God's Statutes, not for a fit, but perpetually, which he manifeſts by two words [always even to the end] to ſhew that the perpetuity of it doth difference it from the reſolutions of wicked Men, who may indeed have ſome fits to do good, but not a fixed purpoſe to cleave to the Lord; theſe flaſhy Purpoſes are like the flight of a Bird which ſeems to touch Heaven, and in a moment falls down to the Earth; as Saul reſolved not to perſecute David, but we ſoon find him again upon his old Game and Purſuit.

ſuit. Where there is true Grace, there is hatred of all Sin, for hatred is πρὸς τὸ γένος. Can a Man be reſolv'd to commit what he hates? No. For his inward averſion would ſecure him more againſt it, than all outward Obſtacles. As this inward purpoſe of a good Man is againſt all ſin, ſo more particularly againſt that which doth ſo eaſily beſet him. David ſeems in ſeveral places to be naturally inclin'd to Lying, but he takes up a particular Reſolution againſt it, Pſal. 17. 3. I am purpoſed that my mouth ſhall not tranſgreſs. זמתי I have contrived to way-lay and intercept the ſin of Lying, when it hath an occaſion to approach me. A good Man hath not only Purpoſes, but he endeavours to faſten and ſtrengthen thoſe Purpoſes by Prayer. So David, v. 5. [hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footſteps ſlip not. He ſtrengthens himſelf by ſtirring up a livelineſs in Duty, and by avoiding occaſions of Sin, v. 4. [I have kept me from the paths of the deſtroyer. Whereas a wicked Man neither ſteps out of the way of a Temptation, nor ſteps up to God for ſtrength againſt it. Now, if all this be true, that in Converſion the Heart hath a fixed reſolution for God and his ways, and that perpetually againſt all Sin, and particularly againſt the Sin of our natural Inclination, and all this back'd with ſtrong Cries, how can it have a fixed reſolution to commit it, if the way were outwardly fair for it?

4. 'Tis abſolutely againſt the terms of the Covenant. God requires in that a giving up our ſelves to him, to be his People with our whole Heart and Soul, as he gives himſelf to us with his whole Heart. He will not be a ſharer of the Heart with Sin, much leſs an underling to it. God will not endure a competitor in the Affections. To ſerve God and Mammon are inconſiſtent by the infallible Axiom of our Saviour, Luke 16. 13. Now, as God cannot be true to his Covenant, if he had purpoſes againſt the Articles of it on his part, ſo neither can we be true to our covenanting with him, if we have ſettled purpoſes of Heart againſt the Conditions of it. Therefore the inſtability in the Covenant ariſeth only from the falſeneſs of the Heart, Pſal. 78. 37. Their Heart was not right with him, neither were they ſtedfaſt in his Covenant. The iniquity of our Heels may compaſs us about, and make us ſtumble in our Walk, yet our fears of being out with God may receive no eſtabliſhment, Pſal. 49. 5. Wherefore ſhould I fear when the Iniquity of my heels ſhall compaſs me about? Whether he means by iniquity the Sins of his ordinary walk, or the puniſhment of them, is all one. But yet if purpoſes of Iniquity ſettle their reſidence in the Heart, though we never act it by reaſon of Obſtacles, 'tis a ſign we never ſincerely cloſed with God in Covenant, nor God with us. The very regards of Iniquity in the Heart put a bar to the regards of God towards us. It hinders all Covenant Acts on God's part, becauſe it is a manifeſt breach of it, Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard Iniquity in my Heart the Lord will not hear me. ראיתי If I have curiouſly and intently looked upon Iniquity with pleaſure in my Heart.

5. 'Tis againſt the nature of Regeneration. Regeneration is a change of Nature, and conſequently of Reſolutions. A Lyon chained up hath an inclination to ravage, but a Lyon chang'd into the nature of a Lamb loſes his Inclinations with that change of his Nature; ſo that it is as impoſſible a Regenerate Man can have the fixed and determinate Reſolutions that a wicked Man hath, as it is impoſſible that a Lamb ſhould have the ravenous diſpoſition of a Lyon; you know the Scripture makes the change as great. How can any Man reſolve to do a thing againſt that Law, which at the ſame time, he hath an habitual approbation of as holy, juſt, and good? Againſt a Law natural to him, viz. The Law of the Heart. If a delight in the Law of God be a conſtitutive part of Regeneration, then any ſettled purpoſe to ſin is inconſiſtent with Regeneration, becauſe ſuch a purpoſe, being a teſtimony of an inward delight in that which is contrary to the Law of God, cannot conſiſt with a delight in that which forbids what his Heart is ſet upon.

4. Propoſition. A Regenerate Man cannot walk in a way doubtful to him without Inquiries, whether it be a way of Sin, or a way of Duty; and without admitting of Reproofs and Admonitions according to his Circumſtances. This conſiſts of two Parts.

1. He cannot walk in a way doubtful to him without Inquiries, whether it be a way of Sin, or of Duty. If the nature of Converſion be an inclination of the Heart to keep God's Statutes always, even to the end, Pſal. 119. 112. the natural reſult then will be an Enquiry, what are the Statutes of God which the Soul is to keep. A natural Man, for fear of being diſturbed in his ſinful Pleaſure refuſeth to underſtand the way of the Lord, and delights to be under the power of a wilful Darkneſs, Job 21. 14, 15. We deſire not the knowledge of thy ways; what is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him? and what profit ſhould we have, if we pray to him? This unwillingneſs to know the ways of God, ariſes from a contempt of the Almighty and his Service. They judged it not profitable to ſerve and worſhip God, and therefore were loath to receive any Inſtruction, for fear any Light ſhould ſpring up in them, by way of Conviction, to diſturb them. Men love Sin, and therefore hate any Knowledge which may deprive them of the ſweetneſs of it, Prov. 1. 22. The Scorners delight in their ſcorning, and Fools hate knowledge. They delight in Sin, and therefore hate any Knowledge which may check their Delight. And this unwillingneſs to chooſe the fear of the Lord is the ground of their hating the knowledge of it, v. 30. for that they hated knowledge, and did not chooſe the fear of the Lord. They are afraid to be convinced, that the way of their Delight is a way of Sin, they would have no Gall in their Conſcience to imbitter the Honey of their Luſts. This hatred of Knowledge is inconſiſtent with true Converſion, becauſe Converſion is an election or choice of the fear of God, and therefore cannot reſiſt any means tending to promote that which is choſen. 'Tis eſſential to true Grace to enquire into the Mind and Will of God, to underſtand what is pleaſing to him, Job 34. 32. That which I ſee not, teach thou me; if I have done Iniquity, I will do no more. Inform me in what I know not, and if I underſtand it is Iniquity, which I have walked ignorantly in, I will do it no more. He will not return to folly when he ſhall hear what God the Lord ſhall ſpeak. 'Tis certainly incompatible to the new Nature to act in a contrariety to God. Grace is always attended with an univerſal Deſire to know his Will, and pleaſure him in performing it; hence will follow an Enquiry, what Behaviour and what Acts are moſt agreeable to him, John 14. 21. He that hath my Commandments, and keeps them, he it is that loves me. Ἐκεῖνός ἐστι. The Antitheſis is; He that hath no mind to have my Commandments, becauſe he would not keep them, hath no love to me. He it is [Emphatically] excluſively, that is the Man, and none elſe that loves me. Now if a Man be afraid of making Inquiry into the lawfulneſs of a courſe he is wedded to, for fear his beloved Object ſhould appear to be a Sin, 'tis a ſign he abſtains from what he knows certainly to be a Sin out of a ſervile Fear, not out of a generous, divine Love, a

Prin-

Principle as essential to the new Nature, as fear is to an enlightned Carnalist.

2. A Regenerate Man cannot despise Admonitions and Reproofs, which would inform him, and withdraw him from a sinful course. If he be in the way of Life that keeps Instruction, then he that refuseth Reproof is in the way of Death, Prov. 10. 17. He is in the way of Life that keepeth Instruction, but he that refuseth Reproof erreth. 'Tis put in a milder Expression, but if you observe the opposition, it amounts to the Inference I make. So Prov. 15. 9, 10. The Lord loves them that follow after Righteousness; Correction is grievous unto them that forsake the way, and he that hates Reproof shall dye. Here is a plain opposition made between them that follow after Righteousness, which is the Character of a Regenerate Man, who is therefore the object of God's Love, and that Person that accounts Correction grievous, and hates Reproof, he is not one that follows after Righteousness (to pursue is to embrace it) and therefore not the object of God's Love, but the mark of Death. So that it is impossible a righteous Man should hate Reproof. Nay, the hating of Reproof, whereby a Man might be informed of his Duty, is a sign not of a bare unregeneracy, but of one at the very bottom of it, wallowing in the very Dregs and Mud of it, fartheſt from the Kingdom of Heaven; one that scarce looks like a rational Creature, Prov. 12. 1. Whoso loves Instruction loves Knowledge, but he that hates Reproof is brutish. Whereas Solomon's wise Man, which is a Regenerate Man, will love the Reprover for the Reproofs sake, and grow wiser by Instruction, Prov. 9. 8, 9. Reprove not a Scorner, lest he hate thee; Rebuke a wise Man, and he will love thee; give Instruction to a wise Man, and he will be yet wiser; teach a just Man, and he will encrease in Learning. Just Men change their Intentions upon a discovery of the sinfulness of their way. And though it may not at the first assault of an Admonition appear to be a Sin, yet it will check somewhat their Violence in it. But where Sin hath a dominion, every check and discovery of it doth rather enflame than quench it, and the Heart, like a Stream, rises the higher for the Damm. Judas had an Admonition from Christ, that informed him of what Wickedness he was about, and the danger of it, Mark 14. 21. He pronounceth a Woe against him. Compare this with John 13. 27, 30. when he gives him the Sop, which was at the same time he informed him of the Danger, Satan entered into him, and he went more roundly to work to accomplish it, he went immediately out. Observe by the way, That the Spirit of God enters into a Man's Heart often upon Admonitions from Friends, and the Devil also more powerfully upon the same Occasions than at other times. A good Man cannot habitually hate the Reprover. There is one Example of a good Man dealing hardly with a Prophet, for reproving him in the name of the Lord, 2 Chron. 16. 10. Then Asa was wroth with the Seer, and put him into a Prison-house; for he was in a rage with him, because of this thing. And partly for the Judgment of War against him. But the Scripture gives an allay to it; For he was in a rage. He was in a Passion, because of the threatning and the plainness of the Speech, thou hast done foolishly. To say such a word to an Inferior would ordinarily, now a days, swell many a Professor to a Fury, much more a Prince. This very Proposition will discover, that there are many more Pretenders to a Regenerate State than Possessors of it, so strangely is not only Humane Nature, but the Christian Religion depraved among us.

5. Propos. A Regenerate Man cannot have a settled, deliberate Love to any one act of Sin, though he may fall into it. Thus the Devil sins, he loves what he doth. Though a good Man may fall into a Sin, and even such a Sin, which he was much guilty of before his Conversion, and which he hath repented of, yet never into a love of it, or the allowance of any one act of it. For by Regeneration the Soul becomes like God in Disposition, and therefore cannot love any thing which he hates, whose Hatred and Love being always just, are unerring Rules to the Love and Hatred of every one of his Children. He can never account a Sin his Ornament, but his Fetter, never his Delight, but his Grief. I add this Proposition, because there may be a love of an act of Sin, where there is not a constant course in it: As a Man that hath committed a Murther out of Revenge, may love afterwards the very thoughts of that Revenge, though he never murther any more: And a Man that hath committed an act of Adultery, may review it with pleasure, though he never commit an Act again. But a good Man cannot. David is supposed to be inclined to the way of Lying and Dissembling; though he might falter sometimes, and look that way, and perhaps fall into it, yet never into a love of it; therefore observe, Psal. 119. 163. I hate and abhor Lying; but thy Law do I love. A single Hatred would not serve the turn; but, I hate and abhor. I have not the least Affection to this of any, though I have the greatest natural inclination to it. What was the reason? Thy Law do I love. There was another Affection planted in his Soul, which could not consist with a love to, or allowance either of the habit, or any one act of Lying. A good Man hath yielded his Soul up to the government of Christ, his Affections are fully engaged; he cannot see an equal amiableness in any other Object, for he cannot lose his Eyes again; his enlightned Mind cannot be wholly blinded and deceived by Satan; he walks not by the inveiglements of Sense, but by the unerring Rule of Faith; so that though by some Mists before his Eyes, he may for a while be deluded, yet as he cannot have a settled false Judgment, so he cannot have a settled Affection to any one act of Sin. 'Tis one thing for a City to surrender it self to the Enemy out of Affection, and another thing to be forced by them: Under a Force they may retain their Loyalty to their lawful Prince. There may be some passionate approbations of an act of Sin. Jonah was an Advocate for his own Passion against God, and made a very peremptory Apology for it, Jonah 4. 9. I do well to be angry, even to the death. Yet if we may judge by his former Temper, we cannot think he did afterwards defend it out of Judgment, as he did then out of Passion; for when the Lot fell upon him, Jon. 2. 9, 12. he made no defence for his Sin, he very calmly wishes them to cast him into the Sea. Where there is a passionate Approbation, it cannot be constant in a good Man; for when he returns to himself, his abhorrences of the Sin, and of himself for it, are greater, as if by the greatness of his Grief he would endeavour to make some recompence for the folly of his Passion.

Observe by the way; A good Man may commit a Sin with much eagerness, and yet have a less affection to it in the very act, than another, who acts that Sin more calmly; because it may arise, not from any particular inclination he hath in his temper to that Sin, but from the general violence of his natural Temper, which is common to him in that Action. This seems to be the case of Jonah, both in this, and the former act. But if a Man be more violent in that act of Sin, than he is in other things by his natural Temper, there is ground both for himself and others to think, that sin hath got a great mastery over his Affections.

Peter

Peter ſeems to be a Man of great Affections, and of a forward natural Temper; he was very haſty to have Tabernacles built in the Mountain for his Maſter, Moſes, and Elias, and have reſided there. He haſtily rebukes his Maſter; he flung himſelf out of a Ship to meet our Saviour walking upon the Water, and after his Reſurrection he leapt into the Sea to get to him: So that Peter's denying his Maſter was not ſuch an evidence of Diſaffection to him, or Love to the ſinful Act he was then ſurprized by, as it would have been in John, or any other Diſciple of a more ſedate Temper. But this only by the way, as a Rule both to judge your ſelves by, and to moderate your Cenſures of others. And conſider, That ſuch Acts of Sin are not frequent. The Violence of a Man's Temper, if godly, cannot carry him out into a Courſe of Sin, or a love to any one Act. As a wicked Man may hit upon a good Duty, and perform it, but not out of a ſetled love to God, or habitual Obedience to his Law; ſo a good Man may by ſurprize do an evil Work, not out of Obedience to the Law of Sin, or any love to the Sin it ſelf. What Conſiderations may move a wicked Man to a good Duty, may in ſome reſpect move a good Man to a ſinful Act; yet it is not to be called a Duty in the one, no more than it is to be called a Sin in the other of the ſame Hue, of the ſame Hue I ſay, with that in a natural Man.

6 Propoſition; A Regenerate Man cannot commit any Sin with a full Conſent and bent of Will. A Man may conſent to that which he doth not love. Hereby I diſtinguiſh it from the former Propoſition. I mean not, that he cannot commit any Sin wilfully as Sin, for ſo I believe no Man doth; it being againſt the Nature of the Creature to do Evil, as Evil formaliter, but under ſome other Notion of it. Some Conſent of the Will I do acknowledge, becauſe the Will as well as the other Faculties, is but in part regenerate; as there is not a triumphant Light in the Underſtanding, ſo neither is the Grace of the Will at preſent triumphant, but militant; yet it may be rather called the Will of Sin, than a Man's own Will. Sometimes a good Man is by ſome ſudden Motion hurry'd on to ſin, before he can conſult Law and Reaſon, before he hath his Wits well at liberty, before he can compare the Temptation or Sin with the Prohibition of it by the Divine Law. But generally there is a Reſiſtance in him, as well as a Provocation in Sin; for the two contrary Principles exert themſelves in ſome meaſure. Grace reſiſts, and Sin provokes: Whereas another that hath no Grace, ſins with a full Conſent, becauſe he hath no ſpiritual reſiſting Principle in him; for he is Fleſh, and not Spirit, and whatſoever is born of the Fleſh is Fleſh, and wholly Fleſh. There is a Reſiſting indeed in a natural Man, but it is a Reſiſtance of natural Light, not of Grace, a Reſiſtance not of the Will, but of the Conſcience; The Will is bent to ſin, but natural Conſcience puts Rubs in the way. Neither is this Reſiſtance in ſpiritual Sins, (which is the greateſt Character I know, whereby to diſtinguiſh a Reſiſtance of natural Conſcience, from a Reſiſtance by a Principle of Grace) which natural Conſcience doth not ſo much trouble it ſelf about, as not having Light without a ſpiritual Illumination to diſcern them; but only in groſs Sins, ſuch as are condemn'd by common Reaſon; ſo that if he hath any Reſiſtance, it is not in the Will of the Man, but the Will of his Intereſt, Will of his Credit, or the Will of his Conſcience; not in the rational Will complying with, and delighting in the Will of God.

A Regenerate Man cannot commit any Sin with

1. An habitual Conſent; Becauſe he hath a Principle of Grace within him which oppoſes that Tide of Nature which did forcibly carry him down before. This oppoſite Principle doth remain, tho' the preſent Oppoſition may not be diſcern'd by reaſon of the prevalency of the Temptation: As in a Room warm'd by a Fire in Winter, there is a Principle in the Air doth reſiſt that Heat, and reduce it after the Fire is out to its former rawneſs and coldneſs. A renewed Man being paſſed into another Nature, it cannot be ſuppoſed he can do any thing with an habitual bent of Will againſt his Nature. Grace hath put a ſtop to that. Paul diſtinguiſheth himſelf from Sin in the Acts of it; 'Tis not I, or my Will, but Sin, Rom. 7. 20. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but Sin that dwells in me. Κατεργάζομαι ſignifies to perfect and compleat a Work, to work induſtriouſly and politely. Had I my Will, I ſhould not do thus. There is a Divorce made between the Will and Sin, ſo that Sin acts upon a ſingle ſcore, now, 'Tis no more I; a Divorce is made between my Will and Sin. The Law of Sin is therefore called a Law in the Members, not of the Members; a Law found working there, v. 21. I find a Law in my Members; I did not enact it, I placed it not there, I conſent not to its being there; but there I find it, and know not how to be rid of it, but it ſhall never have my Will. But the Law of Grace is called a Law of the Mind, not in the Mind; a Law which is ſetled there by the Conſent of the Soul, and to whoſe ſovereignty and guidance it yields it ſelf. The Law of Sin is in the Members; the Vigour of it is ſeen in the inferiour Faculties of the Soul, not in the higher, the Mind and Will; 'tis a Law impoſed upon me, not embraced by me; a Law of Diſturbance, not of Obedience; a Law that troubles me, doth not delight me, v. 21, 22. It reſides as an Enemy warring, but hath no intimacy with me as a Friend, v. 23. yet it is an Enemy driven to the Out-Works, to the Members: So that where all this is, you cannot ſuppoſe an habitual Conſent to ſin, when the Will is formed into another Nature. As the Will of the Wicked is poſſeſſed by Habits of Sin under the Reſtraints from it, ſo the Will of the Godly is poſſeſſed by Habits of Grace, even under the Rape of a prevailing Temptation.

2. Nor an actual Conſent both antecedent and conſequent. The Intereſt of Sin may ſeem to be actually higher and ſtronger in the Soul than the Intereſt of God, though this latter is habitually ſtronger than the Intereſt of Sin. Though there may be an antecedent Delight in the Motion, a preſent Delight in the Action, yet there is not a permanent conſequent Delight after it; yet the two firſt are rare. 'Tis ſeldom that a renewed Soul and Sin do ſo friendly conſpire together without any ſpiritual Reluctancy. Suppoſe he may have by the ſuſpenſion of Grace, a whole actual Conſent of Will to one particular Sin, upon ſome ſtrong Provocation, yet he gives not up himſelf to the Will or Way of that Sin. He is only under a temporary, not a perpetual Power of it. As a Man in a Fight may by a Fall be under the Power of his Enemy, yet in the ſtruggle get up again, and reduce him to the ſame Neceſſity. Though there be not an expreſs diſſent at the Motion, nor in the Action, yet there is always after; for it is as much againſt the Terms of the Covenant to have a perpetual Delight in any Sin committed, as to commit it often, becauſe this Delight in it is an Approbation of it, and every Act of Delight is a new Act of Approbation, and consequently a Recommission of it, and a making a Man's self a perpetual Accessary to that first Act.

1. Sometimes he hath an antecedent Dissent. A renewed Man is troubled and displeased at the first Motion to a Sin; he is sometimes troubled that any Sin should so much as ask him the question to have Entertainment in him: 'Tis so many times with a Natural Man, much more with a Regenerate Man; yet afterwards that Displiciency abating, the Sin creeps upon him by degrees, and ensnares him. Paul had an Act of Will against that which he did, before he did it; he did that which was preceded by an Act of his Will nilling it, as there was an Act of his Will, for the doing Good preceding his not doing it, Rom. 7. 19. The good that I would, I do not, but the evil which I would not, that I do. The Act of his Will was present, v. 18. To will is present with me, I have that standing in a readiness to do good; but the executive Power is at a distance, I know not how to have it. But how to perform that which is good I find not. He speaks as a Man that was searching for something which he had a great desire to find, and could not meet with it. Many times a good Man is tyred out with the importunity of a Temptation, and is fain to fling down his Weapons, and sink under the Oppression, till he receive a new Recruit of Strength by exciting and assisting Grace.

2. Sometimes concomitant, in the very commission of a Sin. Peter seems to have had some Resistance in the very Act of denying his Master. The Spirit of God blew up some Sparks of Shame in him at that very time; for after the very first Denial, he went out into the Porch, Mark 14. 68. By his Retirement he discovers some willingness to have avoided a further Temptation. There is many times an exercise of Displeasure against it, while a Man cannot avoid it, Rom. 7. 15. That which I do, I allow not; that which I hate, that I do. I hate it even while I do it, and my Hatred is excited against it, in the very Act; he means it of Sins of Infirmity. The Seed of God in the Heart cannot consent to Sin, but will many times in the very acting of it be shewing its displeasure, weakly or strongly against it. As a Needle touched with a Loadstone, if it be disturbed in its standing to the North-Pole, will shake and tremble while the Impediment is upon it *. Some Demurrers were made in Peter's Heart, but Fear over-rul'd the Plea; and it is probable his Heart was not wholly asleep even in the very Act; else it is not likely he should have been so suddenly rouzed. There is a Voice in him. Grace speaks for God, but it is over-rul'd and oppress by a Temptation; there are some Pull-backs, some spiritual Whispers even when it presses hard. Why art thou cast down my Soul? Psal. 43. 5. There is the carnal part stirring in distrust: Hope thou in God; there is a spiritual part rising in Faith. A neat Person may by stumbling be bemir'd in a dirty Hole, but while he stumbles, there is a natural Impetus, which endeavours to keep him upright; and if he doth fall, he struggles till he be delivered. But when a Swine falls into a Puddle, he lies grunting with Pleasure, and grumbles at any that will drag him out. Which leads me to a Third thing.

* Smith on the Creed.

3. But there is always a consequent Dissent after the Fall. He hath many Rebukes in his Conscience; whereas a natural Man's Sin is brought up and nurtur'd with him, Eccles. 5. 1. They consider not that they do evil; they lay it not to Heart, especially if it break not out in some foul and notorious manner. A renewed Man is displeased at the very first Motion that clamber'd up into his Heart to entice him to his sin; not only the Fruit, but the Root that bears it is odious to him, Psal. 51. 5. Behold I was shapen in Iniquity. By the same reason that he directs his hatred to the Sin of his nature, by the same reason he will do it to the first Motion that immediately brought forth that bitter Fruit; which a natural Man doth not. 'Tis the Character of a wicked Man to rejoyce that he hath done evil, Prov. 2. 14. which I think is never found in a renewed Man; for this is indeed to be under the Power of Satan, and like their Father the Devil. But he condemns what he hath committed; and the greater his Delight in it, the greater will his Abhorrency be of it, and the more earnest his Cry to be rid of his Burden. When he comes to see what Contrariety there was in his Act to the Law of God, it is impossible but his Heart should smite him. It cannot be, but that Delight in the Law of God, which is a constitutive part of a Regenerate Man, Rom. 7. 22. must revive, when the Weights which did suspend it are removed, and according to the Degrees of his revived Delight, there will be suitable Degrees of Displeasure with what was contrary to the Object of it; for since a Delight in the Law of God is essential to a renewed Nature, that Delight must needs produce an Aversion from every thing contrary to that Law, otherwise it is not a Delight: If there be not such Workings after a Review of Sin, I dare pronounce that such a Man is not regenerate. But how long he may lie in a Sin, without acting Consideration about it, I cannot determine. He must needs have Torment in his Soul, and a high Disaffection to his Sin, and himself for it, because upon a Review he cannot but see how unlike to God it hath made him; how much it hath defiled his Soul, and impaired the Divine Image. No Disease can be more grievous to the Body than a Sin fallen into is to the new Nature; it grieves and pains the new Creature, which is restless till it be rid of the Disease; the new Nature is a tender thing. Though he be assured of its Pardon, he is in anxiety till he finds it purged, Psal. 51. 7. Purge me with Hyssop, and I shall be clean. David had been assured of the pardon of his Sin by Nathan; that would not quiet him, as long as the Filth remained; he would not only have the Guilt removed, but the Stain washed off; as a Man fallen in the Dirt is desirous not only to be raised up, but to be washed clean from any Remainders of the Mire. A good Man hath a Disquietness in his Heart, and is as much troubled at his Sin, as at a stinking Wound, or a loathsome Disease, Psal. 38. 5, 6, 7, 8. and his sorrow is continually before him, v. 17. He is more displeased with that Sin, than he is pleased at present with all the Grace he hath. David's Sin was ever before him, Psal. 51. 3. Peter brought forth no other Fruit immediately after the Review of his Sin, but Sorrow, and exercised more Grief for that than he did Joy at the present, for the not failing of his Faith; as a Man is more troubled with a Pain of the Tooth, or a Fit of the Gout, than pleased with all the Health in his Vital Parts, which is far greater than his Pain. Here then is a difference; Regenerate Men have Pain in their Sins, Natural Men Pleasure; the one is ashamed of his Sin, the other at best but ashamed of his Discredit; he condemns himself for it with so much severity, rips his Heart open before God, that if a wicked Man should hear him praying in his Closet after some Sin, he would think he did belye himself, or else that he were the vilest Villain in the World. He will study no Excuses, and present no Pleas to God for his Sin. If he hath not Strength to conquer it, he hath a Voice to cry againſt it: Prayers are doubled; one Meſſenger goes to Heaven upon the heels of another, and ſo Moderation, which was in his Requeſts before, is turn'd to an unſatisfied Importunity. So that you ſee, there is not a plenary conſent of Will, but the diſſent is habitual and actual, if not antecedent or concomitant, yet always conſequent.

not

What then doth the Regenerate Man's Sin ariſe from? It ariſeth

1. Either from a ſtrong Paſſion, which many times bears down the bars both of Grace and Reaſon. That is not wholly voluntary which is done by the prevalency of Paſſion, which ſuſpends the determination of the Underſtanding, and conſequently the regular and free motion of the Will. Such was the accuſation of God in his Prophet, which David was guilty of, Pſal. 116. 11. I ſaid in my haſte, all Men are Lyars. I ſaid, 'tis true, all Men are Lyars, even the Prophet too, but it was in my haſte. And in his haſte he accuſeth God of the breach of his Promiſes, Pſal. 31. 22. I ſaid in my haſte, I am cut off from before thy Eyes. God hath either forgot his Promiſe, or changed his Reſolutions, for not one of them will be made good unto me. It was a Paſſion in Moſes which made him guilty of that act of unbelief, that coſt him his excluſion from the Land of Promiſe, Num. 20. 8, 10, 11, 12. God commands him to uſe his Tongue, not his Rod on the Rock; but the Paſſion the good Man was in by the provocation of the People, tranſported him beyond his Bounds. Peter's Heart was not ſo full of Courage as of Loyalty, his Zeal was put out of countenance by his Fear. A ſtrong fit of Paſſion may make a Man, as good and meek as Moſes, fling away both the Tables of the Law, which otherwiſe would be as dear to him as the Apple of his Eye.

2. From inconſiderateneſs. There cannot be a full conſent of Will, where a deliberate Judgment doth not precede. Many a Man, through an inconſiderate indulging his Appetite, eats that Meat which foments his Humors into ſome dangerous Diſeaſe. Sin creeps upon a good Man when the livelineſs and activity of his Spirit in former Duties is in a ſlumber; but another hath as great Inclinations to ſin, when his Underſtanding is in its ſtrength. Peter had the Grace of Faith, but he fell into his Sin for want of acting it; upon his Repentance, it is ſaid, Luke 22. 6. And Peter remembred the words of the Lord. He had forgot Chriſt's words, and that made him forget himſelf and his Maſter in that act of Sin. If our Saviour had caſt his Eye upon Peter, and excited his ſlumbering Grace before the Maid had ſpoken to him, he might have prevented Peter's Fall as well as afterwards recovered him. If God had ſent Nathan with a Meſſage to David, when his Corruption began firſt to put on its Arms, to have ſhewed him the vileneſs of his Intentions, and excited him to a ſtout Reſiſtance, he might have prevented the loſs of his Innocency, as well as reſtor'd him after it had lain in the Duſt ſo long. David might have kept his ſtanding, and diſmiſt thoſe Inclinations, as he did his inconſiderate deſign of murdering Nabal and his Family upon Abigail's Admonition, for which he bleſſeth God, 1 Sam. 25, 32, 33. In ſhort, The motion of a regenerate Man to Sin is violent, like a Stone upward, the motion of an unrenewed Man is natural, like a Stone downwards. The Godly are violently purſued, but the wicked ſottiſhly infatuated by a Temptation. * And certainly when the ſtrength of the Paſſion is abated, and the free exerciſe of Reaſon recovered, there will be the exerciſe of Grace again; for it is not conceivable, that the habit of Grace and Repentance ſhould be without the actual exerciſe of it, when the Impediments are removed, and an occaſion preſented; ſo that he that doth not recover himſelf to his former exerciſe, never had this true Seed of God infuſed into him.

*Greenham.

7. Propoſition. Though a Regenerate Man may fall, and Sin have a temporary dominion, yet he recovers out of this State, and for the moſt part returns to his former Holineſs, and an increaſe of it, though not always to his former Comforts. There are none whoſe Sins are recorded in Scripture, but there are ſome evidences of their repentance for it, or the acting the contrary Grace. David's Sin was groſs, and his Repentance remarkable; he was more tender afterwards in point of Blood, 2 Sam. 23. 16, 17. when he deſired Water out of the Well of Bethlehem, and it was brought him by three valiant Men with the jeopardy of their Lives; he would not drink it, becauſe it was the Blood of the Men that ventured their Lives to ſatisfie his Curioſity. Peter's Repentance is eminent, his Affection is hot, for the truth of which he could appeal to his Maſter's Omniſciency, John 21. 17. Lord thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee. His Courage is illuſtrious in aſſerting his Maſter's Honour in the face of the greateſt Dangers, in which exerciſe you find him the Foreman of that Jury of the Twelve Apoſtles before every Aſſembly, Acts 2. 3, 4, 5, &c. Though Abraham had diſcovered a diſtruſt of God in Pharaoh's and Abimelech's Courts, yet his Faith afterward in his readineſs to Sacrifice Iſaac, was as glorious as his Unbelief had been baſe, which gave him the Title of the Father of the Faithful. Noah who was drunk, and thereby expoſed to the deriſion of his Son, could not ſo well have curſt him, had he not abhorred the Sin as well as the Reproach. And Lot, whoſe righteous Soul was vexed with the filthineſs of others, could not have a leſs Vexation at his own when he came to know of it. Thoſe that affirm, that mortal Sins expel Grace, yet doubt whether they expel the Gifts of the Spirit, one end whereof ſay they, is to render the Soul pliable and flexible to the motions of the Spirit. * If they do not expel the Gifts, I know not why they ſhould expel the Grace which is under the manutenency of the Spirit of God in a particular manner. The Spirit luſts againſt the Fleſh, as well as the Fleſh againſt the Spirit, and the luſting of the Spirit will prevail as well as the luſting of the Fleſh, and more, Gal. 5. 17. All natural things that are removed out of their proper place, are reſtleſs till they are reduc'd to their right Station. A good Man is as Water, that though it be turned into a Maſs of Ice, wholly cold in the ways of God, yet ſtill there is a Principle in him (as there is in Ice) to return to his former Form, Figure, and Activity, upon the warm eruptions of the Spirit of God. There is a powerful Voice behind him that brings him back, when he turns either to the right hand or to the left from the ways of God, Iſa. 30. 21. By virtue of this Seed within him, and the Spirit of God exciting it, that word which comes home to the Soul after a Sin, becomes efficaciouſly melting, and raiſes up ſprings of penitential Motions, which could not ariſe ſo ſuddenly were the ſpiritual Life wholly departed. For a Man that hath no habit of Grace in him, cannot ſo ſuddenly concur with God's Propoſals, and exerciſe a Repentance. In ſuch an one we ſee firſt a ſtupefaction of Mind, and an unaptneſs to Faith, no motions of a true Repentance, though ſome preparation to it. But with a regenerate Man it is otherwiſe. David being admoniſh'd by Nathan was ſtruck to the Heart, and Peter preſently upon our Saviour's look melted in-

* Suarez: de Gratia: lib. 11. c. 3. num 10. p. 415.

into Tears. Their Grace, like Tinder, took fire preſently upon thoſe ſmall but powerful Occaſions; though it did not act at the time of their Sin, yet it had an aptneſs to act upon the removal of the Impediments. Though Jonah ſeems to caſt off all regard of God and his Command, yet upon the firſt occaſion in the Whales Belly he brings forth excellent fruits of Faith in a Moment, Jonah 2. Grace in an inſtant upon the firſt motion of the Spirit will riſe up, and take its place from whence it ſeems to be depoſed. As a natural Man under ſome ſting of Conſcience, and flaſh of a lightning Conviction, may be reſtrained from Sin, yet his natural Inclination to it remains, though ſuſpended at the preſent, and may be carried the quite contrary way, as the Stream of a River by the force of the Tide is turned againſt its natural Current, yet ſlides down its Channel with its wonted Calmneſs upon the removal of the force; ſo a good Man under the violence of ſome Luſt hath not his new Nature changed, though at preſent it is reſtrain'd by an extrinſick Force; ſo that as the one upon the taking off his Conviction, returns to his Sin, ſo the other upon the removal of his Fetters, returns to his Holineſs with a greater Spirit and Delight. A wicked Man may ſometimes do a good Action, but he continues not in it. As a Planet is ſometimes retrograde, but ſoon returns to its direct courſe. When their Conſcience pinches them, they awake out of their Trance. So a good Man may ſin through Infirmity, but he will revoke it by Repentance. The Seed of God remains in him as the Sap in the Root of a Tree that recovers the Leaves the next return of the Sun at the Spring. He may ſink by Nature, and riſe again by Grace; but the Devil, who ſinned at the beginning, fell and never roſe more.

Uſe of Examination.

If you find your ſelves in theſe caſes, in a courſe of known Sin, Reſolution to commit it, were it not for ſuch bars; unwillingneſs to know God's Pleaſure and Injunction, deſpiſing Admonitions and Reproofs, a ſettled love to it, a full conſent of Will without any antecedent, concomitant or conſequent diſſent, tumbling in it without riſing by Repentance, a circle of ſinning and repenting, without abhorrence of Sin; you may conclude your ſelves in an unregenerate State, you ſin like the Devil, who ſinned from the beginning.

A DISCOURSE OF THE Pardon of Sin.

Pſalm 32. 1, 2.

Bleſſed is he whoſe Tranſgreſſion is forgiven, whoſe Sin is covered. Bleſſed is the Man unto whom the Lord imputes not Iniquity.

THis Pſalm, as Grotius thinks, was made to be ſung upon the Annual Day of the Jewiſh Expiation, when a general confeſſion of their Sins was made. 'Tis one of David's penitential Pſalms, ſuppoſed to be compoſed by him after the Murder of Uriah, and the pronouncing of his Pardon by Nathan, v. 5. and rather a Pſalm of Thankſgiving. 'Tis called Maſchil, a Pſalm of Underſtanding. Maſchil is tranſlated eruditio, intelligentia, and notes ſome excellent Doctrine in the Pſalm, not known by the light of Nature. Bleſſed אשרי Bleſſednesſes. Ex omni parte beatus. Three words there are to diſcover the nature of Sin; and three words to diſcover the nature of Pardon.

פשע Tranſgreſſion.] Prevarication. Some underſtand by it Sins of Omiſſion and Commiſſion.

חטאה Sin.] Some underſtand thoſe inward Inclinations, Luſts, and Motions, whereby the Soul ſwerves from the Law of God, and which are the immediate cauſes of external Sins.

עון Iniquity.] Notes original Sin, the root of all. Three words that note Pardon.

נשוי Levatus, forgiven.] Eas'd, נשא, ſignifies to take away, to bear, to carry away. Two words in Scripture are chiefly uſed to denote remiſſion, כפר, to expiate, נשא, to bear, or carry away; the one ſignifies the manner whereby it is done, viz. atonement; the other the effect of this Expiation, carrying away; one notes the meritorious Cauſe, the other the conſequent.

כסוי Covered.] Alluding to the covering of the Ægyptians in the Red Sea. Menochius thinks it alludes to the manner of writing among the Hebrews, which he thinks to be the ſame with that of the Romans; as writing with a Pencil upon Wax ſpread upon Tables, which when they would blot out, they made the Wax plain, and drawing it over the Writing, covered the former Letters. And ſo it is equivalent with that expreſſion of blotting out ſin, as in the other alluſion it is with caſting Sin into the depths of the Sea.

חשוב Impute. Not charging upon account. As Sin is a defection from the Law, ſo it is forgiven; as it is offenſive to God's Holineſs, ſo it is covered; as it is a Debt involving Man in a debt of Puniſhment, ſo it is not imputed; They all note the certainty, and extent, and perfection of Pardon. The three words expreſſing Sin here, being the ſame that are uſed by God in the declaration of his Name, Exod. 34. 7. Here are to be conſidered,

1. The Nature of Pardon.
2. The Author of it, God.
3. The Extent of it, Tranſgreſſion, Sin, Iniquity.
4. The Manner of it, implied, by Faith in Chriſt.

The Apoſtle quoting this place, Rom. 4. 7. to prove Juſtification by Faith: As Sin is not imputed, ſo ſomething is imputed inſtead of it. Covering implies ſomething wherewith a thing is covered, as well as the act whereby it is covered.

5. The Effect of it, Bleſſedneſs.

I ſhall not divide them into diſtinct Propoſitions, but take the words in order as they lie.

I. The Nature of Pardon.

1. Conſider the words, and what notes they will afford to us.

(1.) Covering, as it alludes to the manner of writing, and ſo is the ſame with blotting out, Iſa. 43. 25. I, even I am he that blots out thy Tranſgreſſion; whereby is implied, that Sin is a Debt, and Pardon is the remitting of it. It notes,

[1.] The nullity of the Debt. A croſſed Book will not ſtand good in Law, becauſe the croſſing of the Book implies the Satisfaction of the Debt. A Debt may be read in our manner of writing in a croſſed Book, but it cannot be pleaded. God may after Pardon read our Sins in the Book of his Omniſcience, but not charge them upon us at the bar of his Juſtice.

[2.] God's willingneſs to Pardon. Blots, not razeth. He engraves them not upon Marble, he writes them not with a Pen of Iron, or point of a Diamond; writing upon Wax is eaſily made plain.

[3.] The extent of it. Blotting ſerves for a great Debt as well as a ſmall, a Thouſand Pound may as well, and as ſoon be daſht out by a blot as a Thouſand Pence.

[4.] The quickneſs of it upon Repentance. It takes more time to write a Debt in a Book than to croſs it out; one blow would obliterate a great deal of writing upon Wax. Sins that have been contracting many Years, when God pardons, he blots out in a moment.

(2.) Covering, as it alludes to the drowning the Egyptians is expreſt by caſting into the depths of the Sea, Micah 7. 19. Thou wilt caſt all their Sins into the depths of the Sea.

This notes alſo,

[1.] God's willingneſs to pardon. Caſts them, not lays them gently aſide, but flings them away with violence, as things that he cannot endure the ſight of, and is reſolved never to take notice of them more.

[2.] God's reality in Pardon. He will caſt their Sins as far as the Arm of his Omnipotency can reach; If there be any place further than the depths of the Sea, thither they ſhall be thrown out of the ſight of his Juſtice.

[3.] The extent. [All] their Sins. The Sea covered Egyptian Princes, as well as the People. The mighty Lord, as well as the common Soldier, ſank like Lead in thoſe mighty Waters.

[4.] The Duration of it. The Sea vomits up nothing that it takes into its lower Bowels, things caſt into the depths of the Ocean never appear more. Rivers may be turned, and drain'd, but who can lave out the Ocean?

(3.) Not imputing. Not putting upon account, not charging the Debt in a legal Proceſs. To this is equivalent, the expreſſion of not remembring, Iſa. 43. 25. I will not remember their Sins. An Act of Oblivion is paſt upon Sin. This notes,

[1.] That God will not exact the Debt of thee. God doth not abſolutely forget Sin, for what he knows never ſlips out of his Knowledge. So that his not remembring is rather an act of his Will, than a defect in his Underſtanding. As when an Act of Oblivion is paſſed, the Fact committed is not Phyſically forgotten, but legally, becauſe the fear of Puniſhment is removed. God puts them out of the memory of his Wrath, though not out of the memory of his Knowledge. He doth remember them paternally to chaſtize thee for them, though not judicially to condemn thee.

[2.] Not upbraid thee. Not with a ſcornful upbraiding mention them to caſt thee off, but with a merciful renewing the remembrance of them upon thy Conſcience, to excite thy Repentance, and keep thee within the due bounds of Humility and Reverence.

More particularly, the nature of Pardon may be explained in theſe Propoſitions. We muſt not think that theſe Expreſſions, as they denote Pardon, do intimate in this Act the taking away of the being of Sin, nature of Sin, or demerit of Sin.

1. The being and inherency of Sin is not taken away. Though ſin be not imputed to us, yet it is inherent in us. The Being remains, though the Power be dethroned. By Pardon God takes away Sin, not as it is a pollution of the Soul, but as it is an inducement to Wrath. Though Remiſſion, and Sanctification are concomitants, yet they are diſtinct Acts, and wrought in a diſtinct manner.

2. The nature of Sin is not taken away. Juſtification is a relative change of the Perſon, not of the Sin; for though God will not by an act of his Juſtice puniſh the Perſon pardoned, yet by his Holineſs he cannot but hate the Sin, becauſe though it be pardoned, it is ſtill contrary to God, and enmity againſt him. 'Tis not a change of the native malice of the Sin, but a non-imputation of it to the Offender. Though the Perſon ſinning be free from any Indictment, yet Sin is not freed from its malitia, and oppoſition to God. For though the Law doth not condemn a juſtified Perſon, becauſe he is tranſlated into another ſtate, yet it condemns the acts of Sin, though the guilt of thoſe Acts doth not redound upon the Perſon to bring the Wrath of God upon him. Though David had the ſins of Murther and Adultery pardon'd, yet this Pardon did not make David a righteous Perſon in thoſe Acts, for it was Murther and Adultery ſtill, and the change was not in his Sin, but in his Soul and State.

3. The Demerit of Sin is not taken away. As Pardon doth not alter Sins Nature, ſo neither doth it alter Sins demerit, for to merit Damnation belongs to the nature of it; ſo that we may look upon our ſelves as deſerving Hell, though the Sin whereby we deſerve it, be remitted. Pardon frees us from actual Condemnation, but not, as conſidered in our own Perſons, from the deſert of Condemnation. As when a King pardons a Thief, he doth not make the Theft to become formally no Theft, or to be meritoriouſly no capital Crime. Upon thoſe two grounds of the nature and demerit of Sin, a juſtified Perſon is to bewail it; and I queſtion not but the conſideration of this doth add to the triumph and Hallelujahs of the glorified Souls, whoſe chief work being to praiſe God for Redemption, they cannot but think of the nature and demerit of that from which they were redeemed, Rev. 5. 13.

4. The

4. The guilt of Sin, or obligation to Punishment is taken away by Pardon. Sin committed doth presently, by vertue of the Law transgressed bind over the Sinner to Death: But Pardon makes void this Obligation; so that God no longer accounts us Persons obnoxious to him. *Peccatum remitti non aliud est quam non imputari ad pœnam. 'Tis a revoking the Sentence of the Law against the Sinner; and God renouncing upon the account of the Satisfaction made by Christ to his Justice, any right to punish a Believer, doth actually discharge him upon his Believing, from that sentence of the Law under which he lay in the state of Unbelief; and also as he parts with this right to punish, so he confers a right upon a Believer humbly to challenge it, upon the account of the Satisfaction wrought by his Surety. God hath not only in his own Mind and Resolution parted with this right of Punishing, but also given an express declaration of his Will, 2 Cor. 5. 19. God was in Christ reconciling the World unto himself, i. e. openly renouncing, upon Christ's Account, the right to Punish, whence follows the non-imputation of Sin. Not imputing their trespasses unto them. The Justice of God will not suffer that that Sin which is pardoned, should be punished; for can that be Justice in a Prince to pardon a Thief, and yet to bring him to the Gallows for that Fact? Though the Malefactor doth justly deserve it, yet after a Pardon and the Word passed, it is not justly inflicted. God indeed doth punish for that Sin which is pardoned. Though Nathan, by God's Commission, had declared David's Sin pardoned, yet the Sword was to stick in the Bowels of his Family, 2 Sam. 12. 10, 15. The Sword shall never depart from thy House, [the Lord hath put away thy Sin, thou shalt not dye.] But

* Durand. lib. 4. dist. 1. q. 7. For Sin to be pardoned, is nothing else but not to be imputed in order to punishment.

(1.) 'Tis not a Punishment in order to Satisfaction. Because Christ's Satisfaction had no flaw in it, and stood in need of nothing to eek it out: But 'tis for the vindication of the Honour of God's Holiness, that he might not be thought an approver of Sin; and this was the reason of David's Punishment in the death of his Child by Bathsheba. 2 Sam. 12. 14. [Because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the Enemies of the Lord to Blaspheme.]

(2.) 'Tis not so much penal as medicinal. A Judge commands a Hand to be cut off, that is for Punishment; a Physician and a Father order the same, but for the Patient's Cure, and the preservation of the Body. And though God after Pardon acts not towards his People in the nature of a Judge, yet he never lays aside the Authority and Affection of a Father. We are delivered from a Judge's Wrath, but not from a Father's Anger. In that remarkable dumbness inflicted upon Zachary for his unbelief, Luke 1. 18. 20. there was a confirmation of his Faith, as well as the chastisement of his Incredulity. The Angel upon his unbelieving desire of a Sign, gives him a Testimony of the truth of his Errand, but such an one that should make him feel in some measure the smart of his unbelief.

(3.) If it be penal, 'tis not the eternal punishment due to Sin. 'Tis but temporary and not embittered by Wrath, which is the gall of Punishment.

This taking off the obligation to Punishment is the true nature of Pardon. Which will be evident from, 2 Sam. 19. 19. Let not my Lord impute Iniquity unto me. Shimei desires David not to impute Iniquity, and not to remember it. It was not in David's Power absolutely to forget it, and Shimei's confessing the Fact with those circumstances in verse 20. was enough to recall it to David's Memory, if he had forgot it; but he desires David not to bring him to satisfy the penalty of the Law for reviling his Sovereign.

II. The Author of Pardon, God For Pardon is the Sovereign Prerogative of God, whereby he doth acquit a believing Sinner from all obligation to Satisfactory Punishment, upon the account of the Satisfaction and Righteousness of Christ apprehended by Faith.

1. 'Tis God's Act. Remission is the Creditor's, not the Debtor's Act; though the Debtor be obliged in Justice to pay the Debt, yet there is no obligation upon the Creditor to demand the Debt, because it is at his liberty to renounce or maintain his Right to it; and God hath as much Power as Man to relax his Right, provided it be with a Salvo to his own Honour, and the holiness of his Nature, which he cannot deny for the Sinners safety, as the Apostle tells us, God cannot deny himself. Yet properly, say some, though Sin be a Debt, God is not to be considered in Pardon as a Creditor, because Sin is not a pecuniary Debt, but a Criminal, and so God is to be considered as a Governor, Law-giver, Guardian, and Executor of his Laws, and so may dispence with the Severities of them. If an inferior Person tear an Indictment, it may be brought again into Court; but if the chief Magistrate order the casting it out, who can plead it? 'Tis God's Act, and if God justifies who can condemn? Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's Elect? It is God that justifies, who shall condemn? That God absolves thee that hath power to condemn thee, that God who enacted the Law whereby thou art sentenced, proclaims the Gospel whereby thou art reconcil'd. 'Tis an offended God who is a forgiving God; that God whose Name thou hast prophaned, whose Patience thou hast abused, whose Laws thou hast violated, whose Mercy thou hast slighted, whose Justice thou hast dared, and whose Glory thou hast stained.

2. 'Tis not only his Act but his Prerogative, and he only can do it. God is the Party wronged. Nemo potest remittere de jure alieno. This Prerogative he glories in as peculiar to himself, the thoughts of this Honour are so sweet to him, that he repeats it twice, as a Title he will not share with another, Isa. 43. 25. [I, even I am he that blots out thy Transgressions.] Pardoning Offenders is one of a Princes Royalties. And this is reckoned among his Regalia, as a choice Flower and Jewel in his Crown, Exod. 34. 7. [forgiving Iniquity, Transgressions, and Sins. A Prince punisheth by his Ministers, but pardons by Himself. And indeed, God is never so glorious as in acts of Mercy: Justice makes him terrible, but Mercy renders him amiable. When Moses desired to see God in his Royalty, and best Perfections, he displays himself in his Goodness, Exod. 33. 18. Shew me thy glory, v. 19. I will make all my Goodness pass before thee. I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious. And though the Apostles had a power of Remission, and Binding, that was only ministerial and declarative, like that prophetical Power which Jeremy had to root up Nations, and destroy, Jer. 1. 10. i. e. to declare God's Will in such and such Judgments, as he should send him to pronounce. Men cannot pardon an infinite Wrong done to an infinite Justice. Forgiveness belongs to God, as,

(1.) Proprietor. He hath a greater Right to us than we have to our selves.

(2.) Sovereign. He is Lord over us, as we are his Creatures.

(3.) Governour of us, as we are parts of the World.

(4.) 'Tis an act of his Mercy: Not our Merit. Though there be a conditional connexion between Pardon, and Repentance, and Faith, yet there is no meritorious connexion ariseth from the Nature of thoſe Graces, but Remiſſion flows from the gracious Indulgence of the Promiſe.

'Tis the very tenderneſs of Mercy, the meltings of inward Bowels, Luke 1. 78. To give knowledge of Salvation, and Remiſſion of their Sins through the tender Mercies of our God. σπλαγχνα ἐλέους, an inexhauſtible Mercy, Pſal. 86. 5. Thou Lord art ready to forgive, and art plenteous in Mercy. A multitude of tender Mercies, Pſal. 51. 1. What Arithmetick can count all the Bubblings up of Mercy in the Breaſt of God, and all the Glances, and all the Doles of his pardoning Grace towards his Creatures? And he keeps this Mercy by him as in a Treaſury to this purpoſe, Exod. 34. 7. keeping Mercy for Thouſands, forgiving Iniquity, &c. And is ſtill as full as ever, as the Sun which hath influenc'd ſo many Animals and Vegetables, and expell'd ſo much Darkneſs and Cold, is ſtill as a ſtrong Man, able to run the ſame Race, and perform by its Light and Heat the ſame Operations. When Mercy ſhews it ſelf in State with all its Train, it is but to uſher in pardoning Grace, Exod. 34. 6, 7. not a Letter, not an Attribute that makes up the compoſition of that Name but is a Friend and Votary of Mercy. And that latter Clauſe a learned Man explains of God's Clemency, He will by no means clear the Guilty, viſiting the Iniquity of the Fathers, &c. which he renders thus; He will not utterly cut off and deſtroy, but when he doth viſit the Sins of the Fathers upon the Children, it ſhall be but to the third or fourth Generation, not for ever. This Name of God is urged by Moſes, Numb. 14. 17. Now I beſeech thee, let the Power of my Lord be great; the Lord is Long-ſuffering, and of great Mercy, forgiving Iniquity and Tranſgreſſion, and by no means clearing the Guilty, viſiting the Iniquity, &c. Pardon, I beſeech thee, the Iniquity of this People, according to the greatneſs of thy Mercy. Where Moſes repeats this Clauſe more particularly than he doth the other parts of his Name; which ſurely he would not have done, and pleaded it as a Motive to God to pardon Iſrael, if he had not underſtood it of God's Clemency; for otherwiſe he had dwelt more upon the Argument of Juſtice than upon that of Mercy, which had not been proper to edge his preſent Petition with. Nay it is ſuch pure Mercy, the genuine birth of Mercy, that it partakes of its very Name, as Children bear the Name of their Father, Heb. 8. 12. I will be merciful to their Iniquity, which in the Prophet, Jer. 31. 34. whence the Apoſtle quotes it, is, I will forgive their Iniquity.

That it is ſo, will appear, becauſe,

(1.) No Attribute could be the firſt Motive of Pardon but this. His Juſtice would loudly cry for Vengeance, and flame out againſt ungrateful Sinners. His Holineſs would make him abhor not only the Embraces, but the very ſight of ſuch filthy Creatures as we are. His Power would attend to receive and execute the Commands of his Juſtice and Holineſs, did not Compaſſion ſtep in to qualifie.

(2.) Unconſtrained Mercy. Men pardon many times, becauſe they are too weak to puniſh. But God wants not power to inflict Judgments, neither doth Man want Weakneſs to ſink under it, Rom. 5. 6. When we were without Strength, Chriſt dy'd for us. God wanted not ſufficient reaſon to juſtifie a ſevere Proceeding both in the quality of Sin, every Sin being a Contrariety to the Law, Sovereignty, Work, Glory, yea the very Being of God; now for God to pardon that which would pull him out of his Throne, hath blemiſhed the Creation, robs him of his Honour, muſt be an Act of the richeſt and pureſt Mercy: And in the quantity, multitudes of Sins of this curſed qualit as numerous as Motes in the Sun-beams. 'Tis impoſſible for the nimbleſt Angel to write down the Extravagancies of Men committed in the ſpace of twenty four Hours, if he could know all the Operations of their Souls as well as their outward Actions; all thoſe God doth ſee, ſimul & ſemel, and yet is ready to pardon in the midſt of numberleſs Provocations.

(3.) Reſolved and deſigned Mercy. 'Tis not thro' inadverteney and inſenſibleneſs of the aggravating Circumſtances of them. God muſt needs know the Nature and Circumſtances of all thoſe Sins he himſelf laid upon Chriſt. Yea God hath an actuated Knowledge of all when he is about to pardon, Iſa. 43. 22. God reckons up their Sins of omiſſions: They had been weary of him, and had not brought to him their ſmall Cattle; had preferred their Lambs and Kids before his Service, wearied him with their Iniquities, endeavoured to tire him out of the Government of the World. What could one have expected after this black Scroul, but Fire-balls of Wrath? Yet he blots them out, v. 25. though all thoſe Sins were freſh in his Memory. Nay, the Name we have profaned becomes our Solicitor, Ezek. 36. 22. For my Holy Names ſake which you have profaned.

(4.) Delightful and pleaſant Mercy. He delights in pardoning Mercy, as a Father delights in his Children. He is therefore called the Father of Mercy. Micah 7. 18. he pardons Iniquity, and retains not his Anger for ever, becauſe he delights in Mercy. Never did we take ſo much pleaſure in ſinning, as God doth in forgiving. Never did any Penitent take ſo much pleaſure in receiving, as God doth in giving a Pardon: He ſo much delights in it, that he counts it his Wealth; Riches of Grace, Riches of Mercy, glorious Riches of Mercy; no Attribute elſe is called his Riches. He ſighs when he muſt draw his Sword, Hoſ. 11. 8. How ſhall I give thee up, O Ephraim! But when he blots out Iniquity, then it is, I, even I am he that blots out your Tranſgreſſions for my Names ſake. His delight in this is equal to the delight he hath in his Name. This is pure Mercy, to change the Tribunal of Juſtice into a Throne of Grace; to beſtow Pardons, where he might inflict Puniſhments; and to put on the Deportment of a Father inſtead of that of a Judge.

4. The Act of his Juſtice. Thoſe Attributes which ſeem contrary, are joyn'd together to produce Forgiveneſs: Yet God is not to be conſidered in pardon only as Judex, but paternus Judex; there is a Compoſition of Judge and Father in this Act; Free Grace on God's part, but Juſtice upon the account of Chriſt. That God will accept of a Satisfaction is Mercy; that he will not forgive without a Satisfaction is Juſtice: Mercy forgives it in us, though Juſtice did puniſh it in Chriſt. Chriſt by his Death paid the Debt, and God by the Reſurrection of Chriſt diſcharg'd the Debt; and therefore the Juſtice of God is engaged to beſtow Pardon upon a Believer. God ſet forth Chriſt as a Propitiation, that he might be juſt, and therefore a juſtifier of him that believes, Rom. 3. 26. Either the Debt is paid, or not; if not, then Chriſt's Death is in vain; if it be, then God's Juſtice is ſo equitable, as not to demand a ſecond Payment. Therefore another Apoſtle joyns faithful and righteous; it might have been faithful and merciful, faithful and loving; but faithful and righteous, or juſt, takes in the Attribute, which is moſt terrible to Man, 1 John 1. 9. He is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, δικαιος. Iſai joyns both together, a juſt God, and a Saviour, Iſa. 45. 21. So that here is unſpeakable Comfort. That which engaged God formerly to puniſh Man, engageth him now to pardon a Believer. That which moved him to puniſh Chriſt, doth excite him to forgive thee.

5. The Act of his Power. 'Tis a ſign of a noble and generous Mind to paſs over Offences and Injuries. Sick and indigent Perſons are the moſt peeviſh and impatient, and leaſt able to concoct an Injury. And when we kindle into a Flame upon the leaſt Sparks of a Wrong, the Apoſtle tells us, we are overcome of Evil, Rom. 12. 21. Be not overcome of Evil: We become Captives to our angry Paſſions; ſpeedy Revenge in us being an Act of Weakneſs, the contrary muſt be an Act of Power over our ſelves. God's not executing the fierceneſs of his Anger is laid upon his being a God, and not Man, Hoſ. 11. 9. God's infinite Power gives a Riſe to Pardon, Micah 7. 18. Who is a God like to thee, that pardons Iniquity? Junius and Tremellius render it, Who is a ſtrong God? and the Hebrew אל will bear it. Let the Power of my Lord be great, ſaith Moſes, Numb. 14. 17. The Word Jigdal is written with a great Jod, to ſhew, ſay the Jews, that it is more than an ordinary power to command ones ſelf when injur'd. Therefore when God proclaims his pardoning Name, he uſhers it in with Names of Power; The Lord, the Lord God, Exod. 34. 6. 'Tis a greater Work to forgive, than to prevent the commiſſion of Sin; as it is a greater Work to raiſe a dead Man, than to cure a ſick Man; one is a Work of Art, the other belongs only to Omnipotency.

III. The manner of it. How it is carry'd on.

1. On God's part by Chriſt.

(1.) By his Death. He is the Scape-Goat, upon whom our Sins are laid, Iſa. 53. 6. Our Sins are made Chriſt's, and Chriſt's Righteouſneſs is made ours: He is ſaid to be made Sin for us, and we are ſaid to be made the Righteouſneſs of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. a bleſſed exchange for us; he bore that Wrath, indured thoſe Torments, ſuffered thoſe Strokes of Juſtice which were due to us. The Pardon of Sin doth coſt us Confeſſions and Tears, but it coſt Chriſt Blood, and unknown Pains; as the Greek Liturgy, Δι' ἀγνώστων πόνων, have Mercy on us.

[1.] Laid upon him by God. God appropriates this Work to himſelf, Zach. 3. 9. I will engrave the engraving thereof, ſpeaking of the Stone, which is the ſame with his Servant the Branch. As a Stone is cut with a Chizzel, which makes deep Furrows in it; ſo did God deal with Chriſt, and that in order to the taking away of Sin. I will remove the Iniquity of that Land in one Day, viz. the Day of Chriſt's Suffering. By that Offering of himſelf, he ſhall perfectly ſatisfie me. Therefore it is called the Will of God, in order to the taking away Sin, Heb. 10. 9, 10. compared with v. 11, 12. I come to do thy Will, by which Will we are ſanctified; which Will was to take away Sin. For v. 11. that was the end of his Sacrifice, the Legal Sacrifices not being able to do it. God did not only conſent to it, or give a bare Grant, but it was a propenſe and affectionate Motion of his Heart, Iſa. 53. 10. It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him. Hence did the Angels ſing at his Birth, Glory to God in the higheſt, Peace on Earth, and Good Will towards Men. The Peace he was to procure was the Fruit of God's Good Will towards us.

[2.] Voluntarily undertaken by Chriſt, Heb. 10. 5, 7. Lo I come, I delight to do thy Will, O my God. Willingneſs is the Entrance of the Work; Willingneſs to take a Body, and Willingneſs to lay down that Body. He had as it were a Fever of Affection, a Combuſtion in his Bowels till it was finiſhed. In his greateſt Agonies he did not repent of his Undertaking, or deſire to give it over: He cry'd indeed to his Father, that this Cup might paſs from him, but he preſently ſubmits: If there be no other way to ſave Sinners, I will paſs on through Death and Hell to do it. When he was afflicted and oppreſſed, he murmur'd not at it, Iſa. 53. 7. He opened not his Mouth, he opened not his Mouth; it is twice repeated, to ſhew his Willingneſs. And God was highly pleaſed with him for this very Reaſon, becauſe he did pour out his Soul, and bore the Sins of many, and made Interceſſion for the Tranſgreſſors. All which Expreſſions denote his Earneſtneſs and Readineſs in it.

(2.) By his Reſurrection. His Death is the Payment, his Reſurrection the Diſcharge, Rom. 4. ult. Who was delivered for our Offences, and roſe again for our Juſtification. Not that we are formally juſtified by the Reſurrection of Chriſt, but that thereby God declar'd, that whoſoever believes in him ſhould be juſtified upon that believing. For if Chriſt had not riſen, there had been no certainty of the payment of the Debt. In his Death he pays the Sum, as he is our Surety; and in his Reſurrection he hath his Quietus eſt out of God's Exchequer. God will not have this Payment from Chriſt, which he hath acknowledged himſelf publickly to be ſatisfy'd with, and from Believers too. For upon his Reſurrection he ſent him to bleſs Men, Acts 3. ult. God having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you. How? In turning away every one of you from his Iniquity: It being a great Encouragement to turn Men from Sin, when God had thus declared them pardonable by the Reſurrection of his Son.

2. On our parts by Faith. Faith is as neceſſary in an inſtrumental way, as Chriſt in a meritorious way, Acts 26. 18. That they may receive Forgiveneſs of Sins by Faith that is in me. Chriſt purchaſeth a Pardon, but Faith only puts us into poſſeſſion of a Pardon; yet it cannot from its own Worth challenge Forgiveneſs at the Hands of God, but upon the account of Chriſt, who hath merited Forgiveneſs. Though the King grants a Pardon to a condemned Malefactor, yet he may be executed unleſs he pleads it the next Aſſizes, though he hath it lying by him: So, unleſs we ſue it out, and accept of it by Faith, all Chriſt's Purchaſe will not advantage us. Faith looks not barely upon the Sufferings of Chriſt, but upon his End and Deſign in it: It looks not upon his Paſſion as a Story, but as a Teſtament; and you ſeldom find the Death of Chriſt mentioned in the New Teſtament, without expreſſing the End of it. This Forgiveneſs by Chriſt's Death as the meritorious Cauſe, ſhews,

(1.) God's willingneſs to pardon. If God did delight in the Death of Chriſt, it was not ſurely ſimply in his Death; for, could a Father delight to tear out the Bowels of his Son? The Afflictions of his People go to his Heart, much more would the Sufferings of his Darling. God had more Delight in Forgiveneſs, than Grief at his Sons Sufferings; for he never repented of it, though our Saviour beſought him with Tears. And that God who was never Deaf to any that called upon him, nor ever will be, would not hear his only Son in the Requeſt, to take the Cup from him, or abate any thing of the weight of his Sufferings, becauſe it was neceſſary for the Pardon of Sin, Sin, neceſſitate decreti, if not naturæ. God repented of making the World, but never of forgiving Sin; So that the Pardon of Sin is more pleaſing to him than the Sufferings of his Son were grievous; otherwiſe whatſoever the Father would have done by Inſtruments, yet ſurely he himſelf would not have been the Executioner of him. But in this Affair there were not only Inſtruments, Judas to betray him, the Jews to accuſe him, the Diſciples to forſake him, Pilate to condemn him, the Soldiers to mock and crucifie him, and Thieves to revile him, but God himſelf, Iſa. 53. 10. Yet it pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him; he hath put him to grief; Thou ſhalt make his Soul an Offering for Sin. His own Father that lov'd him, (as Abraham in the Type) puts as it were the Knife to the Throat of his only Son; which ſurely God would not have done, had not Pardon of Sin been infinitely pleaſing to him. And how great a pleaſure muſt that be, that ſwallow'd up all Grief at his Sons Sufferings? Yea, he ſeemed to love our Salvation more than he loved the Life of his Son; ſince the End is always more amiable than the Means, and the Means only lovely as they reſpect the End.

(2.) The certainty of Forgiveneſs. God muſt deny Chriſt's Payment before he can deny thy Pardon. God will not deny what his Son hath earned ſo dearly; and what he earned was for us, and not for himſelf. Did God pardon many before Chriſt died, and will he not pardon believing Souls ſince Chriſt died? Some were certainly ſaved before the coming of Chriſt: Upon what account? Not for their own Righteouſneſs; that is but a Ragg, and could not merit infinite Grace. Not by the Law; that thundered nothing but Death, and condemned Millions; but never breathed a Pardon to one Perſon. Or was it by their vehement Supplications? Thoſe could not make an infinite Righteouſneſs mutable: Juſtice muſt be preferred before the Cries of Malefactors; and if thoſe could have done it, God would not have been at the expence of his Son's Blood. Therefore it muſt be upon this account, Rom. 3. 25. For the Remiſſion of Sins that are paſt. Did God pardon upon truſt, and will he not much more upon Payment? Did he forgive when there was only a Promiſe of Payment, and ſome Thouſands of Years to run out before it was to be made? and will he not much more forgive, ſince he hath all the Debt paid into his Hands? Would God remit Sin when Chriſt had nothing under his Hand to ſhew for it? And now that he hath a publick Teſtimony, and Acquittance, will he not much more do it? Seeing his purging our Sins, or expiating them by his Death, was the ground of his Exaltation to the honour of ſitting at the Right Hand of God in our Natures, Heb. 1. 3. When he had by himſelf purged our Sins, ſat down at the Right-hand of the Majeſty on high; it is a certain Evidence of the grant of Pardon upon the account of this Sacrifice to thoſe that ſeek it in God's Methods, ſince God hath ſhewn himſelf ſo pleaſed with it: For it is clear, that becauſe Chriſt loved Righteouſneſs and hated Iniquity, i. e. kept up the Honour of God's Juſtice and Holineſs, by the offering himſelf to Death, that God hath given him a Portion above all his Fellows.

(3.) The extent of it. Both to original and actual Sin, John 1. 29. Behold the Lamb of God, that takes away the Sin of the World. Sin of the World, the Sin of Humane Nature, that firſt Sin of Adam. Of this Mind is Auſtin, and others, that original Sin is not imputed to any to condemnation ſince the Death of Chriſt. But howſoever this be, it is certain it is taken away from Believers, as to its imputation. Chriſt was made Sin for us; 2 Cor. 5. 21. to bear all Sin. It had been an imperfect Payment to have paid the Intereſt, and let the Principal remain; or to have paid the Principal, and let the Intereſt remain. There is no Condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, Rom. 8. 1. and therefore no damning Matter or Guilt left in arrear. It had been Folly elſe for the Apoſtle to have publiſhed a defying Challenge to the whole Creation, to have brought an Indictment againſt a juſtified Perſon, (Rom. 8. 33. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's Elect?) if the leaſt Crime remained unremitted for the Juſtice of God, the Severity of the Law, the Acuteneſs of Conſcience, or the Malice of the Devil to draw up into a Charge. Since the end of his coming was to deſtroy the Works of the Devil, whereby he had acquired a Power over Man, he leaves not therefore any one Sin of a Believer unſatisfy'd for, which may continue, and eſtabliſh the Devil's Right over him. If the Redemption only of the Jews, with the Excluſion of the Gentiles in the firſt Compact ſeemed to diſpleaſe him, to ſhed his Blood for ſmall Sins only, would have been as little to his Content. It had been too low a Work for ſo great a Saviour to have undergone thoſe unknown Sufferings for Debts of a ſmaller value, and to ſhed that ineſtimable Blood for the payment of Farthings, and leave Talents unſatisfy'd. Certainly, God ſent not his Son, but with an intention his Blood ſhould be improved to the higheſt uſes for thoſe that perform the Covenant-conditions, and that Father who would have us honour his Son as we honour himſelf, will ſurely honour his Son's Satisfaction in the extenſive Effects of it, as he would honour his own Mercy, ſince they are both ſo ſtraitly linkt together. And it is as much for the Glory of Chriſt's Satisfaction, as for the honour of his Father's Mercy, to paſs by the greateſt Tranſgreſſions.

(4.) The continuance of it. Thou art pardoned, and yet thou ſinneſt; but Chriſt hath paid and never runs more upon the Score. Thou art pardoned and doſt daily forfeit, and needeſt a daily Renewal; but Chriſt hath purchaſed, and never ſins away his Purchaſe. God expected a Price ſuitable to the Debt he foreſaw Men would owe him, for he knew how much the Summ would amount unto. When he gave Chriſt, he intended him for the juſtification of many Offences, Rom. 5. 16. The free Gift is of many Offences unto Juſtification, ſpeaking of the Gift of God, v. 15. And therefore ſince God cannot be miſtaken in the greatneſs of the Summ, becauſe of his infinite Knowledge, it had been a greater Act of Wiſdom not to provide any Remedy at all, than not to do it thoroughly. If the continuance of that imperfect Remiſſion of Adam and the Patriarchs was drawn out for above Three thouſand Years and more, and the enjoyment of Happineſs made good to them meerly upon Chriſt's undertaking, ſurely it will be much more upon his actual performing, Rom. 3. 25. There was then a πάρεσις, now an ἄφεσις, they had a continuance of freedom from Puniſhment by his Mediatorſhip, and Sponſion, much more ſhall Believers have a continuance of Pardon by his actual Sacrifice, upon which the validity of all the former Mediatory Acts did depend; Since now there is no more remembrance of Sin by the continuance of legal Sacrifices, his being ſo abſolutely compleat. Therefore God hath erected a ſtanding Office of Advocacy for Chriſt,

1 John 2. 1. in Heaven, for the repreſenting of his Wounds and Satisfaction, and beſpeaking a continuance of Grace to us. He is ſaid to be the Lamb that taketh away the Sins of the World, John 1. 29. not ὁ ἄρας hath taken, or ὁ ἀρῶν will take, but ὁ αἴρων which notes actum perpetuum, the conſtant Effect of his Death. And ſince as I ſaid before, Chriſt hath an higher Portion than others, becauſe he loved Righteouſneſs, in this Portion he hath a Joy and Gladneſs; but his Joy would certainly be ſullied, if Pardon ſhould not be continued to thoſe for whom he purchaſed it.

(5.) The worth of it. That muſt be of incomparable value that was purchaſed at ſo great a Price as the Blood of God, Acts 20. 28. (So it is called by reaſon of the Union of the Divine Nature with the Humane, conſtituting one Perſon.) 'Tis Blood, which all the Gold and Silver, and the Stones and Duſt of the Earth turned into Pearls, could not equal. God underſtood the worth of it, who in Juſtice would require no more of his Son at leaſt than the thing was worth, not a Drop of Blood more than the value of it. Neither ſurely would Chriſt, who could not be miſtaken in the juſt Price, have parted with more than was neceſſary for the purchaſe of it. It would have beggar'd the whole Creation to have paid a Price for it. The Prayers and Services of a gracious Soul, though God delights in them, could not be a ſufficient Recompence. And the bare Mercy of God, without the Concurrence of his provokt Juſtice, could not grant it, though his Bowels naturally are troubled at the Afflictions of his Creatures.

IV. Extenſiveneſs, fulneſs, or perfectneſs of Pardon. 1. In the Act; forgiving, covering, not imputing. 2. In the Object; Iniquities, Tranſgreſſions, and Sins.

1. Perfect in reſpect of State. God retains no Hatred againſt a pardoned Perſon. He never imputes Sin formally, becauſe he no more remembers it, though virtually he may, to aggravate the Offence a Believer hath fallen into after his Juſtification. So Job poſſeſſed the Sins of his Youth. And Chriſt tacitly put Peter in remembrance of his Denial of him. The Grant is compleat here, though all the Fruits of Remiſſion are not enjoyed till the Day of Judgment, and therefore in Scripture, Sin is ſaid then to be forgiven. 'Tis a queſtion whether Believers Sins will be mentioned at the Day of Judgment. Some think they will, becauſe all Men are to give an account. Methinks there is ſome evidence to the contrary. Our Saviour never mentioned the unworthy Carriage of his Diſciples to him in his Sufferings, and after his Reſurrection, ſeems to have removed from him all remembrance of it. 'Tis not to be expected, that a loving Husband will lay open the Faults of his tender Spouſe upon the Day of the publick Solemnization of the Nuptials. But if it be otherwiſe, 'tis not to upbraid them, but to enhance their Admirations of his Grace. He will diſcover their Graces as well as their Sin, and unſtop the Bottles of their Tears, as well as open the Book of their Tranſgreſſions. Our Saviour, upon Mary's anointing him, applauds her Affection, but mentions not her former Iniquity.

It muſt needs be perfect.

[1.] All God's Actions are ſuitable to his Nature. What God doth, he doth as a God. And is he perfect in his other Works, and not in his Mercy, which is the choiceſt Flower in his Crown? God ſees blacker Circumſtances in our Sins, than an inraged Conſcience, or a malicious Devil can repreſent: But God pardons not according to our Apprehenſions, which though great in a tempeſtuous Conſcience, yet are not ſo high as God's knowledge of it.

[2.] The Cauſe of Pardon is perfect. Both the Mercy of God, and the Merits of Chriſt are immutably perfect. 'Tis for his own Glory, his own Mercies ſake, that he pardons. He will not dimm the Luſtre of his own Crown, by leaving the effect of his Glory imperfect, or ſatisfying the Importunities of his Mercy by halves. The Saints in Heaven have not a more perfect Righteouſneſs, whereby they continue their ſtanding, than thoſe on Earth have; for, though inherent Righteouſneſs here is ſtained, yet imputed, upon which Pardon is founded, is altogether ſpotleſs. A Righteouſneſs that being infinite in reſpect of the Perſon, hath a ſufficiency for Devils, had it a congruity; but it hath both for us, becauſe manifeſted in our Natures.

(2.) In reſpect of the Objects. Sinful Nature, ſinful Habits, ſinful Diſpoſitions, pardon'd at once, though never ſo heinous;

[1.] For Quality. There was no limitation as to the deepneſs of the Wounds cauſed by the Fiery Serpents in the Wilderneſs; the Precept of looking upon them, extended to the Cure of all, let the Sting reach never ſo deep, the Wound be never ſo wide, or ſharp, and his ſight be never ſo weak, if he could but caſt his Eye upon the Brazen one. The Commiſſion Chriſt gave to his Diſciples, was to preach the Goſpel to every Creature, Mark 16. 15. every Humane Creature; the worſt as well as the beſt; though you meet with monſtrous Sinners in the likeneſs of Beaſts, and Devils, except none from ſuing out a Pardon in the Court of Mercy. The Almightineſs of his Mercy doth as much tranſcend our higheſt Iniquities, as it doth our ſhalloweſt Apprehenſions. Our Sins, as well as our Subſtance, are but as the Duſt of the Ballance, as eaſily to be blown away by his Grace, as the other puft into Nothing by his Power. No Sin is excepted in the Goſpel, but that againſt the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe it doth not ſtand with the Honour of God to pardon them who wilfully ſcorn the Means, and account the Redeemer no better than an Impoſtor. No Man can expect in reaſon he ſhould be ſaved by Mercy, who by a wilful Malice againſt the Son of God, tramples upon the free Offers of Grace, and provokes Mercy it ſelf to put on the Deportment of Juſtice, and call in revenging Wrath to its aſſiſtance, for the vindication of its deſpiſed Honour. The infinite Grace of God diſſolves the greateſt Miſts, as well as the ſmalleſt Exhalations, and melts the thick Clouds of Sin as well as the little Icicles.

[2.] The Quantity. Hath God ever put a reſtraint upon his Grace, and Promiſe, that we ſhall find Mercy if we ſin but to ſuch a number, and no more? 'Tis not agreeable to the Greatneſs and Majeſty of God's Mercy, to remit one part of the Debt, and to exact the other. It conſiſts not with the motive of Pardon, which is his own Love, to be both a Friend and an Enemy at the ſame time, in pardoning ſome, and charging others; and thus his Grace would rather be a Mockery, and Deriſion of Men. Neither doth it conſiſt with the end of Pardon, which is Salvation; for to give an half Pardon, is to give no Salvation; ſince if the leaſt Guilt remains unremitted, it gives Juſtice an unanſwerable Plea againſt us. What profit would would it be to have ſome forgiven, and be damned for the Remainder? Had any one Sin, for which Chriſt was to have made a compenſation, remain'd unſatisfied, the Redeemer could not have riſen; ſo if the ſmalleſt Sin remains unblotted, it will hinder our riſing from the power of eternal death, and make the pardon of all the reſt as a nullity in Law. But it is the Glory of God to paſs by all, Prov. 19. 31. It is his glory to paſs over a Tranſgreſſion. 'Tis the glory of a Man to paſs by an Offence. 'Tis a diſcovery of an inward Principle or Property, which is an Honour for a Man to be known the Maſter of. If it be his Glory to paſs by a ſingle and ſmall Injury, then to paſs by the more heinous and numerous Offences is a more tranſcendent Honour, becauſe it evidenceth this property to be in him, in a more triumphant Strength and Power. So that it is a clearer evidence of the illuſtrious vigor of Mercy in God, to paſs by mountainous, and heaped up Tranſgreſſions, than to forgive only ſome few Iniquities of a leſſer Guilt, Jer. 33. 8. I will cleanſe them from all their Iniquities, whereby they have ſinned againſt me, and I will pardon all their Iniquities whereby they have ſinned againſt me, and whereby they have tranſgreſt againſt me. Therefore when God tells the Jews, that he would give them a general diſcharge in the fulleſt Terms imaginable, to remove all Jealouſie from Men, either becauſe of the number or the aggravations of their Sins, he knew not how to leave expreſſing the delight he had in it, and the honour which accrued to him by it, It ſhall be to me a name of joy, a praiſe and honour before all the Nations of the Earth. He would get himſelf an honourable Name by the large riches of his Clemency. Mercy is as infinite as any other Attribute, as infinite as God himſelf: And as his Power can create incomprehenſible multitudes of Worlds, and his Juſtice kindle unconceivable Hells; ſo can his Mercy remit innumerable Sins.

3. Perfect in reſpect of Duration. Becauſe the Hand-writing of Ordinances is taken away, Col. 2. 14, 15. Blotting out the Hand-writing of Ordinances that was againſt us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his Croſs; which was the Ceremonial Law, wherein they did by their continual preſenting Sacrifices, and impoſition of Hands upon them, ſign a Bill or Bond againſt themſelves, whereby a Conſcience of Sin was retain'd, Heb. 10. 2, 3. and a Remembrance of Sin renewed, they could not ſettle the Conſcience in any firm Peace, Heb. 9. 9. they were compelled to do that every Day, whereby they did confeſs that Sin did remain, and want an expiation. Hence is the Law called a miniſtration of Condemnation, 2 Cor. 3. 9. becauſe it puts them in mind of Condemnation, and compelled the People to do that which teſtified, that the Curſe was yet to be aboliſhed, by virtue of a better Sacrifice. This Hand-writing which was ſo contrary to us, was taken away, nailed to his Croſs, torn in pieces, wholly cancelled, no more to be put in ſuit: Whence in oppoſition to this continual remembrance of Sin, under the legal adminiſtration, we read under the New Teſtament, of God's remembring Sin no more, Heb. 10. 3, 17. Chriſt hath ſo compounded the buſineſs with Divine Juſtice, that we have the Sins remitted, never returning upon us, and the renewal alſo of remiſſions upon daily Sins, if we truly repent. For tho' there be a blacker Tincture in Sins after Converſion, as being more deeply ſtain'd with Ingratitude, yet the Covenant of God ſtands firm, and he will not take away his kindneſs, Iſa. 54. 9, 10. And there is a greater affection in God to his Children, than to his Enemies; for theſe he loves before their Converſion, with a love of Benevolence, but thoſe with a love of Complacency. Will not God be as ready to continue his Grace to thoſe that are penitent, as to offer it to offending Rebels? Will he refuſe it to his Friends, when he intreats his Enemies? Not that any ſhould think, that becauſe of this duration, they have liberty to ſin, and upon ſome trivial Repentance, are reſtored to God's Favour. No, where Chriſt is made Righteouſneſs, he is made Sanctification. His Spirit and Merit go together. A new Nature, and a New State, are Concomitants; and he that ſins upon preſumption of the grand Sacrifice, never had any ſhare in it.

V. The Effect of Pardon. That is Bleſſedneſs.

(1.) The greateſt evil is taken away, Sin, and the dreadful conſequents of it. Other Evils are Temporal, but thoſe know no period in a doleful Eternity. There is more evil in Sin, than good in all the Creatures. Sin ſtrip'd the fallen Angels of their Excellency, and diſpoſſeſſed them of the Seat of Bleſſedneſs. It fights againſt God, it diſparages all his Attributes, it deforms and deſtroys the Creature, Rom. 7. 13. Other Evils may have ſome mixture of Good to make them tolerable, but Sin being exceeding ſinful, without the mixture of any Good, engenders nothing but Deſtruction, and endleſs Damnation. Into what Miſeries, Afflictions, Sorrows, hath that one Sin of Adam hurl'd all his Poſterity? What Schreechings, Wounds, Pangs, Horrors, doth it make in troubled Conſciences? How did it deface the Beauty of the Son of God, that created and upheld the World, with ſorrow in his Agonies, and the ſtroak of Death on the Croſs? How many Thouſand, Millions of poor Creatures have been damned for Sin, and are never like to ceaſe roaring under an inevitable Juſtice? Ask the Damned, and their Groans, Yellings, Howlings, will read thee a dreadful Lecture of Sins ſinfulneſs, and the puniſhment of it. And is it not then an ineſtimable Bleſſedneſs to be delivered from that, which hath wrought ſuch deplorable Executions in the World?

2. The greateſt Bleſſings are conferred. Pardon is God's Family-Bleſſing, and the peculiar Mercy of his choiceſt Darlings: He hands out other things to wicked Men, but he deals out this only to his Children.

[1.] The Favour of God. Sin makes thee Satan's Drudge, but Pardon makes thee God's Favourite. We may be ſick to death, with Lazarus, and be God's Friends; ſold to ſlavery, with Joſeph, and yet be dear to him; thrown into a Lion's Den, with Daniel, and be greatly beloved; poor with Lazarus, who had only Dogs for Chirurgions to dreſs his Sores, and yet have a Title to Abraham's Boſom. But we can never be beloved, if we are unpardoned; no ſhare in his Friendſhip, his Love, his Inheritance, without a Pardon. All created Evils cannot make us loathſome in a juſtified State; nor all created Goods make us lovely under Guilt. Sin is the only Object of God's Hatred; while this remains, his Holineſs cannot but hate us; when this is removed, his Righteouſneſs cannot but love us; Remiſſion and Favour are inſeparable, and can never be diſ-joined. 'Tis by this he makes us as a Diadem upon his Head, a Bracelet on his Arm; it is by this he writes us upon the Palms of his Hands, makes us his peculiar Treaſure, even as the Apple of his Eye, which Nature hath ſo carefully fenced.

[2.] Acceſs to God. A Prince may diſcard a Favourite for ſome Guilt, and though he may reſtore him to his Liberty in the Common-wealth, yet he may not admit him to the favour of his wonted

Pri-

Privacies. But a pardoned Man hath an acceſs to God, to a ſtanding and perpetually ſettled Grace, Rom. 5. 1, 2. Being juſtified by Faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom alſo we have acceſs. Guilt frights us, and makes us loath the very ſight of God: Pardon encourageth us to come near to him: Guilt reſpects him as a Judge, Pardon as a Friend. Who can confidently, or hopefully, call upon an angry and condemning God? But who cannot but hopefully call upon a forgiving God? Sin is the Partition-wall between God and us, and Pardon is the demoliſhing of it. Forgiveneſs is never beſtowed, but the Scepter is held out to invite us to come into God's Preſence. And what can be more deſirable than to have not only the favour of, but a free acceſs at any time to the Lord of Heaven and Earth, and at length an everlaſting Being with him?

[3.] Peace of Conſcience. There muſt needs be fair Weather when Heaven ſmiles upon us. All other things breed diſquietneſs. Sin was a Thorn in David's Crown; his Throne and Scepter were but miſerable Comforters, while his Guilt overwhelmed him. The glory of the World is no ſovereign Plaiſter for a wounded Spirit: Other Enjoyments may pleaſe the Senſe, but this only can gratifie the Soul. God's Thunder made Moſes tremble, Heb. 12. 21. But the probability of a gracious Pardon would make a damned Soul ſmile in the midſt of tormenting Flames. How often hath the ſenſe of it raiſed the Hearts of Martyrs, and made the Sufferers ſing, while the Spectators wept? Though this, I muſt confeſs, is not always an inſeparable Concomitant. There is much difference between a Pardon, and the comfort of it; that may paſs the Seal of the King, without the knowledge of the Malefactor. Pardon indeed always gives the jus ad rem, a right to peace of Conſcience, but not always jus in re, the poſſeſſion of it. There may be an actual ſeparation between Pardon and actual Peace, but not between Pardon, and the ground of Peace.

[4.] It ſweetens all Mercies. Other Mercies are a Ring, but Pardon is the Diamond in it. A juſtified Perſon may ſay, I have temporal Mercies, and a Pardon too, I live in repute in the World, and God's Favour too; Riches increaſe, and my Peace with God doth not diminiſh. I have Health with a Pardon, Friends with a Pardon, as Job 29. 3, 6, 7. among all other Bleſſings this he counts the chiefeſt, that God's Candle ſhin'd upon his Head. A Priſoner for ſome Capital Crime, may have all outward Accommodations, for Lodging, Diet, Attendance, without a real Happineſs, when he expects to be called to his Tryal before a ſevere Judge, from whom there is no Appeal, and that will certainly both paſs, and cauſe to be executed a Sentence of Death upon him. So though a Man wallows in all outward Contents, he cannot write himſelf Bleſſed, while the Wrath of God hangs over his Head, and he knows not how ſoon he may be ſummon'd before God's Tribunal, and hear that terrible Voice, Go thou curſed. What comfort can a Man take in Houſes, Land, Health, when he conſiders he owes more than all his Eſtate is worth? So, what comfort can a Man have in any thing in this World, when he may hourly expect an Arreſt from God, and a demand of all his Debts, and he hath not ſo much as one Farthing of his own, or any Intereſt in a ſufficient Surety? We may have Honour and a Curſe, Wealth and a Curſe, Children and a Curſe, Health and long Life and a Curſe, Learning and a Curſe, but we can never have Pardon and a Curſe. Our outward Things may be Gifts, but not Bleſſings, without a Pardon.

[5.] It ſweetens all Afflictions. A Frown with a Pardon is better than a thouſand Smiles without it. Sin is the Sting of Croſſes, and Remiſſion is a taking the Sting out of them. A ſight of Heaven will mitigate a Croſs on Earth. The Stones about Stephen's Ears did ſcarce afflict him, when he ſaw his Saviour open Heaven to entertain him. To ſee Death ſtaring us in the Face, and an Angry and Offended God above, ready to charge all our Guilt, is a doleful Spectacle. Look upon my Affliction and my Pain, and forgive all my Sins, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 25. 18. Sin doth embitter and adds weight to an Affliction, but the removal of Sin doth both lighten it and ſweeten it.

Uſe 1. An unpardoned Man is a miſerable Man. Such a ſtate lays you open to all the Miſeries on Earth, and all the Torments in Hell. The pooreſt Beggar with a Pardon is higher than the greateſt Prince without it. How can we enjoy a quiet Hour, if our Debt be not remitted, ſince we owe more than we are able to pay? You may dye with a forfeited Reputation, and yet be happy; but what happineſs, if you die with unpardoned Guilt?

(1.) There muſt either be Pardon or Puniſhment. The Law doth oblige either to Obedience or Suffering: The Commands of it muſt be obſerved, or the Penalty endured. God will not relax the Puniſhment without a valuable Conſideration. If it be not executed, the Creature may accuſe God of want of Wiſdom in enacting it, or defect of Power in maintaining it. Therefore there muſt be an exact obſervance of the Law, which no Creature after the firſt deviation is able to do; or an undergoing the penalty of it, which no Sinner is able to bear. There muſt therefore be a remiſſion of this Puniſhment for the good of the Creature, and the ſatisfaction of the Law by a Surety, for the Honour of God's Juſtice. If we have not therefore an Intereſt in the Surety, the Purchaſer of Remiſſion, we muſt lye under the ſeverity of the Law in our Perſons.

(2.) You can call nothing an act of God's Love towards you, while you remain unpardoned. What is there you do enjoy, which may not conſiſt with his Hatred, as well as his Love? Have we Knowledge? So have Devils. Have we Riches? So had Nabal and Cain. Have we Honour? So had Pharaoh and Herod. Have we Sermons? So had Judas, the beſt that ever were preach'd. Nothing, nothing but a Pardon is properly a Bleſſing. How can that Man take pleaſure in any thing he hath, when all the Threatnings in the Book of God are as [illegible] many Arrows directed againſt him?

(3.) All the time thou liveſt unpardoned thy Debts [illegible] the higher. Every new Sin is an adding a Figure to the former Summ, and every Figure, after the three firſt, adds a Thouſand. Every act of Sin adds not only the Guilt proper to that ſingle act upon it, but draws a new univerſal Guilt from all the reſt committed before, becauſe the perſiſting in any one Sin is a renewed approbation of all the former Acts of Rebellion committed againſt God.

(4.) 'Tis that God who would have pardon'd thee if thou wouldſt have accepted of it, who will condemn if thou doſt utterly refuſe it. 'Tis that God thou haſt Provoked, Offended, and Diſhonoured. That Power which would have been manifeſted in forgiving thee, will be glorified in condemning thee. That Juſtice which would have ſigned thy Abſolution if thou hadſt accepted of its Terms, will ſign the Writ of Execution upon thy refuſal of them. Nay, the Mercy that would have ſav'd thee, will have no Compaſſion on thee. The Law condemns thee, becauſe thou haſt tranſgreſſed it, and Mercy will reject thee, becauſe thou haſt deſpiſed it. The Goſpel, wherein Pardon was proclaimed, will acquit others, but condemn thee. God would be falſe to his own word, if after thy ſlighting ſo many Promiſes of Grace, and Threatnings of Wrath, thou ſhould'ſt be ſpar'd.

2. Uſe. Of Comfort.

Pardon of Sin may make thee hope for all other Bleſſings. Hath God done the hardeſt, and will he ſtick at the eaſieſt? Hath he overthrown Mountains, and ſhall Mole-hills ſtop him? 'Tis an eaſier thing to waft thee to Heaven, than it was at firſt to remit thy Guilt, Rom. 5. 10. For if when we were Enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we ſhall be ſaved by his Life. To this the Death and Reſurrection of the Son of God was neceſſary, and there was to be Compoſition and Agreement made between Mercy and Juſtice: But ſince this is compleated, the Redeemer ſaves thee by his Life; ſince he hath dyed for thy Remiſſion, there is no need of his dying for thy further Salvation. Seeing he hath made manifeſtation of his pardoning Grace unto thee, he will not ceaſe till he hath brought thee into a perfect State. For to what purpoſe ſhould the Creditor forgive the ſmaller part of the Debt, and caſt the Debtor into Priſon for an unpayable Summ?

(1.) If once pardoned, thou wilt be always pardoned. For the firſt Pardon Chriſt paid his Blood, for the continuance he doth but plead his Blood, and we cannot be without a Pardon till Chriſt be without a Plea. He merited the continuance, as well as the firſt Remiſſion. Will our Saviour be more backward to intercede for Pardon, than he was to bleed and pray for it on Earth? Would not our deareſt Saviour let Sin go unremitted, when he was to conteſt with the Father's Wrath, and will he let it go unpardoned, when he is only to ſollicite his Father's Mercy? Thou ſhalt not want the daily renewals of it, ſince he is only to preſent his Blood in the moſt holy place, ſeeing an ignominious and painful Death did not ſcare him from the purchaſe of it upon the Croſs. As God's Heart is more ready to give than we are to ask Forgiveneſs, ſo is Chriſt's Heart more ready to plead for the continuance of it, than we are daily to beg it; for he loves his People more than they can love him, or love themſelves. Our praying is according to Self-love, but Chriſt's Interceſſion is according to his own infinite Love with a more intenſe fervency.

(2.) Thou art above the reach of all Accuſations. Shall the Law condemn thee? No. Thou art not under the Law, but under Grace. And if Grace hath forgiven thee, the Law cannot ſentence thee. Shall Conſcience? No. Conſcience is but the Eccho of the Law within us; That muſt ſpeak what God ſpeaks. God's Spirit, and a Believer's Spirit are joint Witneſſes, Rom. 8. 16. For the Spirit it ſelf bears witneſs with our Spirits, that we are the Children of God. Conſcience is ſprinkled by the Blood of Chriſt, which quite changeth the tenour of its Commiſſion. Will God condemn thee? No. That were to loſe the glory of all his pardoning Mercy hitherto conferred upon thee; that were to fling away the vaſt Revenue Grace hath all this while been gathering for him: Yea, it were to deny his own Covenant and Promiſe. Shall Chriſt condemn thee? No. That were to diſcard all his Offices, to undo his Death, and bely his Merits; did he ſweat and bleed, pray and dye for thee, and will he now condemn thee? Hath he been pleading for thee in Heaven all this time, and will he now at the upſhot caſt thee off? Shall we imagine the Severity of a Judge more pleaſing to him than the charity of an Advocate, ſince his primary Intention in coming was to ſave the World, not to condemn it? No. It would not be for his Honour to pay the Price, and to loſe the Purchaſe.

(3.) There will be a ſolemn juſtification of thee at the laſt day. Thou art here pardoned in Law, and then thou ſhalt be juſtified by a final Sentence; there is a ſecret Grant here, but a publick manifeſtation of it hereafter. Thy Pardon was paſt by the Spirit of God in thy own Conſcience, it will then be paſt by the Son of God in thy own hearing. That Saviour that did merit it upon his Croſs, will pronounce it upon his Throne: The Book ſhall be laid out of ſight, there ſhall be no more writing in the Book of God's Omniſcience to charge thee, or of thy Conſcience to affright thee: His Fatherly Anger ſhall for ever ceaſe; and as all diſpoſition to Sin, ſo all paternal Correction for it ſhall be for ever aboliſh'd, and Forgiveneſs be fully compleat in all the glorious effects of it.

(4.) Faith doth intereſt us in all this, though it be weak. The grant of a Pardon doth not depend upon the ſtrength of Faith, though the ſenſe of a Pardon doth. A weak Faith, as a Palſie Perſon, may not ſo well read a Pardon, though it may receive it. As a ſtrong Faith gives more Glory to God, ſo it receives more Comfort from him. Chriſt made no difference in his Prayer, John 17. between the feebleſt and ſtouteſt Believer. His Lambs, as well as Sheep, were to be fed by his Apoſtle with Goſpel-comforts; and even thoſe Lambs, Iſa. 40. 11. he himſelf carries in his Boſom. Strong Faith doth not intitle us to it, becauſe it is ſtrong; or a feeble Faith debar us from it, becauſe it is weak; but it is for the ſake of a mighty Saviour that we are pardoned. 'Tis the ſame Chriſt that juſtifies thee, as well as Abraham the Father of the Faithful. 'Tis the ſame Righteouſneſs whereby thou art juſtified as well as Paul, and the moſt beloved Diſciple.

3 Uſe Of Examination.

Conſider whether your Sins are pardoned. Will you examine whether your Eſtates are ſure, and will you not examine whether your Souls are ſure?

Here I ſhall 1. Remove falſe Signs, whereon Men reſt and think themſelves pardoned.

(1.) The littleneſs of Sin is no ground of Pardon. Oh may ſome ſay, my Sins are little, ſome Tricks of Youth, ſome petty Oaths, or the like. The Scripture ſaith, that Drunkards, Fornicators, Extortioners, and Covetous, ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; not great Drunkards only, but thoſe that are drunk but now and then, as well as thoſe that are Drunkards every Day.

[1.] Doſt thou know the malignity of the leaſt Sin? No Sin can be called abſolutely (though it may comparatively) little. Is it a little God who is offended by Sin? Is it a little Wrath which is poured down on Sin? Is it a little Chriſt that hath dy'd for Sin? Is it a little Soul that is deſtroy'd by Sin? and is it a little Hell that is prepared for Sin? Is not the leaſt Sin Deicidium, as much as in a Man lieth, a deſtroying of God? Did not Chriſt ſhed his Blood for the leaſt as well as for the greateſt? Is not Hell kindled by the Breath of the Lord for the leaſt as well as the greateſt Sins? Is that little which is God's Burden, Chriſt's Wound, the Spirit's Grief, the Penitent's Sorrow, and the Devil's Hell? Every drop of Poiſon is Poiſon, every Drop of Hell is Hell, every part of Sin is Sin, and hath the deſtroying and condemning Nature of Sin. Can Angels expiate the leaſt Sin, or can a Thouſand Worlds be a ſufficient Recompence for the Injury that is done to God by the leaſt Sin?

[2.] The leſs thy Sin, the leſs thy Excuſe for thy ſelf. 'Tis the Aggravation of their Injuſtice, that they ſold the Righteous for a pair of Shoes, Amos 2. 6. Doſt thou undervalue God ſo as to ſell a Righteous and Eternal God cheap, for a little Sin? Is a little Sin dearer to thee, than the Favour of the great God? Is a little Sin dearer to thee than an eternal Hell is grievous? To endanger thy Soul for a Trifle, to loſe God for a Bubble, is a confounding Aggravation of it, as it was of Judas his Sin, that he would ſell his Saviour for a little Silver, for ſo ſmall a Summ. Sin is not little in reſpect of the formality of it, but in reſpect of the Matter, in reſpect of the Temptation; and this Littleneſs is an Aggravation of Sin.

[3.] Doſt thou know how God hath puniſhed the leaſt Sin? A Drop of Sin may bring a Deluge of Miſery. An Atom of Sin is ſtrong enough to overturn a World. It was but an Apple that poiſoned Adam, and his whole Poſterity. Leſs Sins are puniſht in Hell, than are pardoned here. God caſts off Saul for leſs Sins than he pardoned David for. How many Ships have been deſtroyed upon ſmall Sands as well as great Rocks?

(2.) Fewneſs of Sins is no Argument of Pardon. Conceive, if thou canſt, the amiableneſs and luſtre of the Angels, how far beyond the Glory of the Sun it was; yet one Sin diveſted them of all their Glory. It was but one Sin kindled Hell for the fallen Angels, every Sin muſt receive a juſt Recompence of Reward, Heb. 2. 2. Shall one ſingle Sin intitle thee to Hell? What will Millions of Sins then intitle thee to? One Sin is too much againſt God. Had thy Iniquities been never ſo few, Chriſt muſt have died to anſwer the Pleas of his Father's Juſtice againſt thee. [Every Sin is Rebellion againſt God as a Sovereign, Undutifulneſs to God as a Father*] Contempt of God as a Governour, and preferring the Devil before God; the Devil that would deſtroy and damn thee, before God that made thee, and preſerves thee; a preferring the Devil's Temptations before God's Promiſes.

* Burges.

(3.) The Commonneſs of Sin is no Argument of Pardon. Many Angels combin'd in the firſt Conſpiracy againſt God; but as they were Companions in Sin, ſo are they Companions in Torments. The commonneſs of Sodom's Sin made the louder Cry, and haſtened the ſeverer Judgment: Not one Inhabitant eſcaped but only Righteous Lot, and his Family: Common Sins will have common Plagues. It doth rather aggravate thy Sin, than plead for Pardon, when thou wilt rather follow Men's Example to offend God, than conform to God's Law to pleaſe him. Sin was common in the Old World, for all Fleſh had corrupted their ways, Gen. 6. 12. and all were ſwept away by the deſtroying Deluge. To walk according to the courſe of the World, is ſo far from being a Foundation of Pardon, that it is made a Character of a Child of the Devil: To walk according to the Courſe of the World, is to walk according to the Pattern of the Devil, and to be in the number of the Children of Wrath, Eph. 2. 2. Wherein in times paſt you walked according to the courſe of this World, according to the Prince of the Power of the Air.

(4.) Forbearance of Puniſhment is no Argument of Pardon, Eccleſ. 8. 11. Becauſe Sentence againſt an evil Work is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the Heart of the Sons of Men is fully ſet in them to do evil. Forbearance is made uſe of by Men, to make them ſin more deſperately, more headily. Fully ſet, all Checks ſilenced and ſtopt. Forbearance is no Acquittance; it argues not God's forgiving the Debt; the Debt is due, though it be not preſently ſued for; and the longer the Debt remains unpaid, the greater Summ will the Intereſt amount unto; becauſe, the longer God doth forbear Puniſhment, the longer time thou haſt for Repentance; the Account for that time will run high.

That God doth not puniſh, is an Argument of his Patience, not of his pardoning Mercy. God laughs at Sinners: He ſees their Day is coming though they may be jocund, and confident of a Pardon. God's Forbearance may be in Juſtice; he may be brewing the Cup, and mixing that which thou art to drink. Priſoners may be reprieved one Aſſize, and executed the next: Reprieval of Execution is no Allowance of the Crime, or change of the Sentence.

(5.) Proſperity is no ſign of Pardon. Oh! I am not only born with, and forborn, but I have a great Addition of outward Contentments ſince my Sin.

That which you make an Argument of Pardon, may be an Argument of Condemnation.

Aſaph was much troubled at the Proſperity of the Wicked; but at laſt ſaith, Pride compaſſeth them as a Chain, and Violence covers them as a Garment, Pſal. 73. 6. That Kindneſs which ſhould have made them melt, made them preſume. That which ſhould broach thy Repentance enflames thy Pride: Thy Goods may increaſe thy Sins.

(6.) Forgetfulneſs of thy Sin, and Commiſſion long ago, is no ſign of Pardon, and therefore having no Checks for them is no ſign of Pardon. God doth not forget though thou doſt, no Sin ſlips from the Memory of his Knowledge, though now he doth caſt many Sins away from the Memory of his Juſtice. In regard of God's Eternity the firſt Sins are accounted as committed this Moment, for in that there is no ſucceſſion of time, and the Sins thou haſt committed twenty Years ago, are as freſh as if thou hadſt acted them all ſince thy coming into the Congregation. Joſeph's Brethren, Gen. 37. 24. laboured to wipe out the Thoughts of their late Cruelty by their eating and drinking, when the Cries and Tears of their Brother were freſh in their Memory, and might have dampt their Jollity. His Affliction troubled them not, his Relation to them, his Youth, and their Father's Love to him could not make them relent; but twenty two Years after, Conſcience began to fly in their Faces, when awakened by a powerful Affliction, Gen. 42. 21. Is not thy Conſcience oftentimes a Remembrancer to thee of thy old forgotten Sins, and doth it not turn over the old Records thou hadſt quite forgot?

7. Hopes of God's Mercy are no grounds of thy being pardoned. God's Mercy is not barely enough, for then Chriſt needed not have dy'd for Sin. Nor Chriſt's Death enough, without the condition of that Covenant whereby God will make over the Intereſt and Merits of his Death to thee. God's Mercy muſt be conſidered but in God's own way. God is merciful, but his Mercy muſt not aboliſh his Truth. Doth not a Judge's Mercy conſiſt with condemning a Malefactor? God hath been merciful to thee, and thou wouldſt not accept of it; thou wouldſt not hear Mercy ſpeak in a Day of Grace; why then ſhould not Juſtice ſpeak in a Day of Vengeance? Thou wouldeſt not hear a God of Mercy when he cry'd to thee, how then ſhould Mercy hear thee when thou comeſt to beg?

2. Some falſe grounds, why thoſe that are pardoned think themſelves not pardoned.

(1.) Great Afflictions are not ſigns of an unpardoned State. Moſes had ſinned by unbelief, Aaron by making a Golden Calf, God pardoned their Sin, but took Vengeance on their Inventions, Pſal. 99. 8. Thou waſt a God that forgaveſt them, though thou tookeſt Vengeance. Nathan in his Meſſage to David brings at once both Pardon and Puniſhment. The Sin is removed, but the Sword muſt ſtill ſtick in the Bowels of his Family, 2 Sam. 12, 13, 14. The Lord hath put away thy Sin, thou ſhalt not die. Howbeit, becauſe by this Deed thou haſt given great occaſion to the Enemies of the Lord to blaſpheme, the Child alſo that is born unto thee ſhall ſurely die. God may afflict temporally when he reſolves not to puniſh eternally. What! becauſe he will not condemn thee as a Judge, will he not chaſtize thee as a Father? We may well bear a Scourge in one Hand when we have a Pardon ſealed in the other. God pardons thy Sin, but there is need of Affliction to ſubdue that ſtout ſtubborn Heart of thine, Pſal. 89. 32, 33. God doth viſit with Rods, when he is reſolved not utterly to take away his Loving-kindneſs from a People.

(2.) Terrors of Conſcience are no ſign of an unpardoned State. We find a pardoned David having broken Bones and a rackt Conſcience after Nathan had pronounced his Pardon, when there was no Remorſe before, Pſal. 51. He had the Grant of a Pardon, but the Comfort of a Pardon was wanting. God may ſcorch thy Soul when he gives a Pardon; not that Juſtice is thereby ſatisfied, but Sin more embitter'd to thee. By a Pardon thou doſt reliſh his Mercy, and by the Torments thou mayeſt have in thy Soul, thou wilt underſtand his Juſtice. He ſhews thee what he freely gives, but he would have thee know what thou haſt fully deſerved; he gives thee Pardon, but Gall and Wormwood with it, that thou mayeſt know what the Purchaſe of it did coſt thy Saviour. The Phyſick which heals, cauſeth Pain. That Phyſick which doth not make thee ſick, is not like to bring thee Health. God pardons thee, that thou mayeſt be ſaved; he terrifies thee withal, that thou mayeſt not be induced by Temptations to ſin.

(3.) Senſe of Sin is no argument of an unpardoned State. A Pardon may be granted, when the poor condemned Man expects to be haled out to Execution. Mary ſtands weeping behind her Saviour, when Chriſt was declaring her Pardon to Simon, That much was forgiven her, and afterwards Chriſt turns to her, and chears her with the News of it, Luke 7. 44, 45, 46, 47. He pronounceth her Pardon, v. 48. and the Comfort of it, v. 50. Thy Faith hath ſaved thee, go in peace. The Heavens may drop, when now and then the Sun may ſteal a Beam thorow the Clouds. There may be a Pardon, where there are not always the ſenſible Effects of a Pardon. We find, after the ſtilling of a Storm, the Ragings and Rollings of the Sea. A Penitent's Wound may ake afreſh, when a Saviour's Blood drops in Mercy.

(4.) The Remainders of Sin are not a ſign of an unpardoned State. Though a Diſeaſe be matter'd by Phyſick, there may be ſome Grudgings of it in a Perſon. Though Sin be pardoned, yet the Dregs of Sin will be remaining, and ſometimes ſtirring. Chriſt hath enliven'd us, not by wholly deſtroying, but pardoning Sin. Pardon takes away the Guilt of Sin; Grace takes away the Power of Sin; but neither Pardon, nor infuſion of Grace, takes away the Nature, and all Motions of Sin; for in purging out an Humour, ſome Dregs ſtill remain behind, Col. 2. 13. And you hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all Treſpaſſes.

3. What are the true ſigns of a pardoned Man?

1. Sincerity in our Walk. A Spirit without guile is made the Character of a pardoned Man in the Text: There may be Failings in the Life, yet no Guile in the Heart; ſuch a Man is a pardoned Man: A Heart that hath no Mixtures, no Pretences or Excuſes for Sin, no private Reſerves from God: A Heart, that as the Needle in a Compaſs, ſtands right for the Intereſt and Glory of God, and anſwers to the Profeſſion, as an Eccho to the Voice: A Heart that would thruſt out any Sin that harbour'd there, would not have an Atom of any Filth odious to the Eye of God lurk there. Where this ſincerity is, a willingneſs and readineſs to obey God, (which is the condition of the Covenant) the ſubſtance of the Covenant is kept, though ſome particular Articles of it may be broken. Grace, the pardoning Grace of God, is with them that love Chriſt in ſincerity, Eph. 6. ult. Grace be with all them that love Chriſt Jeſus in ſincerity. Not a Man excluded that is ſincere; though he hath not ſo ſparkling a Flame as another, yet if he be ſincere, the Crown of pardoning Grace, and that of conſummating Grace ſhall be ſet upon his Head.

(2.) Mourning for Sin. A tender Heart is a ſign of a pardon'd State, when Sin diſcontents thee becauſe it diſpleaſeth God. What ſhowers of Tears did Mary Magdalen weep after a Pardon? Love to God, like a gentle Fire, ſets the Soul a melting. Tears that come from Love are never without pardoning Mercy. God's Bowels do firſt ſtir our Mournings. 'Tis impoſſible a gracious Heart can read a Pardon with dry Eyes; 'tis the leaſt it thinks it can do, as it were, like Mary Magdalen, to waſh Chriſt's Feet with its Tears, when it hath been waſhed its ſelf with Chriſt's Blood. The Soul cannot enough hate that, which God hath been merciful in the pardon of. Forgiveneſs is like the Warmth of the Spring, it draws out the Sap of the Tree, the Tears of the Soul, which elſe would ſcarcely ſtir. If God hath given thee Repentance, it is ſure enough that he hath given thee a Pardon; for if he did not mean to give thee that, he would never have given thee the other.

(3.) Fearfulneſs of Sin. Whoſoever knows the Bitterneſs of Sin, and the Benefit of a Pardon, can never confidently ruſh into it. A pardoned Man will never go about to forfeit that which he hath newly received. Forgiveneſs from from God doth produce Fear in the Creature, Pſalm 130. 4. But there is Forgiveneſs with thee, that thou mayeſt be feared. 'Tis a ſign we have repented and got Pardon, if we find after that Exerciſe of Repentance and Prayer, our hatred of Sin encreaſeth, eſpecially of that Sin we were guilty of before.

(4.) Sanctification. God never pardons but he ſubdues Sin, Micah 7. 19. He will ſubdue our Iniquity, and thou wilt caſt all their Sins into the depths of the Sea. Both are put together. In the Lord's Prayer, deſires to be rid of all Evil, and not to be led into any Temptation follow immediately upon the Deſire of Pardon. A juſtified Perſon and a ſanctified Nature are inſeparable, Rom. 8. 1. There is no Condemnation to them that are in Chriſt [there is Pardon;] But how ſhall I know that I am pardoned? If you walk not after the Fleſh, but after the Spirit. We never ſincerely deſire Pardon, but we deſire purging, and God never gives the one, but he beſtows the other. If thou haſt an Intereſt in a pardoning Chriſt, thou wilt have the Effects of a ſanctifying Spirit. Where God's Grace forgives all Sin, he will give us Grace to forſake all Sin. 'Tis his Covenant to turn away Ungodlineſs, when he takes away the Puniſhment of Sin; Rom. 11. 26, 27. the Deliverer ſhall turn away Ungodlineſs from Jacob. The Applications of God's Grace to us are attended with the Infuſions of God's Grace into us. When he puts his Law into the Heart, he remembers ſin no more, Jer. 31. 33, 34.

(5.) Forgiving others. In the Lord's Prayer we pray, forgive us our Treſpaſſes as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. Our Saviour comments upon this Petition, to ſhew that Pardon cannot be without this condition, in Mat. 18. from v. 23. to the 35. Chriſt makes it at leaſt a cauſa ſine quâ non of Pardon, Luke 11. 4. and forgive us our ſins, for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us.

(6.) Affectionate Love to God and Chriſt. When we deſire to glorifie him by his Grace, as well as be glorified by it. 'Tis the Injury done to God by our Sins which doth moſt affect that Heart upon which the Spirit of God is poured, Zach. 12. 10. They ſhall mourn over him, or be in bitterneſs for him. The Soul is more concerned for Chriſt than for it ſelf. When there is too much of Self in our Deſires for it, God delays the Manifeſtation of it to the Heart, that we may come up to purer Strains. Chriſt, certainly ſhed his Blood for their Remiſſion who are willing to ſhed theirs for his Glory. Elſe Chriſt, whoſe Glory it is to outſtrip the hotteſt Affection of his Creature, would be behind-hand with him in Love. That Soul that would ſpend its All upon Chriſt, he will not ſuffer to ſtand long ſobbing before him, Luke 7. 47.

4. Uſe of Exhortation.

I. To thoſe who are careleſs of it. Oh! by all means ſeek it. Will it at laſt comfort thee, to think of thy Mirth and Pleaſures, how honourable, how rich, or how well ſtor'd with Friends thou haſt been? What ſhould take up thy Heart, buſie thy Thoughts, or employ thy Endeavours, but this that concerns thy Eternal State? Wilt thou ſin away the time of God's Patience, and thine own Happineſs? Is it not a time which God hath allotted thee, to get a Pardon in? What would Cain, Judas, Pilot, Herod, and all the black Regiment give for the very hopes of it? Oh, prize that here, which thou wilt hereafter eſteem infinitely valuable, and call thy ſelf Fool and Madman a Thouſand times, for neglecting the Opportunity of getting. The Anger of a King is as the roaring of a Lion; what then are the Frowns of an infinite juſt God? Why is thy Strength and Affection ſpent about other things? Would a forlorn Malefactor leading to Execution liſten chearfully to any thing but the News of his Prince's Clemency? Seek it

1. Earneſtly. Pardon is an ineſtimable Bleſſing, and muſt not be ſought with faint and tired Affections.

2. Preſently. Is it not full time ſeriouſly to ſet about it? Thou haſt loſt too many Days already, and wilt thou be ſo ſenſeleſs as to let another ſlip? How knoweſt thou but if thou doſt refuſe it this Day, thou may'ſt be uncapable of it to morrow? There is but a Step, a few Minutes between thee and Death, and Delays in great Emergencies are dangerous.

3. Univerſally. Content not your ſelves with ſeeking a Pardon for griſly, ſtaring Sins, which fright the Conſcience with every Look; but ſeek the Pardon of your inward ſecret ſpiritual Sins; while you beg moſt for the pardon of thoſe, ſanctifying Grace will come in as well as juſtifying; the more you pray againſt the Guilt of them, the more you will hate the Filth of them.

II. To thoſe that ſeek a Pardon, and yet are in doubt of it. Secure Sinners that underſtand not the Evil of Sin, think it is an eaſie thing, and that Forgiveneſs will be granted of courſe. But thoſe that groan under the Burden of their Iniquity, imagine it more difficult than indeed it is. Preſumption wrongs God in his Juſtice, and every Degree of Deſpair or Doubting, in his Mercy.

1. God is willing to pardon. Ephraim doth but deſire that God would turn him, and God preſently cries out, Is Ephraim my dear Son? is he a pleaſant Child? Jer. 31. 18, 20. I have ſurely heard Ephraim bemoaning himſelf thus. A penitent Ephraim is inſtantly a pleaſant Child. Ephraim ſtrikes upon his Thigh with Confeſſion, and God ſpeaks to his Heart with Affection. God doth as it were take the Words out of Ephraim's Mouth, as though he watched for the firſt Look of Ephraim towards him, or the firſt Breath of a Supplication. God is more willing to pardon Sin than we are to ſin; Becauſe we ſin with reluctancy, natural Conſcience checking us, but God hath no Check when he goes to pardon. He waits to be gracious, Iſa. 30. 18. Therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you, and therefore will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you. He hath waited all the time of your ſinning, to have an opportunity to ſhew Grace to you; and now you give it him by repenting, will he loſe the fruit of his waiting? 'Tis the End of Chriſt's Exaltation, whether it be meant of his being lifted up on the Croſs, or his Exaltation in Heaven; 'tis true of both, that his End is to have Mercy upon you.

[2.] God will pardon the greateſt Sins. His infinite Compaſſion cannot exhauſt it ſelf by a frequent Remiſſion. Mercy holds proportion to Juſtice; as his Juſtice puniſheth little Sins as well as great, ſo doth Mercy paſs by great Sins as well as little. Your higheſt Sins are the Sins of Men, but the Mercy offered is the Mercy of a God.

The Debt you owe is a vaſt Debt, but Chriſt's Satisfaction is of a greater value; and a King's Revenue

Revenue may well pay a Beggar's Debts, though ſhe owe many Thouſands, the firſt Day of Marriage. Multiplied Sins, upon Repentance, ſhall meet with multiplied Pardons, Iſa. 55. 7. הַלְסְלִיחַ יַרְבֶּה abundantly Pardon. We cannot vie our Sins with God's Mercy. The Grace of God and Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which are neceſſary for the remiſſion of one Sin, are infinite; and no more is requiſite for the Pardon of the greateſt, yea, of the Sins of the whole World, if they were upon thy ſingle ſcore. The Grace conferred upon Paul, was more than would ſuit his Neceſſity, 1 Tim. 1. 14. ὑπερεπλεόνασε, Superabound, and the Grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, enough to have pardoned a whole World as well as Paul; like the Sun, that emits as much heat in his Beams upon one Puddle, as is enough, not only to exhale the moiſture of that, but of a hundred more. Suppoſe thou art the greateſt Sinner that ever was yet extant in the World; do not think that God, who hath ſnatch'd ſo many Firebrands of Hell out of the Devil's Hands, will neglect ſuch an opportunity to make his Grace illuſtrious upon thy humble Soul. If God hath given thee Repentance, it is a certain evidence he will follow it with a Pardon, though thy Sins be of a deeper Scarlet than ever yet was ſeen upon the Earth; for if he did not mean to beſtow this, he would never have beſtowed upon thee the neceſſary condition of it. Is there not a Sinner can equal thee? Then ſurely God is wiſer than to loſe the higheſt opportunity he yet had to evidence his ſuperlative Grace. And therefore,

[1.] Continue thy Humiliations. There muſt be a conformity between Chriſt and thee; he was humbled when he purchaſed Remiſſion, and you muſt be humbled when you receive it. God will not part with that very cheap, that coſt his Son ſo dear: Though thou art not at the expence of the Blood of thy Soul, thou muſt be at the expence of the Blood of thy Sins. When a Man comes to be deeply affected with his Sin, then God ſends a Meſſage of Peace, Iſa. 6. 6, 7. Then flew one of the Seraphims and laid a live Coal upon his Mouth, and ſaid, thine Iniquity is taken away, and thy Sin purged. When v. 5. he had cryed out, Woe is me, for I am undone, becauſe I am a Man of unclean Lips. The way to have a Debt forgiven is to acknowledge it, Pſal. 32. 5. I ſaid I will confeſs my Tranſgreſſions unto the Lord, and thou forgaveſt the Iniquity of my Sin. God ſtood as ready to forgive David's Unrighteouſneſs, as he was ready to confeſs it. Mercy will not ſave a Man, without making him ſenſible of, and humbled for his Iniquity. Put thy Buſineſs therefore into Chriſt's Hands, and ſubmit to what terms he will impoſe upon thee.

[2.] In thy Supplication plead his Glory. You find this the conſtant Argument the People of God, in the Scripture, uſe for the prevailing with God for Forgiveneſs. That Argument is moſt comfortably pleaded, which God loves moſt, and whereunto he orders all his Actions. No ſtronger Motive can be uſed to him to grant it, than that whereby he excites himſelf to beſtow it. When thou beggeſt other things, thou may'ſt diſhonour God; but God cannot be a loſer of his Glory in granting this. Lord if thou turneſt me into Hell, where is the Glory of thy Mercy upon thy Creature? Nay, where is the glory of thy Juſtice, my eternal Torments not being able to compenſate the Injury done to thee by Sin, ſo much as the Suffering of thy only Son, whoſe Death I deſire to ſhare in, and whoſe Terms I am willing to ſubmit to?

III. Exhortation to thoſe that are pardoned.

1. Admire this Grace of God. To pardon one Sin is a greater thing than to create a World; to pardon one Sin is greater than to damn a World. God can create a World without the death of a Creature; he can damn a World without the death of the Creator, but in pardoning there muſt be the death of the Creator, the Son of God.

2. Serve God much. Is the guilt of Sin, the Cord that bound thee, taken off? It is fit that when thou art ſo unfettered, thou ſhould'ſt run the ways of God's Commandments. A ſenſe of pardon of Sin makes the Soul willing and ready to run upon God's Errands, and to obey his Commands, Iſa. 6. 8. I heard the voice of the Lord ſaying, Whom ſhall I ſend? Then ſaid I, Here am I: Then, when he had received aſſurance that his Iniquity was taken away, v. 7. God's Pardon ſet thee upon a new Stock, and therefore he expects thou ſhould'ſt be full of new cluſters.

3. Be more fearful of Sin. Diſpute with thy ſelf, Hath God pardoned the guilt of Sin that it ſhall not damn me? And ſhall I wallow in the Mire of Sin to pollute my ſelf? Oh, thy Sins after Pardon have a blacker circumſtance than the ſins of Devils, or the ſins of wicked Men, for theirs are not againſt pardoning Mercy, not againſt ſpecial Love. Oh! thaw thy Heart every Morning with a Meditation on Pardon, and Sin will not ſo eaſily freeze it in the Day time. When thou art tempted to ſin, conſider what Thoughts thou hadſt when thou wert ſuing for Pardon, how earneſt thou wert for it, what Promiſes and Vows thou didſt make, and conſider the Love God ſhewed thee in pardoning. Do not blur thy Pardon, ſo eaſily wound thy Conſcience, or weaken thy Faith.

4. Be content with what God gives thee. If he gives thee Heaven, will he deny thee Earth? He that beſtows upon thee the pardon of Sin, would ſurely pour into thy Boſom the Gold of both the Indies, were it neceſſary for thee. But thou haſt got a greater Happineſs; for it is not ſaid, Bleſſed is he that wallows in Wealth, Honour, a confluence of worldly Proſperity, but Bleſſed is he whoſe Sin is forgiven, and whoſe Iniquity is covered.
